Sisira. J. de Abrew, J
The Accused-Appellant-Petitioner-Appellants (hereinafter referred to as the Accused-Appellants) in this case were convicted for the murder of a man named Madavan Sadanandan and were sentenced to death by the judgment of the High Court dated 24.1.2011. Being aggrieved by the said conviction and the sentence, the Accused-Appellants appealed to the Court of Appeal and the Court of Appeal by its judgment dated 7.4.2017 dismissed the appeal and affirmed the conviction and the sentence. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Court of Appeal, the Accused-Appellants have appealed to this court. The 4th accused, at the end of the trial, was acquitted by the learned High Court Judge. This court by its order dated 12.2.2018 granted leave to appeal on questions of law set out in paragraph 16(i) and 16(v) of the Petition of Appeal dated 16.5.2017 which are set out below.

1. Whether their Lordships of the Court of Appeal erred in failing to evaluate the evidence in the case in its totality and failed to appreciate the same on an impartial and objective evaluation of the evidence whether there was clearly, at the very least a reasonable doubt as to the participation of the 2nd and 3rd Petitioners to the alleged offences?

2. Have their Lordships of the Court of Appeal failed to apply the test of probability in evaluating the testimonial trustworthiness of PW2's evidence and thereby deprived the Petitioners the substance of a fair trial guaranteed under Article 13 of the Constitution?

3. Whether the learned High Court Judge erred in law on the principles relating to burden of proof on the defence of alibi.

The 3rd question of law which was raised by learned counsel for the Accused-Appellants was permitted by this court at the hearing of granting of leave to appeal on 12.2.2018.

Facts of this case may be briefly summarized as follows.

On the day of the incident (9.2.2003) when the deceased person Madavan Sadanandan and Murugasu Ravindran were going to cut firewood, they met the Accused-Appellants and the 4th Accused near the Kovil and they asked the deceased person whether he was a big person to which the deceased person replied that he was going to work. At this stage, there was an exchange of words between the deceased person and the accused persons. The accused persons then started attacking the deceased person. The 1st Accused-Appellant attacked the deceased person with a knife. The 2nd and the 3rd Accused-Appellants attacked the deceased person with two clubs. The 4th Accused attacked the deceased person with his hands. When the deceased person was being attacked, he ran away towards his house and all four accused chased after him. Murugase Ravindran who was watching the incident says in his evidence that the deceased person ran for about 20 feet. The 1st Accused-Appellant threatened Murugase Ravindran not to give evidence on the incident. Thereafter Murugase Ravindran went home. The above facts have been stated by Murugase Ravindran in his evidence. Later the people found that the deceased person lying fallen near the Kovil. According to the evidence of wife of the deceased person Weeranan Erulai, the distance between the Kovil and the place where the deceased person was lying fallen was 30 feet. But according to the evidence of the investigating officer, this distance was about 100 meters.

Learned counsel who appeared for the Accused-Appellants submitted that the incident described by witness Murugase Ravindran was an incident which had taken place prior to the main incident. But Murugase Ravindran, in his evidence, clearly says that when the deceased person was being attacked, he (the deceased person) ran away and the four accused persons chased after him (the deceased person). Thus, according to the evidence of Murugase Ravindran, this was the main incident. There was no evidence led at the trial to establish that the deceased person was attacked at the place where he was lying fallen. For the above reasons, I am unable to agree with the above submission of learned counsel for the Accused-Appellants.

Learned counsel for the Accused-Appellants contended that no reliance can be placed on Murugase Ravindran's evidence as he has made a belated statement. I now advert to this contention. It is true that he has made a statement ten days after the incident. There were reasons for this delay. Murugase Ravindran who was only fifteen (15) years old at the time of the incident was threatened by the 1st Accused-Appellant not to give evidence in this case. According to the evidence of Murugase Ravindran, this was the reason for the delay in making the statement. When considering the contention whether the evidence of a belated witness can be accepted or not, I would like to consider certain judicial decisions.

"just because the witness is a belated witness the Court ought not to reject his testimony on that score alone and that a Court must inquire into the reason for the delay and if the reason for the delay is plausible and justifiable the Court could act on the evidence of a belated witness.

In Ajith Samarakoon Vs the Republic [2004] 2 SLR 209 at page 220 His Lordship Justice Jayasuriya held as follows. His Lordship Justice Jayasuriya held as follows. Just because the statement of a witness is belated the Court is not entitled to reject such testimony. In applying the Test of Spontaneity the Test of Contemporaneity and the Test of Promptness the Court ought to scrupulously proceed to examine the reasons for the delay. If the reasons for the delay adduced by the witness are justifiable and probable the trial Judge is entitled to act on the evidence of a witness who had made a belated statement.

Considering the above legal literature, I hold that court should not reject the evidence of a witness who has made a belated statement to the Police if the delay has been explained. In the present case the delay in making the statement to the Police has been explained. Thus the decision of the learned trial Judge to accept the evidence of witness Murugase Ravindran cannot be found fault with.

According to the evidence of Dr. Manjula who conducted the Post Mortem Examination, there were cut injuries, lacerations and a contusion on the body of the deceased person. Thus, it is seen that the evidence of Murugase Ravindran has been corroborated by medical evidence. When the above matters are considered, the evidence of Murugase Ravindran can be accepted beyond reasonable doubt. The learned trial Judge and the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal were, in my view, correct when they decided to act on the evidence of Murugase Ravindran. For the above reasons, I reject the above contention of learned counsel for the Accused-Appellant.

Prosecution has relied on a dying declaration made by the deceased person to his wife Weeranan Irulai. According to Weeranan Irulai, she, on hearing that her husband had been attacked, went to the place where the deceased person was lying fallen. On being questioned as to who cut him, he (the deceased person) replied that Alli cut him, Ukkun and Weeraman assaulted him with a club. She has identified Alli as the 1st Accused, Ukkun as the 3rd Accused and Weeraman as the 2nd Accused. Thereafter she has gone to the Police Station and made a statement. Question was raised as to why she did not take the deceased person to the hospital in the same van. It has to be noted here that she had had no control over the vehicle. No one knows whether the van driver refused to take the injured person in the van to the hospital. However, what is important here is to consider whether the deceased person could have spoken when she spoke to him. Dr Manjula says in his evidence that the deceased person could have spoken for about one hour after receiving injuries and he had the capacity to move.

According to the evidence of Weeranan Irulai, the deceased person in his dying declaration had mentioned that all three Accused-Appellants had attacked him. Although the deceased person had referred to all three accused persons in his dying declaration, Weeranan Irulai, in her first statement made to the Police, has failed to mention the attack on the deceased person by the 2nd and 3rd Accused persons. She has mentioned this fact only in her 2nd statement made to the Police. According to Dr Manjula, the deceased person could have spoken for about one hour after receiving injuries. Further, according to the evidence of Dr. Manjula who conducted the Post Mortem Examination, there were cut injuries, lacerations and a contusion on the body of the deceased person. Thus, it is seen that the evidence of Weeranan Irulai is corroborated by the evidence of Dr Manjula. Weeranan Irulai has also said in her evidence that the 1st,2nd,3rd and 4th accused persons were ten feet away from place where the deceased person was lying fallen when she went to this place and the 1st accused person was having a knife. When I consider all the above matters, I am unable to find fault with the decisions of the learned trial Judge and the learned judges of the Court of Appeal in accepting the evidence of Weeranan Irulai.

The 2nd and the 3rd Accused-Appellants in their dock statements have taken up the position that they went to work in the morning and came back in evening. Thus, they have taken the defence of alibi. However, the learned Judge has placed a burden on the accused persons to prove the defence of alibi. I will now consider whether the learned trial Judge was correct when he took the above decision. When an accused person takes up the defence an alibi, the burden is on the prosecution to establish that he was present at the place where the offence was committed. I would like to consider certain judicial decisions on this point. In Banda and Others Vs Attorney General [1999] 3 SLR 169 Justice FND Jayasuriya at page 170 held as follows.

> "There is no burden whatsoever on an accused person who puts forward a plea of alibi and the burden is always on the prosecution to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the accused was not elsewhere but present at the time of the commission of the criminal offence."

> "Where the defence was that of an alibi and an accused person had no burden as such of establishing any fact to any degree of probability."

Considering the above matters, I hold that when an alibi is pleaded by an accused person, there is no burden on the accused person to prove it. Therefore, I hold that the learned trial Judge has committed misdirection in law when he placed a burden on the 2nd and 3rd Accused-Appellants to prove the defence of alibi.

Although the2nd and 3rd Accused-Appellants raised a defence of alibi in their dock statements, they failed to suggest this position to witness Murugase Ravindran.

In the case of Sarwan Singh Vs State of Punjab [2002] AIR SC (iii)3652 at 3656 the Indian Supreme Court held as follows. "It is a rule of essential justice that whenever the opponent has declined to avail himself of the opportunity to put his case in cross examination it must follow that the evidence tendered on that issue ought to be accepted." This judgment was cited with approval in Bobby Mathew vs. State of Karnatake 2004 Cr. LJ Vol iii page 3003.

Applying the principles laid down in the above judicial decisions, I hold that failure on the part of the 2nd and 3rd Accused-Appellants to suggest to the prosecution witness Murugase Ravindran their position (defence of alibi) indicates that the defence of alibi is a false one.

Further I would like to consider the proviso to Section 334 of the Criminal Procedure Code which reads as follows. "Provided that the court may, notwithstanding that it is of opinion that the point raised in the appeal might be decided in favour of the appellant, dismiss the appeal if it considers that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred."

I have earlier pointed out that the learned trial Judge has committed misdirection in law when he placed a burden on the 2nd and 3rd Accused-Appellants to prove the defence of alibi. Although the learned trial Judge has committed the above misdirection in law, when the evidence led at the trial is considered, I hold that no substantial miscarriage of justice has actually occurred to the accused. In this connection I would like to consider the judgment of this court in the case of MHM Lafeer Vs The Queen 74 NLR 246 wherein this court at page 248 held as follows.

> "There was thus both misdirection and non-direction on matters concerning the standard of proof. Nevertheless, we are of opinion having regard to the cogent and uncontradicted evidence that a jury properly directed could not have reasonably returned a more favourable verdict. We therefore affirm the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal."

The next question that I would like to consider is whether the conviction of murder can be maintained. I now advert to this question. Witness Murugase Ravindran, in his evidence, stated the following matters.

1. There was an exchange of words between the deceased person and the accused persons.

2. The deceased person was using filthy language when both parties were exchanging words.

3. At the time of the attack on the deceased person, there was a fight between two parties. [pages 50 to 51].

When I consider the above evidence, I feel that the conviction of murder cannot be maintained and the Accused-Appellants should have been convicted on the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder which is an offence punishable under Section 297 of the Penal Code on the basis of sudden fight. For the above reasons, I set aside the conviction of murder and the sentence of death imposed on the Accused-Appellants and convict them for the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder on the basis of sudden fight which is an offence punishable under Section 297 of the Penal Code. I sentence each of the Accused-Appellants to a term of 16 (sixteen) years rigorous imprisonment. I further direct that this term of imprisonment should be implemented from the date of sentence of death (24.1.2011).

In view of the conclusion reached above, I answer the 1st and the 2nd questions of law in the negative. I answer the 3rd question of law as follows. The learned trial Judge (High Court Judge) erred in law on the principles relating to the burden of proof on the defence of alibi. The learned High Court Judge of Colombo is directed to issue a fresh committal in accordance with the sentence imposed by this court. Subject to the above variation of the conviction and the sentence, the appeal of the Accused-Appellants is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

L.T.B. Dehideniya, J.

The Defendant-Appellant-Petitioner-Petitioner (hereinafter some time called and referred to as the 'Appellant') is the 9th defendant in the Partition case No 16127/P in the District Court of Avissawella. The Appellant has presented a statement of claim seeking the prescriptive title of the house marked "B" and Lavatory Marked "A" in Lot 2 of the preliminary plan. After the trial Learned District Judge of Avissawella, by the judgement dated 24th September 1999, dismissed the petitioner's prescriptive claim and ordered a partition in accordance with the pedigree, set out by the Plaintiff-Respondents- Respondents- Respondents (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 'Respondents') and accepted by the other defendants.

Being aggrieved by the said judgement the Appellant had made an Appeal to the Court of Appeal. While this appeal was being heard, the Court was informed the death of the first Plaintiff-Respondent on 16th May 2011.On that occasion, however, the Appellant had taken six dates to correct the record by substituting on behalf of the deceased.

On 28th June 2013 it was brought to the notice of Court that the 1st Defendant – Respondent also dead. The case had been down for seven days for substitute since then.

28.06.2013 – 1st Defendant –Respondent died

30.08.2013- moves further date to take steps

30.09.2013- moved date to tender additional documents

08.11.2013- move for date to support

12.11.2013- moved further date for required documents

09.12.2013- moved date to support with certified copies

13.12.2013- Appeal is abated.

When the case was called on 13th December 2013 for the substitution, the Defendant-Appellant was absent and unrepresented and application for substitution was not supported. Therefore, the Court abetted the appeal.

Appellant had made an application to relist the appeal stating that, he was present in Court at the time and the Counsel for the Appellant was not available due to sickness. The Counsel arranged to appear was late. He further submits that the certified copies of the relevant documents had been tendered to Court by way of a motion prior to that date. His argument is that once the documents are tendered it need not be supported and the Court is duty bound to take necessary action to do the substitution. Therefore, the Appellant claims that the order to Abate was per incuriam and suffered him tremendous hardship and irreparable loss through no fault of his own.

The Court of Appeal promptly directed the registrar not to return the records to District Court. But after inquiry Court observed that there was no affidavit in support of the above position at least from the Appellant or from the Counsel, who was arranged to appear on that day. Therefore on 20.10.2014, the relisting application was rejected and the Court affirmed the abatement. The Appellant made an Appeal against the said order, which claimed to be per incuriam.

Court granted leave to appeal on the following questions of law.

1. Did the Court of Appeal err in law and in facts resulting in a serious miscarriage of justice when it held that it was justifiable and lawful to abate the Appeal under the circumstances of this case depriving the right of the appellant to get his Appeal heard and it is not per incuriam order to abate the Appeal?
2. Did the Court of Appeal err in law and in facts in applying Sec. 760 A of the Civil Procedure Code and its relevant provisions read with Supreme Court Rules and the case law relating to substitution?
3. Did the Court of Appeal err in law in facts by not recording a descriptive Journal Entry and by confining to a short and shrewd Journal entry like "Counsel Moves for a further date" when the evidence generated/ documents filed in the record and what really happened are totally different to what is stated by the Journal Entry?
4. Did the Court of Appeal err in law and in facts on 08.11.2013 by not issuing Notice to the Daughter to be substituted based on the documents already filed in the record and when the counsel supported the matter on that basis in accordance with the legal requirements?
5. Did the Court of Appeal err in law and in facts by maintaining 2 different standards variable according to the wish of the judge?

The first question of law is whether the Appellant's legal right to have his appeal heard is being disregarded by the said abate. The Appellant claimed that the Court of Appeals erred in dismissing the case when he had already submitted certified copies of all relevant documents relating to the substitute on behalf of the deceased 1st Defendant- Respondent.

Although an aggrieved party has the right of appeal, the Court of Appeal acted on Rule 13 of the Court of Appeal Rules 1990, In this case, the applicant had failed to prosecute the appeal with appropriate diligence.

"13. It shall be the duty of the petitioner to take such steps as may be necessary to ensure the prompt service of notice, and prosecute his application with due diligence."

The Appellant's duty and legal obligation is to support and move Court to obtain the remedies requested for in the written applications. It will not be absolved by just filling of papers or sending motions. If the application is not supported the Court may hold that the applicant is not prosecuting diligently and the Court had determined that the Appellant did not act with due diligence. The Appellant was not present and unrepresented on 13thDecember 2013. He acted in the same manner on multiple occasions, before the abatement. Despite the fact that the Appellant claims that another lawyer has been engaged to represent him, no affidavit from that lawyer has been submitted to the Court. The Appellant has not named the lawyer, who he claims has been arranged to represent him. The presumption raised in these circumstances is that the Appellant has not been truthful to the court.

Wood Renton CJ held as follows in Supramanium Vs Symons [18 NLR 229],

"People may do what they like with their disputes as long as they do not invoke the assistance of the Courts of Law. But whenever that step has been taken they are bound to proceed with all possible and reasonable expedition, and it is the duty of their legal advisors and of the Courts themselves to seek that this is done. The work of the Courts must be conducted on ordinary business principles, and no Judge is obliged, or is entitled to allow the accumulation upon is cause list of a mass of inanimate or semi animate actions."

Wood Renton CJ has clearly held in the above-mentioned Judgment that a party is obligated to take actions and proceed with all possible and reasonable dispatch to prosecute an action without allowing it to accrue the case list. Courts should not be overburdened with cases. Cases should be resolved as soon as possible. In this case, I am inclined to concur with the Court's decision to dismiss the matter.

On the other hand the grounds for relisting the appeal was that the order was per incuriam, which can be overturned by the same court. Concerning the meaning of the per incuriam, Wijetunga, J. observed in Gunasena v Bandaratillake [2000] 1 Sri LR 292 at page 302:

'The phrase per incuriam has been defined in Whertons' Law Lexicon. 13th edition at page 645, as thorough want of care. An order of the court obviously made through some mistake or under some misapprehension is said to be made per incurriam. Classen's Dictionary of Legal Words and Phrases, 1976 edition defines per incurriam at page 137 as by mistake or carelessness, therefore not purposely or intentionally."

Considering the above - mentioned definitions, and the fact that it has asserted per incuriam in instances that do not fall within this scenario. Even though the previous judgment contained a clear error, the Court of Appeal had inherent authority to correct it so that a party would not suffer as a result of a lapse on the part of the court. The Court of Appeal followed the method it deemed most suitable under the circumstances. As a result, the Court order to abate cannot be per incuriam. It was correct and lawful.

Another question of law arises in fact by not recording a descriptive Journal Entry and by confining to a short and shrewd journal entry. The Journal is the primary record of all acts and impotent events under Section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code.

"92. With the institution of action a court shall commence a journal entitled as of the action, in which shall be minutes as they occur, all of the course of the action..."

This section passes a burden on preceding judge to record all of the course of the action as occur. It is an official act that the judicial officer has to perform. Under Section 114 of the Evidence Ordinance the Journal Entry is presume to be correct. It has been held in Seebert Silva vs. Aronona Silva [60 NLR 272] that the Court is entitled to presume that the Journal Entries made in a case are in compliance with the requirements of Section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. Further at Page 275 it has been held that,

"A Journal has been maintain in this action and the Court is entitled to presume that it was regularly kept this presumption which arises under Section 114 of the evidence ordinance is based on the maxim 'Omnia praesumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta' this presumption is of course rebuttable but the respondents, of whom is the burden, have not placed before the court sufficient material to rebut it."

In the present action though, the Counsel complained that the Judge had not entered the situation that had happened in the open Court correctly, the presumption of the correctness of the Journal Entry cannot be rebutted by just an allegation made from the bar table. It must be established - where the burden lies on the person who challenges the correctness of the Journal Entry - with proper evidence. In this case the Appellant has not tendered sufficient evidence to establish that Journal Entry is incorrect.

The other question of law concerns the applicability of Section 760 A of the Civil Procedure Code and its relevant provisions in conjunction with Supreme Court Rules and case law relating to substitution. Whether the court could request the original documents of the substitution without acting on photocopies.

Section 760A of the Civil Procedure Code provides that if, at any time during the pendency of an Appeal, one of the parties to the Appeal dies or changes his legal status, the Court before which the appeal is pending may determine, in the manner provided in the Supreme Court Rules.

> "..... who, in the opinion of the court, is the proper person to be substituted or entered on the record in place of, or in addition to, the party who had died or undergone a change of status, and the name of such person shall thereupon be deemed to be substituted or entered on record as aforesaid." (Emphasis added)

In accordance with Rule 38 of the Supreme Court Rules, that determination must be based on "sufficient material" submitted to the Court establishing that the person who seeks to be substituted is the "appropriate person."

Thus, it is demonstrated that applying Sec. 760 A of the Civil Procedure Code and its relevant provisions read with Supreme Court Rules and case law relating to substitution and issuing Notice to the legal hairs, is not an obligation of courts. It is the Appellant's responsibility to furnish all essential documentation with proper diligence.

The next legal question is maintaining two different standards that are variable according to the judge's wishes. In this case, it indicates that one judge allowed photocopies while the other did not.

It is common knowledge that original documents or a duly certified copy of the document (in the absence of the original) are normally presented before the Court. The phrase "duly certified copy" must imply that the authority responsible for its issue certified the copy submitted to Court as a copy duly obtained from the original. Only then Court can rely on and act on such a document. Because Courts make orders based on such documents can occasionally have serious consequences for people. People who are affected by a case are not always limited to the parties involved. If the Court issues such orders on a set of papers whose legitimacy is later called into question, severe consequences may result. It would be relevant at this stage to quote the following paragraph from the judgment of this Court in the case of Attorney General Vs Ranjith Weera Wickrema Charles Jayasinghe. [CA (PHC) APN /74/2016] After considering the significance and underlying reasons for the demand on rigorous conformity, this Court said in that matter as follows:

> " ..... Moreover, the above rule underlines the importance of the presence of an authoritative and responsible signatory certifying such copies taking their responsibility for the authenticity of such documents. Insisting on tendering to Court, such duly certified copies of relevant proceedings is not without any valid and logical reasons. Courts make orders relying on such documents. They may sometimes have serious effects on people. The persons who may be so affected might sometimes be not limited to parties of the case only. Drastic repercussions may ensue in case the Court makes such orders on some set of papers, authenticity of which would subsequently become questionable."

So, if a judge is dissatisfied with the photo copies, he has the authority to request the original documents instead. The court gave the applicant four days to furnish the required documentation and to take steps to gain the Court authorization, but the applicant did not submit it until 13th December 2013, and was unrepresented in court. In such cases, the Court's only option is to decide whether and how much time should be provided for timely filing of papers or to dismiss the matter. The Court had taken the latter option. It is not per incuriam.

E. A. G. R. Amarasekara J

The Plaintiff- Respondent – Respondent above named (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Plaintiff) through his power of attorney holder G.H.A. Watson, instituted an action in the District Court of Mount Lavinia on the 29th of December 1994, against the 1st defendant – Appellant - Petitioner (hereinafter referred to as the Petitioner or the 1st Defendant Appellant or the 1st Defendant) and the 3rd and 4th Defendants – Appellants – Respondents and the 2nd Defendant – Respondent – Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 3rd , 4th and the 2nd defendants respectively) seeking inter-alia for a declaration of title for the premises no. 4 and 4 1/1 Elibank Road, Colombo – 05, ejectment of the Defendants from the said property and for the recovery of damages. It appears that the said Plaintiff had thereafter given a Power of Attorney to one Reginald Perera Wickramarachchi for the purposes of the said case filed in the District Court. As per the minute dated 10th March 2017, one Surangani Jayasekera has been substituted by this court in place of John Cyril Fernando, 1st Defendant Appellant as 1A Defendant Respondent Appellant.

As per the Plaint:

- The Plaintiff is resident in the United Kingdom since March 1980.
- On 27.02.1980 by Power of Attorney No 1482, attested by K. Sivanatham, Notary Public, the Plaintiff's father, the 2nd Defendant was appointed as his Attorney. (vide paragraphs 1- 4 of the Plaint).
- At the time of execution of the said Power of Attorney the Plaintiff was only 19 years of age. And the said Power of Attorney is of no force in law since the Plaintiff was a minor at the time it was executed.
- By virtue of Deed of Transfer No. 2085 dated 15.02.1985, the Plaintiff became the lawful owner of the premises Nos. 4 and 4 1/1, Elibank Road, Colombo 05. The 2nd Defendant wrongfully and illegally without the knowledge of the Plaintiff sold and transferred the said premises by Deed of Transfer No. 60 dated 12.09.1985 to one John Cyril Nirmal Fernando, 1st Defendant Appellant, for a sum of Rs. 800,000/-. (vide paragraphs 5 to 8 of the Plaint) and this was done owing to a debt owed to the 1st Defendant Appellant by the 2nd Defendant, who was the father of the Plaintiff and the power of attorney holder at that time for the Plaintiff.
- It is also stated that the Plaintiff became aware of the said transfer only in 1994 - (vide paragraph 13 of the Plaint). The premises in suit is a two storied house and was worth Rs. 7 million. Thus the 2nd Defendant has sold it way below the market value - (vide paragraph 17 of the Plaint).

- The 1st Defendant Appellant by Deed No. 73 dated 13.11.1987 has fraudulently and wrongfully transferred the said premises to his sister the 3rd Defendant. And the said 3rd Defendant by Deed of Transfer No. 31 dated 08.07.1988 has transferred the premises in question to her daughter the 4th Defendant - (vide paragraph 19 and 20 of the Plaint).
- The said 3 Deeds of Transfer (No. 60, 73 and 31) are void and do not convey title. Thus, the 1st, 3rd and 4th Defendants are in wrongful and unlawful possession of the premises in question.

As per the prayer to the plaint, what has been prayed for is a declaration of title to the land referred to in the schedule to the plaint. It was on the basis that the aforesaid deeds referred to in the body of the plaint and the Power of Attorney are void in law, but no relief has been prayed in the prayer to declare those deeds or the Power of Attorney are void in law.

1st and 3rd Defendants in their answer denied the allegations made and stated that;

- there is a misjoinder of Defendants,
- the Plaintiff cannot have and maintain this action as presently constituted and he cannot approbate and reprobate,
- the Plaintiff's action is prescribed in law,
- the plaint does not disclose a cause of action against the Defendants and the Plaintiff is not entitled to the reliefs prayed for in the Plaint.
- that the Plaintiff is estopped from claiming that the Power of Attorney was not valid in that he took no steps to revoke it and received benefits under the Power of Attorney.

Thus, the said Defendants prayed for dismissal of the action.

The 4th Defendant in her answer dated 17th March 1995, averred similarly and prayed for the dismissal of the action.

The 2nd Defendant, the father of the Plaintiff and the power of attorney holder of the Plaintiff at the relevant time of the alleged incidents, in his answer while admitting the main contentions in the plaint, had averred that he signed the deed No.60 in his personal capacity as a security in relation to a loan and he signed a blank deed and no consideration was given to him. However, it is not clear, if he signed a blank deed, why he called it a deed signed in a personal capacity as a security in relation to a loan.

The learned District Judge on 23.08.2002 delivered her judgment in favour of the Plaintiff as prayed for in the Plaint and also setting aside the Deeds Nos. 60, 73 and 31, dated 17.09.1985, 17.11.1987 and 08.07.1988 respectively, even though there was no prayer for such relief.

Being aggrieved by the Judgment of the District Court, the 1st, 3rd and 4th Defendants preferred an appeal, which was heard in the High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province holden in Mount Lavinia.

On 25.08.2010 the High Court delivered its Judgment dismissing the appeal while affirming the Judgment of the District Court.

This Court, after considering the leave to appeal application, granted leave on the questions of law set out in paragraph 18(b), 18(c), 18(e), 18(f), 18(g), and 18(h) of the Petition of the 1st Defendant Appellant Petitioner dated 04.10.2010 – vide Journal Entry dated 17.07.2014. The said questions of law are reproduced at the later part of this judgment.

As this is an appeal filed against the aforesaid decision of the Civil Appeal High Court of the Western Province sitting in appeal, it is the task of this court to see whether the said High Court erred in law as aforesaid in coming to its decision in confirming the judgment of the District Court of Mount Lavinia. In this regard it is relevant to see whether the learned District Judge erred in law and whether the learned High Court Judges identified such errors, if any, before confirming the decision of the learned District Judge. In this sphere, it is pertinent to understand the nature of the action filed and maintained before the District Court.

As per the plaint as well as per the issues raised by the Plaintiff, he has never taken the position that the impugned deed of transfer No. 60 executed by the then power of attorney holder, the second defendant was done when he was a minor. In fact, it was executed in 1985 and according to the Plaintiff's stance he should have been a major by that time, even as per his age. Thus, he cannot challenge the validity of that transfer on the ground that it was a contract entered into by a minor. On the face of it, it has been done through his agent, then power of attorney holder. Through the issues raised in the original court the Plaintiff challenged this deed on the following grounds;

- The Plaintiff was a minor when he executed the Power of Attorney and therefore, Power of Attorney is void and, thus the said deed no. 60 is not valid - vide issues nos.3,4,5 and 17.
- The consideration was not paid and thus, the transaction in deed no.60 is not valid- vide issues Nos.6 and 17.
- Power to sell was not given by the Power of Attorney and, thus the transaction in deed no. 60 was not valid- vide issues Nos. 7,8,17.
- The doctrine Laesio Enormis applies and, thus said deed is voidable – vide issues Nos. 10,11 and 12.

Thus, if the relevant Power of Attorney was valid and the power to sell immovable property was given to the power of attorney holder at the time of executing the deed, the said deed no. 60 cannot be challenged on the basis of said purported defects related to Power of Attorney. Since, this challenge to the Power of Attorney appears to be the main contention in this appeal I will advert to it first in this judgment.

At the commencement of the trial, parties have admitted the execution of the Power of Attorney no.1482 given to the 2nd Defendant, the father of the Plaintiff, and the execution of the aforementioned deeds nos. 60,73, and 31 by which deeds the title allegedly passed from the Plaintiff to the 4th Defendant. (However, it is observed that these documents have been challenged in the body of the plaint as void.) It is also admitted that 3rd Defendant is the sister of the 1st Defendant and the 4th Defendant is the daughter of the 3rd Defendant.

The learned District Judge had correctly found that that the main legal question to be answered was whether the Power of Attorney granted by the Plaintiff to the 2nd Defendant on 27.02.1980 was void. It appears that she had considered that the Plaintiff, as per his age, was a minor in terms of our law at the time the said Power of Attorney was given and when the transaction is not for the benefit of the minor, it is not valid against the minor, and as such the Power of Attorney and the transactions based on that Power of Attorney are void. The learned District Judge in coming to the said conclusion also had stated that the sale of the subject matter to the 1st Defendant was done without the knowledge of the Plaintiff, and also not for the benefit of the Plaintiff. As per the answers given to the issues raised, the learned District Judge had come to the conclusion that the Plaintiff has not received any consideration on the said sale, and that the Plaintiff came to know in 1994 that his property had been transferred illegally. It appears that, in this regard, the learned District Judge believed the evidence given by the power of attorney holder appointed for the prosecution of his case by the Plaintiff, who stated in evidence that the 2nd Defendant owed a sum of money to the 1st Defendant Company and the land was transferred to the 1st Defendant in lieu of the said debt of the 2nd Defendant. Consequently, at the end, the learned District Judge held in favour of the Plaintiff. In the appeal preferred by the Defendant – Appellants to the High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province holden in Mount Lavinia, the learned High Court Judges identified what has to be decided by them as "…whether the power of Attorney No. 1482 and the Deed of Transfer No 60 is valid in law?" - vide page 7 of the High Court Judgment. In their Judgment of the High Court that dismissed the appeal of the 1st, 3rd and the 4th Defendants while affirming the Judgment of the District Court, the learned High Court Judges have indicated their reasons as follows;

a. Under the Age of Majority Ordinance Chapter 7a of Volume 4 of the Legislative Enactment Sri Lanka the age of majority at the relevant time (28/02/1980) was 21 years. And as at 28/02/1980 when the Power of Attorney was executed, the Plaintiff was only 19 years and 2 months old- vide page 7 of the High Court Judgment.

b. The Plaintiff was, at the time of execution of the said Power of Attorney, a citizen of Sri Lanka and is subject to the Sri Lankan law.

c. The alienation or sale or mortgage of immovable property by a minor to be valid it needs the sanction of the Court.

d. According to Section 24(1) of the Judicature Act No. 2 of 1978, the charge of the property of minors is vested in the District Court of family courts (Sic). Hence at the time executing the said Power of Attorney, the District Court of Mt. Lavinia should have granted consent as the upper guardian since the Plaintiff was a minor. This contract has been effected without the necessary court permission- vide page 9 of the High Court Judgment. The contract should be treated as an unassisted contract.

e. If a contract is void ab initio due to an illegality or is illegal at the time of formation it cannot become effective later by the removal of disability.

f. No permission of the court has been obtained at the time of transferring the property to the 1st Defendant. The said contract is illegal and if the illegality exists either at the time of the formation of the contract or at the time of performance, such contract is void as the said Power of Attorney was not legal from its inception, since the Power of Attorney No. 1482 is of no force or effect in law because the principal "the plaintiff" was a minor and had no capacity to execute the said Power of Attorney and/or to sell immovable property without the sanction of the court -vide pages 11 and 12 of the High Court Judgment. Thus, the Power of Attorney is illegal and all transactions arising out of an illegal act are considered to be null and void - vide page 12 of the High Court Judgment.

g. The Defendants have failed to lead any evidence to suggest that they were bona fides purchasers and had purchased the land for valuable consideration- vide page 12 of the High Court Judgment.

Nevertheless, it is clear from the judgments of the Courts below that the learned judges have failed to consider and evaluate the following aspects in coming to their conclusions, namely;

- That the witness Reginald Perera Wickramaarachchi was not a party or witness to the impugned Power of Attorney or to Deeds challenged by the Plaintiff and, as such, he may not have any personal knowledge on those transactions other than as hearsay. As such he is not a suitable witness to state that consideration was not passed when Deed No.60 was executed or to state that it was executed in relation to a loan of the 2nd Defendant or to state that conveyance of the property from 1st Defendant to the 4th Defendant are fraudulent. Similarly, that he is not a member of the Plaintiff's family and as such he is not a person who can identify the purported birth certificate of the plaintiff as plaintiff's other than on hearsay. Further, that, neither the Plaintiff nor the 2nd Defendant who must have firsthand knowledge had given evidence.
- Whether, as per the evidence, the Plaintiff could have been considered as a person who emancipated himself from the status of a minor as at the date of executing the impugned Power of Attorney and as such, whether the said Power of Attorney was a contract of agency made between 2nd Defendant Father and the Plaintiff as an unassisted minor or not.

- Whether, as per the evidence and law, the Plaintiff had ratified the Power of Attorney after he reached the age of 21 prior to the sale by the 2nd Defendant, power of attorney holder.
- Whether a court can invalidate the Power of Attorney and the relevant deeds when there is no relief prayed for in that regard.
- That the Plaintiff was not a minor even by age at the time of the impugned deed no. 60 was executed. As such, if the Power of Attorney was valid at that time and there was no need for an approval from the court as it becomes a transaction of an adult through his agent, the power of attorney holder. Further, that the impugned Power of Attorney is only a document that grant certain powers or authority to the agent, namely the power of attorney holder named therein but not a document that convey any property of the Plaintiff to anyone.

As mentioned above, the main witness of the plaintiff was his power of attorney holder appointed for the prosecution of his case, namely Reginald Perera Wickramaarachchi. He, in his evidence at page 780 of the brief, states that he went to see the Plaintiff to Rathnapura Hospital when he was born. This answer was given when he was questioned about the age of the Plaintiff. However, as per the birth certificate marked as P3 at the trial, the Plaintiff was born in Colombo at Ratnam Hospital. This indicates that the witness does not have personal knowledge with regard to the birth certificate of the Plaintiff. Official witness who was summoned to prove the birth certificate can only say that it is a certified copy of the original in their register, but to say that it is Plaintiff's birth certificate either the Plaintiff or one who has personal knowledge as to that fact should have given evidence. Even objection to P3 had been reiterated at the closure of the Plaintiff's case. Even though, the learned judges of lower courts have relied on this document to decide that the Plaintiff was a minor at the time he executed the impugned Power of Attorney, they have not considered this aspect of the evidence. As decided in Sheila Senavirathne v Shereen Dharmarathna (1997) 1 Sri L R 76, a court cannot rely on hearsay evidence to prove facts of a case. Be that as it may, as there is no question of law allowed on such ground, I am not inclined to decide whether the Plaintiff was a minor or not on that ground.

The main issue to be considered by this Court is whether the Power of Attorney (No 1482 dated 27.02.1980) which is in question was valid at the time of executing deed no. 60 by which the property in issue was sold to the 1st Defendant by the 2nd Defendant as the power of attorney holder, and in such circumstances, whether the agent has acted within the scope of the power and authority given to him. In this regard, this court has to contemplate whether the Plaintiff in fact was a minor as per our law, at the time he appointed his father, the 2nd Defendant as his power of attorney holder: If in fact , he was a minor whether it was an assisted contract or not on behalf of the minor; If it is an assisted contract whether the Plaintiff took steps to rescind it after attaining the age of majority before the prescriptive period lapsed; If it was an unassisted contract of the Plaintiff as a minor whether he ratified it after attaining the age of majority and in such circumstances whether the 2nd defendant had the authority to sell the impugned property; If the Plaintiff ratified the impugned power of attorney and used it for his benefit whether he is estopped from denying the validity of the said power of attorney.

It appears that the learned judges below in deciding whether the plaintiff was a minor at the time he executed the power of attorney has only concerned the statutory provision that existed at that time, namely the provisions in Age of Majority Ordinance as per which the age of majority was 21 years. It was only in 1989 it was amended and brought down to 18 years by the Majority (Amendment Act) No.17 of 1989. However, one must take into account that the statutory provisions that existed at the time of executing the impugned Power of Attorney, only set the age for attaining majority. However, our law recognized other circumstances where minority terminates and such circumstances can be defined as follows;

- Marriage before reaching 21 years
- Obtaining letters of Vinia Aetatis
- Express or Tacit Emancipation
- In the case of Muslims, by the attainment of Puberty- vide The Law of Contracts – By C. G. Weeramantry – Volume I section 445, page 456

The Plaintiff is not a Muslim and there was no evidence that he was married or had letters of Vinia Aetatis at the time he executed the impugned Power of Attorney. Further there was no evidence of express emancipation. As there were issues that, without referring or limiting the scope of the issues to his age, query whether he was a minor when he executed the impugned Power of Attorney, and as such, whether it was not valid, in my view it was within the scope of the action for the learned District Judge and the learned High Court Judges to evaluate evidence to find whether the Plaintiff was in fact emancipated from his status as a minor by his own conduct. In this regard I would like to quote from section 457 in pages 462 and 463 of the afore quoted monumental work by C.G. Weeramantry.

"Tacit Emancipation. Tacit emancipation takes place when a minor with the consent of his parents or guardian carries on a trade or occupation on his own account. Tacit emancipation is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each particular case. Emancipation must be clearly proved and this involves proof of liberty and independence, freedom from parental control and the carrying on by the minor of a business, profession, trade or occupation. Trading is not of itself sufficient to emancipate a filius familias so long as he lives under his father's roof or is supported by him." …….

"The question to be decided is whether there has been in fact a separation of the minor from the control of the parent." …….

……. "But in fact, the minor has, to the knowledge of his parents or guardians, carried on some occupation on his own account for substantial period, he will be tacitly emancipated, as the South African case of a girl who earned her own livelihood as a servant for some years and retained her wages for herself even though she lived with her mother." …….

"If a minor has engaged in trade at the time of contracting, he is liable on his contract, the law considering that if a man has understanding and experience enough for commerce, he may safely be left to his own protection in the ordinary concerns and dealings of life."

Even according to Wille's 'Principles of South African Law' 5th edition 85; A minor is tacitly emancipated, i.e., tacitly released from the tutelage of his legal guardians if, with their consent, which may be express or implied, he carries on a trade or occupation on his own account.

Even though the pleadings and issues raised by the Plaintiff attempt to create an impression that the Plaintiff signed the Power of Attorney as a minor and then left to United Kingdom in 1980, the evidence led through his main witness Reginald Perera Wickramaarachchi, power of attorney holder for the prosecution of the case, reveals that the Plaintiff went to the United Kingdom in 1972 and had come back to Sri Lanka in 1980 and wanted to give the Power of Attorney to the said witness, but, as he was a Government Servant and he did not want to involve in the matter, he asked to give the Power of Attorney to the father of the Plaintiff, the 2nd Defendant. The witness also had said that it was to clear goods from the harbour and relates to the business of export and import of the Plaintiff – vide evidence of the said witness at pages 757,774,779,780,781 and 782 of the brief. Even the contents of the impugned Power of Attorney indicate that it was given to his father, the 2nd Defendant to manage and transact the Plaintiff's business and affairs in Sri Lanka, which included vehicle clearance from the Port of Colombo. Thus, the evidence led indicates that the Plaintiff went abroad to the United Kingdom, a country that considered the age of majority as 18 years at that time, as a minor and stayed there and, by the time he executed the Power of Attorney, had started a business of his own in export and import of vehicles. There was no evidence to show that business was done under the control and guidance of his father.

Further, it should be noted that 2nd Defendant was the father of the Plaintiff and the natural guardian, if the plaintiff has to be considered as a minor at the time of giving the impugned Power of Attorney. Generally, the natural guardianship has been defined as that of parents over the person and property of their minor children and the power of parents consisted in Roman Dutch Law in a general supervision of the maintenance and education of their children and in administration of their property – vide section 414 of afore quoted book by C. G. Weeramantry at page 418 and Gunasekara Hamini V Don Baron 5 N L R 273 at 279. Thus, it appears, the task of the natural guardian is to take care of the person and property of the minor, but in the case at hand, it seems the purported minor has gained a position, other than doing his own business, to command or direct his purported natural guardian as his agent. In the backdrop of authorities cited about what else is needed to show that the Plaintiff had emancipated himself from the status of a minor to a responsible businessman who can take his own commercial decisions independently.

The Plaintiff has argued that the question of emancipation is not pleaded and not put in issue as such should not be considered in the present appeal. Nevertheless, it should be noted that the issues Nos 3 and 4, raised before the learned District Judge, put in issue whether the Plaintiff was a minor at the time he gave the impugned Power of Attorney and, in that backdrop whether the said Power of Attorney is invalid and of no avail in law. The said issues, even though contemplate on the status of the Plaintiff as a minor, does not limit that status to the age of the Plaintiff or has no reference to his date of birth. Thus, in my view, when deciding whether the Plaintiff was a minor or not, the learned District Judge had no limitation to consider whether he was emancipated from that status at the time of the execution of the said Power of Attorney. Thus, there were evidence to say that even at the time of granting the Power of Attorney to his father, the 2nd Defendant, the plaintiff has the capacity to enter into contracts as a person who was emancipated from his status as a minor, and, as such, the power of attorney was valid from the beginning.

If for the sake of argument, one considers that the Plaintiff was a person who was not emancipated from his status as a minor since he was only 19 years of age and less than 21 years at the time he gave the impugned Power of Attorney to his father, the 2nd Defendant, the impugned Power of Attorney has to be considered as an unassisted contract of a minor, since it was not entered in to with the assistance of a guardian or with the sanction of the court, the upper guardian.

Siriwardene V Banda (1892) 2 C.L.Rep.99 at 101 and Selohamy v Raphiel (1889) 1 S C R 73 expressed the view that minor's conveyance was not ipso facto void but only voidable. However, our courts later on in some cases opined that such contracts were void and not voidable- See Gunasekera Hamini V Don Baron (1902) 5 N L R 273, Andiris Appu V Abanchi Appu (1902) 3 Browne 12, Manuel Naide V Adrian Hamy (1909) 12 N L R 259. Saibo V Perera (1915) 4 Bal.N. 57. Thereafter, in 1916 again the Supreme Court came to the conclusion that a contract with a minor is generally voidable and not void- vide Fernando V Fernando (1916) 19 N L R 193 and Silva V Mohamadu (1916) 19 N L R 426. The said case Silva V Mohamadu followed the ruling in the South African case of Breytenbach V Frankel (1913) A. D. 390 which decided that a dealing by a minor with his property was not ipso jure void but only voidable at his instance. This view was followed later on by our courts- see Wickremaratna V Josephine Silva (1959) 63 N L R 569. – (also see section 416 of the afore quoted book By C. G. Weeramantry at pages 422 and 423)

However, it appears that jurists contend that the words 'void' and 'voidable' not bear the same meaning as understood in English law as far as the contract of a minor is concerned. Thus, in Roman Dutch Law a minor's contract is such that it does not bind the minor unless he ratifies it on attaining majority, while it binds the other party to it. It is therefore invalid so far as the minor's obligation is concerned until he ratifies it. But it is valid so far as the obligation on the part of the other party is concerned – vide Fernando V Fernando (supra) and section 416 at page 423 of the afore quoted book by C. G. Weeramantry. However same author points out that there are exceptions to the rule that the minor is not bound by his unassisted contracts, namely;

- Contracts which are ratified by the minor or his guardian
- Contracts which benefit the minor
- Contracts entered into in consequence of misrepresentation by the minor in regard to his age
- Donationes mortis causa
- Obligations incurred quasi ex contractu – vide section 416 and page 426 of the aforesaid book.

As per the case of Wickramasinghe V Corrine De Zoysa (2002) 1 SLR 33;

> "(2) The Roman Dutch law relating to ratification is in force in Sri Lanka. The Roman Dutch Law permits ratification after majority, of an invalid contract of a minor and differs from the English Law…
> (3) In our law a contract upon ratification by a minor after attaining majority becomes as binding upon him as if it had been executed after his majority and it is effective from the time the contract was made.
> (4) Ratification maybe express or implied from some act by the minor manifesting an intention to ratify. For example, where a person with full knowledge of his legal rights continues after majority to use as his own the subject matter of a purchase made by him during minority, he must be taken to have ratified the contract." (underlined by me)– also see section 418 at page 428 of the aforementioned book by C. G. Weeramantry

In the case of Ramen Chetty v. Silva 15 NLR 286 it was held;

"the Roman Dutch Law of ratification of contracts by a minor is in force in Ceylon. Contracts which are neither certainly to a minor's prejudice nor necessarily for his benefit are neither void nor absolutely valid, but are voidable and capable of conformation after majority."

As per the case at hand, it is clear from the evidence that the Plaintiff after becoming a major entered into an Agreement to Purchase no.1976 dated 2nd may 1984 with the seller of the land in dispute through his power of attorney holder, the 2nd Defendant, using the same impugned Power of Attorney. It appears that the said agreement No.1976 has been marked as V1 at the trial without objection -vide page 791 of the brief, and, even though the power of attorney holder for the plaintiff for the purposes of the case at hand, who gave evidence for the plaintiff at the beginning, had said that he was not aware of such agreement, later has admitted that the Plaintiff used the impugned power of attorney to buy and sell the land in dispute - vide pages 794 and 811of the brief. No objection has been raised to this V 1 agreement at the closure of the Defendant's case -vide page 859 of the brief. Thus, it is clear, as per the evidence, the Plaintiff after becoming a major treated the impugned Power of Attorney as a valid one and used it to enter into agreements. Therefore, by his conduct as a major, he has ratified the impugned Power of Attorney and used it for his benefit. He cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate to say that, in relation to deed no.60, it is not a valid Power of Attorney. As mentioned above, when he entered into the said agreement to purchase and the impugned sale of the land through his power of attorney holder, the 2nd Defendant, the Plaintiff was not a minor to say that agreements which are detriment to a minor are not valid against him.

Hence, even if one argues that the impugned Power of Attorney was not valid since the Plaintiff was a minor as at the date it was given to his father, the deed no 60 by which the Power of Attorney holder sold it to the 1st Defendant cannot be challenged on that ground since by the time Deed no.60 was executed, the impugned power of attorney was valid due to the subsequent ratification by his own conduct by the Plaintiff as a major. The plaintiff executed the impugned Power of Attorney when he was 19 and for the benefit of his business in Sri Lanka. The existence of this power of attorney was within his knowledge when he reached the age of 21. Instead of taking steps to revoke it, he had used it for his benefit after attaining majority.

This court also observes that the Power of Attorney was a contract of agency which was entered into for the benefit of the Plaintiff to carry on his business in Sri Lanka, that is to say that it was for the improvement or maintenance of his business in Sri Lanka without rendering it to a worse position. Even though there is no evidence to show that it was used during his purported minority, it is clear it was used for his benefit in entering into the contract marked V1 after becoming a major.

Thus, even for the sake of argument if one considers that the Plaintiff was not emancipated from his position as a minor when he gave the impugned Power of Attorney to his father, the Power of Attorney was executed for his benefit and has been ratified by his own conduct after he became a major and the impugned deed no 60 was executed after such ratification.

However, it appears that on behalf of the Plaintiff there is an attempt to show that subsequent ratification was neither pleaded nor put in issue. This court observes that even though the word 'ratification' was not used, it is pleaded in the answer that the Plaintiff is estopped from claiming that the Power of Attorney was not valid in that he took no steps to revoke it and received benefits under the Power of Attorney. Issue No .25 had been raised accordingly. Even though, the word 'ratification' was not used, in fact this issue put in issue whether the Plaintiff is estopped from denying the validity of the Power of Attorney since he has gained benefit from the Power of Attorney. What this court find in the above analysis is that even after becoming a major, the Plaintiff has used the Power of Attorney for his benefit which amounts to ratification and in turn which estops him from denying the validity of the Power of Attorney.

Furthermore, that the Plaintiff's conduct, as a major, amounts to approbation and reprobation with regard to the validity of the power of attorney. As indicated above, after becoming a major, the Plaintiff used the Power of Attorney to enter into an agreement to buy the same property treating it as a valid document. If the Power of Attorney was detrimental to him, he could have taken steps to revoke it after becoming a major, instead he used the same document for his benefit. Now he cannot be allowed to say that it is not valid when the same property was sold on the strength of the said Power of Attorney.

In the case of Ceylon Plywoods Corporation V. Samastha Lanka G.N.S.M. and Rajya Sanstha Sevaka Sangamaya (1992) 1 SLR 157, it was stated; "The doctrine of approbate and reprobate (quod approbo non reprobo) is based on the principle that no person can accept and reject the same instrument."

It is the contention of the Plaintiff that "The power of attorney bearing No. 1482 given to the 2nd Defendant was to empower the 2nd Defendant to act in special circumstances. Thus, it cannot be construed to have given any power or authority to the 2nd Defendant to sell or transfer the premises in suit to any person even if the general clauses were to authorize him to sell any property in general and, as such, the 1st Defendant did not get title to the premises…" (written submissions of the plaintiff on 18th Sep. 2019). By this the Plaintiff attempts to argue that power to sell the impugned property was not given by the impugned Power of Attorney and, thus the transaction in deed no. 60 was not valid and, as such, the deeds written on the strength of the said deed no. 60 also are not valid. In this regard the Plaintiff argues that even though the impugned Power of Attorney bearing No. 1482 appears to be a General Power of Attorney, it is given with reference to a particular purpose and, as such, it is a Power of Attorney given for special particular purpose and thus, the general clauses contained in the said power of attorney will become inoperative and will not authorize the holder of the power of attorney to do any act under the said general provisions. In this regard, the Court's attention is brought to the said purported special authority given to the 2nd Defendant, the power of attorney holder, which read as follows;

"To apply to the Principal Collector of Customs for the purpose of clearing Motor Vehicle or Vehicle arriving at the port of Colombo and for that purpose to sign make and execute bonds declarations applications statements and all documents of whatsoever kind or nature under the law relating to Exchange Control Imports and Exports and Customs Ordinance in force in the said Republic of Sri Lanka,

To apply for the policy of insurance to insure and keep the vehicle or vehicles insured in my name,

To apply for Revenue License and to pay all License fees in respect of Motor Vehicle or Vehicles and procure receipts,

To sell dispose of my Motor vehicles or vehicles for such consideration upon such terms and subject to such covenants as my said attorney may think fit or to enter into or agreement for any such sale disposal conveyance and exchange and to sign necessary documents for such purpose."

It is true that above is type written and inserted to the Power of Attorney form but nowhere in the Power of Attorney it is stated that the afore quoted clause is the special authority that was intended by the Plaintiff to be given to the 2nd Defendant. It is found among the other powers given by the same Power of Attorney which are mainly in printed form with certain blank parts filled by typing.

At the commencement of the Power of Attorney it is stated as follows;

'As I am desirous of appointing some fit and proper person as my attorney to manage and transact all my business and affairs in the said Sri Lanka'

Thus, it is clear that the intention of the Plaintiff was to appoint an Attorney to manage and transact all his business and affairs in this country and for that purpose he has appointed the 2nd Defendant his father in the following manner.

"……. I the said Samuel Vivindra Eliathamby have made nominated and appointed and by these presents do make, nominate and appoint my father Selwin Danaraj Eliathamby also of No.1, Elibank Road, Colombo 5 true and lawful Attorney in the said Sri Lanka to act for me and on behalf and in the name of me and of my said firm or otherwise for all and each and every of any of the following purposes that is to say :-"

Among the purposes so described in the impugned Power of Attorney, what was quoted above and relied by the Plaintiff, is the last one and what is quoted below is the 1st purpose.

"To superintend, manage and control house, land, estates, other landed property as also the ships vessels and boats which I now or hereafter become entitled to possessed interested in and to sell and dispose of or to mortgage and hypothecate or to demise and lease or freight or charter or to convey by way of exchange the houses, land, estates and other landed property ships vessels and boats which I now or hereafter may become entitled to possessed of or interested in. …….."(underlined by me)

Among other purposes for which the 2nd Defendant as the Attorney of the Plaintiff had been empowered to do, what is quoted below is also included.

"To purchase or take on lease for me any necessary lands tenements hereditaments as to my said Attorney shall seem proper.

In the event of such purchase, sale, lease, exchange, mortgage and hypothecation, partition, freight, charter or for any other purpose whatsoever for me and in my name and as my act and deed to sign execute and deliver all deeds and other writings for giving effect and validity to the same respectively or to any contract, agreement or promise for effecting the same respectively." (underlined by me)

It must be noted that there is nothing in the document itself to show that the purpose relied upon by the Plaintiff in this case as quoted above was the special purpose to give this power of attorney to the 2nd Defendant. After setting out each and every purpose of giving the Power of Attorney the Plaintiff had given ancillary powers in the following manner;

"Generally, to do execute and perform all such further and other acts, deeds matters and things whatsoever which my said attorney shall think necessary or proper to be done……"

Thus, the purported purpose relied upon by the Plaintiff, as per the submissions made, stand pari passu with other purposes referred above and there is no special attention given to it through the words used in the document itself. It has been added to the items of purposes by typing it in the space provided for such additions. This does not indicate that it was the special purpose the Power of Attorney was given. Neither the Plaintiff nor the 2nd Defendant has given evidence to say that there was such special purpose. The power of attorney holder for the case, who was not a party to the impugned Power of Attorney, cannot give evidence to indicate that it was a Special Power of Attorney though it was written as a General Power of Attorney, other than on hearsay. The document marked as the Power of Attorney given to the 2nd Defendant indicate that power to purchase and sell immovable property stand pari passu with the power to do the needful to clear vehicles from the port and matters related to such clearance, which is stressed as the special purpose for the Power of Attorney on behalf of the Plaintiff. On the other hand, a third party looking at the Power of Attorney cannot recognize such special purpose and power attached to such clearance of vehicles. Even if one argues that, as it is typewritten and inserted to the main body, it is the special purpose for giving the Power of Attorney to the 2nd Defendant, power to purchase and sell immovable property has been given expressly at least to serve the purported special purpose. As such a third party dealing with the power of attorney holder comprehend the document as one giving authority to sell the immovable property. Whether it is in relation to a special purpose or not is only within the knowledge of the Plaintiff or the power of attorney holder, the 2nd Defendant. If the power of attorney holder, the 2nd Defendant father had cheated or defrauded the Plaintiff, it is a matter between the principal and the agent for which the others cannot be held liable. Though the Plaintiff complained that there is collusive relationship among 1st,3rd and 4th defendants, this court observes that no substantial prayer is sought against the 2nd Defendant in this case and no evidence was led to show that the Plaintiff has taken sufficient steps against the 2nd Defendant, namely to prosecute the 2nd Defendant in a criminal action or to gain compensation in a civil action. This indicates that the collusion may lie somewhere else.

In the aforesaid backdrop I do not see that the Ratio decidendi in the case Vijith Abraham De Silva V S P Claris De Silva S C Appeal No. 44/2012 relied by the Plaintiff, which says that 'the specific powers conferred by a power of attorney should be construed in the light of the intention of the principal who grants the power of attorney and that the general words couched into clauses in general power of attorney cannot in anyway be construed to disturb the specific clauses contained in the power of attorney and that the intention of the principal has to be gathered from the clauses in the power of attorney whether it is a special power of attorney or whether it is a general power of attorney', supports the case for the Plaintiff in this instant for the following reasons;

- It says that the clauses in a general power of attorney shall not be construed to disturb the specific clauses but it does not say that specific clauses nullify the general clauses totally.
- Here in the case at hand, as mentioned above power to sell the lands, houses and other landed property is given in *pari pass*u with the purported special clause relied by the Plaintiff in view of enabling the attorney to manage and transact all the businesses and affairs of the Plaintiff. Even if the purported clause relied by the Plaintiff is considered as a special clause for the sake of argument, power to sell the lands is given at least for the purposes covered by the purported special clause.
- The case cited above appears to be a case where a gift was made when the power to make such gift of lands was not given, but under the power given to manage and to sell and dispose property. In the case at hand power to sell lands was given not by implication but in black and white even if it is construed per se as contemplated in the case of Adaicappa V Cook 31 N L R 385 or construed fairly and strictly as contemplated in Marshall V Senaviratne 36 N L R 369 at 382.
- Selling of lands is within the ostensible authority given by the impugned Power of Attorney and, as such a third party, namely the 1st Defendant buying through the Attorney cannot be found fault with.

Further the counsel for the Plaintiff through his submissions while referring to Pillai Anna Fernando 54 N L R 113, Bowster on Agency 1st Edition Article 36 at page 59 and Harper V Godsell 1870 LR 5 QB 422 at 427 argues to indicate that general words do not confer general powers or unrestricted general effect but shall be construed as limited to the purpose which the authority is given. However, as indicated above, it is clear that the power to sell lands was given to the Attorney for the purpose of the business and affairs of the Plaintiff in this country.

For the foregoing reasons, it is my considered view that the argument on behalf of the Plaintiff that the impugned Power of Attorney has not in law granted any authority or power to sell the relevant premises cannot hold water.

In the said backdrop, this court has to answer the questions of law in favour of the 1st defendant Appellant.

However, since there were other grounds such as nonpayment of consideration, laesio enormis pleaded by the Plaintiff, it is necessary to see before setting aside the Judgment of the learned District Judge which was confirmed by the High Court whether the said judgment can stand intact on those grounds.

It must be noted neither the Plaintiff nor the 2nd defendant power of attorney holder for the impugned transaction has given evidence to say that consideration was not paid. One Reginald Perera Wickramarachchi, power of attorney holder of the Plaintiff for the case filed in the District Court and one Hewage Sirisena from the Central Registry who had come to give evidence with regard to the Birth certificate have given evidence for the Plaintiff. Neither of them was a party or a witness to the impugned deed no.60. Thus, they are not eligible witnesses to say anything about the consideration unless as hearsay that came to their knowledge from other sources. Furthermore, Hewage Sirisena has not uttered anything regarding the consideration in relation to deed no.60. In fact, when said Reginald Perera Wickramarachchi was questioned in this regard on 22/06/2000 at page 7 of that day's proceedings (page 759 of the brief) as to whether the father of the plaintiff (2nd Defendant) was given any money by the 1st defendant on this transaction and his answer had been that he did not know. Thus, there was no reliable evidence to show that no consideration was paid for the transaction contemplated in deed no.60. On the other hand, if he does not know how much was paid at the transaction how can he be a reliable witness to say that the amount paid was less than half of the value and thus, doctrine of laesio enormis applies. It is true that the consideration mentioned in deed no.60 (P5) is Rs. 800000.00 and this witness states in his evidence that the true value of the land in 1985 was Rs. 5000000.00 -vide page 760 of the brief, again at page 846 of the brief, he says that it was Rs.700000.00 or 800000.00 per perch in 1985, indicating that the value of the land was around Rs.9750000.00, but it is clear from the deed no. 2085 marked P4 that the Plaintiff bought the land for Rs. 800000.00 only few months prior to the sale by deed no.60. This witness has not shown any qualification in valuation and even his stance with regard to the value at 1985 is not constant as mentioned above. There is no proper explanation, how the value mentioned in P4 in February 1985 rose up to an amount that exceeds double of that amount or to amounts mentioned by him in evidence in September 1985, that is within 7 months period. He tried to explain this by saying that correct amount is not mentioned in deeds when buying lands. Then, how can he say that, when the 2nd Defendant as the power of attorney holder sold the land, the correct amount was mentioned, when this witness was not a party or witness to the said transaction.

As decided in Sheila Senavirathne v Shereen Dharmarathne (1997) 1 Sri L R 76, a court cannot rely on hearsay evidence to prove facts of a case. The main witness as to the incident in question was merely an attorney appointed for the case and was not a party to or a witness to the impugned deed.

Hence, there was no reliable evidence to show that the first Defendant bought or the second Defendant sold the land less than half the value of the property to apply the doctrine of laesio enormis. On the other hand, doctrine of laesio enormis does not ipso facto make the deed void. It is used to rescind the contract. For that there is no prayer in the plaint to declare that deed no.60 is void. Thus, the claim of the Plaintiff that the deed no.60 was void on the grounds of not paying the consideration and laesio enormis should fail. It is questionable whether the plaintiff could on one hand saying that the consideration was not paid and on the other state that what was paid as consideration is less than half the value of the true value, since it amounts to approbation and reprobation. However, I need not go into that issue, since, it is clear those positions were not established factually. Even though, the learned District Judge had answered an issue to indicate that it was not proved that the consideration for P5, deed no. 60 was paid, as discussed above there was no acceptable evidence to come to that conclusion against what is mentioned in and evidenced by the deed itself. It is also observed that there was no evidence to establish that the 1st Defendant, 3rd Defendant and the 4th Defendant acted fraudulently.

As shown above other stances taken by the plaintiff cannot be considered proved as per the evidence led.

Further it was held that a Court has no jurisdiction to grant reliefs not prayed for. – Vide Surangi V Rodrigo (2003) 3 SLR 35. It is observed the learned District Judge has invalidated certain deeds without any prayer in that regard.

Afterall it is my view that the Power of Attorney given to the 2nd Defendant, father of the Plaintiff, was a valid one as the Plaintiff could have been considered as emancipated from his status of a minor at the time he executed the impugned Power of Attorney. Further, even if he was a minor it was executed for his benefit and was ratified when he became a major and used to enter into agreements as a major prior to the impugned incident of selling the land in dispute. As such he is estopped from denying its validity. Power to sell immovable property was ostensibly given by the said Power of Attorney.

The answers to the questions of law allowed by this court are as follows;

18(b). Did the High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province err by failing to appreciate that at the time of executing the Power of Attorney the Plaintiff was not a minor, in that he has been "emancipated" in the light of the evidence adduced before the trial court to the effect that he has been living independently of his parents, conducting business independently, employed overseas etc.?

Answer: Yes

18(c). Did the High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province err by failing to appreciate that the Plaintiff has ratified the Power of Attorney in the light of the clear evidence that he has continued to act on the said Power of Attorney and had not taken any steps to revoke it, even after he has attained the age of majority?

Answer: Yes

18(e). Did the High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province fail to appreciate the true legal effect of a contract entered in to by a minor, in that, a contract by a minor is only voidable and not void, thus, the Power of Attorney remained valid until it is set aside and that subsequent setting aside of the Power of Attorney, will not affect the property rights acquired by the Petitioner as innocent third parties through the Power of Attorney?

Answer: Yes, the learned High Court judges erred in appreciating the true legal effect of a contract entered into by a minor. Even if an unassisted contract is void against the minor it can be ratified and make valid by the minor after becoming a major as happened in the case at hand. Once it is ratified and made valid and used for his benefit, he is estopped from stating that it is void ab initio.

18(f). Did the Court of Appeal (Sic) fall into substantial error by holding that "Defendants have failed to lead any evidence to suggest that they were bona fide purchasers had purchased the land for valuable consideration" in the light of evidence placed before Court – [Deed of Transfer bearing No. 60, dated 17-09-1985 speaks for itself]?

Answer: Yes, the High Court of Civil Appeal fell into a substantial error in that regard. There is no acceptable evidence to disprove what is evidenced from the deed and to state that no valuable consideration was passed and the 1st, 3rd and 4th Defendants acted fraudulently.

18(g). Did the High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province err by failing to appreciate that the District Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the Power of Attorney and the Deeds Nos. 60[dated 17-09-1985], 73[dated 17-11-1987] & 31[dated 08-07-1988] since there was no prayer in the Plaint seeking the setting aside of the same?

Answer: Yes, the learned District Judge could have come to a finding whether the deeds were valid or not, but could have granted only the reliefs prayed for in the plaint. However, learned District Judge also erred in finding the deeds giving rights to the Defendants are invalid.

18(h). Did the High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province err by failing to appreciate that even if it is assumed [without in any manner conceding] that the District Court had the jurisdiction to set aside the Power of Attorney and the Deeds Nos. 60[dated 17-09-1985], 73[dated 17-11-1987] & 31[dated 08-07-1988] without a prayer to that effect in the Plaint, the Court in this instance could not have set aside them, since the action of the Plaintiff had prescribed, in terms of the provisions of section 10 of the Prescription Ordinance?

Answer: Yes, since instead of filing an action to revoke the impugned Power of Attorney within time, the Plaintiff had by his conduct ratified the Power of Attorney.

For the reasons demonstrated in the discussion above, I hold that the impugned Power of Attorney is valid in law and thus, impugned deeds are valid, and the appeal of the 1(a) Defendant should be allowed.

The Plaintiff argues that, since leave to appeal was refused in SC/HCCA/LA 313/2010, this court ought not make an order contrary to the said order. However, it appears that the Appellant of this matter was only a Respondent in that application. In this matter 1st Defendant Appellant has satisfactorily supported his application to leave and this court has granted leave on several questions of laws. Thus, the decision of this application has to be based on such questions of law allowed and not on the outcome of an application made by another party who apparently had failed in satisfying this court to use its desecration in his favour.

Hence the appeal of the 1st Defendant Appellant is allowed and accordingly, the relevant judgment dated 25.08.2010 of the Civil Appellate High Court of the Western Province holden at Mount Lavinia and the judgment dated 23.08.2002 of the District Court of Mount Lavinia are set aside. Further, the learned District Judge of Mount Lavinia is directed to enter a decree dismissing the action filed by the Plaintiff Respondent.

1st Defendant Appellant is entitled to the costs of this appeal as well as to the costs in the lower courts.

E. A. G. R. Amarasekara, J.

The Plaintiff – Appellant – Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiffs) instituted proceedings against the Defendant –Respondent – Petitioner (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant) in the District Court of Kurunegala inter alia seeking for a declaration of title to the land more fully described in the 2nd schedule to the plaint which is a part of the land described in the 1st schedule and to have the Defendant evicted from the said land and for damages.

Plaintiffs in their Plaint stated inter alia that:

a) The original owner of the land in dispute was one Marimuttu and she gifted the land in the 1st Schedule to the Plaint to Rajendran, her son, by Deed No. 16102 dated 3rd July 1971, marked as P1 at the trial, and said Rajendran by Deed No.16699 dated 11.10.1982, marked as P2 at the trial, transferred the same to the Plaintiffs.
b) The said Marimuttu revoked P1 by Deed No. 1272 dated 11th October 1982, marked as P4 at the trial, and the said revocation was not lawful and further, aforesaid Marimuttu, Rajendran and the Defendant had collectively perpetrated a fraud on the Plaintiffs.
c) After the death of Marimuttu, four out of her five children, including aforesaid Rajendran, as the heirs of said Marimuttu, executed a Deed No.5222 dated 3rd October 1985, marked as P5 at the trial, conveying their rights to Rajapoobathy Samuel, the other sibling, while declaring that Marimuttu did not deliver the aforesaid deed of gift(P1) and held the possession of the property in dispute.

d) No title passed from Marimuttu to her children including said Rajapoobathy Samuel.
e) Aforesaid Rajapoobathy Samuel subdivided the land in the First Schedule to the Plaint in the manner depicted in Plan No.1849 dated 16th February 1986, marked as P6 at the trial, and transferred Lot 7 of the same, which is more fully described in the second schedule to the plaint, to the Defendant by Deed No.2888 dated 20th February 1989, marked as P7 at the trial, by which the Defendant does not get any title.
f) The Defendant has been in unlawful occupation of the premises in suit since 2nd February 1989.

The Defendant in his amended answer admitted the paragraph 3 of the plaint which states that Marimuutu had conveyed (පවරා දී ඇත) the land in the 1st schedule to the plaint to said Rajendran by executing P1. However, the Defendant takes up the position that said Rajendran did not have lawful title to transfer the said land by P2, to the Plaintiffs. He further had stated that said Marimuttu lawfully and voluntarily cancelled the gift made by P1 and possessed the land till she died and four of her children transferred the land in the 1st schedule to the plaint to their sister, Rajapoobathy Samuel who subdivided the land into several lots as per plan P6 and transferred the said lots to tenants of the boutiques in those lots including the Defendant. Thus, the Defendant in his amended answer had claimed title to land in schedule 2 to the plaint on the strength of P7, a deed of transfer executed by said Rajapoobathy Samuel. Furthermore, the Defendant had claimed prescriptive title to the land in suit on the basis of long and continuous possession of the Defendant and his predecessors in title.

Even though the Defendant in paragraph 11 of his amended answer averred that the gift given by executing P1 by said Marimuttu had not been accepted by the Donee, Rajendran, and Marimuttu did not hand over the possession or the original deed to Rajendran, as such, said gift was not valid in law, no issue had been raised by the Defendant on such averments at the beginning or during the trial. Thus, it is apparent that the Defendant appeared to have waived contesting P1 on those grounds when raising issues. This waiver has to be considered in the light of the aforesaid admission of paragraph 3 of the plaint at the commencement of the trial. As indicated above, admission of paragraph 3 of the plaint is not limited to the admission of the execution of the deed of gift marked P1 or the mere gifting of the relevant land, it also in a way admits the handing over of the relevant property in the 1st schedule (පලවන උප ලේඛනයේ දේපල පවරාදීම) to Rajendran. It must be noted similar terminology had been used by the Defendant in paragraph 8 of the amended answer to indicate that the property in the 2nd schedule became his property. On the other hand, even if one does not give such wider interpretation to the admission of paragraph 3 of the plaint and limit it to mean only the execution of deed of gift mentioned there, as explained above, the defendant appeared to have waived contesting the gift made by P1 on the ground of non-acceptance as averred in paragraph 11 of his amended answer with the raising of issues for the trial.

In fact, the first issue raised by the Plaintiffs at the trial refers to the 3rd paragraph of the plaint, which was admitted by the Defendant, and it queries whether Rajendran who gained rights and entitlements as per the said paragraph 3 of the plaint transferred them to the Plaintiffs. The Defendant neither has objected to this issue on the basis that the Plaintiffs had not gained any rights or entitlement as per paragraph 3 of the plaint, nor raised any counter issue on the premise that the Plaintiffs did not get any right or entitlement as per paragraph 3 of the plaint. The other issues raised by the Plaintiffs concentrate on to query whether the Defendant's predecessors in title had title to transfer their rights as well as whether the Defendant is in unlawful possession disputing plaintiffs' rights and also to query whether the Plaintiffs are entitled to the reliefs prayed for.

Issues no. 9 and no.10 raised at the trial were the first two issues raised by the Defendant and they query whether the gift given to Rajendran by Marimuttu by executing P1 was validly cancelled by said Marimuttu. Other issues raised by the Defendant focus on whether the sale by Rajendran to the Plaintiffs after the said cancellation was valid and whether the Defendant has legally acquired title to the property in issue through the Deed marked P7 and /or by prescription, and if so, his entitlements to the reliefs prayed for in the answer. Thus, the validity of the Deed of Gift given to Rajendran, marked P1, till it was purportedly cancelled by Marimuttu, was never at issue at the trial. As held in Hanaffi Vs Nallamma (1998) 1 Sri L R 73, once issues are framed, the case which the court has to hear and determine is crystallized in the issues, and the pleadings recede to the background. Hence, whether the gift given by P1 was accepted or not was not a matter in issue in the District Court for the parties to adduce evidence in that regard. (Also see

The learned District Judge decided in favour of the Defendant but, in appeal, the learned High Court Judges of the Kurunegala Civil Appellate High Court decided the dispute in favour of the Plaintiffs.

As per the judgment of the District Court, the issue whether P1 was properly cancelled by Marimuttu had been identified by the Learned District Judge as the main issue to be solved – vide page 140 of the brief. Other than the claim of prescription by the Defendant, in terms of the issues raised at the trial, if the said revocation is invalid, the Plaintiffs get the paper title through Rajendran and the Defendant does not get paper title from the heirs of Marimuttu. Even the claim on prescription by the Defendant shall fail since he apparently had admitted that he was the tenant up to the time he bought the land with the execution of P7 in 1989, and further, as he cannot rely on the possession of purported predecessors, if the said deed, P7 is not valid.

However, the learned District Judge, without any averment or reference in the pleadings filed and the issues raised, had come to a finding that since the disputed land is within the Kurunegala District where Kandyan Law applies, donor could cancel the deed without giving any reason and as such the revocation was valid. Nevertheless, in appeal, learned High Court judges have correctly held that Kandyan Law is not a territorial law that applies to all the people resident in the Kandyan Province but a law personal to Kandyan Sinhalese and, admittedly Marimuttu being a Tamil, he was not governed by the Kandyan law, and as such, the learned District Judge erred in considering P1 as a Kandyan Gift that could be cancelled by the Donor himself. This part of the learned High Court Judges' judgment is not in dispute before this court. Even the Defendant admits the finding on non-applicability of Kandyan Law is correct - vide paragraph 26(i) of the Petition as well as at page 5 of his written submissions dated 06.06.2019. However, the learned High Court Judges came to the finding that there was a tacit acceptance of deed of gift marked P1 and, hence, allowing the appeal, held in favour of the Plaintiffs as mentioned above. When the leave to appeal application was supported by the aggrieved Defendant, on 17.07 2012 this court has granted leave on two questions of law which will be referred to later in this judgment.

As per Public Trustee V Uduruwana 51 N L R 193, a donation is a bilateral agreement to which there must be two consenting parties[1]; one person is called the "donor" who without being under any legal obligation so to do and without receiving or stipulating for anything in return gives or promises to give something to another, who is called the "donee"[2]. In Abubucker Vs Fernando (1987) 2 Sri. L. R 225, referring to page 285 of the 5th edition of Roman Dutch Law by Lee, it was held that under the Roman Dutch Law, a donation is regarded as a contract and no obligation arises until the acceptance by the donee and, a donation to be valid has to be perfected by acceptance. Further with reference to Hendrick V Sudritaratne (1912) 3 CAC 80, it was further mentioned that no particular form is required for the acceptance of the gift and that it is in every case a question of fact whether or not there are sufficient indications of the acceptance by the donee. In Nagalingam V Thanabalasingham 50 N L R 97 at 98 Canekeratne J., pointed out that a donor makes a gift with the intention that the thing would become the property of the donee; the offer must be accepted by him to whom it is made, for the concurrence of the donor and donee must take place in order to render the donation perfect, the obligatory effect of the gift depends upon its acceptance. More than a century ago, a full bench decision of D.C. Matara 20,862(1871), Vand.168 also had stated that a deed of gift have no force until it is accepted. Even though, it was held in Siriwardene V Wirawanthan (2001) 2Sri L R 288 and in Nonai V Appuhamy 21 N L R 165 that the effect of non-acceptance of a gift by the donee is to entitle the donor to revoke the gift and make any disposition of any kind, it appears from the decisions mentioned above that if the donation is not accepted the gift made is void indicating that executing a deed of revocation is not a must. Referring to Fernando V Alwis 37 N L R 201 the Defendant in his written submissions dated 06.06 2019 argues that the effect of non-acceptance is that it renders the gift invalid and not merely voidable. Furthermore, citing Bertie Fernando and Others V Missie Fernando and Others (1986) 1 S L R 211 in the said written submissions, the Defendant contends that non-acceptance vitiates a deed and there need not be any revocation even though there is a practice evolved to execute deed of revocation. Considering the ratio of aforementioned judgments this court is not hesitant to accept that a donation given by a deed is not valid, if the donation is not accepted by the donee, and a deed of revocation is not mandatory. This position can be further cemented since the right to challenge the validity of a gift for want of acceptance is not restricted to the donor- vide Kanapathipillai V

Kasinather 39 N L R 544. However, what this court has to keep in mind in deciding the appeal at hand is that acceptance of a donation is a matter of fact and, as mentioned before, no particular form is required for the acceptance. As such it depends on the facts of each case.

In Bindua V Untty 13 N L R 259 it was decided that acceptance may be manifested in any way in which assent may be given or indicated. The question of acceptance is a question of fact, and each case has to be determined according to its own circumstances.

Since, the acceptance of a gift is a question of fact, this court has to now consider whether the Defendant could have been allowed to argue in appeal before the High Court or whether the learned High Court Judges could have decided on a question of law that is mingled with such factual circumstances, where the Defendant failed or waived to put such factual circumstances in issue in the original court.

Somawathie V Wilmon (2010) 1 Sri L R 128 was a case where it was held that the High Court was wrong in law in considering the question of non-acceptance of the deed of gift since there was a failure to raise an issue on that ground in the District Court or lead any evidence to that effect. It was further held that a new ground cannot be considered for the first time in appeal, if the said new ground has not been raised at the trial under the issues so framed. However, the Appellate Court could consider a point raised for the first time in appeal if the following requirements are fulfilled;

a) The question raised for the first time in appeal, is a pure question of law and is not a mixed question of law and fact.
b) The question raised for the first time in appeal, is an issue put forward in the court below, under one of the issues raised, and
c) The court which hears the appeal has before it all the materials that require to decide the question.

It was also held in Thalwatte V M. Somasundaram (1997) 2 Sri L R 109 at 111and 112 that a new contention involving question of mixed fact and law cannot be raised for the first time in an appeal.

Since whether a deed of gift was accepted or not is a question of fact, an issue of law based on such circumstances is not a pure question of law. As mentioned before, whether the gift made by P1 was accepted or not, was not a matter to be decided by the District Court as per the issues raised at the trial. In terms of the issues raised at the original court what was to be decided was not the validity of the gift made by P1 or whether it was void but whether P1 was validly cancelled by Marimuttu and, if so, whether title goes to the Defendant as per the manner stated by the Defendant or by prescription or, if not, whether the Plaintiffs get title as per the manner claimed by them. On the other hand, when there was no issue challenging the acceptance of the gift which is a question of fact, a court sitting in appeal cannot come to a conclusion that all the materials that require to decide the question is before the court since in the original court the parties had to meet each party's case enunciated by issues raised before the original court. Further, as per Section 5 of the Evidence Ordinance, evidence can be led only on facts in issue and relevant facts. In this regard I would like to refer to the following decisions;

Chrishanthi Peiris Vs Matilda Fernando and 3 Others 2012 B L R 354- which held "the purpose to raise issues and admissions in terms of the Civil Procedure Code is in one respect to identify each party's case before Court. Issues are generally raised from the pleadings and it is also permissible to raise issues when evidence transpire in court and based on evidence issues could be suggested." ;…. It appears that this judgment upheld the position that the appellate court cannot consider new positions not urged before the trial judge. (In the matter at hand, as mentioned before, even though there was a pleading in the amended answer challenging the validity of P1 on the ground of non-acceptance, the Defendant did not raise an issue on that, and even when P1, the now impugned deed of gift and its purported revocation, P4 were marked and contents were transpired, no issue was raised as to the validity of the gift for want of acceptance indicating, more likely, a waiver of such position)

Pathmawathie Vs Jayasekare (1997) 1 Sri. L. R. 248- "It must always be remembered by Judges that the system of civil law that prevails in our country is confrontational and therefore, the jurisdiction of the judge is circumscribed and limited to the dispute presented to him for adjudication by the contesting parties……

……Our civil law does not in any way permit the adjudicator or the judge the freedom of the wild ass to go on a voyage of discovery and make a finding as he pleases may be on what he thinks is right or wrong, moral or immoral or what should be the correct situation. The adjudicator or the judge is duty bound to determine the dispute presented to him and his jurisdiction is circumscribed by that dispute and no more."[3]

This court is mindful of the fact that there may be instances of factual situations where the record of the original court may speak for itself without the need of an opportunity for any party to lead evidence in that regard;(whether the judge acted in a prejudicial manner in relation to a party ; or where a transaction to be valid has to be executed in a particular form such as one that has to be attested by a Notary Public but the document marked is not so attested, can be taken as examples.) However, whether the acceptance of a gift took place or not is not a matter that can be decided by ancillary evidence that might have come up with the evidence that was intended to prove issues raised on other grounds.

Hence, as indicated by the aforesaid decisions, it can be said that whether the gift by P1 is valid or not, for the want of acceptance, was not a matter that could have been considered in appeal by the learned High Court Judges when it was not raised as an issue in the original court. In that sense, the learned High Court Judges have exceeded their jurisdiction in appeal when they opted to find the validity of P1 on the ground whether it was accepted or not. Thus, it appears, the learned High Court Judges took the dispute between the parties outside the scope of the dispute presented through the issues before the original court in deciding the appeal presented before them by considering whether the gift by P1 was accepted or not.

As mentioned before, the learned District Judge erred in applying Kandyan Law principles to one of the main issues to be solved but the learned High Court Judge correctly decided that the Kandyan Law has no relevance to the matter at hand. Nevertheless, it is worthwhile to see whether P1 is revocable under common law by the donor. As said before, if the gift was not accepted, it is not necessary to execute a deed of revocation though there is a practice of executing deeds of revocation. Such revocation has to be considered as mere declaration by the original donor as to nonexistence of a valid gift. If there is a dispute as to the acceptance it has to be resolved through a competent court of law, since it is a matter relating to the existence or nonexistence of a contract.

A donation by its nature is irrevocable subject to certain exceptions such as ingratitude, donor having children after a gift of great value, and being prejudicial to the legitimate portion of the donor's children due to its magnitude etc.[4] However, when the donation is mortis causa, as it is termed, or under the apprehension of approaching death, it may at all times be reclaimed during the lifetime of the donor.[5] A duly constituted gift can never be revoked by the donor, unless the donee has turned out to be ungrateful ……[6] A donor may expressly reserve to himself the power to revoke a gift, and revocation in the exercise of such power is valid. If the reservation is to revoke in case of misconduct of the donee, such misconduct should be averred and proved to justify a revocation.[7] A gift that is subject to a limitation or a condition may be revoked if such condition attached to it has not been fulfilled.[8] The submissions made on behalf of the appellants in Kanapatthipillai V Kannachi 13 N L R 166 , with reference to Voet 39, 5, 24-86, Sansoni V Foenander (1872) Ram.32, Government Agent, Western Province V Palaniappa Chetti (1908) 4 A.C.R.4, that a deed of gift is by nature irrevocable, and, unless a power of revocation be reserved, can only be set aside by proper judicial proceedings and that only the court could have set aside the deed of gift, appears to have been accepted in that case, since it was held that the first defendant in that case had no right, so long as the deed of gift was in force, to have either executed a deed of revocation, or following upon that, a deed of conveyance. Basnayake C J in his judgment in Krishnasamy V Thillaiyampalam 59 N L R 265 at 267 referring to five causes of ingratitude stated "…….that gifts can be invalidated for these causes alone if they are proved in a court of law……."

In Dona Podi Nona Ranaweera Menike V Rohini Senanayake (1992) 2 Sri L R 180 at 221 it was stated that revocation is not automatic and requires a decision of court and, as per the judgment, it appears the court was of the view that the gift relevant to that case was not a donation propter nuptias- vide at page 222. However, it appears that in D.C. Mangalika and others V D. Sumanawathie and others C. A. 535/95 dated 30.07.2007, the Court of Appeal considered a revocation of a deed of gift by the donor himself as valid stating that the deed of gift considered in aforesaid Dona Podi Nona V Ranaweera Menike v Rohini Senanayake was a gift made in contemplation of a marriage, but, as said before, though it was a gift made in view of a marriage, the court found it was not a donation propter nuptias but a donation that can be revoked for ingratitude. It must be noted that after the decision of D C Mangalika and Others Vs Sumanawathie, the legislature had passed a statute, namely Revocation of Irrevocable Deeds of Gift on the Ground of Gross Ingratitude Act, No.5 of 2017 to provide that irrevocable deed of gift may be revoked on the ground of gross ingratitude only on an order made by a competent court, perhaps to rectify what seems to be a mistaken assertion made in that case and to state the law as it was.

In Francklin Fernando V Anacletus Fernando (2015) 1 Sri L R 1, the Court of Appeal held that 'Although ordinarily a deed of gift is irrevocable by the donor nevertheless it is competent for the donor to move court of competent jurisdiction to invalidate the donation by adducing proof that the donee has turned out to be an ingrate post execution of the donation.' In Mahawewa V Mahawewa S C Appeal 64 /2008, Tilakawardane J stated that "the law on donations and the revocation of gifts in Sri Lanka is governed by Roman Dutch Law, under which a gift once donated, can be revoked on grounds of gross ingratitude by the donee to the donor. The donor may initiate court proceedings to cancel the gift so donated." In Ariyawathie Meemaduwa V Jeewani Budhika Meemaduwa (2011) 1 Sri L R 124 at 133, the Supreme Court held that "a deed of gift is absolute and irrevocable. That is the rule. However, the law has recognized certain exceptions to the rule of irrevocability. A party applying to court to invoke the exceptions in his favour has to satisfy court, by cogent evidence, that the court would be justified in invoking the exceptions in favour of the party applying for the same."

Thus, a revocation of a deed of gift on gross ingratitude can be done only on an order made by a competent court.

As far as P1 is concerned, the donor has not reserved his power to revoke it. Thus, Marimuttu had no power to revoke P1 on his own. The reasons given in P1 for the revocation appears to be non- acceptance of the gift and ingratitude. As said before if there was no acceptance, there need not be a deed of revocation but acceptance is a matter of fact and the court cannot rely on a donor's own judgment on the matter of whether there was no contract since there was no acceptance when there is a dispute as to the acceptance of the gift. It is a matter to be decided by a competent court. There was neither such decree of a court invalidating P1 prior to the execution of the revocation nor it was put in issue in the present case filed before the District Court to prove that there was no acceptance of the gift made by P1. Further, when P1 was marked, no objection was raised as per section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code. Thus, it appears that the said deed P1 was properly admitted in evidence. Along with the admission of paragraph 3 of the plaint and the deed of transfer marked P2, paper title goes to the Plaintiffs. The Defendant's stance was that he was the tenant of the premises prior to the execution of the deed marked P7-(vide paragraph 11 of the amended answer and evidence given at page 109 of the brief). Since validity of P1 prior to the deed of revocation marked P4 was not in issue as well as the said revocation cannot be considered as a valid revocation, no title can be passed from Marimuttu to the Defendant through P7. None of the purported predecessors in title of the Defendant has given evidence to say that their possession was adverse to the that of Plaintiffs, if they had any possession. As such, the Defendant cannot claim the benefit of possession (if any) of his purported predecessors in title to his benefit. Furthermore, the Defendant's claim that he was a tenant until the execution of P7 refers to a tenancy under Marimuttu and Marimuttu's heirs which include Rajendran. Both of them being the predecessors in title of the Plaintiffs, Defendant's possession up to the refusal to pay rent to the Plaintiffs cannot be considered as adverse to the Plaintiffs' title since there was no evidence of an overt act up to such refusal. It appears that the refusal to pay rent happened only after P3 which is dated 11.09.1985. The Plaint dated 23.10.1989 was filed within 10 years from such refusal. Not that this court accepts the version of the Defendant but, for the sake of argument, if one considers Defendant's stance, according to it, the Plaintiffs' predecessor in title, Rajendran did not get title from P1 but he became a co-owner along with his siblings after the death of Marimuttu. By that time, he had sold it to the Plaintiffs. Exceptio Rei Venditae et traditae principle applies and accordingly, Rajendran's share should go to the Plaintiffs. It should be noted that priority of registration was not put in issue in relation to any conflicting deeds. Thus, the Defendant cannot get the share that Rajendran gets as per his story through P5 and P7. Thus, even for the sake of argument, if one considers the Defendant's story, the Plaintiffs should have become co-owners and the Defendant cannot get prescriptive title without proving an overt act and 10 years possession from thereon. As such, the Defendant's claim on prescription cannot be sustained.

As elaborated in the foregoing discussion, the final outcome of the decision of the learned High Court judges to allow the appeal made to the High Court while setting aside the judgment of the learned District Judge and to grant relief as prayed for in the plaint was correct in law even though they exceeded their jurisdiction and went on to decide whether P1 was properly accepted by the donee when there was no such issue raised in the original court.

Further to what is stated above and since, the first question of law allowed was on the finding of the learned High Court Judges that there was a tacit acceptance of the gift made by P1, this Court would place its observations in that regard as follows;

1. As elaborated above whether the gift made by P1 was accepted or not was not a matter that the High Court was required to make a finding within the scope of the appeal made to it, since the validity of P1 for want of acceptance was not put in issue in the original court. Thus, it was merely an additional finding without which the High Court could have disposed the appeal in favour of the Plaintiffs as elucidated above.
2. Though, it is true that there was no signature placed on P1 by Rajendran accepting the gift made by it, as explained above the law does not require a particular form or method to accept a gift. It is a matter to be decided on attending circumstances. Vide- Lokuhamy V Juan D.C. Matara, 27805, Ram. (1872, '75 and '76)215, which illustrates that acceptance may be fairly and reasonably presumed when there are circumstances to justify such a presumption; Senanayeke V. Dissanayeke (1908) 12 N L R 1 and Yapa V Dissanayake Sedara (1989) 1 Sri L R 361 also support the view that it is not essential that the acceptance of a deed of gift should appear on the face of it, but such acceptance may be inferred from circumstances. However, in the latter case it was stated that where there is no acceptance on the face of the deed and there was neither evidence of delivery of the deed nor of possession of the property, acceptance cannot be inferred. However, there appears to be no reason to limit proof of acceptance to those three factual situations enumerated above in that case, to every case, if other circumstances justify the presumption of acceptance.
3. The learned High Court Judges have relied on the decisions mentioned below and have held that there is tacit acceptance of P1;
    - Joraliyathu Umma vs Mohamed (1986) 3 C.A.L.R. 215 where it was held that a gift which was not accepted by the donees at the time of execution could be validly accepted by the subsequent conduct of the donees such as the execution of a deed of gift by a donee.
    - Wickremesinghe Vs. Wijetunga 16 N L R 413 – where it was held that the acceptance may be presumed either by the physical acceptance of the deed of donation or by the sale of the land donated by the donee. It further held that a donation may be accepted at any time during the lifetime of the donor, and where as its fulfilment is postponed until after the donor's death, it may be accepted after the donor's death.

- Senanayake Vs Dissanayeke 12 N L R 1 and Bindua Vs Untty 13 N L R 259 mentioned above.

However, the Counsel for the Defendant attempts to distinguish above decisions from the circumstances of the case at hand pointing out to other circumstances involved in those cases. There may be other circumstances involved in those cases which supported the acceptance of the gift but, nonetheless, it appears from Joraliyathu Umma Vs Mohomed, a subsequent deed of gift by the donee was considered as a subsequent conduct of the donee that established the acceptance. In Wickremesinghe Vs Wijetunga, a sale of the land by the donee was expressly considered as a subsequent conduct that established the acceptance of the gift made to the donee. It appears that such expression was made by focusing on the act of sale by the donee and not on other grounds. On the other hand, one cannot gift or sell unless he considers himself as the owner. A donee can consider himself/herself as the owner only after he or she has accepted the gift. Thus, there is nothing wrong in considering the subsequent gift or sale of the land by the donee as an indication of accepting the gift made to him. Further, there were other grounds in the case at hand also. Rajendran, donee of P1 had written P3 asking the Defendant to pay rent to the Plaintiffs. No communication was marked to show that the Defendant refuted in reply that Rajendran, the predecessor of title of the Plaintiff was not the landlord. P3 also indicate that Rajendran considered himself as the owner that in turn can be considered supportive of the position that there was an acceptance of the deed of gift P1.

4. It appears that the learned High Court Judges considered that P2 was executed prior to the aforesaid purported deed of revocation by Marimuttu without sufficient evidence to that effect, but it does not matter, as explained before, Marimuttu has no power under the law to cancel a deed on her own. As such it has to be considered as a mere declaration made by her in that regard but not a valid revocation since there is no court decree revoking the deed of gift. Since there is no issue on acceptance of the gift made by P1, it cannot be considered as a declaration with any force. In Kannapathipillai V Kannachi 13 N L R 166 a deed of revocation by the donor was considered as waste paper since there was no cancellation by a court and the gift remained in force. Before the purported conflicting deeds executed by the heirs of the donor, Marimuttu, the donee of P1, namely Rajendran, during the lifetime of Marimuttu, has expressed his acceptance of P1 by conduct, by selling the land to the Plaintiffs and requesting the Defendant by P3 to accept the plaintiffs as the landlord thereafter.

5. The counsel for the Defendant has highlighted certain facts that could have been considered by the learned High Court Judges as vital in deciding whether the gift made by P1 was accepted. As elaborated above, since there was no issue on the acceptance of the gift, these facts have to be considered as facts came to light while leading evidence on the other issues but may not be considered as the complete or total revelation of facts on the question of said acceptance. If the acceptance of the gift was put in issue, the Plaintiffs might have placed more evidence to meet that stance. Further, the Defendant did not raise any issue even when these facts came to light during the trial challenging the acceptance of the gift, which might have been due to the admission already made in relation to paragraph 3 of the plaint. As said before, it was not proper for the Civil Appellate High Court to decide on an issue which was not raised in the original court and where total opportunity was not available to the parties to meet such an issue. However, for the completeness, the said facts highlighted by the Defendant and this court's observations in that regard are mentioned below.

1. The Defendant submits that the Plaintiffs had purchased the said property without the original deed of gift which remained with the donor. In fact, if the original deed of gift was handed over to the Plaintiffs it would have been an additional fact to establish that Rajendran who sold the property to the Plaintiffs accepted the gift with the delivery of the original deed of gift to him. As per the marked documents in the brief, it appears both parties have filed only certified copies of the impugned deed of gift. On the other hand, being Rajendran's mother, even Marimuttu could have kept the original deed with her even after she executed the deed of gift. As per Wickremesinghe V Wijetunga(supra) delivery of the deed is not essential for the validity, and acceptance may be presumed by the subsequent sale of the land by the donee, as happened in the case at hand.
2. It was further submitted that Rajendran did not sign the deed of gift to accept the same. This has been addressed above and it is only one way of accepting a gift and facts may establish the acceptance in any other manner.
3. The Defendant also points out that the Plaintiffs did not produce the original deed. However, the Plaintiffs have tendered to court certified copies of the deeds that they rely and had marked them as P1, P2, and no objection had been taken when they were produced and as per the explanation to the Section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code, they become admissible evidence. - vide Silva V Kindersley 18 NLR 85, Siyadoris V Danoris 42 N L R 311, Cinemas Ltd. V Sounderarajan (1998) 2 Sri L R 16. Even the Defendant has marked another certified copy of P2 as V3. There was no dispute as to the facts that Marimuttu executed P1 and Rajendran executed P2. As per the issues, the challenge was only whether Rajendran could execute P2 since, as alleged by the Defendant, P1 was cancelled by Marimuttu. Thus, it was not necessary to produce the originals since certified copies were marked.

4. The Defendant submits that the Plaintiffs did not tender the land registry extracts but objected when the Defendant sought to tender them. Through registration one can only claim priority. Priority of a deed was never raised as an issue in the original court. As pointed out above, if there was a dispute as to the valid acceptance, cancellation has to be done or decided through a competent court order. Registration has no bearing on that and, since the revocation cannot be considered as valid there cannot be any competing interest created by the purported revocation. Rajendran, on a later occasion, joined with some of his siblings and executed a deed of gift (P5) to the purported predecessor in title to the Defendant, indicating that there was no acceptance of the gift made by P1 by him. However, he did this only after he sold the property to the Plaintiffs where by his conduct, he had shown that he accepted the gift and became the owner.
5. The Defendant also brings to the notice of court that the Plaintiffs were aware of the fact of revocation. However, the evidence does not reveal that they were aware of it prior to the sale of the same property to them by Rajendran on the same day. On the other hand, since the acceptance was not in dispute after raising the issues, such revocation has to be considered invalid or of no avail as right to revoke was not reserved in P1. Further, whether there was an acceptance or not is a factual situation that has to be adjudicated by a court and donor has no authority to revoke on his own, and mere knowledge of a declaration made to that effect by the donor cannot change the legal status of the parties involved. If P1 was challenged for want of acceptance, the Plaintiffs would have taken steps to bring necessary evidence to show that it was not so, and perhaps even to show that such acceptance occurred even prior to the purported revocation.
6. The Defendant also states in his written submissions that the Plaintiffs were aware that Marimuttu's children including Rajendran have executed a deed in favour of one of their siblings, Samuel Rajapoobathy and said Rajendran, the predecessor in title to the Plaintiffs, was a signatory to that deed. This deed was written few years after Rajendran sold the land to the Plaintiffs as the owner of the land and indicating that he had already accepted the gift given by his mother Marimuttu. Plaintiffs have taken the stance that Rajendran acted fraudulently in executing the aforesaid deed along with his siblings.

7. The Defendant also argues that the Plaintiffs have not done a search at the land registry prior to buying the property and the folio where the deed of revocation is registered is different from the folio where the deed of transfer of the Plaintiff is registered. What is stated in relation to the different folios here has been said without an iota of acceptable evidence led in that regard. No folio has been marked at the trial. As said before, there was no issue raised with regard to the priority of registration of any of the deeds. The challenge to the Plaintiffs' title was made at the trial only on the ground that the deed of gift to Rajendran was duly cancelled by Marimuttu and nothing else, while acknowledging the conveyance of the land in dispute by P1.
8. The Defendant further argues that Rajendran had no possession and it was the defendant who had over 40 years of possession even at the time of the donation and there was no evidence regarding constructive delivery of possession to Rajendran. He also tries to indicate that it was he who paid the rates and taxes and no evidence was called to disprove the factors relied by the Defendant in relation to the non-acceptance of the gift by Rajendran. The possession of the Defendant can be understood, since he himself has taken up the stance that he was the tenant of the premises till the execution of P7. Being in possession he might have paid taxes and rates. P1 was not challenged for want of non-acceptance by raising issues. Under such circumstances, the Plaintiffs need not call evidence to prove or rebut ancillary evidence that may help to surmise on whether there was an acceptance or not, which evidence came to light while leading evidence on other issues. When a proper issue was not raised, a court sitting in appeal cannot decide that parties had the full opportunity to place evidence in that regard.
9. The Defendant points out in his submissions that Rajendran was not called to give evidence to defend the title of the Plaintiffs. Execution of P1 was not challenged and further the acceptance of the gift made by it was not challenged by raising an issue in that regard. Rajendran's title was challenged by raising issues only on the ground that the gift made by P1 was cancelled by Marimuttu, and the fact that Rajendran executed a deed of transfer to sell the property to the Plaintiffs was also not in dispute. Plaintiffs' title was challenged on the ground that Rajendran did not have title to sell the land due to the cancellation. As such, Rajendran is not a necessary witness to prove the plaintiffs' case. On the other hand, even if he was called, he may not be a reliable witness, since he in one hand acted as the owner and sold the property to the Plaintiffs and later on the other hand, gifted it to one of his siblings indicating that he did not accept the gift made to him; Since he cannot vouch for the correctness of both acts, he may have to be untruthful with regard to one of his actions. Thus, the court has to look at the sequence of his acts. First, he had acted as the owner of the property by selling it and asking the tenant to pay the rent to the new owner which tacitly indicate that he by that time had accepted the gift made to him. Otherwise, he cannot consider himself as the owner. Only after some years from executing P2, he changed his stance and joined with his siblings to execute another deed of gift to another sibling. Once he accepted the gift which is a contract, he cannot renounce it, especially after he sold the subject matter relying on the contract he once entered.

As per the grounds elaborated above, questions of law are answered as follows;

Questions of law allowed by this Court:

1. In the absence of any acceptance on the face of the Deed of Gift No. 16102 marked P1, did the High Court fall into error in concluding that there was tacit acceptance by the donee Rajendran in all the circumstances of this case?

2. Did the High Court err in failing to take in to consideration the evidence relating to prescriptive possession on the part of the Petitioner from 3/6/1971?

Answers:

1. Learned High Court Judges erred in considering matters that fell outside the scope of the appeal. However, it does not make the final conclusion of the Learned High Court Judges erroneous since P1 was not validly revoked. Further, there were certain grounds that indicated tacit acceptance of the gift by the donee of P1 but acceptance of the gift was not a matter to be considered in appeal since it was not put in issue in the original court.
2. No. Since the Defendant was the tenant, no sufficient evidence to establish prescriptive possession of the Defendant was available to be considered.

However, for the reasons given above, learned High Court Judges' decision to allow the appeal and to enter a judgment in favour of the Plaintiffs is sustained.

Even though the Defendant had prayed in his answer to declare that he is the tenant in the event the case is decided in favour of the Plaintiffs, since he had challenged the title of the Plaintiffs, he cannot be allowed to be declared as the tenant of the Plaintiffs.

Hence, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Background of this Appeal

This is an appeal filed against the judgment of the Provincial High Court dated 03/09/2013.

Jathika Sevaka Sangamaya i.e. Applicant-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Applicant) filed this action on behalf of P. Titus Jayantha (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Appellant) since he was a member of the said trade union instituted the above action bearing No. LT Kuliyapitiya 46/60/2010 by application dated 27/09/2004 under Section 34D of the Industrial Disputes Act (as amended) against the Respondent –Appellant- Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Respondent) praying for a judgment in favour of the Appellant against the termination of service of the Appellant on the alleged ground of vacation of post and claimed for re-instatement with back wages and/ or any other reliefs. The Respondent filed answer dated 17/01/2005 and admitted the termination and stated that the Appellant has vacated his post due to non-reporting to work from 17/08/2004 to the date of termination which was 27/08/2004.

The Appellant stated that, he joined the Sri Lanka Transport Board (Respondent) on 29/06/1991 as a bus conductor and on 01/09/2002 he was promoted to the post of depot route inspector- 4th Grade attached to the Giriulla Bus Depot. As per the evidence of the Appellant there was a General Election on 02/04/2004 and with the change in the ruling party certain members of the Giriulla Bus Depot have threatened the Appellant and his party members to not to report to work. Thereafter, the Appellant has made a complaint to the Police on 09/04/2004 and the reference number was CIB (2) 137/85 (A3) and requested to allow him to report back to work. Further, the Appellant had lodged a complaint (A4) on 27/04/2004 to the Deputy Commissioner of Labour requesting him to allow, to report back to work and on the same day the Appellant has lodged another complaint to the Giriulla Police Station under the reference number. CIB (1) 243/572. Pursuant to the above complaints made by the Appellant, a settlement was entered between the parties and the officers of the Respondent and agreed to allow the Appellant to report back to work from 01/06/2004.

The Appellant was stabbed by a person with a sharp piece of glass on 20/06/2004 and he was admitted to Dambadeniya District Hospital where he was given in-house treatment for 11 days until 30/06/2004. The Appellant had tendered five medical reports of his illness including documents marked as A7, A8 and A9. 1st medical certificate (A7- vide page 173) was issued for a period of ten days from 20th to 30 June 2004. The 2nd medical certificate (A8-vide page 174) was issued till 14th July 2004 and 3rd medical certificate was issued for another two weeks up to 28th July 2004. Then 4th medical certificate (vide page 102) was issued from 29th to 31st July 2004. Finally, 5th medical certificate (vide page 103) was issued for 5th to 16th August 2004.

The Respondent admitted the receipt of the aforementioned medical certificates and granted leave accordingly. The Appellant was required to report to work on 17th August 2004 and he failed to do the same hence, the Respondent on 23rd August 2004 sent a telegram message to the Appellant informing him to report to work. The Appellant had failed to respond to the aforementioned telegram message and failed to tender any medical certificates. Then, a letter dated 27th August 2004 (A11) was sent to the Appellant by the Depot Manager of the Giriulla Depot informing that, to report to work within 7 days from the issuance of the letter 'A11' and if not, this will result in the Appellant to vacation of post, voluntarily. The Appellant did not inform his response to the Employer and the Respondent issued a notice of vacation of post on the Appellant by letter dated 6th September 2004 (A 12) upon the expiration of 3 weeks from the failure to work by the Appellant. The Respondent pleaded for a dismissal of the action of the Appellant.

Decision of the Labour Tribunal

The main contention of the Respondent was that the Appellant did not obtain leave and hence as per disciplinary regulation he had vacated his post, voluntarily. But the Appellant stated that, he never had an intention to vacate his post and he tried to restore back to work from the very inception of the said political obstructions occurred soon after the elections in April 2004.

At the conclusion of the case, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal delivered his order on 31/05/2011 and decided the case in favour of the Appellant stating that there was a constructive termination of service of the Appellant by the Respondent by relying on the dissenting judicial pronouncement in Nandasena v Uva Regional Transport Board (1993) 1 SLR 318 and awarded a sum of Rs. 221,250/- as compensation which is equal to 30 months of salary of the Appellant. The learned President stated in his order as follows.

> "මෙම විනිශ්චය සභාවට ඉදිරිපත් වූ සාක්ෂි අනුව ඉල්ලුම්කරුට ස්ව කැමැත්තෙන් සේවය අතහැර යාමේ චේතනාවක් තිබුණ බවට කරුණු අනාවරණය නොවන අතර ඉල්ලුම්කරුට වගඋත්තරකාර ගිරිඋල්ල ඩිපෝවේ සේවකයෙකු විසින් සිදු කරන ලද ශාරීරික හානිය හේතු කොට ගෙන සේවයට වාර්තා කර රාජකාරී වල නිරත වීමේ නොහැකියාවක් උද්ගත වේ ඇති බව අනාවරණය වේ. මෙම තත්වය නන්දසේන එදිරිව ඌව ප්‍රාදේශීය ගමනාගමන මණ්ඩලය 1993 SLR 318 නඩුවේදී ගරු මාක් ප්‍රනාන්දු විනිසුරුතුමා ප්‍රකාශ කර ඇත්තේ තාවකාලික ලෙස සේවයට නොපැමිණීම සේවය අතහැර යාමක් නොවන බවයි. "

The English translation of the above paragraph as follows;

> "Evidence presented to the tribunal does not reveal that the applicant had any intention of leaving the service voluntarily and that the applicant was unable to report for duty and engage in duties due to the physical damage caused to him by an employee of the Giriulla Depot. In the case of Nandasena v. Uva Local Transport Board 1993 SLR 318, Hon. Mark Ferando J. has stated that temporary absenteeism is not a vacation from service."

Decision of the High Court

Being dissatisfied with the order of the Labour Tribunal, Respondent appealed to the Provincial High Court of Kurunegala. The Judge of the Provincial High Court of Kurunegala delivered his judgment on 03/09/2013, and allowed the appeal while setting-aside the order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal on the basis that the Appellant had voluntarily vacated the post as pleaded by the Respondent.

The High Court relied and referred to the case of Building Materials Corporation vs Jathika Sewaka Sangamaya (1993) 2 SLR 316 wherein Supreme Court held that, long absence without obtaining leave or authority is evidence of desertion or abandonment of service. Further, High Court has quoted from the assertion of Senanayake J, in Jayawardane vs ANCL (CA 562/87) which reads as follows.

"No employer could indefinitely, kept a post vacant without any information from the worker of his inability to come to work, especially. Where the employer has given an opportunity for the applicant to tender any explanation or inform the employer about his inability to report to work."

Case before this Court

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Provincial High Court of Kurunegala, the Appellant filed this case before this court and leave was granted on the following questions of law stated in paragraph 18 (i, iii, iv) of the petition dated 14/10/2013. Those are reproduced verbatim for easy reference;

i. Did the Provincial High Court misdirect itself on the proof and evidence regarding the vacation of post by the petitioner?

iii. Did the Provincial High Court misdirect itself by failing to consider the analysis of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal regarding the Petitioner's reasons for the absence of work?

iv. Did the Provincial High Court misdirect itself in applying the decided cases into the instant case?

Heard the submissions of both Counsel and perused the materials before this Court including the Judgments of the Labour Tribunal and the Civil Appellate High Court.

Vacation of Post

Having particular regard to the attendant circumstances of the instant application, this court is called upon to determine whether a voluntary and intentional vacation of post on the part of the Appellant has been established by the Respondent.

The Appellant was an employee attached to a government institution namely Sri Lanka Transport Board. The Appellant was employed for a long period of time and he was involved in trade union activities had adequate knowledge about the work environment, Law and rules & regulations. As per section 21 (1) of the Disciplinary Rules of Sri Lanka Transport Board, in the event of an employee of the Sri Lanka Transport Board fails to report to work for 3 days, steps should be taken to send a Telegram to the last known address, informing the employee to report to work or to inform reasons for the failure to report to work and in this matter, it is proved that the Respondent had complied with the said requirement on 23/08/2004 by sending a telegram message. Then, 'A11' letter was sent to the Appellant by the Depot Manager of the Giriulla Depot complying with the procedure stipulated in the Disciplinary Rules. Due to the failure on the part of the Applicant to respond the aforementioned notifications, the Notice of Vacation of Post had been sent by the Respondent on 06/09/2004.

The concept of vacation of post was examined by Justice Jayasuriya in the case of Nelson de. Silva v Sri Lanka State Engineering Corporation (1996) 2 Sri LR 342 at 343 as follows;

> "The concept of vacation of post involves two aspects; one is the mental element, that is intention to desert and abandon the employment and the more familiar element of the concept of vacation of post, which is the failure to report at the work place of the employee. To constitute the first element, it must be established that the Applicant is not reporting at the work place, was actuated by an intention to voluntarily vacate his employment."

When discussing the above, Jayasuriya J was guided by the decision of the Supreme Court in The Superintendent of Hewagama Estate v Lanka Eksath Workers Union SC 7-9/69 [S.C minutes 02.02.1970] and referred to the said decision in his judgment as follows;

> "The learned President of the Labour Tribunal hold on the facts that there was no abandonment of employment by the workman as the workman in question had no intention of abandoning his employment. The learned President correctly applying the legal principles observed that the physical absence and the mental element should co- exist for there to be a vacation of post in law. Besides, he held on this issue the Tribunal ought to be guided by the common law of the land which is the Roman Dutch Law and consequently the English doctrine of frustration, relied upon by the learned Counsel, has no application whatsoever to the situation under consideration. An appeal preferred by the employer against this order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal was considered by the Supreme Court in The Superintendent of Hewagama Estate Vs. Lanka Estate Workers Union and the order of the learned President was affirmed in Appeal."

Kulatunga J in Wijenaike v Air Lanka Ltd. (1990) 1 Sri L.R. 293, referred to the principle of Vacation of Post and emphasised that physical absence alone is insufficient and that the party seeking to establish a vacation of post must prove that the physical absence co-existed with the mental intent.

As established above, the concept of vacation of post involves two aspects; Physical element and mental element. These elements must co-exist with each other for the employer to establish that there is vacation of post by the employee; Kalamazoo Industries v Minister of Labour & Vocational Training (1998) 1 SLR 235.

The physical element was proved with the absence to report to work but the Appellant denied the mental element. Hence the issue here is to identify what was the mental element of the Appellant (The Employee) and whom should be satisfied with the reasoning?

It has been an established principle in Industrial law that the right to Hire and fire an employee is vested with the Employer provided that the grounds on which an employee is fired is just and reasonable. Hence a reasonable person should take an objective view by considering the evidence that lies before him. In order to understand who a reasonable person should be, it is sufficient to equate him to the man on the Clapham bus-the proverbial reasonable man we often meet in law

It could be seen that in order for a reasonable person to uncover both the physical and mental element as to the Vacation of Post by the employee they need to be attributed with knowledge of all relevant background facts and information. Such facts in this case would be: 1) whether the employee obtained leave for the days he did not report to work? 2) whether he had communicated his reason for not reporting to work within a stipulated time period?

The learned President of the Labour Tribunal held that, no mental element established on the part of the Appellant in vacation of post. It is pertinent to note that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal relied on the dissenting judgment of Mark Fernando, J in Nandasena v Uva Regional Transport Board (supra) and stated that, though there is a physical element the mental element of the Appellant to vacate his post was not proved. The learned President of the Labour Tribunal without taking into consideration of the information a reasonable person should have held that the mental element was not proved due to the surrounding circumstances and due to the threats of the Appellant's life he was compelled to keep out of work. The Learned President of the Labour Tribunal has arrived at this decision by considering the past hinderances that had caused the Appellant not to report to work. However, it should be taken into consideration that in those situations the Appellant had lodged complaints to the police and the Commissioner of Labour with regard to the hinderances caused by other employees, which clearly demonstrate the intention of the Appellant to continue his work at the Respondent Board. It should be noted that with regard to the present period of time in which the Appellant had not reported to work and for which the Appellant is now claiming that he did not report due to fear of life had not followed any of the previously followed procedure to bring it to the notice of any relevant authorities nor the employer. Further the learned President of the Labour Tribunal considered and decided that the application of Rule 21 of the Disciplinary Rules of Sri Lanka Transport Board into this situation is not just and equitable hence decided that the termination based on vacation of post was not justified.

The learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Kurunegala did not agree with the order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal and set aside the order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal stating that, the Respondent had informed the Appellant to report to work by a telegram on 23/08/2004 and by a letter on 27/08/2004 within seven days but the Appellant did not respond to any of those messages and having received the letter for vacation of post-dated 06/09/2004, the Appellant filed this application before the Labour Tribunal, Kuliyapitiya.

The learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Kurunegala relied on the dictum in Nelson De Silva v Sri Lanka State Engineering Corporation (supra) to identify the intention of the employee to not to abandon the employment. It was stated that "a reasonable explanation may negative the intention of the employee to abandon his employment". It was observed by the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Kurunegala that the Appellant had not challenged the notice of vacation of post issued on 06/09/2004 with bona fide, satisfactory explanation and the Appellant even after receiving the telegram message and a letter requesting him to return to work did not make any response to the Respondent. Hence, it was obvious that the Appellant had not shown his intention to return to work.

Given the importance of the case of Nandasena v Uva Regional Transport Board (supra) as the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal relied on the dissenting judgment pronounced by Justice Mark Fernando, it is pertinent to consider the said judgment in its entirety to see if the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal has been correctly influenced by the said judgments.

As per the facts of the case provided in the Sri Lanka Law Reports at pages 318 & 319, Nandasena was employed by the Uva Regional Transport Board as a bus conductor attached to the Embilipitiya Depot. On 3/4/1984 he was interdicted on two charges namely, assault and conspiracy to assault the Depot Manager on 26/3/1984. and failing to reveal to the respondent the correct facts relating to the incident of 26/3/84. After a domestic inquiry he was found guilty of the second charge of misleading the Board by concealing the truth and/or making a false statement relating to the incident of assault which took place on 26/3/1984. Consequently, he was held to be not a fit and proper person to hold employment under the Board. On 26/12/84 the Personnel Manager informed the appellant of the result of the domestic inquiry and indicated that the punishments meted out were disentitlement to salary during the period of interdiction and a disciplinary transfer to a new station of which he will be informed subsequently. On 31/12/84 he was informed that his new station was the Ratnapura Depot with effect from 1/1/1985.

On 2/1/1985 Nandasena wrote to the Personnel Manager asserting his innocence and that he was not at Embilipitiya on the day of the incident and stating that the unlawful deprivation of wages and transfer constituted a constructive termination of his services and he would be appealing against the order of 26/12/84. He asked for stay of the transfer pending the appeal. He called for a reply on or before 15/1/1985. On 11/1/85 the Personnel Manager replied that he had no power to stay the transfer citing the Board's rule 14 which provided that upon an appeal being made a punishment transfer would not be stayed. Nandasena wrote again to the Personnel Manager on 21/1/1985 asking for a reconsideration and that pending the result of the appeal he be transferred to the Godakawela Depot as this was within the limit of his free travel pass whereas Ratnapura was not and would involve him in additional expenses. The Personnel Manager did not reply.

On 8/2/1985 the Depot Manager Ratnapura issued a vacation of post notice giving seven days to explain his absence. On 10/2/85 the Nandasena replied he was awaiting the Personnel Manager's final decision. On 22/2/85 the Depot Manager Ratnapura informed the Appellant that he was deemed to have vacated his post on 5/1/85 by failing to report for work on or after that date. On 28/2/85 Nandasena wrote to the Personnel Manager seeking reinstatement and a posting to either Kahawatta or Godakawela pending the result of his appeal. On 1/4/85 the Personnel Manager replied rejecting the appeal and reiterating the position set out in the letter of 11/1/1985. On 28/2/1985 the appellant made an application to the Labour Tribunal in respect of the termination of his services. The Board took up the position that Nandasena had been transferred to Ratnapura as a punishment upon being found guilty of serious misconduct. The transfer order continued to be operative despite Nandasena's appeal and upon his failing to report for work at the Ratnapura Depot he was properly deemed to have vacated his post. The notes of inquiry of the domestic hearing were not produced before the Labour Tribunal and the application by the appellant to have them so produced was objected by the Uva Regional Transport Board and disallowed by the Tribunal. Nandasena appealed to the Court of Appeal and Court of Appeal dismissed his appeal stressing that "the facts leading to the disciplinary transfer was not the issue to be determined by the Tribunal."

Mark Fernando J, in his dissenting judgment discussed about the question whether the appellant's failure to report for work amounted to a repudiation of the contract of employment; or whether it was a transgression only justifying disciplinary action short of dismissal; or whether it was a bona fide challenge to a disputed order; or whether it was a justifiable or permissible response to a wrongful or unreasonable punishment. His Lordship identified that, "r*ecognition of an employee's right to refrain from complying with a transfer order would result in serious abuse, in that there would be non-compliance with every transfer order. It is contended in reply that non-recognition of a limited right of bona fide challenge of an improper transfer order would enable an employer to dismiss an employee for frivolous reasons, with impunity, by falsely finding him guilty of some trumped-up charge; and then, without imposing the desired punishment of dismissal, to subject him to a vexatious punishment transfer. The employee will then be in a dilemma: if he proceeds on transfer, he thereby acquiesces and accepts his guilt; if he does not, he will be deemed to have abandoned his post….".* Further, his Lordship identified that, there was a failure to address the issue of misconduct by the Labour Tribunal and Court of Appeal before giving their judgments because, the disciplinary inquiry notes and findings of the domestic inquiry was not produced before them or the witnesses who gave evidence at the disciplinary inquiry would not be called to testify before the Tribunal. (Ibid page 328). Hence, his Lordship arrived to a conclusion that,

> ''the punishment transfer was unjustified; the refusal to proceed on transfer was based both on a bona fide challenge of the transfer order as well as on circumstances which arguably supported a stay or a variation; that refusal was therefore at most a technical breach not motivated by an intention to repudiate the contract, or to abandon his post, or defy the employer; it did not warrant termination.''

Goonewardena J, (with Wadugodapitiya J agreeing) in his majority judgment in the said case held that,

> "There is no material to say that the disciplinary order of transfer was unjustified or constituted arbitrary punishment. Even assuming the transfer was invalid the employee must obey it. He could appeal against the order but he cannot refuse to carry it out. He must comply and complain. The failure to report at the Ratnapura Depot was a deliberate and calculated act of disobedience and a virtual repudiation of his contract. The appellant of his own volition secured his own discharge from employment under the Board by vacating his post."

The majority view in the Nandasena case has set out the dictum that an aggrieved employee as was in the above case should comply with the decision of the employer and then follow the necessary appeal procedures to contest such decision. This is because in appeal if the decision is held in favour of the employee, he would be entitled to reasonable compensation he has suffered during that time period but by not complying with the orders of the employer's he would cause irremediable losses to the employer. Further it could be seen that the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal has wrongfully relied on this case as the dissenting judgment of the Justice Mark Fernando is not the ratio decidendi in that case thereby not an opinion for the Labour Tribunal to follow.

It was further observed in the majority decision in Nandasena v Uva Regional Transport Board (Supra) that,

"I however incline to the view, one which learned Counsel for the respondent strenuously contended for, that rather than the respondent Board terminating his employment under it, the appellant of his own volition secured his own discharge from employment under the. Board by vacating his post, which according to the disciplinary rules binding on him had to be the result of his being absent from work without having obtained leave and failing to show justification for such absence. There is no doubt in my mind that the appellant conducted himself in a way which resulted in his discharge from employment, forcing upon the Board a step he compelled it-to take, leaving it no other choice."

The Indian Supreme Court in Jeewanal Ltd v Their Workmen (1961) 1 L.L.J. 517 (SC) observed the following:

"If an employee continues to be absent from duty without obtaining leave and in an unauthorised manner for such a long period of time .... an inference may reasonably be drawn from such absence that due to his absence he has abandoned service"

This Court taking into consideration of the above observations of the Indian Supreme Court in the case of Building Materials Corporation v Jathika Seveka Sangamaya (1993) 2 SLR 316, held that long absence without obtaining leave or authority is evidence of desertion or abandonment of service. In that case also, the Applicant, employee had been absent for a long period from work. The Court held that the workman had failed to satisfy the employer that he was in fact ill and that he was not fit to report for work. The Supreme Court held that it was clear that the employee by his conduct had severed the contract of service.

This Court in the above-mentioned case observed the following:

"An intention to remain away permanently must necessarily be inferred from the Employee's conduct and I hold that long absence without obtaining leave or authority is evidence of desertion or abandonment of service.

As observed above where an employee endeavours to keep away from work or refuses or fails to report to work or duty without an acceptable excuse for a reasonable period of time such conduct would necessarily be a ground which justifies the employer to consider the employee as having vacated service. In the circumstances, I am of the view that the Respondent has in this case proved that the Appellant was absent without leave from 17/08/2004 for a period of approximately 21 days and that it is reasonable on the facts established in this case to draw the inference that the Appellant had no intention to report for work at the Giriulla depot. Further, there is no evidence produced before the Court to prove that the Appellant was subject to fear of life between the period from 17th August 2004 to the 06th September 2004 in which period he was absent for work.

If Appellant did have a fear of life, he could have complained to the Police, Higher authorities in the Sri Lanka Transport Board, Human Rights Commission, Ombudsman or Courts Etc. There is no evidence presented in this regard by the Appellant before the Labour Tribunal other than a mere statement. However, in regard to the aforesaid mental element on the part of the Appellant to abandon his employment has not adequately considered by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal in his order and hence it is liable to be judicially reviewed before this Court. Hence, I am of the view that the Respondent has proved and submitted evidence regarding the vacation of post by the Appellant and the Appellant has failed to prove judicially acceptable reasons to his absence for report to work sufficiently.

In view of the facts and above-mentioned judicial pronouncements made in this regard, I am of the view that the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court had correctly arrived at the conclusion that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had failed to consider the relevant material and had set aside the Order of the Labour Tribunal on the basis that the Appellant had not shown any intention to return to work. In the circumstances, I dismissed the appeal of the Appellant and uphold the judgment of the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court dated 03/09/2013.

This is an appeal filed against the Judgment dated 22/10/2013, delivered by the Court of Appeal, setting aside the Judgment of the District Court of Ratnapura, dated 22/02/2000.

The 1st Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant, being a minor, instituted an action in the District Court of Ratnapura, through her next friend, the 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent Appellant, (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff-Appellants) against the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendant-Appellant-Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant-Respondents) seeking to partition the land called "Gedaragawa Hena".

By Plaint dated 12/10/1983, the Plaintiff-Appellants pleaded, inter alia, that;

1. by Deed No. 1792, dated 26/07/1956, Ratnayake Arachchilage Tillakaratne became the owner of the said land.
2. Ratnayake Arachchilage Tillakaratne who died intestate, had four children namely, Sumana Tillakaratne, Piyaratne Tillakaratne, Sujatha Tillakaratne and Padma Tillakaratne.
3. the said Sujatha Tillakaratne married under the Marriage Registration Ordinance during the life time of her father.
4. the 1st Plaintiff is the daughter of the said Sujatha Tillakaratne.
5. Sujatha Tillakaratne predeceased her father, intestate, leaving the 1st Plaintiff as the sole heir.
6. upon the death of Ratnayake Arachchilage Tillakaratne, the 1st Plaintiff, Sumana Tillakaratne, Piyaratne Tillakaratne and Padma Tillakaratne, each became entitled to an undivided 1/4th share of the land.
7. the said Sumana Tillakaratne, Piyaratne Tillakaratne and Padma Tillakaratne, soled their rights of the land to the 1st and 2nd Defendants.

Accordingly, prayed for a declaration that the 1st Plaintiff is entitled to an undivided 1/4th share of the corpus.

The Defendant-Respondents in their Statement of Claim dated 25/01/1994 pleaded, inter alia, that;

1 Ratnayake Arachchilage Tillakaratne died intestate and Sumana Tillakaratne, Piyaratne Tillakaratne and Padma Tillakaratne became entitled to their father's estate in its entirety.

2 Sujatha Tillakaratne having married in diga during the life time of her father forfeited her rights to paternal inheritance.

3 by Deed No. 275, dated 14/12/1981, the land in suit was transferred to the Defendant-Respondents who became entitled to the entire land in equal shares.

4 the said Defendant-Respondents have acquired prescriptive title to the said land.

The learned District Judge by Judgment dated 22/02/2000, inter alia, held that, the 1st Plaintiff-Appellant, as the heir of the deceased Sujatha Tillakaratne, is entitled to an undivided 1/4th share of the corpus and allotted shares accordingly.

The Court of Appeal having considered the submissions made by both parties held that, the said Sujatha Tillakaratne married in diga and had forfeited her rights to paternal inheritance and by her conduct could not regain such rights in view of the mandatory provisions contained in Section 9(1) of the Kandyan Law (Declaration and Amendment) Ordinance. (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Kandyan Law Ordinance)

When this case was taken up for support, the Court decided to grant Special Leave to Appeal on the questions of law set out in paragraph 9(i) to (vii) of the Petition dated 28/11/2013. However, on the date of the hearing, parties agreed to confine the present appeal to the questions of law set out in paragraph 9(ii), 9(v) and 9(vii) of the Petition, which reads as follows;

Paragraph 9,

(ii) did the Court of Appeal err in law holding that the marriage of Sujatha Tillakaratne who married under the General Marriage Ordinance was a diga marriage and thereby forfeited her rights to paternal inheritance

(v) did the Court of Appeal err in not evaluating the evidence led before the District Court to determine whether the marriage is in diga

(vii) when a Kandyan woman Marries under the General Marriage Ordinance, will it raise a presumption that the marriage is a diga marriage as held in Lewis Singho vs. Kusumwathie and Another, C.A No. 390/91(F), (2003) 2 SLR 128, decided by the Court of Appeal

At the hearing of this case, both parties agreed that the main question to be determined by this Court is, whether the presumption set out in Section 28(1) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act, No. 44 of 1952, (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 1952 Act) apply in equal force to a Kandyan woman who contracts a marriage under the Marriage Registration Ordinance.

Sujatha Tillakaratne is a Kandyan woman, married under the Marriage Registration Ordinance in the life time of her father. The register under the Marriage Registration Ordinance has not provided to record whether a marriage is in diga or in binna. The position of the Plaintiff-Appellant is that the Marriage Registration Ordinance does not recognize two different kinds of marriage as diga or Binna and therefore, Section 3(1)(a) of the 1952 Act, or the presumption set out in Section 28(1) of the said Act will not apply. The Plaintiff-Appellant also contends that, succession to property of a party married in terms of the Marriage Registration Ordinance is necessarily to be determined by the nature of the marriage from subsequent conduct of the parties in order to decide on paternal inheritance as recognized in Perera vs. Asilin Nona (1958) - 60 NLR 73, and Samarakoon vs. Samarakoon (2003) 2 SLR 321.

The Plaintiff-Appellant further contends that in the absence of a casus omissus clause in Section 66 of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act, the Act applies only to marriages contracted under the said Act and not applicable to marriages solemnized and registered under the Marriage Registration Ordinance or any other Act.

It is also the position of the Plaintiff-Appellant, that the presumption under Section 28(1) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act would apply only in instances where a marriage registration takes place in terms of Section 23(3) of the said Act and which does not indicate whether the marriage was in diga or in binna. Therefore, the rebuttable presumption applies only to a Kandyan marriage registered under Section 23(3) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act. It is submitted that in Section 39 of Ordinance No. 3 of 1870, the words 'if it does not appear in the register whether the marriage was contracted in diga or in binna' makes reference only to a marriage registration under the said Ordinance and therefore, removed any possibility of applying the rebuttable presumption to a marriage contracted under the Marriage Registration Ordinance.

In terms of Section 23 (1)(a)(ii) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act, when the nature of the marriage (whether in diga or in binna) is entered in the registration of marriage, in terms of Section 9 of the Kandyan Law, --- ' no change after any such marriage in the residence of either party to that marriage and no conduct after any such marriage of either party to that marriage or of any other person shall convert or deemed to convert a binna marriage into a diga marriage or a diga marriage into a binna marriage or cause or be deemed to cause a person married in diga.'

The Defendant-Respondent's position is that under Section 3(1)(a) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act, when a registration of marriage between persons subject to the Kandyan law is solemnized and registered under the Marriage Registration Ordinance, it 'shall not affect the rights of such persons, or of other persons claiming title from or through such persons, to succeed to property under and in accordance with the Kandyan law', and where it is not possible to record whether the marriage was in diga or in binna, in terms of Section 28(1) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act, it is presumed that the women married in diga, , until the contrary is proved. Therefore, it is contended that Sujatha Tillakaratne who was given away in diga marriage by her father is not entitled to a share of her family estate, until the presumption is rebutted.

The Counsel for the Defendant-Respondent, whilst placing reliance on the applicability of Section 28(1) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act and also Section 9(1) of the Kandyan Law Ordinance, questions the learned District Judge's failure to consider the applicability of the said laws.

Applicability of Section 28(1) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act, when a woman contracts a marriage under the Marriage Registration Ordinance.

The learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Appellant submits that, a registration of marriage under the Marriage Registration Ordinance is not recognized as valid, under the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act and as such, the presumption contemplated under Section 28(1) of the said Act would not apply to Sujatha Tillakaratne.

It is apparent from the proceedings that, the parties to the action have accepted that they possess the required legal recognition and the capacity to contract a valid registration of marriage under the Marriage Registration Ordinance and that the parties are governed by the Kandyan Law. Moreover, both parties agree that the rights of succession claimed by the Plaintiff-Appellant depended on her marriage.

In 1859, Ordinance No.13 of 1859 titled, An Ordinance to amend the law of marriage in the Kandyan provinces was enacted. Accordingly, customary Kandyan marriages ceased to be valid after 1859. The intent of the said Ordinance was to require all marriages since Ordinance No. 13 of 1859 to be registered. In the year 1870 the law was again amended by Ordinance No. 3 of 1870. ---"A marriage between a Kandyan and a non-Kandyan cannot be registered under Ordinance No. 3 of 1870. Such a union should be registered under the Marriage Registration Ordinance No. 19 of 1907". (A.B. Collin De Soysa, Digest of Kandyan Law, at page 15) It was also "the intention of the legislature that the special Kandyan Marriage Law and the general law of Ceylon should run concurrently and alternatively in the Kandyan Provinces". (Sophia Hamine vs. Appuhamy. (1922) 23 NLR 353

Marriages were also lawfully registered or solemnized according to the Marriage Registration Ordinance No. 19 of 1907. "A marriage between Kandyans has been solemnized or registered under the said Ordinance of 1907, will not affect the rights of the parties, or the rights of persons claiming title from or through them to succeed to property according to the rules of the Kandyan law". (Section 2 of Ordinance No. 14 of 1909).

The Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act repealed Ordinance No 3 of 1870. The said Act was enacted to 'amend and consolidate the law relating to Kandyan Marriages and Divorces, and to make provisions for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto'.

Section 3(2) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act reads thus;

> "the fact that a marriage, between persons subject to Kandyan law, is solemnized and registered under the Marriage Registration Ordinance shall not affect the rights of such persons, or of other persons claiming title from or through such persons, to succeed to property under and in accordance with the Kandyan law"

Accordingly, the said Act amended and consolidated the law relating to Kandyan Marriage and Divorce between persons subject to Kandyan law or marriages solemnized and registered under the Marriage Registration Ordinance, claiming title under and in accordance with the Kandyan law.

In Piyadasa and Another Vs. Babanis and Another (2006) 2 SLR 17, the Court of Appeal held,

> "The fact that a marriage, between persons subject to Kandyan Law, is solemnized and registered under the Marriage Registration Ordinance shall not affect the rights of such persons, or the other persons claiming title from or through such persons, to succeed to property under and in accordance with the Kandyan Law."

A similar conclusion was arrived in Lewis Singho Vs. Kusumawathie and Others (2003) 2 SLR 128, where the Court of Appeal held that,

> "It is interesting to note that section 3(2) of the Marriage and Divorce (Kandyan) Act provides that a marriage between persons subject to Kandyan Law, solemnized and registered under the Marriage Registration Ordinance shall not affect the rights of such persons or of persons claiming rights through them to succeed to property under the Kandyan law".

In the circumstances, there is no doubt that the intention of the legislature in enacting Section 3(2) of the said Act was not only to recognize a marriage registration entry made under section 23(3) of the Act, but also to recognize a marriage between persons solemnized and registered under the Marriage Registration Ordinance as a marriage recognized under the Kandyan law.

The Presumption in Section 28(1) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act

In terms of Section 28(1) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act, if there is no entry made in the marriage register to state that the marriage was in diga or in binna, it is presumed that such a marriage is in diga, until the contrary is proved.

As observed earlier, Sujatha Tillakaratne contracted a marriage under the Marriage Registration Ordinance and in the absence of an entry in the certificate of marriage with regard to its nature, in terms of the presumption recognized under Section 28(1), Sujatha's marriage is presumed to be a marriage in diga.

In terms of Section 3(2) of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act, a marriage registered under the Marriage Registration Ordinance shall not affect the rights of such person claiming title to succeed to property under and in accord with the Kandyan Law.

The Court of Appeal having considered the submissions made by both parties, by Judgment dated 22/10/2013, held that,

> "the said Sujatha Tillakaratne who had married in diga had forfeited her rights to the parental inheritance and hence by conduct she could not regain such rights in view of the mandatory provisions contained in section 9 (1) of the Kandyan Law Ordinance".

Relying on Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act, the Court presumed that Sujatha Tillakaratne contracted a diga marriage and accordingly held that, the parties married after coming into operation of the Kandyan Law Ordinance, and therefore cannot regain binna rights or diga rights on account of their conduct, in terms of Section 9(1) of the said Ordinance.

The Court cited the case of Gunasena and others vs. Ukku Menika and others (1976)-78 NLR 529, where it was held that,

> "No conduct after any such marriage of either party to that marriage or any other person shall cause or be deemed to cause a person married in diga to have the rights of succession of a person married in binna to have the rights of succession of a person married in diga."

Gunasena and others vs. Ukku Menika and others (supra), considered the question, whether Ukku Menika 2nd Respondent, Kiri Menika 3rd Respondent, and Dingiri Menika 4th Respondent, the three daughters of the deceased Ranhoti Pedi Durayalage Sendiya of Galbodagama, each of whom had been married out in diga before Sendiya's death had reacquired binna rights. In the said action, it was not in issue as to whether the three daughters married in diga or in binna.

In the present case, the certificate of marriage did not say whether the marriage was in diga or in binna. The Court of Appeal presumed that the marriage was in diga and applied the ratio decidendi in Gunasena and others vs. Ukku Menika and others (supra) and held that the rights of succession of Sujatha Tillakaratne came under Section 9(1) of the Kandyan Law Ordinance.

Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act clearly contemplates a registration of marriage which does not indicate whether the marriage was contracted in diga or in binna as oppose to Section 9(1) of the Kandyan Law Ordinance which makes reference to "A marriage contracted after the commencement of this Ordinance in binna or in diga"---- " and shall have full effect as such; and no change after any such marriage in the residence of either party to that marriage and no conduct after any such marriage of either party to that marriage shall convert or deemed to convert a binna marriage into a diga marriage or a diga marriage into a binna marriage ---"

In terms of Section 9(1) of the Kandyan Law Ordinance, as long as the existence of the marriage, (until dissolved) it is not possible to change on account of their residence or conduct, the nature of the marriage entered in the marriage register and shall have full effect of the marriage contracted.

The Court of Appeal applied the presumption under Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act, and having considered Section 9(1) of the Kandyan Law Ordinance, held that "the said Sujatha Tillakaratne who had married in diga, had forfeited her rights to the estate of her deceased father on the presumption that she had contracted a marriage in diga.

In the absence of form of marriage in the register, the Court of Appeal nor the trial court applied the best evidence rule to the necessary evidence led in proceedings to decide on the rights of inheritance and succession depended on the bond of matrimony, in order to consider the rebuttable presumption as recognized under Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act.

Section 28(1) of the said Act, reenacted the provisions of Section 39 of the 1870 Ordinance and retained the "best evidence" rule. (Jayasinghe vs. Kiribindu and others (1997) 2 SLR 1)

In terms of Section 39 of Ordinance No. 3 of 1870, the entry in the register of marriages is deemed to be the best evidence of the marriage contracted. If it does not appear in the register whether the marriage was contracted in diga or in binna, such marriage should be presumed to have been contracted in diga until the contrary is shown.

"The rights of inheritance and succession depend chiefly on the bond of matrimony, and wedlock, as sanctioned by the coventional or common law of this country, subsists in two deferent forms, the Deega and the Beena. When a woman is given away in marriage, and is, according to the terms of the contract, removed from her parent's abode, and is settled in the house of her husband, it is a conjugality in Deega. On the contrary, where the bride-groom is received into the house of the bride, and according to stipulation abides therein permanently, it is a marriage in Beena" (Niti Nighanduwa by J. Armour at page 10)

The Supreme Court in Jayasinghe vs. Kiribindu and others (supra), having considered the question "Was the marriage in diga or binna?" held that, "there is no definition of what these terms mean in the Ordinance, and therefore the matter must be decided by reference to the principles of Kandyan Law".

The 'Best Evidence' rule

As noted earlier, the best evidence rule was introduced by Section 39 of Ordinance No. 3 of 1870 and was retained in the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act.

Section 28(1), states that the registration under the said Act of a Kandyan marriage shall be the best evidence before all courts and in all proceedings in which it may be necessary to give evidence of the marriage.

In Manipitiya vs. Wegodapola (1922) 24 NLR 129, the Supreme Court having considered that the defendants were married on 3rd of June 1904, observed that the parties severally gave notice of marriage in which each declared that the marriage was to be in diga, and the register of marriages sets out that the marriage was in diga. Accordingly, the Court held,

> "The Amended Kandyan Marriage Ordinance, 1870, made the validity of the marriage turn on the contract only, and section 39 by declaring that the entries in the register should be the " best evidence " of the marriage contracted, and of the other facts stated therein cannot mean that the entries should be conclusive in matters of fact not existing at the time of the entry. Now it has been held by De Sampayo J. in the case of Menikhamy vs. Appuhamy*, that the forfeiture of the bride's rights in the paternal estate turns on the question of fact, whether the bride left the parental home in accordance with the contract. In the absence of evidence there would be a presumption that the terms of the contract relating to residence had been carried out, but I can see no good reason for excluding oral testimony relating to the carrying out of this term of the contract, which was not a matter of fact occurring at the time of the contract".*

The Supreme Court having concluded that the entry in the marriage register cannot be conclusive in matters of fact not existing at the time of entry, further held that "In the absence of evidence, there would be a presumption that the terms of the contract relating to residence have been carried out", and stressed the importance of matters of fact to be considered to rebut the presumption recognized under Section 39 of the Ordinance.

In Jayasinghe vs. Kiribindu and others (supra), where the relevant entry in the certificate of marriage was written as diga, the Court held that "the residence is only evidence of the character of the marriage. It is not conclusive evidence".

In Perera vs. Aselin Nona (1958) - 60 NLR 73, Basnayake CJ held that,

> "If the marriage had been registered under the Kandyan Marriage Ordinance the register would have indicated whether the marriage was in binna or diga. Such an entry though not conclusive proof of the fact that the marriage was in binna or diga would be an indication of the kind of marriage the contracting parties had in mind and is binding as far as they and their respective representatives in interest are concerne.

In Samarakoon vs. Samarakoon and another (2003) 2 SLR 321, the Court of Appeal considered that the marriage certificate being one under the Marriage Registration Ordinance and when there is no indication as to whether the marriage was in fact a diga or binna, taking into consideration the necessary evidence held, 'there is no cogent evidence of a severance with the mulgedera so essential to a diga marriage"

As already mentioned, the Plaintiff - Appellant contends that succession to property of a party married in terms of the Marriage Registration Ordinance is necessarily to be determined by the nature of the marriage from subsequent conduct of the parties in order to decide on paternal inheritance as recognized in Perera vs. Asilin Nona (1960) NLR 73 and Samarakoon vs. Samarakoon (2003) 2 SLR 321. On this issue, firstly, the Defendant-Respondent contends that, both the above cases, dealt with marriages prior to the enactment of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act, No. 44 of 1952, and secondly, that there was no presumption of marriage in diga similar to Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act, prior to 1952.

It is correct to state that both the above cited cases, Perera vs. Aselin Nona and Samarakoon vs. Samarakoon and another (supra), dealt with marriages contracted prior to the enactment of the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act. However, as observed earlier, the entry in the register of marriages and in the register of divorces being the best evidence of the marriage contracted or dissolved by the parties and of the other facts stated therein, was introduced by Section 39 of Ordinance No. 3 of 1870 and retained in the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act. Therefore, the contention, that the law as it stood prior to 1952, did not have a presumption of a diga marriage similar to Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act, is incorrect.

Therefore, it is clear that the Supreme Court in decisions prior to the 1952 Act, applied the best evidence rule in recognition of the presumption under Section 39 of the Ordinance No. 3 of 1870, when the register is silent as to the nature of marriage and also applied in matters relating to the character of marriage arising under Section 9(1) of the Kandyan Law Ordinance.

The Counsel for the Defendant-Respondent has placed much reliance on the Court of Appeal Judgment in Lewis Singho Vs. Kusumawathie and Others (2003) 2 SLR 128, where the question of law to be decided was whether the deceased Plaintiffs mother, Enso Nona who married in diga was entitled to succeed to her father's premises in suit. Enso Nona's marriage certificate was issued under the Marriage Registration Ordinance. The Court considered that, the certificate of marriage of Enso Nona is one issued under the Marriage Registration Ordinance, where an entry with regard to the nature of marriage is absent.

In Lewis Singho Vs. Kusumawathie and Others (supra), the Court, prior to arriving at its decision considered the principle set out by Fredric Austin Hayley in his book on "Treaties on the Laws and Customs of the Sinhalese" at page 195, where it is stated that "in the absence of an entry in the register specifying its nature, the marriage is presumed to be a diga one, until the contrary is proved".

And the Court held,

> "where a party who is governed by the Marriage and Divorce (Kandyan) Act contracts a marriage under the Marriage Registration Ordinance, in the absence of an entry in the certificate of marriage with regard to the nature of the marriage contracted the presumption recognized under Section 28(1) of the Marriage and Divorce (Kandyan) Act would be applicable and such a marriage would be presumed to have been one of Diga until the contrary is proved."

It is important to note that in the said case the Court considered the presumption recognized under Section 28(1) of the said Act, with the available evidence led in the proceedings of the District Court, and observed that 'there was no evidence led to the contrary'. Therefore, it is clear that in Lewis Singho Vs. Kusumawathie and Others (supra), the Court prior to arriving at the said decision was mindful to consider matters relating to law, in accord with the available evidence.

In the case at hand, the Court of Appeal was correct in its recognition of Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act, however, in the circumstances where the parties did not precisely state the type of marriage intended by them, the Court considered the mandatory provisions contained in Section 9(1) of the Kandyan Law Ordinance, without due consideration to the necessary evidence led in proceedings to determine the nature of the marriage, in deciding whether Sujatha Tillakaratne forfeited her rights to paternal inheritance. Therefore, since the register of marriage is not conclusive of the intention in which the marriage was celebrated, in terms of Section 28(1), necessary evidence of the marriage should be taken into consideration applying the best evidence rule to decide whether the marriage was contracted in diga or in binna, and until such time, the marriage shall be presumed to have been contracted in diga, according to law.

It is the contention of the Defendant-Respondent that Sujatha Tillakaratne who married in diga was given a dowry by her father at marriage and was therefore not entitled to succeed to her father's estate. Therefore, the onus is on the Plaintiff-Appellant to rebut the Section 28(1) presumption and establish that the said Sujatha Tillakaratne contracted a marriage in binna and therefore, succeeded to her father's estate and was not disinherited.

Prior to consideration of evidence led in proceedings, I am mindful of the observations made by Windham J., in King vs. Peter Nonis (1947) - 49 NLR 16, where a case is brought within the equitable exceptions of section 92 of the Evidence Ordinance, the Court was of the view that, "It certainly does not, and never did, mean that no other direct evidence of the fact in dispute could be tendered. Its meaning is rather that the best evidence must be given of which the nature of the case permits."

Both parties at the hearing and in their written submissions have drawn attention to the evidence to be considered when deciding on the nature of the marriage.

The Plaintiff-Appellant supports her claim to the property in question on the basis that a diga married women could later re-acquire the rights of a binna marriage on the following grounds,

1. Sujatha Tillakaratne after her marriage had lived in the mulgedara.
2. After her marriage her brother and sisters have acquiesced that she was entitled to paternal inheritance.

The learned Trial Judge, did not evaluated the evidence led before him in consideration of Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act, on the question whether Sujatha Tillakaratne married in diga or in binna or whether she inherited an undivided 1/4th share in the corpus from her deceased father.

"Daughters, before marriage, or returning from a deega marriage, have an equal claim for maintenance from the shares of all their brothers --- that is to say, all the shares into which their parents' estate may have been divided." (Sawers' Digest of Kandyan Law at page 4)

A diga married women could also establish the re-acquisition of binna rights, if the siblings of the women acquiesced in their right and permits her to possess the share of the land for a long period of time.

The first ground as stated above, is supported on the basis that it is established by evidence that Sujatha Tillakaratne after marriage lived in the mulgedara. The Plaintiff-Appellant relies on the electoral register to prove that she lived in her father's house after marriage. This is the only available evidence to be considered on re-acquisition of binna rights. The intention of the parties that the marriage was in diga or in binna or the necessary evidence required to establish that the father had intended a binna connection at the time of the registration of the marriage is not borne out in evidence. The position that Sujatha Tillakaratne after her marriage lived in the mulgedara for a period of time may be suggestive of the fact that she may have had a close link with the mulgedara, even after the marriage. But is that alone sufficient to establish binna rights?

In Jayasinghe Vs. Kiribindu and Others (1997) 2 SLR 1 at page 66, Dr. Amerasinghe J. observed that "Kiribindu's case is that she did not forfeit her rights because she never left the mulgethara. As we have seen, residence is only evidence of the character of the marriage. It is not conclusive evidence". Whilst agreeing with counsel that, "none of the sources of Kandyan Law classify married women as those who lived in the mulgedara as opposed to those who left the mulgedara in referring their rights to the paternal inheritance" emphasized the fact that "a diga married women who remained in her father's house to render a most valuable and praiseworthy service, but that alone would not convert her diga marriage into a binna marriage".

In Wickramasinghe vs. Robert Banda and others (2006) 1 SLR 246, the Supreme Court observed that "the legal position in regards to the property rights of a married daughter therefore it is quite clear and even if one were to consider the rights of a daughter who had returned from her diga husband's house, according to Hayley, such women does not ordinarily recover any right to inherit whether she returns before or after her father's death. The only exception to this position where she would be able to inherit, is that if she marries again in binna, with the consent of her parents."

With reference to the dowry, he received upon marring the said Sujatha Tillakaratne, the 2nd Plaintiff-Appellant, the husband of Sujatha Tillakaratne, has given evidence in the following manner, ප්‍ර - දැන් තමාගේ පදිංචිය කොහේද?

පි - සුජාතා තිලකරත්නට දෑවැද්දට දීපු ගෙදර.

The above evidence will lay back any doubt, that Sujatha Tillakaratne was given a house as dowry by her father and as such having left the mulgedara, would have established a strong claim to reacquire her binna rights.

The learned District Judge relied on case No. 5770/P, an uncontested Partition action, which held that the deceased Tillakaratne's four children were entitled to 1/12 share each to the corpus of the said action.

In paragraph 13 of the plaint the two sisters and the brother of Sujatha Tillakaratne denied any entitlement to Sujatha Tillakaratne when they stated that they were entitled to 1/3rd of the corpus to be partitioned. However, the learned Trial Judge decreed that the deceased Sujatha Tillakaratne's daughter Gayani Balasuriya, sisters and brother were entitled to 1/12 share each.

It is observed that the Partition Case No. 5770/P was instituted in 12/10/1983 and the Judgment was entered on 25/09/1991. The Defendant-Respondents were not parties to the said action. The decree was entered without a contest. The learned Trial Judge in that case did not analyze or investigate the devolution of title as required by law. It is also to be noted that the Defendant-Respondents title Deed No. 275 was attested on 14/12/1981.

In the circumstances, relying exclusively on the devolution of title decreed in the said case, as evidence to decide on the waiver or forfeiture of her rights, in my view, cannot be considered as conclusive evidence.

Accordingly, I have no hesitation to hold that the said Sujatha Tillakaratne who is presumed to have married in diga has not rebutted the presumption created under Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act, and therefore her marriage is presumed to be in diga.

Therefore, the Court of Appeal was correct in relying on the presumption recognized under Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act, to hold that 'Sujatha Tillakaratne who married under the General Marriage Ordinance was married in diga and thereby, forfeited her rights to paternal inheritance'.

Accordingly, the question of law set out in paragraph 9(ii) is answered in the negative.

The question as set out in paragraph 9(v), is hinged to the question of law raised in paragraph 9(ii) above, which I have already answered.

Applying the best evidence rule, to the evidence led in proceedings, I have cited with approval the Judgment in Lewis Singho vs. Kusumawathi and another (2003) 2 SLR 128, inter alia, on matters to be decided when a Kandyan women marries under the Marriage Registration Ordinance and the presumption it would create in terms of Section 28(1) of the 1952 Act, that the marriage is in diga until the contrary is proved. Accordingly, the question of law set out in paragraph 9(vii) is also decided in favor of the Defendant-Respondent.

Accordingly, this appeal is dismissed. I order no costs in the circumstances.

In this case the judgment was given by the learned District Judge in favour the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff-Respondent). The judgment was delivered in open court on 28.4.2006. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the learned District Judge, the Defendant-Appellant-Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant-Appellant) filed Notice of Appeal and Petition of Appeal in the District Court within time. At the hearing of the appeal before the Civil Appellate High Court, the Plaintiff-Respondent raised an objection that the Defendant-Appellant had not sent Notice of Appeal to the Plaintiff-Respondent or to the Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent in terms of Section 755(2) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code and moved to dismiss the appeal. Section 755(2) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code reads as follows.

> The notice of appeal shall be accompanied by -
> > (b) proof of service, on the respondent or on his registered attorney, of a copy of the notice of appeal, in the form of a written acknowledgment of the receipt of such notice or the registered postal receipt in proof of such service.

The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court by their judgment dated 22.8.2014, upheld the objection and dismissed the appeal of the Defendant-Appellant. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court, the Defendant-Appellant has appealed to this court. This court by its order dated 10.1.2017, granted leave to appeal on questions of law set out in paragraphs 14(a), (b),(c) and (d) of the Petition of Appeal dated 2.10.2014 which are set out below.

1. Have their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court in making the order failed to take into consideration the provisions contained in section 759 of the Civil Procedure Code?

2. Have their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court failed to consider that no prejudice had been caused to the Plaintiff by serving the notice of appeal to the former Registered Attorney?

3. Have their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court failed to consider the fact that the notice of appeal had been filed by the Defendant within 14 days from the date of judgment?

4. Have their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court, having concluded that no prejudice had been caused to Plaintiff-Respondent, unjustly dismissed the Appeal of the Defendant-Appellant?

In this case the former Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent in the District Court was Mrs. Gowri Sangari Thavarasa. She revoked her proxy on 22.7.1996. Pushpa Nanayakkara Attorney-at-Law filed new proxy on 24.7.1996. The judgment in the District Court was delivered on 28.4.2006. The learned Senior State Counsel admitted at the hearing before us that the Defendant-Appellant, by mistake, had sent the Notice of Appeal to the previous Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent Mrs. Gowri Sangari Thavarasa. The learned Senior State Counsel however contended that no material prejudice has been caused to the Plaintiff-Respondent since it was within the knowledge of the Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent (Pushpa Nanayakkara) that a Petition of Appeal had been filed in the District Court. She therefore contended that under Section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code, the Petition of Appeal of the Defendant-Appellant should have been accepted by the Civil Appellate High Court and should have been proceeded to hear the main appeal. I now advert to this contention. Section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code reads as follows.

> In the case of any mistake, omission or defect on the part of any appellant in complying with the provisions of the foregoing sections, the Court of Appeal may, if it should be of opinion that the respondent has not been materially prejudiced, grant relief on such terms as it may deem just.

It is necessary to consider whether the Plaintiff-Respondent has been materially prejudiced by the mistake committed by the Defendant-Appellant (sending the Notice of Appeal to the previous Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent). It has to be noted here that after the judgment of the District Court was delivered in open court on 28.4.2006, the case was called in open court on 12.6.2006 in order to correct mistakes in the judgment. By this time the Petition of Appeal had been filed in the District Court. On 12.6.2006, the Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent was present in open court when the case was called and the learned District Judge, after correcting mistakes, made an order to send the case record to the Court of Appeal. This is evident by journal entry dated 12.6.2006. Thus when the learned District Judge made the above order, it was within the knowledge of the Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent (Pushpa Nanayakkara) that a Petition of Appeal had been filed. Thus, can it be said that failure on the part of the Defendant-Appellant to send notice of appeal to the Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent has caused material prejudice to the Plaintiff-Respondent? Learned counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent relied on the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of Sumanasekera Vs Yapa [2006] 3 SLR 183 at page 187 it was held as follows:

> 'The authorities make it mandatory that the Notice and Petition of Appeal have to be signed by the Registered Attorney, and actual notice sent to the registered Attorney, under section 755(2)(b). However the Appellant has not acted in conformity with section 755(2)(b) as the Actual Notice was sent to the counsel for the respondent and not on the Registered Attorney-at-Law. The Petitioner has not shown any good and sufficient ground in not complying with the provisions of section 755(2)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code, and as the Respondent has been materially prejudiced by such noncompliance, the Petitioner is not entitled to relief under section 759 of the Code.'

But the Defendant-Appellant in the present case has admitted his mistake and took up the position that notice of appeal was sent to the previous Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent by mistake; and that it was within the knowledge of the Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent (Pushpa Nanayakkara) that a Petition of Appeal had been filed

> "If the Court of Appeal is of opinion that the respondent has not been materially prejudiced, by non-compliance with relevant provisions, it has jurisdiction to grant relief. In the present case, the Court of Appeal was clearly in error in holding that "the very continuance of litigation would itself amount to material prejudice": if that be correct, that would be true of every case (including Sameen v. Abeyewickrema 64 NLR553) in which relief is sought under section 759(2), and every application for relief would have to be refused on that ground. Such an interpretation must be resisted, unless compelled by clear words. What is contemplated is prejudice caused by or in consequence of the non-compliance."

At page 287 His Lordship Justice Fernando further made the following observation.

"It then becomes necessary to consider whether the Court of Appeal ought to have exercised its discretion to grant relief. While relief will more readily be granted if the non-compliance is trivial, or where an excuse or explanation is offered, I am in respectful agreement with Lord Chancellor in Sameen v. Abeyewickrema that relief can be granted even in respect of total or substantial non-compliance, and even if no excuse is forthcoming. .... The discretion under section 759(3) is a judicial discretion; it was incumbent on the Appellant to place the necessary material before the Court and to invite the Court to exercise that discretion."

In the case of Nanayakkara Vs Warnakulasuriya [1993] 2 SLR 289 this court at page 290 held that 'the power of the Court to grant relief under s. 759 (2) of the Code is wide and discretionary and is subject to such terms as the Court may deem just. Relief may be granted even if no excuse for non-compliance is forthcoming. However, relief cannot be granted if the Court is of the opinion that the respondent has been materially prejudiced in which event the appeal has to be dismissed.'

The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court have not considered Section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court have observed that there was no opportunity for the Plaintiff-Respondent to know that an appeal had been filed since the Plaintiff-Respondent or his Registered Attorney-at-Law had not received notice of appeal. Is this observation correct? The Registered Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff-Respondent who was present in court on 12.6.2006 should be aware that an appeal had been filed since the learned District Judge on 12.6.2006, made an order to send the case record to the Court of Appeal. Therefore, the above observation made by the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court is not correct. Considering all the above matters, I hold that the noncompliance of Section 755(2)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code in the present case is trivial and it has not caused material prejudice to the Plaintiff-Respondent. In my view the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court should have overruled the objection of the Plaintiff-Respondent and decided to hear the appeal of the Defendant-Appellant on its merit. Considering all the above matters, I hold that the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court were in error when they dismissed the Petition of Appeal of the Defendant-Appellant. For the above reasons, I set aside the judgment of the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court dated 22.8.2014 and direct them to hear the appeal of the Defendant-Appellant on its merit.

I would like to state here that this judgment is not a licence for appellants not to comply with Section 755(2)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code. Appellants should comply with Section 755(2)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code. But in a situation where the Appellant has failed to comply with Section 755(2)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code, the Appellate Court has, under Section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code, the power to use its discretion to accept petition of appeal if no material prejudice has been caused to the Respondent as a result of any mistake, omission or defect on the part of the Appellant. An application to use the discretion of the Appellate Court under Section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code will be separately considered on the facts of each case.

In view of the conclusion reached above, I answer the 1st and 2nd questions of law in the affirmative. The 3rd question of law does not arise for consideration. I answer the 4th question of law as follows. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court were in error when they dismissed the appeal of the Defendant-Appellant.

The plaintiff filed this action in the District Court of Galle seeking to partition two contiguous allotments of land known as Pinnaketiyawatta and Godaihalawatta as one unit. The 4th, 5th and 7th defendants sought the dismissal of the partition action. After trial, the District Court entered judgment as prayed for by the plaintiff. The appeal filed by the 4th, 5th and 7th defendants against the judgment of the District Court was dismissed by the Court of Appeal. This appeal by the 4th defendant-appellant is from the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

This Court granted leave to appeal to the 4th defendant on the following question of law:

Has the Court of Appeal erred in law by not coming to a finding that the District Court of Galle has failed to investigate the title in terms of Partition Law No. 21 of 1977 in particular not considering the deeds marked 4V1 to 4V10?

As stated above, the 4th defendant does not seek to partition the land. He seeks the dismissal of the action. Hence his position before this Court that the District Court did not take into consideration his deeds marked 4VI to 4V10 in investigating the title is irreconcilable with the relief sought.

The position of the 4th defendant before the District Court as crystallised in the issues was not clear at all. His position before this Court is no better.

The Preliminary Plan depicted five lots marked A to E as the corpus. By way of issues 6 to 9, the 4th defendant took up the position that lots A to C in the Preliminary Plan is the land known as Pinkatiyawatte Dakunukebella alias Pinketiyawatte Kosgahakebella, lot D is Godaihalawatta, and lot E is part of Welikandewatte. It was not the position of the 4th defendant before the District Court that lots A to D comprise the land to be partitioned. Nor did the 4th defendant state that lots A to D are parts of different lands unrelated to the land to be partitioned. The 4th defendant did not take up a clear position in respect of these lots.

By way of issue 10, the 4th defendant first states that lots A to C are part of the corpus in another partition action No. P/9211 pending before the same District Court and therefore these lots cannot be part of the corpus in the instant action. Thereafter, in the same breath, by way of issues 11 to 19, he unfolds a pedigree different from the plaintiff's in respect of lots A to C. These are contradictory positions.

By way of issues 20 to 23, the 4th defendant reveals another pedigree different from the plaintiff's for lot D.

Other issues raised pertain to lot E to which the 4th defendant has no claim.

By the last two issues 27 and 28, the 4th defendant seeks dismissal of the action in the event the aforesaid issues of the 4th defendant are answered in his favour.

Despite the 4th defendant seeking dismissal of the action, let me now consider whether the 4th defendant proved his pedigree in respect of lots A to D.

As seen from the proceedings dated 10.06.1997, it is correct that at the trial the 4th defendant commenced his evidence in chief and purported to mark the deeds 4V1 to 4V3 for the purpose of record although these deeds were not before Court. The trial was postponed in order for the 4th defendant to bring the deeds and continue with his evidence in chief. However the 4th defendant did not resume evidence on the next date and the 5th defendant gave evidence instead. It is through the 5th defendant that the deeds 4V1 to 4V10 were marked. In cross examination, the 5th defendant categorically stated that he has no right to lots A to D and his only claim is to lot E which is a minute portion of about one perch. The 4th defendant's purpose in marking the deeds 4V1 to 4V10 through the 5th defendant is unclear as the 4th defendant did not specifically seek undivided rights to the land. The 5th defendant concluded his evidence in chief seeking dismissal of the plaintiff's action.

In the aforementioned circumstances, the learned District Judge cannot be found fault with when he stated in the judgment that the 4th defendant did not establish his rights to the land to be partitioned.

During the course of the argument before this Court, learned counsel for the 4th defendant was asked whether deeds 4V1 to 4V10 are relevant to the land to be partitioned but he did not give a straightforward answer. When asked what share of the land the 4th defendant claims on these deeds if they are relevant, there was no answer at all.

Learned counsel attempted to make submissions on the failure to identify the corpus on the strength of these deeds, stating that the plaintiff filed this action to partition several lands in violation of the partition law. However, as learned counsel for the plaintiff rightly pointed out, the Supreme Court did not grant leave to appeal on this question of law.

The only submission of learned counsel for the 4th defendant is that the plaintiff's action shall be dismissed as there was no proper investigation of title by the District Judge. He cites a series of authorities to emphasise that it is the bounden duty of the District Judge to independently investigate the title of each party irrespective of what the parties or their attorneys submit to Court.

It is true that under section 25(1) of the Partition Law, No. 21 of 1977, a special duty is cast upon the District Judge to investigate the title of each party to the land to be partitioned. But this does not mean that the District Judge shall go after the parties pleading with them for help in investigating their title to the land, more so when the parties are represented by attorneys.

An attorney is duty-bound to conduct the case so as to serve the best interests of his client. When he conducts a trial, he has a strategy in place, and rightly so. He raises points of contest, marshals evidence, cross examines witnesses etc. according to his plan. It is not proper for the Judge to sabotage this plan and forcibly take control of the trial in the guise of investigating the title to the land. Such conduct on the part of the Judge would violate the most rudimentary norms of justice. The role of a Judge hearing a partition case is no exception to this fundamental norm.

In Thilagaratnam v. Athpuna [1996] 2 Sri LR 66 at 68 Anandacoomaraswamy J. stated:

> The Learned Counsel for the Appellant cited several authorities Goonaratne v. Bishop of Colombo 32 NLR 337, Peris v. Perera 1 NLR 362, Neelakutty v. Alvar 20 NLR 372, Cooray v. Wijesuriya 62 NLR 158, Juliana Hamine v. Don Thomas 59 NLR 546 at 549 and Sheefa v. Colombo Municipal Council 36 NLR 38 and stated that it is the duty of the Court to examine and investigate title in a partition action, because the judgement is a judgement in rem. We are not unmindful of these authorities and the proposition > that it is the duty of the Court to investigate title in a partition action, but the Court can do so only within the limits of pleadings, admissions, points of contest, evidence both documentary and oral. Court cannot go on a voyage of discovery tracing the title and finding the shares in the corpus for them, otherwise parties will tender their pleadings and expect the Court to do their work and their Attorneys-at-Law's work for them to get title to those shares in the corpus.

A judgment entered in a partition action after following a long-drawn-out cumbersome procedure shall not be set aside with a stroke of the pen and retrial ordered causing enormous difficulties, under the popular banner "failure to investigate title", unless there is good cause for doing so.

In Francis Wanigasekera v. Pathirana [1997] 3 Sri LR 231 at 234-235, Weerasekera J. impressed upon the undesirability of the literal application of section 25(1) of the Partition Law:

> Learned Counsel also urged that the learned District Judge failed to act in terms of section 25 of the Partition Act which requires Court to examine and hear and receive evidence of the title of each party as decided in the case of Sirimalie v. Punchi Ukku 60 NLR 448.
> I do agree that section 25 of the Partition Act requires the Court to examine and hear and receive evidence of the title and interest of each party. But it must be remembered that the literal application of the provisions of this section would > lead to the most disturbing, hilarious and absurd result and no partition case could ever be finally concluded.

John Singho v. Pedris Hamy (1947) 48 NLR 345 is a partition case where the dispute presented to the District Judge was whether Andiris Naide owned the land or whether Aberan owned the land. The District Judge found on a balance of evidence that Andiris Naide was the original owner. Having come to that finding next he took upon himself to decide whether some of the successors in title of Aberan had not acquired title by prescriptive possession against all the other parties. Despite this being a partition action, the Supreme Court decided that the District Judge overstepped his boundaries. Wijeyewardene J. held at 346:

> This appears to have been a self-imposed task, considering that the parties had told him that the dispute between them was whether Andiris Naide or Aberan was the original owner. It cannot be said that the plaintiff has not been prejudiced by the action of the District Judge in deciding the question of prescriptive possession in these circumstances. A Judge may find it frequently very convenient to state, in the form of issues, the matters in dispute between the parties in a partition action. After satisfying himself that no person other than the parties to the action has interests in the property, he will in such a case decide the issues framed by him and enter a decree for partition or sale according to his finding on those issues. He should not in such circumstances consider, without giving due notice to the parties, any matters in dispute that may appear to him > to arise between them in the course of the proceedings. The position, of course, will be different where the Judge does not set down, in the form of issues, the matters in dispute in a partition action. In such a case the parties will be presumed to have asked the Court to adjudicate on all the matters in dispute as disclosed by the pleadings.

I do not say that a partition trial shall be conducted in the same manner as any other inter partes civil trial. Notwithstanding the system of justice which prevails in our country is adversarial as opposed to inquisitorial, the role of the Judge in a partition case is different and unique. The responsibility of the Judge in a partition case is much greater than in an ordinary civil trial, particularly because collusive actions deprive the rights of the true owners simply because partition actions are actions in rem. Collusion can take place not only when right parties are not before Court but also when they are before Court. The case of Sirimalie v. Punchi Ukku (1958) 60 NLR 448 cited before Weerasekera J. in Francis Wanigasekera's case (supra) provides a typical example.

In Sirimalie's case, the plaintiff in her plaint set apart shares of the land to be partitioned to the 8th, 9th and 10th defendant-petitioners. The trial was taken up when the plaintiff and the 7th and 9th defendants were present. The only parties represented by attorneys at the trial or at any previous stage were the plaintiff and the 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants. At the commencement of the trial, the Court was informed that there was no contest. When the evidence of the plaintiff's husband was led, he deviated from what had been pleaded in the plaint and took up a new position which deprived the 8th, 9th and 10th defendant-petitioners of any share in the land.

The Supreme Court disapproved of the unsatisfactory manner in which the trial was conducted and, having stressed the duty of the District Judge in hearing a partition case, set aside the judgment and directed that the trial be commenced afresh. At page 450, Sansoni J. (later C.J.) stated:

> I think the more serious objection to the manner in which this trial was conducted is the fact that the 9th defendant, who was present in Court, seems to have been totally ignored. She appeared even before summons was served on her. It is true that she filed no statement, but her presence at the trial surely indicated that she had come to watch her interests. She does not seem to have been asked whether she accepted the new position taken up by parties who had pleaded differently, nor whether she wished to give evidence, or even to cross-examine the plaintiff's husband whose evidence was directly against her interests.

Obviously, the facts of Sirimalie's case cried aloud for the intervention of the Supreme Court to prevent what would otherwise have been a miscarriage of justice.

Conversely, the facts of the instant action are totally different. The 4th defendant was fully represented by an attorney throughout the trial and the District Court answered the issues with the available evidence.

If the 4th defendant later thinks his deeds marked 4V1 to 4V10 are relevant to the land to be partitioned, he can make an application before the District Court to secure his undivided rights from the share left unallotted by the District Judge in the judgment.

I answer the question of law in the negative and dismiss the appeal of the 4th defendant but without costs.

L.T.B. Dehideniya, J.

Plaintiff – Respondent – Appellant (hereinafter sometime referred to as the Appellant) instituted an action by plaint dated 10th September 2001 seeking declaration of title and ejectment of the Defendant- Appellant – Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Respondent) from the land called Kahamiyatota Addara Owita, morefully described in the schedule to the Plaint. The Appellant contested that the Respondent was in unlawful and forcible occupation in the said land. The Appellant produced proof of his title to the land in the form of the final decree in the District Court Balapitiya NP/3085 of 1979, whereby Korala Kankanamge Rosalin (Appellant's Mother) got title to lot 5 in plan No.1946/A. Rosalin thereafter transferred title to the Appellant by Deed No.5103. Respondent denied the rights of the Appellant and claimed prescriptive rights by long, uninterrupted and adverse possession over ten years. Respondent's position was that he is not a licensee, and that he had been living in the said land with his parents and even after he got married, he lived in the premises with his wife and specifically stated that he has been living in the premises for over 70 years. The District Court of Elpitiya delivered the judgement dated 09.12.2004 in favour of the Appellant holding that the action of Appellant being one of rei vindicatio, the Appellant having establish the paper title to the land, it is necessary to assess the rights claimed by the Respondent. Being dissatisfied by the said judgement the Respondent tendered an appeal there from to the High Court of Civil Appeal. Upon hearing the parties, the High Court of Civil Appeal delivered the judgement dated 28.02.2012 in favour of the Respondent, set aside the Judgement of District Court of Elpitiya and dismissed the action of the Appellant holding that the Respondent has proved the adverse possession to the land and established prescriptive rights against the Appellant. It is from the aforesaid judgement that this appeal is preferred.

This Court granted leave to appeal on the following questions of law;

1) Has the High Court of Civil Appeal failed to consider that once paper title became undisputed that the right to possess is presumed?
2) Has the High Court of Civil Appeal failed to distinguish between occupation and possession of the Defendant- Respondent?
3) Has the High Court of Civil Appeal misconstrued the principle laid down in [2002] 1 Sri L.R 148?

The Appellant's case is based on the ground that the Respondent was in occupation of the land in suit which the Appellant has the paper title, with the leave and licence given by the Appellant. In the original action, firstly the Learned District Judge examined the Appellant's title to the land and decided in respect of the evidence tendered by the parties that the Appellant has established the paper title to the land in suit. Appellant's mother 'Rosalin' acquired the title to the land on the final decree of the partition case in the District Court Balapitiya NP/3085 of 1979 marked as පැ.1. Accordingly, the said title rights have been conveyed to the Plaintiff by Deed No.5103 marked as පැ.2. Further, when the cross-examination was conducted Appellant's title to the land was admitted by the Respondent as well.

As per the aforesaid context, it is a settled law that in a rei vindicatio action, the defendant has no burden to prove anything until the plaintiff proves his title to the land. Once the paper title has proven, burden shifts to the defendant to prove that the defendant has obtain a title adverse and independent to the paper title of the plaintiff. The above legal principle has been discussed and accepted in a range of case law. As per the submissions of the Appellant, the learned High Court Judge has failed to consider the legal principal set out in Leisa v. Simon [2002] 1 Sri L.R 148

> "Once the paper title became undisputed the burden shifted to the defendants to show that they had independent rights in the form of prescription as claimed by them. In fact, the following dictum of Gratian, J. in Pathirana v. Jayasundera [58 NLR 169] at 177 became applicable"

"Their possession was presumed on proving paper title. The burden was cast on the defendants to prove that by virtue of an adverse possession they had obtained a title adverse to and independent of the paper title of the plaintiffs"

A similar view was expressed in the case of D.A Wanigaratne Vs Juwanis Appuhamy 65 NLR 167

D.A Wanigaratne Vs Juwanis Appuhamy 65 NLR 167 at p.168 per Herat J.

"It has been laid down by this court that in an action rei vindicatio the plaintiff should set out his title on the basis on which he claims a declaration of title to the land and must, in Court prove that title against the Defendant in the action. The Defendant in a rei vindicatio action need not prove anything, still less his own title. The Plaintiff cannot ask for a declaration of title in his favour merely on the strength that the Defendant's title is poor or not established. The plaintiff must prove and establish his title."

In light of the above legal principle, when considering the legal context of the present application, it is clear that the Learned District Judge correctly decided that the Appellant has established the paper title to the land. Further, when examining the Respondent's evidence it appears that the Respondent has not claimed any title rights in the District Court Balapitiya partition action No. 3085, nor had he made any claim before the surveyor. The said evidence clearly demonstrates that the Respondent has accepted the Appellant's title and has failed to adduce any clear evidence in contending Appellant's title to the land.

The Respondent challenges the Appellant's paper title to the land and claimed prescriptive rights against the Appellant by long, uninterrupted and adverse possession. The Respondent's position is that as the Learned District Judge obsereved, the Appellant has failed to prove that the Respondent has reside in the said premises with the leave and license of the Appellant, in itself proves the uninterrupted, adverse possession. The Respondent contests that he had been living there with his parents, and even after he got married, he lived in the premises, with his wife and specifically stated that, he had been living in the premises for over 70 years and the premises has never been occupied by the Appellant and claimed all the improvements. The Respondent gave evidence himself and also produced the certified extracts of the electoral registers for the years from 1978.

The present law governing the term of prescription for immovable property is contained in Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance No.22 of 1871. This provision declares the fundamental requirements of undisturbed, uninterrupted and adverse possession that must be met, where a party invokes the provision of Section 3 in order to defeat the title rights of the owner of the property.

"Proof of the undisturbed and uninterrupted possession by a defendant in any action, or by those under whom he claims, of lands or immovable property, by a title adverse to or independent of that of the claimant or plaintiff in such action (that is to say, a possession unaccompanied by payment of rent or produce, or performance of service or duty, or by any other act by the possessor, from which an acknowledgment of a right existing in another person would fairly and naturally be inferred) for ten years previous to the bringing of such action, shall entitle the defendant to a decree in his favour with costs. And in like manner, when any plaintiff shall bring his action, or any third party shall intervene in any action for the purpose of being quieted in his possession of lands or other immovable property, or to prevent encroachment or usurpation thereof, or to establish his claim in any other manner to such land or other property, proof of such undisturbed and uninterrupted possession as herein before explained, by such plaintiff or intervenient, or by those under whom he claims, shall entitle such plaintiff or intervenient to a decree in his favour with costs.."

Accordingly, when considering whether the Respondent has proved the prescriptive rights against the paper title of the Appellant, the Respondent contends that when the Learned District Judge decided that the Respondent was not in possession as a licensee, that itself proves Respondent's adverse possession. The Learned High Court Judge agreed with the contention of the Respondent and held the same in the High Court Judgement dated 28.02.2012 marked as X-1. Nature of the essential qualification of adverse possession has been discussed in the case law jurisprudence. Thus, in the cases of Maduanwala Vs Ekneligoda (3 NLR 213) and Thillekaratne Vs Bastian (21 NLR 12) it has been held that for the purpose of these prescription cases the word " adverse " must, in its application to any particular case, be interpreted as occupation of land to which another person has title with the intention of possessing it as one's own.

Maduwanwala Vs Ekneligoda (3 NLR 213) at p. 213, Bonser CJ, held that a person who is let into occupation of property as a tenant, or as a licensee, must be deemed to continue to occupy on the footing on which he was admitted, until by some overt act he manifests his intention of occupying in another capacity. No secret act will avail to change the nature of his occupation. Bonser CJ further stated: "Possession, as I understand it, is occupation either in person or by agent, with the intention of holding the land as the owner."

Thillakeratne Vs Bastian (21 NLR 12) at p. 19-20 per Bertram CJ,

"..The effect of this principle is that, where any person's possession was originally not adverse, and he claims that it has become adverse, the onus is on him to prove it. And what must he prove? He must prove not only an intention on his part to possess adversely, but a manifestation of that intention to the true owner against whom he sets up his possession. The burden he must assume is, in fact, both definite and heavy, and the authorities have been accustomed to emphasize its severe nature."

In J.S.K Chelliah Vs M. Wijenathan (54 NLR 337) at p.342 per Gratien J,

"Where a party invokes the provisions of Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance in order to defeat the ownership of an adverse claimant to immovable property, the burden of proof rests squarely and fairly on him to establish a starting point for his or her acquisition of prescriptive rights."

When observing the evidence in the present application, it clearly shows that Respondent and the Appellant's mother Rosalin was brother and sister and they were all living as one family in the said premises in the suit and the Respondent has continued possession merely as a family member, before and after the partition decree of 1979. The Respondent has tendered certified extracts from the electoral register from 1978 and called the retired Grama Niladhari to provide evidence to confirm that the Respondent has resided in the premises from 1963 to date, in order to prove his uninterrupted, undisturbed long possession for over 70 years. However, when carefully examining the aforesaid extracts from the electoral register, it appears that, the Respondent has become the "head of the household" in 1982, only after the death of his father, Korale Kankanmge Simon. Thus, it is clear to this court that, the Respondent is in an attempt to contend that, as the learned District Judge decided, the Appellant has failed to prove that the Respondent has reside in the said premises with the leave and license of the Appellant, in itself proves the uninterrupted, adverse possession. However, when considering all the evidence presented in the case, it reveals that the premises in suit is the Respondent's ancestral home and he has been living in the said premises for over 70 years as a descendent.

A person who bases his title on adverse possession must show clear and incontrovertible evidence that his possession was hostile to the true owner of the property, where the property belongs to a family member, the presumption will be that it is "permissive possession" which is not in denial of the title of the family member who is the true owner of the property and is consequently not adverse to him/her. This presumption represents the interference that may be drawn in the context of the relationship of the parties. This principal of law is laid down in the case of de Silva Vs Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (1978) 80 NLR 292 In relation to the subject matter of the present application, it is clear to this court that Respondent's mere occupation of the ancestral home for decades as a descendent of the family does not prove adverse possession hostile to the true owner of the land in suit. Further, when considering the relationship between the parties, it appears that the Respondent being the brother of Rosalin, who was the original owner of the said property (Rosalin thereafter transferred title to the Appellant by Deed No.5103 and Respondent is the uncle of the Appellant) is in "permissive possession" which is not denial of the title of the sister and is not adverse to her.

> de Silva Vs Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (1978) 80 NLR 292 at p.295-296 per Sharvananda J.
> "The principle of law is well established that a person who bases his title in adverse possession must show by clear and unequivocal evidence that his possession was hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of his title to the property claimed. In order to constitute adverse possession, the possession must be in denial of the title of the true owner. The acts of the person in possession should be irreconcilable with the rights of the true owner; the person in possession must claim to be so as of right as against the true owner. Where there is no hostility to or denial of the title of the true owner, there can be no adverse possession. In deciding whether the alleged acts of the person constitute adverse possession, regard must be had to the animus of the person doing those acts, and this must be ascertained from the facts and circumstances of each case and the relationship of the parties. Possession which may be presumed to be adverse in the case of a stranger may not attract such a presumption, in the case of persons standing in certain social or legal relationships. The presumption represents the most likely inference that may be drawn in the context of the relationship of the parties. The Court will always attribute possession to a lawful title where that is possible. Where the possession may be either lawful or unlawful, it must be assumed, in the absence of evidence, that the possession is lawful. Thus, where property belonging to the mother is held by the son, the presumption will be that the enjoyment of the son was on behalf of and with the permission of the mother. Such permissive possession is not in denial of the title of the mother and is consequently not adverse to her."

In regard to the Respondent's claim of prescriptive rights, mode of entry of the Respondent's into the subject matter is quite clear. The Respondent has started residing in the said premises as a descendent of the family and with the consent of then owners and his sister (after getting title to lot 5 in plan No.1946/A in the final decree in the District Court Balapitiya NP/3085 of 1979). It is well established legal principal that when a person enters into occupation, he is precluded from setting up title by prescription without establishing a change of character in which he began his occupation and an overt act or something similar indicating the intention to possess adversely to the owner. This principle of law was laid down in the case of Naguda Marikkar Vs Mohammadu (7 NLR 91) and Orloff vs Grebe (10 NLR 183). The Respondent states that Rosalin, the sister moved out when she got married in 1963 and he has been in the occupation in the premises since then. However, it is clear to this court that, a sibling leaving the ancestral home based on the factor of marriage is not at all sufficient proof to establish a change of character in which the Respondent began his occupation and an overt act or something similar indicating the intention of adverse possession.

With the perusal of the factual evidence and case laws pertaining to the present application, it is clear that, the Respondent has been residing in the premises as a mere occupant and a close relative of the Appellant. Law draws a distinction between possession and occupation. Mere occupation of another's property is not by itself construed as "possession" in the eyes of law. For an occupation of another's property to amount to possession in the eyes of law is occupation with the intention of holding the land as the owner. Therefore, the Respondent has not satisfied Court that he in fact had adverse possession in the land in suit.

In Sirajudeen and others Vs. Abbas [1994] 2 Sri L.R 365 at p.371 per G.P.S de Silva CJ,

"..Mr. Kanag-Isvaran for the plaintiff respondent relevantly cited the following passage from Walter Pereira's Laws of Ceylon, 2nd Edition, page 396. "As regards the mode of proof of prescriptive possession, mere general statements of witnesses that the plaintiff possessed the land in dispute for a number of years exceeding the prescriptive period are not evidence of the uninterrupted and adverse possession necessary to support a title by prescription. It is necessary that the witnesses should speak to specific facts, and the question of possession has to be decided thereupon by court."

In Hassan Vs. Romanishamy 66 C.L.W 112, it was held that;

"Mere statements of a witness, "I possessed the land" or "we possessed the land" and "I planted plantain bushes and also vegetable", are not sufficient to entitle him to a decree under Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, nor is the fact of payment of rates by itself proof of possession for the purpose of this section"

When considering whether the High Court of Civil Appeal failed to consider that once paper title became undisputed that the right to possess is presumed, it is clear to this court that as per the legal principles laid down by a range of case law jurisprudence, the Appellant's possession was presumed on proving his paper title. Consequently, the burden was cast on the Respondent to prove that by virtue of an adverse possession that the Respondent had obtained a title adverse to and independent of the paper title of the Appellant. However, when examining all the factual and legal evidence in the present application, it is quite clear that the Respondent has failed to prove his adverse possession hostile to the Appellant. Therefore, the Respondent's mere long possession and cultivation of Appellant's property has no legal validity upon claiming Prescriptive rights.

Further, the learned High Court judge's conclusion that, when the Learned District Court Judge decided that Respondent was not there as a licensee, that itself prove his adverse possession is questionable. As discussed earlier, when deciding one's Prescriptive rights against another's paper title the court must be aware of the distinction between 'Occupation' and 'Possession'. Mere occupation of a premises for a long time does not establish a true possession. Occupation with the intention of holding the property as owner is considered as true possession. In regarding to the present application, it is obvious that, the Respondent living in his ancestral home as a descendent of the family, with the consent of his sister for over 70 years does not make him the true owner of the property, but a 'Permissive Possessor'. Thus, the Respondent is not entitled to claim possessory rights against the Appellant.

In my view in the present application, there is a significant absence in clear and specific evidence on such acts of possession as would entitle the Respondent to a decree in favour in terms of Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. The Learned district Judge has very clearly held in his judgement that mere long occupation and cultivation of the land does not establish Prescriptive title to the land in suit.

I answer the questions of law as follows;

1) Yes
2) Yes
3) Yes

I allow the Appeal and set aside the judgement of the High Court and affirm the Judgement of the District Court. The Appellant is entitled for costs of this court as well the courts below.

S. THURAIRAJA, PC, J.

This is an appeal arising from a judgment of the Provincial High Court of the Western Province holden in Colombo (High Court), delivered in an appeal from an order of the Labour Tribunal of Colombo.

It is pertinent to consider the facts of this matter since this court has to decide on the concept of proportionality, by weighing the incidents with the punishment imposed by the Respondent on the Appellant, namely that of termination of employment. In the circumstances, I would like to narrate facts which are as follows:

The Applicant-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Appellant) was an employee of the Respondent- Respondent- Respondent company (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Respondent") namely, Aitken Spence Travels Ltd, as a Senior Executive. The main business of the Respondent was the sale of Air Tickets and serving its customers regarding reservation of flights etc.

Appellant commenced his employment on a casual basis as a Trainee Executive with the Respondent with effect from the 1st March 1990. Sometime thereafter, the Appellant was confirmed in the said appointment as a Junior Executive with effect from 31st August 1991. By letter dated 1st April 1996, the Appellant was promoted to the position of a Senior Executive and was functioning as a Supervisor/ Senior Executive of the Ticketing Division of the Respondent company at all times material to this appeal. On the afternoon of 27th June 2000, the Appellant during the course of his functions, submitted a voucher and associated documentation without entering necessary details in a book named "Exchange Order Book". These documents were submitted to his superior officer- Manager Operations and Sales namely, Shane De Silva for his approval. Since the said 'Exchange Order Book' was not properly filled and submitted along with the voucher by the Appellant, said Shane De Silva had returned it to the Appellant with a note stating that, it has not been properly filled.

Over this, there had been a telephone conversation between the Appellant and the said Shane De Silva which the Appellant had originated, and Shane De Silva stated that in the said conversation between the two of them he was abused with the use of obscene language by the Appellant. Through an Inter- Office Memorandum dated 28th June 2000 addressed to a Director of the Respondent Company (marked as 'R1') Shane De Silva has promptly lodged a complaint regarding the incident with the senior management of the Respondent company. On this incident, explanations were called from the Appellant on 30th June 2000 (marked as 'R2'). As per 'R2', when the Sales Manager commented that the Appellant's excuse for incompletion of documents not acceptable and gave instructions on how it should be carried out the Appellant replied "I will do what I want to, I was also waiting to see what you can do" and had also asserted (referring to Shane De Silva) "Bloody well do what you want".

Following Shane De Silva's complaint, Directors of the Respondent company namely Keerthi Jayaweera and Ganeshan summoned the Appellant for a meeting and made inquiries, regarding the incident which occurred the previous day. The Appellant had provided an explanation and had asked the two Directors to take the matter up with the Board of Directors.

Appellant submitted his explanation on 01st July 2000 (marked as 'A2' and 'R6'). In his explanation the Appellant stated that, during the said telephone conversation in issue, Sales Manager Shane De Silva threatened him and it resulted in his (Appellant's) harsh retaliation without abuse. The Appellant categorically stated that he did use obscene language on the Sales Manager. Appellant's explanations were found unsatisfactory by the Respondent company and hence disciplinary action was initiated by a charge sheet being issued containing the following charges/ allegations:

1. Defying instructions given by the Manager.
2. Abusing the Manager and using obscene language over the telephone.
3. Belittling the authority of the Manager and the directors of the company, which tantamount to insubordination.

On 16.08.2000, a domestic inquiry into the incident was conducted by Mrs. S.N. Fernando who was also a senior officer of the Respondent company. At the said inquiry, Mr. Shane De Silva and Mr. Ganeshan gave evidence on behalf of the Respondent company, and the Appellant and two witnesses Miss. Natasha Happawana and Mr. Gayan Ondaatjie gave evidence on behalf of the Appellant. Following the conduct of the disciplinary inquiry, the Appellant had been found 'guilty' and thereafter, the Appellant's services were terminated by letter dated 03.11.2000. It states inter-alia as follows:

"Having carefully considered the evidence led at the aforesaid inquiry, we find that you have conducted yourself in an objectionable manner as set out in our show cause letter, and in the process undermined and belittled the authority and the position of the Manager to whom you report. After careful consideration, therefore it has been decided to terminate your services with immediate effect".

Thereby, the Appellant's services at the Respondent company were terminated. The Appellant filed an application bearing No. LT 1/117/01 before the Labour Tribunal- Colombo challenging the said termination on the basis that it was unjustified, and prayed for compensation in lieu of reinstatement. The Respondent filed answer denying the several averments in the application but admitting to the termination of employment. Evidence of two witnesses namely, Shane De Silva, (page 18-68 of the Brief) and Keerthi Jayaweera (page 69-120 of the Brief) and documents marked "R1 to R11" were led on behalf of the Respondent company (page 231-259 of the Brief). Only the Applicant gave evidence on his behalf (Pages 122-183) leading in evidence documents marked "A1-A5" (pages 125-134 of the Brief).

At the conclusion of the inquiry, on 11th March 2008 the President of the Labour Tribunal held that the termination of the Appellant's services was justified and dismissed the Appellant's application.

The Appellant not being satisfied by the order of the Labour Tribunal appealed against the order to the High Court on the following grounds:

(i) The order of the Labour Tribunal is wrongful and unlawful and is against the weight of evidence led at the trial and is unjust and inequitable in all the circumstance of the case.

(ii) The order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal was seriously flawed in that he based his decisions on the evidence recorded by another judge and consequently lacked all the obvious advantages of observing the demeanor and other indications of veracity whilst the witnesses were giving evidence.

(iii) The order of the Labour Tribunal was seriously flawed in that the President failed and neglected to consider the faulty procedure adopted by the Respondent- Respondent company that eventuated in the termination of the service of the Applicant- Appellant.

(iv) The order of the Labour Tribunal was in error when the President of the Labour Tribunal cast a burden of proof to establish his innocence on the Applicant- Appellant, thus resulting in an order which is not "just and equitable" as mandated by the Industrial Disputes Act.

The High Court after hearing both parties upheld the order of the President of the Labour Tribunal and dismissed the said appeal on 31/07/2009. The Applicant being aggrieved by the judgment of the High Court filed an Application seeking Special Leave to Appeal to this Court and prayed that the said judgment of the High Court be set aside. Leave was granted on the following questions of law in paragraph 37 (a), (b) (c) and (d) raised by the Appellant in his petition dated 10/09/2009.

a) Did the High Court fall into error by failing to consider that the Labour Tribunal has misdirected itself in the evaluation of the evidence?

b) Did the High Court err by failing to consider the total insufficiency of evidence and in particular independent evidence to establish that the Petitioner in fact had abused his superior officer with obscene language?

c) In any event did the High Court misdirect itself by failing to consider that there was no witness whatsoever to the telephone conversation in issue where it is unilaterally alleged that the Petitioner used obscene language to his superior?

d) Without prejudice to the foregoing, in any event did the High Court err by completely failing to consider the clear principles as supported by the judicial dicta, that suitable compensation can be granted in a fit case even if termination is deemed to be justified and/or if there is actual loss of confidence, without reviving the contract of employment?

I will first consider the questions of law contained in paragraph 37 (a), (b) and (c). In this appeal the main contention of the learned Counsel for the Appellant was that there were contradictions and/or omissions regarding the exact abusive words the Appellant had allegedly used over the telephone in the conversation, the Appellant had with Shane De Silva. Therefore, without any independent evidence to corroborate Shane De Silva's evidence regarding this telephone conversation and the abusive words, the Labour Tribunal and the High Court have misdirected themselves in evaluating the evidence regarding the above incident had thereafter accepting the evidence of Shane De Silva and coming to an incorrect conclusion that the Appellant had used abusive language on Shane De Silva during the telephone conversation.

It was argued on behalf of the Appellant that the words used by the Appellant do not amount to such abusive words that warrant a dismissal from employment. The Appellant throughout maintained that he did not use abusive language on the Manager, Shane De Silva. But to a question from the Labour Tribunal the Appellant admitted that he spoke "firmly" to the Manager. The Appellant stated that, the reason for the firm language which he used is a result of sequence of events that happened between the Manager and the Appellant. The Appellant contended that, he sent a set of vouchers, which were sufficiently complete as per the practice and norm of the Respondent company. Then, Shane De Silva sent it back because the vouchers were incomplete. Then, the Appellant completed it and sent it back to the Manager with an explanation as to why it was incomplete on the first occasion. In spite of all that, Manager Shane De Silva, sent a second note, and that the Appellant had merely conveyed that it was an unnecessary note (using the phrase "bullshit").

In any event it was submitted on behalf of the Appellant that, assuming without conceding that the impugned sentences were uttered by the Appellant, there are no words that qualify as being "obscene". The position taken up on behalf of the Appellant was that the phrase "bullshit" is a phrase used in common parlance in today's context which is generally used to describe anything or a situation which has no or very little substance value. Learned Counsel for the Appellant urged that, the courts cannot simply overlook the common use of this phrase. In my view, the seriousness of these words should be considered, in the context they were used and on whom they were used. These words were used by a subordinate officer on his supervising officer during an official conversation in writing when the supervising officer pointed out a shortcoming of the subordinate officer. Furthermore, during the telephone conversation the Appellant had used the words "I will do what I want to" and "Bloody well do what you want".

Therefore, the fact that the Appellant in fact used words amounting to "obscene language" is apparent, and that the utterance of those words reflect insubordination is also evident.

It is next to be seen whether imposition of the punishment of dismissal from service is proportionate to the gravity of the imputed conduct. When obscene language is used by a subordinate against a superior, it must be understood in the environment in which that person is situated and the circumstances surrounding the event that led to the use of abusive language. No strait-jacket formula could be evolved in adjudging whether the obscene language in the given circumstances would warrant dismissal from service. Each case has to be considered on its own merits when the nature of the abusive language used by the appellant was not conclusively stated.

As per the evidence given by Shane De Silva before the Labour Tribunal, the Appellant phoned him and said "you are a bloody fool, what this fool note that you are sending to me". In response Shane De Silva had replied to the Appellant stating that the Appellant should follow his instructions and he would not tolerate the Appellant's behaviour, and that he will take necessary action if the Appellant does not adhere to his instructions. In reply to that, the Appellant stated that, "I will do what I want to do. I was also waiting to see what you can do".

In answering the Labour Tribunal, Shane De Silva stated that there have been such previous incidents as well, and he had advised him (the Appellant) personally, but had been of no avail. He further stated that, the Appellant has an aggressive nature and keeps shouting at others. Although the Appellant had been warned verbally, there had been no improvement in his attitude and behaviour. The complaint made by Shane De Silva stated that he has no personal animosity towards the Appellant. Keerthi Jayaweera too confirmed the said stance taken by Shane De Silva and stated that, the Appellant's service was very unsatisfactory in spite of many advices and warnings. In proof of that assertion, the performance appraisal of 1999 was submitted to the Labour Tribunal, inwhich the director who appraised the Appellant had stated that, "Employee has been spoken to in February, March 1999, October 1999, December 1999 and again today (27/01/1990). Have clearly explained what is required of him. If no improvement in 2-3 months, further action has to be taken". "At present does not meet the standard of a supervisor".

The Appellant takes up the position that he was not "instructed" by the manager but "orally threatened". He admits advise from the manager and categorically states that he did not "belittle the authority" of any manager. It is the Appellant's position that he was treated unfairly and in spite of being threatened by the manager, the director also merely accepted the version of the manager without giving the Appellant a fair hearing. At that stage the Appellant had no choice but to seek the protection of the authority above that of the Director.

Appellant submits that, both the manager and the director seem to have already made up their minds against the Appellant, he would like the matter to be referred to the Board of Directors being his appointing authority; he wanted natural justice; to be heard fairly. Further, learned Counsel for the Appellant submitted that Manager, Shane De Silva's evidence submitted before Labour Tribunal and statements given at the domestic inquiry were contradictory in nature.

It is the Appellant's position that Manager Shane De Silva spoke of the alleged "obscene language" for the first time when he gave evidence before the domestic inquiry on 16/08/2000, and that in his first complaint made on 30/06/2000 (letter marked "A1") the Manager does not state the words that were used nor classify the words used as "obscene". Additionally, it was submitted on behalf of the Appellant that there is no evidence to demonstrate that the management was made aware of the words that were used. Therefore, as to how the management issued the show cause letter "A1" in which use of "obscene language" is alleged, is not explained in evidence. In this regard, it is pertinent to note that in his complaint to Director Sasi Ganeshan submitted within 24 hours of the incident, Shane De Silva has submitted "what happened after that was absolute insubordination and disrespect to me as his superior. His verbal abuse and aggression with regard to this subject, and even the nerve he had to challenge my action (if I did take any), was the last straw in my hat". It would thus be seen that in his complaint to the senior management, Shane De Silva has captured the very essence of what happened. Unlike when making a complaint to the Police, in an internal complaint to the senior management one cannot reasonably expect a verbatim reproduction of what exactly happened.

As per the marked document "A1" which the Appellant relied upon, a letter was sent by the Director of the Respondent company to the Appellant calling for explanation regarding the alleged incident which occurred on 27/06/2000. As per paragraph 2 of the letter, Director alleged as follows;

"You had then kept back with you the incomplete vouchers and submitted another voucher for his signature. You had written back to the manager that the voucher which he had signed was in order. You had also given the excuse that the vouchers cannot be completed as the book was not available, half of the time in one place. When the manager commented that the excuse was not acceptable, you had telephoned him and used obscene words on him."

Further, by this letter marked "A1", the Director alleged that, the Appellant was orally warned on several previous occasions for defying the instructions given by the Manager, for poor productivity of the Appellant's job and repetitive actions done by the Appellant of such conduct demonstrated that he was not amenable to discipline.

After the alleged incident, as stated earlier Manager Shane De Silva sent a complaint explaining the situation which occurred between him and the Appellant. This letter was marked as "R1" and this was the first complaint done by the Manager Shane De Silva. In the said complaint, Shane De Silva also states the following:

"Sir, as I have very clearly stated above, this is not the first time that I had to face Mr. Joachim's attitude which I now believe should be addressed very severely. I do not think that he would change though we have given him ample chances. In light of the progress of the OTSD and its junior staff, Mr. Joachim could very easily be a stumbling block who I am not prepared to have in my team or work with anymore.

……Mr. Joachim has proved beyond any shadow of doubt that he is not willing to support and respect his superiors".

It is thus evident that quite independent of the incident that occurred on 27th June 1990, the Appellant's conduct had been questionable over a period of time. That he displayed unsatisfactory conduct is so very evident. At this stage, as per the decided authorities, I am of the view that the allegations of this nature (misconduct in employment settings) should be proved on a balance of probability and not beyond reasonable doubt as in criminal cases as held in the Caledonian (Ceylon) Tea and Rubber Estates Ltd vs. S. Hillman [79 NLR 421]. Chief Justice Sharvananda has held as follows:

> "An allegation of misconduct in proceedings before a Labour Tribunal has to be decided on a balance of probabilities, and it is not necessary to call for proof beyond reasonable doubt as in a criminal case. In the present case, however, the fact that the tribunal adopted the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt has not led to a miscarriage of justice as, even on the application of the standard of a balance of probabilities the case against the applicant had not been established."

As evident by the judgment of the Labour Tribunal as well as the High Court, it is clear that the Labour Tribunal and the High Court have considered the question of law of credibility, acceptability and sufficiency of the evidence of Shane De Silva and the circumstances under which the telephone conversation in issue had taken place, have come to a conclusion that the Appellant had abused and used obscene language on Shane De Silva in the said telephone conversation. It is evident that there has been a proper evaluation of the evidence of the contents of this telephone conversation and the associated incident by the Labour Tribunal as well as the High Court. The order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal states as follows;

> "ඉල්ලුම්කරු විශමාචාර ලෙස කටයුතු කර ඇති ලෙසට වගඋත්තරකරු විසින් ශකඡතා සමබරතාව මත ඔප්පු කර ඇති ලෙසට සැලකිය හැකිය. ඒ අනුව එකී චෝදනා මත වගඋත්තරකරු විසින් ඉල්ලුම්කරුගේ සේවය අවසන් කර තිබීම සාධාරණ සහ යුක්ති සහගත ලෙසට මම නිගමනය කරමි. ඒ අනුව ඉල්ලුම්කරු මෙම ඉල්ලුම් පතුයෙන් ඉල්ලා ඇති සහන සඳහා හිමිකම් නොමැති ලෙසට සලකා ඉල්ලුම්කරුට හිමි වෙනත් වඡවස්ථාපිත හිමිකම් වෙතොත් ඒවාට යටත්ව මෙම ඉල්ලුම් පතුය නිෂ්ප්‍රභා කරමින් නියෝගය නිකුත් කරමි."

"It can be considered that the Respondent has proved on a balance of probability that the applicant has engaged in misconduct. Accordingly, I am of the opinion that terminating the service of the Applicant by the Respondent is fair and justifiable based on the aforesaid allegations. Accordingly, having considered that the applicant is not entitled to the reliefs prayed by this application, I do hereby dismiss this application subject to statutory entitlements due to the Applicant, if any."

The Learned High Court Judge has quite rightly identified that he has to consider the order of the Labour Tribunal and decide whether termination of services is proportionate to the charges proven in evidence. At one point of his order, he says,

"එම නිසා එම අවස්ථාවේදී ශේන් ද සිල්වා අභියාවක හට බැන වැදීම මත අභියාවකටද තදින් කතා කිරීමට සිදු වූ බවට දෙන ලද සාක්ෂිය විය හැකි භාවයේ පරීක්ෂණයට ලක් කරන විටකදී වුවද පිලිගත නොහැක. අභියාවක වෙනුවෙන් ශේන් ද සිල්වා විසින් සමාගම වෙත ඉදිරිපත් කරන ලද සන්දේශයෙහි අසභ්‍ය වචන පිලිබඳව සඳහනක් නොමැති බවට කරුනු දක්වන ලද නමුත්, එම වචන ඒ ආකාරයෙන් ම සටහන් කර නොමැති වුවද, අසභ්‍ය වචනයෙන් බැන වැදුන බවට ඔහු පැමිනිලි කර ඇත... උගත් කම්කරු විනිශ්චය සභාපතිතුමා විසින් ශේන් ද සිල්වා විසින් දෙන ලද සාක්ෂිය වැඩිබර සකච්ඡා පරීක්ෂණය අනුව පිලිගත හැකි අතර, ඔහු විසින් දක්වා ඇති කරුණු අනුව එම නිගමනය වෙනස් කිරීමට ප්‍රබල කරුණු අභියාවක විසින් තහවුරු කර නොමැති හෙයින්, මෙම අභියාචනය ගාස්තු රහිතව නිශ්ප්‍රභා කරමි."

"Therefore, the evidence which says that the appellant had to speak severely as Shane De Siva had scolded the Appellant on that occasion cannot be accepted even when it subjected to the test of probability. Even though it is stated that nothing is mentioned regarding the indecent words in the letter presented to the company by Shane De Silva, he has complained regarding the scolding using indecent words although the said words are not noted in the same manner... the evidence given by Shane De Silva before the learned President of the Labour Tribunal can be accepted on the balance of probability and as per the facts mentioned by him, the Appellant has not confirmed vital facts to change that decision, and therefore this appeal is dismissed without costs."

This is substantiated by many cases as in, The Electricity Equipment & Construction Company Vs Cooray [1962, 63 NLR 164], and Reckit & Colman Ltd. Vs Peris [1979, 2 NLR 229], it was held that, as a general rule, refusal to obey reasonable orders justifies dismissal from service. Accordingly, it is obvious that the President of the Labour Tribunal has considered the question of proportionality in the first instance. In Ceylon Estate Staffs' Union vs. The Superintendent, Meddecombra Estate, Watagoda [73 NLR 297] Justice Weeramantry held that,

"In the making of a just and equitable order, one must consider not only the interest of the employees but also the interest of the employers and the wider interest of the country, for the object of social legislation is to have not only contended employees but also contented employers".

As highlighted by me above, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had identified the question of proportionality. It is in that light that he has considered the cumulative effect of the Appellant's conduct at the work place and after consideration of the factors before him; he had determined finally that termination of the Appellant is just and reasonable.

Relying on the leading treatise of "Law of Dismissal" (3rd edition) by S.R. De Silva, at page 74, he states that, abuse of a superior officer justifies termination, even though the employee has legitimate grounds of protest. In the case of Lanka Synthetic Fibre Company Ltd. vs. Perera [1998 3 SLR 191] the Supreme Court held that the use of abusive language towards superiors amounted to serious misconduct. The Court cited with approval the following paragraph of B. R. Ghaiye in "Misconduct in Employment" (page 560);

> "The use of abusive language towards a superior is a misconduct because it creates such a situation in which it becomes impossible to maintain proper discipline in an establishment . . . Whatever may be the reason of the use of abusive words, it is a recognised misconduct and unlike use of defamatory words it has no exceptions. It means that the use of abusive language will be misconduct irrespective of the circumstances in which it has been uttered."

In view of the foregoing, I find that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had considered all evidence submitted before it with reference to the charges against the Appellant. The High Court has reconsidered the assessment of evidence. The High Court Judge had evaluated the evidence judicially. In any event, the Supreme Court will not arrive at findings contrary to the findings of the original court or tribunal before which the evidence was presented, unless the findings are perverse. In this instance I see no pervasive conclusion either by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal or by the Learned High Court Judge.

Hence, I answer the questions of law contained in paragraphs 37 (a), (b) and (c) in the negative.

I will then consider the 37 (d) question of law that, suitable compensation can be granted in a fit case even if termination is deemed to be justified and/or if there is actual loss of confidence without reviving the contract of employment.

In the present case the complaint against the Appellant is that he used obscene words and abused a manager of the company who was his immediate superior. In K.B.D. Somawathie vs. Baksons Textiles Industries Ltd [79 NLR 204] Justice Rajaratnam held that,

"I entirely agree with learned counsel for the respondent employer that compensation awarded either in lieu of reinstatement or under S. 33(1)(d) should be compensation for some loss suffered by the employee at the hands of the employer. Mr. advocate however placed his argument very high and submitted that it should be a loss as a result of some wrong done to the workman and in this case as there was no wrong done by the employer, there could be no order for compensation. In my view an order for compensation could be made even where the workman loses her job because the employer in the interest of his business quite rightly had to discontinue her services, but the cause for termination was not such a serious act of misconduct. "

It is settled law that no compensation can be awarded in a situation where a justified termination occurred in the consequence of a wrongful act or misconduct of the employee, particularly when termination of employment is found to have been a proportionate and lawful response to the impugned conduct of the employee. Compensation will only be awarded to compensate a person for a loss he sustained and in my view such loss must be the result of a wrongful act on the part of the employer. In this instance, I do not find any wrongful conduct on the proof of the Respondent company being the employer. I am in agreement with the Labour Tribunal and the High Court regarding the finding that the termination of the services of the Appellant is justified. Hence, the question of reinstatement does not arise and therefore the question of compensation in lieu of reinstatement does not arise. Hence, I answer the question of law contained in paragraph 37(d) in the negative.

I have considered all the submissions made on behalf of the Appellant as well as those on behalf the Respondent in this case. I answer the question of law raised at the commencement of this judgment in the negative to the effect that both the Labour Tribunal and the High Court have considered the evidence and arrived at a correct and lawful conclusion regarding the disputed facts and regarding the doctrine of proportionality in entering this decision to terminate the services of the Appellant by the Respondent company. Accordingly, I hold that there are no grounds to disturb the judgment of the High Court. In these circumstances, the Appeal is dismissed without costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGE OF THE SUPREME COURT

YASANTHA KODAGODA, PC, J.

Justice S. Thurairaja, PC, was pleased to share his draft judgment with me. I have considered it. I respectfully express my agreement with Justice Thurairaja's judgment regarding (i) the summation and analysis of the evidence led before the Labour Tribunal on behalf of both parties, (ii) the conclusions reached regarding the truth pertaining to the impugned conduct of the Appellant, and (iii) the conclusions reached pertaining to the first three questions of law in respect of which the Supreme Court has granted Leave to Appeal. I am also in agreement with his Lordship's view that, this Appeal should be dismissed.

However, in view of my respectful disagreement with Justice Thurairaja's finding pertaining to the fourth question of law in respect of which this Court had granted leave, I wish to present my own consideration of the fourth question of law and pronounce my findings thereon.

As Justice S. Thurairaja, has dealt with the evidence of this matter at length, assessment of credibility of witnesses and conclusions reached with regard to disputed areas of evidence, and since I totally agree with the analysis of the evidence and conclusions reached, I will in this judgment refrain from engaging in a detailed analysis of the evidence. In any event, doing so would not be necessary, as an Appeal to the High Court established in terms of Article 154P of the Constitution from an order pronounced by a Labour Tribunal, should in terms of section 31C(3) of the Industrial Disputes Act be only on a question of law. Similarly, an appeal from the ensuing judgment of the High Court to the Supreme Court in terms of section 31DD of the Industrial Disputes Act, should also only be with leave first obtained and only on a question of law.

Nevertheless, I shall very briefly set out and refer to the factual position pertaining to the incident in issue which resulted in the termination of the employment of the Appellant, and I do so, as the facts pertaining to the incident have some relevance to my finding.

The Respondent company is a private sector organisation colloquially referred to as a 'travel agency'. At the time in issue, the Respondent company was engaged in serving its customers by making on their behalf flight reservations and selling airline flight tickets to them. The Appellant having joined the Respondent company in March 1990 as a Trainee Executive, had received two promotions, and since April 1996 was serving as a 'Senior Executive'. In his position as 'Senior Executive 'he functioned inter-alia as a 'supervisor 'of several subordinate employees. His immediate superior was one Shane de Silva, who was Manager Sales & Operations. The incident in issue relates to a verbal and written interaction between the Appellant and Shane de Silva.

On 27th June 2000, while making arrangements pertaining to a flight reservation of a particular customer, the Appellant submitted to Shane de Silva the relevant documentation for ratification of the proposed transaction by him. The Appellant did so without submitting a particular book referred to as the Exchange Orders/Vouchers Book. In terms of relevant rules of procedure of the Respondent company, it was necessary to perfect and submit the Exchange Orders/Vouchers Book along with the other documentation. According to the Appellant, the reason for not complying with this requirement was that, at the time in issue, the relevant book was not available with the Appellant, as the company had only one such book, and several other personnel of the company were also using it. In response, without ratifying the particular transaction, Shane de Silva returned the documentation back to the Appellant, with a comment written on a post it slip, stating that he was not ratifying the documentation, as the documentation was incomplete sans perfected entries in the Exchange Orders/Vouchers Book. In his note, he instructed the Appellant to duly perfect the book and submit. Instead of complying with the directive of Shane de Silva, the Appellant had presented the same documentation to another senior officer named Rajanan Dharmasena and obtained ratification of the proposed transaction, and proceeded with the matter. The Appellant had thereafter responded in writing to Shane de Silva, stating that the documentation was complete, as he had got space reserved in the book to enter details of the relevant voucher through the officer who had the Exchange Orders/Vouchers Book at the relevant time. The Appellant had subsequently submitted the duly completed book along with the documents ratified by Rajanan Dharmasena to Shane de Silva. In response, Shane de Silva once again has written to the Appellant stating that the reasons given by the Appellant were 'unacceptable'.

Afterwards, the Appellant phoned Shane de Silva relating to the preceding sequence of events, and had stated that, he (the Appellant) "would do what I want to" and had also told Shane de Silva that he can "bloody well do what you want."

Following this telephone conversation, the following day, Shane de Silva complained to the senior management regarding what he referred to as "absolute insubordination and disrespect" to him as the Appellant's superior. On receiving the complaint, Directors of the Respondent company Sasi Ganeshan and Keerthi Jayaweera called up the Appellant and inquired from him about the incident. The Appellant denied having abused Shane de Silva, and told the two Directors to "take the matter up with the Board of Management".

By letter dated 30th June 2000, the Appellant was asked to show cause as to why he should not be dealt with for having (a) defied instructions given by the manager Shane de Silva, (b) abused manager Shane de Silva by using obscene words, and (c) belittling the authority of Manager Shane de Silva and the Directors, which tantamount to insubordination. By letter dated 1st July 2000, the Appellant responded denying the allegations against him. Following an internal determination that the explanation provided by the Appellant was unacceptable, disciplinary action was taken against him through a domestic disciplinary inquiry conducted by a senior officer of the Respondent company. The charges levelled against the Appellant were based on the same allegations contained in the afore-stated show cause letter. Following the conduct of the disciplinary inquiry, the officer who conducted the inquiry arrived at a finding that the Appellant was guilty of all three charges. Consequently, the Respondent company dismissed the Appellant, thereby terminating his services.

It is this termination of employment that led to the Appellant filing an Application in the Labour Tribunal of Colombo complaining of unjustifiable termination of employment. He prayed for compensation in lieu of reinstatement. He did not pray for reinstatement. After inquiry, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal concluded that, the termination of the employment of the Appellant was justified. He therefore, dismissed the Application. Against that order, the Appellant appealed to the High Court of the Western Province holden in Colombo. Following the hearing of the appeal, the learned Judge of the High Court dismissed the Appeal. This Appeal of the Appellant is against that judgment of the High Court of the Western Province.

As stated at the commencement of this judgment, following a consideration of an Application seeking Special Leave to Appeal, this Court was pleased to grant leave to appeal in respect of four questions of law. Justice S. Thurairaja has extensively dealt with the first three questions of law, and as stated above, I respectfully agree with his reasoning and findings thereon.

The Fourth question in respect of which leave has been granted, is as follows:

Without prejudice to the foregoing, in any event, did the High Court err by completely failing to consider the clear principles as supported by the judicial dicta, that suitable compensation can be granted in a fit case even if termination is deemed to be justified and/or if there is actual loss of confidence, without reviving the contract of employment?"

The Respondents did not present their case on the footing that the services of the Appellant were terminated on the premise that the Respondent had lost confidence in the Appellant as a result of his conduct. The position of the Respondent company was that the services of the Appellant were terminated since he had engaged in misconduct and was found guilty at the domestic disciplinary inquiry pertaining to the allegation that he had engaged in misconduct. Furthermore, in his Application to the Labour Tribunal, the Appellant did not seek re-instatement. Therefore, the issue of re-activating the employment contract by ordering reinstatement, did not arise for consideration by the Labour Tribunal.

Therefore, in the factual context of this Appeal, the afore-stated question of law can be re-framed in the following manner:

Even if the termination of employment of the Appellant is justified, did the Labour Tribunal / High Court err in not having considered and ordered the payment of compensation to the Appellant?

Thus, we arrive at a crucial matter in the adjudication of industrial disputes in terms of the Industrial Disputes Act. What needs to be considered and determined is twofold.

> Firstly, with regard to an application presented under the Industrial Disputes Act by a workman or by a trade union on behalf of a workman, alleging termination of services by an employer, following the conduct of an inquiry and hearing of evidence, if the Labour Tribunal determines that the termination of services of the workman had been both lawful and justifiable, would it be lawful for the Labour Tribunal, to order the employer to pay compensation to the workman?
> Secondly, if the answer to the afore-stated question is in the affirmative, in the instant matter, did the Labour Tribunal err in not considering whether the Appellant should be awarded compensation?

The positions taken up with regards to these two questions of law by the learned counsel for the Appellant and the learned President's Counsel for the Respondent is diametrically opposed.

Before dealing directly with the afore-stated questions of law in which leave has been granted, it is necessary to commence the consideration of this matter by making certain preliminary observations. Doing so is necessary in view of certain submissions made by learned Counsel during the hearing, relating to certain associated matters.

As stated in its preamble, the Industrial Disputes Act No. 43 of 1950 (hereinafter referred to 'the Act'), has been enacted to provide for the prevention, investigation and settlement of industrial disputes. Without leaving it at the hands of the common law on employer – employee relations including the common law principles on the law of contract, to deal with industrial disputes, the Industrial Disputes Act and parallel legislation relating to employer - employee relations (generally referred to as labour legislation') were enacted approximately half a century ago, inter-alia, to remedy social injustice peculiar to a vulnerable and particularly weak and at times an oppressed group of persons, namely employees (workers). Thus, the interpretation and application of provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act must necessarily be founded upon the mischief sought to have been remedied by the enactment of such labour legislation, such as the Industrial Disputes Act. The intention of Parliament must necessarily reign. As observed by Justice A.R.B. Amerasinghe in S.B. Perera v. Standard Chartered Bank and Others [(1995) 1 Sri L.R. 73], The meaning of the legislation is clear. However, it would be of interest, perhaps, to remind ourselves of the background, for the words of a statute, if there is any doubt, as to their meaning, should be understood in the sense in which they best harmonise with the subject of the enactment and the object which the legislature has in view."

Indeed, the duty of Labour Tribunals and Courts should be to necessarily recognise and give effect to the provisions and the spirit of labour legislation. However, the Court cannot be blind to certain changes that have taken place since the enactment of such legislation, which are inherent to employer – employee relations and the evolution of certain environmental conditions relating to employer – employee relations, employment environments, the rights and entitlements conferred by law on workers and those being now enjoyed by workmen and by trade unions, and to national and public interests, which includes the status of the national economy. In that regard, it is necessary to bear in mind the national need to generate employment opportunities. The judiciary must in public interest desist from contributing towards creating certain conditions that may inhibit generation of employment, occasioned by causes that may dissuade investors and entrepreneurs from commencing and engaging in business activities that would generate employment opportunities. It is the duty of Judges to give effect to the intention of Parliament and to legislative policy embedded in legislation. However, when exercising judicial discretion, Judges must bear in mind ground realities such as those referred to above, and apply the law in a manner that meets the recognition of individual rights and entitlements and the needs of the public at large, and the country as a whole. That is how just and equitable orders should be arrived at.

The Industrial Disputes Act in its original form contemplated the use of multiple mechanisms for the settlement of industrial disputes, namely settlement, negotiation including collective bargaining, conciliation, and arbitration. The original Act did not provide for Labour Tribunals as a means of settling industrial disputes. These tribunals were established in terms of Part IVA of the Act, which was introduced by Industrial Disputes (Amendment) Act, No. 62 of 1957 for the settlement of industrial disputes through adjudication and by arbitration. Thus, it should be noted that the purpose for which Labour Tribunals were established and its mandate is understandably not properly reflected in the preamble to the Act. Ending over a decade of confusion, with the promulgation of the 1st Republican Constitution of 1972, it has not become settled law that, Labour Tribunals are conferred with judicial power, when exercising adjudicatory functions. Accordingly, Presidents of Labour Tribunals are recognised as judicial officers. This position is reflected in Article 111M read with Articles 4(c), 105(1)(c), 105(2) and 111H(1)(b) of the 2nd Republican Constitution (Constitution of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka, 1978). Labour Tribunals are recognised as judicial tribunals, primarily because of the nature of the mandate conferred on Labour Tribunals, that being inter-alia to adjudicate industrial / labour disputes presented to it in terms of section 31B(1) of the Act, due to the powers and functions of Labour Tribunals and the consequential legal impact of orders made by Labour Tribunals. Additionally, industrial disputes may be referred to Labour Tribunals for settlement through arbitration. In such instances, Labour Tribunals do not exercise judicial functions. Adjudication of industrial disputes by Labour Tribunals is facilitated by litigation initiated by the presentation of an application to the tribunal.

Section 31B of the Act entitles a workman or a trade union acting on behalf of a workman who is a member of such trade union, to present an application to a Labour Tribunal seeking relief or redress in respect of several matters. In terms of section 31B(1)(a) of the Act, one such matter is the termination of the workman's services by his employer.

When an application is made to a Labour Tribunal in terms of section 31B(1) of the Act, section 31C(1) of the Act confers a statutory duty on such Labour Tribunal to make all such inquiries into that application and hear all such evidence as the tribunal may consider necessary". The use of the term inquiries" in section 31C(1) of the Act postulates a deviation from the traditional adversarial approach and trial procedure which are cornerstones of Sri Lanka's contemporary justice system applied by courts of first instance. The adversarial system of justice is founded upon the common law tradition, which is the primary source of the procedural laws of Sri Lanka relating to the conduct of civil and criminal trials in courts of first instance. In view of this difference, the President of the tribunal is not supposed to adopt a passive approach, by presiding over the proceedings like an umpire, and merely receive and consider evidence presented by the adversarial parties (in this instance the workman or his trade union on the one part and the employer on the other part). In terms of section 31C (1) of the Act, in his quest to determine the truth pertaining to the dispute placed before the Labour Tribunal for adjudication, the President of the tribunal is required in terms of the Industrial Disputes Act to make all such inquiries into the application and hear all such evidence as the tribunal may consider necessary. Therefore, the President of the tribunal is required to adopt an inquisitorial approach and participate actively by conducting the inquiry and receiving of evidence. Unlike when proceedings are conducted in consonance with the adversarial trial system, the adoption of the inquisitorial system confers on the President of the Labour Tribunal an enhanced duty to search for the truth by making necessary inquiries and receive evidence, enabling him to arrive at a correct determination on whether or not the termination of services was lawful and justifiable, and pronounce a just and equitable order. There is support to this view in Merril J. Fernando & Co. v. Deimon Singho [(1988) 2 Sri L.R. 242] where Justice Wijetunga has held that there is a significant difference between the duties and powers of a Labour Tribunal under section 31C(1) of the Industrial Disputes Act as amended by section 6 of Act No. 74 of 1962 and the original provisions as contained in Act No. 62 of 1957. Whereas the original section required the Tribunal to hear such evidence as may be tendered ... , the amended section makes it the duty of the Tribunal to hear all such evidence as the tribunal may consider necessary". The latter indeed is a very salutary provision which the Tribunal should not have lost sight of."

It is pertinent to note that, section 31C (2) of the Act provides that a Labour Tribunal conducting an inquiry shall observe the procedure prescribed under section 31A, in respect of the conduct of proceedings before the tribunal. Section 31A(2)(b) provides that, the Minister in charge of the subject of Justice may, with the concurrence of the Minister in charge of the subject of Labour, make regulations, prescribing inter-alia the procedure to be observed by a Labour Tribunal in any proceedings before Labour Tribunals under Part IVA of the Act. The promulgation of such regulations and adherence to them would ensure formal recognition of the inquisitorial approach to be adopted by Labour Tribunals, and uniformity of proceedings amongst different Labour Tribunals. It is a matter of regret that, regulations have not been made to-date in terms of section 31A(2)(b). The Industrial Disputes (Hearing and Determination of Proceedings) (Special Provisions) Act, No. 13 of 2003, also does not contain the procedures to be followed upon the commencement of proceedings under Part IVA of the Industrial Disputes Act.

Following the completion of the inquiry, according to section 31C (1), the President may make such order as may appear to the tribunal to be just and equitable. When making such order, section 31B (4) of the Act provides that, the tribunal may grant any relief or redress to the workman, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any contract of service between such workman and his employer. Section 33(1)(d) of the Act provides that, the order which the tribunal shall make, may include an order for the payment of compensation to the workman by the employer. When an application is presented to a Labour Tribunal by a workman / trade union alleging termination of services by the employer, and the ensuing inquiry is concluded, the tribunal must, prior to deciding whether any relief or redress to the workman should be ordered, decide on two preliminary issues. That is, whether in fact the services of the workman had been terminated by the employer, and if so, whether such termination is lawful and justifiable. It is also necessary for the President of the tribunal to determine the circumstances attendant to the termination of employment. It is only thereafter, that the President should determine whether any relief or redress should be granted to the workman. By the use of the term may in section 31B (4), it is evident that the legislature has conferred discretionary authority on the President of the Labour Tribunal to grant relief or redress to the applicant (workman). The President may make an order granting relief or redress to the workman, only if he deems the grant of such relief or redress to be appropriate in the circumstances of the respective case. In any event, according to section 31C (1) of the Act, the order which the President makes should necessarily be just and equitable. Thus, if the President determines that in view of the facts and circumstances of the case, relief or redress should be granted, the Act requires such order to be just and equitable. Therefore, a workman who presents an application to a Labour Tribunal in terms of section 31B(1) complaining of the termination of his services, is not ipse dixit entitled for relief or redress.

If following inquiry, the tribunal determines that the termination of services had been either unlawful or unjustifiable, then undoubtedly the President may make a just and equitable order and thereby confer on the workman relief and redress. His powers with regard to the determination of the nature of such relief and redress are circumscribed by section 33(1) of the Act. The relief and redress that he orders may include reinstatement with back wages, reinstatement without back wages, compensation in lieu of reinstatement, compensation, arrears of salary, or an alternative order of reinstatement or compensation.

The issue that arises for consideration in this case, relates to the converse situation. If the President determines that the termination of services was both lawful and justifiable, notwithstanding such determination (which determination would obviously be favourable to the interests of the employer), can the President order relief and redress in the nature of compensation? Would doing so be 'just and equitable'? It is necessary to be conscious of the fact that, the Industrial Disputes Act does not impose a condition or limitation on a President of a Labour Tribunal to the effect that, relief or redress may be granted to a workman only if the President determines that the termination of employment was either unlawful or unjustifiable. Thus, ex-facie it appears that, a President of a Labour Tribunal has not been specifically and statutorily precluded from ordering relief and redress even in instances where he has determined that the termination of services had been both lawful and justifiable. Thus, the jurisdiction conferred on Labour Tribunals to order just and equitable relief and redress is quite wide. Provided however, the President of the tribunal must ensure that, if he chooses to award relief and redress, such relief or redress must necessarily be just and equitable having regard to the evidence and circumstances of the case, including circumstances attended with the termination of employment and antecedents. In arriving at this determination, the President should exercise judicial discretion. He must through the order he makes, deliver justice based on equitable grounds. It is important to bear in mind that justice must be delivered not only to the workman. Particularly in instances where the termination of services is determined by the President to have been both lawful and justifiable, the final order that he makes must ensure that justice is delivered to the employer as well.

In Manager, Nakiadeniya Group v. The Lanka Estate Workers Union [11CLW 52] Justice de Kretser has observed that in the making of a just and equitable order one must consider not only the interest of the employees, but also the interest of the employers". As aptly put by Justice Weeramantry in Ceylon Estate Staffs Union v. The Superintendent, Meddecombra Estate, Watagoda [73 NLR 278], in making of a just and equitable order, one must consider not only the interest of the employees, but also the interest of the employers and the wider interests of the country, for the object of social legislation is to have not only contended employees, but also contended employers".

Further, as observed by Justice Rajaratnam in K.B.D. Somawathie v. Baksons Textile Industries Ltd. [79(1) NLR 204], the order that a President of a Labour Tribunal is required to make should be just and equitable in relation to both the employer and employee and the employer-employee relationship, following due consideration to the discipline and resources of the employer, and should even be in the interests of the public.

In my view, it is necessary to keep in mind the view expressed by Justice T.S. Fernando in Richard Pieris & Co. Ltd. v. D.J. Wijesiriwardena [62 NLR 233] that in regard to the power of the Tribunal to make such order as may appear to it to be just and equitable there is a point in Counsel s submission that, justice and equity can themselves be measured not according to the urgings of a kind heart, but only within the framework of the law".

On the specific issue of whether the Labour Tribunal / High Court should have considered the payment of compensation to the Appellant by the Respondent, in the backdrop of the President having determined that the termination of employment was both lawful and justifiable, I wish to first refer to the submissions made by learned Counsel for the Appellant and the Respondent.

The submission of Mr. Fernando, the learned Counsel for the Appellant, was that the High Court had fallen into substantial error by failing to even consider, in terms of the required law, the entitlement of the appellant to compensation as an alternative relief, in all the circumstances of the case and in accordance with the governing principles of justice and equity. In his written submissions, learned counsel for the Appellant submitted that in terms of the established rules of law, it is vital that the entitlement of a person to compensation is considered, separate from the issue of termination. He submitted that the when considering the entitlement of an employee to compensation, the tribunal is under a duty to take into account the length of service, the service record and other attendant circumstances. He further submitted that, in terms of the established principles of law, a workman is entitled to compensation even in instances where the termination of his services are considered to be lawful and just. In support of his submission,

Mr. Fernando drew the attention of Court to Somawathie v. Baksons Textile Industries [79(1) NLR 204].

In response, Mr. Weerasuriya, the learned President's Counsel for the Respondent submitted that, there is no authority or judicial dicta which supports the position that, compensation can be considered even in a fit case if the termination is justified. In his written submissions, Mr. Weerasuriya submitted that, there are judicial authorities which support the contention that, where the services of a person in the nature of personal secretary, domestic servant, etc. are terminated on the ground that the employer had lost faith or confidence in the workman, if the termination is unjustified, compensation in lieu of reinstatement can be considered. He submitted that the services of the Applicant did not fall into such category, and hence, he was not entitled for compensation. He also submitted that in any event, as the issue of reinstatement does not arise, compensation in lieu of reinstatement also does not arise.

I propose to now examine relevant pronouncements contained in certain judgments delivered in the past.

In Shell Company of Ceylon Ltd. v. D.C. Pathirana [64 NLR 71] Justice Abeyesundere has observed that, there is no limit imposed by the legislature in regard to the power to grant relief under section 31B of the Industrial Disputes Act that would in effect prevent the grant of relief in instances where the termination of services is both lawful and justified. The only limit placed on the power to grant relief under section 31B is that contained in sub-section (1) of section 31C of the Industrial Disputes Act, which requires the order granting relief to be just and equitable. Justice Abeyesundere has further held that, the power to grant relief under section 31B is wide in view of the fact that sub-section (4) of that section enables relief to be granted notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any contract of service between the workman and the employer. The views expressed by Justice Abeysundere have been cited with approval in the majority judgment of the Privy Council in The United Engineering Workers Union v. K.W. Devanayagam (President, Eastern Province Agricultural Co-operative Union Ltd.) [69 NLR 289]. The Privy Council has observed that the absence of the term 'wrongful 'in section 31B (1) of the Act is significant. The section does not provide that, a workman can apply for relief in respect of 'wrongful termination 'of his services. It merely says that a workman can apply in respect of 'termination 'of his services.

The Highland Tea Company of Ceylon Ltd. and Another v. The National Union of Workers [70 NLR 161] is a case where the services of an estate labourer named Iruthayam to whom Estate Labour (Indian) Ordinance applied had been terminated. The President of the Labour Tribunal had held that, the dismissal was wrongful, but in view of certain circumstances associated with her husband's services also having been terminated, did not order reinstatement. Instead, taking into consideration the period of service of Iruthayam, directed the employer to pay compensation. In appeal against that order to the Supreme Court, Justice Alles held that, the termination of services of Iruthayam was not wrongful or unlawful. However, he held that the President of the Labour Tribunal had not erred in law in making the order for compensation, as it was an order that he was entitled to make in terms of the Industrial Disputes Act.

In Wataraka Multi-Purpose Co-operative Society Ltd. v. W. Wickremachandra [70 NLR 239] Justice Victor Tennakoon dealing with a matter where the services of a workman (respondent) had been terminated due to inefficiency, has held that, if the respondent was in fact inefficient and there was neither illegality nor any finding that termination of services for inefficiency was an unfair labour practice, it is an error of law to award any compensation under section 33(1)(d) of the Act.

The Group Superintendent, Dalma Group Halgranoya and Others v. The Ceylon Estates Staffs Union [73 NLR 574], is a case where the President of the Labour Tribunal had held that the termination of the services of the workman had been made for bona fide reasons and that the termination of employment was lawful. Nevertheless, the President concluded that he thinks that some consideration was due to the applicant in view of his enforced retirement, and made order that the respondent pay ex gratia a sum of Rs. 4,000 as compensation for loss of career of the workman. In appeal, Justice Alles held that, compensation is payable only when a wrong has been done. In the case in issue, no wrong had been done. In the circumstances, it is not possible to state that the termination of the workman's services was either unlawful or contrary to accepted standards of fair labour practice. In the circumstances, the Supreme Court set aside the order made by the President of the Labour Tribunal for the payment of compensation.

In K.B.D. Somawathie v. Baksons Textile Industries Ltd. [79(1) NLR 204], Justice Rajaratnam held that, even following the President of the Labour Tribunal concluding that the termination of services was both lawful and justifiable, as he is required to make a just and equitable order, he should address his mind to whether the applicant (workman) deserves redress or relief, and if so, what should such relief of redress be. He has observed that, in some cases, the failure of the President to direct his mind specifically to these questions may not lead to a legally defective order, but in other cases and in his Lordship's view in that particular case, such failure had led to a legal defective order.

The Caledonian (Ceylon) Tea and Rubber Estates Ltd. v. J.S. Hillman [79(1) NLR 421] is a case decided by two Justices of the then Supreme Court, unlike the judgments cited above, which were heard and decided by a single Justice of the then Supreme Court, excluding the case of The United Engineering Workers Union v. K.W. Devanayagam which was heard by five justices of the Privy Council and decided by a majority of the said justices. In this case, then Chief Justice S. Sharvananda observed that, the proposition 'if the termination is held to have been justified, an order for reinstatement would not arise and no order for compensation can be made 'will hold good if the termination is justified on the ground of misconduct of the employee and such termination is by way of disciplinary measure. If it was the employee's conduct that had induced the termination, he cannot, in justice and equity have a just claim to compensation for loss of employment. Justice Sharvananda proceeded to hold that, on the other hand, where an employee is in no way responsible for the termination of his services and the termination was consequent on the lawful exercise of the proprietary rights of the employer, as in the case where the employer closes down the business and that renders the employment of the worker purposeless, the afore-stated proposition is not tenable. Where the termination has been caused solely by the act and will of the employer in the exercise of his managerial discretion to organize and arrange his business, a tribunal, exercising just and equitable jurisdiction, uninhibited by limitations of law, but actuated by postulates of justice, is well entitled to grant relief in the nature of compensation to the discharged employee, even though, in law, the employer was justified in discharging him from service on account of surplusage.

In Premadasa Rodrigo v. Ceylon Petroleum Corporation [(1991) 2 Sri L.R. 382] decided by three judges of the present Supreme Court, Justice Dr. A.R.B. Amerasinghe has cited with approval Justice Sharvananda's view in Caledonian (Ceylon) Tea and Rubber Estates Ltd. v. J.S. Hillman (supra) that, if the employee s conduct had influenced the termination, he cannot in justice and equity have a just claim to compensation for loss of career, as he has only himself to blame for the predicament in which he finds himself".

In Saleem v. Hatton National Bank Ltd. [(1994) 3 Sri L.R. 409] an appeal heard by three Justices of the present Supreme Court, Justice K.M.M.B. Kulatunga having considered a string of judgments in which different opinions on this matter have been expressed, has held that, a Labour Tribunal may order compensation upon a termination of services even when such termination is justified and correct; and no distinction as to whether such termination was upon a closure of an industry or for misconduct as a disciplinary measure can be imposed in considering a claim for compensation. He has further held that, whether the appellant deserves compensation, is dependent upon the special circumstances which would make it just and equitable to order such relief.

In The Board of Governors for Zahira College v. Naina Mahamed alias Naina Lebbe [(1999) 2 Sri L.R. 309] the then Chief Justice G.P.S. De Silva, considered whether a school teacher whose services had been terminated by the employer on grounds of indiscipline and or misconduct, and the Labour Tribunal having dismissed his application on the ground that the charge of misconduct had been proved, was entitled to compensation. Referring to the Judgment of Justice Kulatunga in Saleem v. Hatton National Bank Ltd. (in the backdrop of His Lordship the former Chief Justice having been on the bench that decided that case), held that, in awarding compensation, Kulatunga, J. took into account the special and exceptional circumstances of the case".

In Kotagala Plantations Ltd. and Another v. Ceylon Planters Society [(2010) 2 Sri L.R. 299], Chief Justice J.A.N. De Silva has held that, if the conduct of the workman had induced the termination, he cannot in justice and equity claim compensation for loss of career. On the other hand, if the termination was not within the control of a workman but solely by the act and will of an employer, a Tribunal exercising just and equitable jurisdiction is well entitled to grant relief in the nature of compensation to a discharged workman. Former Chief Justice has further held that, no workman should be permitted to suffer for no fault of his, but an unwanted, dishonest, troublesome workman may be discharged without compensation for loss of his employment. The workman in those circumstances has to blame himself for the unpleasant and embarrassing situation in which he finds himself.

The Superintendent, Belmont Tea Factory and Namunukula Plantations PLC v. Ceylon Estate Staffs Union [SC Appeal 59/2016 – SC Minutes of 31.03.2017) decided by Anil Gooneratne, J. is a case where the services of a Factory Tea Officer had been terminated on grounds of having been responsible for a shortage of 791kg of tea which was in his custody. The position of the employer was that, the employee had been negligent, he had not acted in a manner as required by an experienced officer and the incident had resulted in a substantial loss to the employer. This had resulted in loss of confidence. The Labour Tribunal, the High Court and the Supreme Court held that in the circumstances, the termination of services was justified. However, Justice Goonaratne affirmed the view that, nevertheless, compensation should be awarded. However, he directed a reduction of the amount of compensation ordered by the High Court.

In Ranjith Palipana v. Etisalat Lanka (Pvt.) Ltd. (SC Appeal 161/2012, SC Minutes of 20th June 2017) Justice Eva Wanasundera having cited some of the judgments that I have enumerated above, held that, the law in regard to termination of services is very much in favour of the employee, and a workman can be granted relief even though the termination of services of an employee is held to be justified".

The above enumeration points to divergent views having been expressed by the Supreme Court on this matter.

On a careful consideration of the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act, general principles of law, the spirit of the law relating to labour legislation, and the principles of law contained in the judgments referred to above, I hold that, in instances where a workman has presented an application to a Labour Tribunal in terms of section 31B(1)(a) of the Industrial Disputes Act in respect of the termination of his services by his employer, and following an inquiry into such application and hearing of all such evidence as the tribunal may consider necessary in terms of section 31C of the Act, if the President of the tribunal has concluded that (a) termination of services had in fact taken place, and that (b) such termination of services was lawful and justified, the President of the Labour Tribunal should be guided by the following principles:

1. The law confers wide discretion on the President of the tribunal to make any just and equitable order, which is circumscribed by section 33(1) of the Act, and such discretion shall be exercised by the President of the Labour Tribunal judicially.

2. The power conferred by law on the labour tribunal requires the President of the tribunal to make a just and equitable order, and he is not precluded by law from making an order for the payment of compensation to the applicant, if the circumstances justify the making of such an order.

3. An applicant (workman) whose services the Labour Tribunal has determined has been terminated lawfully and for justifiable reasons, cannot as of right claim compensation.

4. The ordering of compensation to the applicant should be considered favourably, if attendant circumstances justifies the making of an order for compensation, and particularly when termination of services though determined by the tribunal to have been both lawful and justifiable, was not occasioned due to any wrongdoing / misconduct committed by the applicant (employee).

5. In situations where termination of services was due to misconduct by the applicant / workman and such termination is held by the tribunal to have been just and equitable, an order for compensation would be just and equitable, only if there are special or exceptional circumstances, that warrant the making of such an order for payment of compensation.

6. When the order of the President of the tribunal reflects the absence of consideration by him whether or not compensation should be ordered, whether such failure on the part of the President of the tribunal would make such order legally defective, has to be determined based on the individual facts and circumstances of such case.

In view of the foregoing, I answer the first question of law formulated by me above, in the following manner:

With regard to an application presented under the Industrial Disputes Act by a workman or by a trade union on behalf of a workman alleging termination of services by an employer, following the conduct of an inquiry and hearing of evidence, even if the Labour Tribunal determines that the termination of services of the workman had been both lawful and justifiable, it would nevertheless be lawful and necessary for the Labour Tribunal to order the employer to pay compensation to the workman, provided such order is compatible with the principles referred to in paragraphs (i) to (iv), above.

I will now answer the second question of law formulated by me, on whether in the instant case, the Labour Tribunal and the High Court had erred in not considering whether the Appellant should be awarded compensation.

A consideration of both the order delivered by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal and the Judgment delivered by the learned Judge of the High Court reveals that, both of them have not considered the question of compensation following the determination that the termination of services of the Appellant was lawful and justifiable. A consideration of both the said order and the judgment gives the impression that, both the learned President of the Labour Tribunal and the learned High Court Judge had entertained the erroneous view that, once the tribunal determines that the termination of services is lawful and justifiable, it is not necessary in law to consider whether the tribunal should proceed to make an order awarding just and equitable relief or redress to the applicant, in the nature of compensation.

Thus, I conclude that both the Labour Tribunal and the High Court had erred in not considering whether any compensation should be awarded to the Appellant.

In view of the foregoing, I answer both questions of law formulated by me in place of the fourth question of law in respect of which the leave to appeal had been granted, in favour of the Appellant.

However, on a consideration of (a) the nature of the proven misconduct on the part of the Appellant including the fact that he had infringed rules of procedure of the company, (b) the Appellant having showed insubordination towards his superior officer, (c) the Appellant having uttered obscene words at his superior officer, (d) the Appellant having conducted himself in a manner unbecoming of a supervising officer, (e) the Appellant's conduct being a bad example to his subordinate officers, and (f) the Appellant's unsatisfactory work performance during the period immediately preceding his termination of employment, and the absence of any exceptional or special circumstances that warrant an order being made for the payment of compensation to the Applicant - Appellant, I am of the view that, no order for compensation should have been made by the Labour Tribunal in favour of the Appellant. The making of such an order for payment of compensation, in the circumstances of this case, would not have been just and equitable. Therefore, I hold that the final order made by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal and the Judgment delivered by the learned High Court Judge should not be interfered with.

In this regard, I wish to observe that, Justice Sisira de Abrew has held in Peoples' Bank v. Lanka Banku Sevaka Sangamaya [SC Appeal 106/2012, SC Minutes of 9th June 2015] that, when compensation is awarded in favour of a person whose services have been terminated by the employer on the ground of misconduct stemming from dishonesty, and the Labour Tribunal has correctly held that the termination of services had been just and equitable, the award of compensation may be construed as an encouragement to commit misconduct. Thus, Justice Sisira de Abrew has expressed the view that, compensation should not be awarded.

Further, I respectfully note that, Chief Justice Sarath N. Silva in Alexander v. Gnanam and Others [(2002) 1 Sri L.R. 274] has held that, when the conduct of an employee is contemptuous and falls short of expected standards, an order for the payment of compensation is not warranted.

Finally, I wish to observe that Labour Tribunals and Courts should pay due regard to the justifiable policy and expectation of most employers, that workplace discipline and integrity of employees are of fundamental importance to any organisation, and hence should be strictly enforced. Those who act in breach of such standards and in infringement of core values of an organisation which are not only lawful and in the interests of the organisation, but also in public and national interests as well, have to necessarily be dealt with firmly and in terms of fair disciplinary procedures. Doing so in my view is extremely important towards maintaining efficiency and productivity of organisations, as well as in the best interests of organisational integrity and sustainable development, which are prerequisites of national economic development.

In the totality of the afore-stated circumstances, I respectfully agree with Justice Thurairaja's finding that this Appeal should be dismissed.

Accordingly, I dismiss this Appeal. In the circumstances of this matter, I make no order as regards costs.

Murdu N.B. Fernando, PC. J.,

The 5th Defendant-Appellant-Petitioner/Appellant ("the 5th defendant/appellant") came before this Court, being aggrieved by the judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of the Western Province, holden in Gampaha ("the High Court") dated 17th February, 2012.

By the said judgement, the High Court affirmed the judgement of the District Court of Gampaha dated 03rd March, 2008 permitting the partitioning of the corpus and dismissed the appeal of the 5th defendant.

To state the facts of this appeal in brief, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent ("the plaintiff") filed action in the District Court, to partition a land called and known as Beligahawatta in an extent of about 3 acres in the following manner:

The land	-	plaintiff	- 24/32 shares
	-	4th defendant	- 15 perches
	-	7th defendant	- 8/32 shares less 15 perches
The house	-	plaintiff	- 5/9 shares
	-	1st,2nd,3rd and 7th defendants	- 1/9 share each

The plaintiff pleaded that he was a minor, represented by his next friend, his mother and that the aforesaid rights and interests to the land and the house standing thereon, devolved on him primarily from his father Awin Wickramasinghe, by virtue of a deed bearing No 975 dated 15-05-1995 (P6).

The plaintiff also pleaded that the said Awin Wickramasinghe (plaintiff's predecessor in title) obtained title to the said land and the tiled house on the said land from Sediris Appuhamy, Awin Wickramasinghe's father, on two deeds executed in 1964 and in the manner described therein. The plaintiff named the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 7th defendants as persons who have rights and interests in the said land and house as aforesaid.

The plaintiff further pleaded that the 5th defendant and the 6th defendant- respondent-respondent (spouse of 5th defendant) were made parties to this action, as the said two defendants who had no interest in the corpus were in illegal possession of the house standing on the said land.

The 5th defendant in the statement of claim filed before the District Court, took up the position that he was in lawful occupation, having obtained title to the house standing on the corpus, from the very same Awin Wickramasinghe by deed bearing No 8527 dated 27-11-1995 (P8) and moved for his rights under the said deed. However, in the said statement of claim the 5th defendant did not specify the exact interest he is said to have acquired on the house, upon the said deed bearing No. 8527.

In an amended statement of claim filed, the 5th defendant changed his assertion to prescriptive rights to the house and the appurtenant land and moved for dismissal of the plaint upon the basis that the corpus was not properly depicted in the preliminary plan and was not identified. The 5th defendant by taking up the new position abandoned his claim to the house based upon the deed bearing No 8527 dated 27-11-1995 (P8).

At the trial the 5th defendant raised issues only with regard to the identity of the land to be partitioned. Hence, the 5th defendant did not pursue the claim of prescriptive possession upon the house and the appurtenant land, the new ground taken up in its amended statement of claim.

The District Court permitted the partitioning of the land and the house standing thereon and gave judgement, upon analyzing the evidence led before court and on being satisfied of the identity of the corpus and the chain of title of the parties to the land and the house to be partitioned.

The claim of the 5th defendant was also dismissed by the district judge. The judgement referred to the many contentions taken up by the 5th defendant, especially the admission to court that he is a trespasser and walked into an abandoned house. Thus, the district judge cast doubts with regard to the evidence given by the 5th defendant, considered him as an untrustworthy witness and rejected the evidence and dismissed the 5th defendant's case.

Being aggrieved by the said judgement, the 5th defendant appealed to the High Court. The High Court dismissed the appeal and upheld the judgement of the District Court.

The 5th defendant thereafter, invoked the jurisdiction of this Court and obtained Leave to Appeal, on three Questions of Law referred to in paragraph 12 (v), (vi) and (vii) of the Petition.

The said Questions of Law are as follows: -

(v) Whether the predecessor in title of the petitioner was left with any rights (1/9) in the house and soil covered by the said house, after transferring his rights by deed bearing No 975 dated 15-05-1995?

(vi) Whether the said (1/9) rights to the house and the soil covered by the said house was transferred to the petitioner by deed bearing No 8527 dated 27-11-1995?

(vii) Whether the Honorable Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal have erred in law as well as in facts in their failure to take into consideration of the fact that the trial judge had failed to investigate title of the parties which had resulted a miscarriage of justice?

From the foregoing Questions of Law, it is observed that the 5th defendant is traversing new terrain. He has abandoned the claim on prescription and the challenge to the identity of the corpus, the basis or the grounds taken up in the amended statement of claim filed and at the trial court to move for dismissal of the partition action and is now presenting an entirely a new case.

The 5th defendant pivots this appeal upon deed bearing No 8527 dated 27-11-1995 (P8), an assertion which he did not rely upon or pursue before the trial court [though in his initial statement of claim, a passing reference was made to the said deed]. Having abandoned the claim on prescriptive rights to the house the 5th defendant is founding this appeal on the rights he claims from Awin Wickramasinghe. However, it is observed that the 5th defendant is only claiming 1/9th right to the house and the soil covered by the said house. Thus, the 5th defendant has abandoned his initial claim to the entire house and the appurtenant land of the house and confines it only to 1/9th right to the house and the soil covered by the said house, an entirely a new ground not adverted to before the District Court.

This Court has time and again held, that a party cannot be permitted to present in appeal a case different from that presented before the trial court, where matters of fact are involved which were not in issue at the trial.

In Candappa nee Bastian v. Ponnambalampillai [1993] 1 Sri LR 184 at page 189 this Court observed,

> "…….. the position taken up in appeal for the first time was not in accord with the case as presented by the defendant in the District Court. It is well to bear in mind the provisions of explanation 2 to Section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code. It reads thus,

> The case enunciated must reasonably accord with the party's pleading. i.e. plaint or answer, as the case may be and no party can be allowed to make at the trial a case materially different from that which he has placed on record and which his opponent is prepared to meet.
> A fortiori, a party cannot be permitted to present in appeal a case different from the case presented before the trial court, except in accordance with the principles laid down by the House of Lords in Tasmania [(1890) 15 App. Cases 233] and followed by Dias, J. in Setha v. Weerakoon 49 NLR 225 at pages 228 and 229..." (emphasis added)

Thus, G.P.S. de Silva, J., (as he then was) in the afore said case emphatically observed, that in appeal an entirely a new case cannot be presented. I fully concur with the above observations.

Hence, in my view the 5th defendant who abandoned his initial challenge to the partition action based upon the deed bearing No 8527 dated 27-11-1995 (P8) and relied upon a new ground, a new arena, i.e., of prescriptive rights to the entire house and to the appurtenant land therein, should not be allowed or permitted to resurrect the deed P8 and present a new case before this Court.

Moreover, it is observed that the 5th defendant not only resurrected the deed P8, but varied its stance and contention, from the right to use and posses the entire house and the appurtenant land therein, to one of 1/9th share of the house and the soil covered by the said house, as enunciated in the questions of law raised before this Court.

The instant appeal in my view, should be evaluated by this Court, not upon the new contention put forward by the 5th defendant but on the evidence presented before the District Court, in order to ascertain whether the trial judge misdirected himself when investigating title. This Court should also consider whether the analysis of the trial judge pertaining to investigation of title resulted in a miscarriage of justice as averred to by the 5th defendant or whether the trial judge has full filled his obligations and arrived at a correct decision, as contemplated by Section 25 (1) of the Partition Law No 21 of 1977 as amended ("the Partition Act").

> "…. the court shall examine the title of each party and shall hear and receive evidence in support thereof and shall try and determine all questions of law and fact arising in that action in regard to the right, share or interest of each party to, of, or in the land to which the action relates…"

The aforesaid provision and the similar provisions in the earlier enactments i.e. the Partition Act of 1951 and the Partition Ordinance, have been analyzed by this Court, extensively and the duty of the trial court to examine and investigate title, has been time and again greatly emphasized [see Juliana Hamine v. Don Thomas (1957) 59 NLR 546; Cooray v. Wijesuriya (1958) 62 NLR 158; Jane Nona v. Dingiri Mahathmaya (1968) 74 NLR 105]

Nevertheless, our Courts have also held that in investigating title, balance of probability is the standard of proof and no higher level of proof is required than in any other civil suit. The ratio of the decisions of the Appellate Courts have been, that a trial court could investigate title, only within the limits of pleadings, admissions and issues and evidence led before court and the courts should not go on a voyage of discovery [see Cynthia de Alwis v. Marjorie de Alwis and others (1997) 3 Sri LR 113; Karunaratne v. Sirimalie (1951) 53 NLR 444; Thilagaratnam v. Athpunathan and others (1996) 2 Sri LR 66].

Thus, an appeal pertaining to a partition matter ought to be considered upon the four corners of the afore mentioned legal principles to ascertain whether justice has been meted out or whether a miscarriage of justice has taken place viz-a-viz the parties to the partition application.

However, I do not have to delve into the aforesaid legal provisions or the change of stance, of the 5th defendant or even the legality or validity of presenting a materially different case in this appeal, in view of the three questions of law already formulated. Hence, I would limit the scope of this appeal to the questions of law raised before this Court and would proceed to answer the said questions only.

The 1st question of law refers to the deed bearing No 975 dated 15-05-1995 (P6). This is the deed by which the plaintiff claims rights and interests to the land and the house standing thereon, from his father Awin Wickramasinghe.

The 5th defendant did not challenge the said deed or the rights and interests emanating from the said deed, which devolved on the plaintiff in respect of the land to be partitioned. The 5th defendant's challenge or grievance is only in respect of the house standing on the said land**.

In a nutshell, the 5th defendant's contention is that while the land to be partitioned was transferred to the plaintiff by Awin Wickramasinghe i.e., plaintiff's father and predecessor in title, that 1/9th share of the house standing on the said land was retained by Awin Wickramasinghe and transferred to the 5th defendant thereafter.

The 5th defendant also contends that the said transfer was by a deed executed subsequent to the afore said deed (P6) referred to in the 1st question of law, i.e., the deed bearing No 8527 dated 27-11-1995 (P8) by which 1/9th right to the house and the soil covered by the said house was conveyed to the 5th defendant. The 2nd question of law raised before this Court pertains to the said assertion.

The 3rd question of law posed to this Court is the correctness of the district judge's finding, with regard to investigation of title in the first instance and whether on the evidence led and the material before court, a miscarriage of justice has taken place viz-a-viz the 5th defendant.

In order to answer the aforesaid questions and to ascertain whether a miscarriage of justice has taken place or not, the primary factor to be examined, in my view is what exactly was transferred by Awin Wickramasinghe by the said two deeds P6 and P8. Undoubtedly, it is his rights and interests pertaining to the land and the house standing thereon.

Thus, I would examine Awin Wickramasinghe's title to the land and the house standing thereon in the first instance.

In the year 1964, Awin Wickramasinghe received title to the said land and the house standing thereon, from his father Sediris Appuhamy on two deeds bearing No 3926(P1) and 3927(P2). Whilst Awin Wickramasinghe, obtained title to 3/4th share of the corpus from the deed bearing No 3926 (P1), Awin Wickramasinghe together with his nine siblings received title to the house standing thereon, from their father, upon deed bearing No.3927 (P2). This factor is further evidenced by the schedule to the two deeds. It is observed that the schedule to deed bearing No. 3926 (P1) denotes, that it is the 'land only excluding the tiled house' that was transferred to Awin Wickramasinghe whereas the schedule to deed bearing No 3927 (P2) refers to the 'tiled house' being bestowed upon Awin Wickramasinghe and his nine siblings by their father, Sediris Appuhamy.

Thus, it is apparent that the house standing upon the corpus is co-owned by the nine siblings, each sibling being entitled to 1/9th share, including Awin Wickramasinghe.

Therefore, I see no ambiguity with regard to the undivided property that devolved on Awin Wickramasinghe in 1964, upon the two deeds, viz 3/4th share of the land and 1/9th share of the tiled house standing on the said land.

As discussed earlier, the 5th defendant does not dispute the plaintiff's predecessors title to the land and to the house nor dispute plaintiff's right to the land either.

The matter in issue or the bone of contention in this appeal, is the rights and interests pertaining to the house standing on the said land. Did Awin Wickrmasinghe transfer his interests in the house together with the land to the plaintiff by deed P6 or did he retain the rights to the house and transfer it subsequently by deed P8 to the 5th defendant?

In other words, was it only the land excluding the house that was gifted to the plaintiff by Awin Wickrmasinghe by P6 or was it the land together with the house that was gifted to the plaintiff by P6?

To ascertain an answer to the said question, I wish to look at the 'property' transferred, as referred to in the deeds and defined and reflected more fully in the schedule of the deeds, marked and produced before the trial court.

In the year 1985, [10 years prior to the execution of the deed bearing No 975 dated 15-05-1995 (P6)] Awin Wickrmasinghe transferred the very same corpus to the plaintiff, subject to his life interest, by a deed bearing No 5978 (P4) dated 12-02-1985. The schedule to the said deed (P4) refers to the property transferred to the plaintiff, as 'the land and everything standing thereon'. Thus, it is observed, in 1985, Awin Wickrmasinghe transferred his rights and interests in the land and everything standing thereon, to the plaintiff, subject to his life interest. i.e., 3/4th share of the land and 1/9th share of the titled house standing thereon.

Awin Wickrmasinghe revoked the above referred deed of gift (P4) on 15-05-1995 [by deed of revocation bearing No 974 (P5)] and executed the aforesaid (P6) deed bearing No 975 on the same date i.e. 15-05-1995 and transferred the property free of all encumberances to the plaintiff. In the deed of revocation (P5) and in the new deed of gift (P6) executed on 15-05-1995, the schedules refer to the property transferred as 'land, plantation and everything standing thereon.'

Thus, it is observed, Awin Wickrmasinghe who in the year 1985 transferred the land and everything standing thereon to the plaintiff, subject to his life interest, transferred the very same property i.e. the land, plantation and everything standing thereon to the plaintiff, (without holding on to his life interest) free of all encumbrances in the year 1995.

Hence, the contention of the plaintiff before this Court was that in 1995 Awin Wickrmasinghe transferred the land together with the plantation and everything standing thereon which included his rights and interests to the house standing on the said land to the plaintiff vide deed (P6) bearing No 975 executed on 15-05-1995. Conversely, the contention of the 5th defendant was that only the land was transferred to the plaintiff by the said deed P6 and not the rights to the house standing thereon.

Upon a plain reading of the deed P6, it is very clear and in my view there is no ambiguity that when Awin Wickramasinghe conveyed his undivided rights and interests to the land, plantation and everything standing thereon to the plaintiff, his intention was to transfer his 1/9th share of the tiled house (standing on the land) together with the 3/4th share of the land, to the plaintiff, his son. Hence, I see merit in the aforesaid assertion of the Counsel for the plaintiff.

The said position is also supported by case law of this Court.

In Kanagasabai v. Mylwaganam (1976) 78 NLR 280 at page 288 Shravananda, J. (as he then was) observed as follows: -

> "Our law does not recognize ownership of a house or building apart from the land on which it stands. The building loses its independent existence and becomes part of the land on which it is constructed. The principle of accession in the case of buildings is embodied in the maxims, 'Omne quad inaedifacatur solo cedet' (All that is built on the soil belongs thereto) and 'Superficies solo cedet' (Things attached to the earth go with the immovable property). Thus, land, in its signification means not only the surface of the ground, but also everything built on it. Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad caelum (He who possesses land possesses also that which is above it). On a conveyance of land, all buildings erected thereon pass with the land, even though there is no specific mention of such buildings in the deed of transfer. Thus, 'land' in our law, includes houses and buildings, and when the legislature employs the term 'land' in any statute, the word is presumed to include 'house and buildings', unless there are words to exclude 'houses and buildings'." (emphasis added)

From the foregoing passage, it could undoubtedly be stated, that on a conveyance of land, all buildings erected thereon pass with the land, unless it is specifically excluded.

As we are very much aware, the general principles governing the interpretation of a deed is that the deed must be considered as a whole and effect given to the intention of the parties. [see Mohammed v. Mohamad 30 NLR 225; Jayasundera v. Wijetilake and others [2006] 3 Sri LR 401].

Hence, it is apparent that the contention of the plaintiff as discussed, is in line with and supported by the ratio of a multitude of cases of this Court as well.

Contrary to the aforesaid contention of the plaintiff, the assertion of the Counsel for the 5th defendant before us, was that by deed bearing No 8527 dated 27-11-1995 (P8) [which was executed subsequent to P6] Awin Wickramasinghe transferred his parental inheritance interests on the house standing on the defined land to the 5th defendant. Thus, I wish to consider the said proposition now.

It is observed that the schedule to the said deed (P8) only refers to Awin Wickramasinghe's parental inheritance rights to the house. It does not refer to 1/9th share of the house being his right and interest to the house, as referred to in the questions of law raised before this Court. Moreover, it does not refer to the house being co-owned [by Awin Wickrmasinghe with nine others] or that Awin Wickramasinghe's parental inheritance rights and interest to the property is only for an undivided portion or 1/9th share of the house standing on the land described therein.

This deed (P8) in the recital and the habendum too, refers to parental inheritance only and does not refer to the manner and mode in which Awin Wickramasinghe received title to the said house. It does not refer to the deed P2 i.e., the 1964 deed bearing No. 3927 by which Awin Wickramasinghe received titled to the said house from his father together with his nine siblings. It does not refer to the property transferred, as a co-owned property (with nine others who are his siblings and who have equal rights to the house) or that his rights and interests in the house is only a 1/9th share, as referred to in the questions of law.

Further, it is observed that the deed P8, by which the 5th defendant claims title from Awin Wickramasinghe is an instrument with bare facts and minimal details, unlike P6 executed six months earlier also by Awin Wickramasinghe from whom the plaintiff claims title. As discussed earlier, P6 specifically refers to the manner and mode in which Awin Wickramasinghe obtained title to the 'land, plantation and everything thereon' whereas P8, is silent of such fact and only refers to 'parental inheritance rights to the house'.

It is also a matter of interest, that by another deed bearing No 7753 dated 07-10-1995 (P3), four of Awin Wickrmasinghe's siblings transferred their rights and interests [i.e.1/9 x 4= 4/9] to the plaintiff. This deed was executed after P6 and prior to P8. In the aforesaid deed (P3), the schedule specifically refers to the property transferred to the plaintiff being 4/9th share of the tiled house standing on the said land.

Hence, it is observed, that consequent to Awin Wickramasinghe transferring his rights to the land, plantation and everything standing thereon (by P6) to the plaintiff, that four of Awin Wickramasinghe's siblings (by P3) transferred their share, i.e., 4/9th rights and interests to the tiled house standing on the defined land to the plaintiff which entitled the plaintiff to 5/9th share of the house, viz 1/9th share upon P6 and 4/9th share upon P3.

As stated earlier, the 5th defendant did not challenge any of the deeds marked in evidence and specifically the deed P6 executed in May 1995 as well as P3 executed in October 1995. His contention before this Court was consequent to P6 and P3, he received title to Awin Wickrmasinghe's parental inheritance to the tiled house standing on the land defined in the said deed by P8 executed in November 1995.

I do not see merit in the said contention of the 5th defendant that he is entitled to 1/9th share of the house in issue in this appeal, for the below mentioned reasons.

Firstly, the deed bearing No 8527 (P8) does not refer to Awin Wickramasinghe's rights and interests pertaining to the house or him being a co-owner of the said house together with his nine siblings or that Awin Wickramasinghe received co-owned title to the said house in the year 1964, from his father Sediris Appuhamy upon deed bearing No 3927 (P2).

Secondly, the said deed P8 only refers to parental inheritance to the tiled house whereas, from the afore discussed facts it is amply clear that Awin Wickramasinghe and his siblings received title to the said house not upon parental inheritance but from their father and that too, upon a notarially executed deed (P2) in the year 1964.

Thirdly, the deeds P4, P5 and P6 [i.e., the initial transfer of the land and the house standing thereon to plaintiff by Awin Wickramasinghe subject to his life interest in 1985, revocation of the said deed in 1995, and the subsequent transfer without any reservations and free of any encumbrances in 1995] amply demonstrate that the rights and title to the land together with the house standing thereon clearly passed to the plaintiff from his predecessor in title on 15th May, 1995.

Hence, when Awin Wickramasinghe is said to have transferred his parental inheritance to the 5th defendant (by P8) in November 1995, Awin Wickramasinghe was not entitled to any rights or interests to the land or the house standing thereon, as he had already denuded himself of all rights and interest to the corpus.

Thus, my considered view is that Awin Wickramasinghe did not convey any right or interest to the 5th defendant by P8 i.e., deed bearing No 8527 executed on 27-11-1995, since on such date, Awin Wickramasinghe did not posses or have any right or interest to the tiled house standing on the corpus in issue in this appeal.

Therefore, upon the material presented before the District Court especially, the deeds P3, P4, P5, P6 and P8, I see no merit in the assertion of the 5th defendant that the trial judge misdirected himself when investigating title of the parties before Court or that a miscarriage of justice took place as contended by the 5th defendant.

Let me now consider this appeal from another perspective i.e., soil rights.

Based upon P8, another contention put forward by the 5th defendant before this Court was in addition to his 1/9th share of the house that he was entitled to his acquired rights to the corpus or in other words his entitlement to soil rights or soil covered by the house standing on the defined land. He relied upon two judgements of this Court to substantiate his argument, namely, the case of Vincent and others v. James and others [1982] 1 Sri LR 332 and the case of Ranasinghe v. Ariyaratne Epa and others (1969) 74 NLR 153.

The aforesaid argument with regard to soil rights in my view, has no bearing on the instant appeal for two reasons.

Firstly, as discussed in this judgement, no right flows or devolves upon the 5th defendant on the deed bearing No 8527(P8).

Secondly, the said Vincent's case has no relevance to the instant appeal and can be distinguished as it refers to a praedial servitude and a right of way. Servitude is a different legal regime and cannot be equated to an absolute or full transfer of property as contemplated by the deed P8.

Similarly, Ranasinghe's case also can be distinguished from the instant appeal and has no bearing to the matter before us since, the said case refers to a person knowingly erecting a building on another's land, intending it to become a permanent structure on the said land. In the aforesaid situation this Court held that the building becomes annexed to the land and accedes to the soil.

Hence the ratio of the said two cases in my view, will not assist the 5th defendant to establish his contention before this Court pertaining to his entitlement to the soil rights that is said to flow from the deed P8. If I may say in simpler terms, the 5th defendant is claiming a right to the soil based upon the [1/9th] right which the 5th defendant claims he has on the house.

The Counsel for the plaintiff totally denying the said assertion drew our attention to the converse of the 5th defendant's contention, and specifically to the observations of Gratien A.C.J. in the case of Suwaris and others v. Samarajeeva (1954) 55 NLR 387.

The said Suwaris's case, pertains to a declaration of title and ejectment by a subsequent owner against persons who were in possession of certain buildings standing on a land. In the said case it was observed that a subsequent grant of soil rights would vest the ownership of a building on the land upon such person, in accordance with the maxim omne quod inaedificatur solo cedit, i.e., everything that is erected on the soil goes with it. Gratien A.C.J. at page 389, also quoted and referred to the Digest, wherein it is decreed that if in a conveyance of land, the alienor purports to convey the soil apart from the surface, it does not prevent the surface passing with the soil, for by its nature it is one with it.'

In the said case, the precise nature of the servitude habitatio was discussed as explained by Voet and it was further observed, that if an owner of immovable property conveys it to A, but in the same instrument purports to grant to B the buildings standing on it, then the logical reconciliation of the two inconsistent grants would be for the ownership of the land and buildings to be with A, subject only to a personal servitude of habitatio in favour of B.

Hence, it is amply clear, as discussed by Gratien A.C.J. in the case above and Sharvananda J. in Kanagasabai's case (supra), a building erected on the soil goes with the soil and not vice versa, as contended by the 5th defendant. In any event what the 5th defendant claims is not a servitude but an outright transfer upon deed P8 executed six months after the deed P6. Thus, the issue of servitude or grating two rights in one and the same instrument does not arise in this appeal.

The contention of the plaintiff before this Court was that even if this Court holds that the 5th defendant is entitled to 1/9th right to the house, that the 5th defendant cannot prefer a claim to the soil rights or the soil covered by the house standing thereon. Nevertheless, Dr. Cooray, for the plaintiff vehemently contended that together with the alienation of the land, ipse dixit the rights to the house standing thereon was conveyed to the plaintiff by Awin Wickramasinghe by the deed P6 and there were no rights or interests remaining for Awin Wickramasinghe to convey subsequently to 5th defendant by the deed P8.

In the aforesaid circumstances, I do not see merit whatsoever in the argument put forward by the 5th defendant pertaining to soil rights.

At this Juncture, I wish to refer to another legal maxim, cujus est solum ejus usque ad coelom et ad inferos quoted by Sharvananda J. in Kanagasabai's case referred to earlier i.e., whoever's is the soil, it is theirs all the way to Heaven and all the way to Hades which speaks of a property holder's right not only to the plot of land itself, but also to the air above and the ground below.

Blackstone's Commentaries, Book 2, Chapter 2 page 18 too, refers to the above phrase and defines 'land', to include not only the face of the earth, but everything under it, or over it and goes on to state if a man grants all his lands, he grants there by all his mines of metal and other fossils, his woods, his waters, and his houses, as well as his fields and meadows.

The above referred 13th century legal maxim is accepted even in the present day context and modern law and followed subject to certain variations, with regard to 'air and space' and also 'sub-surface rights'. However, there is no dispute or variation pertaining to 'surface rights' and in a conveyance of land, surface and everything erected thereon passes with the soil, because by nature it is one and the same. [see also Tissera v. Tissera (1940) 42 NLR 60, Jayasundere v. Wijetilake and others (2006)3 SLR 401]

From the foregoing discussion it is apparent, that upon execution of P6 in the instant appeal, the 'land' was conveyed and the title to the 'land' passed onto the plaintiff.

The 5th defendant did not challenge P6 or have any qualms or issues with regard to the deed P6 or conveyance of the 'land' to the plaintiff by Awin Wickramasinghe.

In my view, by P6, not only the land, but the surface of the land and everything standing thereon, which included Awin Wickramasinghe's rights to the co-owned house, was conveyed to the plaintiff. Thus, the 5th defendant's contention or his claim for Awin Wickramasinghe's rights to 'the house and the soil covered by the house,' is legally flawed and should be rejected. Moreover, it does not stand to rhyme or reason either.

In any event, I am of the opinion that the conveyance which the 5th defendant is relying upon, i.e. the deed bearing No 8527 dated 27-11-1995 (P8), does not convey any right or interest to the 5th defendant, as Awin Wickramasinghe had already denuded and disposed of his rights to the house, when he transferred the corpus together with the land, plantations and everything standing thereon to the plaintiff, by deed bearing No 975 on 15-05-1995 (P6).

In the aforesaid circumstances, my considered view is that the 5th defendant cannot claim any right to the corpus. Hence, I answer the 1st and 2nd questions of law raised before this Court in the negative and in favour of the plaintiff.

Further, I hold that the High Court judges have correctly evaluated the judgement of the District Court with regard to the District Judge's finding in respect of the investigation of title and specifically, the rights of the 5th defendant and thus no miscarriage of justice has taken place, in the instant partition application and for the said reason, I answer the 3rd question of law raised before this Court also in favour of the plaintiff.

In the foregoing and for reasons morefully adumbrated in this judgement, the appeal of the 5th Defendant -Appellant- Appellant is dismissed with costs.

The judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of Gampaha dated 17th February 2012 is upheld and the judgement of the District Court of Gampaha dated 03rd March, 2008 permitting the partitioning of the corpus in the manner stated therein, is also affirmed.

This Court further holds that the Plaintiff - Respondent- Respondent is entitled to a sum of Rs. 50,000 payable by the 5th Defendant- Appellant- Appellant. This sum is payable to the Plaintiff- Respondent- Respondent in addition to the costs of the courts below.

Appeal is dismissed with costs.

The Plaintiff filed this action seeking ejectment of the Defendant, whom the Plaintiff said was her tenant, from the premises in suit in terms of section 22(2)(bb)(ii) read with section 22(6) of the Rent Act, No.7 of 1972, as amended. The Plaintiff also claims damages from the Defendant from the date of termination of the tenancy until she is quieted in possession.

The said section of the Rent Act permits a landlord, who is the owner of not more than one residential premises, to seek ejectment of the tenant of any residential premises the standard rent of which for a month exceeds one hundred rupees, upon depositing with the Commissioner of National Housing a sum equivalent to five years' rent payable to the tenant, and with six months' notice in writing of the termination of the tenancy being given to the tenant.

The Defendant filed answer categorically stating that he was not the tenant of the Plaintiff and that he did not attorn to the Plaintiff upon the death of his previous landlord, i.e. the father of the Plaintiff. The Defendant refused to attorn to the Plaintiff and pay rent to her despite repeated requests made in writing to do so. Instead, the Defendant deposited rent at the Rent Department of the Colombo Municipal Council in the name of the deceased landlord or his estate. He continued to do so even after the institution of the action whereby the Plaintiff clearly pleaded her title to the premises, which was accepted by the District Court in its Judgment. There is no necessity to go into detail on these matters as the Defendant admits that he is not the tenant of the Plaintiff and that he did not pay rent to the Plaintiff.

It is correct to say that the Defendant rests his case entirely on what he refers to as the statutory bar contained in section 22(7) of the Rent Act. He sought dismissal of the Plaintiff's action in limine on this basis. According to section 22(7)(b)(ii), no action can be instituted under section 22(2)(bb)(ii) if the ownership of such premises was acquired by the landlord on a date subsequent to the specified date by purchase, inheritance or gift other than inheritance or gift from a parent or spouse who had acquired ownership of such premises on a date prior or subsequent to the specified date by inheritance or gift from a parent or spouse. It is the position of the Defendant that the averments in the plaint itself demonstrate that the Plaintiff's mother, who alienated the premises to the Plaintiff, acquired title to the premises not from her parents or spouse but from her son and therefore the Plaintiff is statutorily barred from instituting this action.

The trial commenced with the raising of issues. After the issues of the Defendant, the Plaintiff raised a consequential issue, i.e. issue No.19, to say that in view of the fact that the Defendant in his answer disputes the Plaintiff's ownership of the premises (and thereby denies tenancy), the Defendant is disentitled to the protection of the Rent Act. This is the crucial issue in this case. The Defendant's reliance on the aforesaid statutory bar becomes relevant only if this issue is answered against the Plaintiff.

The learned District Judge in his Judgment answered this issue against the Plaintiff. As seen from pages 15 and 16 of the Judgment, the learned District Judge did so on the ground that the protection of the Rent Act is attached to the premises and not to the tenancy. On this basis, he applied the statutory bar contained in section 22(7) of the Rent Act to dismiss the action of the Plaintiff. This is the fundamental mistake committed by the learned District Judge.

It is settled law that the entire protection of the Rent Act is attached to the contract of tenancy and not to the premises in suit despite the premises being technically governed by the Rent Act. If there is admittedly no valid contract of tenancy between the Plaintiff and the Defendant, the Defendant cannot shelter behind the protection of the Rent Act. This is what the Divisional Bench of the Supreme Court authoritatively held in Imbuldeniya v. De Silva [1987] 1 Sri LR 367, which has been followed by subsequent Supreme Court decisions including Weerasena v. Perera [1991] 1 Sri LR 121.

The Plaintiff thereafter appealed against the Judgment of the District Court. The Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal running into 66 pages is confusing. It is a reproduction of the extensive written submissions filed by both parties without any analysis. The learned High Court Judge first says the Defendant, having denied tenancy, is disentitled to the protection of the Rent Act and therefore the District Judge was wrong to have answered issue No.19 against the Plaintiff (pages 60 and 61 of the Judgment), but thereafter says the Defendant is entitled to the benefit of section 22(7) of the Rent Act, and therefore the District Judge was right in dismissing the Plaintiff's action (page 65 of the Judgment). These two findings upon which the Judgment rests are clearly contradictory and irreconcilable. If the Defendant is disentitled to the protection of the Rent Act, how can he be granted the protection contained in section 22(7) of the Act? As I will explain below, section 22(7) has been enacted to protect "the tenant". If the Defendant himself declares he is not the tenant, how can he claim the advantage of section 22(7)? Ultimately, the High Court of Civil Appeal affirmed the Judgment of the District Court and dismissed the Plaintiff's appeal with costs.

This Court granted leave to appeal to the Plaintiff predominantly on the question whether the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law when it dismissed the appeal of the Plaintiff despite having determined that the Defendant is not entitled to the protection of the Rent Act. I have already answered this question in favour of the Plaintiff.

When the Defendant expressly states in his answer or in his evidence that there is no tenancy agreement between him and the Plaintiff, he disqualifies himself from seeking relief under the Rent Act. In such circumstances, the Rent Act is wholly inapplicable and the Court is absolved from applying any of the fetters enumerated in section 22, which have been introduced to protect tenants and not mere occupants or trespassers of rent-controlled premises. The Rent Act becomes applicable if and only if there is a contract of tenancy between the Plaintiff and the Defendant. In the absence of such an agreement, the Court has no right, either legitimate or moral, to impose tenancy on the Defendant to the detriment of the Plaintiff who is almost always the owner of the premises.

The High Court, having first correctly decided that the Defendant is disentitled to the protection of the Rent Act due to the denial of tenancy, was in error when it ultimately held that the Defendant was entitled to the protection afforded to a tenant under section 22(7) of the Rent Act.

A Divisional Bench of the Supreme Court presided over by Sharvananda C.J. in Ranasinghe v. Premadharma [1985] 1 Sri LR 63 at 70 (with Wanasundera J. dissenting) held:

> When the Defendant disclaims the tenancy pleaded by the Plaintiff he states definitely and unequivocally that there is no relationship of landlord and tenant between the Plaintiff and him to be protected by the Rent Act.
>
> The rationale of the above principle appears to be that a Defendant cannot approbate and reprobate. In cases where the doctrine of approbation and reprobation applies, the person concerned has a choice of two rights, either of which he is at liberty to adopt, but not both. Where the doctrine does apply, if the person to whom the choice belongs irrevocably and with full knowledge accepts one, he cannot afterwards assert the other; he cannot affirm and disaffirm. Hence a Defendant who denies tenancy cannot consistently claim the benefit of the tenancy which the Rent Act provides. For the > protection of the Rent Act to be invoked the relationship of landlord and tenant, between the Plaintiff and him which is governed by the Rent Act should not be disputed by the Defendant.

In the instant case the District Court held that the Plaintiff is the owner of the premises. The Defendant does not dispute this finding. Nor does the Defendant claim to be the tenant of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff as the owner is entitled in law to occupy the premises. The burden of proof is then on the Defendant to show that he is in lawful possession. (Beedi Johara v. Warusavithana [1998] 3 Sri LR 227, Gunasekera v. Latiff [1999] 1 Sri LR 365 at 370) The Defendant attempted to justify his possession through the application of section 22(7) of the Rent Act whilst at the same time denying any contract of tenancy with the Plaintiff, which the law does not allow him to do.

Learned President's Counsel for the Defendant strenuously submits that the Plaintiff had two choices in seeking to eject the Defendant, one under common law and the other under the Rent Act, and having selected the latter, the Plaintiff cannot now abandon that course of action and seek to eject the Defendant under common law. This was raised as a question of law to be decided by this Court.

In my judgment, based on the facts and circumstances of this case, this question shall be answered against the Defendant.

It is true that the Plaintiff came before the District Court seeking ejectment of the Defendant under the Rent Act. But by his own conduct the Defendant ruled out the application of the Rent Act. The Defendant has only himself to blame for his predicament.

I would have agreed with the learned President's Counsel in this regard if the Plaintiff had on her own attempted to present at the trial a case materially different from that pleaded in the plaint and which the Defendant was prepared to meet. That is not permissible.

It is settled law that no party can be allowed to make at the trial a case materially different from what he has placed on record. (Hildon v. Munaweera [1997] 3 Sri LR 220, YMBA v. Abdul Azeez [1997] BLR 7, Gnananathan v. Premaardane [1999] 3 Sri LR 301, Ranasinghe v. Somawathie [2004] 2 Sri LR 154) Explanation 2 to section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code reads:

> The case enunciated must reasonably accord with the party's pleading, i.e., plaint or answer, as the case may be. And no party can be allowed to make at the trial a case materially different from that which he has placed on record, and which his opponent is prepared to meet. And the facts proposed to be established must in the whole amount to so much of the material part of his case as is not admitted in his opponent's pleadings.

I must add that this principle is applicable not only at trial but also on appeal. An Appellant cannot present on appeal a case materially different to what was presented before the trial Court, unless the appeal is based on a pure question of law and not on a question of fact or mixed question of fact and law. (Candappa nee Bastian v. Ponnambalampillai [1993] 1 Sri LR 184, Talwatte v. Somasunderam [1996] BLR 14, Janashakthi Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Umbichy Ltd. [2007] 2 Sri LR 39) Questions of fact or mixed questions of fact and law cannot be taken up for the first time on appeal. (Hameed alias Abdul Rahman v. Weerasinghe [1989] 1 Sri LR 217, Simon Fernando v. Bernadette Fernando [2003] 2 Sri LR 158, Piyadasa v. Babanis [2006] 2 Sri LR 17 at 24, Leslin Jayasinghe v. Illangaratne [2006] 2 Sri LR 39 at 47)

If I may recap, what happened in the instant case was when the Plaintiff sued the Defendant under the Rent Act on the basis that the Defendant was her tenant, the Defendant in his answer denied tenancy thereby eliminating the application of the Rent Act. It is against this backdrop that the Plaintiff was constrained to raise a consequential issue seeking the same relief, i.e. ejectment and damages, under common law. The Defendant did not object to it at that time. In any event, the Defendant could not have objected to it because the Plaintiff is entitled to raise consequential issues arising out of the Defendant's issues. What the Plaintiff did was not unusual. There are ample authorities to support the course of action adopted by the Plaintiff. However, learned President's Counsel submits that in those cases, unlike in the instant case, the Plaintiffs had come to Court seeking ejectment not under the Rent Act but under common law by way of rei vindicatio actions. I am unable to agree. Let me refer to a few of these cases.

In Gunapala v. Babynona [1986] 2 Sri LR 374, the Plaintiff filed a rent and ejectment action seeking ejectment of the Defendant on the basis that after the death of the original landlord, the Defendant having attorned to the Plaintiff refused to pay rent. The Defendant in the answer denied tenancy between herself and the Plaintiff and further pleaded that the Plaintiff did not call on her to attorn. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeal dismissed the Plaintiff's action on the ground that the Defendant had not been made aware of the existence of the Deed by which the Plaintiff claimed the premises and hence was not bound to attorn to the Plaintiff. The Supreme Court allowed the appeal and in the course of the Judgment Sharvananda C.J. stated as follows at page 376:

> It is true that the Plaintiff had framed this action on the basis that the Defendant attorned to him and had thereby become his tenant. But significantly the issues framed by him in this case departed from his pleadings and converted the action into a rei vindicatio action. The issues were raised by the Plaintiff on the basis that he claimed to be a co-owner of the premises and on the cessation of Simon's life-interest, the Defendant's possession was wrongful possession of the premises. The Defendant did not object to the issues framed by the Plaintiff. The case must be decided on the issues raised in the action.

The Divisional Bench decision of the Supreme Court in Ranasinghe v. Premadharma (supra) is also a rent and ejectment case in which the Plaintiff filed action to eject the Defendants from premises admittedly governed by the Rent Act on the ground of arrears of rent. The Defendants in their answer denied tenancy as well as the receipt and validity of the notice to quit pleaded by the Plaintiff. After trial, the District Court held that the Defendants were in arrears of rent and entered Judgment for the Plaintiff. The District Court further held that as the Defendants disclaimed tenancy under the Plaintiff it was not necessary in law for the Plaintiff to have given notice of termination of tenancy. The Court of Appeal set aside the order of ejectment of the Defendants and allowed the appeal. The decision of the Court of Appeal was founded on the ground that since the Defendant was a tenant under the Plaintiff in a rent-controlled premises, the Plaintiff could succeed in obtaining a decree for ejectment on the ground of arrears of rent, only if she established the requirements of sections 22(3) and 22(6) of the Rent Act, and since the Plaintiff had failed to establish that she had given three months' notice of the termination of the tenancy to the Defendants, the Court had no jurisdiction to grant the relief of ejectment notwithstanding the tenant had repudiated the contract of tenancy and did not claim the benefit of the Rent Act.

The Supreme Court set aside the Judgment of the Court of Appeal and restored the Judgment of the District Court and held:

> The tenant is not entitled to notice because he had repudiated his tenancy. In such a case the landlord need not establish any one or more of the grounds of ejectment stipulated in section 22 of the Rent Act No. 7 of 1972 for success in his suit for ejectment.

The same conclusion was arrived at in the Supreme Court case of Kanthasamy v. Gnanasekeram [1983] 2 Sri LR 1, which was relied upon by Sharvananda C.J. in Ranasinghe v. Premadharma (supra). In Kanthasamy's case the Plaintiff sued the Defendant for ejectment under the Rent Act on the ground of reasonable requirement. The Defendant in the answer denied tenancy. The Plaintiff then raised an issue whether a writ of ejectment could be granted against the Defendant upon the Defendant's denial of tenancy. The District Judge held that the Defendant was a tenant under the Plaintiff but, in view of the repudiation of tenancy, the Defendant was liable to be ejected. The Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court affirmed this decision.

In the instant case, the learned District Judge held that the Defendant is a tenant under the Plaintiff and the Plaintiff is entitled to seek ejectment of the Defendant in terms of section 22(2)(bb)(ii) of the Rent Act. However the learned District Judge refused to enter Judgment for the Plaintiff by application of section 22(7) of the Rent Act despite the Defendant's denial of tenancy. This is erroneous. Sharvananda C.J. in Ranasinghe v. Premadharma (supra) at page 71 elaborated:

> Where the Defendant by his conduct or pleading makes it manifest that he does not regard that there exists the relationship of landlord and tenant between the Plaintiff and him, it will not be reasonable to include him in the concept of "tenant" envisaged by section 22 of the Rent Act although the court may determine, on the evidence before it, that he is in fact the tenant of the Plaintiff. Since such a person had by his words or conduct disclaimed the tenancy which entitles him to the protection of the Rent Act, it will be anomalous to grant him the protection of a tenancy, which, according to him, does not exist.

The tenant cannot question the landlord's ownership of the premises; he has no right to do so. (Section 116 of the Evidence Ordinance, Pathirana v. Jayasundara (1955) 58 NLR 169 at 173) In the instant case, the Defendant, by paragraphs 7, 8 and 12 of the answer, admits that: (a) the Plaintiff's father was his landlord; (b) upon the death of the Plaintiff's father, testamentary proceedings were instituted; and (c) he received P9 (by which the executor through an Attorney-at-Law informed him that the Plaintiff is the new owner of the premises and directed him to attorn to her). The content of P9 was repeated in several letters including P10 and P14. Hence the Defendant has no right to insist on copies of deeds to prove the Plaintiff's ownership of the premises and on that basis to refuse attornment and refuse payment of rent to the Plaintiff. If he does so, he becomes a trespasser. The Defendant is a trespasser from the time he refused to attorn to the Plaintiff.

In the plaint, the Plaintiff sought damages at the rate of Rs. 25,000 per mensem from the date of termination of the tenancy. The premises are situated at Castle Street, Colombo 8. The Defendant made a bare denial of this averment in the answer. The Defendant elected not to give evidence at the trial. The Plaintiff also gave specific evidence on this relief in her testimony, which was not challenged by the Defendant at all. Hence the Court can safely accept this uncontroverted evidence to hold that the said matter has been proved before Court. (Edrick de Silva v. Chandradasa de Silva 1967) 70 NLR 169 at 174, Sudu Banda v. The Attorney-General [1998] 3 Sri LR 375 at 378-379) The learned District Judge has not drawn any attention to this in the Judgment, although he perfunctorily answered issue No.8 against the Plaintiff presumably because of the misapplication of section 22(7) of the Rent Act.

The Judgment of the District Court insofar as it decided to dismiss the Plaintiff's action by application of section 22(7) of the Rent Act, and the Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal which affirmed the same are set aside and the appeal of the Plaintiff is allowed. The District Judge is directed to enter Judgment as prayed for in paragraphs (a)-(c) of the prayer to the plaint. The Plaintiff is entitled to costs in all three Courts.

JUDGEMENT

Aluwihare PC, J.,

The present appeal seeks to challenge the judgment of the High Court by which, the learned High Court Judge had affirmed the Labour Tribunal's findings that the termination of services of the Applicant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 'Applicant') was unjust and therefore the Applicant was entitled to compensation.

The Applicant, in his application made to the Labour Tribunal had averred that he had been employed as the 'Manager-Packing' of the Respondent-Appellant-Petitioner Company (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 'Appellant-Company') since 25th March 2003 and had alleged that when he reported to work on 3rd April 2008, he was served with a letter of suspension from service ('අ2'). He had been told that a domestic inquiry would be held on 8th April 2008 regarding the same. A domestic inquiry, however, had not been held as intimated, and the Applicant's services had been terminated by letter dated 22nd April 2008 ('අ3'). The reason given for the dismissal of the Applicant had been, his failure to ensure that the polybags used for packing the garments ordered by an international buyer, 'Next' were in compliance with the specifications and other requirements stipulated by the said international buyer ['Next'] and another buyer 'Regatta' and that the Applicant failed to carry out his duties up to their expectations. The Applicant on the other hand claimed, that the termination of his services without holding a domestic inquiry amounts to unjust and unfair termination of services.

The Appellant-Company in its answer to the Labour Tribunal stated inter alia that the Applicant as the 'Manager-Packing', was entrusted with the vital responsibility of packing finished garments according to the buyer's specifications ensuring the degree of quality required. Their position was that, if the 'Manager-Packing' fails to carry out the packing as required, it would result in a loss of business, financial loss and loss of valuable clients and / or buyers in the context of the highly competitive garment manufacturing industry, in addition to the risk of the buyers rejecting the said orders and possible discontinuation of procuring garments from the Appellant-Company.

The Appellant-Company had called as witnesses the Human Resources Manager G. G. Samarasekera and Packing Officer K. N. Wijeratne of the factory. In the course of their evidence, they had mainly explained the adverse consequences of the Packing Manager failing to meet the specifications of the buyer. The documents marked 'අ4' and 'අ5' had been submitted to demonstrate that two international buyers, 'Regatta' and 'Next' had complained about the deviation from the procedures of loading the cartons of finished garments into the containers. The Applicant had been warned previously by 'අ1' (dated 29th September 2009), not to deviate from the rules and procedures that are required to be adhered to, when packing the relevant orders.

The Labour Tribunal had held that the termination of the Applicant was wrongful and ordered the Appellant-Company to pay Rs.420,000/- as compensation, to the Applicant (at page 181-187 of the Appeal brief). On appeal to the Provincial High Court by the Appellant-Company, the Learned High Court Judge had affirmed the award of the Labour Tribunal, by its judgment dated 12th December 2013 ('P1').

The Appellant-Company sought Leave to Appeal, and this Court granted leave on the following questions of law, referred to in sub-paragraphs (a), (c) and (i) of paragraph 10 of the Petition of the Appellant;

> (a) Did the High Court misinterpret and misapply the established legal principles and/or decided case law submitted on behalf of the Petitioner in arriving at the Conclusion of 'P1' [judgement of the High Court]?
> (c)) Did the High Court fail to evaluate the evidence establishing the grave negligence of the Respondent and that the Respondent had been previously warned as to his negligence pertaining to the packing function?
>
> (i) Did the High Court err by holding that a domestic inquiry is mandatory under the established legal principles of Sri Lanka?

Order of the Labour Tribunal

The Labour Tribunal had decided that the termination was unjust, based on several factors. Witness K. Wijeratne, Packing Officer, had stated that the responsibility of ensuring that the packing was done to meet the buyer's specifications rested entirely with the Manager-Packing, i. e. the Applicant, and that a loss would result to the Company if the Manager-packing failed to carry out the packing according to the given specifications. The witness had admitted that the Applicant held a position senior to him in the company hierarchy. The President of the Labour Tribunal, having considered the testimony of this witness, had been of the opinion that his evidence had no direct connection to the main issues of the case i.e. proving the allegation against the Applicant, as the witness had given evidence only relating to the possible consequences of the Manager-Packing failing to meet a buyer's specifications. G. G. Samarasekera, the other witness who testified on behalf of the Appellant-Company, had been employed by the company about one and half years after the Applicant's services had been terminated and it had transpired in the course of his evidence that, he had had no personal knowledge of the orders in question. Furthermore, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had observed that the witness had admitted that a domestic inquiry had not been held, although it was stated in 'එ2' that a disciplinary inquiry would be held regarding the Applicant on 08th April 2008.

The two emails, on the strength of the contents of which the Applicant's services had been terminated, purported to have been sent by 'Next' and 'Regatta' had been submitted by the witness as evidence subject to proof, on 16th October 2009 ('එ4' and 'එ5'). The learned President of the Labour Tribunal, however, had observed that even after a lapse of ten months, the Appellant-Company had failed to call Jude Virajith, the Manager of the Appellant-Company as a witness, who is said to have received the two emails from the buyers. This court is mindful of the fact that the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance have no application to proceedings before the Labour Tribunal. In the instant case, however, there was a duty on the Appellant-Company to establish a nexus between the impugned emails and the incident over which the services of the Applicant were terminated. As such this court cannot find fault with the learned President of the Labour Tribunal when he held that the Appellant-Company had failed to establish their position sufficiently with evidence

The Applicant, in his evidence, had accepted that the 'polybags' they manufactured had been longer than what was specified by 'Next'. However, he had maintained that the sample of the bags sent to 'Next' had been approved and the emails with the specifications sent by 'Next' had been submitted marked 'A4'. The Applicant had also maintained that the measurements of the bags would be checked by the Quality Controller of the Stores Section and after packing would also be checked by the ordering agency before being shipped. The learned President of the Labour Tribunal had been of the opinion that this evidence given by the Applicant had neither been challenged nor contradicted by the Appellant-Company, thereby failing to justify the allegations on which the Applicant's services had been terminated.

The learned President of the Labour Tribunal had deemed it fit that the Applicant be paid compensation in terms of Sections 33(5) and 33(6) of the Industrial Disputes Act in lieu of reinstatement. Following Associated Newspapers of Ceylon Ltd. v. Jayasinghe 1982 2 SLR 595 where it was held that "the essential question, in the determination of compensation for unfair dismissal is- what is the actual financial loss caused by the unfair dismissal, for compensation is an 'indemnity for loss'. In the present case the President of the Labour Tribunal had been of the view that the Applicant should be paid the equivalent of 3 months' salary for each year of service with the Petitioner company.

Judgment of the Provincial High Court

The Learned Judge of the Provincial High Court has stated that the Appellant-Company had not demonstrated to court whether the international buyer, 'Next' rejected the garments or refused payment for the garments, and the amount of the loss, if any, caused to the Appellant-Company. The Learned Judge had made the same observations made by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal that the Human Resource Manager called as a witness had no knowledge about the incident as he had joined the Company after the Applicant's services had been terminated, that the other witness held a position junior to that of the Applicant and had not given evidence of any value, and that the Manager, Jude Virajith, had not been called as a witness regarding the emails ('එ4' and 'එ5') received by him from the international buyers.

Furthermore, the Learned High Court Judge had noted that the evidence given by the Applicant reveals that the Appellant-Company had taken on the particular order in issue, although it did not have the necessary equipment to pack the garments according to the buyer's specifications at their Factory in Marawila. When the Applicant and the Quality Manager had informed the management of the Appellant-Company that the required quality could not be achieved at their Factory, they had been directed to stitch the garments at the Marawila factory and to get them packed at the Avissawella Factory, as this was a special order which they could not afford to lose. The samples that were packed in Avissawella had been submitted to the Central Quality Controlling Institute for 'Next' and the approval obtained to proceed with manufacturing the order. After the order had been shipped, however, the Applicant had been informed by the Audit Officer that 'Next' had complained that the polybags used were too long. Thereafter the Applicant's services had been terminated.

The evidence given by the Applicant regarding the order, alleging that the Appellant-Company had taken on an order that they were ill equipped to produce and relied on the Applicant to somehow ensure that the order was produced, had not been challenged by the Appellant-Company. The Learned High Court Judge had formed the view that the Applicant had been made the 'scapegoat' for the decision of the higher management of the Appellant-Company in accepting an order that they were ill equipped to manufacture.

Referring to the principles of natural justice, the Learned High Court Judge had further deemed the conduct of the Appellant-Company, in informing the Applicant that a disciplinary inquiry would be held and then dismissing him without holding the said inquiry, was contrary to the principle that "no one should be condemned unheard."

Although the Learned High Court Judge was in agreement with the Appellant-Company's submission that the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance are not applicable to industrial disputes before a Labour Tribunal, she had held that whereas '෎4' and '෎5' had been submitted subject to proof, evidence should have been adduced to prove the same. The Appellant-Company's submission that the compensation due to the Applicant had not been calculated correctly was dismissed on the basis that there was no need for such a calculation as evidence had been led on the loss that was caused to the Applicant by the termination of his services and that it had not been challenged.

Questions of Law

Question (a) : Misinterpretation and misapplication of established legal principles

I shall deal with the above question under 2 sub-headings; (a)(i) and (a)(ii).

(a) i. Computation of compensation

Whether the compensation was granted in the accepted manner and whether the standard of proof adopted by the High Court was correct are the main questions that have to be answered in making a finding in relation to the first question of law on which leave to appeal was granted, i.e. whether the High Court misinterpreted and misapplied the established legal principles and / or decided case law, submitted on behalf of the Appellant-Company.

The Appellant-Company in its written submissions has taken up the position that the Labour Tribunal has made no reference to the manner in which the compensation was calculated. The High Court on the other hand had been of the opinion that it was not so and had upheld the amount of compensation that had been awarded by the Labour Tribunal.

In Jayasuriya v. Sri Lanka State Plantations Corporation 1995 2 SLR 379, the very case relied on by the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal to state that it is the 'actual financial loss' that should be considered, Justice A. R. B. Amerasinghe has commented at length on the manner in which the amount of compensation should be calculated. "In determining compensation what is expected is that after a weighing together of the evidence and probabilities in the case, the Tribunal must form an opinion of the nature and extent of the loss, arriving in the end at an amount that a sensible person would not regard as mean or extravagant but would rather consider to be just and equitable in all the circumstances of the case*. There must eventually be an even balance of which the scales of justice are meant to remind us.*

While the expressed loss, in global terms of years of salary may in certain cases coincide with losses reckoned and counted and settled by reference to the relevant heads and principles of determining compensation, it is preferable to have a computation which is expressly shown to relate to specific heads and items of loss*. It is not satisfactory to simply say that a certain amount is just and equitable.* There must be a stated basis for the computation taking the award beyond the realm of mere assurance of fairness. For a just and equitable verdict the reasons must be set out in order to enable the parties to appreciate how just and equitable the verdict is. Where no basis for the compensation awarded is given, the order is liable to be set aside." (emphasis added)

In short, the court had been of the opinion that the Labour Tribunal must evaluate the evidence before it, to form an opinion as to the amount that could be said to be just and equitable compensation and the award is to be computed on the basis of specific heads or items of loss so that the order would not be open to challenge on the ground that it is arbitrary or without a sound rationale.

With due deference, when considering the award of the Labour Tribunal, it has to be noted that, although it was stated that the actual financial loss should be considered when awarding compensation, the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal has not elaborated how the actual loss was computed in this case. The Learned High Court Judge, at page 12 of the judgment, had expressed the view that, as evidence of the Applicant had been led regarding the loss that was caused to him due to the loss of employment, there was no necessity to calculate the loss caused separately. However, that does not seem to be a sound view, as formulas and guidelines for computing the losses of a wrongfully terminated employee has been set by numerous judicial precedents in an attempt to introduce some degree of uniformity into the process. A plethora of factors such as whether the applicant obtained fresh employment, the period for which the applicant remained unemployed, the loss of retirement benefits has to be considered depending on the particular circumstances of each case. Furthermore, not only should those factors be relied on, but they should be explicitly stated in the judgment as having been relied upon in forming the judgment.

Observing that the Legislature has left in the hands of the Labour Tribunal, the discretion of determining the quantum of compensation on the basis of facts and circumstances of each case, Wijetunga J. in Up Country Distributors (Pvt) Ltd., v. Subasinghe [1996] 2 SLR 330 (at page 335) observed that "…some degree of flexibility in that regard is both desirable and necessary if a tribunal is to make a just and equitable order." The case involved a situation where a workman prayed for reinstatement with back wages or compensation in lieu of reinstatement, and compensation was ordered taking into consideration, in particular, the workman's period of unemployment, his age at termination and the period of his service. In the case referred to, the High Court had been of the opinion that the Labour Tribunal had given due consideration to the authorities cited and the Supreme Court held that therefore it would be idle to contend that the basis for the award of compensation was not given. The Supreme Court however, emphasized that "the tribunal should have dealt with the criteria relevant to the computation of compensation in more explicit terms*, thus "taking the award beyond the realm of mere assurance of fairness" -per Amerasinghe, J. in Jayasuriya's case (supra).*" (emphasis added).

It has been submitted on behalf of the Appellant-Company that although compensation has been ordered by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal on the concept of 'immediate loss' it ought to have been decided upon two questions, namely, 1. Did the worker obtain employment after the unjust termination, 2. How many months was the worker out of employment? (mitigation of losses). On the other hand, it was submitted on behalf of the Applicant that, as upheld in Coats Thread Lanka (Pvt) Ltd. v. Samarasundara 2010 (2) SLR 1 (at page 11) that if a workman is suspended pending a domestic inquiry he is entitled to his monthly salary, and that the workman has earned an income otherwise, does not vitiate the entitlement to receive the salary from the employer who has suspended his services. In the present case a domestic inquiry has not been held although the Applicant was informed that a domestic inquiry would be held.

Further, on behalf of the Appellant-Company it has been pointed out that the facts necessary for computing the compensation due to the Applicant were not submitted to the Labour Tribunal by the Applicant. The case of The Ceylon Transport Board v. Wijeratne 77 NLR 481 was referred to, where a comprehensive list of factors that the Labour Tribunal may consider in awarding compensation were recognized by the court; "In making an order for the payment of compensation to a workman in lieu of an order for reinstatement under section 33 (5) of the Industrial Disputes Act, a Labour Tribunal should take into account such circumstances as the nature of the employer's business and his capacity to pay, the employee's age, the nature of his employment, length of service, seniority, present salary, future prospects, opportunities for obtaining similar alternative employment, his past conduct, the circumstances and the manner of the dismissal including the nature of the charge levelled against the workman, the extent to which the employee's actions were blameworthy and the effect of the dismissal on future pension rights. Account should also be taken of any sums paid or actually earned or which should also have been earned since the dismissal took place."

As cited with approval in The Ceylon Transport Board v. Wijeratne 77 NLR 481, Weeramantry J. in the case The Ceylon Transport Board v. Gunasinghe 72 NLR 76 at page 83 has emphasized the importance of true facts in making a just and equitable order as to compensation; "Proper findings of fact are a necessary basis for the exercise by Labour Tribunals of that wide jurisdiction given to them by statute of making such orders as they consider to be just and equitable. Where there is no such proper finding of fact the order that ensues would not be one which is just and equitable upon the evidence placed before the Tribunal, for justice and equity cannot be administered in a particular case apart from its own particular facts."

Apart from the evidence of the Applicant led at the Labour Tribunal where the Applicant stated his period of employment with the Appellant-Company, his salary and age and that he has one daughter, that she was due to be born at the time his services were terminated, that she is two and half years at the time of giving evidence, and that his wife is unemployed (pages 98-99 of the Appeal brief) no other facts were adduced to aid the Labour Tribunal in making a decision as to compensation. In Jayasuriya (supra) the Supreme Court stipulated that "The burden is on the employee to adduce sufficient evidence to enable the Tribunal to decide the loss."

The courts have upheld the expectation that a tribunal would specify in detail, to the extent possible, the specific heads on which the compensation was computed and, that the burden of adducing evidence to enable the court to compute the loss in such a meticulous manner is with the employee whose services have been terminated. As the employee in this case has starved the Labour Tribunal of the information necessary to make a well laid out computation, the Tribunal cannot be faulted for failing to set out the specificities. Furthermore, based on the details provided to the Labour Tribunal, it cannot be said that the computation of compensation is totally disproportionate to the alleged loss, and we do not wish to disturb the order of the Labour Tribunal as to the amount of compensation.

(a) ii. The applicable burden of proof and standard of proof

The Industrial Disputes Act does not state on whom the burden of proof should lie in a labour matter before the labour tribunals or courts. The Appellant-Company argued that the burden of proof applicable here is the burden referred to in Section 101 of the Evidence Ordinance, i.e. a party must bear the burden of establishing the facts on which he relies for the remedy he seeks. Thus, the Appellant-company argues that the burden of proving that the Applicant was wrongfully terminated would be recumbent on the Applicant himself.

Regarding the standard of proof in labour matters, courts have taken the stance that the balance of probability is the standard commensurate with ensuring that labour relations are not sabotaged by the adjudication. In Piyasena Silva v. Ceylon Fisheries Corporation (1994) 2 Sri LR 292 it was recognized that the standard of proof in labour matters is the balance of probability. In Associated Battery Manufacturers (Ceylon) Ltd. 77 NLR 541 the reason for adopting a balance of probability was explained (at page 553) "The whole object of labour adjudication is that of balancing the several interests involved, that of the worker in job security, since loss of his job may mean loss of his and his family's livelihood; that of the employer in retaining authority over matters affecting the efficient operations of the undertaking; that of the community in maintaining peaceful labour relations and avoiding unnecessary dislocations due either to unemployment or unproductive economic units. Each is equally important. None of these objectives can be achieved by the adoption of the standard of proof required in criminal cases in the determination of the facts which have to be established before a Labour Tribunal before it can exercise its jurisdiction to make an order which in all the circumstances of the case is just and equitable." (emphasis added). A similar view was expressed in The Batticaloa Multi-Purpose Cooperative Societies Union Ltd. v. Velupillai 71 NLR 60 "in proceedings before labour tribunals the strict degree of proof as in a Court of law is not required...".

The law relating to the burden of proof in labour matters has developed by way of judicial precedent which has stated that; "The burden is on the employer to justify the termination on the principle that 'he who alters the status quo and not he who demands its restoration, must explain the reasons for such alteration." (Vide S. R. De Silva, The Legal Framework of Industrial Relations in Ceylon, at page 570-571). The case of Gunasekara v. Latiff [1999] 1 SLR 365 where it was held by the Court of Appeal that "While S. 101 Evidence Ordinance is concerned with the duty to prove a case as a whole, viz the overall burden of proof S. 103 regulates the burden of proof as to a particular fact, however the devolution of the overall burden is governed by S. 102 which declares that the burden of proof lies on that person who would fail if no such evidence at all were given on either side." was quoted in support of this stance. The case of Gunasekara v. Latiff involved a Declaration of Title, where the questions of who should begin the case, and on whom the burden of proof lies was commented on. However, before the Labour Tribunal, the Appellant-Company has argued that the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance do not apply to cases at the Labour Tribunal, a view which was endorsed by the High Court as well. It seems to be a contradictory position adopted by the Appellant.

In the written submissions filed before the Labour Tribunal on behalf of the Applicant, it has been argued that per Section 5(c) of the Evidence Special Provisions Act No. 14 of 1995 and Section 104 of the Evidence Ordinance, the burden of proving the emails is on the Appellant-Company. On the other hand, in the written submissions on behalf of the Appellant-company, it has been submitted that as the Applicant has admitted the fact, that he received the email 'එ5' sent by Kelum Warnapatabendi, Senior Product Technologist for 'Next' in Sri Lanka (at page 11 in the evidence given on 9th February 2011) there is no necessity for it to be proved by the Appellant-Company. Nevertheless, the opinion of the Learned High Court judge in this regard, that if the emails 'එ4' and 'එ5' were submitted subject to proof then evidence should be called to prove the same, is the sound approach.

The High Court had been of the opinion that the evidence given by witness K. N. Wijeratne cannot be attached any value in deciding whether the Applicant was in fact guilty of the conduct which led to his termination. This was due to the concern that the witness held a position subordinate to the Applicant and would not be sufficiently knowledgeable about the job duties of the Applicant to be in a position to comment on the Applicant's performance in meeting the responsibilities of the Applicant's position as Packing Manager. However, it is more probable that the witness as a Packing Officer with many years of experience would have come to know the job duties of a Packing Manager from working with and under the instructions of the Packing Manager.

Considering the above I am of the opinion that the High Court has neither misinterpreted nor misapplied established legal principles or decided case law and thus answer the Question of law referred to in subparagraph (a) in the negative.

Question (i)

Now I turn to Question (i) "Did the High Court err by holding that a domestic inquiry is mandatory under the established legal principles of Sri Lanka?" and then to Question (c) Did the High Court fail to evaluate the evidence establishing negligence on the part of the Applicant, as some factual observations are common to both.

In the Sri Lankan Labour Law regime, there is no statutory requirement to conduct a domestic inquiry prior to the termination of a workman. Where there is no collective agreement or a clause in the contract of employment that a domestic inquiry should be held in the event of termination, it is not mandatory to hold a domestic inquiry. However, it has come to be recognized that holding a domestic inquiry could be beneficial to both the employer and the employee.

There may be instances where it is plain that the employee in question is guilty of a conduct that warrants termination and could be dismissed without any need for further investigations. Therefore, it would be an additional burden to require employers to hold domestic inquiries by default in all instances.

Holding a domestic inquiry is however a salutary practice. S. R. De Silva in 'Law of Dismissal' [The Employers' Federation of Ceylon, Monograph No. 8, Revised Edition 2004] commenting on the desirability of holding domestic inquiries states "Punishment of an employee, whether by dismissal or otherwise, without following a disciplinary procedure which involves the giving of an opportunity to an accused employee to exculpate himself is, prima facie, arbitrary. Many labour courts today may view disciplinary action without a show cause letter followed by an inquiry, where necessary, as being arbitrary, since such action must be assumed to be taken without the employer having satisfied himself about the guilt or otherwise of the accused employee." Listing several reasons for the desirability of holding a domestic inquiry, S. R. De Silva has advanced the view that even where guilt can be established without a domestic inquiry, holding a domestic inquiry could be beneficial (vide paragraph 41).

In All Ceylon Commercial and Industrial Workers' Union v. Weerakoon Bros Ltd. [Sri Lanka Gazette No. 90 of 14. 12. 73] the court accepted that the dismissal of employees without holding a domestic inquiry could be reviewed for correctness as it was against the principles of natural justice. As there were no allegations of mala fide against the employer, in All Ceylon National Milk Board Trade Union v. The Board of Directors, CWE [Gazette No. 261/10 of 07. 09. 1983] the absence of a domestic inquiry was not considered to be an issue regarding the justification of the dismissal. However, in St. Andrews Hotel v. Ceylon Mercantile Union CA 138/85 decided on 01.04.1993 it was recognized that a dismissal cannot be set aside as wrongful solely on the basis that no domestic inquiry was held.

Therefore, it appears that while a domestic inquiry is desirable, in certain cases, due to the nature of the circumstances a domestic inquiry could be dispensed with.

The emails marked 'ඵ4' and 'ඵ5' point to the faults/negligence of the Applicant in carrying out his duties, but shortcomings by other quarters too are mentioned in the emails. In 'ඵ4' sent by Sampath Erahapola the local agent for Regatta, several shortcomings are listed out; that there were broken stitches in many of the garments, that the workers were on continuous night shifts thereby affecting their productivity, that there was no management level involvement even after re-screening, that internal audits were failing to correct the defects in the order prior to shipping, and that there was no assurance of quality from the Quality Assurance Department. The only shortcomings that can be directly connected to the Applicant were, that there was a delay in starting the packing despite being advised to commence the packing in good time, and that the Packing Manager was not present in the Factory while the work was going on. In 'ඵ5' sent by Kelum Warnapatabendi, the Senior Product Technologist for 'Next' in Sri Lanka it has been stated that "I have given you an approved sample for packing/presentation. All your seniors (specially Packing Manager) are well aware with the requirements." Loading the goods to the container without pre-final approvals and ignoring Quality Assurance comments of unloading the goods for inspection had been pointed out as shortcomings.

From the above comments in the emails, it can be seen that there were several shortcomings regarding the Regatta order for which the Applicant cannot be held to be singularly liable. It should be noted that the senior management was aware of the shortcomings but had made no meaningful involvement in remedying them. The evidence led at the Labour Tribunal fails to conclusively shed light on whether the length of the polybags was not as required due to the negligence of the Applicant or the Quality Assurance Department or due to circumstances beyond their control, such as directions from the higher management concerned with cost cutting.

If the emails were the reason for dispensing with the requirement of holding a domestic inquiry, the contents of the two emails themselves bear evidence that there were several shortcomings in the production process of the Appellant's Factory for which the Applicant could not be held solely responsible. What is more, it could have been that the issues in the production process themselves could have affected the quality of the Applicant's performance. For instance, the Applicant's evidence led before the Labour Tribunal (page 91) has shown that the Applicant was saddled with the extra duty of attempting to procure certain machines that were required for the process of manufacturing the 'Next' order. Applicant had said that he made an unsuccessful attempt to get the required machinery from one of their establishments in Pita-Kotte and failing that they obtained the machinery from their Marawila Factory and found the machines mechanically defective and finally had to go to a Factory in Avissawella to perfect the order (page 153). The evidence of the Applicant to this effect was not contested by the Appellant-Company. In this backdrop the observation made by the High Court that the Applicant has been made a 'scapegoat' for the issues caused by the misguided decisions of the higher level of management in accepting an order that the Petitioner Factory was ill equipped to manufacture, seems justified.

What the High court has endeavoured to do, is to point out the dictates of natural justice that require a domestic inquiry in the circumstances of the present case, where there has not been conclusive evidence that the conduct of the Applicant was so serious as to justify termination. Further the High Court has noted that the conduct of the Appellant-Company in informing the Applicant that a domestic inquiry would be held and then postponing the inquiry to a later date and thereafter handing over a letter of termination on the day the Applicant went to the factory to face the domestic inquiry has unjustly prevented the Applicant from presenting his side of the story vis a vis the alleged shortcoming on his part. Where the two emails themselves are insufficient to provide clout to the decision to terminate the Applicant, and in fact point to larger issues that have negatively affected the performance of the factory, the High Court cannot be faulted for holding that the lack of a domestic inquiry, especially where one had originally been scheduled, takes away from the justification of the termination of the Applicant's services.

Although as a matter of 'law' the High Court holding that the termination of the services of the Applicant without a domestic inquiry is both unjust and unreasonable is a misdirection on its part, this court is of the view that this was a classic case that cried for holding of a domestic inquiry before termination.

Although I answer the question of law referred to in subparagraph (i) of Paragraph 10 of the petition in the affirmative, I hold that the misdirection on the part of the learned High court is not grave enough to set aside the judgment of the learned High Court Judge.

Question (c)

Now I shall consider whether the High Court failed to evaluate the evidence establishing the grave negligence of the Applicant. The gravamen of the Appellant-Company's submissions to the Labour Tribunal was that loss would be caused to the company due to the negligence of the Applicant. However, that a loss was in fact caused, and if so, the amount of such loss was not submitted nor proved by the Appellant-Company. The two emails marked '෴4' and '෴5' said to be sent by the local agents for the international buyers 'Next' and 'Regatta' have not been proved by calling Jude Virajith, the Manager of the Appellant-Company who had received and forwarded the e-mails, to give evidence, thus, diminishing the probative evidentiary value of the contents of those e-mails.

The written submissions on behalf of the Applicant were that the Appellant-Company failed to lead direct evidence and prove before the Labour Tribunal the charge against the Applicant in compliance with the Evidence Ordinance. In the written submissions Rodrigo v. Central Engineering Consultation Bureau 2009 (1) SLR 248 was cited to point out that it is the Appellant-Company that should adduce evidence to prove the serious allegations against the Respondent. "In Labour Tribunal proceedings where the termination of services of a workman is admitted by the respondent, the onus is on the latter to justify termination by showing that there were just grounds for doing so and that the punishment imposed was not disproportionate to the misconduct of the workman. The burden of proof lies on him who affirms, and not upon him who denies as expressed in the maxim ei incimbit probatio, qui dicit, non quinegat."

An act of misconduct was defined in the Indian case Shalimar Rope Works Mazdoor Union v. Shalimar Rope Works Ltd 1953 (2) LLJ 876 thus; "An act should be regarded as an act of misconduct if it is inconsistent with the fulfillment of express or implied conditions of service or if it has a material bearing on the smooth and efficient working of the concern." Justice Priyasath Dep PC, as he then was, in Gamage v. M. D. Gunasena (2013) SLR 143 was of the opinion that "The implied conditions of service include conduct such as obedience, honesty, diligence, good behavior, punctuality, due care. Therefore, acts such as disobedience, insubordination, dishonesty, negligence*, absenteeism and late attendance, assault are treated as acts of misconduct which are inconsistent with the implied conditions of service".* The degree of misconduct which justifies termination necessarily depends on the "nature of the business and the position held by the employee" Jupiter General Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Shroff (1973) 3 AEHR 67 as quoted in H. G. Jayasekera v. The Ceylon Transport Board CGG 14, 359 of 26.03.65 at para 24.

The Applicant has accepted that as Packing Manager he is the officer entrusted with the final responsibility of packing. However, giving evidence before the Labour Tribunal (at pages 85-90) the Applicant's uncontested stance was that two meetings were held with the participation of the higher management of the factory, the Quality Assurance Manager and the Applicant himself, before commencing the production of the 'Next' order where he and the Quality Assurance Manager had raised the concern that the Appellant-Company's factory was not equipped to produce the order to the standard of quality expected by the international buyer.

Furthermore, regarding the length of the polybags being in excess of the specifications, the High court has questioned whether the quality controller of the factory has no responsibility for preventing the shipment of the goods that do not meet quality standards, and what the job duties of the Packing Manager were. These are valid concerns as they play an imperative role in identifying whether the Applicant was singularly responsible for the polybags being longer than as specified and therefore liable for any damage caused, thereby justifying his termination. Facts adequate to conclusively answer these questions have not been adduced.

The second limb of Question (c) is whether the High Court failed to evaluate the evidence that the Applicant had been previously warned as to his negligence pertaining to the packing function. Neither the Labour Tribunal nor the High Court in its judgment has referred to the previous warning given to the Applicant by letter dated 29th September 2007 marked 'වි1'. The Applicant had loaded cartons of clothing of a Regatta order into the container without the prior approval or permission of the Regatta representative one Sampath, and he had been warned not to deviate from the proper rules and procedures and that if such an incident is reported in the future, action would be taken against him as it is a serious offence.

However, the present allegation is not relating to the loading of finished goods but an allegation totally unconnected. In the present case, whether the Applicant was negligent, has not been established by the Appellant-Company to the degree of proof required. The inevitable inference that can be drawn from this is that there was no justifiable basis for the termination of the Applicant. On a side note, had a disciplinary inquiry been held, this question of the bona fides of the Appellant-Company and the dearth of evidence before the Labour Tribunal could have been avoided.

Thus, I answer the questions of law (a) and (c) in the negative. The question of law (i) is answered in the affirmative, however due to the reasons delineated in this judgement, I hold that no substantial prejudice has been caused to the Appellant.

Accordingly, I dismiss the appeal subject to costs.

Mahinda Samayawardhena, J.

The plaintiff instituted this action against the defendant in the Commercial High Court to recover a sum of Rs. 130,819,394.78 with interest on "the guarantee and/or indemnity and/or agreement dated 30.12.2010" marked B with the plaint. When this document was sought to be marked in evidence as P2, the defendant objected to it on the basis that it is a bond which has not been duly stamped and therefore cannot be admitted in evidence. The Commercial High Court made a vague order when it held on the one hand that it need not be stamped as it is not a bond, but on the other hand allowed the plaintiff to rectify the stamp deficiency, if any. Being aggrieved by this order, the defendant filed this appeal with leave obtained on the following two questions of law:

1. Whether the indemnity furnished to secure a factoring agreement marked as P2 in the brief is subject to stamp fees?
2. If the aforementioned question of law is answered in the affirmative, what is the stamp duty that needs to be paid in respect of the said indemnity?

Section 33(1) of the Stamp Duty Act, No. 43 of 1982, reads as follows:

> No instrument chargeable with stamp duty shall be received or admitted in evidence by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence or registered or authenticated or acted upon by any person or by any officer in a public office or corporation or bank or approved credit agency unless such instrument is duly stamped:
>
> Provided that any such instrument may—

(a) be admitted in evidence by any person having by law or consent of parties authority to receive evidence; or

(b) if the stamp duty chargeable on such instrument is one thousand five hundred rupees or less, be acted upon by the Registrar-General, upon payment of the proper duty with which it is chargeable or the amount required to make up the same and a penalty not exceeding three times the proper duty.

The Stamp Duty (Special Provisions) Act, No. 12 of 2006, did not repeal the Stamp Duty Act, No. 43 of 1982. In terms of section 13 of the Stamp Duty (Special Provisions) Act quoted below, both Acts operate in parallel. If there is any inconsistency between the two with regard to the imposition or exemption of stamp duty or any other matter, the Stamp Duty (Special Provisions) Act prevails.

From and after the date of the coming into operation of this Act, the provisions of the Stamp Duty Act, No. 43 of 1982, relating to the Imposition of Stamp Duty (other than any instrument relating to the transfer of immovable property, the transfer of motor vehicles or documents filed in Court), Exemptions and any other provision in the aforesaid Act, shall, in so far as the same are inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, have no operation and the provisions of this Act shall prevail.

Learned counsel for the plaintiff admits that in terms of section 4(g) of the Stamp Duty (Special Provisions) Act, "a bond or mortgage for any definite and certain sum of money and affecting any property" is a "specified instrument" which needs to be stamped. But his argument is that P2 is not a "bond" but an indemnity; and also that it is not "for any definite and certain sum of money and affecting any property".

There are various kinds of bonds—guarantee bonds, indemnity bonds, performance bonds, bail bonds etc. The Stamp Duty (Special Provisions) Act does not refer to these species, but the Stamp Duty Act does to some extent. The Stamp Duty (Special Provisions) Act uses the word "bond" in a generic sense. Section 5(6) of the Stamp Duty Act makes only a "bond of indemnity given to a public officer in the execution of his duty" exempt from stamp duty, not all bonds of indemnity. This goes to prove that the Stamp Duty Act recognises an indemnity as (i) a bond (ii) liable to stamp duty (iii) subject to one exemption. This is not superseded by the Stamp Duty (Special Provisions) Act because there is no conflict or inconsistency between the two Acts on this point. Hence I take the view that P2 is a bond—a bond of indemnity.

P2 is admittedly based on a Factoring Agreement. The defendant tendered this Factoring Agreement marked X1 to the Commercial High Court with his answer. In essence, by X1, EPSI Computer (Pvt) Ltd, where the defendant is a director, agreed to sell "all debts incurred or to be incurred by any debtor of the class or description contemplated in this Agreement which shall be in existence at the commencement or which shall come into existence at any time thereafter before termination of this Agreement" to the plaintiff and the plaintiff agreed to purchase the same subject to the conditions stated in X1. According to P2, X1 was executed in consideration of the defendant entering into P2 whereby the defendant inter alia agreed that he would be liable in all respects as the principal debtor.

All bonds are not liable to stamp duty. In terms of section 4(g) of the Stamp Duty (Special Provisions) Act, for a bond to be subject to stamp duty, two requirements shall co-exist: it shall be "for any definite and certain sum of money and affecting any property". P2 does not satisfy these two requirements.

There is no definite sum of money ascertainable in P2. This is because there is no definite sum of money ascertainable in X1. I accept the submission made on behalf of the plaintiff that "It is a rolling amount and depends on the debt payable."

Nor does P2 or X1 affect any property. X1 is based on debts and P2 is based on X1. A debt is a sum of money due by contract. According to the Stamp Duty Act, "money" does not fall within the definition of "property". They are two different concepts. Section 71 of the Stamp Duty Act defines "money" as follows: "money includes all sums, whether expressed in Sri Lanka or foreign currency"; it defines "property" as follows: "property means movable as well as immovable property; and includes a right to or any interest in property".

There are three well-known decisions of this Court in relation to the payment of stamp duty on bonds. One is Ceylease Financial Services Limited v. Sriyalatha [2006] 2 Sri LR 169. Another is Seylan Bank Ltd v. Samdo Macky Sportswear (Pvt) Ltd [2008] 1 Sri LR 96. The more recent one is People's Bank v. Ocean Queen Marine (Pvt) Ltd [2016] 1 Sri LR 141. With the exception of the Seylan Bank case, this Court held in the other two cases that the bond in question was liable to be stamped. In those two cases, it was held that the bond was for a definite sum of money and affecting property. In the Ceylease case and the People's Bank case the property was a "vehicle" and "trawler boat" respectively. But in the Seylan Bank case this Court at page 100 held that the bond was not liable to be stamped inter alia because the money was not secured by and correlated to property:

> Clearly the 'Bond' contemplated by the language above has to be one where the money obtained is secured by, and correlated to property. Document P9 [the bond] did not, at the time of the creation of the principal covenant, seek to secure or refer to any property in other words it was not a bond that bound property for the payment of the money.

In Ameen v. Malship (Ceylon) Ltd [1982] 2 Sri LR 483, this Court held "The levy of stamp duty is governed by the letter of the law and not by its spirit." All fiscal legislation is subject to strict interpretation. The Court will look squarely at the statute without reading in or implying anything. There is no room for intendment, presumption or assumption. Consideration of the principles of equity, morality, ethics, logic, injustice etc. are irrelevant. Any ambiguity or uncertainty must be resolved in favour of the tax payer, not the tax collector. (Vide Maxwell on The Interpretation of Statutes, 12th edition, p. 256, N.S. Bindra's Interpretation of Statues, 9th Edition, p.1036, The Manager, Bank of Ceylon, Hatton v. The Secretary, Hatton Dickoya Urban Council [2005] 3 Sri LR 1, Sohli Eduljee Captain (Secco Brushes Corporation) v. Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (1974) 77 NLR 350, Perera & Silva Ltd. v. Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (1978) 79(II) NLR 164 at 167-168)

In my view, P2 is not liable to stamp duty.

I answer the two questions of law as follows:

2. Does not arise.

This is an appeal against the judgment Civil Appellate High Court dated 19.11.2013.

Plaintiff- Appellant-Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff-Appellant) filed action in the District Court of Attanagalla against the 1st Defendant-Respondent-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the1st Defendant-Respondent) seeking a declaration that the marriage between the Plaintiff-Appellant and the 1st Defendant-Respondent is a nullity. The 1st Defendant-Respondent in her answer dated 27.8.2008 also sought a declaration that her marriage between her and the Plaintiff-Appellant is a nullity. The 1st Defendant-Respondent in her answer made a cross-claim for Rs.One Million from the Plaintiff-Appellant as damages for seduction committed by the Plaintiff-Appellant. The Plaintiff-Appellant filed a replication dated 18.11.2008 seeking a dismissal of the cross-claim of the 1st Defendant-Respondent. At the trial an admission was recorded to the effect that the marriage between the Plaintiff-Appellant and the 1st Defendant-Respondent is a nullity. Thereafter the learned District Judge permitted the 1st Defendant-Respondent to begin the case to prove her claim of damages for the seduction committed by the Plaintiff-Appellant. The learned District Judge by his judgment dated 15.6.2009 granted Rs.One Million as damages for the seduction committed by the Plaintiff-Appellant on the 1st Defendant-Respondent. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the learned District Judge, the Plaintiff-Appellant appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court and the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court by their judgment dated 19.11.2013, dismissed the appeal. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court, the Plaintiff-

Appellant has appealed to this court and this court by its order dated 27.1.2015 granted leave to appeal on questions of law set out in paragraphs 12(iii), (vii) and (viii) of the Petition of Appeal dated 17.12.2013 which are set out below.

1. Did the High Court err in rejecting the plea of prescription when Section 9 of the Prescription Ordinance specifically lays down the criteria for prescription for damages under the written contract?
2. Did the High Court err in holding that the Plaintiff is liable to pay the Defendant Rs. One Million?
3. Did the High Court err in holding that the Plaintiff has not proved his case when his evidence was uncontradicted?

When the 1st Defendant-Respondent was giving evidence, the Plaintiff-Appellant, on the strength of the evidence of the 1st Defendant-Respondent, sought permission of court to raise an issue whether the claim of the 1st Defendant-Respondent for damages of Rs. One Million for seduction committed by the Plaintiff-Appellant was prescribed. However, the learned District Judge by his order dated 11.5.2009 disallowed this application. Therefore, the issue relating to prescription was not raised. It is interesting to find out whether the said claim of the 1st Defendant-Respondent is prescribed or not. In order to consider this question, it is necessary to consider section 9 of the Prescription Ordinance. It reads as follows.

> No action shall be maintainable for any loss, injury, or damage, unless the same shall be commenced within two years from the time when the cause of action, shall have arisen.

The claim of the 1st Defendant-Respondent for damages for Rs. One Million is for the seduction committed by the Plaintiff-Appellant on her. In view of section 9 of the Prescription Ordinance, the said claim should have been made to court within a period of two years from the date of seduction. The marriage between the Plaintiff-Appellant and the 1st Defendant-Respondent took place on 24.8.2006. But before the marriage the Plaintiff-Appellant has seduced 1st Defendant-Respondent on 25.6.2006. She has stated in her answer and her evidence in court that she and the Plaintiff-Appellant, prior to the marriage, on 25.6.2006, had sexual intercourse and thereby the Plaintiff-Appellant seduced her. Thus, seduction on the 1st Defendant-Respondent has taken place on 25.6.2006 (before the marriage). The claim for damages for seduction was made by her answer dated 27.8.2008. Thus, the claim for damages for seduction was made two years after the seduction. Therefore, I hold that the claim of the 1st Defendant-Respondent for damages for her seduction has been prescribed when it was made to the District Court. On this ground alone the claim of the 1st Defendant-Respondent for damages for her seduction should be rejected and the appeal of the Plaintiff-Appellant to set aside judgments of both courts relating to granting of compensation for the seduction should be allowed.

The application to record an issue whether the claim of the 1st Defendant-Respondent was prescribed was refused by the learned District Judge on the ground that that it had not been stated in the pleadings. The learned District Judge observed that such an issue cannot be permitted by using the evidence since it had not been stated in the pleadings. Reasoning of the learned District Judge appears to be that although it was revealed in evidence that the claim is prescribed, an issue relating to prescription could not be permitted since it is not found in the pleadings. Is this conclusion of the learned District Judge correct?

In this connection, I would like to state here the duty of court in hearing a case is to arrive at the correct decision. This view is supported by the judicial decision in the case of Bank of Ceylon Jaffna Vs Chelliahpillai 64 NLR 25 wherein Privy Council at page27 held that the case must be tried upon the 'issues on which the right decision of the case appears to the court to depend'. Therefore, the court should allow the parties to frame issues to arrive at the correct conclusion on the evidence led before court even though the parties have failed to state facts relating to such an issue in the pleadings. Even if parties do not raise correct issues, court, on its own motion, should frame issues. Section 149 of the Civil Procedure Code reads as follows.

> The court may, at any time before passing a decree, amend the issues or frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit.

In this connection I would like to consider certain judicial decisions. In Silva Vs Obeysekera 24 NLR 97 at page 107 Bertram CJ made the following observation:

> "Counsel for the plaintiff raised the objection that these issues did not arise on the pleadings, and that defendant should have got his answer amended so as to raise these issues. On this objection being taken the learned District Judge disallowed the issues. Here the learned Judge was certainly led into a mistake. No doubt it is a matter within the discretion of the Judge whether he will allow fresh issues to be formulated after the case has commenced, but he should do so when such a course appears to be in the interests of justice, and it is certainly not a valid objection to such a course being taken that they do not arise on the pleadings."

In Hameed Vs Cassim [1996] 2 SLR 30 Court of Appeal at page 33 held as follows:

> It is not necessary that the new issue should arise on the pleadings. A new issue could be framed on the evidence led by the parties orally or in the form of documents. The only restriction is that the Judge in framing a new issue should act in the interests of justice, which is primarily to ensure the correct decision is given in the case.

In Bank of Ceylon Jaffna Vs Chelliahpillai 64 NLR 25 Privy Council at page 27 held that 'it is well settled that framing of issues is not restricted by pleadings'

Considering all the above matters, I hold that new issues can be framed at a trial on the evidence led at the trial although facts relating to the new issues do not arise on the pleadings. The trial Judge, if he wants to raise new issues, should bear in mind that he frames new issues on the evidence already led in order to arrive at the right decision.

I have earlier pointed out that the claim for damages for the seduction of the 1st Defendant-Respondent had ben prescribed when it was made in her answer. But the learned trial Judge did not allow the issue on prescription to be raised since it is not found in the pleadings. When I consider the above legal literature, I hold that the above conclusion of the learned District Judge was clearly wrong and the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court were wrong when they affirmed the above portion of the judgment. On this ground itself the above conclusions reached by the learned District Judge and the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court should be set aside.

The learned District Judge in his judgment has also observed that the defence of prescription could not be considered because the 1st Defendant-Respondent was a minor at the time of the act of seduction. Is this observation correct? I now advert to this contention. The fact that the 1st Defendant-Respondent was a minor is not a disqualification to institute action because the law provides for the appointment of a Guardian. If the law permits a minor to file a case through his Guardian, restriction in the law relating to prescription should also apply to the case. In this regard I would like to consider the following situation. If a minor and/or his parents meet with an accident and suffer injuries due to the negligence of the person who drove the vehicle, a cause of action would arise for the minor to file a case for damages against the person who drove the vehicle. But his minority would not act as an exception to the prescription period of two years. Even though he is a minor, case for damages should be filed within a period of two years from the date of the accident. Thus, the above observation of the learned District Judge is not correct.

For the above reasons, I hold that the learned District Judge was in error when he did not permit and consider the issue on prescription; that the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court too were in error when they rejected the plea of prescription; and that they were in error when they affirmed the judgment of the learned District Judge.

The learned District Judge, by his order dated on 11.5.2009, disallowed the application to frame an issue whether claim of the 1st Defendant-Respondent is prescribed. But the Plaintiff-Appellant did not make an appeal against the said order. Can the legality of the said order be raised in the final appeal? When considering this question, I would like to consider the judicial decision in the case of Mudiyanse Vs Punchi Banda Ranaweera 77 NLR 501 wherein this court held that 'a party aggrieved by an order made in the course of the action, though such order goes to the root of the case, has two courses of action open to him, namely (a) to file an interlocutory appeal or (b) to stay his hand and file his appeal at the end of the case even on the very same ground only on which he could have filed his interlocutory appeal. If he adopts the latter course, he cannot be shut out on the ground that his appeal being against the incidental order is out of time.'

In my view legality of an order made in the course of a trial can be raised at the final appeal. I have earlier held that in the present case, the claim of the 1st Defendant-Respondent for damages for her seduction had been prescribed when she made the claim to the District Court. Thus, the court cannot grant damages for the seduction of the1st Defendant-Respondent.

For the above reasons, I set aside the portion of the judgment of the learned District Judge granting damages of Rs.1.0 Million to the 1st Defendant-Respondent for seduction but affirm the portion of the judgment of the learned District Judge declaring that the marriage between the Plaintiff-Appellant and the 1st Defendant-Respondent is a nullity. I set aside the portion of the judgment of the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court which affirmed the portion of the judgment of the learned District Judge granting damages of Rs.1.0 Million to the 1st Defendant-Respondent for seduction but I affirm the portion of the judgment of the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court which affirmed the portion of the judgment of the learned District Judge declaring that the marriage between the Plaintiff-Appellant and the 1st Defendant-Respondent is a nullity. For the purpose of clarity, I state here that judgments relating to the damages of Rs. One Million are set aside and the judgments relating to the declaration that the marriage between the Plaintiff-Appellant and the 1st Defendant-Respondent a nullity are affirmed.

In view of the conclusion reached above, I answer the 1st question of law as follows. "The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court erred in rejecting the plea of prescription."

I answer the 2nd question of law in the affirmative. The 3rd question of law does not arise for consideration.

The learned District Judge is directed to enter decree in accordance with this judgment.

A.L. Shiran Gooneratne J.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff) instituted this action in the District Court of Negombo against the Defendant-Petitioner-Petitioner (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant) and prayed, inter-alia, to grant a declaration that the Plaintiff is the owner of the land more fully described in the 1st schedule to the Plaint, to grant an order declaring that the Plaintiff has acquired a prescriptive right to dispose water accumulating in his land, across the land more fully described in the 2nd schedule to flow down to Muthurajawela, to grant an enjoining order and an interim injunction preventing the Defendant filling soil in the land described in the 2nd schedule.

The Defendants position is that he cultivates "Gotu Kola" for export and therefore, a top layer of soil was necessary to be added for cultivation purposes.

The learned District Judge by order dated 03/02/2009, issued an interim order preventing the Defendant from filling soil on the land until the final determination of this action.

The Plaintiff has obtained several Commissions to survey the land in question and the resultant plans and commission reports tendered to Court are filed of record. On 20/10/2009, the Plaintiff made an application to amend the plaint. However, having obtained a final date to tender an Amended Plaint, the Plaintiff failed to do so.

Thereafter, the Plaintiff by Petition dated 04/05/2010, made an application in terms of Section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code to add parties named as 1st to 8th Respondents to the Plaint. Accordingly, the learned District Judge by order dated 24/09/2012, permitted the Plaintiff to add the 3rd and 5th Respondents to the said application, who are now sought to be added as 2nd and 3rd Defendants. Thereafter, the case was called on 20/01/2015, and was fixed for trial on 30/04/2015, against the 1st Defendant and ex-parte trial against the 2nd and 3rd Defendants.

On the date first fixed for trial, ie. 30/04/2015, on an application made by the Plaintiff, the case was taken out of the trial roll and listed to be called to accommodate parties to take steps.

On 21/02/2018, the Plaintiff filed an amended Plaint consisting amendments to the original Plaint dated 05/11/2008. The Defendant objected to the Amended Plaint and accordingly, the matter was fixed for inquiry.

After considering the written submissions tendered by both parties, the learned District Judge by his order dated 05/10/2018, permitted certain amendments proposed by the Plaintiff's amended plaint dated 21/02/2018. (The order dated 05/10/2018 is at p.386 marked 'X8')

Being aggrieved by the order of the learned District Judge permitting the Plaintiff to amend the Plaint, the Defendant appealed to the Provincial High Court of Negombo.

When the case came up for support on 21/11/2018, the Plaintiff was absent and unrepresented. The Court, having observed that the notices were dispatched, permitted the Counsel for the Defendant to support the application ex-parte. Having heard the Defendant, the Court by Order dated 21/11/2018, refused the said application. Being aggrieved by the said Order of the Provincial High Court, the Defendant-Petitioner-Appellant is before this Court to set aside the original order dated 05/10/2018 and the order given by the Court sitting in appeal dated 21/11/2018.

This Court by its order dated 13/02/2020, granted leave to appeal on questions of law set out in paragraph 19 (v), (vi), (vii), (xi) and (xv) of the Petition of Appeal dated 17/12/2018 which are set out below.

I. The learned District Court Judge and the learned High Court Judges have failed to consider that this case has been first fixed for trial on 30.04.2015 and therefore Section 93(2) of the Civil Procedure Code should apply in this case, and accordingly the requirements of Section 93(2) had to be satisfied before the amendment of plaint could be allowed;

II. The learned District Judge and the learned High Court Judges failed to consider that the Plaintiff was guilty of laches within the meaning of Section 93(2) and therefore the amendment of the plaint should have been refused;

III. The learned High Court judges failed to consider the time (nearly 10 years) taken by the Plaintiff to amend the plaint;

IV. The learned High Court Judges erred by failing to consider that the provisions of Section 21 of the Civil procedure Code cannot be read in isolation and that the same has to be read along with the provisions of Sections 93(1) and 93(2) which deal with amendment of pleadings including amendment of the plaint, as has been held in Colombo Shipping Co., Ltd. V. Chirayu Clothing (Pvt) Ltd, (1995) 2 SLR 97.

In the written submissions filed of record, the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff refers to the following consequential issue of law which is purported to have been raised on the said date, ie,

> "Whether the first date of trial can be considered as 30/04/2015, when the learned District Judge has taken this case out of the trial roll for further steps without any objections by the Petitioner".

When this matter was taken up for argument, both parties were in agreement that the main issue of contention between the parties was,

> "whether the provisions of Section 93(1) or 93(2) of the Civil Procedure Code would apply to the said application for amendment of Plaint."

The Defendant submits that the learned Judge sitting in appeal erred by failing to consider that the provisions of Section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be read in isolation but has to be read along with the provisions of Section 93(1) and 93(2) of the said Code. It is to be noted that prior to the impugned order which permitted the amendment of Plaint, the Plaintiff sought permission of Court to amend the plaint but failed to take necessary steps to that effect.

The position of the Defendant is that in the circumstances of this case, both the learned Trial Judge and the learned High Court Judge erred by applying Section 93(1) of the Civil Procedure Code. The Defendant contends that both courts have failed to appreciate the grounds to be considered as provided, before a Court makes an order in terms of Section 93(2). The Defendant argues that the original Plaint was filed in 2008 and the application for an Amended Plaint made almost 10 years later with no reasons given, has not been considered by Court and questions the Plaintiff's failure to give reasons to satisfy Court to permit the amendment, which in effect was not considered by Court. The Defendant also submits that both the Trial Judge and the learned Judge sitting in appeal failed to consider that the Plaintiff was guilty of laches within the meaning of Section 93(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Plaintiff's position is that in terms of Section 93(1), the date first fixed for trial is not necessarily the first date on which the case is first fixed for trial but would include any date to which the trial is postponed and therefore, the Trial Judge is given a wide discretion to allow amendments made prior to the first date of trial.

To strengthen this position, the Plaintiff relies on the Judgment delivered by the Court of Appeal in the case of Karunaratne vs. Alwis (2007) 1 SLR 214 and a similar view taken in the case of Sri Lanka Savings Bank vs. Global Tea Lanka (Pvt) Ltd and others SC/Appeal/ 171/2015, decided on 12/06/2019.

Accordingly, it is submitted that 30/04/2015 was not the date the case was first fixed for trial within the meaning of Section 93(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. The Plaintiff further states that since the case was fixed for pre-trial steps on 27/02/2018, the said date should be considered as the date first fixed for trial and not 30/04/2015.

It is also contended that since Section 93(1) of the Civil Procedure Code applies to the amendment of pleadings sought by the Plaintiff, it is not necessary to satisfy the requirements in Section 93(2) of the Civil Procedure Code as wide discretion is given to the learned District Judge to permit amendments which come under Section 93(1). It is further contended that the question of laches would not come into consideration since the laps of time was due to numerous steps taken and applications made by both parties. It is also noted by the Plaintiff that the Defendant did not object to the case been taken off the trial roll on 30/04/2015.

Section 93(1) and (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, as amended, reads thus: -

> "93 (1). Upon application made to it before the day first fixed for trial of the action, in the presence of, or after reasonable notice to all the parties to the action, the Court shall have full power of amending in its discretion, all pleadings in the action, by way of addition, or alteration, or of omission.
> 93 (2). On or after the day first fixed for trial of the action and before the final judgment, no application for the amendments of any pleadings shall be allowed unless the Court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded by the Court that grave and irremediable injustice will be caused if such amendment is not permitted, and on no other ground, and that the party so applying has not been guilty of laches."

As observed before, this case was first fixed for trial on 30/04/2015 and thereafter, the case was mentioned for steps in order to facilitate a commission to issue at the instance of the Plaintiff. After several dates of court sittings, the learned Trial Judge fixed the case for pre-trial hearing on 27/02/2018.

However, on 21/02/2018, the Plaintiff moved to amend the plaint at which point the Defendant objected. The amended Plaint dated 21/02/2018, seeks to add the 2nd and 3rd Defendants who were permitted to be added by order dated 24/09/2012, which is over five years from the date of the said order. It also seeks to amend paragraph 7 and 8 of the Plaint to include the 3rd and the 4th schedule, to describe the lands, over which the Plaintiff claims a servitude right to dispose water from his land to Muthurajawala.

It is noted that in paragraph 8 of the original plaint the Plaintiff describes that the flow of water from the land described in the 1st schedule over the land described in the 2nd schedule of the plaint to have prevailed for the past forty years.

Section 93 of the Civil Procedure Code was amended by Act No. 9 of 1991, and the rationale underlying the amendment introduced by the said Act was recognized by G. P. S. De Silva C.J. in the case of Kuruppuarachchi vs. Andreas (1996) 2 SLR 11, in the following manner;

> "The amendment introduced by Act No. 9 of 1991 was clearly intended to prevent the undue postponement of trials by placing a significant restriction on the power of the court to permit amendment of pleadings on or after the day first fixed for the trial of the action. An amendment of pleadings on the date of trial, more often than not, results in the postponement of the trial. In this connection it would not be inappropriate to refer to the observations of Sansoni, J. (as he then was) in Daryanani vs. Eastern Silk Emporium Ltd*., I have also always understood the rule to be that an amendment should be applied for as early as possible and as soon as it becomes apparent that it would be necessary".*

It was further observed that;

> "While the Court earlier discouraged amendment of pleadings on the date of trial. Now the court is precluded from allowing such amendments save on the ground postulated in the subsection."

In this background it would be pertinent to discuss as to what constitutes the first date fixed for trial within the meaning of Section 93(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

The 1st question of law is structured on the basis that, 30/04/2015 can be considered as the first date fixed for trial and therefore Section 93(2) of the Civil Procedure Code should apply.

In Ceylon Insurance Co. Ltd vs. Nanayakkara and Another (1999) 3 SLR 50, Weerasuriya J., inter alia, dealt with what constitutes the first date fixed of trial, when he observed;

> "that section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code provides for fixing the date of trial and such date constitutes, the day first fixed for trial. Section 48 of the Judicature Act provides for continuation of a trial before the Judge who succeeds the Judge before whom trial commenced. The discretion vested in that succeeding Judge either to continue with the trial or to commence proceedings afresh does not affect the nature of the order made in terms of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the fixing of the first trial date. Thus, the order made fixing the date of trial in terms of section 80, becomes the "day first fixed for trial" within the meaning of section 93 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code."

The same rational was echoed in the case of Maseena vs. Sahud and Another (2003) 3 SLR 109 where it was held that,

"Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code provides for fixing the date of trial and such date constitutes the day first fixed for trial."

The Plaintiff contended that the day first fixed for trial is not necessarily the first date on which the case is first fixed for trail but would include any date to which the trial is postponed and when an application for amendment of pleadings is made, the Judge is granted a discretion to permit amendments made prior to the first date of trial under Section 93(1) of the Civil Procedure Code.

The plaintiff relied on Karunaratne vs. Alwis (2007) 1 SLR 214, where Eric Basnayake J. took a wide approach following the ratio-decidendi in Siripura Hewavasam Pushpa vs. Leelawathie Bandaranayake and three others – (2004) 3 Sri LR 162), where S.N. Silva C.J. referring to the day first fixed for trial said thus:

"it is clear that the date of trial is not necessarily the first date on which the case is fixed for trial, but would also include any date to which the trial is postponed".

Thus, Eric Basnayake J. held:

"Therefore, the day first fixed for trial could mean the day the trial actually began. Any amendment made prior to the date the trial was begun therefore comes under section 93 (1) empowering the Judge granting wide discretion in allowing amendments."

However, in Kanagaraj vs. Alankara (2010) 1 SLR 185, Eric Basnayake J. commenting on "the initial date that was fixed for the trial", stated that:

> "the fact that the trial did not commence has no bearing. What is important is the date, first fixed for trial."

The Plaintiff also relied in the unreported case of Sri Lanka Savings Bank Ltd Vs. Global Tea Lanka (Pvt) Ltd & Others, SC/App./171/2015, where the Supreme Court discussed the "date of trial first fixed" or "first date of trial" and "the date fixed for the trial of an action" in the context where the Court had struck out the date from the trial roll scheduled for the date appointed for the trial, as such, the facts of the said case can be clearly distinguished from the instant application.

Section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code stipulates an appointed date for the trial of the action. Journal entry dated 20/01/2015, makes it abundantly clear that the appointed date for the trial of the action was 30/04/2015. In an action, the appointed date for the trial of the action and/or the first date fixed for trial can be one and the same.

As observed in Ceylon Insurance Co. Ltd vs. Nanayakkara and Another (1999) 3 SLR 50 (supra):

> "the order made fixing the date of trial in terms of section 80, becomes the "day first fixed for trial" within the meaning of section 93 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code".

In this case, the amendments sought to be made are moved after the day first fixed for trial and therefore, for the reasons set out above, it is imperative that Section 93(2) should apply.

Application of Section 93(2) was discussed by Ranaraja J. in Gunasekera and another Vs. Abdul Latiff (1995) 1 SLR 225 at 232, where he stated thus: -

> "The amendments to pleadings on or after the first date of trial can now be allowed only in very limited circumstances. It prohibits court from allowing an application for amendment at this stage unless (1) it is satisfied that grave and irremediable injustice will be caused if the amendment is not permitted, and (2) the party applying has not been guilty of laches. On no other ground can court allow an application for an amendment of pleadings. Furthermore, court is obliged to record reasons for concluding that the two conditions referred to have been satisfied."

In the impugned judgment, the learned Trial Judge noted the laxity on the part of the Plaintiff to follow the appropriate procedure to add the 2nd and the 3rd Defendants in keeping with the order dated 24/09/2012.

The Court further observed that in view of the orders made on 24/09/2012 and 17/01/2013, the Plaintiff failed to amend the Plaint to disclose a cause of action and also the relief sought against the Defendants to be added. The learned Trail Judge permitted the Plaint to be amended on the basis that the amendments would not change the scope of the action or cause any prejudice to the Defendant already made known. The Court, having noted that this action was instituted in 2008, observed that the Plaintiff did not act promptly according to procedure prescribed by law to tender the proposed amendments. However, subject to costs the Plaintiff was permitted to amend the Plaint.

The lower Court in its order emphasized the fact that, subsequent to an addition of a party, it is mandatory that the Plaint is amended in terms of Section 21 of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned President's Counsel for the Defendant argued that Section 21 cannot be considered in isolation and cited the case Colombo Shipping Co vs. Chirayu Clothing (1995) 2 SLR 97, where Ranaraja J. dealing with the said issue extensively, held that,

"Since the amendment by Act, No. 9 of 1991, if an application is made to add a party as a defendant after the first date of trial, Sections 18, 21 and 93(2) of the Code have to be read together, in allowing or refusing such an application".

The learned Judges sitting in appeal too, observed that an application was not filed to add the 2nd and 3rd Defendants, even though the Court permitted the said parties to be added by order dated, 24/09/2012. The Court also observed the long delay on the part of the Plaintiff to amend the Plaint, however, the Court did not make any finding on the party applying, of being guilty of lashes.

Even though the trial court and the Court sitting in appeal recognized the delay on the party applying for an amended plaint, failed to make a finding that a legal right or claim will not be enforced or allowed if a long delay in asserting the right or claim has prejudiced the adverse party.

The doctrine of laches is based on the maxim that "equity aids the vigilant and not those who slumber on their rights." (Black's Law Dictionary). The outcome is that a legal right or claim will not be enforced or allowed if a long delay in asserting the right or claim has prejudiced the adverse party.

In Paramalingam vs. Sirisena and Another (2001) 2 SLR 239, Wigneswaran J. drew a distinction between "before the day first fixed for trial" and "on or after the day first fixed for the trial." Where it was held that:

> "The Court's discretion was unfettered with regard to amendments before the first date of trial subject to an application having to be made to do it with notice to all other parties. But its powers on or after the first date of trial were severely curtailed. The present Section 93 has come through many vicissitudes".

and further observed that;

> "Laches means negligence or unreasonable delay in asserting or enforcing a right. There are two equitable principles which come into play when a statute refers to a party being guilty of laches. The first doctrine is that delay defeats equities. The second is that equity aids the vigilant and not the indolent. Lord Camden said "Nothing can call forth this Court into activity but conscience, good faith and reasonable diligence"

Similar conclusions were made in Nimalraj vs. Thamarajah and others (2005) 3 SLR 309; Rushantha Perera vs. Wijesekara (2005) 3 SLR 105; Gunasekera vs. Abdul Latiff, (1995), 1 SLR 225; Ceylon Insurance Co. Ltd vs. Nanayakkara (1999) 3 SLR 50;

Colombo Shipping Co. Ltd. vs. Chirayu Clothing (Pvt) Ltd. (supra); Avudiappan vs. Indian Overseas Bank, (1995) 2 SLR 131; Kuruppuarachchi vs. Andreas (supra); Paramalingam vs. Sirisen and Another (supra); Ranaweera vs. Jinadasa (2001)2 SLR 239.

Therefore, it is well founded and prudent to pose the question as to whether the long delay on the part of the Plaintiff in asserting his right or claim has prejudiced the interest of the Defendant.

The delay of over 10 years on the part of the Plaintiff to move for an amendment of the Plaint was observed by both courts, however, there was no order made or reasons given by the Court to absolve the Plaintiff of such delay. The delay on the part of the Plaintiff is not reasonably explained.

The cause of action which is alleged to have accrued against the 2nd and the 3rd Defendants arise as a result of the right to dispose of rain water from the Plaintiff's land to Muturajawela. In paragraph 8 of the original Plaint, the Plaintiff states that for the last 40 years the water collected in the Plaintiff's land (described in the 1st schedule) flowed across the 1st Defendant's land (described in the 2nd schedule) to Muturajawela. The Defendant was made a party to this case on the basis that he obstructed the flow of rain water by unlawfully filling gravel in the land described in the 2nd schedule, which was brought to the attention of the relevant authorities. Having heard both parties the District Court issued an injunctive order preventing the Defendant from filling soil in the said land.

In Ranaweera vs. Jinadasa (2001)2 SLR 239, Amerasinghe, J. held that:

> "No postponements must be granted or absence excused, except upon emergencies occurring after the fixing of the date, which could not have been anticipated or avoided with reasonable diligence, and which cannot otherwise be provided for."

There is no mention in the original Plaint that the rain water collected in the Plaintiff's land flowed over the lands described in the 3rd and 4th schedules. At the time of filing the original Plaint, the Plaintiff was aware that for the last 40 years the rain water flowed to Muturajawela across the Defendant's land. The proposed amendment to the Planit is to emphasize the fact that the rain water flowed to Muturajawela across the described lands belonging to the 2nd and 3rd Defendants. Therefore, an amendment to the Plaint would not have arisen if the Plaintiff acted with due diligence when filing the Plaint.

Apart from the procedural delay more akin to the Plaintiff's failure, as observed, an application was made way back in 20/10/2009, where the Plaintiff moved to file an amended Plaint, but failed to do so even on the final date granted by Court. (Journal entry 18 page 28).

Taking into consideration the delay and the circumstances peculiar to this case, an amended Plaint, if permitted, would cause grave prejudice to the Defendant. Therefore, the Court holds that the application to amend the Plaint should be rejected in terms of Section 93(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Accordingly, the 1st to 4th questions of law are decided in favor of the Defendant Appellant.

In the consequential issue of law, the Plaintiff-Respondent points out that the learned District Judge has taken this case out of the trial roll for further steps without any objection by the Petitioner. As held in Kuruppuarachchi vs. Andreas (supra):

> "The rationale underlying the amendment introduced by Act No. 9 of 1991 is when the Court earlier discouraged amendment of pleadings on the date of trial, now the court is precluded from allowing such amendments save on the ground postulated in the subsection."

In terms of Section 93 (2), the onus is on the party who moves for an amendment to satisfy Court,

> "that grave and irremediable injustice will be caused if such amendment is not permitted, and on no other ground, and that the party so applying has not been guilty of laches."

Therefore, the absence of an application objecting to listing the case to be called, cannot be held against the Defendant.

In the circumstances, the consequential issue of law raised by the Plaintiff is answered in the negative.

Accordingly, the order of the learned District Judge of Negombo dated 05/10/2018, and the Judgment dated 21/11/2018, delivered by the High Court of Civil Appeal Negombo is set aside. The application to amend the Plaint is rejected. I make no order as to costs.

Appeal is allowed.

The Petitioner Jaliya Chithran Wickramasuriya has come before this court challenging the decision of the Court of Appeal, to uphold the preliminary objection taken before the said court and dismiss the said application, on several grounds as averred in the petition dated 23rd April 2018 filed before this court.

When the instant application was supported before this court on 17.02.2021, court having considered the material placed before court, had granted Special Leave on the following questions of law.

Did not the Court of Appeal err in law by failing to sufficiently consider and/or appreciate that;

i. Ex-facie there was no material before court that in fact the decision contained in the document annexed here to marked P-12 was that of His Excellency the President ii. What was being challenged Ex-facie was that of the decision of the 2nd Respondent and/or of the 1st Respondent and not that of His Excellency the President and at most the 2nd Respondent is seeking to justify his decision contained in P-12 on purported direction of the President

The Petitioner who was first appointed as the Consular General of Sri Lanka to the United States of America (Los Angeles) for a period of two years commencing form 22.01.2007 by the then President of Sri Lanka was recalled on 11.03. 2008 and was then appointed as the Ambassador of Sri Lanka to the United Stated of America (Washington) on 30.06.2008 by the President of Sri Lanka.

His term of office had come to an end since 15.04.2014 and he had relinquished his duties as the Ambassador since then.

As submitted by the Petitioner, after relinquished his duties in United States of America, he had come back to Sri Lanka and whilst he was in Sri Lanka, proceedings were instituted before the Magistrate's Court of Fort for alleged wrongdoing in respect of the purchase of premises in Washington DC.

Whist denying any allegation levelled against him, the Petitioner had submitted that, in the course of his duties as Ambassador, the Petitioner was instructed by the Government of Sri Lanka to purchase a new chancery building to house the residence of the Ambassador to the United States and a building located at 3025 White Haven Street, NW, Washington DC was purchased on behalf of the Government of Sri Lanka acting in terms of the instructions given by the Government of Sri Lanka on a decision of the Cabinet of Ministers.

When the Petitioner arrived at the Air Port on 17th November 2016 with his wife, in order to go abroad, he was stopped at the Air Port and released from custody on the undertaking that he would appear before the Financial Crime Investigation Division on the same day. The Petitioner when visited the said unit on the same day, was arrested for alleged offences committed under the "Offences Against Public Property Act" and remanded for fiscal custody after producing him before the Fort Magistrate's Court under case number B21/2016.

The Petitioner who was enlarged on bail on 17th March 2017 after being in remand custody for several months, was permitted by court to travel abroad in order to receive medical treatment for a period of eight weeks and had left Sri Lanka on 17th July 2017 to United States. On 3rd September when he was at Atlanta Air Port to leave for Chile, he was stopped by the law enforcement authorities and was extensively questioned on the same property transaction which is the subject matter of case number B21/2016. United States Law Enforcement Authorities had confirmed to his Lawyer, who was retained to represent him in the United States, that he is under investigation in respect of the same property transaction which is the subject matter in case number B21/2016.

The Petitioner has further submitted that, being the Sri Lanka's Ambassador to the United States of America from July 2008 to May 2014, he is entitled for immunity in respect of acts performed in the exercise of his functions as a member of the Mission in terms of Article 39 (2) of the Vienna Convention of Diplomatic Relations read with section 2 of the Diplomatic Privileges Act No. 9 of 1996 even after ceasing to hold office. However, it was brough to the notice of the Hon, Magistrate Fort on 30th October 2017 by the officer who represented Financial Crime Investigation Division, that the diplomatic immunities and privileges enjoyed by the Petitioner had been waived by the 1st Respondent, the then Minister of Foreign Affairs and had taken steps to inform the Government of United States of this decision. A copy of the said decision was later delivered to the Attorney at Law who represented the Petitioner before the Fort Magistrate's Court. (P-12)

Since the Petitioner could not leave United States of America pending the investigations carried out by the United States Law Enforcement Authorities based on the purported waiver granted by the Foreign Ministry, which is, according to the Petitioner is ultra vires and unlawful, an Application was filed by the Petitioner before the Court of Appeal,

a) Seeking an order in the nature of a Writ of Certiorari quashing the decision contained in P-12
b) Seeking an order in the nature of Mandamus directing the 1st and/or the 2nd Respondent to inform the Government of United States of America that the Petitioner continues to enjoy all Diplomatic privileges and immunities in terms of Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Privileges and Immunities in respect of acts performed by him in exercise of his functions as the Ambassador to the United States of America

The second Respondent filed an affidavit before the Court of Appeal placing before court the circumstances under which the impugned document the "Note Verbal dated 23.10.2017" (P-12 or R-8) was issued and paragraphs 9 and 10 of the said affidavits reads thus;

> "9. I state that Note Verbal No. 756 dated 23.10.2017 was received from the Embassy of the United States of America, requesting the waiver of diplomatic immunity owning to the Petitioner's conduct pertaining to the purchase of the Sri Lankan Embassy in Washington and the laundering US $ 332,000 via Shell Companies. A certified copy of the aforementioned Diplomatic Note is annexed hereto marked as 2R7 and pleaded as part and parcel hereof.

10. I state that pursuant to the instructions received from His Excellency the President, the Embassy of the United States of America was informed by way of Note Verbal dated 23.10.2017 that the immunity conferred on the Petitioner was waived enabling the relevant authorities in the United States of America to conduct investigations into the said incident. As the 1st Respondent was overseas, the aforementioned decision was conveyed by me to the Embassy of United States of America. A certified copy of the Note Verbal dated 23.10.2017 is annexed hereto marked 2R8 and is pleaded as part and parcel hereof."

A preliminary objection was raised by the State with regard to the maintainability of the application before the Court of Appeal based on the affidavit filed by the 2nd Respondent referred to above. It was contended on behalf of the Respondents, that the Court of Appeal does not have jurisdiction to entertain the said application as the decision to waive diplomatic immunity enjoyed by the Petitioner was based on a decision taken by His Excellency the President, which was conveyed to the Embassy of the United States of America by the Secretary to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

The Court of Appeal upheld the above preliminary objection and dismissed the application which was pending before the Court of Appeal.

It is the above decision of the Court of Appeal is challenged in the instant application before this court and this court having considered the material placed before it had decided to grant Special Leave on two questions of law as referred to above.

Sri Lanka being a signatory to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations 1961, had given effect to its obligations by introducing Diplomatic Privileges Act No. 9 of 1996. Section 2 of the said Act had provided “the Articles in the convention” to have the force of Law in Sri Lanka.

The Diplomatic immunity enjoyed by a diplomatic agent (Diplomatic Agent is identified under the convention as “the head of the mission or a member of the diplomatic staff of the mission”) its limitation and waiver is discussed under the convention in Article 31, 32 and 39 as follows;

Article 31

1. A diplomatic agent shall enjoy immunity from the criminal jurisdiction of the receiving State. He shall also enjoy immunity from its civil and administrative jurisdiction, except in the case of

1. Every person entitled to privileges and immunities shall enjoy them from the moment he enters the territory of the receiving State on proceeding to take up his post or, if already in its territory, from the moment when his appointment is notified to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs or such other ministry as may be agreed.
2. When the functions of a person enjoying privileges and immunities have come to an end, such privileges and immunities shall normally cease at the moment when he leaves the country, or on expiry of a reasonable period in which to do so, but shall subsist until that time, even in case of armed conflict. However, with respect to acts performed by such a person in the exercise of his functions as a member of the mission, immunity shall continue to subsist.

Article 32

1. The immunity from jurisdiction of diplomatic agents and of persons enjoying immunity under Article 37 may be waived by the sending state
2. Waiver must always be express
3. ……..

It was the position of the Petitioner that, he is entitled for immunity even though he is no longer holding a diplomatic position, under Article 39 (2) of the Convention for acts committed in the capacity of the Ambassador of Sri Lanka to the United States of America. As already referred to in this judgement, the Petitioner was extensively questioned by the Law Enforcement Authorities with regard to a property transaction which was taken place during his tenor as the Ambassador of Sri Lanka to the United Stated of America.

In these circumstances it is clear that the matter that was investigated by the Law enforcement Authorities of the United States of America was linked with the official work of the Petitioner as the Ambassador to the United States America, and this position is confirmed by the United States Authorities, when they send the Diplomatic Note to the Foreign Ministry of Sri Lanka Requesting the waiver of diplomatic immunity of the Petitioner to the effect;

"As the Ministry is aware, Mr. Wickramasooriya, former Ambassador to the United States, is under investigation for the misappropriation, theft and embezzlement of public funds by a > public official and the related laundering of those fund. The Embassy has been informed that United States Law Enforcement Authority maintain that during the 2013 purchase of the Sri Lankan Embassy in Washington DC, Mr. Wickramasooriya falsely inflated the sales price of the embassy by approximately $ 332,000"

Article 32 (1) and (2), of the convention provides for the sending state to waive immunity granted under Article 39 (2) of the Convention and it is the said determination made under Article 32 (1) and (2) was challenged by the Petitioner before the Court of Appeal.

As submitted by the 2nd Respondent, when the Note verbal dated 23.10.2017 form the embassy of United States America requesting the waiver of the Diplomatic Immunity of the Petitioner was received by the Foreign Ministry, he received instruction from His Excellency the President to waive the Diplomatic Immunity of the Petitioner, and that was communicated to the Embassy of United States by Note verbal dated 23.10.2017 (on the same day)

The Petitioner's entitlement for diplomatic immunity derived from the appointment he received as a diplomatic agent, i.e., as the Ambassador to the United States of America, and the said appointment he received from His Excellency the President under Article 33 (c) of the Constitution, (the text that was in operation as at the date of his appointment) which reads as follows;

> Article 33 In addition to the powers, and functions expressly conferred or imposed on or assigned to him by the Constitution or by any written law whether enacted before or after the commencement of the Constitutions, the President shall have the power-

(c) to receive and recognize and to appoint and accredit Ambassadors, High Commissioners, Plenipotentiaries and other diplomatic agents.

Except for the powers to appoint a diplomatic agent, the constitution (the text that was in operation at the time he was appointed as well as the text that was in operation as at 23.10.2017) is silent on the immunities that derives from such appointment as a diplomatic agent, but it is only the Diplomatic Privileges Act No. 9 of 1996 and the convention which speaks of the entitlement and the removal of Privileges of a diplomatic agent.

As already discussed, under Article 32 of the Convention, the sending state may waive the immunity and it must always be express. Section 2 (3) of the Diplomatic Privileges Act No. 9 of 1996 speaks of a situation where the waiver of Diplomatic immunity by a head of a mission or by a person for the time being performing the functions of a head of a mission, and according to the said section such waiver "shall be deemed to be waiver by the state."

Therefore it is clear, that in the absence of any Constitutional provision with regard to the removal of privileges that derived to a diplomatic agent by appointing him to the said position by Article 33 of the Constitution, under the provisions of the Diplomatic Privileges Act No. 9 of 1996 read with the provisions of the convention, it is the sending state that is entrusted with the removal of diplomatic immunity of a diplomatic agent.

Article 30 (1) and 35 (1) of the Constitution (the text that was in operation on 23.10.2017) provides that;

Article 30 (1) There shall be a President of the Republic of Sri Lanka, who is the Head of the State, the Head of the Executive and of the Government and the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces

Article 35 (1) While any person holds office as President of the Republic of Sri Lanka, no civil or criminal proceedings shall be instituted or continued against the President in respect of anything done or omitted to be done by the President, either in his official or private capacity. Provided that nothing in this paragraph shall be reads and construed as restricting the right of any person to make an application under Article 126 against the Attorney General, in respect of anything done or omitted to be done by the President, in his official capacity; Provided further that the Supreme Court shall have no jurisdiction to pronounce upon the exercise of powers of the President under Article 33 (2) (g)

The President's power to remove the diplomatic immunity as the Head of the State was never challenged neither before the Court of Appeal no before the Supreme Court by the Petitioner but one of the main arguments of the Petitioner was that, ex-facie there is no decision by His Excellency the President before Court, to invoke the immunity of His Excellency the President under Article 35 of the Constitution.

The instant appeal was filed before this court by the Petitioner on 2nd May 2018 but the matter was not supported but had gone down for several days for various reasons. On 17th December 2020 the Petitioner had filed a motion along with several new documents and moved to support the said motion before this court. At that stage learned Addition Solicitor General who represented the Substituted 2B Respondent had moved to file an affidavit from the Substituted 2B Respondent explaining certain matters.

It is an accepted legal principle, for the parties to argue their appeals and the Appellate Court to decide the appeal on the same material that was available before the original court. When the Petitioner filed the instant appeal before this court he had never moved or sought permission to submit fresh evidence before this court. However, two years after invoking the jurisdiction of this court, the Petitioner had filed some fresh evidence without seeking permission of this court along with the motion dated 17th December 2020 and moved to support the said motion before this court. The day on which the Petitioner was to support the motion, state on behalf of the substituted 2B Respondent, moved to file an affidavit from the said Respondent in order to explain certain development that took place when the instant application is pending before this court. The learned President's Counsel who represented the Petitioner neither supported his motion on that day nor objected to the application by the state.

Substituted 2B Respondent, the incumbent Secretary of the Foreign Ministry had swarm an affidavit with annexures marked R1-R7A and tendered before this along with a motion dated 11th February 2021.

Even though this court was not made to understand any reason as to why fresh material is needed to proceed with the instant appeal by any of the parties before filing the said material, I can observe a similarity between the two sets of documents filed before this court.

I am also mindful of Article 127 (2) of the Constitution which reads thus,

> Article 127 (2) The Supreme Court shall, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, have sole and exclusive cognizance by way of appeal from any order, judgement, decree or sentence made by the Court of Appeal, where any appeal lies in law to the Supreme Court, and it may affirm, reverse or vary any such order judgment, decree or sentence of the Court of Appeal and may issue such directions to any Court of First Instance or order a new trial or further hearing in any proceedings as the justice of the case may require, and may also call for and admit fresh or additional evidence if the interest of > justice so demands and may in such event, direct that such evidence be recorded by the Court of Appeal or any Court of First Instance. (emphasis added)

When the instant application was supported before this court on 17.02.2021, three years after it was filed in the registry, the said fresh material was available before the court and presumably, the parties had referred to the fresh material and would have influenced this court in granting Special Leave. In these circumstances it is in the interest of justice, that this court would consider the fresh material that was placed before court by both parties.

However, I am further mindful of the fact that it is the 2nd Respondent, the Secretary to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a responsible Public Servant, had filed an affidavit before this court informing the circumstances under which he issued 2R8 when the matter was originally supported before the Court of Appeal, and the learned Additional Solicitor General who represented the said Respondent before court had based his preliminary objection to the contents of the said affidavit.

Even though there is reference to several documents that was exchanged between the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Embassy of the United States and Department of State, Washington since 2nd July 2020, in the affidavit filed before this court by the 2B added Respondent, paragraph 9 of the said affidavit refers to a Note Verbal dated 2nd July 2020 as follows;

> "9. I state that Note Verbal bearing No. L/POL/33 dated 23rd October 2017, (by which the diplomatic immunity enjoyed by the Petitioner was waived) was, withdrawn by Note verbal bearing No. L/POL/33 (vii) dated 2nd July 2020, for the reasons contained therein. A certified copy of the Note verbal bearing No. L/POL/33 (VII) dated 2nd July 2020 is annexed hereto marked 2R3 and pleaded as part and parcel hereof."

The reasons for the withdrawal of Note Verbal dated 23rd October 2017 was explained in the second and third paragraphs of the Note Verbal dated 2nd July 2020 (2R3) as follows;

> 2. Although, the aforesaid Note Verbal appears to have been issued by the Ministry of Foreign relations on the basis that such instructions have been issues by Former President, His Excellency Maithripala Sirisena, the Presidential Secretariat and Ministry of Foreign Relations has been able to verify that no records are available in both offices to prove that Former President has issued such instructions.
> 3. Based on above mentioned observations, the Ministry of Foreign Relations is of the view that the said waiver is not legitimate and hence the aforesaid Note Verbal No. L/POL/33 dated 23rd October 2017 is withdrawn."

Even though the 2B added Respondent had not explained the circumstances under which a search was carried out, as to referred in paragraph two above, he has further, failed to inform this court when he is submitting an affidavit to consider as evidence before this court, whether he checked with the author of the previous affidavit, who said to have issued 2R8 (Note verbal dated 23rd October 2017) since the Court of Appeal had considered and acted upon his affidavit as evidence before the said court.

The Petitioner too had filed almost the same set of documents along with the motion dated 17th December 2020 and therefore it is not necessary to consider the said documents separately in this judgment but, it appears to me that both the Petitioner as well as the 2A added Respondent are now disputing a factual position submitted before the Court of Appeal by the predecessor of the 2B added Respondent.

The Petitioner had originally gone before the Court of Appeal seeking orders in the nature of Writ of Certiorari and Writ of Mandamus and the nature of this application before the Supreme Court has not changed even though the matter before this court is an appeal against the order of the Court of Appeal. In the Petition filed before this court, the Petitioner had sought the following relief among few other interim orders from this court.

b) set aside the order of the Court of Appeal dated 29th March 2018 in case No.CA/Writ/416/2017;

d) issue an order in the nature of a Writ of Certiorari quashing the decision of Respondents contained in the documents annexed marked "P12" to the Petitioner in Court of Appeal case No. CA/Writ/416/2017;

e) Issue an order in the nature of Writ of Mandamus directing the 1st and/or 2nd Respondent to write to the Government of the United States of America, informing that the Portioner continue to enjoy all the diplomatic privileges and immunities in terms of Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Privileges and immunities respect of acts performed by him in exercise of his functions the America and United Mexican States;

When the major facts are in dispute the courts are reluctant to issue a Writ of Mandamus and this was considered by this Court in the case of Dr. Puwanendan and Another Vs. Premasiri and two others (2009) Sri LR 107

This is a case where the Petitioner had sought a Writ of Mandamus to compel the Registrar of Lands to remove an entry in the records of the Land Registry. Whilst affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal and also following a decision of the Court of Appeal in a similar matter, Thilakawardene (J) had observed as follows;

…….. "On 5th March 2008 the Court of Appeal by its judgment, dismissed the applications filed by the Appellant stating *inter-aila t*hat the Appellant's case was based on "disputed facts" and therefore the Court was not inclined issue such a Writ. Despite the significant evidence to support the Appellant's allegation, we believe this dismissal to have been legally correct.

The nature of the Writ of Mandamus was clearly articulated in the case of Thajudeen Vs. Sri Lanka Tea Board and Another (1981) 2 Sri LR 471. In Thajudeen, the Honorable Justice Ranasinghe, quoting de. Smith's Judicial Review of Administrative Action (4th ed) 540, 561 stated that,

'Mandamus has always been awarded as an extraordinary, residuary and supplementary remedy to be granted only when there is no other means of obtaining justice. Even though all other requirements for securing the remedy have been satisfied by the applicant, the court will decline to exercise its discretion in his favour if a specific alternative remedy equally convenient beneficial and effectual is available'

Thus, the Writ of Mandamus is principally a discretionary remedy a legal tool for the dispensation of justice, when no other remedy is available. Given the power of such a remedy the common law. Surrounding this remedy requires multiple conditions that must be met prior to the issuance of a writ by court. Only if (a) the major facts are not in dispute and the legal result of the facts are not subject to controversy and (b)……."

By submitting an affidavit before this court 2B added Respondent had informed that, all his efforts to find any documentary proof with regard to any decision that was communicated from the Presidential Secretariat to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was failed but he has not taken up the position that there was no such decision by His Excellency the President on or around 23.10.2017 to withdraw the Diplomatic immunity enjoyed by the Petitioner with regard to the official acts committed by him during his tenor as the Ambassador to the United States of America.

However, the affidavit filed before the Court of Appeal by the 2nd Respondent who said to have received such instruction and acted on the said instruction and communicated such instruction by Note Verbal dated 23.10.2017 was not rejected or denied by any authority before this court.

In the said circumstances, I am not inclined to consider granting any relief as prayed in paragraphs (b), (d) and (e) referred to above based on the fresh evidence placed before this court by both parties, since major facts with regard to the issues of Note Verbal dated 23rd October 2017 are disputed by the said evidence before this court.

When considering the main appeal that was filed before this court, it is further observed that the Court of Appeal had correctly allowed the preliminary objection raised by the state, based on the affidavit filed by the 2nd Respondent before the said court. The decision of the Court of Appeal was mainly based on Article 35 of the constitution.

During the arguments before this court, the learned President's Counsel who represented the Petitioner relied upon the decisions in Reys Vs. Al-malki and Another (2017) UK SC 61, AC 735 and Brigadier Andige Priyanka Indunil Fernando Vs. Majuran Sathananthan Case No. Co/1091/2020 and CO/1850/2020 decision of High Court of Justice Queen Bench division;

As observed by me both the above decisions refer to the diplomatic immunity enjoyed by diplomatic agent and how the domestic court should react to those in compliance with the convention.

However, I see no relevance of any one of those decisions to the instant case, since what was challenged before the Court of Appeal was the decision of the Sending state to waive the diplomatic immunity that was enjoyed by the Petitioner under Article 39 (2) of the convention. When the sending state had decided to Act under Article 32 of the convention on a request by the receiving state, there is no dispute with regard to acts performed by the diplomatic agent whether it comes within the immunity or not.

For the reasons given in my judgement, I see no merit in the appeal before us. The appeal is therefore dismissed with cost fixed at Rs. 50,000/-.

The Plaintiff-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as "Appellant") instituted this action against the Defendant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as "Respondent") seeking a declaration of title to the land called "Udappen Karai Kani" more fully described in the 3rd Schedule to the plaint and for his ejectment. The Respondent made a cross-claim for a declaration of title based on prescriptive title.

The learned District Judge dismissed the action on the basis that the Appellant had failed to establish his title to the corpus. The cross-claim of the Respondent was also dismissed on the same basis.

Aggrieved by the judgment of the District Court, the Appellant appealed to the High Court of Civil Appeal of the North Western Province holden in Kurunegala which appeal was dismissed and hence this appeal.

Leave to appeal has been granted on the following questions of law:

1. Have their Lordships of the High Court erred in law when they came to the finding that 'the admission of the deeds in evidence itself is not proof of title'?
2. Have their Lordships of the High Court erred in law when they come to the finding that the admitted documents P1, P2 and P3 need further proof in terms of Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance?
3. Have their Lordships of the High Court erred in law when they failed to appreciate that admitted documents P1, P2 and P3 are evidence for all purposes of law?

4. Have their Lordships of the High Court erred in law when they failed to appreciate that there was no further proof needed to establish the title of the Plaintiff in view of the admission of documents P1, P2 and P3?
5. Whether the objection raised in respect of the deeds marked P1, P2 and P3 prior to the commencement of the Defendant's case on 16.08.2006 is a valid and acceptable objection to the admissibility of the same?

The crux of the Appellant's case is that he obtained title to the corpus by deeds marked P1, P2 and P3 executed in his favour by Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma. These deeds were objected to when first produced and therefore were marked subject to proof but were read in evidence without any objection at the end of the case of the Appellant. It is on this basis that the Appellant contends that they are evidence for all purposes and that no further proof is required. However, the Respondent counters by claiming that the requirements in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance have not been satisfied and hence the three deeds P1, P2 and P3 cannot be used as evidence. Questions of law Nos. 2, 3 and 5 cover these conflicting arguments.

The contrasting positions taken by the parties are based on several authorities emanating from this Court. In Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another v. Jugolinija-Boal East [(1981) 1 Sri.L.R. 18 at 24] Samarakoon C.J. held that:

> "If no objection is taken when at the close of a case documents are read in evidence they are evidence for all purposes of the law. This is the cursus curiae of the original Civil Courts."

This was cited with approval and followed in Balapitiye Gunananda Thero v. Thalalle Methananda Thero [(1997) 2 Sri.L.R. 101].

However, this Court has recently held that those authorities do not apply to a document which is required by law to be attested and that such a document can be used in evidence only if the requirements in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance are satisfied [Mohamed Naleem Mohamed Ismail v. Samsulebbe Hamithu (S.C. Appeal 04/2016, S.C.M. 02.04.2018), Dadallage Mervin Silva v. Mohamed Rosaid Misthihar (S.C. Appeal 45/2010, S.C.M. 11.06.2019)]. Nonetheless, Amarasekera J. has in his minority judgment in Kugabalan v. Ranaweera [S.C. Appeal 36/2014, S.C.M. 12.02.2021] held that in a civil action, if the relevant document is not impeached or challenged through issues, the ratio in Jugolinija-Boal East is still valid and applies even with regard to deeds, but if the deed is impeached or challenged through an issue raised, it has to be proved as per the provisions of Evidence Ordinance.

In my view, there is no need for this court to venture into examining questions of law Nos. 2, 3 and 5 and the different views taken in the above cases.

The principal submission of the Appellant, as embodied in questions of law Nos. 1 and 4 is that once the deeds marked P1, P2 and P3 are admitted in evidence, no further evidence is required to prove the title of the Appellant.

Therefore, the matter before court can be decided by examining these two questions of law only, without consideration of questions of law Nos. 2, 3 and 5. The reason is that even where a deed of transfer can be used in evidence after having satisfied the requirements in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, its contents are not conclusive as to the title of the vendor.

Let me explain this statement in some detail. Section 3 of the Evidence Ordinance states that a fact is said to be "proved" when, after considering the matters before it, the court either believes it to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists. It goes on to state that a fact is said to be "disproved" when, after considering the matters before it, the court either believes that it does not exist, or considers its non-existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it does not exist.

Clearly the court is directed to consider all matters before it in deciding whether a fact has been proved or not. In the case of a deed of transfer, the contents of the deed itself is not conclusive evidence of the title of the vendee as submitted on behalf of the Appellant.

For example, a deed of transfer may state that A sold to B the land more fully described therein. The recital may further state that A had good title to the land due to its sale to A by C. However the probative value of the contents of this deed, though admitted in evidence, will be impinged if evidence is led to prove that in fact C did not have good title to pass onto A.

Therefore I will examine the factual situation on the hypothesis that deeds marked P1, P2 and P3 can be used in evidence.

I observe that the title of his predecessor is set out in all three deeds relied on by the Appellant marked P1, P2 and P3.

In deed No. 17634 dated 17th November 2000 (P1) attested by M.M. Iqbal, Notary Public, the recital describes the title of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma as follows:

> "upon inheritance from my Father-in-Law Muthu Vyran Muthurakku Pillai who possessed upon deed No. 1670 dated 1932.7.6 and attested by F. Thambyaiah of Chilaw Notary Public and by deed No. 10945 of 1924.4.15 and attested by B.N.F. Jayasekera of Chilaw Notary Public. (inheritance and undisturbed possession devolved on me though (sic) my late husband Muthu Rakku Kathikamanpillai, for well over thirty (30) years)…"

In deed No. 17635 dated 17th November 2000 (P2) attested by M.M. Iqbal, Notary Public, the recital describes the title of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma as follows:

> "upon inheritance from my Father-in-Law Muthu Vyran Muthu Rakkupillai who possessed upon deed No. 1000 dated 1930.9.9 and attested by F. Thambyaiah of Chilaw Notary Public and by deed No. 1467 dated 1930.9.20 attested by F. Thambyaiah of Chilaw Notary Public. (The inheritance and undisturbed and uninterrupted possession devolved on me through my late husband Muthu Rakku Kathikamanpillai, for well over thirty (30) years…"

In deed No. 17636 dated 17th November 2000 (P3) attested by M.M. Iqbal, Notary Public, the recital describes the title of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma as follows:

> "upon inheritance from my late Father-in-Law Muthu Vyran Muthu Rakkupillai who possessed upon deed No. 575 dated 1925.6.20 and attested by F. Thambyaiah of Chilaw Notary Public, by deed No. 11335 of 1924.10.4 and deed No. 974 of 1912.7.15 and deed No. 19289 of 1935.8.3 and all three deeds attested by B.N.F. Jayasekera of Chilaw Notary Public.. (The inheritance and undisturbed possession devolved on me through my late husband Muthu Rakku Kathikamanpillai over 30 years…"

No doubt the recital of a deed may be relevant and have some evidentiary value. In Cooray v. Wijesuriya (62 N.L.R. 158) it was held that where the recital of a deed sets out a family relationship of the vendor, such a statement would be very strong evidence of the family relationship. However, the probative value of the contents of a recital in a deed depends on the facts and circumstances of each case.

In the present case the recital of the three deeds P1, P2 and P3 sets out the relationship between Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma, her husband Muthu Rakku Kathikamanpillai and his father Muthu Vyran Muthurakku Pillai which may support her title by inheritance as claimed. However, the Respondent led in evidence the testamentary proceedings in D.C. Colombo Case No. 17770/T (V2) pertaining to the estate of Muthu Rakku Kathikamanpillai wherein the letters of administration was issued in favour of Sella Kaliamma Kadirgamanpillai. Admittedly the corpus is not included in the inventory filed of record therein.

Nonetheless, this by itself is insufficient to negate the alleged title of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma to the corpus for it has been held in Silva v. Silva (10 N.L.R. 234) that on the death of a person, his estate, in the absence of a will, passes at once by operation of law to his heirs and the dominium vests in them. In De Zoysa v. De Zoysa (26 N.L.R. 472) it was held that no conveyance from the executors is necessary for the purpose of vesting title in the heirs.

Moreover, in Hassen Hadjiar v. Levane Marikar (15 N.L.R. 275) it was held that section 547 of the Civil Procedure Code, while it penalizes, does not prohibit, the transfer of property which ought to have been, but has not been, administered. In W. S. Fernando v. W. E. J. Dabarera (77 N.L.R. 127) it was held that when an action for declaration of title to a land belonging to a deceased person's estate is instituted by a person claiming to be a successor-in-title of the deceased, section 547 of the Civil Procedure Code does not expressly prohibit the maintenance of the action on the ground that the name of the land is not included in the inventory filed in the testamentary action relating to the estate of the deceased owner. This position was reiterated in Ratnayake and Others v. Kumarihamy and Others [(2002) 1 Sri.L.R. 65] when it was held that the non-inclusion of a land in a testamentary proceeding for the administration of an estate of a deceased, cannot in any manner, defeat the title of the deceased and his heirs.

However, the pivotal question in relation to the title of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma arises from the affidavit she filed in the above testamentary proceedings dated 20th of July 1957. She avers, at paragraph 4 therein, that in addition to her, there are several other heirs of Muthu Rakku Kathikamanpillai. Then the question is how she alone could claim title to the corpus in the absence of any other evidence of having obtained exclusive title thereto.

Furthermore, there is also a serious question whether in fact the title to the corpus was actually vested in the father-in-law of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma as claimed. If the facts in the recital in deed No. 17635 dated 17th November 2000 (P2) are considered, F. Thambyaiah, Notary Public attested deed No. 1000 on 1930.9.9 and later attested deed No. 1467 on 1930.9.20 which means he had attested 467 deeds within a period of eleven days up to 1930.9.20.

This fact combined with the absence of the corpus in the inventory filed in the testamentary proceedings, the statement of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma in the testamentary proceedings that there are other heirs of her deceased husband Muthu Rakku Kathikamanpillai raises a serious doubt on the alleged title of the Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma.

Moreover, all three deeds P1, P2 and P3 were attested in the year 2000, three years prior to the institution of this action, and the recitals therein refers in detail to eight deeds by which the father-in-law of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma allegedly acquired title to the corpus. Despite being possessed with such details, the Appellant did not seek to lead any of those eight deeds in evidence. Neither was any explanation given for the failure to do so. In fact, under cross–examination, he contended that he bought the corpus after examining all the old deeds and on the advice of his lawyer [Appeal Brief, page 123] which means the Appellant had access to the old deeds. However, no reason was given for the non-production of those deeds.

It is true that the Appellant also sought to rely on the alleged prescriptive title of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma and her predecessors to the corpus. In Carolis Appu v. Anagihamy (51 N.L.R. 355) it was held that it is permissible that the period of possession of an intestate person can be tacked on to the possession of his heirs for the purpose of computing the period of ten years. Indeed upon a perusal of the recital to the three deeds P1, P2 and P3, it is clear that Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma did in fact seek to transfer the prescriptive rights allegedly acquired by her and her predecessors to the Appellant. In fact in the absence of such an intention to transfer prescriptive title as reflected in the deed of transfer, the Appellant is not entitled in law to rely on any prescriptive title of Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma [Fernando v. Podi Sinno (6 C.L.R. 73), Dingirimahatmaya v. Ratnasekera (63 N.L.R. 405)].

Nonetheless, the facts and circumstances of this case militate against the claim of prescriptive title by the Appellant. Where a party invokes the provisions of Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance in order to defeat the ownership of an adverse claimant to immovable property, the burden of proof rests fairly and squarely on him to establish a starting point for his or her acquisition of prescriptive rights [Chelliah v. Wijenathan et al (54 N.L.R. 337)]. No cogent evidence was given by the Appellant as to how and when Sinna Kathirkamanapillai Sella Kaliamma had possession of the corpus. In fact, the Appellant admitted that the Defendant was in possession of the corpus at the time the three deeds P1, P2 and P3 were executed in the year 2000.

Accordingly, I hold that the Appellant has failed to prove his title as required by law.

For all the foregoing reasons, I answer questions of law Nos. 1 and 4 in the negative and dismiss the appeal with costs and affirm the judgment of the learned District Judge of Chilaw dated 2010.06.30.

The Registrar is directed to take steps accordingly.

The Respondent is entitled to his costs in both the High Court of Civil Appeal holden in Kurunegala and this Court.

As can be seen from the caption above, both the Plaintiff and the Defendant have been substituted by the relevant substituted parties who now stand in their respective places. Nevertheless, I would for convenience, use the terms 'the Plaintiff' and 'the Defendant' to identify the two rival parties in this judgment.

The Plaintiff filed plaint dated 04-07-1986, in the District Court of Kegalle against the Defendant seeking inter alia:

a. A declaration that the Plaintiff is entitled to the servitude of right of way of a foot path over the land of the Defendant called "Divulgaspitiyawatta" to access the Kegalle-Polgahawela main road from the land called "Parana Walawwe Watta" in which the Plaintiff resides;

b. the removal of the barbed wire fence constructed by the Defendant obstructing the use of the said right of way;

c. damages in a sum of Rs. 8000/- together with continuing damages at the rate of Rs. 500/- per month until the Plaintiff is granted the use of the sought right of way.

The Defendant filed an answer dated 01-06-1987 denying all material averments and sought the dismissal of the Plaintiff's action together with costs. Thereafter, the learned District Judge at the instance of the Plaintiff, issued a commission on M B Ranatunga Licenced Surveyor to survey and prepare a plan as shown by the Plaintiff. The Licenced Surveyor accordingly surveyed the land on 29-01-1988 and returned the commission with the prepared plan (plan No. K 2294 dated 17-02-1988, hereinafter sometimes referred to as the commission plan) and the report. The said plan and the report have been produced respectively marked P 1 and P 2.

After the return of the commission, having considered the commission plan, the Plaintiff had filed an amended plaint dated 29-08-1988 and the Defendant had filed an amended answer dated 03-01-1989.

The Defendant in the said amended answer has stated the following.

a. It is the barbed wire fence which is shown as a line marked from point "A" to "B" in the commission plan.

b. High voltage electricity lines have been laid over the said line marked "A" to "B" in the commission plan. The Licenced Surveyor, in the commission plan has depicted by a square between the points "A" and "B", the said high voltage electricity posts carrying the warning sign board "අන්තරායයි".

c. The Plaintiff has hitherto been using the roadway shown as "C" "D" "E" in the commission plan.

d. What is shown as "D" to "E" in the commission plan is a road maintained by the Village Council and what is shown as "D" to "C" in the commission plan is a bund belonging to the Department of Irrigation maintained by the Agrarian Services.

e. What is shown as "X" to "Y" in the commission plan is not a public road but a private road giving access to the lands belonging to S A Gunathillake, D M Podihamine and W K M Weerasinghe.

f. What is shown as "X" is a culvert and there is only 300 feet from the said culvert "X", to access the Kegalle-Polgahawela main road.

g. No cause of action has been accrued to the Plaintiff to maintain the action.

h. There was never a footpath used by the Plaintiff, over his land.

The Defendant prayed for the dismissal of the Plaintiff's action on the above basis.

After the conclusion of the trial, the learned District Judge, by her judgment dated 24-07-2012 held that the Plaintiff had failed to prove, the claimed prescriptive rights over the use of a right of way of a footpath over the Defendant's land.

However, the learned District Judge by her judgment, granted the Plaintiff, a declaration that the Plaintiff is entitled to use a servitude of right of way of necessity over the Defendant's land and directed the Plaintiff to pay the Defendant a sum of Rs. 40,000/- as compensation for using the said right of way. The learned District Judge in her judgment considered the following in granting the said declaration.

a. Although the Plaintiff has an alternative of using the Village Council road from the point "E" to "D" in the commission plan, the rest of the alternative access goes across a paddy field called "Ambadeniya Kumbura". Owners of the said paddy field had raised objections and had not permitted the Plaintiff to use that as a road preventing the Plaintiff from using that as a right of way. This has resulted in the Plaintiff being landlocked. Therefore, there is no conclusive evidence as to the availability of an alternative roadway for the Plaintiff.

b. The alternative roadway shown by the Defendant, is in fact not a road but is a footpath that goes across a paddy field which becomes non-usable during the rainy season, rendering it incapable of being considered as an alternative road way.

c. In the absence of an alternative route, the Plaintiff is entitled to claim a right of way by necessity.

Being aggrieved by the judgment of the learned District Judge, the Defendant appealed to the Provincial High Court of Sabaragamuwa holden in Kegalle.

The Provincial High Court, after the conclusion of the argument of the said appeal, by its judgment dated 27-08-2015, set aside the decision of the learned District Judge to grant the Plaintiff a declaration that he is entitled to use a servitude of right of way of necessity over the Defendant's land. In making that conclusion, the Provincial High Court made the following observations.

a. The Plaintiff had purchased her land from the owner of the larger land without an access roadway, becoming landlocked due to her own action.

b. The only remedy available to the Plaintiff is to enforce her rights against the seller who sold the landlocked portion to her from a larger land.

Being aggrieved by the judgment of the Provincial High Court, the Plantiff appealed to this Court. When the leave to appeal application pertaining to the instant appeal was supported, having heard the submissions of the learned Counsel for both parties, this Court by its order dated 25-06-2018, has granted leave to appeal in respect of the questions of law set out in sub paragraphs (i), (ii) and (iii) of Paragraph 13 of the petition dated 25-09-2015. The said questions of law are reproduced below:

i. Did the High Court err by holding that the Plaintiff had lost her rights to a roadway due to her own fault?

ii. Did the High Court err by holding that, the only remedy available to the Plaintiff is to file an action against the owner of the larger land who sold her a part of a larger land leaving the Plaintiff landlocked?

iii. Did the High Court err in failing to appreciate that a right of way of necessity cannot be given over D to C, when the surveyor was informed by the owners of paddy lands called Ambadeniya that they oppose to a right of way being granted over the ridges of their paddy fields?

The Plaintiff (and her husband Danawala Withanage Nandoris) admittedly, had purchased half an acre portion from a larger land of 30 Acres from Kuda Banda alias Sisil Bernard Panabokke (who is the owner of the larger land), by the Deed of Transfer No. 48782 attested on 17-02-1958 by David Charles Samarawickrema Seneviratne Karunathilake Notary Public.[1] The Plaintiff has produced this deed marked P 3. The said deed (P 3) clearly shows that it is a part (1/2 acre) of a larger land (the larger land being of thirty acres in extent) which has been transferred to the Plaintiff. In the said deed (No. 48782) there is no mention about any roadway to access the part of the land transferred. The deed also does not refer to any plan. The said thirty acre larger land is the land called Parana Walawwe Watta.

The Defendant's land is Lot No. 5 which is depicted in plan No. 2973 dated 24-11-1964 prepared by Licensed Surveyor J Aluvihare. The Deed of Transfer No. 1945 attested on 01-08-1966 by Edward Christopher Nugawela Notary Public, is the Deed of Transfer by which the Defendant claims title to his land. It is clear by the said Deed of Transfer No. 1945 that the Defendant's land is Lot No. 5 in plan No. 2973 dated 22-11-1964 made by J Aluvihare Licensed Surveyor containing in extent two roods and sixteen perches. This Deed of Transfer has been produced marked වි 2.

The aforesaid Plan No. 2973 clearly shows in its extreme east, the aforesaid thirty acre larger land called Parana Walawwe Watta. The said plan also clearly shows the Lot No. 4 therein, as the access road to said Parana Walawwe Watta. That is the road marked X to Y in the commission plan. Thus, it is clear that the Plaintiff when purchasing half an acre block from the aforesaid thirty acre larger land, had been content either to access her land from the alternative road C D E shown in the commission plan or to make arrangements with the owners of the larger land to obtain access to the road marked X to Y over the larger land. That is why the learned judges of the Provincial High Court had stated that the Plaintiff has lost her right to a roadway due to her own fault. Our Courts in the past have considered the question whether a person who has bought a landlocked subdivided portion of a larger land, could seek a way of necessity over his neighbour's land, without making a claim for such right of way against his vendor or the owners of the other subdivided lots of the larger land. I would now turn to consider that aspect.

The above question was considered in the case of K. Nagalingam et al Vs Kathirasipillai et al.[2] I would briefly advert to the facts of that case.

In that case, the plaintiff's allotment (Lot No. 4) had originally formed part of a larger land (including Lot Nos. 1, 2, and 3) belonging to her parents. The northern boundary of this larger land was a different public lane and the entire property was later subdivided amongst the members of that plaintiff's family. The said Plaintiff had got the title to the Lots 3 and 4 together with, inter alia, a right of way and watercourse leading to a well (situated on Lot 1) which almost adjoins the northern lane. The said plaintiff later conveyed Lot 3 to her daughter together with similar servitudes. It was thereafter that the said plaintiff claimed a right of way along a path which was to the south of Lot 4. This path had at one stage formed part of a different land, owned in common by the others and the defendants in that case. The basis of that plaintiff's claim was that the owners of Lots 1 and 2 would not permit him a right of way over their lands, so that he must of necessity be granted a servitude along the path which is the common property of those defendants. The learned Commissioner in that case, had accepted the said Plaintiff's argument and entered judgment in favour of that Plaintiff as prayed for. The defendants in that case, then appealed to the Supreme Court. His Lordship Justice Gratiaen having considered the question whether a plaintiff, after becoming an owner of a sub divided allotment of land, was thereafter entitled to a right of way of necessity over its neighbour's land, stated in his judgment as follows:

> "The plaintiff's claim clearly cannot be sustained. Lot 4 originally formed part of a larger land which was admittedly served by the Northern lane. Upon the subdivision of the larger land, each person who received an allotment which would otherwise be land-locked automatically became entitled under the Roman Dutch Law to a right of way over the allotment or allotments adjoining the public lane. Maasdorp (Edn. 7th) 11, pp 182-183. As was pointed out in Wilhelm v. Norton[3] :

"When a piece of land is split up into two or more portions, the back portion must retain its outlet over the front portion even though nothing was said about it, because the splitting of the land cannot impose a servitude upon the neighbours."

This very sensible principle would have applied in the present case even in the absence of an express reservation of a servitude."

His Lordship Justice Gratiaen on the above basis, proceeded to allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's action in that case, with costs.

Our Courts have consistently applied the above legal principle whenever they were called upon to decide whether a person who has bought a landlocked subdivided portion of a larger land, could seek a way of necessity over his neighbour's land without making such a claim from the owners of the other subdivided lots of the larger land. The cases such as Costa Vs Rowell,[4] Godamune Vs Magilin Nona,[5] are instances where the Court of Appeal has refused to grant such relief. The instant case cannot be an exception. Therefore, the same legal principle will apply. On this point alone, the Plaintiff cannot succeed in this action. Even if it is argued that the above ground was not raised as an issue in the original courts, the burden is on the Plaintiff to prove that she, as the owner of the dominant tenement, is eligible to claim a right of way on the ground of necessity. The answers given by the substituted Plaintiff (at Page 117) proves that they bought this portion from the larger land, disqualifying the Plaintiff to claim a right of way over the Defendant's land. However, there is a more fundamental issue glaring in this case. It is to that issue I will now turn.

In an action of this nature, the plaintiff must clearly identify the dominant tenement and the servient tenement. One of the reasons for such a requirement, as Chief Justice Basnayake stated in the case of Velupillai Vs Subasinghe and another,[6] is because the Courts, in case the Plaintiff succeeds in such an action, must be in a position to enter a clear and definite judgment declaring the servitude of a right of way and such definiteness is crucially important when executing the judgment and decree entered. The plaintiff in the aforesaid Velupillai 's case,[7] claimed the right to use the cart-way over the land leased to the defendants in that case, in order to get to the high road. He based his claim on prescription and alternatively prayed for a right of way of necessity. The defendants denied that the plaintiff was entitled to the right of the cart-way as claimed either by virtue of prescriptive user or by way of necessity. Although there were 22 issues framed at the trial, the learned trial Judge first tried only two of them as they went to the root of the case. Those issues are as follows:

> Even if issue No. 5 is answered in the affirmative can the plaintiff acquire and claim a servitude of cart-way either by prescription or by way of necessity?
>
> If issue No. 14 is answered in the negative has the plaintiff any cause of action and can he maintain the present action?

The learned trial Judge in that case, after hearing the submissions on the law, answered issues 14 and 15 in the negative. The Plaintiff in that case, then appealed from that decision. His Lordship Basnayake Chief Justice, having considered the submissions, dismissed that appeal with costs, stating the following in his judgment.

> "The kind of servitude claimed in the instant case is a real or praedial servitude. Such a servitude cannot exist without a dominant tenement to which rights are owed and a servient tenement which owes them. A servitude cannot be granted by any other than the owner of a servient tenement, nor acquired by any other than by him who owns an adjacent tenement. Here the plaintiff who is the lessee and not the owner of the land claims a servitude from the defendant who is also not the owner but the lessee of the land. …"

In the case of David V. Gnanawathie,[8] the Court of Appeal also had the occasion to cite the above judgment and quote the afore-stated Basnayake CJ's statement. The plaintiff in David's case claimed from the defendant in that case, a servitude of right of way by prescriptive user and alternatively a servitude of a way of necessity. The said defendant in his answer, inter alia, pleaded that: the plaintiff never exercised a servitude of right of way over the defendant's land; the plaintiff had no legal right to claim and assert a right of way as prayed for in her plaint; and the plaint disclosed no cause of action against the defendant. In issue eight in that case, the said defendant had raised the question whether the plaintiff in that case, was legally entitled to claim a way of necessity over the servient tenement. The said defendant had framed issue nineteen as a consequential issue raising the question: if the servient tenement and the dominant tenement are lands owned by the State, was the plaintiff in that case, entitled to maintain that action claiming a servitude of a right of way by prescription or a way of necessity? During the course of the trial, it was agreed and conceded by both parties in that case, that the dominant tenement and the servient tenement were both lands owned by the State and lands which had been vested in the Mahaweli Authority. Jayasuriya J in the judgment of the Court of Appeal stated as follows.

> "The plaintiff not being the owner of the dominant tenement cannot legally claim or exercise this servitude of right of way. Likewise the plaintiff cannot assert that she is claiming a servitude for the Mahaweli Authority. The defendant who is not the owner of the servient tenement cannot legally grant or create this particular servitude. Thus the answers to issue eight and nineteen have necessarily to be in the negative. The learned trial Judge has wrongly answered issue eight in the affirmative, but correctly answered issue nineteen in the negative. Although he has correctly answered issue nineteen in the negative he has wrongly entered judgment in favour of the plaintiff in terms of prayer one and two of the plaint. If the answer to issue nineteen is in the negative, the learned District Judge ought to have refused the claims in prayer one and two of the plaint."

More recently also, in the case of Matara Kiri Liyanage Mary Agnes Fernando & seven others Vs. Madapathipola Lekamge Patricia Fonseka and others,[9] His Lordship Justice Gamini Amarasekara cited with approval, the judgment of Chief Justice Basnayake in [9] SC Appeal 129/2014, decided on 18.12.2020.

Velupillai Vs Subasinghe[10] and also the judgment of Justice Jayasuriya in David V. Gnanawathie.[11] Thus, this Court has been consistent in applying the above principle of law.

In the instant case, the Licensed Surveyor has clearly stated that the right of way claimed by the Plaintiff from point A to point B is situated within Lot No. 6 of plan No. 2973. More importantly, learned counsel for the Plaintiff has intensely cross examined the Defendant on the basis: that the claimed right of way from point A to B is situated within Lot No. 6 of plan No. 2973 produced marked පී 1; that the said Lot No. 6 is a separately demarcated block according to the plan No. 2973; that the Defendant had put up a barbed wire fence encompassing Lot No. 6 and amalgamating it to Lot No. 5 blocking the claimed right of way situated in Lot No. 6. Thus, it is important to observe that the Plaintiff has advanced her case on the basis that the claimed right of way is situated within Lot No. 6 in plan No. 2973 and the Defendant is not the owner of the said Lot No. 6.

As has been stated earlier, the case advanced by the Plaintiff as per the plaint and the issues framed, is a case claiming right of way over the Defendant's land. That is not a case on any cause of action arising out of any encroachment made by the Defendant. However, in the course of the trial what the Plaintiff has established is that the claimed right of way from point A to B is situated outside the Defendant's land which is Lot No. 5 in plan No. 2973. If that is the case advanced by the Plaintiff, it would suffice to state that the claimed right of way must be obtained from the person who owns Lot No. 6. That right of way is not obtainable from the Defendant as the Plaintiff admittedly has taken up the position that the Defendant is not the owner of the block of land (Lot No. 6) in which the claimed right of way from point A to B is situated.

Thus, on this point alone the plaint is misconceived.

In these circumstances and for the foregoing reasons, I answer the questions of law in respect of which this Court has granted leave to appeal, as follows.

[10] Supra.
[11] Supra.

Question of law No. (i) – The Provincial High Court has not erred by holding that the Plaintiff had lost her rights to a roadway due to her own fault.

In view of the foregoing conclusions, adjudication over questions of law No. (ii) and (iii) would not arise. Moreover, as the owner of the larger land is not a party to the instant proceedings, in my view, it would be best to refrain from pronouncing something which would be to the detriment of that person. The Plaintiff should advice herself as to the course of actions available to her.

For the foregoing reasons, I affirm the judgment of the Provincial High Court, dated 27-08-2015 and proceed to dismiss this appeal with costs.

The plaintiff filed this action against the two defendants seeking a declaration that he is the owner of the land described in the 2nd schedule to the plaint, ejectment of the defendants from a portion of this land as described in the 3rd schedule to the plaint, and damages.

The defendants filed the answer seeking dismissal of the plaintiff's action and a declaration that they are the owners of the land described in the 2nd schedule to the answer. They also sought a declaration that they are entitled to the use of a road about 10 feet wide on the land described in the 1st schedule to the plaint by way of prescription as well as by way of necessity. In furtherance of the claim to the said right of way, they moved in the prayer to the answer that a commission be issued to a surveyor to depict the said right of way.

Let me pause for a while to emphasise that by the said reliefs, the defendants make no claim to the land described in the 1st schedule to the plaint except for a right of way over it.

Both parties took out commissions to explain to the court their respective claims. The plaintiff's commission plan was marked P1 by the plaintiff but the defendants' commission plan found in the case record was not produced in evidence by the defendants.

By the illustration (f) to section 114 of the Evidence Ordinance, the court can presume that the defendants did not produce their own commission plan as evidence because had it been produced it would have been unfavourable to them.

The defendants by deed V4 claim title to a land described as "the half of one forth portion of Godakadurugahawatte" and "containing in extent twenty perches more or less." But there was no survey plan at the time of purchasing this land or at any time thereafter in order to properly identify the land.

However, the 1st defendant admits in his evidence (at page 170 of the brief) that he saw the surveyor Hopman's plan marked P4 at the time of purchasing the land by deed V4. In Hopman's plan, the land claimed by the plaintiff is clearly depicted and there is no roadway shown on the plan (save the public road on the eastern boundary). This means at the time the defendants purchased the land they claim, they had knowledge of the land claimed by the plaintiff and the fact that there was no right of way which could be used by them through the land of the plaintiff.

The 1st defendant admits in his evidence that the plaintiff gave Hopman's plan to the court commissioner, Croos Dabrera, at the survey. The Croos Dabrera's commission plan marked P1 shows the right of way claimed by the defendants as lot 2. However Croos Dabrera states in his evidence that this was shown on the plan as lot 2 not because there was a road on the ground but for the purpose of identifying the defendants' claim.

According to plan P1, there is a footpath along the western boundary of the land. The defendants admit that they obtained electricity and water supply to their land through this footpath. This goes to prove there was no road on the plaintiff's land.

The defendants' claim to a right of way over the land described in the 1st schedule to the plaint shall fail.

After trial, the learned District Judge entered judgment for the plaintiff as prayed for in the prayer to the plaint.

The reliefs sought by the defendants were refused on the basis that the deeds V2-V4 relied upon by the defendants are not relevant to the land in suit.

On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court and allowed the appeal granting the reliefs prayed for by the defendants in the prayer to the answer. Hence the appeal to this court by the plaintiff.

This court granted leave to appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal on the following question of law:

> Have their Lordships of the High Court of Civil Appeal misdirected themselves in considering a corpus not put in issue in the plaint in delivering the judgment?

The defendants raised the following two questions of law:

> Have their Lordships of the High Court of Civil Appeal correctly considered the corpus in relation to the dispute as presented before the District Court?
> Are the defendants entitled to the reliefs as prayed for in the answer?

On what basis did the High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court? The High Court of Civil Appeal compared the land claimed by the defendants on their title deed V4 with the second land described in the plaintiff's title deed P3 to conclude that the land in suit is an undivided land of which a ½ share is claimed by the plaintiff and a ½ share is claimed by the defendants, and therefore the plaintiff should have filed a partition action, not an action for declaration of title.

This is a misdirection of primary facts on the part of the High Court of Civil Appeal which vitiates the judgment.

The second land described in the schedule to deed P3 was never put in issue in this case. That land is not the subject matter of this action. This is made clear by the averments in the plaint and the schedules thereto.

The defendants never took up the position in the District Court that the defendants and the plaintiff are entitled to equal shares of the land in suit and therefore the plaintiff's action as presently constituted is misconceived in law.

Nor did the defendants take up the position before the District Court that the two lands described in the 1st schedule to the plaint are situated in two different places. As I said before, the defendants' only claim to the lands described in the 1st schedule to the plaint is a right of way over the two lands. The defendants cannot take up new positions which are questions of fact for the first time on appeal.

I answer the questions of law raised by the plaintiff in the affirmative and those raised by the defendants in the negative.

I set aside the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal and restore the judgment of the District Court and allow the appeal with costs.

DECIDED ON : 02.02.2021.

SISIRA J. DE ABREW, J.

Heard both Counsel in support of their respective cases. This is an appeal filed against the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 22.09.2014. The Accused-Appellant was convicted by the learned High Court Judge by his judgment dated 02.06.2010 for the offence of murder and was sentenced to death. According to the facts of the case the Accused has killed his own wife. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the High Court, the Accused-Appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal by its judgment dated 22.09.2014 affirmed the conviction and the death sentence and dismissed the appeal. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Court of Appeal, the Accused-Appellant has appealed to this court. This Court by its order dated 18.02.2015 granted Leave to Appeal on questions of law set out in paragraph 12 of the Petition of Appeal dated 31.10.2014 which are set out below verbatim;

i. Is it unsafe to act upon belated statements of some of the main witnesses for the prosecution?

ii. Has the learned trial judge failed to evaluate the contradictions inter se between the prosecution witnesses?

iii. Is it unsafe to act on the evidence of the witnesses in the light of the contradictions in their evidence.

iv. Is there a denial of a fair trial by remanding the witnesses and producing them from remand during the pendency of the trial which would have been influenced on the other witnesses?

v. Is it unsafe to act upon the belated statement by the witnesses for the prosecution and have the learned trial judge and their Lordships of the Court of Appeal properly considered the validity of those statements?

vi. Is there a proper evaluation of evidence by the learned trial judge?

vii. Are the items of circumstantial evidence consistent with the guilt of the Petitioner and inconsistent with his innocence?

viii. Have their Lordships erred in law by deciding that the only inference that could be drawn is the guilt of the petitioner on the items of circumstantial evidence proved by the prosecution?

Learned Counsel for the Accused-Appellant submitted that after perusing the evidence led at the trial he could not support the above questions of law. Facts of this case may be briefly summarized as follows;

The Accused-Appellant is the husband of the deceased person whose name is Wickramagedara Niroshini Wickramage. On the day of the incident (27.12.1998) around 8 pm. the Accused-Appellant came to the house of the deceased's person. At the time of the incident deceased person was living with her mother and two brothers. On the invitation of the Accused-Appellant the deceased person went along with the Accused-Appellant to a nearby boutique for the purpose of buying cigarettes. It should be noted here that the Accused-Appellant wanted to buy some cigarettes. After the deceased person went along with the Accused person, the deceased person never returned home. This evidence was given by the mother of the deceased person. On the following day, around 4 pm, the mother of the deceased person found the dead body at Mahaweli river bank which was about ¼ mile away from the house of the deceased person.

On the day of the incident around 10.00 p.m., the Accused-Appellant had met Hussain Khan alias Sunil at a bus stand and had told Hussain Khan that he killed his own wife. In the same night around 11.30 p.m., the Accused-Appellant had told one Mahesh that he killed his own wife.

According to the medical evidence, the course of death was manual strangulation. There were contusions and abrasions on the neck of the deceased person. The Accused-Appellant making a statement from the dock denied the charge.

Learned Counsel for the Accused-Appellant quite correctly submitted that there are no grounds to challenge the evidence of the mother of the deceased, Hussain Khan, Mahesh and the medical evidence.

When we consider the evidence led at the trial, we hold the view that the prosecution has proved its case beyond reasonable doubts. We therefore hold the view that there is no reasons to interfere with the judgment of the High Court and the Court of Appeal. Since the learned Counsel for the Accused-

Appellant submitted in open court that he is not supporting the questions of law, it is not necessary for us to answer the questions of law.

Considering the above material, we affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeal and dismiss this Appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGEMENT

Aluwihare PC J.,

(1) The Plaintiff-Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 'Plaintiff') filed action before the Commercial High Court against the Defendant-Respondents (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 'Defendants') seeking judgment against the Defendants jointly and/or severally to recover a sum of Rs. 48,031,992.92 due, under the agreements marked 'P2' to 'P5' together with legal interest.

(2) Upon entertaining the Plaint, the learned High Court Judge ordered summons be issued on the Defendants. Accordingly, the 1st to 6th Defendants appeared before the court and filed a joint proxy and the date for filing of answer was fixed for the 19th October 2015. The Defendants filed a motion ('X3') on 15th October 2015 and moved the court seeking an order to have the Defendants, save for the 2nd Defendant, discharged from the case as the parties to the agreements marked and produced along with the plaint, ['P2' to 'P5'], were only the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant.

(3) The learned High Court Judge by his order ('X6') discharged all the Defendants other than the 2nd, requiring only the 2nd Defendant to file answer.

(4) Aggrieved by this order, the Plaintiff moved this court by way of Leave to Appeal and Leave was granted on the questions of law referred to in sub-paragraphs (I), (II), (III), (IV) and (V) of paragraph 16 of the petition of the Appellant [Plaintiff].

(5) The questions of law in verbatim, are as follows;

I. Has the learned High Court Judge erred in law in ordering to discharge the 1st, 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th Defendants acting under Section 22 of the Civil Procedure Code?

II. Are the 1st and 3rd Defendants necessary parties whose presence is necessary for full and effective adjudication of the cause of action alleged in the plaint?

III. Are the 4th to 6th Defendants necessary parties whose presence is necessary for full and effective adjudication of the cause of action alleged in the plaint?

IV. Were not there any tenable grounds before the learned High Court Judge to come to the conclusion that 1st, 3rd, and 4th to 6th defendants were not necessary parties to the cause of action alleged in the plaint, especially in the absence of any oral and/or documentary evidence?

V. Is the order of the learned High Court Judge contrary to Section 14 and 18 of the Civil Procedure Code?

Facts

(6) The Plaintiff is a Cooperative society registered in terms of the provisions of the Cooperative Societies Law No.5 of 1972 under the name "Sri Lanka National Cooperative Council Limited" [hereinafter also referred to as "the Cooperative Council]. The 1st Defendant, at all times material to this transaction, was representing the 2nd and 3rd Defendant companies, Radiant Trading Company (Pvt.) Ltd and Radiant AC Cabs (Pvt.) Ltd. Respectively. The 4th, 5th and 6th Defendants are the other Directors of the 2nd and 3rd Defendant companies.

(7) On or about the 20th July 2010, the Plaintiff entered into a verbal agreement with the 1st Defendant who was representing the 2nd and/or 3rd Defendant companies. Under this agreement, the Plaintiff was to import and handover stocks of cement to the Defendants and the Defendants were to sell the stocks of cement so handed over in the local market and were obliged to pay the Plaintiff the agreed price. [COOP Cement Project].

(8) This verbal agreement was further reaffirmed by the execution of Sales Agency agreements ('P2'- 'P5') during the period of 20th July 2010 to 30th September 2013. On the face of these documents only the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant have been named as parties to the agreement. It is to be noted that, although in two of the four agreements, the 2nd

Defendant company has been named as the second party to the agreement, the seal of the 3rd Defendant company has been placed on the contract instrument. The 4th to the 6th Defendants have signed one or more of those agreements as witnesses, in their capacity as the directors of the 2nd and or 3rd Defendant companies.

(9) The Plaintiff's case is that, based on the terms and conditions of the agreements, the Plaintiff imported consignments of cement which were "delivered to the 1st Defendant and/or 2nd Defendant and/or 3rd Defendant". The Plaintiff claims that the "1st Defendant and/or 2nd Defendant and/or 3rd Defendant" are legally liable to pay a balance of Rs. 48,301,992.92 to the Plaintiff as sales proceeds of the aforementioned quantity of cement.

(10) In paragraph 15 of the plaint, the Plaintiff has averred that the Defendants have settled Rs.293 million [approximately] out of Rs.342 million [approximately] due to the Plaintiff. The Head of Finance of the 2nd Defendant company by his letter dated 13-05-2013 [P6] has only disputed the amount outstanding.

(11) The Plaintiff states that upon the Defendants jointly and/or severally defaulting the payment, Letters of Demand were served on all 6 Defendants on 12th December 2014 ('P9'- 'P14'). The Defendants had sent a joint reply ('P15') admitting the delivery and acceptance of the quantity of cement, however, disputing the amount payable. The Directors have further stated that the Plaintiff had entered into the agreements marked 'P2', to 'P5', only with the 2nd Defendant Company.

(12) According to the Plaintiff, it was the 1st Defendant who made representations and thereby made the Plaintiff believe that he was acting on behalf of the 2nd and 3rd Defendant companies and that it was the 1st Defendant who entered into the agreements with the Plaintiff and took part in the entire process related to the 'Coop Cement Project'.

(13) The Plaintiff further states that the Plaintiff relying on the representation made by the 1st Defendant as the 'sole owner' of the 2nd and 3rd Defendant companies, the Plaintiff entered into the agreements referred to.

(14) The Plaintiff contends that, apart from the 1st Defendant, the 4th to 6th Defendants were directors of the company, who had a direct link to the actions of the 2nd and 3rd Defendant companies. Therefore, the objective of naming all 6 Defendants in the Plaint is to claim liability jointly and/or severally. The Plaintiff asserts that, in that context, the presence of all defendants is necessary for an effectual, full and final disposal of the action.

The Contention of the Appellant

(15) One of the main arguments on behalf of the Plaintiff- Appellant was that the order of the learned High Court Judge', based on Section 22 of the Civil Procedure Code [hereinafter referred to as the CPC], discharging parties [defendants] was blatantly erroneous and contrary to law.

(16) It was further contended on behalf of the Plaintiff, that there was no legal basis to discharge the defendants from a case, solely on the basis of a Motion, without it being supported by an affidavit, particularly in an instance where summons had been served. It was further argued that such an order [of discharge] can only be made upon the defendants satisfying court and the Defendants have failed to adduce any material to substantiate their application to have some of them discharged. It was also contended that the issue as to whether the plaintiff has a cause of action against the Defendant can be decided, only after the pleading are completed and not before and to that extent the learned High Court Judge erred in making the order of discharge.

(17) Another point of contention was that the learned High Court Judge had failed to appreciate the fact that the Plaintiff had a "valid cause of action" jointly and or severally against all Defendants and by holding that some of the Defendants were not necessary parties, had offended Section 14 of the CPC.

(18) It was the contention of the learned counsel for the Plaintiff that a motion filed, in terms of section 22 of the CPC "can only lead to a direction under and in terms of Sections 36 and 37 of the CPC, but not for dismissal of the Plaint and/or discharge of the defendants". It was further contended that the order of discharge of the Defendants, amounts to a dismissal of the Plaint in respect of those Defendants that were discharged.

(19) It is to be noted that the learned High Court Judge acted on the motion [X3] dated 15th October 2015 filed by the Defendants, by which the Defendants have moved the court for an order of discharge in favour of all Defendants save for the 2nd Defendant, in terms of Sections 18 and 46 (2) of the CPC. Nowhere in the motion the Defendants have referred to Section 22 of the CPC.

(20) It was also urged on behalf of the Plaintiff; "that any plaintiff has a right to join as defendants, against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist. Therefore, what is required by pleadings of a Plaint is some kind of allegation against the Defendants, for them to be necessary parties" and that the learned High Court Judge had "attempted to try and adjudicate the allegations without even waiting till the filing of the answer".

The Legal Position

(21) It is clear from the Plaint, that the relief the Plaintiff had sought is a judgement in their favour to recover sums of money due to them in terms of the "Sales Agency agreements" entered between the parties, [P2 to P5]. All those agreements are between the Plaintiff, Sri Lanka Cooperative Council Ltd (the first Party) and the 2nd Defendant, Radiant Trading Company (PVT) Ltd. (The second party).

(22) The Chairman and the General Secretary had signed [as witnesses] on behalf of the first Party the Cooperative Council whilst two directors [1st and 4th Defendants] of Radiant Trading had signed on behalf of the second party as witnesses.

(23) There are 22 terms and conditions stipulated under the impugned agreements and all those conditions refer to the 1st and 2nd parties to the agreements and no other.

The Questions of Law

(24) The first question on which Leave to Appeal was granted is as to whether the High Court Judge had "erred in law in ordering to discharge 1st, 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th Defendants acting under Section 22 of the Civil Procedure Code?"

It must be said that the learned High Court Judge had made order striking off all the Defendants save for the 2nd Defendant in terms of Section 20 read with Section 18 of the CPC and not in terms of Section 22 of the CPC. [Page 11 of the impugned order]

The relevant portion of the order is reproduced below;

"… it is hereby ordered to strike out the names of the 1st, 3rd to 6th defendants from the proceedings in terms of Section 20 read with Section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code."

The learned High Court judge had made reference to Section 22 of the CPC to point out the requirement, that any objection with regard to 'joinder of parties who have no interest in the action' must be taken 'at the earliest possible opportunity' [under that section]. The learned High Court Judge had also relied on the decision in the case of John Singho v. Julis Appu 10 NLR 351, to illustrate that the above position is the settled law, where it was held that Section 22 requires an objection for want of parties to be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and that "otherwise such objection will be considered to have been waived".

Considering the above, I conclude that the learned High Court Judge had not erred with regard to the application of the relevant provisions in considering the motion filed by the Defendants and I answer the first question of law on which leave was granted in the negative.

(25) As the '(IV)'th question of law on which leave was granted is connected to the above, I wish to deal with the said question before I proceed to consider the other questions of law on which leave to appeal was granted.

(26) The issue raised before us was whether the learned High Court Judge could have come to the conclusion that the 1st and the 3rd to 6th Defendants were not necessary parties, in the absence of any oral or documentary evidence being placed before the court. It was contended that the learned High Court judge could not have decided the issue merely on the motion filed by the Defendants.

(27) The Learned High Court Judge had been of the view that an application for the misjoinder of parties can be made by way of a motion in terms of Section 22 read with Sections 18 and 91 of the Civil Procedure Code; "The filing of an affidavit or an answer is not mandatory for the making of an application under Section 22 of the Code and the only requirement is to file a motion as required by Section 22 of the Code." (Page 7 of 'X6'). In the case of Uragoda v. Jayasinghe 2004 (1) SLR 108 it was held that "The issue of misjoinder of parties ought to have been taken by motion in terms of Section 91 read with Section 18 of the Code." The learned High Court Judge has relied on the decision in Uragoda v. Jayasinghe (supra) in support of this legal position. Also see Hapuaratchchi and Another v. Dhanapala and Another (2005) 3 SLR 141 and London and Lancashire Fire Insurance Co. v. P. & O Company (18 N.L.R. 15).

(28) The sufficiency of the material before the court, in considering an application made in terms of Section 22 of the CPC is a question of fact. Depending on the facts and circumstances of each case, it is incumbent on the trial judge to decide as to the sufficiency of material, at the point of considering such application. I do not think that there is a rule to say, adducing material is 'sine qua non'. In the case before us, the Plaintiff had filed 15 documents as a part and parcel of the plaint including the 'Sales Agency agreements' the Plaintiff relied on.

(29) Furthermore, Paragraph 4 and 5 of the Plaint clearly spell out that, initially there had been an oral agreement between the Plaintiff and the 2nd and 3rd Defendants and /or with the 1st Defendant, which was fortified by a notarially executed written agreements [P2 to P5].

(30) The proceedings of 19th October 2015 reflects that the court had been put on notice of 'misjoinder parties' and an application had been made on behalf of the Defendants seeking permission to file written submissions to substantiate that position. Although it had been submitted on behalf of the Plaintiff that all Defendants are necessary parties, no objection was raised with regard to the application made on behalf of the Defendants nor an application made, seeking permission to adduce evidence or other material in order to support the Plaintiff's position on the matter, which they very well could have done. Accordingly, the court ordered both parties to file written submissions.

(31) In the case of Adlin Fernando v. Lionel Fernando (1995) 2 SLR 25 it was held; "(1) That provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, relating to the joinder of causes of action and parties are rules of procedure and NOT substantive law. Courts should adopt a common sense approach in deciding questions of misjoinder or non-joinder." [Emphasis Added].

(32) It was also held in the case of Fernando v. Perera 2004 (1) SLR 108 "The issue of misjoinder ought to have been taken by motion in terms of Section 91 of the CPC read with Section18 of the Code". Considering the above, I resolve the (IV) the question of law referred to above, also in the negative.

The Necessary Parties

(33) Both, the 2nd and 3rd [(i) and (ii)] questions of law on which leave to proceed was granted relate to the issue as to whether the presence of, the 1st and the 3rd Defendants and the 4th to 6th Defendants respectively, is necessary for full and effective adjudication of the cause of action referred to in the plaint.

(34) The question as to 'who is a necessary party' in the context of 'addition or striking out of parties' to an action, is dealt with under Section 18 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Section 18 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code states as follows;

(1) "The court may on or before the hearing, upon the application of either party, and on such terms as the court thinks just, order that the name of any party; whether as plaintiff or as defendant improperly joined, be struck out; and the court may at any time, either upon or without such application, and on such terms as the court thinks just, order that any plaintiff be made a defendant, or that any defendant be made a plaintiff, and that the name of any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the court may be necessary in order to enable the court to effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in that action, be added." [Emphasis added].

(35) Our courts have identified that Section 18 has two limbs which contemplate the addition of two different types of persons

(i) Persons who "ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant."

(ii) Persons whose "presence before the court may be necessary in order to enable the court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in that action.

(36) In Weeraperuma v. De Silva 61 NLR 481 at page 484, Basnayake C.J. stated "… the grounds on which a person may be added as a party to an action are either (i) that he ought to have been joined as a plaintiff or defendant or (ii) that his presence is necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action."

In The Chartered Bank v. De Silva 67 NLR 135 at page 137, Sri Skanda Rajah J. observed; "Section 18 (1) of our Code, like Order 1 Rule 10 (2) of the Indian Code, makes a distinction between the two classes of persons, viz. persons who ought to have joined, i.e., necessary parties, and persons whose presence is necessary to enable the Court to completely and effectually to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, i.e., proper parties."

(37) In Seylan Bank PLC v. New Lanka Merchants Marketing (PVT) Limited & Others SC Appeal No. 198/2014, it was observed that the type of persons contemplated in the first limb of section 18 (1) "are persons who must be added as parties since they are entitled to relief upon or are liable upon the same cause of action which is the subject matter of the case", whilst the second limb contemplated;

"persons who may not be entitled to relief upon the cause of action which is the subject matter of the case (who will be encompassed by the first limb as set out earlier) but, nevertheless, are persons whose presence before the Court is necessary to enable the Court to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in that action. This type of persons who should be added under and in terms of the second limb of Section 18 (1), are usually referred to as "necessary parties"." (at page 12)

(38) The Plaintiff has contended that the Defendants are those who fall within the aforementioned 2nd limb. In Seylan Bank PLC case (supra) the Supreme Court analysed in depth the various tests formulated and applied in English as well as Sri Lankan Courts to determine whether a particular party should be added as a 'necessary party' to a pending action. Following an extensive examination of the tests utilized by the courts to determine whether a particular party should be added as a 'necessary party', the Supreme Court summarized the tests which may be used in determining this question.

The guidelines that were laid down are as follows;

(i) A Court should keep in mind the desirability of reducing the multiplicity of litigation and, therefore, interpret Section 18 (1) widely;

(ii) However, the object of preventing the multiplicity of litigation does not justify the addition of a party if the addition is not permitted by the words used in Section 18 (1);

(iii) In terms of the first limb of Section 18 (1), a person who must be added because he is a party "who ought to have been joined, whether a plaintiff or defendant", will be a person who should have been named as a plaintiff in terms of Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code or who should have been named as a defendant in terms of Section 14 of the Civil Procedure Code;

(iv) In terms of the second limb of Section 18 (1), a person who should be added because he is a "necessary party", is a person whose presence before the Court is necessary in order to enable the Court to, effectually and completely, adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the pending action;

(v) Accordingly, a person will be a "necessary party" if he will be bound by the determination of the pending action;

(vi) Similarly, a person will be a "necessary party" if the determination of the pending action will affect his legal right;

(vii) Further, a person will be a "necessary party", in appropriate circumstances, if the determination of the pending action will affect his pecuniary interests or commercial interests;

(viii) A person who is not bound by the determination of a pending action or whose legal rights, pecuniary interests or commercial interests are not affected by the Orders sought in that action may, nevertheless, be added as a "necessary party", if his presence before the Court as a party to that action (and not merely as a witness) is required to, effectually and completely, adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in that action. For example, to enable one of the parties to effectually and completely establish their case or to effectually and completely obtain the reliefs they seek in the action;

(ix) Unless one or more of the circumstances described above exist, a person should not be added to a pending action upon a claim that he is a "necessary party" merely because one of the parties to that pending action had a separate dispute with or claim against him or merely because he has a separate dispute with or claim against one of the parties to that action;

(x) A person is not a "necessary party" merely because he has relevant evidence to give or because he is interested in and wishes to involve himself in the correct solution of the case or because he wishes to be

(39) Although the application of these guidelines may depend on the facts of each case, they can be used to provide assistance to the court in determining whether the 1st, 3rd -6th Defendants who have been discharged are in fact necessary parties to the action.

(40) I shall now examine the Plaintiff's contention that the 1st, 3rd -6th Defendants are 'necessary parties' to the action in question, in terms of the second limb of Section 18 (1) and the tests applied in Seylan Bank PLC v. New Lanka Merchants Marketing (PVT) Limited & Others (supra)

(41) The Plaintiff's cause of action against the Defendants, as referred to earlier, is for the recovery of monies due to the Plaintiff, in terms of the Sales Agency agreements ['P2' to 'P5']. Upon the perusal of the Plaint, the Agreements which are held out to be the subject matter of the present action, is clearly between the Plaintiff on the one part and the 2nd Defendant on the other part.

(42) The 2nd Defendant which is incorporated as a private company is a juristic person who has the capacity to enter into contracts. Rights and obligations flowing from the contracts do not in general reach beyond the two contracting parties. According to Chitty [2nd Edition, Chapter 17] "No one may in general be entitled to rights or bound by obligations flowing from the terms of a contract to which he is not a party." The essence of a registered company is that it has a legal personality which is separate from its members. The legal foundation of this concept is found in the case of Salomon v. Salomon & Co. Ltd. [1897] AC 22 in which the House of Lords laid down the universal principle that a company is a distinct legal person entirely different from its members. This principle of separate legal personality is referred to as the 'veil of incorporation'. As a result of this case, the courts have generally considered themselves bound by the concept that a company is a separate legal person distinct from its members and would generally not go behind the veil of incorporation.

(43) The cause of action in this case is simply a contractual violation where one party to the contract has failed to settle payments due to the other. On a perusal of the agreements marked P2-P5 it is clear that the 1st party to the agreements is the Plaintiff whilst the 2nd party is the 2nd Defendant Company, namely, Radiant Trading Company (Pvt) Ltd.

Thus evidently, the party liable to make the payment claimed under the contracts is the 2nd Defendant Company.

(44) The High Court Judge observed that on the perusal of the agreements marked 'P2-P5' it appears that the parties to them are the Plaintiff and 2nd Defendant and that the Directors (4th -6th Defendants) have signed them only as witnesses are therefore should be discharged. Considering the above, I am of the view that the Learned High Court Judge had not erred in arriving at the conclusion referred to above and thus, I answer the questions of law referred to in sub- paragraphs (ii) and (iii) of Paragraph 16 of the Petition also in the negative.

(45) The final question that this court is called upon to answer is, as to whether the impugned order of the Learned High Court Judge is contrary to Sections 14 and 18 of the CPC.

(46) With regard to the above question of law, the argument of the plaintiff was twofold.

(a) The words "on or before the hearing" that occurs in Section 18 of the CPC should not be read to mean, "any time before hearing" but to mean "after pleadings (plaint, answer and replication if any) are completed".

(b) In terms of Section 14 of the CPC, the plaintiff is permitted to name the defendants and the argument of the Defendants that no relief could be obtained against the 1st, and 3rd to the 6th Defendants, ought not to have been entertained by the learned High Court Judge as it was premature and the discharging of those Defendants from the case, offended Section 18 of the CPC.

(47) In order to substantiate their argument, the Plaintiff relied on the decision in the case of Anil Kumar Singh v. Shiv Nath Mishra (1995) SCC (3)147, where it was observed that "The object of the rule is to bring on record all persons who are parties to the dispute relating to the subject matter so that the dispute may be determined in their presence at the same time without any protraction, inconvenience and to avoid multiplicity of proceedings….." . Relying on the decision in Seylan Bank PLC v. New Lanka Merchants Marketing (PVT) Ltd and others SC Appeal 198/2014 it was submitted on behalf of the Plaintiff that, under the second limb of Section 18 (1), persons who may not be liable upon the cause of action, but nevertheless, are persons whose presence before the court is necessary to enable the court to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all questions in that action could be added as parties.

(48) The cause of action in this case, which I have referred to earlier in the judgement, is simply a contractual violation alleged, where one party to the contract has failed to settle payments due to the other. On the perusal of the agreements marked P2-P5 it is clear that the 1st party to the agreements is the Plaintiff whilst the 2nd party is the 2nd Defendant Company, namely, Radiant Trading Company (Pvt) Ltd. Thus evidently, the party liable to make the payment claimed under the agreements, is the 2nd Defendant Company. Thus, the parties to the subject matter relating to the dispute [as referred to in the case of Anil Kumar Singh (supra)] are the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant.

(49) The Learned High Court Judge on a careful examination of the Plaint, other documents filed along with it and the submissions made, had arrived at this very conclusion, i.e. that the Plaintiff had the right to claim the amount stated in the plaint from the 2nd Defendant Company, which was the only other party to the relevant sales agency agreements, other than the Plaintiff and that the discharged Defendants "cannot be considered as necessary parties to adjudicate the real dispute between the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant".

(50) The submission made on behalf of the Plaintiff that the words "on or before the hearing" in Section 18 of the CPC should be read to mean "after the pleadings" is mere ipse dixit and devoid of any merit. I do not think the legislators had any intention of imposing any restrictions with regard to the ambit of its application.

(51) Meideen v. Banda [1 NLR 51] is one of the earliest cases decided by the Supreme Court where the ambit of Section 18 of the CPC came up for consideration. His Lordship Withers J, observing that Section 18 of our CPC corresponds with the language of Rule 1 of the Judicature Rules of 1883 took guidance and followed the judgment of Lord Esher, M.R., in the case of Byrne v. Brown, reported in (1889) 22 QBD 657, p. 666 where Lord Esher observed;

"One of the chief objects of the Judicature Acts was to secure that, wherever a Court can see in the transaction brought before it that the rights of one of the parties will or may be so affected that under the forms of law other actions may be brought in respect of that transaction, the Court shall have power to bring all the parties before it, and determine the rights of all in one proceeding….."

"… Another great object was to diminish the cost of litigation. That being so, the Court ought to give the largest construction to those Acts in order to carry out as far as possible the two objects I have mentioned." [Emphasis added].

(52) Considering the above, I hold that the words "any time before hearing" in section 18 of the CPC is devoid of any fetters of the nature, contended on behalf of the Plaintiff, as far as the application of the said section is concerned. Accordingly, I answer the question of law referred to in sub-paragraph (v) of paragraph 16 of the Petition in the negative.

Accordingly, I affirm the order of the learned High Court Judge dated 23.09.2016 and dismiss the Appeal of the Plaintiff-Petitioner Appellant subject to costs.

Argued on: 27. 08. 2018

Decided on: 17.12. 2021

Aluwihare PC,J.

Case Briefly Stated;

(1) The Plaintiff-Appellant [hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff] instituted action in the High Court of Colombo exercising Civil jurisdiction against the three Defendant-Respondents [hereinafter referred to as the Defendants].

(2) Plaintiff instituted the said action seeking judgement in a sum of Rs. 7,300,000/= plus legal interest. Plaintiff's claim against the 1st Defendant was upon a Promissory Note whilst the claim against the 2nd and 3rd Defendants was upon a Guarantee Bond.

(3) The execution of both the promissory note [marked and produced as P3] and the guarantee bond [marked and produced as P4] were not disputed by the Defendants. In the answer, however, they denied payment on P3 and P4 and made a claim in reconvention in a sum of Rs. 15 million. The Plaintiff filing a replication denied the Defendants' claim.

(4) By judgement dated 15th May 2008, the Learned High Court judge dismissed the Plaintiff's case and held further that the Defendants were entitled to the reliefs prayed for in the answer. The present appeal arises from the said judgement.

(5) Both parties had been engaged in the business of exporting tea. It appears that, at the time relevant to the dispute in issue, there existed a business relationship between the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant.

The Plaintiff's Case

(6) Witness Balasubramanium, a Director of the Plaintiff company testifying stated that;

(a) The Plaintiff company had been set up for the export of tea and was associated with the 1st Defendant company in this venture.

(b) The 1st Defendant company would secure orders for the export of tea and the Plaintiff company would finance the purchase of tea. The export of teas had taken place on letters of credit that was assigned to the Plaintiff's bank, which was instructed to credit export proceeds to the Plaintiff's account. The profits were to be shared equally between the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant.

(c) The operation had been quite straightforward, according to the witness, upon the letter of credit being submitted to the bank, the 1st Defendant company places a firm order and the Plaintiff Company purchases tea, which is delivered to the 1st Defendant company for blending, packing and exporting.

(d) As far as the impugned transaction was concerned, a letter of credit had been received by the Plaintiff's bank for the export of tea to Iran, and consequently a stock of tea had been purchased by the Plaintiff from the auction and stored in the warehouse of the 1st Defendant company. This consignment of tea, however, had not been shipped due to a complaint by the buyer's agent relating to its inferior quality. As a result, the tea had been lying in the stores of the 1st Defendant.

(e) The witness has alleged, that without any intimation to the Plaintiff, the 1st Defendant had made arrangements to have the consignment shipped to Dubai, without the customary letter of credit being opened. On the Plaintiff making a query, the 2nd and 3rd Defendants had confirmed both verbally and in writing [P1], that the payment would be made once the consignment of tea reach Dubai.

(f) The Plaintiff, however, according to the witness, had not been paid for the said consignment of tea.

(g) The witness had further stated that, as the payment was not forthcoming, he requested for additional security for the payment and consequently the 1st Defendant executed a Promissory Note [P3] in favour of the Plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 7,300,000/= which was the Rupee value equivalent of US $ 81,000, the value of the consignment of tea that was exported to Dubai. In addition, a Guarantee Bond [P4] also had been given, signed by 2nd and 3rd Defendants, assuring the payment. [Both the Promissory Note P3 and the Guarantee Bond P4 are dated 2nd July 2001]

(h) As, even by April 2002, the 1st Defendant company had not paid the Plaintiff company the money due, in respect of the consignment of tea exported to Dubai, a letter [P6] was sent by the Plaintiff company presenting the Promissory Note [P3] and requesting payment. The Defendants, however, had not paid the money due on the Promissory Note, as requested. As such, 'notice of dishonour' [P7] was sent to the 1st Defendant company, with copies to the 2nd to 3rd Defendants, followed by the letter of demand [P8].

(i) The witness under cross-examination stated that the Promissory Note [P3] was executed nearly 5 months after the consignment of tea was exported, because the export of this particular consignment of tea had been quite contrary to the customary practice as explained in paragraph (c) above.

(j) According to the Defendants, the Promissory Note P3 and the Guarantee Bond P4 were given to raise funds to service the pending export orders, which, however, had been denied by the Plaintiff. The position taken up by the Plaintiff was that the particular consignment was shipped on 'consignment' basis instead of on 'letters of credit' which was the agreed procedure between the parties and also without any intimation to the Plaintiff.

(k) The Plaintiff alleges that it was due to this reason, that they requested for security and the Defendants gave the Promissory Note [P3] and the Guarantee Bond [P4] both of which were executed subsequent to the shipment.

The Defendants' version

(7) Mohamed Abbas, Director of the 1st Defendant Company, in his testimony had taken up the position that they had an arrangement with the Plaintiff company, for the Defendants to obtain orders for tea from Iran and the Plaintiff to supply stocks of tea for export. The witness had referred to these transactions as "L. C. orders". The arrangement was, for the Defendant company to obtain the orders [for tea] and the Plaintiff to purchase the consignments of tea and export on letters of credit assigned to the Plaintiff's bank and the parties to share the profits equally.

(8) When the third consignment [22,550 kg] was to be shipped, an agent from the Iranian buyer had come down and having examined the tea, had declared that the teas were below the quality they desired.

(9) In order to raise the quality of the teas, the 1st Defendant company had blended the consignment of teas supplied by the Plaintiff with superior quality teas and had obtained a fresh order to have the teas shipped to Iran with a trans-shipment in Dubai. The teas so shipped could not proceed beyond Dubai, due to an import restriction clamped by Iran and the consignment had got stuck in Dubai which was the port of trans-shipment. According to the Defendants' witness, the Plaintiff had given instructions to sell the consignment in issue, in Dubai.

(10) Witness Abbas [Director of the 1st Defendant Company] had written to Seylan Bank on 3rd April 2001 and had put the bank on notice that the Plaintiff company [MMBL Teas] had bought a consignment of 22,500 kg of tea and the said consignment was exported to M/s Al Ashraf General Trading Company in Dubai, for onward transmission to Iran [D34].

(11) It appears that the trade embargo or the ban on importing tea to Iran had come into force in March 2001 [D33]. The probable reason for the teas being sold to a buyer in Dubai instead of being shipped to Iran.

(12) Although it was claimed by the Defendants that they lost their goodwill, credentials and reputation vis-à-vis the Iranian buyer in view of the Plaintiff's conduct, namely supplying inferior quality teas, the actual reason for the trade to come to a halt, appears to be the embargo on tea imports to Iran.

(13) The defence witness also admitted that [in his testimony] the Plaintiff demanded a "security" and the Defendants having agreed, gave a Promissory Note for Rs. 7.3 million and executed a Guarantee Bond as well.

(14) The defence witness had also admitted that, although the arrangement between the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant was to obtain orders on letters of credit of foreign buyers in favour of the Plaintiff company, the impugned consignment of teas was not exported on a letter of credit, but on "consignment basis" and the witness admitted that the teas belonged to the Plaintiff company and that the Defendants did not pay the Plaintiff the value for the 22134 kg of teas that were exported. The excuse given by the witness for such non-payment was that the Defendants did not receive payment.

(15) The position taken up by the Defendants was that the Plaintiff company had no financial strength to do exports and the Plaintiff company sought the assistance of the 1st Defendant company, for the Plaintiff to obtain funds from the [Seylan] bank. It must be noted that this assertion of the Defendants was refuted by the Plaintiff. In the course of the testimony, witness Balasubramanium had stated that the Plaintiff had obtained "packing credit" from the bank in order to finance the purchase of teas.

The Contention on behalf of the Plaintiff

(16) It was the contention of the learned counsel for the Plaintiff that:

(a) The Promissory Note and the Guarantee Bond are autonomous documents and that it is settled law that such instruments cannot be read subject to extraneous terms and conditions.

(b) That the learned trial judge was in error when he held that on the evidence, that there was no consideration; whereas according to the evidence led at the trial in fact "valuable consideration" was in fact present.

(c) Allowing the counter claim [claim in reconvention] of the Defendants was wrong, as the same is not in compliance with Sections 43,44,45 and 46(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

(17) In terms of section 85(1) the Bills of Exchange Ordinance, a Promissory note is defined as;

> "A promissory note is an unconditional promise in writing made by one person to another signed by the maker, engaging to pay, on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money, to, or to the order of, a specified person or to bearer".

(18) The learned counsel for the Plaintiff argued that the learned trial judge had misdirected himself in concluding that the terms and conditions in documents P3 [the Promissory Note] and P4 [Guarantee Bond] must be interpreted together with the conditions set out in the document marked P1, a letter sent by the 2nd Defendant, to the Finance Director of the Plaintiff company. The learned Counsel further contended that the Promissory Note [P3] cannot be subjected to extraneous terms and conditions as they are autonomous documents and in any event the letter P1 is merely a communication sent by the 2nd Defendant to the Financial Director, stating, that the 1st Defendant company would pay for the teas exported, no sooner the shipment reached the destination.

(19) The learned counsel, relied on the decision in the case of Cebora vs. S.I.P (Industrial Products) Ltd. [1976] Lloyds Law Reports 271, where it was held that "For some generations one of those certainties has been that the bona fide holder for value of a bill of exchange is entitled , save in truly exceptional circumstances, on its maturity to have it treated as cash, so that in an action upon it the Court will refuse to regard either as a defence or as grounds for a stay of execution any set off, legal or equitable, or any counterclaim whether arising on the particular transaction upon which the bill of exchange came into existence, or, a fortiori, arising in any other way. This rule of practice is thus, in effect, pay up on the bill of exchange first and pursue claims later." [page 278-279].

It was contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that, to defeat a claim based on a bill of exchange, the defence must relate to a total failure of consideration, as a mere defect of title in the goods supplied will not amount to a total failure of consideration.

(20) The position taken up by the Plaintiff referred to above, must be viewed in the backdrop of the evidence led in the case and the background to the execution of the Promissory Note [P3] and the Guarantee Bond [P4]

(21) The evidence was that both, the Promissory Note [P3] and the Guarantee Bond [P4] was executed nearly five months after the teas [the consignment in issue] were exported as the Defendants in exporting the consignment, had deviated from the agreed practice.

(22) According to witness Balasubramanium, he became aware of the export [of the consignment of teas in issue] only upon being informed by one of his officers and when he made inquiries from the general manager of the 1st Defendant company, Balasubramanium was assured that the Plaintiff would be paid when the consignment reached Dubai. The witness had further stated, that what was intimated to him was confirmed in writing by P1, which is a letter voluntarily issued by the Defendants, assuring payment.

(23) Both the Promissory Note [P3] and the Guarantee Bond [P4] had been executed about 4 months after the letter [P1]. Witness Balasubramanium testifying further had stated, as the Defendants had defaulted in payment even after nearly 5 months after the teas were shipped, he requested additional security against the payment due. Thus, P1 is merely a communication that explains the circumstances that led to the execution of P3 and P4 and has no bearing on the Promissory Note [P3] or the Guarantee bond [P4].

(24) Hence, I hold that the trial judge misdirected himself in holding that the Promissory Note [P3] and the Guarantee Bond [P4] must be interpreted together with the 'conditions' stated in the letter P1. In fact, there are no conditions in P1, but only an assurance by the Defendants that the monies will be paid. The relevant portion of that letter [P1] is reproduced below;

> "REFERENCE 22,500 KILOS TEA WHICH WE HAVE EXPORTED THIS WEEK, SHALL BE PAID NO SOONER THE GOODS REACHED THE DESTINATION & WE UNDERTAKE TO ARRANGE WITH OUR BUYER TO REMIT THE MONEY DIRECT TO YOUR ACCOUNT WITH SEYLAN BANK CHATHAM ST, BRANCH"

(25) Accordingly, I hold that the conclusion reached by the learned trial judge that P3 and P4 must be interpreted based on the conditions on P1 is erroneous. And further, I also hold, that the findings by the learned trial judge that the Defendants are not liable to pay the Plaintiff due to non fulfilment of certain events referred to in the letter P1, is also erroneous.

(26) The learned counsel argued that in deciding the issues raised in the case the learned trial judge has misdirected himself by treating as a relevant factor the Defendant's claim that the entire shipment consisting of 22500 kg of tea, did not belong to the Plaintiff whereas the issue before court was, the failure to honour the Promissory Note [P3].

(27) The crux of the Plaintiff's case was the failure on the part of the Defendants to honour the Promissory Note [P3] drawn for Rs.7.3 million, which was the value of the teas supplied by the Plaintiff and equivalent to the amount on conversion of 81,000 in US $ terms. The 2nd Defendant in his evidence has admitted this fact and the evidence is reproduced below; [proceedings of 23-11-2007, pages 9 &10]

Q. You confirm that the value of the tea exported is in fact $ 81,000 less 4% commission?
A. yes.
Q. That was the value of the tea of the Plaintiff?
A. yes.

(28) With regard to the observation made by the learned trial judge; "that the teas belonging to the Plaintiff could not have been sold at any stage" [due to its inferior quality], it was contended on behalf of the Plaintiff, that the defects in the quality of the goods supplied, do not amount to 'no consideration or a total failure of consideration'. As such, it was argued, that the defects in the quality of teas supplied cannot be used as a defence to refuse payment on the Promissory Note [P3] and the Guarantee Bond [P4]. It was further contended that the issue raised, in the instant case as to the quality of the tea supplied, is irrelevant and should not have been a factor in determining the liability of the Defendants vis-à-vis the Promissory Note and the Guarantee Bond.

(29) To my mind, the quality [of teas] is subjective, in that, the goods may appeal to one buyer and may not be so in respect of another. The fact that by blending a mere 334 kg of tea with a stock of 22,500 kg of tea was sufficient to raise the quality of the teas to such a degree that was acceptable to a buyer is an indication that the state of the teas supplied by the Plaintiff was of certain quality and therefore cannot be treated as a case of total failure of consideration. According to the evidence of witness Mohamed Ishan Abbas, a director of the 1st Defendant company, the buyer rejected the tea because the quality was not 'first class'.

(30) In the case of Cebora [supra] the court observed "….bona fide holder for value of a bill of exchange is entitled , save in truly exceptional circumstances, on its maturity to have it treated as cash, so that in an action upon it the court will refuse to regard either as a defence or as grounds for a stay of execution any set off, legal or equitable, or any counterclaim whether arising on the particular transaction upon which the bill of exchange came into existence, or, a fortiori, arising in any other way. This rule of practice is thus, in effect, pay up on the bill of exchange first and pursue claims later." [page 278-279] The court went on to hold that, "...total failure of consideration is of course, in a position: it affords a defence…and must be clearly distinguished from allegations of delivery of goods with defects, when the pay first rule applies." [page 279]

(31) It was also held in the case of Brown Shipley & Co Ltd. v. Alicia Hosiery Ltd. [1966] 1 Lloyd's Law Reports 668, "… judgment should be given upon that bill of exchange as for cash and it is not to be held up by virtue of some counterclaim which the defendant may assert, even… a counterclaim relating to the specific subject-matter of the contract." [page 669]

(32) In the instant case, as referred to above, there had been a clear arrangement agreed between the parties as to the procedure with regard to the export of teas. The 2nd Defendant Abdul Hafeel Ahamed in his evidence admitted the position taken up by the Plaintiff. He had admitted that the previous shipments were based on letters of credit and there were a few other shipments lined up, which too were on letters of credit. He also admitted that, in relation to the first two shipments, the Plaintiff had obtained 'packing credit loans' on the strength of the letters of credit and the Plaintiff did not request the Defendants for funds to effect the shipments nor did the 1st Defendant company finance the shipments. The witness also admitted that when it came to the consignment of teas in issue, they never bothered to inform the Plaintiff that they were exporting the said consignment.

(33) Considering the foregoing, I hold that the Plaintiff was a bona fide holder of the Promissory Note [P3] for value and the Plaintiff is legally entitled to receive the sum stated in P3. Further, based on the ratio in the case of Cebora [supra] I also hold that there were no 'exceptional circumstances' and as such the Plaintiff was entitled to treat the Promissory Note [P3] as cash, on its maturity.

(34) The 2nd and the 3rd Defendants being directors of the 1st Defendant company, gave the Guarantee Bond [P4] in favour of the Plaintiff on the very day the Promissory Note [P3] was drawn and for the identical sum [Rs 7.3 million]. The Plaintiff asserts that the said amount is the monies due to the Plaintiff for the teas supplied for export.

(35) It was argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that the reason for the Defendants to draw the Promissory Note and the Guarantee Bond was to dissuade the Plaintiff from filing legal action against the Defendants for the recovery of the monies due to the Plaintiff.

(36) The contention of the Defendants was that the Guarantee Bond was prepared in order to "comfort the Plaintiff" and as such the Plaintiff cannot rely on the Guarantee Bond P4 to recover any monies from the (2nd and 3rd) Defendants. This position was flatly rejected by the witness Balasubramanium and the evidence does not disclose that there was a necessity to "comfort" the Plaintiff. There is uncontroverted evidence that the Plaintiff had an arrangement with its bank to obtain "packing credit" to finance business operations and there is no evidence whatsoever to suggest that the Plaintiff was facing any financial difficulty to run its operations.

(37) When one considers the evidence placed before court and the execution of the Promissory Note [P3] and the Guarantee Bond [P4] on the same day for the identical sum, which in turn is the value of the consignment of teas supplied by the Plaintiff to the 1st Defendant company for export, it is clear that consideration was present in this case.

(38) The learned counsel for the Plaintiff contended that, it is settled law, with regard to Guarantee Bonds, that the 3rd party normally does not personally provide consideration, and the Guarantee Bond is enforceable at the request of the beneficiary of the bond.

(39) In this context, the position taken up by the Defendant does not appear to have any merit and I hold that both the 2nd and 3rd Defendants are under a legal duty to honour the Guarantee Bond P4.

Counter Claim by the Defendants

(40) The Defendants made a claim in reconvention [cross claim] for an award of Rs.15 million as damages, which the learned High Court Judge upheld. The counter claim was on the basis that, the Plaintiff failed to purchase and provide stocks of 'quality' tea on a timely basis, when the 1st Defendant received export orders and as a result the Defendants sustained a loss both in reputation and goodwill from the perspective of the foreign buyers.

(41) It was the contention of the learned counsel for the Plaintiff that there was no legal basis for the award of damages and the claim ought to have been disallowed in limine. The learned counsel based his argument on two grounds;

(i) That the entire award of damages for the claim in reconvention has been made without proof of such claim being established in court,

And

(ii) That the damages for loss of goodwill, credentials and reputation cannot be awarded in the law of contract and that these are heads of liability where damages are claimed in the law of delict.

(42) With regard to (i) above, i.e., the Defendants' 'claim in reconvention' for damages, the Plaintiff filed a replication denying the claim and had taken up the position that the claim in reconvention is baseless and a mere afterthought on the part of the Defendants. The Plaintiff's assertion was that the said claim was made in order to avoid liability on their part.

(43) As referred to earlier, the learned trial judge had held that the Defendants proved the counter claim mainly on the basis that the evidence placed by the Defendants "has not been subjected to any cross examination. Therefore, this court has no option other than to accept the said evidence in respect of the loss caused". In stating so, I presume that the learned trial judge had relied on the rationale in the often-quoted decision in Edrick de Silva vs. Chandradasa de Silva [1967] 70 N.L.R 169.

(44) I am, however, of the view that, failure to challenge evidence by cross examination by itself may not be sufficient to hold that a particular fact had been proved within the meaning of Section 3 of the Evidence Ordinance. It might, however, be a factor to be taken into account in accepting such evidence. Once the evidence is received, independent of such reception, the court should give its mind to the evidence so received, and consider whether such evidence is sufficient to establish the fact, sought to be proved.

(45) In the case of Edrick de Silva [supra], their Lordships observed, [at page 174] "But where the plaintiff has in a civil case led evidence sufficient in law to prove a factum probandum, the failure of the defendant to adduce evidence which contradicts it adds a new factor in favour of the plaintiff. There is then an additional " matter before the Court ", which the definition in Section 3 of the Evidence Ordinance requires the Court to take into account, namely that the evidence led by the plaintiff is uncontradicted. [emphasis added].

(46) From the pronouncement in Edrick de Silva, [supra]it is abundantly clear that the judgement does not detract from the legal requirement that a party seeking to establish a fact must provide sufficient evidence to satisfy court and the dictum in the said case can be applied only in instances where the party has led evidence sufficient in law to prove the fact and not otherwise.

(47) Section 3 of the Evidence Ordinance defining proof states; "a fact is said to be proved when, after considering the matters before it, the court either believes it to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists." Thus, in the light of the submissions made on behalf of the Plaintiff, it would be necessary to consider, whether the evidence placed before the court by the Defendants was sufficient in law to establish that they were entitled to the damages claimed, within the meaning of Section 3 of the Evidence Ordinance.

(48) Based on the assertions of the Defendants, the learned trial judge had considered damages under three heads;

(1) the loss caused to the Defendants as a result of their stores being used to store the stocks of tea purchased for exports.
(2) loss caused due to the cancellation of a consignment of tea and
(3) loss of goodwill and reputation.

(49) In the answer filed, the Defendants are silent with regard to sustaining any loss due to the use of their stores to stock tea. That was the arrangement arrived at between the parties. The only issue raised by the Defendants with regard to storage is issue No. 19 which reads as "Was the said stock of tea kept in the warehouse of the Defendants for a period exceeding 6 months due to the aforesaid reason". There is, however, no 'issue' raised by the Defendants to the effect that the Defendants had sustained any loss or damages as a result of the tea lying in their stores.

(50) According to witness Balasubramanium, storage charges were paid after the export proceeds were received and he had gone onto say that in respect of the consignment of tea in issue, export proceeds were never received by the Plaintiff and therefore storage charges were not paid. [proceedings of 10th March 2005]

(51) The 2nd Defendant had admitted the above position taken by witness Balasubramanium and had, in paragraph 76 of his affidavit averred that "The undertaking given by us [Defendants] was that the full proceeds of export will be remitted first to the Plaintiff's account at Seylan Bank Limited and then the profits realized, the amount paid by us [Defendants] to upgrade the stale tea, the cost of packing materials, labour charges, containerizing, transport and storage charges were to be reimbursed by the Plaintiff." [emphasis added]. Thus, it is clear by their own admission that the reimbursement of storage charges was contingent upon the remittance of sales proceeds to the bank account of the Plaintiff, which never happened in the instant case.

(52) In the answer, the Defendants have averred that, a loss was caused due to the Plaintiff not having adequate tea stocks for export when needed and as a result, stocks had to be purchased at higher prices and in addition the stocks of teas offered for export got rejected due to the Plaintiff supplying inferior quality teas [Issues No. 30 and 31].

(53) With regard to the first aspect referred to above i.e. the Plaintiff not having adequate stocks, the 2nd Defendant's position was that the Defendants made 'no' profits because the Plaintiff did not have adequate stocks and the Plaintiff had to pay higher prices to purchase tea. [paragraphs 22 and 23 of the 2nd defendant's affidavit]. The 2nd Defendant, however, does not speak of any 'loss' being caused to the Defendants as a result.

(54) In paragraph 52 of the affidavit of the 2nd Defendant, he takes up the position that the Iranian buyer demanded compensation in a sum of US$ 21,690.00/-. Apart from the testimony, the Defendants have not produced any evidence to establish that the Iranian buyer had made such a demand. Although the Defendants had produced a series of written communications between the said buyer and the Defendants relating to the shipment of teas, there isn't a single communication with regard to claiming damages. All what the Defendants have produced, is a letter which they claim, they sent to the Iranian buyer, allegedly containing two cheques, each drawn for Rs. 867,600/ the Rupee equivalent of US $ 21,690/-. Copies of the two cheques have also been marked and produced as D29 and D29A respectively. Both are cash cheques, drawn on the same day for the identical amount, i.e., Rs.867,600/-

(55) The Defendants did not produce any acknowledgment from the Iranian buyer with regard to the receipt of any money paid as damages. It appears highly unusual that in settling damages to an overseas business partner, payment is made in Sri Lankan rupees. It is also unusual that the payment is made by way of cash cheques and each drawn on the same day for the identical amount.

(56) Although the 2nd Defendant had claimed that the Defendants lost an estimated profit of Rs. 1,353,000/- due to the cancellation of the 5th consignment owing to the Plaintiff's failure to purchase teas, it is apparent that the trade with Iran had come to a standstill due to the ban of tea imports into that country, which had come into effect from 1st March 2001 and which had lasted for three years [D33].

(57) According to the 2nd Defendant the consignment of 22500 kg that is in issue was shipped on the 8th of February to Dubai and when the shipment reached Dubai the Iranian ban on tea imports had come into effect. [Paragraphs 72 and 73 of the affidavit of the 2nd Defendant]

(58) Upon consideration and evaluation of the evidence placed by the Defendants to substantiate their claim for damages, I am of the view that the Defendants have failed to establish that they had sustained any damages due to the acts of the Plaintiff, within the meaning of Section 3 of the Evidence Ordinance and I uphold the argument of the learned counsel for the Plaintiff that the entire award of damages for the claim in reconvention has been made without proof of such claim being established in court. [Paragraph 44 (i) of this judgement]

(59) Accordingly, I set aside the findings of the High Court in relation to the issues referred to below and answer the said issues in the following manner: -

E.A.G.R. Amarasekara J

I had the privilege of reading the judgment written by his lordship justice Sisira de Abrew in its draft form. Though I inclined to agree with the final conclusion of the said judgment to dismiss the appeal, since I hold a different view with regard to the cursus curiae of original civil courts, namely the reiteration of objections to marked documents at the end of one's case as well as with regard to the ratio in Sri Lanka Ports Authority V Jugolinija Boal East (1981) 1 Sri L R 18, with all due respect to his lordship's reasoning, I think it is my duty to give my reasons separately to explain why I agree in dismissing this appeal.

First, I would like to refer to the Latin maxim "cursus curiae est lex curiae" which means "the practice of court is the law of the court". This Court in Samarakoon Mudiyanselage Samarakoon and another V Mohammadu Sally Fajurdeen SC Appeal No. 06/2012 quoted as follows;

"Every Court is the guardian of its own records and master of its own practice" and where a practice has existed it is convenient, except in cases of extreme urgency and necessity, to adhere to it, because it is the practice, even though no reason can be assigned for it; for an inveterate practice in law generally stands upon principles that are founded in justice and convenience." – (Taken from Broom's Legal Maxims- 10th Edition page 82.)

"A court exercising judicial functions has an inherent power to regulate its own procedure, save in so far as its procedure has been laid down by the enacted law, and it cannot adopt a practice or procedure contrary to or inconsistent with rules laid down by statute or adopted by ancient usage. - (Taken from Halsbury's Laws of England 4th Edition Vol.10, Para 703.)

Thus, if the practice is not inconsistent with a rule laid down by a Statute or to the long-standing practice or usage, it has the force of law. Hence, in my view when this court proclaim an established practice invalid in toto or partially limiting its application to certain areas or scopes, this court has to be very careful, since it may cause serious repercussions to people who acted relying on such practice as law up to that moment; Not only in the case such proclamation is made, but, even in others which have been already decided and pending in appeal due to the reason that a party can take up the position that such practice has no legal consequences in toto or relating to certain areas or scopes even though a new legal position that is created by case law has no retrospective effect.- (See Arulanandam Puvirajakeerthy V Nadaraja Indranee CA 1222/2000(F)).

In this backdrop, I would prefer to consider whether the practice and ratio enunciated in Jugolinija Boal East case is still valid law even with regard to documents that are required to be attested by law and whether the factual background of the matter at hand has an exceptional situation that does not allow the application of the said practice and ratio to the case at hand.

His lordship in his draft judgment has expressed the view that due to section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, ratio in Jugolinija Boal East decision does not apply to documents that are required by law to be attested. However, in my view, not only with regard to the documents that are required to be attested by law, even with regard to other documents, there are provisions in law how they should be proved. For example, any document has to be proved by primary evidence or tendering the original except on occasions where leading of secondary evidence is allowed by law. (see section 64 and 65 of the Evidence Ordinance).

I do not argue against the view that when a document is to be proved, whether it is a one that is required by law to be attested or not, it has to be proved according to the relevant statutory provisions of the law such as provisions found in the Evidence Ordinance. However, there are certain situations where even the law accepts that certain documents need not be further proved. Followings are among them;

- A document admitted by parties need not be proved and with regard to a deed that is required by law to be attested, this principle is contained in section 70 of the Evidence Ordinance.
- Similarly, a deed which is 30 years or more old and comes from the proper custody, may not be proved by the party tendering it due to the presumption contained in section 90 of the Evidence Ordinance.
- As per Section 68 of the Partition Law formal proof of the execution of any deed which, on the face of it, purports to have been duly executed, is not necessary, unless the genuineness of that deed is impeached by a party claiming adversely.
- As per section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code, if the opposing party does not object to the document when a document is tendered in evidence, if it is not a document forbidden by law to be received in evidence, the court has to admit it.

In my view, the practice referred to in Jugolinija Boal East case is linked to the impeaching and objecting to a document when it is first going to be marked in evidence as contemplated by section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code. Perhaps, in the same manner it may be linked to section 68 of partition law subject to the paramount duty of the judge to investigate title in partition actions. I opine that the practice referred to in Jugolinija Boal East case is focused on a situation where it can be considered that the objection or the challenge to the document originally raised as waived as explained below in this judgment.

Evidence Ordinance contained general provisions regarding matters relating to evidence in civil and criminal proceedings while the Civil Procedure Code contains general provisions in relation to procedure in civil proceedings. Nonetheless, when consider in comparison, the Civil Procedure Code contains provisions specially related to civil actions. Hence, if there is any conflict with regard to placing of evidence and procedure in civil actions, one has to consider provisions in Civil Procedure Code with priority.

As mentioned above, if the document is not one forbidden by law to be received in evidence and it is not objected by the opposing party for being received in evidence, the court has to admit it as evidence. The term 'forbidden by law' has been construed to mean absolute prohibition (for example, tax returns), and not to include a case where evidence was required not to be received or used unless certain requirements were fulfilled. – vide Seyed Mohamed V Perera 58 N L R 246 at254 and Siyadoris V Danoris 42 N L R 311.

Hence, if no objection is made to a document being marked when it was first tendered in evidence, it becomes evidence for all the purposes of the case and it cannot be challenged only in appeal. Aforesaid legal position had been confirmed by number of decisions of our superior courts. – vide Cinemas Limited V Sounderarajan (1998) 2 Sri L.R. 16, Adaicappa Chetty V Thos.Cook and Son 31 N L R 385, Silva V Kindersley 18 N L R 85, Seyed Mohommad V Perera (Supra), Siyadoris V Danoris (Supra), Andrishamy V Balahamy (1 Matara Cases 49), Seelawathie Gunasekara V K.W. Resanona S C Appeal No.22 of 1987.

Of the aforementioned decisions, Seyed Mohommad V Perera, and Siyadoris V Danoris were decisions of benches comprising two judges of the apex court while Seelawathie Gunasekara V K W Resanona was a decision of a bench comprising of 3 judges of the apex court. These three judgments relate to marking of deeds without objections being raised. Thus, all three judgments support the position that if no objection was taken when a document is tendered in evidence for the first time and marking it, it becomes evidence for all the purposes of the case and even if it is a deed, in such circumstances it is not necessary to prove it in accordance with section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. They further indicate that such objections cannot be taken for the first time in appeal. In this regard I would like to quote from Seyed Mohommad V Perera (Supra).

"Documents are constantly put in evidence in the course of a trial, sometimes without objections and sometimes by express consent. To rule every such document out on the ground of hearsay would necessitate parties calling in to the witness box persons whose testimony in regard to the authenticity of the document neither side disputes though the contents may be disputed. To accept such a proposition as legally sound and valid basis on which trials in the original courts should be conducted would add in no small measure both to the cost of litigation and to the law's delays, which we constantly hear so much about. We have therefore investigated this matter as fully as we can with such assistance as learned counsel were able to give us and we have come to the conclusion that evidence of documents of title of persons who are strangers to the action and have not been called may become inadmissible only if objections to their production is taken in the original court and that they cannot be objected to for the first time in appeal."

Following extract taken from Seelawathie Gunasekara V K W Resanona (Supra) further fortify the aforesaid position of law.

"In these circumstances section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance would not require the Notary or an attesting witness to be called; being a document which is not 'forbidden by law to be received in evidence', the failure to object to it being received in evidence would amount to a waiver of the objection"

"In the absence of an objection or an issue relating to due execution, and as due execution by the other lessors was not challenged in anyway, the finding of the learned District Judge that the deed, in its entirety, was of no force or avail in law cannot be sustained."

Now, I would like to consider the decision in Perera & Others V Elisahamy 65 C L W 59 which was delivered by a bench of two judges. It was an appeal over a judgment in a partition action. It appears that no objection was taken to the deed at the time when its contents were first spoken to by the witness. Irrespective of that and section 69 of the Partition Act, Basnayake C J in agreement with de Silva J held that 'the fact that its genuineness was impeached rendered formal proof necessary regardless of whether objection was taken or not' and 'a court cannot act on facts which are not proved in the manner prescribed in the Evidence Ordinance'. On a lighter reading of the above decision, one may get the impression that regardless of whether the document or deed was objected to or not when it was first tendered in evidence, it has to be proved according to the provisions in the Evidence Ordinance; if it is a deed, in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance; but a deeper understanding of the facts of the aforesaid case and its decision indicate that it is so necessary to prove according to the provisions of Evidence Ordinance, regardless of whether any objection is raised or not at the time of marking the document or deed, only if the genuineness of the document or deed is impeached by the opposite party. I do not see any conflict between this decision in Perera & Others V Elisahamy and other judgments referred above which indicate that where there is no objection to the document it can be admitted in evidence without further proof in terms of the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance. This decision in Perera V Elisahamy only add the condition that if the document is impeached irrespective of whether there is an objection or not it has to be proved in terms of the Evidence Ordinance. Perera V Elisahamy contemplates a situation where the document is impeached or challenged even prior to its marking. Even in Seelawathie Gunasekara V K.W Resanona (Supra) their lordships while arriving at the decision had observed that there was no issue challenging the deed.

It is necessary to see how a document including a deed can be impeached or challenged in a civil suit. Firstly, it can be impeached through pleadings. Secondly, it can be impeached by raising relevant issues. In a normal civil action, if it is not raised through an issue, the challenge to the document in the pleading may be considered as waived since with the framing of issues pleadings recede to the background. Thirdly, the document or the deed can be challenged by objecting to it under section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code and, if it is a partition action under section 68 of the Partition Law. However, what takes place in a partition action is subject to the incumbent duty of the judge to investigate title.

Hence, what was elaborated above through the decisions of our superior courts shows that in a normal civil action like the one at hand, if the document or the deed is not impeached through an issue or issues, and no objection is taken when it was first tendered in evidence, it becomes evidence for all purposes of the case. On the other hand, if the document or deed is impeached through an issue or issues, irrespective of whether any objection was taken at the first opportunity when it was tendered in evidence or not, the document has to be proved in terms of the Evidence Ordinance.; If it is a deed, in terms of section 68.

Now I would like to elaborate on the practice of reading the documents marked in evidence at the closure of one's case and reiteration of objections to the marked documents and the ratio in Jugolinija Boal East case.

As I stated above, in my view, this is a practice linked to section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code and it also can be linked to the similar provision found in section 68 of the Partition Act. In a Criminal Case, namely Robins V Grogan 43 N L R 269, it was held that a document cannot be used in evidence, unless its genuineness has been either admitted or established by proof, which should be given before the document is accepted by court. However, as shown above section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code allows documents, which are not forbidden by law, to be admitted in evidence when there is no objection at the time of tendering it in evidence. As explained above, if the document is challenged or impeached through an issue it still has to be proved according to the Evidence Ordinance.

When a document is objected to it being admitted when it was first tendered in evidence, two questions arise for the court to consider; Firstly, whether the document is authentic, in other words whether it is what the party tendering it represents it to be; Secondly, if it passes the test of authenticity, whether it is legally admissible. Admissibility may be decided on arguments with reference to relevant legal provisions but authenticity has to be decided through the evidence adduced in that regard - vide section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code. If one has to prove the authenticity at the very moment whenever an objection is taken, the court may have to adjourn the recording of the evidence of ongoing witness and allow witnesses to be called to prove the authenticity of the document. If they are not available, the court may have to adjourn the proceedings for the day to give an opportunity to summon witnesses necessary to prove the document. Thus, it makes it expedient to mark a document 'subject to proof' when there is an objection to it and proceed with the ongoing witness. On the other hand, it is always not possible for the opposing counsel to state exactly whether he/she objects or not, since in a civil trial, it is not mandatory for the clients to be present in courts. The counsel may need instructions from his client to object to the document tendered in evidence. One may say, since documents are listed, he can get instructions prior to the trial date, but no one can assume that a fake document with the same description as in the list may not be introduced through a witness. Furthermore, there are occasions where documents are marked with the permission of court as well as by showing to the witness during cross-examination. Hence, in a civil trial, it is necessary for the counsel to get instructions from his client to raise a steady objection to a document. This creates a situation in a civil trial to object to documents tentatively till the counsel gets instructions from his client. Hence, it is conceivable that in a civil trial, certain documents are marked 'subject to proof' tentatively. This make a party to refer or mention those documents when that party intends to close his case to see whether the objections made are carried forward by the opposing party or not. Otherwise, I am not aware of any provision that requires parties to mention the documents marked again at the closure of their case. If the objection is reiterated it is considered as a steady objection and if not, it is considered as a withdrawal or wavier of a tentative objection. If the objection is reiterated, in my view, the party who marked the documents have two options, that is either to show through submissions that further proof is not necessary or it is already proved, or ask permission of court to summon witnesses to prove the documents which are steadily objected since it is the moment objection is confirmed leaving aside its tentative nature. On the other hand, if the objection is not reiterated, it is considered that it was a tentative objection that was withdrawn. In such circumstance as there is no objections in terms of section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code, the law relating to the application of section 154 as discussed above would apply.

Afore described practice has been so ingrained in our system and, sometimes after mentioning the documents marked, the counsel only looks at the counsel of the opposite party to see his response. Even the court may not record his response unless there is a reiteration of the objection. Thus, this appears to be a practice developed through the practical application of section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code which is legally acceptable. On the other hand, this practice reduces the delay and cost of litigation which is for the convenience of all the stake holders in a given case. The said practice had been adhered by our civil courts and approved by superior courts including this court, not only in Jugolinija Boal East case but also in following cases.

Supreme Court Cases:

Rolax Enterprises(pvt) Ltd. V People's Bank SC CHC Appeal 12/2011, Balapitiya Gunananda Thero V Talalle Methananda Thero (1997) 2 Sri L R 101, Stassen Exports Ltd. V Brooke Bond Group Ltd. (2010) 2 Sri L R 36, Samarakoon V Gunasekara and another (2011) 1 Sri L R 149.

Court of Appeal Cases:

Hence, it is clear that our superior courts approved the said practice and ratio in Jugolinija Boal East case through many decisions till, to my knowledge, two recent decisions expressed a different view, namely the decisions in Mohamed Naleem Mohamed Ismail V Samsulebbe Hamithu SC Appeal 04/2006 and Dadallage Anil Shantha Samarasinghe v Dadallage Mervin Silva & another SC Appeal 45/2010. As per the decision of aforesaid two cases, with regard to a deed which is required by law to be attested, even there was no objection reiterated at the closure of the case of the party who marked that deed, it has to be proved in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. It is not clear whether the deeds which were in question in the respective cases were impeached or challenged through issues raised at the trial. However, it is clear that these two judgments refused to follow the ratio in Jugolinija Boal East case. Nevertheless, in the aforesaid two cases application of section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code had not been considered in coming to the said decisions of rejecting the application of ratio in Jugolinija Boal East Case. Both the said cases have referred to the decision of Samarakoon V Gunasekara and another (2011) 1 Sri L R 149 (Supra). Anyhow, in my view, the decision in Samarakoon V Gunasekara is not a decision that negates the afore-discussed practice or the ratio in Jugolinija Boal East case. In that case, the requirements in terms of or application of section 68 had been considered after referring to the reiteration of objections to the relevant documents at the closure of the party who tendered the relevant documents. The said decision specifically refers to the aforesaid practice and ratio in Jugolinija Boal East case and had never stated that said ratio does not apply to deeds. There the application of section 68 was necessary since the objection was reiterated at the closure of the case of the opposite party.

In Mohamed Naleem Mohamed Ismail V Samsulebbe Hamithu SC Appeal 04/2006 (supra) their lordships while deciding not to apply the ratio in Jugolinija Boal East case had expressed that neither in the decision of Jugolinija Boal East nor in the decision of Balapitiya Gunananda Thero V Talalle Methananda Thero(supra) it had referred to a document that was required by law to be attested. Though this court is not bound by the decisions of the Court of Appeal, it appears that decisions in Hemapala V Abeyratne (supra) and Wijewardena V Ellawala (Supra) which applied the ratio in Jugolinija Boal East to documents which are required by law to be attested had not been brought to the notice of their lordships prior to making that decision. Furthermore, as said before, the application of section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code or the decisions made by superior courts in relation to deeds that were not objected at the time of marking, namely, Seyed Mohommad V Perera (supra), Siyadoris V Danoris(supra) and Seelawathie Gunasekara V K W Resanona(supra), apparently, had not been brought to the notice of their lordships, prior to making the decision in the said Mohamed Naleem Mohamed Ismail V Samsulebbe Hamithu. Same lapses I observe in relation to the decision in Dadallage Anil Shantha Samarasinghe v Dadallage Mervin Silva & another(supra). In the decision of Dadallage Anil Shantha Samarasinghe v Dadallage Mervin Silva & another, there is a reference to the decision in Robins V Grogan(supra) but it is a criminal case which has no application of the aforesaid section 154 or section 68 of the Partition Act. Therefore, I do not incline to follow the decisions in the said Mohamed Naleem Mohamed Ismail V Samsulebbe Hamithu SC Appeal 04/2006 and Dadallage Anil Shantha Samarasinghe v Dadallage Mervin Silva & another as they were decided without the opportunity to consider the practical application of the said section 154 and some relevant case laws. As elaborated above I cannot consider Perera V Elisahamy (Supra) as a decision that nullifies the application of ratio in Jugolinija Boal East decision in relation to deeds in general terms but when the deed is impeached or challenged it requires the deed to be proved in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance.

As mentioned before, in a civil action such as the one at hand, if the relevant document is not impeached or challenged through issues, the ratio in Jugolinija Boal East is still valid. This is so even with regard to the deeds. However, if the deed is impeached or challenged through an issue raised, it has to be proved as per the provisions of Evidence Ordinance.

Moreover, in the case at hand, the defendant had refused to accept that he executed the deed of transfer as alleged by the plaintiff through his answer and thereafter have raised issues no.7 and 8 in that regard. Therefore, what was to be proved with regard to the alleged execution of the relevant deed was elaborated by the said issues. Till the learned judge answered those issues, the challenge to the alleged execution of the deed through issues stood valid. As such, the deed should have been proved in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance even though there was no objection at the time of marking it or at the closure of the Plaintiff's case. In my view and as elaborated above, the learned District Judge should not have applied the ratio in Jugolinija Boal East decision to the present case, even though the deed was not objected to at the closure of the plaintiff's case. Hence, I cannot find fault with the decision of the learned High Court Judges for not considering the afore discussed practice or the ratio in Jugolinija Boal East case.

For the foregoing reasons I also decide to answer the questions of law in favour of the Defendant Appellant- Respondent while dismissing the appeal with costs.

Plaintiff-Respondent-Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff-Appellant) filed this action in the District Court of Nuwara Eliya against the Defendant-Appellant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant-Respondent) seeking a declaration, inter alia, that the Plaintiff-Appellant is the owner of the property in question and to eject the Defendant-Respondent from the property in question. The learned District Judge by her judgment dated 6.7.2010 held the case in favour of the Plaintiff-Appellant. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the learned District Judge, the Defendant-Respondent filed an appeal in the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy and the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court by their judgment dated 14.5.2012, set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge and dismissed the action of the Plaintiff-Appellant. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court, the Plaintiff-Appellant has appealed to this court. This court by its order dated 5.3.2014, granted leave to appeal on questions of law set out in paragraphs 17(a) and 17 (b) of the Petition of Appeal dated 25.6.2012 which are set out below.

1. Did the Honourable High Court err and/or misdirect itself in holding that the Plaintiff had failed to prove the said deed of transfer (P1) and (P1c) by calling a witness from the Divisional Secretariat thereby leave room to draw a presumption adverse to the Plaintiff under Section 114 of the Evidence Ordinance in as much as when the aforesaid documents were read at the close of the Plaintiff's case, when no objection was taken it stood as evidence for all purposes of the law?

2. Does the judgment of Honourable High Court stand as a judgment given per incuriam of the authoritative precedent laid down by Your Lordships' Court in Sri Lanka Ports Authority Vs Jugolinija Boal East (1981) 1 SLR 18?

Facts of this case may be briefly summarized as follows. The Plaintiff-Appellant takes up the position in the plaint and in his evidence that the Defendant-Respondent (Sooriya Mudiyanselage Ranaweera) conveyed property in question to him by Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) alleged to have been attested by Sinnathamby Dhayumanavan Notary Public. The Defendant-Respondent in his answer and evidence takes up the position that he never put his signature on Deed marked P1; that the signature found in Deed marked P1 is not his signature; that he never sold the property in question; and that he did not know a Notary Public by the name of Dhayumanavan. When the above matters are considered the most important question that must be decided in this case is whether the Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) alleged to have been attested by Sinnathamby Dhayumanavan Notary Public has been proved in court in accordance with Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. The Plaintiff-Appellant in this case called Sinnathamby Dhayumanavan Notray Public to prove Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) as a witness. But the Plaintiff-Appellant did not call the attesting witnesses in the said deed. Sinnathamby Dhayumanavan Notary Public in the attestation of the said deed states that the executants were unknown to him. Thus Sinnathamby Dhayumanavan Notary Public has admitted in his attestation that Sooriya Mudiyanselage Ranaweera (the Defendant-Respondent in this case) was unknown to him at the time of the attestation of the Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1). Sinnathamby Dhayumanavan Notary Public in his evidence given before the learned District Judge has admitted that he, in his attestation, has stated the above matter. Thus it is established that Sooriya Mudiyanselage Ranaweera, the alleged executant in the Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) was not known to Sinnathamby Dhayumanavan Notray Public who is alleged to have attested the said deed (marked P1). Further in the attestation of the deed (marked P1), Sinnathamby Dhayumanavan Notary Public has failed to state that the attesting witnesses knew Sooriya Mudiyanselage Ranaweera, the alleged executant in the deed (marked P1).

When I consider the above matters, it is necessary to consider whether Sinnathamby Dhayumanavan Notray Public can be regarded as an attesting witness in the deed (marked P1). In order to find an answer to this question it is necessary to consider Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance and relevant judicial decisions that may be stated below.

Section 68of the Evidence Ordinance reads as follows.

> "If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the court and capable of giving evidence."

In Wijegoonetilleke Vs Wijegoonetilleke 60 NLR 560 Basnayake CJ held as follows.

> "A Notary who attests a deed is an attesting witness within the meaning of that expression in sections 68 and 69 of the Evidence Ordinance."

In Marian Vs Jesuthasan 59 NLR 348 Sinnetamby J held as follows.

"Where a deed executed before a notary is sought to be proved, the Notary can be regarded as an attesting witness within the meaning of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance provided only that he knew the executant personally and can testify to the fact that the signature on the deed is the signature of the executant." His Lordship Justice Sinnetamby at page 349 further held as follows. "To become an attesting witness a notary must personally know the executant and be in a position to bear witness to the fact that the signature on the deed executed before him is the signature of the executant."

In Wijegoonetilleke Vs Wijegoonetilleke 60 NLR 560 Basnayake CJ delivered the judgment on 6.7.1956. In Marian Vs Jesuthasan 59 NLR 348 Sinnetamby J delivered the judgment on 20.7.1956. Therefore, it is seen that Sinnetamby J delivered the judgment after Basnayake CJ delivered the judgment in Wijegoonetilleke Vs Wijegoonetilleke 60 NLR 560. I would like to follow the judgment in the case of Marian Vs Jesuthasan (supra).

In the case of Ramen Chetty Vs Assen Najna [1909] Current Law Reports of Ceylon 256 Hutchinson CJ and Middleton J held as follows.

> "The evidence of the Notary who attested a document, to the effect that the signatory and the witnesses signed in his presence and in the presence of one another, is not sufficient to prove the document, where the signatory was not known to the Notary. To prove a document, whether notarially attested or otherwise, it must be proved that the signature of the signatory is in his handwriting."

Section 31(9) of the Notaries Ordinance reads as follows

"He shall not authenticate or attest any deed or instrument unless the person executing the same be known to him or to at least two of the attesting witnesses thereto ; and in the latter case, he shall satisfy himself, before accepting them as witnesses, that they are persons of good repute and that they are well acquainted with the executant and know his proper name, occupation, and residence, and the witnesses shall sign a declaration at the foot of the deed or instrument that they are well acquainted with the executant and know his proper name, occupation, and residence."

Sinhala version of Section 31(9) of the Notaries Ordinance reads as follows.

යම් ඔප්පුවක් හෝ නීත්‍යානුකූල ලේඛනයක් ලියා අත්සන් කරන තැනැත්තා හෝ ඔප්පුවට හෝ නීත්‍යානුකූල ලේඛනයට සාක්ෂි දරන සාක්ෂිකරුවන් යටත් පිරිසෙයින් දෙදෙනකු තමා දනිතහොත් මිස ඒ ඔප්පුවේ හෝ නීත්‍යානුකූල ලේඛනයේ තත්‍යභාවය සහතික කිරීම හෝ එය ලියා සහතික කිරීම ඔහු විසින් නො කළ යුතු ය: තව ද පසුව සඳහන් කළ අවස්ථාවේ දි ඒ සාක්ෂිකරුවන්, සාක්ෂිකරුවන් වශයෙන් පිළිගැනීමට පෙර ඔවුන් හොඳනමක් ඇති අය බවට ද ලියා අත්සන් කරන්නා හොඳින් හඳුනන බවට ද ඔහුගේ නියම නම, රක්ෂාව සහ පදිංචි ස්ථානය ඔවුන් දන්නා බවට ද නොතාරිස් සැහිමට පත් විය යුතු අතර, ලියා අත්සන් කරන්නා තමන් හොඳින් දන්නා බවට සහ ඔහුගේ නියම නම, රක්ෂාව සහ පදිංචි ස්ථානය තමන් දන්නා බවට ඒ සාක්ෂිකරුවන් විසින් ඔප්පුවෙහි හෝ නීත්‍යානුකූල ලේඛනයෙහි පහතින් ප්‍රකාශනයක් අත්සන් කළ යුතු ය.

Considering the above legal literature, I hold that when a deed executed before a Notary Public is sought to be proved in evidence, the Notary Public can be regarded as an attesting witness within the meaning of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance only if the following matters are satisfied.

1. There must be evidence from the Notary Public to the effect that he knew the executant personally at the time the executant placed his signature on the deed OR that he (the Notary Public) knew the attesting witnesses personally and the attesting witnesses knew the executant personally.

2. There must be evidence from the Notary Public to the effect that the signature found in the deed is the signature of the executant.

3. There must be evidence from the Notary Public to the effect that two attesting witnesses placed their signatures in his presence.

I have earlier pointed out that the Notary Public who is alleged to have attested Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) did not know the executant in the said deed and that the Notary Public has, in his attestation, failed to state that the attesting witnesses knew the executant personally. For the above reasons, I hold that the Notary Public in Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) cannot be regarded as an attesting witness.

For the above reasons, I hold that the Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) has not been proved in accordance with Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance and that it cannot be used as evidence in this case.

The next point urged by learned counsel for the Plaintiff-Appellant was that Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) was not objected by the Defendant-Respondent when the case for the Plaintiff-Appellant was closed. Learned counsel therefore contended that the Defendant-Respondent has admitted the said deed marked P1. He relied on the judgment in the case of Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another Vs Jugolinija Boal-East [1981] 1SLR 18 wherein this court held as follows.

> "If no objection is taken, when at the close of a case documents are read in evidence, they are evidence for all purposes of the law. This is the curses curiae of the original civil courts."

In Balapitiya Gunananda Thero Vs Talalle Methananda Thero [1997] 2 SLR 101this court held as follows.

> "Where a document is admitted subject to proof but when tendered and read in evidence at the close of the case is accepted without objection, it becomes evidence in the case. This is the curses curiae."

In the present case, Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) was produced at the trial subject to proof. But it was not objected to when the Plaintiff-Appellant closed his case. It has to be noted here that the Defendant-Respondent in his evidence took up the position that he never signed the said deed. I have earlier held that the that the Notary Public in Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) cannot be considered as an attesting witness.

In considering the contention of learned counsel for the for the Plaintiff-Appellant, I would again like to consider Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. For the purpose of clarity, it is reproduced below.

> "If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the court and capable of giving evidence."

In the case of Robins Vs Grogan 43 NLR 269 wherein Howard CJ held as follows.

> "A document cannot be used in evidence, unless its genuineness has been either admitted or established by proof, which should be given before the document is accepted by Court."

Therefore, it is seen that although a document is produced in court with or without objection, it cannot be used as evidence if it is not proved. If the principle enunciated in the case of Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another Vs Jugolinija Boal-East (supra) is accepted in respect of deeds, even a fraudulent deed marked subject to proof can be used as evidence if it is not objected by the opposing party at the close of the case of the party which produced it. In such a situation, one can argue that courts will have to disregard section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. I do not think that the principle enunciated in the case of Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another Vs Jugolinija Boal-East (supra) extends to such a situation. Whether the opposing party takes up an objection or not to a deed which is sought to be produced, the courts will have to follow the procedure laid down in law. In this connection I would like to consider the judicial decision in the case of Samarakoon Vs Gunasekara [2011] 1SLR 149 wherein this court observed the following facts.

> "In order to prove the Plaintiff's title to the property which is the subject matter of the action, he produced at the trial the notarially executed deeds marked P3 to P6 which were marked subject to proof. No witnesses were called at the trial on behalf of the Plaintiff to prove the said deeds. At the end of the Plaintiffs case, when the Plaintiff's Counsel read in evidence the deeds produced in evidence marked P3 to P6, the defence had made an application to Court to exclude those documents which were not properly proved. The learned District Judge held that the documents P3 to P6 had not been properly proved and accordingly, that the Plaintiff had failed to prove his title to the land in question.

The Plaintiff appealed against the decision of the District Judge to the High Court. The High Court reversed the District Judge's finding on the basis that when a deed had been duly signed and executed it must be presumed that it had been properly executed."

His Lordship Justice Amaratunga (with whom Ratnayake J and Ekanayake agreed) held as follows.

The High Court in total disregard of the specific and stringent provisions of Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance had relied on an obiter dictum made in a case where due execution was challenged, to reverse the decision of the District Judge.

In terms of Section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance a sale or transfer of land has to be in writing signed by two or more witnesses before a notary, duly attested by the notary and the witnesses. If this is not done the document and its contents cannot be used in evidence.

A deed for the sale or transfer of land, being a document which is required by law to be attested, has to be proved in the manner set out in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance by proof that the maker (the vendor) of that document signed it in the presence of witnesses and the notary. If this is not done the document and its contents cannot be used in evidence.

In the case of Perera and others Vs Elisahamy 65 CLW 59 His Lordship Basnayake CJ held as follows.

> "Even though no objection was taken to the document when its contents were first spoken to by a witness, it should not have been used as evidence and acted upon by the Court. A Court cannot act on facts which are not proved in the manner prescribed in the Evidence Ordinance."

Considering all the above matters, I hold that when a document which is required to be proved in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance is produced in evidence subject to proof but not objected to at the close of the case of the party which produced it, such a document cannot be used as evidence by courts if it is not proved in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. I further hold that failure on the part of a party to object to a document during the trial does not permit court to use the document as evidence if the document which should be proved in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance has not been proved.

When I consider all the above matters, I cannot accept the above contention of learned counsel for the Plaintiff-Appellant and I reject it.

I have earlier held that the Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 (marked P1) had not been proved in accordance with Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance and could not be used as evidence in this case.

For the aforementioned reasons, I answer the 1st question of law as follows.

The Plaintiff-Appellant has failed to prove the Deed bearing No.10650 dated 13.12.2001 marked P1 and the learned Judgers of the Civil Appellate High Court have not made any error in their judgment.

I answer the 2nd question of law as follows.

The judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court is correct.

For the above reasons, I affirm the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court dated 14.5.2012 and dismiss this appeal with costs. The Defendant-Respondent is entitled to the costs of this appeal and the courts below.

Appeal dismissed.

Mahinda Samayawardhena, J.

The plaintiffs filed this action against the two defendants seeking mainly a declaration of title to the land described in the schedule to the plaint. The 1st and 2nd defendants filed separate answers seeking dismissal of the plaintiffs' action. At the commencement of the trial, two admissions were recorded, followed by issue Nos. 1-4 raised by the plaintiff, 5-10 raised by the 1st defendant, and 11-17 raised by the 2nd defendant.

In terms of section 147 of the Civil Procedure Code, learned counsel for the defendants moved the District Court to try issue Nos. 5-7 raised on behalf of the 1st defendant as preliminary questions of law before evidence was recorded. The District Court after affording an opportunity to file written submissions, answered these three issues in favour of the defendants and dismissed the plaintiffs' action.

Being aggrieved by this order, the plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal by Judgment dated 08.06.2018 held that the District Court erred in law when it answered the said three issues in favour of the 1st defendant.

However, the Court of Appeal did not stop at that. It went one step further and ex mero motu decided issue No. 14 raised by the 2nd defendant as a preliminary question of law in favour of the defendants and dismissed the plaintiffs' action. This appeal by the plaintiffs is against this finding in the Judgment.

This Court granted leave to appeal predominantly on the question whether the Court of Appeal erred in law when it proceeded to decide issue No. 14 in the face of issue No. 11 raised by the 2nd defendant.

Issue No. 14 reads as follows:

> Have the plaintiffs no legal right to institute and maintain this action in view of section 71(3) of the Finance Act, No. 16 of 1973 and section 22 of the Interpretation Ordinance, No. 18 of 1972?

The position of the 2nd defendant is that the land in suit was acquired by the 2nd defendant in terms of section 71 of the Finance Act.

The Court of Appeal answered issue No. 14 in the negative on the premise that in view of the ouster clause contained in section 71(3) of the Finance Act, the District Court lacks jurisdiction to hear this action.

The pivotal argument of learned counsel for the plaintiffs is that in answering issue No. 14 in the negative, the Court of Appeal erroneously assumed that the parties were not at variance on the fact of acquisition of the land. Learned counsel draws the attention of Court to issue No. 11 by which the 2nd defendant himself has put this matter in issue. I am impressed by this argument.

Issue No. 11 reads as follows:

> (a) Was the land described in the schedule to the plaint acquired by the 2nd defendant after conducting an inquiry on Application No. P.R. 1846 made by the father of the 1st defendant to the 2nd defendant under Finance Act 1963?
> (b) Was the said acquisition published in the Gazette dated 17.12.1982?

This seems to me to be the reason why learned counsel for the 2nd defendant did not move the District Court to try issue No. 14 as a preliminary question of law.

In justification of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal, learned counsel for the 2nd defendant states in the written submission that by tendering a letter received by the 1st plaintiff marked X, the plaintiffs by paragraph 8 of the plaint "have thereby admitted or must be deemed to have admitted that they were aware that the 2nd Respondent bank was claiming that it had acquired the said property." The fact that the plaintiffs became aware upon receipt of the letter X that the 2nd defendant was claiming the property by acquisition cannot be construed to mean that the plaintiffs admit the fact of acquisition per se. If that was so, it could have been recorded as an admission at the trial. The fact that the 2nd defendant himself raised it as an issue goes to prove that the parties were at variance on this point.

An issue can be tried as a preliminary issue if and only if it can be disposed of without recording any evidence. A pure question of law can be tried as a preliminary issue. Nevertheless, when an issue of law is linked or dependent upon another with which the parties are at variance, it cannot be tried as a preliminary question of law.

I answer the questions of law in respect of which leave was granted in the affirmative.

I set aside the Judgment of the Court of Appeal insofar as it deals with issue No. 14 and direct the learned District Judge to proceed with the trial from where it was stopped. The costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

The Parties

The Petitioner - Appellant (Hereinafter referred to as the Appellant) in the case is Rajagopal Rajendran who claims to hold the Power of Attorney of Liyanage Charitha, the Licensee of Udaya Wine Stores. The 1st Respondent – Respondent (Hereinafter referred to as the 1st Respondent) is D.G.M.V. Hapuarachchi who was the Commissioner of Excise at the time, whereas 1A Added Respondent - Respondent; Mrs. K.H.A. Meegasmulla, and 1B Added Respondent - Respondent; Mrs. Ranasinghe Semasinghe had succeeded to the position of Commissioner of Excise and 1C Added Respondent - Respondent; Mr. Ranasinghe Semasinghe, is the current Commissioner of Excise. The 2nd Respondent - Respondent (Hereinafter referred to as the 2nd Respondent) Wasantha Dissanayake, is the Deputy Commissioner of Excise, who had issued the purported Technical Crime Report to the said wine stores.

This is an appeal filed by the Appellant against the Order in Case No. CA/WRIT/62/2014 delivered in the Court of Appeal on 31st March 2017 in regard to an application for the issuance of writs of Certiorari and Prohibition as per Article 140 of the Constitution. The case was dismissed by the Court of Appeal observing the lack of locus standi of the Appellant on the basis that he could not have been the Power of Attorney holder of the Licensee of Udaya Wine Stores.

On 8th May 2017 the Appellant has prayed for Special Leave to Appeal before this Court as per Article 128 (2) of the Constitution requesting the Court to set aside the Order of the Court of Appeal and to grant reliefs prayed for or to remit the case back directing the Court of Appeal to hear and determine the writ applications.

On 11th February 2019 Special Leave to Appeal was granted for the following question of law,

> "For the purpose of instituting the writ application, was not the said Power-of Attorney P2 remain, in spite of the demise of Liyanage Udeni Silva and which remained unrevoked by Liyanage Charitha. " (sic)

The Facts

It is pertinent to note the facts of the case before we proceed further. The facts according to the records submitted before this Court are as follows, Liyanage Charitha and Liyanage Udenis Silva were co-licensees of three licenses; FL-3, FL-4 and B-3 issued for the retail sale of arrack, foreign liquor and bottled toddy (not to be consumed on the premises) under the Excise Ordinance No. 08 of 1912 as amended, for Udaya Wine Stores located in No.14, Gouravilla Colony, Upcot.

On 7th November 2006 the said co-licensees granted their power and authority to the Appellant to inter alia conduct business activities of Udaya Wine Stores, by the Power of Attorney bearing No. 301, marked 'P2'.

However, subsequent to the demise of Liyanage Udenis Silva in or around 2010, the FL-3, FL-4 and B-3 liquor licenses were issued by the authorities in the name of Liyanage Charitha, as the sole license holder in respect of the said premises. However, it is important to note that no new Power of Attorney was issued by Liyanage Charitha to any person including the Appellant.

On the 10th February 2014, the 2nd Respondent visited the said wine stores and purchased a bottle of extra arrack along with a bottle of beer and tendered a sum of Rs. 1100/=.

During the visit, the staff who were at the premises were Iyakannu Reegan who was the salesperson and Subramaniam Mohanraj who acted as the manager. They were found to be in violation of the provisions of the Excise Ordinance and Regulations made under the Excise Ordinance, as the officer detected a 180 ml bottle filled with liquor and 120 opened bottles of Arrack packed in 10 crates.

Accordingly, a statement was recorded from the salesperson as to the said violation and later another statement was recorded from the manager, following which on 18th February 2014 the Technical Crime Report [TCR] bearing No. 27/2014 [the order marked 'X2'] was issued. The said TCR imposed a composite fee of Rs. 2,644,000/= in lieu of cancellation of the liquor license to be paid on or before 5th March 2014, a delay in remittance would result in an additional 10% fee imposing a total fee of Rs.

2,908,400/=. However, the Appellant claimed that the actions of the Respondents were ultra vires in terms of Section 56 of the Excise Ordinance No.08 of 1912 as amended.

Accordingly, the Appellant instituted action as the Power of Attorney holder of Liyanage Charitha and filed a writ application bearing No. 62/2014 seeking a writ of Certiorari quashing the decision in the TCR marked 'X2' and a writ of Prohibition preventing the 2nd Respondent from acting on document marked 'X2'. The Respondents then challenged the locus standi of the Appellant for the above writ action.

As stipulated prior, as the Court of Appeal dismissed the application due to lack of locus standi of the Petitioner, and the said question of law on the validity of the unrevoked Power of Attorney marked 'P2' in the context of the death of one of its grantors has been brought before this Court.

Determination of the Question of Law

It is the contention of the Appellant that the power to institute the current action is derived from the impugned Power of Attorney bearing No. 301 signed by the then co-licensees of the said licenses; Liyanage Charitha and Liyanage Udenis Silva on 7th November 2006, despite the death of the said Liyanage Udenis Silva in 2010.

Section 2 of the Power of Attorney Ordinance No. 4 of 1902 as amended describes a Power of Attorney to include,

> "... any written power or authority other than that given to an Attorney at Law or Law Agent, given by one person to another to perform any work, do any act, or carry on any trade or business and executed before two witnesses, or executed before or attested by a notary public or by a Justice of Peace, Registrar, Deputy Registrar or by any Judge or Magistrate....."

Accordingly, by way of a Power of Attorney, the power and authority of the grantor attributed to the conduct specified will be conferred to the grantee giving him/her the power and authority to act on behalf of the grantor within the bounds of the authority specified.

In considering the Power of Attorney before this court, the first operative clause reads,

> "WHEREAS We, are carrying on the business for wine shop called and known as "Udaya Wine Stores" [hereinafter called as the said business] at No. 14, Gouravilla janapathaya, Upcot and we are duly issued with an FL 4 License by the Government Agent of Ambagamuwa [hereinafter called the said license]" (Emphasis Added)

Further the purpose of the said Power of Attorney is stipulated as,

> "AND WHEREAS we are unable to attend all matters concerning the said business and the said license personally.
> AND WHEREAS We are desirous of appointing some fit and proper person as our attorney to manage and transact all our business and affairs in respect of the said business and the said license." (Emphasis Added)

In assessing the above provisions, it is apparent that the authority and power granted to the Appellant, is the authority and power of both Liyanage Udenis Silva and Liyanage Charitha arising from the said license obtained prior to 2014 in their capacity as co – licensees and co-owners of the business, prior to the death of Udenis Silva. In addition to the above purpose the joint power of the said co-licensees were given to the Appellant for the following six additional purposes,

1. To appear before the Commissioner of Excise on all matter connected to the said business and the said license and make necessary representation on our behalf
2. To appear before the Commissioner of Labour, Labour tribunal or other any other forum in respect of all industrial disputes with the employees of the said

business and in matters connected with the payment of EPF ETF payments statutory or otherwise

3. To appear before the Commissioner of Inland Revenue and represent all matters connected to the said business, make payment business turnover tax, income Tax and other payments, apply for income tax clearance and attend all necessary formalities with regard to the renewal of the said license annually.

4. To make representations on my behalf to all statutory provincial and local authorities in respect of the said business and the said license.

5. To enter into any compromise of disputes differences concerning the said business and the said license before any of the aforementioned functionaries and authorities and to execute all necessary writings in our name and on behalf to give effect to same.

6. To appear sue or answer and to receive all process in any action appeal or other judicial proceedings whatsoever in any court concerning the said business and the said license and generally to act in all such proceedings in any way in which we might if present be permitted or called on to act. "

In light of the above, it is evident that specific powers were granted to the Appellant by the grantors in their capacity as co-licensees.

The perspective of the Supreme Court of India in this regard would be of assistance to understand the above. Abhay Manohar Sapre, J in Tmt. Kasthuri Radhakrishnan & Ors V. M.Chinniyan & Anr 2016 SCW 609 observed the following,

" It is well settled therein that an agent acting under a power of attorney always acts, as a general rule, in the name of his principal. Any document executed or thing done by an agent on the strength of power of attorney is as effective as if executed or done in the name of principal, i.e., by the principal himself*. An agent, therefore, always acts on behalf of* the principal and exercises only those powers, which are given to him in the power of attorney by the principal."

(Emphasis Added)

Accordingly, as per the Power of Attorney placed before this court, the Appellant derives his powers from both Liyanage Udenis Silva and Liyanage Charitha hence his actions shall be considered as actions authorized and done by both grantors. Actions of the Appellant prior to the death of Liyanage Udenis Silva could have been said to be authorized and valid under the Power of Attorney bearing No. 301. However, actions following the death would not be covered under the above Power of Attorney as the joint power and authority conferred to the Appellant would come to an end with the death of Liyanage Udenis Silva.

In the instant situation, the business is operating under Liyanage Charitha, who is the sole license holder in respect to the Premises. Accordingly, in order to transfer the powers and authority of the sole licensee derived from the license, a new Power of Attorney would have to be executed. Therefore, the Power of Attorney bearing No.301, will not have effect in regard to the current dispute.

In further addressing the termination of a Power of Attorney, the concept that the death of the principal or the agent terminates an agency is a well-established concept in common law. In Garvin v Abeywardene (1923) 24 NLR 382 where a power was conferred among two agents, Bertram C.J observed,

"Where a power is conferred among two agents, it is presumed to be conferred upon them jointly, and an act by one purporting to be an execution of that power is not a good execution. If the two agents are partners, and one partner purports to exercise title power singly as the survivor of the two, his act is none the less invalid. At the death of one of the two agents, it terminates the authority of the other. " (Emphasis Added)

Similarly, when two principals grant a certain power to an agent, it is the joint power of the two that is conferred. Especially when the grantors share the source from which the power and authority is derived. In the instant case, when the power and authority was conferred to the Appellant in 2006, the grantors of the Power of Attorney were Liyanage Udenis Silva and Liyanage Charitha who got their power from the jointly owned FL 4 license. Therefore, at the death of Liyanage Udenis Silva the joint power and authority conferred would cease to exist, terminating the Power of Attorney granted.

The Appellant in the written submission filed on his behalf refers to a statement made by the Madras High Court in Ponnusami Pillai V. Chidambaram Chettiar 1918 Mad 279, which also states,

> "We have in each case to determine the true intention of the parties to the contract, from the terms thereof and from the surrounding circumstances"

Accordingly, it is appropriate that we assess the terms of the Power of Attorney to consider the intention of the said parties. The Power of Attorney reads,

> "AND WE do hear by direct all acts which shall be had made or done by our said Attorney before he or they shall have received notice of death of any one of us or the revocation of authority contained … in these presents shall be as binding and valid to all intents and purposes as if same had taken place previous to our death or before such revocation any rule of law or equity to the contrary notwithstanding"
> (Emphasis Added)

The position that the death of one grantor would terminate a Power of Attorney granted is further confirmed by the aforementioned clause of the impugned Power of Attorney. As per the clause, it is evident that the power of the principals conferred to the agent is joint (as opposed to joint and several principals) as only acts conducted during the lifetime of both grantors have been authorized. Accordingly, power and authority granted by the grantors would come to an end at the death of one of the grantors.

For the completeness of this discussion, it is pertinent to observe the Non – transferability of liquor licenses, in particular the general prohibition against managing privileges derived by licenses by way of Powers of Attorney.

Section 12 of the Excise Notification No.666 of 31st December 1979, issued under the Excise Ordinance reads,

> "(a) Non-Transferability of license - manager to be approved. – No privilege of manufacture, supply or sale or any interest therein shall be sold, transferred or sub rented without the previous permission of the government agent or the excise commissioner: nor shall any agent or attorney be appointed for the management of any such privilege or for signing the counterpart agreement of any Excise license without the previous approval of the Government Agent or the Excise Commissioner*. Such agent or attorney shall, in every case, be a citizen of Sri Lanka and such approval shall be given only in exceptional circumstances at the discretion of the government Agent or the Excise Commissioner*
> (b) Provided however that the preceding condition shall not apply in any case where the licensee has obtained the prior written permission of the secretary to the Ministry of Finance and Planning for the purpose."
> (Emphasis Added)

The provision expressly prohibits the appointment of an agent for the management of the privileges of manufacturing, supplying, selling or any interest derived from the licenses issued to the licensee. However, under exceptional circumstances if a person is to be appointed as a Power of Attorney to manage such privileges, special provisions have been introduced under the above Section.

Accordingly, such person could be appointed provided he/she is a Sri Lankan citizen and prior approval has been obtained from the Government Agent or Commissioner of Excise regarding such management.

In the instant case, the co-licensees at the time have given the power to manage and transact all business and affairs relating to the license to the Appellant by the Power of Attorney dated 7th November 2006.The said provision of the Power of Attorney reads,

> "… as our attorney to manage and transact all our business and affairs in respect of the said business and the said license."

However, the validity of such transfer is questionable, as there was no prior approval obtained.

The learned counsel for the Appellant attempted to show an impression of a rubber stamp belonging to the office of the Divisional Secretary on the Power of Attorney marked 'P2X' and submitted to Court that the same amounts to an approval of the Divisional Secretary. However, considering that such approval is given only in exceptional circumstances it is highly unlikely that a mere rubber seal could amount to an approval. Further, Section 12 (b) reproduced above, provides "prior written permission of the secretary to the Ministry of Finance and Planning" as an exception to Section 12 (a). Accordingly, considering the above, it could be implied that the approval of a Government Agent or the Excise Commissioner ought to be given in writing rather than by way of a mere rubber stamp on a Power of Attorney.

Therefore, it is observed that, the licensees are in violation of the said provision. Nevertheless, Udaya wine stores cannot be managed by an agent appointed by way of a Power of Attorney as the court is not satisfied that prior approval of a Government agent or the excise commissioner was obtained as required by Section 12 of the Excise Notification No.666 of 31st December 1979.

Reverting to the question of law before this court as to the validity of the Power of Attorney, I will briefly recall the decision of the Court of Appeal in this regard.

The learned Judge of the Court of Appeal has briefly observed the question on the ability of the Appellant to make a claim on behalf of Liyanage Charitha among other claims addressed. Accordingly, as per the Order of the Court of Appeal the Appellant has failed to satisfy that he is the Power of Attorney holder of the Sole licensee as of 2014. Further, it has been highlighted that the fact that the Appellant was appointed the Power of Attorney holder for both Liyanage Udenis and Liyanage Charitha does not have a bearing on the case as the same will come to an end at the death of one grantor.

Decision

As discussed extensively, I agree with the Order of the Court of Appeal in observing that the Appellant is not the Power of Attorney holder of the Sole Licensee of Udaya wine stores and thus does not have the locus standi to proceed with the writ application.

The question of law that required the attention of this Court is as follows,

> "For the purpose of instituting the writ application, was not the said Power-of Attorney P2 remain, in spite of the demise of Liyanage Udeni Silva and which remained unrevoked by Liyanage Charitha. " (sic)

The Power of Attorney 'P2' does not remain in force, in spite of the demise of Liyanage Udenis Silva, even though it remained unrevoked by Liyanage Charitha. This is given that the death of Liyanage Udenis Silva would automatically terminate the Power of Attorney issued by the two grantors, jointly in their capacity as co – licensees of the premises. Thus, even though it was not expressly revoked, the Power of Attorney would cease to exist at the death of one of the grantors. Accordingly, I answer the question of law raised in the negative.

Considering all, I hold that the Power of Attorney bearing No. 301, dated 7th of November 2006 has ceased to exist upon the death of Liyanage Udenis Silva, hence the Appellant; Rajagopal Rajendran cannot be considered as the Power of Attorney holder of the sole licensee; Liyanage Charitha. Therefore, the Appellant does not have the locus standi to institute legal action on behalf of the said licensee.

Appeal dismissed.

Judgement

Aluwihare PC J.

The Applicant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 'Applicant') sought an order for reinstatement or compensation in lieu, from the Labour Tribunal, on the basis that her employment was unjustly terminated by the Respondent-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter the 'Appellant Corporation').

At the conclusion of the inquiry before the Labour Tribunal, the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal had come to a finding that the termination of the Applicant's services by the Appellant-Corporation was in fact unjust. The Learned President, however, instead of ordering reinstatement, ordered the Appellant Corporation to pay the Applicant a sum of Rs. 854,460 /- as compensation. The question of reinstatement did not arise as the Applicant had passed her retirement age when the award of the Labour Tribunal was pronounced.

The Learned Judge of the High Court, sitting in appeal, affirmed the order made by the Labour Tribunal and dismissed the appeal of the Appellant Corporation.

This court granted Special Leave to appeal on the questions of law referred to in sub-paragraphs (i), (ii) and (iii) of paragraph 12 of the petition of the Appellant which are as follows;

(i) Has the Honourable Judge of the High Court of the Western Province erred in law in not considering the entirety of the evidence against the Respondent [the Applicant]

(ii) Has the Honourable Judge of the Provincial High Court of the Western Province erred in law in holding that the Respondent [Applicant] cannot be found guilty of charge 04 since the Respondent has been exonerated from the charge number 03 at the domestic inquiry.

(iii) Has the Honourable Judge of the Provincial High Court of the Western Province erred in law in failing to consider the applicability of the judgement of Ceylon Oil Workers' Union v. Ceylon Petroleum Corporation (1978-79) 2 SLR 72 to the present case.

It is to be noted that the questions of law referred to in (i) and (ii) above, relate to the court misdirecting itself on the factual findings. As such, it would be incumbent on this court to consider the facts of this case in considering the said questions of law.

The Factual Matrix

The Applicant was holding the position of Manager, Education and Social Security Department of the Appellant Corporation at the time her services were terminated.

Under the said department, in collaboration with National Gem and Jewellery Authority [hereinafter the NG & JA] an insurance scheme had been launched for gem miners. In the course of the inquiry conducted by the Appellant Corporation, it had come to light that several insurance premiums paid by the NG & JA in favour of the Appellant Corporation, had not got credited. The inquiries revealed that whilst certain insurance premiums that ought to have got credited to the Appellant Corporation and some other payments made upon insurance claims by the Appellant Corporation, to several insured, had got credited to the bank account of one Jayasena Udagedara, another employee of the Appellant Corporation. It had also transpired in the course of the investigation into the alleged fraud that cheques of the Appellant Corporation had been drawn without the 'account payee' crossing. In certain other instances, the 'account payee' crossing on certain cheques had been cancelled. It is alleged that this cancellation of the 'crossings' was done, in order to facilitate the crediting of those cheques to the account of said Jayasena Udagedara.

The position taken up by the Appellant Corporation was, that the removal of the crossings on certain cheques had been done at the request of the Applicant. The Appellant Corporation relied heavily on the evidence of witness Nimal Wijesooriya to substantiate these allegations. Thus, to determine the issues raised in this appeal, it is imperative that this court considers the testimony of the said witness.

It must be stated at the outset, that the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal had not been satisfied with the evidence led on behalf of the Appellant; and the Learned President had come to a finding that the charges 1, 4, 6, 7 and 8 on which the Applicant was found guilty at the domestic inquiry, had not been established by the Appellant on a balance of probability. Furthermore, from the tenor of the award, it appears that the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal had accepted the explanation offered by the Applicant with regard to the said charges.

It is well-settled law that findings of fact by a Labour Tribunal should not be disturbed lightly, unless the court is convinced that the Labour Tribunal had misdirected itself on material matters which had resulted in substantial prejudice, in this case, to the employer.

The termination of the Applicant's employment was based on the fact that several of the charges preferred against her at the domestic inquiry had been proved and consequently she had been s found guilty. The Learned Labour Tribunal President, however, opined that her guilt had not been satisfactorily established.

As the first two questions of law [(i) and (ii) referred to above] are based on the alleged misdirection on the part of the President of the Labour Tribunal, it would be necessary to consider the evidence led at the inquiry before the Labour Tribunal to resolve the issues.

The case of the Appellant Corporation, pivots on the evidence of the accountant-Internal Audit Division, Nimal Wijesooriya.

I shall now consider the evidence of Nimal Wijesooriya, with a view to ascertaining as to whether the assertion of the Appellant-Corporation can be justified. Witness Wijesooriya at the commencement of his cross-examination had summed up the alleged fraud committed by the Applicant as follows;

> "Facilitating a sum of Rs. 175,000/- to be credited to the personal account of Jayasena Udagedara and facilitating the cheques collected as premium to the value of Rs. 279,056.25/- to be credited to the account of Jayasena Udagedara, and attempting to commit a fraud thereafter; however, the fraud could not be accomplished." [page 264 of the Labour Tribunal brief]

The statement of the witness in verbatim is reproduced below.

> "රු. 1 75,600/- ක මුදලක් ජයසේන උඩගෙදර නමැති අයගේ පුද්ගලික ගිණුමට බැර කිරීමට ඉඩකඩ සැලැස්වීම. ඒ අතරට වාරික මුදල් වශයෙන් ලැබුණු රු. 2 79,056.25 ක මුදලක් අදාළ චෙක් පත ජයසේන උඩගෙදර යන අයට යන්න සලස්වා ඔහුගෙන් පසුව වංචා කිරීමට උත්සාහ කිරිම නමුත් වංචා කිරීමට ලැබුණේ නැහැ."

At the conclusion of his investigation, what the witness appears to be saying, is, that the Applicant could not commit a fraud, but made an attempt to do so by facilitating the depositing of several cheques to Jayasena Udagedara's account.

The witness insinuates that, there had been some degree of complicity on the part of the Applicant in the fraud committed by Udagedara.

Both to ascertain as to whether there was any nexus between Udagedara and the Applicant and, whether there had had any complicity on the part of the applicant, in the fraudulent acts alleged to have been committed by Udagedara as well, it is necessary to consider the material elicited, in the course of the investigation conducted by witness Wijesooriya.

According to the evidence, the alleged fraud had come to light after the Applicant was transferred out from the Social Insurance department on 1st December 1998. No sooner the management had come to know of the incident, Jayasena Udagedara had stopped reporting for work, and he had vanished without trace. According to the evidence, even the police investigation could not trace him and he had been treated as having vacated his post.

The sum total of Wijesooriya's evidence is that; insurance premiums collected by NG & JA from gem miners who had opted to obtain insurance cover, which in turn had been handed over to Udagedara, along with some insurance payments made to purported claimants, had been credited to Udagedara's personal account.

The complicity on the part of the Applicant, as alleged by the Appellant Corporation, was that, it was she who caused the crossings on the cheques to be cancelled and thereby enabled Udagedara to have the cheques credited to his account, which, would not have been possible otherwise.

The central issue is whether it had been established through evidence, that both the Applicant and Udagedara connived to commit the alleged fraudulent transactions.

As far as Udagedara is concerned, there is no doubt of his involvement as the evidence amply demonstrates that it was he who handled the cheques and which had been credited to his bank account.

Udagedara's involvement can also be inferred by his conduct, in that he suddenly vacated his post without any notice with the Appellant Corporation and thereafter could not be traced. As opposed to that, there is no evidence whatsoever to say that the Applicant benefitted in any way from the fraudulent transactions. This may have been the reason why witness Wijesooriya stated that she "attempted to commit a fraud, but it could not be accomplished." Thereby the investigating officer himself had admitted under oath that the Applicant had not committed any fraud. What remains to be decided is whether there was an attempt on her part to commit the alleged acts or whether there had been some complicity on her part in those transactions.

This issue cannot be resolved by considering the evidence, that the Applicant had the crossing on the cheques cancelled, in isolation. It must necessarily be considered with other relevant factors as well, in order to appreciate the larger picture relating to the impugned transaction.

In this regard, the Applicant's testimony is significant. According to her, she was entrusted with a fair share of responsibilities as Manager of the, Education and Social Security Department. The insurance scheme for gem miners had been newly introduced and she had been directed by the then Chairman Jagath Wickramasinghe to proceed to the NG & JA with Udagedara to finalize matters relating to this newly launched insurance scheme. According to her Udagedara was a confidant of the chairman and was tasked to run errands for him. The Applicant, explaining the procedure with regard to payments, had stated that the preparation of payment vouchers was handled by several subject clerks and checked by an executive officer [Sandamali Navaratne] who in turn had to forward the vouchers to Padma Perera [for approval [Witness Wijesooriya has confirmed this procedure under cross examination at page 326 of the LT brief]. It was the position of the Applicant that; these approved claims are sent to her only in instances where the claimants request for cancellation of the crossings on the cheques, because they did not have bank accounts to credit the payments[cheques]. She had also stated that her interactions, as far as her work was concerned, was with the subordinate staff under her and not with Udagedara. She had added that Udagedara was the choice of the Chairman Jagath Wickramasinghe to coordinate matters with the NG & JA and that he was not entrusted with any work in her unit. The Applicant had claimed that Udagedara was allowed to work in the unit, even after she was transferred out to another section.

The cancellations of the crossings on the cheques in question had been done, not by the Applicant but by the accountant, based, however, on the requests made by the Applicant. In this regard the learned counsel for the Appellant Corporation drew the attention of this court to the evidence of witness Wijesooriya reflected on pages 167 to 175, 216 and 227.The fact that the Accounts Division acceded to the request of the Applicant [to cancel the crossings] demonstrates that the cancellation of the crossings was not something unusual but had been routinely done to oblige the clients of the Corporation. On the other hand, if the Applicant had believed that the representations made to her, to have the crossings on the cheques cancelled were genuine, she cannot be blamed for acting on those representations. Although members of the staff under the Applicant were designated to attend to specific tasks as explained earlier, steps relating to the processing of insurance claims appear to have been interlinked. Each member of the staff was required to work, placing reliance and trust on each other in processing insurance claims or carrying out their tasks. The conduct of the Applicant, hence, has to be viewed in that light. It needs to be emphasized that apart from the requests made by the Applicant to have the crossings on the cheques cancelled, there is no evidence whatsoever to say that she had done anything irregular in relation to the impugned transaction nor has it been established that she had any link with Udagedara as far as the fraudulent transactions were concerned.

In the circumstances, one cannot fault both the learned President of the Labour Tribunal or the learned High Court Judge in reaching the conclusion that the Appellant Company had failed to prove the charges against the Applicant. As such I hold that neither the learned President of the Labour Tribunal nor the learned High Court Judge had erred either in law or in fact. Accordingly, I answer the questions of law (i) and (ii) referred to above, on which leave was granted, in the negative.

The learned counsel for the Appellant also argued that learned Judge of the High Court erred in law by his failure to apply the principles laid down in the case of Ceylon Oil Workers' Union v. Ceylon Petroleum Corporation (1978-79) 2 SLR 72 [The 3rd question of law on which leave was granted].

In the case referred to, it was held that; "Where the misconduct of the workman lay in the commission of a fraud on the employer, the misconduct is of so serious a nature, that it strikes at the very foundation of the contract of service and warrants summary dismissal. The workman had been placed in a position of trust and confidence by the employer in the expectation that he would discharge his duties honestly and conscientiously, but had shown by his conduct that, he can no longer command the confidence of his employer. The continuation in service of such an employee would prejudice the good name, reputation and interests of the employer."

No doubt the facts of this case clearly demonstrate that a fraud had been perpetrated on the Appellant Corporation. The above pronouncement of their Lordships would be applicable, as far as employee Udagedara was concerned. I am, however, of the view that it would not be applicable to the Applicant for the reason that the Appellant Corporation had failed to establish any misconduct on her part.

Wijayatilake J. in The Ceylon University Clerical and Technical Association v. The University of Ceylon, Peradeniya (1970) 72 NLR 84 held that where a Labour Tribunal was tasked with deciding whether the employee was guilty of a criminal act involving moral turpitude such as the misappropriation of funds the standard of proof adopted should be beyond reasonable doubt as in a criminal case. As there is no evidence as to the complicity of the Applicant in the fraud committed by Udagedara, it is only fair that the Applicant be given the benefit of that finding, for as observed by Wijayatilake J. "A dismissal of this nature would amount to a condemnation for life and to do so when there is a reasonable doubt would be, in my opinion, neither just nor equitable." (at page 90).

As such, I answer the third question of law on which leave was granted also in the negative.

Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed subject to costs.

Priyantha Jayawardena PC, J

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal which affirmed the determination of the Tax Appeals Commission, established under the Tax Appeals Commission Act, No. 23 of 2011, as amended (hereinafter referred to as "Tax Appeals Commission").

Facts of the case

The appellant-appellant (hereinafter referred to as "appellant") is a licensed commercial bank under and in terms of the Banking Act, No. 30 of 1988, as amended. Further, the respondent-respondent (hereinafter referred to as "respondent") is the Commissioner-General of Inland Revenue.

In terms of section 106(1) of the Inland Revenue Act, No. 10 of 2006 (hereinafter referred to as "principal Act"), taxpayers were required to furnish a return of their income for any year of assessment, commencing on the 1st day of April of a given year and ending on the 31st day of March in the immediately succeeding year, on or before the 30th day of September immediately succeeding the end of that year of assessment.

Therefore, the appellant had furnished a return of its income for the year of assessment, commencing on the 1st of April, 2007 and ending on the 31st of March, 2008 (hereinafter referred to as the "year of assessment 2007/2008"), on the 30th of September, 2008, within the time period stipulated in section 106(1) of the principal Act.

Hence, the assessor of the Department of Inland Revenue (hereinafter referred to as "assessor") was required to either accept the said return of income, or if he does not accept the said return, estimate the amount of the assessable income of such taxpayer and make an assessment accordingly, under section 163(3) of the said principal Act.

Furthermore, where a taxpayer had furnished a return of his income for a given year of assessment within the time period stipulated in section 106(1) of the principal Act, the assessor was not permitted to make an assessment of income tax for such year of assessment (if any) after the expiry of eighteen months from the end of that year of assessment, in terms of section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act.

Therefore, since the appellant had furnished a return of its income for the year of assessment 2007/2008 within the time period stipulated in section 106(1) of the principal Act, the assessor was required to make an assessment of income tax for such year of assessment (if any) on or before the 30th of September, 2009, in terms of section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act.

However, while the said time period given to an assessor to make an assessment of income tax for the year of assessment 2007/2008 (if any) under the principal Act was still in operation, Inland Revenue (Amendment) Act, No. 19 of 2009 (hereinafter referred to as "amending Act") was enacted by Parliament and certified by the Speaker on the 31st of March, 2009.

By the said amending Act, inter alia, sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) of the principal Act were amended to extend both the time periods given to a taxpayer to furnish a return of his income for a given year of assessment, and the assessor to make an assessment of income tax for such year of assessment (if any), by two months and six months respectively.

Thus, the assessor had made an assessment of income tax payable by the appellant for the year of assessment 2007/2008 on the 26th of March, 2010, on the basis that the amending Act extended the time period given to an the assessor to make an assessment of income tax for such year of assessment (if any) by six months, i.e., from the 30th of September, 2009 to 31st of March, 2010.

Being aggrieved by the aforesaid assessment issued by the assessor on the 26th of March, 2010, the appellant had appealed to the respondent under section 165 of the Principal Act.

In the said appeal, the appellant had stated, inter-alia, that there was no express provision in the amending Act to give retrospective effect to the amendments made to sections 106(1) and 163(5) of the principal Act. Therefore, the said assessment of income tax issued by the assessor on the 26th of March, 2010 was time-barred under and in terms of section 163(5) of the principal Act.

Having considered the said appeal, the respondent had determined, inter alia, that the said assessment was made on the 9th of March, 2010 and served on the appellant on the 26th of March, 2010 in terms of sections 163 and 164 of the said Act, as amended. Accordingly, the said appeal was dismissed.

Being aggrieved by the said determination of the respondent, the appellant had appealed to the Tax Appeals Commission under the said Tax Appeals Commission Act.

Having heard the parties, the Tax Appeals Commission determined, inter alia, that the aforesaid assessment made by the assessor in respect of the year of assessment 2007/2008 was not time barred under and in terms of the amendment made to section 163(5) of the principal Act, as the said amendment altered procedural law and, therefore, does not violate the rule against retrospective legislation.

Further, the Tax Appeals Commission determined that the said amendment was enacted during the time period given to the assessor to make an assessment for the year of assessment 2007/2008 under section 163(5) of the principal Act. Therefore, since the appellant was aware of the said amendment which extended the time period given to the assessor to make an assessment, before the expiry of the time period stipulated by the principal Act, no prejudice had been caused to the appellant. Accordingly, the said appeal was dismissed.

Being aggrieved by the said determination of the Tax Appeals Commission, the appellant had made an application under section 170 of the said Act requesting the Tax Appeals Commission to state a case for the opinion of the Court of Appeal. Accordingly, a case was stated for the opinion of the Court of Appeal on the following questions of law;

"1) Was the assessment for the year 2007/2008 dated 26th March, 2010 issued against the appellant time barred in terms of section 163(5)(a) of the Inland Revenue Act, as applicable to such year of assessment?

2) Does the appellant carry on more than one trade, business, profession or vocation in terms of section 106(11) of the Inland Revenue Act?

3) Does the banking business which is carried on by the appellant result in the appellant having more than one source of income as contemplated by the Inland Revenue Act?

4) Was the interest incurred by the appellant to the value of Rs. 292,849,172/= deductible in determining the profits from trade of the appellant for the year of assessment 2007/2008 in terms of section 25 of the Inland Revenue Act?

5) In the alternative, was the aforesaid interest incurred by the appellant to the value of Rs. 292,849,172/= deductible in determining the assessable income of the appellant for the year of assessment 2007/2008 in terms of section 32(5)(a) of the Inland Revenue Act?

6) Notwithstanding the above, was the basis used by the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue in arriving at the interest expenses attributable to the investments made by the appellant in Sri Lanka Development Bonds erroneous in law?"

At the hearing before the Court of Appeal, the court had decided to hear the parties on the first question of law stated above.

Having heard the parties on the above said question of law, the Court of Appeal held, inter alia, that the amendment of section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act operates prospectively from the 1st of April, 2009 in terms of section 27(6) of the amending Act. Thus, the deadline for the assessor to make an assessment of income tax for the year of assessment 2007/2008 was extended with prospective effect from the 30th of September, 2009 to the 31st of March, 2010, and the aforesaid assessment dated 26th March, 2010 was not time barred under and in terms of section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act, as amended. Accordingly, the said appeal was dismissed.

Being aggrieved by the aforesaid judgment of the Court of Appeal, the appellant filed an application for special leave to appeal to this court. Having considered the materials placed before this court, special leave to appeal was granted on the following questions of law;

"a) Did the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal fail to make a critical analysis of the submissions of the petitioner, and as such, is the said judgment vitiated by the failure to take into account relevant statutory provisions and circumstances?

b) Did the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal fail to appreciate the relevant provisions of the Inland Revenue Act, No. 10 of 2006, as amended, in particular those relating to the filing of returns and the making of assessments?

c) Did the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal misdirect itself on the law in relation to applicability of the Inland Revenue (Amendment) Act, No. 19 of 2009 to the year of assessment 2007/2008?

d) Did the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal err in holding that the time bar provisions in the Inland Revenue Act, No. 10 of 2006, as amended, were merely procedural and/or that they did not affect rights which had already been acquired by the petitioner with respect to the finality of its tax liability for the year of assessment 2007/2008?"

During the course of submissions, the parties agreed to re-frame the questions of law upon which this court had granted leave to appeal. Accordingly, the question of law is now framed as follows;

"Was the assessment for the year 2007/2008 dated 26.03.2010 issued by the Assessor of Inland Revenue against the Appellant in respect of the return filed on 30.09.2008, time barred in terms of section 163(5)(a) of the Inland Revenue Act as amended by Act No. 19 of 2009?"

Submissions of the appellant

At the hearing of the appeal, learned counsel for the appellant submitted that the amending Act was certified by the Speaker on the 31st of March, 2009. Thus, the Bill would generally become law from the said date, by operation of Article 80(1) of the Constitution.

However, he submitted that section 27 of the amending Act had specifically provided the operative dates of the amendments contained therein. Accordingly, the amendments referred to in section 27(1) to (5) of the amending Act would operate with retrospective effect from the specified dates. However, the amendments that were not referred to in section 27(1) to (5) of the amending Act would operate prospectively from the 1st of April, 2009.

In this regard, it was further submitted that the amendments made to sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) of the principal Act were not referred to in sections 27(1) to (5) of the amending Act. Thus, the said amendments should operate prospectively from the 1st of April, 2009, in terms of section 27(6) of the amending Act.

Moreover, learned counsel submitted that the amendments made to section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act extended both the time period for the taxpayer to furnish a return of his income, and the time period for the assessor to make any assessment of income tax payable, by two and six months respectively. However, the appellant could not benefit from the extended time period given to the taxpayer to furnish a return of income, as the amending Act was only certified on the 31st of March, 2009, after the said time period extended to file tax returns had lapsed.

Therefore, it was submitted that the amendments made to section 163(5) of the principal Act cannot be interpreted to give the assessor the benefit of an extended deadline, when it was not possible for the appellant to benefit from the extended deadline provided under the said section.

Submissions of the respondent

In response, learned Additional Solicitor-General who appeared for the respondent submitted that time periods set by statute are procedural laws and not substantive laws. Further, he submitted that amendments to procedural laws apply with retrospective effect.

In support of his submission, learned Additional Solicitor-General cited N. S. Bindra's Interpretation of Statutes, 12th edition at 228, which cited Gardner v Lucas (1873) 3 AC 582 at 603 where the court had held as follows;

> "…it is quite clear that the subject-matter of an Act might be such that, though there were not any express words to show it, it might be retrospective. For instance, I think it is perfectly settled that if the legislature intended to frame a new procedure, that instead of proceedings in this form or that, you should proceed in another and a different way; clearly these bygone transactions are to be sued for and enforced according to the new form of procedure. Alterations in the form of procedure are always retrospective, unless there is some good reason or other why they should not > be... where the effect would be to alter a transaction already entered into, where it would be to make that valid which was previously invalid- to make an instrument which had no effect at all, and from which the patty was at liberty to depart as long as he pleased, binding- I think the prima facie construction of the Act is that it is not to be retrospective, and that it would require strong reasons to show that is not the case."

Further, he cited Blyth v Blyth (1966) 1 All ER 524 at 535 where the court held;

> "[...] The rule that an Act of Parliament is not to be given retrospective effect only applies to statutes which affect vested rights. It does not apply to statutes which only alter the form of procedure, or the admissibility of evidence, or the effect which the courts give to evidence."

Moreover, learned Additional Solicitor-General submitted that it is not necessary for the Legislature to make an express provision in the Act to state that procedural laws have a retrospective effect, due to the legal presumption that procedural laws operate with retrospective effect.

Thus, by section 27(1) to (5) of the amending Act, the Legislature had expressly given retrospective effect to only the amendments made to the substantive laws in the principal Act.

Was the assessment of income tax issued out of time?

The issue that needs to be considered in the instant appeal is whether the assessment of income tax payable by the appellant for the year of assessment 2007/2008 dated 26th of March, 2010 was time barred under and in terms of section 163(5)(a) of the said Act, as amended.

Section 163(5)(a) of the said Act, as amended-

(i) refers to the time period given to a taxpayer to furnish a return of his income under section 106(1) of the said Act; and

(ii) sets out the time period given to an assessor to make an assessment of income tax, if any.

A careful consideration of the said section shows that sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) are interwoven with each other and thus, section 163(5)(a) of the said Act is not a standalone section. In fact, both these sections were amended by the said amending Act, and it is clear that it was necessary to amend both the sections in order to achieve the purpose of amending the principal Act.

Hence, it is necessary to consider both sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) together, when considering the above question of law.

(i) Time period given to a taxpayer to furnish a return of income under the principal Act

Prior to the amendment of section 106(1) of the principal Act, taxpayers were required to furnish a return of their income for a given year of assessment, on or before the 30th day of September immediately succeeding the end of that year of assessment.

Section 106(1) of the principal Act stated;

> "Every person who is chargeable with income tax under this Act for any year of assessment shall, on or before the thirtieth day of September immediately succeeding the end of that year of assessment, furnish to an Assessor, either in writing or by electronic means, a return in such form and containing such particulars as may be specified by the Commissioner-General, of his income, and if he has a child, the income of such child:
>
> Provided however, the preceding provisions shall not apply to an individual whose income for any year of assessment comprises solely of one or a combination of the following–
>
> (a) profits from employment as specified in section 4 and chargeable with income tax does not exceed rupees four hundred and twenty thousand and income tax under Chapter XIV has been deducted by the employer on the gross amount of such profit and income;
> (b) dividends chargeable with tax on which tax at ten per centum has been deducted under subsection (1) of section 65;
> (c) income from interest chargeable with tax on which income tax at the rate of ten per centum has been deducted under section 133."
>
> [Emphasis added]

(ii) Time period given to an assessor to make an assessment of income tax under the principal Act

Where a taxpayer had furnished a return of income, the assessor was required to either accept the return of income, or if he does not accept the said return, estimate the amount of the assessable income of such taxpayer and make an assessment of income tax under section 163(3) of the said Act.

Further, section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act stated that where a taxpayer had furnished a return of income for a given year of assessment within the time period specified in section 106(1) of the principal Act, the assessor cannot make an assessment of income tax for such year of assessment after the expiry of eighteen months from the end of that year of assessment, subject to specified exceptions.

Section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act stated;

> "Subject to the provisions of section 72, no assessment of the income tax payable under this Act by any person or partnership –
>
> (a) who or which has made a return of his or its income on or before the thirtieth day of September of the year of assessment immediately succeeding that year of assessment, shall be made after the expiry of eighteen months from the end of that year of assessment; and
> (b) who has failed to make a return on or before such date as referred to in paragraph (a), shall be made after the expiry of a period of three years from the end of that year of assessment:
>
> Provided, that nothing in this subsection shall apply to the assessment of income tax payable by any person in respect of any year of assessment, consequent to the receipt by such person of any arrears relating to the profits from employment of that person for that year of assessment:
> Provided further that, where in the opinion of the Assessor, any fraud, evasion or willful default has been committed by or on behalf of, any person in relation to any income tax payable by such person for any year of assessment, it shall be lawful for the Assessor to make an assessment or an additional assessment on such person at any time after the end of that year of assessment." [Emphasis added]

However, after the time period given to a taxpayer to furnish a return of income for the year of assessment 2007/2008 had lapsed, and before the time period given to the assessor to make an assessment of income tax for such year of assessment had expired, the Inland Revenue (Amendment) Act, No. 19 of 2009, was enacted by Parliament on the 31st of March, 2009. By the said amending Act, both the sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) of the principal Act were amended.

Effect of the amending Act

(i) Extension of time period given to a taxpayer to furnish a return of income

By the amendment made to section 106(1) of the principal Act, the deadline given to a taxpayer to furnish a return of income was extended from the 30th day of September to the 30th day of November immediately succeeding the end of that year of assessment.

Section 106(1) of the principal Act, as amended, states;

> "Every person who is chargeable with income tax under this Act for any year of assessment shall, on or before the ~~thirtieth day of September~~ thirtieth day of November immediately succeeding the end of that year of assessment, furnish to an Assessor, either in writing or by electronic means, a return in such from and containing such particulars as may be specified by the Commissioner-General, of his income, and if he has a child, the income of such child:
>
> Provided however, the preceding provisions shall not apply to an individual whose income for any year of assessment comprises solely of one or a combination of the following–
> (a) profits from employment as specified in section 4 and chargeable with income tax, does not exceed-
> (i) rupees four hundred and twenty thousand, where such year of assessment is any year of assessment ending on or before March 31, 2009; or

(b) dividends chargeable with tax on which tax at ten per centum has been deducted under subsection (1) of section 65;

(c) income from interest chargeable with tax on which income tax at the rate of ten per centum has been deducted under section 133."

[Emphasis added]

(ii) Extension of time period given to an assessor to make an assessment of income tax

Further, the amendments made to section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act extended the time period given to an assessor to make an assessment of income tax (if any) from eighteen months to two years from the end of that year of assessment, and also reflected the extended time period granted to a taxpayer to furnish a return of income under the amendment made to section 106(1) of the principal Act.

Section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act, as amended, states;

"Subject to the provisions of section 72, no assessment of the income tax payable under this Act by any person or partnership –

(a) who or which has made a return of his or its income on or before the ~~thirtieth day of September~~ thirtieth day of November of the year of assessment immediately succeeding that year of assessment, shall be made after the expiry of ~~eighteen months~~ a period of two years from the end of that year of assessment; and

(b) who has failed to make a return on or before such date as referred to in paragraph (a), shall be made after the expiry of a period of ~~three years~~ four years from the end of that year of assessment:

Provided, that nothing in this subsection shall apply to the assessment of income tax payable by any person in respect of any year of assessment, consequent to the receipt by such person of any arrears relating to the profits from employment of that person for that year of assessment:

Provided further that, where in the opinion of the Assessor, any fraud, evasion or willful default has been committed by or on behalf of, any person in relation to any income tax payable by such person for any year of assessment, it shall be lawful for the Assessor to make an assessment or an additional assessment on such person at any time after the end of that year of assessment."

[Emphasis added]

Hence, the question arises as to whether the amendment made to section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act extended the time period given to the taxpayer to furnish a return of income for the year of assessment 2007/2008, with retrospective effect, and extended the time period given to the assessor to make an assessment of income tax for such year of assessment, with prospective effect.

Retrospective operation of procedural laws

Article 75 of the Constitution confers power on the legislature to make laws, including laws having retrospective effect. The general principle of interpretation of statutes is described in the Latin maxim 'lex proscipit non respicit' (the law looks forward, not backward). Thus, amendments made to substantive laws have a prospective effect, unless its effect has been made retrospective by express provision in the Act or by necessary implication. On the other hand, amendments made to procedural laws are presumed to have retrospective effect, unless its effect has been made prospective by express provision in the Act or by necessary implication, or such a construction is textually not possible.

A similar view was expressed in Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 12th edition, at 222 which stated;

"It is perfectly settled law that if the legislature intended to frame a new procedure that, instead of proceeding in this form or that, you should proceed in another and a different way, clearly then bygone transactions are to be sued for and enforced according to the new form of procedure. Alterations in the form of procedure are always retrospective, unless there is some good reason or other why they should not be*."*

[Emphasis added]

Further, the Supreme Court of India in Hitendra Vishnu Thakur & Others v State of Maharashtra & Others (1994) 4 SCC 602 held;

"(i) A statute which affects substantive rights is presumed to be prospective in operation unless made retrospective, either expressly or by necessary intendment,

whereas a statute which merely affects procedure, unless such a construction is textually impossible, is presumed to be retrospective in its application, should not be given an extended meaning and should be strictly confined to its clearly defined limits;

(ii) Law relating to forum and limitation is procedural in nature, whereas law relating to right of action and right of appeal, even though remedial, is substantive in nature;

(iii) Every litigant has a vested right in substantive law, but no such right exists in procedural law;

(iv) A procedural statute should not generally speaking be applied retrospectively, where the result would be to create new disabilities or obligations, or to impose new duties in respect of transactions already accomplished; and
(v) A statute which not only changes the procedure but also creates new rights and liabilities shall be construed to be prospective in operation, unless otherwise provided, either expressly or by necessary implication.

[Emphasis added]

A careful consideration of the amendments made to sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) of the principal Act show that they are procedural in nature. Therefore, the said amendments are, prima facie,* presumed to have retrospective effect. In the circumstances, it is necessary to consider whether the said presumption is in fact applicable to the said amendments made by the amending Act.

Effect of section 27 of the amending Act

The amending Act was certified by the Speaker on the 31st of March, 2009. Therefore, the Act should have come into force from the date that it was certified by the Speaker, by operation of Article 80(1) of the Constitution. However, section 27 of the amending Act has specifically set out the dates on which the amendments made by the said amending Act shall come into force.

Section 27 of the amending Act states;

"(1) The amendments made to paragraph (e) of subsection (2) of section 34, subsection (3) of section 78, subsection (4) of section 113, subsection (2) of section 153 and subsection (2) of section 173 of the principal enactment, by sections 10 (2), section 15, section 17, section 19 and section 21 respectively, of this Act, shall be deemed for all purposes to have come into force on April 1, 2006.

(2) The amendment made to the Second Schedule to the principal enactment by section 25 of this Act, shall be deemed for all purposes to have come into force on April 1, 2007.

(3) The amendment made to section 8, section 40A and section 57 of the principal enactment, by section 3(1) and (2), section 11 and section 13 respectively, of this Act, shall be deemed for all purposes to have come into force on April 1, 2008.

(4) The amendment made to section 13 of the principal enactment by section 5(2) of this Act, shall be deemed for all purposes to have come into force on October 21, 2008.

(5) The amendment made to section 13 by section 5(4) of this Act, shall be deemed for all purposes to have come into force, on February 1, 2009.

(6) The amendments made to the principal enactment by this Act, other than the amendments specifically referred to in subsections (1), (2), (3), (4) and (5) of this section, shall come into force on April 1, 2009."

[Emphasis added]

Accordingly, the amendments referred to in section 27(1) to (5) of the amending Act are given a retrospective effect from the dates specified therein, in terms of Article 75 of the Constitution.

On the other hand, the amendments that are not referred to in section 27(1) to (5) of the amending Act operate with prospective effect from the 1st of April, 2009, in terms of section 27(6) of the amending Act.

It is pertinent to note that the amendments made to sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) of the principal Act are not referred to in section 27(1) to (5) of the amending Act.

Further, although there is a general distinction between substantive law and procedural law, section 27(6) of the amending Act does not distinguish between the amendments made to the substantive law and procedural law of the principal Act.

Thus, in the absence of any reference to a segregation between the two branches of law in the said section, it is not possible to read words into the said section by a judicial interpretation, and segregate the amendments made to the substantive law and procedural law of the principal Act.

In the circumstances, I am of the view that section 27(6) of the amending Act was intended to give prospective effect to both the amendments made to the substantive law and procedural law of the principal Act, other than those expressly referred to in section 27(1) to (5) of the amending Act.

Therefore, although the amendments made to sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) of the principal Act are procedural in nature, the express provision in section 27(6) of the amending Act excludes the applicability of the general presumption that procedural laws be given retrospective effect.

Hence, the amendments made to both sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) of the principal Act will operate with prospective effect from the 1st of April, 2009, in terms of section 27(6) of the amending Act.

Literal interpretation of the said amendments

As stated above, the amendments made to section 163(5)(a) read with section 106(1) of the principal Act extended the time period given to an assessor to make an assessment of income tax (if any) by six months, if a taxpayer had furnished an income tax return on or before the 30th day of November immediately succeeding that year of assessment.

However, a plain reading of the said sections show that it was not possible for a taxpayer to file a tax return for the year of assessment 2007/2008 on or before the 30th of November, 2008, as the said amending Act was passed by Parliament and certified by the Speaker on the 31st of March, 2009. Therefore, it is textually not possible to give retrospective effect to the amendments made to section 163(5)(a) read with section 106(1) of the principal Act, in relation to the extension of time given to the taxpayer to file a tax return.

Accordingly, the amendments made to both sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) of the principal Act should be given prospective effect.

Purpose of the aforesaid amendments

Further, when interpreting the amendments made to section 163(5)(a) read with section 106(1) of the principal Act, it is necessary to give effect to the purpose of amending the said sections of the principal Act.

As stated above, the purpose of the amendments made to section 163(5)(a) read with section 106(1) of the principal Act was not only to grant additional time for an assessor to consider the return of income filed by the taxpayer and make an assessment (if necessary), but also to grant additional time for a taxpayer to prepare a return of income in compliance with the said Act. Particularly, the extension of time given to taxpayers to file income tax returns facilitates large companies and groups of companies to finalize their accounts for a given financial year.

If the amendments made to section 163(5)(a) read with section 106(1) of the principal Act are interpreted to apply to the year of assessment 2007/2008 with retrospective effect, the taxpayers are deprived of filing income tax returns for such year of assessment within the extended time period, as such extended time period had passed by the time the said amendments came into operation. Thus, such an interpretation defeats the purpose of the aforesaid amendments.

Accordingly, it is necessary to give prospective effect to both of the aforesaid amendments in order to give effect to the purpose of the legislation.

In the absence of express provision to the contrary, a section of an Act should not be interpreted to have retrospective effect in part and prospective effect in other part

It is common ground that the extension of the deadline given to an assessor to make an assessment of income tax for the year of assessment 2007/2008 has a prospective effect. Hence, the Court of Appeal held, inter alia, that the time period given to an assessor to make an assessment of income tax for the year of assessment 2007/2008 had been extended with prospective effect in terms of section 27(6) of the amending Act.

However, the Court of Appeal had not considered the effect of the said amendments in relation to the taxpayer. As stated above, not only the amendment made to section 106(1) of the principal Act, but the amendment made to section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act also extends the time period given to a taxpayer to furnish a return of income. According to the said interpretation, the time period given to a taxpayer to furnish a return of income for the year of assessment 2007/2008 would be extended from the 30th of September to the 30th of November, 2008. However, such an extended time period had passed by the time the said amendments came into operation. Thus, according to the said interpretation, such extension of time given to the taxpayer to file his tax return for the year of assessment 2007/2008 should be given retrospective effect.

In the absence of express provision to the contrary, therefore, it is not possible to give retrospective effect to part of the amendment which extended the time period given to the taxpayer to file the tax return for the year of assessment 2007/2008, and give prospective effect to the other part of the amendment which extended the time period given to the assessor to make an assessment of income tax for such year of assessment. Accordingly, both the amendments should be interpreted as having prospective effect. Therefore, I am of the view that the said amendments have no application to the year of assessment 2007/2008.

For the foregoing reason, I am further of the view that the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal had misdirected themselves on the law in relation to the applicability of the said amendments to the year of assessment 2007/2008.

Application of the Interpretation Ordinance

In any event, section 6(3) of the Interpretation Ordinance states that, in the absence of any express provision, a repeal of a written law either in whole or in part, shall not affect any right acquired under the law that is being repealed.

Section 6(3) of the Interpretation Ordinance states;

> "Whenever any written law repeals either in whole or part a former written law, such repeal shall not, in the absence of any express provision to that effect, affect or be deemed to have affected-
>
> (a) the past operation of or anything duly done or suffered under the repealed written law;
> (b) any offence committed, any right, liberty, or penalty acquired or incurred under the repealed written law;
> (c) any action, proceeding or thing pending or incomplete when the repealing written law comes into operation, but every such action, proceeding, or thing may be carried on and completed as if there had been no such repeal."

Thus, since the appellant had furnished the return of income in accordance with section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act, prior to the said section being amended, a right had accrued to the appellant under the said section to have an assessment of income tax made (if any) within eighteen months from the end of that year of assessment.

Further, in the absence of express provision to the contrary in the amending Act, the right acquired by the appellant to have the assessment made within a period of eighteen months, is not affected by the subsequent repeal and substitution of the said section by the amending Act.

Hence, the amendments made to sections 106(1) and 163(5)(a) of the principal Act have no application to a tax return filed under and in terms of section 106(1) of the principal Act for the year of assessment 2007/2008.

Article 12(1) of the Constitution

Moreover, interpreting the amendment made to section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act to state that the time limit given to an assessor to make an assessment of income tax for the year of assessment 2007/2008 is extended with prospective effect, and the time limit given to a taxpayer to furnish a return of his income for the said year of assessment is extended with retrospective effect, would only benefit an assessor and not the taxpayer, as a taxpayer is unable to file a tax return in terms of the amendment made to section 106(1) of the principal Act.

In the circumstances, the law should not be interpreted to give an advantage to an assessor and deprive a taxpayer. Article 12(1) of the Constitution states that 'all persons are equal before the law and are entitled to the equal protection of the law'. Hence, the amendments made to section 163(5)(a) read with section 106(1) of the principal Act should be interpreted to secure the rights of both taxpayers and assessors of the Department of Inland Revenue.

Further, although Article 15(7) of the Constitution restricts the operation of Article 12(1) of the Constitution when enacting legislation for the purpose of, inter alia, meeting the just requirements of the general welfare of a democratic society, the said restriction does not apply to enacting laws governing persons who are required to comply with revenue laws or officers who enforce revenue laws. Accordingly, Article 15(7) of the Constitution has no application to the amendments under consideration and, therefore, the aforesaid amendments made to the procedure governing the taxpayers and the officers who enforce the revenue laws must be interpreted in a manner consistent with Article 12(1) of the Constitution.

The above view was expressed in Inland Revenue (Amendment) Bill, S.C. (S.D.) Nos. 01/2021 to 03/2021, where the court observed;

> "It is clear from the above observations made in the aforementioned determinations, that in revenue matters, the State has a wide discretion in selecting the persons or objects to impose tax on or grant concessions to, and such matters will not be inconsistent with Article 12(1) of the Constitution which provides for the equal protection of the law, unless they are manifestly unreasonable or discriminatory. However, a classification shall not be made to exclude liability of persons who perform services to taxpayers. Thus, the exclusion of "a full-time employee of the taxpayer" from the applicability of section 126(5) of the principal enactment, will not be captured within the scope of the aforesaid principle, and is therefore inconsistent with Article 12(1) of the Constitution*."*

Thus, it is necessary to interpret both the said amendments to have prospective effect, to secure equality between the taxpayer and revenue officer in terms of Article 12(1) of the Constitution.

Conclusion

Due to the foregoing reasons, I am of the view that the amendments made to section 163(5)(a) read with section 106(1) of the principal Act have no application to the year of assessment 2007/2008. Accordingly, the assessment of income tax payable by the appellant for the year of assessment 2007/2008 dated 26th of March, 2010 is time barred under and in terms of section 163(5)(a) of the principal Act.

Thus, I answer the below stated question of law as follows;

> "Was the assessment for the year 2007/2008 dated 26.03.2010 issued by the Assessor of Inland Revenue against the Appellant in respect of the return filed on 30.09.2008, time barred in terms of section 163(5)(a) of the Inland Revenue Act as amended by Act No. 19 of 2009?"
> Yes.

In view of the reasons stated above, I set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 1st August, 2014 and the determination of the Tax Appeals Commission dated 28th June, 2013. The appeal is allowed.

I order no costs.

Background

On 18th July 2008, the Officer-in-Charge of the Special Crimes Investigation Bureau of the Ratnapura Police Station (Complainant - Respondent - Respondent) instituted criminal proceedings against the Accused - Appellant - Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "Appellant") in the Magistrate's Court of Ratnapura by filing a Complaint (commonly referred to as a 'Plaint') in terms of section 136(1)(b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act. (Number 68675 had been assinged to this case.) The charge sheet attached to the Complaint contained three charges, namely 'Cheating', 'Criminal Breach of Trust' and 'Criminal Misappropriation of Property'. The Appellant pleaded 'not guilty' and a trial was held. Following the conclusion of the trial, on 29th August 2014 the learned Magistrate found the Appellant 'guilty' and accordingly he was convicted of all three charges. On 12th December 2014, the Appellant was sentenced to a term of 1-year rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,500/=, per each charge. The Appellant appealed against the said conviction and sentence to the High Court of the Sabaragamuwa Province, holden in Ratnapura. (No. HCR/APL 42/14 had been assigned to that Appeal.) Following the hearing of the Appeal, the High Court acquitted the Appellant with regard to the second and third charges, and hence quashed the corresponding sentences. The conviction and sentence pertaining to the first charge of 'cheating', was affirmed. Subject thereto, the Appeal was dismissed. This Appeal is against the said judgment of the High Court of the Provinces.

Following a consideration of an Application seeking Leave to Appeal against the afore-stated judgment of the High Court, this Court on 16th March 2018 granted Leave to Appeal, on the following questions of law:

(i) "Did the Provincial High Court fail to analyze the lack of mens rea on the part of the Petitioner to constitute an act of cheating?"

(ii) "Did the Provincial High Court fail to analyze that the virtual complainant had not been deceived by the act of the Petitioner, which is a necessary ingredient to constitute a charge of cheating?"

[The reference to the 'Petitioner' in these questions, is a reference to the present 'Appellant'.]

Offence

According to the charge sheet, the offence in respect of which the Appellant stands convicted and sentenced, is as follows:

"That on or about the 25th September 2007, by asserting that money was required for a business purpose, having obtained Rs. 8,00,000/= from Kalawitigoda Pathirannalage Chandralatha, residing at No. 74, Polhengoda, Ratnapura, and in respect thereof having got her to repose confidence by tendering to her a cheque drawn for Rs. 8,00,000/= bearing No. 908494 drawn against Account No. 013001001397 maintained at National Development Bank, Ratnapura, and having told her that she could on the date contained in the cheque deposit the said cheque and obtain money, and thereafter by not having either deposited money in the relevant account on the date stated in the cheque or returned the money to her, dishonestly or fraudulently cheated her, and thereby committed an offence punishable in terms of section 403 of the Penal Code."

Evidence

The virtual complainant Kalawitigoda Pathirannalage Chandralatha Athukorala (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 'virtual complainant') is a married lady with grown up children. The Appellant had been known to her for approximately five to six years. He was a friend of one of her sons. He had been preparing accounts on behalf of her son, for tax purposes. The Appellant used to frequent her house. She knew that the Appellant was running a shop at the supermarket in a building of the Ratnapura Municipality. On 12th September 2007, the Appellant sought a 'favour' from the virtual complainant; he solicited eight hundred thousand rupees on the premise that money was required for some business activity that he had commenced. She told the Appellant that she would think about it (the request for a loan) and respond. She had with her, four hundred thousand rupees. She collected another four hundred thousand rupees through several ways. Accordingly, on 25th September 2007, the virtual complainant gave a loan of eight hundred thousand rupees (in cash) to the Appellant. The Appellant offered to the virtual complainant a cheque. In response, the virtual complainant told the Appellant that she knew that there wasn't money in the Appellant's bank account and hence the cheque was not necessary. The Appellant responded and said "its OK aunty, keep the cheque with you for the purpose of having confidence". Consequently, the Appellant had drawn and given the virtual complainant a cash cheque bearing No. 908494 issued by the NDB Bank drawn against account No. 013001001397, with a face value of eight hundred thousand rupees. The date on the cheque was 20th December 2007 (i.e. the cheque was post-dated). The virtual complainant's position is that she gave the loan to the Appellant because she had 'confidence / trust' that the Appellant would return the money to her. According to her, the money was given to the Appellant as a loan and in a lump sum. The virtual complainant told the Appellant that she required the money to be returned by December that year, as she would have to spend money for an eye operation.

In December 2007, she contacted the Appellant and asked him to return the money. He originally undertook to do so. However, he failed to return the money. Later, when she called the Appellant, he did not even pick-up the phone. Thus, the Appellant informed one of her sons, Madhuka Nishantha Athukorala. On 27th December 2007, they deposited the cheque in the account of her son, Madhuka. The cheque was dishonoured by the bank. She has produced to Court the 'Notice of Dishonour' issued by the Bank, marked "P1". Attached to the notice of dishonour issued by the bank, had been a photo-copy of the cheque that was dishonoured. After the cheque was dishonoured, the virtual complainant had informed the Appellant. However, he has not come to meet the Appellant. Up to the time at which the virtual complainant gave evidence in Court, the Appellant had not returned the money.

However, the case record reveals that after the case for the prosecution was closed and the learned Magistrate called upon the Appellant to present defence evidence, the Appellant had returned a portion of the money to the virtual complainant and again defaulted.

Under cross-examination, the virtual complainant testified that, she had 'utmost confidence' in the Appellant. No document was exchanged between the parties at the time the loan was given. She has denied a suggestion put to her that she declined to accept the cheque due to the reason that she knew that there wasn't money in the Appellant's bank account. However, she has admitted that she told the Appellant that she did not require the cheque, and that what was required was for him to return the money, as she wanted the money for her eye operation. She has also admitted the suggestion made by the learned counsel for the Appellant, that the cheque was accepted by her as a form of 'security'. The appellant had told the virtual complainant that he "will definitely return the money in December". The witness has responded positively to the position taken up by the defence counsel that the money was given to the Appellant as a loan. She has also responded positively to the position put to her that the Appellant gave a promise to her and he was unable to return the money to her. Under cross-examination, the witness has also said that the Appellant requested her to even mortgage her jewelry and give him the money he solicited. Thus, she had collected the money from multiple sources and given eight hundred thousand rupees to the Appellant. The virtual complainant has denied the suggestion put to her under cross-examination, that she gave the money to the Appellant in three instalments. She has been emphatic that she gave the eight hundred thousand rupees to the appellant in a lump sum. She has also denied the suggestion put to her that the loan was given to the Appellant at an interest rate of eight percent.

The second witness to testify on behalf of the prosecution had been Jinendra Asanga Dawulgama, an Assistant Manager of the Ratnapura Branch of the National Development Bank. According to his testimony, Kapila Nishshanka Kumarage (the Appellant) had an account bearing No. 013001001397, maintained at the Ratnapura branch of the National Development Bank. Cheque No. 908494 had been drawn against that account. This account had been 'closed' with effect from 11th January 2007. The account had been closed by the Bank, following three cheques issued against the account having got dishonoured. A letter had been sent to the Appellant notifying him that the bank had closed the account. At the time cheque No. 908494 had been issued, the account remained closed. The witness has produced to Court a statement of accounts relating to the relevant bank account, which was marked "P2". According to the witness, that statement reflects inter alia to the dishonouring of the cheque in issue.

The third and the final witness to testify for the prosecution was Police Sergeant Kulatunga Mudiyanselage Jayanath, of the Special Crimes Investigations Unit of the Ratnapura Police Station. His evidence was formal in nature. The virtual complainant had lodged a complaint regarding this matter on 24th January 2008, and he had conducted the investigation into that complaint.

Following the closure of the case for the prosecution, the learned Magistrate had called upon the Appellant to present the defence case. On 15th November 2015, learned defence counsel has informed court that no evidence will be presented to Court on behalf of the Appellant. Thus, the trial had been concluded.

Submissions of counsel

Learned counsel for the Appellant submitted that, "a charge of cheating requires the complainant to handover to the offender an article or property as a result of being deceived". (emphasis added.) In the instant case, "the complainant should have been deceived by receiving of the cheque drawn by the Appellant". He further submitted that, "it is essential that the lending of money occurred due to the act of deceit committed by the Accused, which induced the act of lending money to the Appellant". "If the lending of money had not been induced by giving the cheque to the complainant, the charge of cheating framed against the Appellant would not be proved". He submitted further, that the gravamen of the charge relates to the "inducement caused by the deceit of giving a cheque without funds, and not to the promise to re-pay the sum borrowed by the Appellant".

Learned counsel cited illustration "(f)" of section 398 of the Penal Code, which provides as follows:

"A, intentionally deceives Z into a belief that A means to repay any money that Z may lend to him, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to lend him money, A not intending to repay it. A cheats."

Counsel for the Appellant also submitted that, the facts of this matter are distinguishable with the facts of illustration "(f)" of section 398 of the Penal Code, since the Appellant did not dishonestly induce the virtual complainant to lend him money, and hence the said illustration is inapplicable to this case.

Learned counsel for the Appellant also drew the attention of the Court to illustration "(d)" of section 398, which provides as follows:

"A, by tendering in payment for an article, a cheque on a bank with which A keeps no money, and by which A expects that the cheque will be dishonoured, intentionally deceives Z, and thereby dishonestly induces Z to deliver the article, intending not to pay for it. A cheats."

Learned counsel submitted that though it appears that the facts of the instant matter come within the scope of illustration "(d)", it is necessary to examine whether it was the tendering of the cheque that induced the virtual complainant to lend money to the Appellant. He submitted that for some conduct to amount to deception, a false impression must be intentionally given or a false statement should be made, to induce someone to act upon the said representation. His position was that, as the evidence suggests, the lending of the money was not induced by giving the cheque, and was occasioned by the trust placed on the Appellant by the virtual complainant. He submitted that the cheque was not even given as a mode of repayment. He further submitted that, according to the evidence, when the money was due, the virtual complainant originally tried to contact the Appellant to ask for the money to be returned, and it was only when her attempts to contact the Appellant failed, that she gave the cheque to her son to deposit it. Thus, learned counsel summed up his submission on the footing that "the lending of the money was not induced by the tendering of the cheque". Therefore, he submitted that the prosecution has failed to establish the element of 'deception by tendering the cheque', and hence the Appellant's conviction for 'cheating' was unlawful. Accordingly, he urged that the Appeal be allowed and the conviction and sentenced imposed on the Appellant be quashed.

On behalf of the Respondent, learned Senior State Counsel in her written submissions, referring to the evidence of the virtual complainant, submitted the following: "… it is also evident that the virtual complainant had initially given it much thought and she was initially reluctant to give the Petitioner (sic) the said sum of money … However, the Petitioner (sic) had then provided the virtual complainant with a cheque as an assurance that the said sum of money would be returned by the Petitioner (sic) … In fact, the virtual complainant has also stated that the Petitioner (sic) had insisted on her taking the cheque … As a result of the said assurance, the virtual complainant had finally decided that the Petitioner (sic) could be trusted to return the said amount. The money had therefore been given to the Petitioner (sic) on 25th September 2007 …"

Learned Senior State Counsel also drew the attention of this Court to illustration "(d)" of section 398 of the Penal Code, and submitted that, "the aforesaid illustration matches the exact circumstances of the present case, as the Petitioner (sic) had essentially forced the cheque in issue on the virtual complainant as an instrument of inducement (knowing that the said cheque could not be encashed) to deliver the sum of money to him."

Learned Senior State Counsel submitted that the tendering of a cheque from an account which had already been closed several months prior, is reflective of the dishonest intention on the part of the Appellant. It was further submitted that the Appellant had no intention of repaying the virtual complainant. The Appellant intended to cause loss to the virtual complainant and thereby the mens rea of the offence of 'cheating' is satisfied.

Learned Senior State Counsel citing Arvindbhai Ravjibhai Patel v. State of Gujarat (1998 Cr.L.J. 463) submitted that it has been held that, "if after taking a loan, for a considerable period the same is not paid till the date the complaint is filed, then from that point of time it can be prima facie said that he had the dishonest intention of not to pay right from the beginning. If the law is not interpreted in this manner, dishonest persons would screamingly skip the law and defeat the justice".

The position of the learned Senior State Counsel is that the tendering of the cheque would have 'undoubtedly reassured the virtual complainant into providing the petitioner (sic) the loan'. Thus, by tendering the cheque, the Appellant had 'deceived' the virtual complainant. The presentation of the cheque induced the virtual complainant to deliver to the Appellant the property, namely the loan of Rs. 800,000/=.

The written submissions filed on behalf of the Respondent also contained the following paragraph:

"Further, it is pertinent to note that the Petitioner (sic) has had multiple connected matters pertaining to similar offences which were pending at the time (Case Nos, 68674, 68676 & B 354/2008 - at page 40, High Court Appeal Brief marked 'X'), as well as a previous conviction from the Magistrate's Court of Ratnapura in Case No. 68673 (at page 82, High Court Appeal Brief marked 'X'). These facts indubitably go towards the Petitioner's character, that he is a repeat offender who has engaged in cheating persons in a manner similar to that in which he cheated the virtual complainant in this matter."

In the light of these submissions, learned Senior State Counsel submitted that the charge of 'cheating' has been clearly proven by the prosecution, and therefore submitted that the conviction of the Appellant for having committed cheating was lawful, and hence the Appeal be dismissed.

Consideration of the law, evidence, submissions and conclusions

Offence of 'Cheating'

Section 398 of the Penal Codes defines the offence of Cheating in the following manner:

"Whoever, by deceiving any person, fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person*, or to consent that any person shall retain any property, or intentionally induces the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything which he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation, or property, or damage or loss to the Government, is said to 'cheat'."* (Emphasis added.)

From this definition, it is evident that the offence of 'cheating' can be committed in several ways. The focus here is not on the modus operandi that may be adopted by the perpetrator of the offence, but on technical ways recognized by the Penal Code, as amounting to 'cheating'. Those multiple ways in which the offence of 'cheating' may be committed, are as follows:

1. By deceiving any person, fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person.
2. By deceiving any person, fraudulently or dishonestly induces the person so deceived to consent that any person shall retain any property.
3. By deceiving any person, intentionally induces the person so deceived to do anything which he would not do if he were not so deceived, and which act causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation, or property, or damage or loss to the Government.
4. By deceiving any person, intentionally induces the person so deceived to omit to do anything which he would do if he were not so deceived, and which omission causes or is likely to cause damage or harm to that person in body, mind, reputation, or property, or damage or loss to the Government.

In view of the evidence presented by the prosecution at the trial and the submissions made before this Court by both learned counsel, the manner in which the offence of 'cheating' may be committed cited in "1" above is of particular significance to the adjudication of this Appeal.

That the offence of 'cheating' can be committed in these four ways is reflected clearly in Dr. Sir Hari Singh Gour's 'The Penal Law of India' (Diamond Jubilee - 10th Edition, Volume IV, page 3636), which provides as follows:

"To constitute 'cheating' under this section, there must be -

(1) deception of any person and thereby,

(2) (a) fraudulently or dishonestly inducing that person -

(i) to deliver any property to any person, or

(ii) to consent that any person shall retain any property, or

(2) (b) intentionally inducing that person to do or omit to do anything which if he were not so deceived, and which act or omission causes or is likely to cause harm to that person in body, mind, reputation or property."

Thus, it is Dr. Gour's view as well, that to constitute the offence of 'cheating' ingredients "(1)" and "(2)(a)" or "(2)(b)" should be satisfied.

It would therefore be seen that deception is the core ingredient of the offence of 'cheating', and it is common to all four ways in which the offence may be committed. In comparison thereof, fraudulence and dishonesty, which operate as alternate ingredients of the offence, are expressly provided ingredients only to the first and second ways in which the offence of 'cheating' may be committed, wherein the offender induces the victim to either (a) deliver any property to any person, or (b) to consent that any person shall retain any property. The third and fourth ways in which the offence of 'cheating' may be committed, do not contain 'fraudulence' or 'dishonesty' as constituent ingredients. Nevertheless, it is important to note that 'dishonesty' is embedded in the ingredient of 'deception', and hence 'dishonesty' is actually a requirement for all four ways in which the offence of cheating could be committed. This aspect will be discussed in further detail in due course.

Furthermore, with regard to the first and second ways in which the offence of cheating may be committed, it would not be necessary for the prosecution to prove that the victim suffered any loss or was likely to suffer any loss as a result of being subject to the offence, though pecuniary loss or loss of property would in most instances be a consequential result. However, with regard to the third and fourth ways in which the offence may be committed, it would be necessary for the prosecution to prove a particular consequential loss or a likelihood of such a consequential loss as a result of being subject to the offence of 'cheating'. Such consequential loss should be in the nature of either (i) actual damage or harm to such person in body, mind, reputation, or property, or damage or loss to the government, or (ii) the likelihood of causing such damage or harm to such person in body, mind, reputation, or property, or damage of loss to the government.

The term 'deception' has not been defined in the Penal Code. Black's Law Dictionary (11th Edition) provides two definitions to the term 'deception'. Those are (i) the act of deliberately causing someone to believe that something is true when the actor knows it to be false, and (ii) a trick intended to make a person believe something untrue. Generally, deception is carried out through making some verbal assertion or through conduct or by a combination of both. In deception, the verbal assertion contains falsehood which the perpetrator knows to be false. It has the effect of misleading the victim. However, a verbal assertion of falsehood is not absolutely essential. As the explanation to section 398 provides, "a dishonest concealment of facts is a deception within the meaning of this section". (Emphasis added.) Thus, not a mere omission to tell the truth or concealment of the truth, but an omission or concealment with the intention of dishonestly concealing the truth, would amount to deception. As Dr. Gour has pointed out, deception has in it the element of misleading, or making a person believe something that is not real. It implies causing a person to believe as true, something that is false. (page 3637) In deception, the motive for uttering falsehood or a false representation through other means, or the concealment of the truth, is dishonesty. The term "dishonestly" has been defined in section 22 of the Penal Code in the following manner:

"Whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing dishonestly." Section 21(1) provides that, "'wrongful gain' is gain by unlawful means of property to which the person gaining is not legally entitled", and section 21(2) provides that, "'wrongful loss' is the loss by unlawful means of property to which the person losing it is legally entitled'. Thus, dishonesty connotes an intention to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss contrary to law.

It would thus be seen that deception is distinct from the utterance of mere falsehood or failure to reveal the truth. It is not a mere misrepresentation as well. Deception is the inducement that is provided by the perpetrator of the offence of cheating to the victim, which should have been practiced with a dishonest intention. Thus, 'dishonesty' is the mens rea of the offence of cheating common to all four ways in which the offence may be committed.

From the structuring of the charge of 'cheating' preferred against the Appellant (i.e. the first charge on the charge sheet), it would be seen that the prosecution had premised the charge on the first out of the four ways in which I have described above, the offence of 'cheating' may be committed. Thus, it is necessary to consider whether, the prosecution has proven that the Appellant practiced deception in respect of the virtual complainant in the manner alleged in the charge. Whether he entertained a dishonest intention when he solicited a loan from the virtual complainant is of critical importance. Furthermore, it is necessary to consider whether through such deception, the Appellant had fraudulently or dishonestly induced the virtual complainant to deliver property to the Appellant. From the perspective of the virtual complainant, it is necessary to consider whether it was the alleged act of deception (if any) practiced by the Appellant, which caused the virtual complainant to deliver property to the Appellant. Even if the alleged offender had practiced deception, and nonetheless quite independent of the deceptive assertion made by the offender, the alleged victim had due to some auxiliary reason departed with property, the offence of 'cheating' would not be made out. This is because, the prosecution under such circumstances has failed to establish a causal relationship between the deception practiced by the alleged offender and the conduct of the victim.

It would be seen that section 398 contains only the definition of the offence of 'cheating'. The punishment for 'cheating' is contained in sections 400, 401, 402 and 403 of the Penal Code. The punishment for committing 'cheating' is conditioned upon the satisfaction of certain associated circumstances stipulated in these sections. In the instant matter, the Appellant was charged with having committed the offence of 'cheating', punishable in terms of section 403 of the Penal Code. Section 403 provides as follows:

"Whoever cheats and thereby dishonestly induces the person deceived to deliver any property to any person*, or to make, alter, or destroy the whole or any part of a valuable security, or anything which is signed or sealed, and which is capable of being converted into a valuable security,* shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine." (Emphasis added.)

Therefore, to be punishable in terms of section 403 of the Penal Code, it is necessary to consider whether the prosecution has proven that as a result of being cheated, the virtual complainant had delivered property to the Appellant.

Analysis of the evidence and application of the law

Offence of Cheating

It is now necessary to re-visit the evidence, while applying the afore-stated applicable legal principles. According to the virtual complainant, the Appellant was known to the virtual complainant for some time. It is evident that, well before the Appellant solicited a 'loan' from her, she had confidence or trust in the Appellant. According to her, due to the several reasons she has described in her testimony, she had 'utmost trust' in the Appellant. On 12th September 2007, the Appellant solicited a 'loan' from the virtual complainant. The prosecution did not place any evidence before Court that at the time the loan was solicited the Appellant had undertaken to tender to the virtual complainant a cheque, either as security or as the means by which the loan would be repaid. When the loan was solicited by the Appellant, the virtual complainant did not immediately indicate to the Appellant whether or not she will accede to the request. She contemplated on the matter for some time and at some point-of-time after the 12th of September, she seems to have decided to grant the loan to the Appellant. The date on which she took that decision has not been elicited from the virtual complainant. Having decided to grant the loan to the Appellant, the virtual complainant took certain steps to collect the required amount of money. That is because, she had only four hundred thousand rupees with her and the amount required was eight hundred thousand rupees. It was on the 25th September 2007 that she handed over to the Appellant the loan amounting to eight hundred thousand rupees. It is on that day that the Appellant drew the cheque in issue in the presence of the virtual complainant, and handed it over to her. The prosecution has not presented specific evidence on whether the cheque was tendered to the virtual complainant before or after the money was given by the virtual complainant to the Appellant. However, what is evident is that the cheque was handed over to the virtual complainant by the Appellant some-time after the virtual complainant decided to lend the money to the Appellant. When the cheque was offered, the virtual complainant told the Appellant that it (the cheque) was not necessary, as in any event she knew that the Appellant did not have money in the account. However, the Appellant insisted on giving the cheque, and the virtual complainant accepted it as 'security'. On being specifically questioned under cross-examination by learned counsel for the accused, the virtual complainant has testified that she gave the loan to the Appellant because she had 'confidence' in him. She has at no stage stated that she gave the loan on the belief that she considered the cheque to be valuable security and hence she will be able to encash the cheque when she required money. Thus, it would be seen that there is no specific evidence that the tendering of the cheque caused the virtual complainant to decide to grant the loan to the Appellant. In the circumstances, I am not inclined to agree with the submission of the learned Senior State Counsel that it was as a result of tendering the cheque as an assurance, that the virtual complainant decided to give the money to the Appellant. Further, even if this Court were to infer that the cheque had been given to the virtual complainant by the Appellant before the money was given to him, that the tendering of the cheque was the governing reason which resulted in the virtual complainant having decided to give the loan amounting to eight hundred thousand rupees to the Appellant, remains an unresolved issue.

At page 3641 (supra), Dr. Gour has pointed out that, 'to constitute the offence of cheating, there must be a deception which must precede and induce, under the first part of this section, the delivery or retention of property, or the act or omission referred to in the second part'.

Views identical to Dr. Gour's have been expressed by Justice Hearne in The King v. Wijerama [2 CLJ 211], wherein it has been stated as follows:
"Cheating is defined in section 398 C.P.C. The indictment in the present case refers to the first part of section 398. Under this part, in order to constitute 'cheating' there must be deception which must precede and induce the delivery or retention of property."

It is necessary to observe that in the matter under examination by me, the prosecution has not proved that the impugned deceptive act of the Appellant preceded and induced the virtual complainant to lend him money.

Indeed, in The King v. Chandrasekera (23 NLR 286) it has been held by Justice Shaw that the inducement to deliver the property need not have been wholly due to the deceit practiced by the perpetrator of cheating, independent of other auxiliary causes. However, the key issue to be determined is whether the tendering of the cheque by the Appellant to the virtual complainant was perceived by the virtual complainant as the means of recovery of the loan or as valuable security, and hence she was thereby persuaded to grant the loan of rupees eight hundred thousand to the Appellant because the cheque was tendered to her. For the tendering of the cheque to have played a decisive role on the virtual complainant having decided to give the money to the Appellant as a loan, the cheque should have been given to the virtual complainant at or before the time she decided to give the loan to the Appellant, or the Appellant should have given a promise to the virtual complainant that a cheque will be given to her if she were to give the money to him. As pointed out earlier, no evidence has been placed before this Court to that effect.

According to the testimony provided by the Assistant Manager of the Ratnapura Branch of the National Development Bank, the cheque in issue bearing No. 908494 had been drawn against the Appellant's bank account bearing No. 01300100139. This account had been closed by the bank on 11th January 2007, upon detecting that three cheques issued by the Appellant against this account had been dishonoured due to want of necessary funds. The fact that the account was being closed, had been communicated to the Appellant. The Appellant took no steps to re-activate the account. Thus, when the appellant drew cheque No. 908494, he knew that the corresponding account against which the cheque was being drawn had been closed. After the tendering of the cheque to the virtual complainant, the Appellant made no attempt to re-activate the account and deposit sufficient funds into that account so that there will be funds in the account to honour the cheque when the cheque is deposited by the virtual complainant. It is under such circumstances that in December 2007 when the virtual complainant's son deposited the cheque, it was dishonoured by the bank.

When the Appellant handed over the cheque to the virtual complainant and asked her to keep it as 'security', he made no reference to the fact that the relevant account had been closed by the bank. It can under these circumstances be argued that the Appellant's conduct of drawing and tendering the cheque was illegal as it amounted to an offence. When tendering the cheque to the virtual complainant, the Appellant had deliberately given the impression that the cheque was to be kept as 'security', when in fact, it was not a 'valuable security' as at that point of time. Nor did he take any steps afterwards to convert the cheque in to a 'valuable security' by re-activating the bank account and depositing sufficient money in it, facilitating the realization of the cheque when it is tendered to the bank. Consequent to the receipt of loan, when he was obliged to return the money to the virtual complainant, the Appellant defaulted, and also started to avoid the virtual complainant. These items of subsequent conduct can be taken into consideration when arriving at an inferential finding regarding the state of mind of the Appellant at the time he accepted the money and handed over the cheque to the virtual complainant.

In my view, these circumstances by themselves are insufficient to arrive at an inference that at the time the Appellant solicited the loan and subsequently tendered the cheque, he entertained a dishonest intention. That is in view of the reasonable possibility that at the time the cheque was tendered the Appellant may have in good faith intended to repay the loan when the loan money was due, either by tendering cash or by depositing sufficient money in the bank account so that the cheque when tendered would be honoured. Thus, in my view, it cannot be unequivocally concluded that the Appellant had by the tendering of the cheque to the virtual complainant, engaged in deception of the virtual complainant by the dishonest concealment of certain relevant facts pertaining to the cheque and by asserting facts that gave the virtual complainant a false impression.

In any event, it is important to note that, even if this Court were to arrive at a finding that the tendering of the cheque and assertions made associated with the tendering of the cheque amounts to deception, that by itself does not convert the character of the Appellant's conduct to the offence of 'cheating'. As pointed out earlier, the prosecution has failed to prove that it was the deception if any practiced by the Appellant that thereby caused the virtual complainant to give the solicited sum of money to the Appellant.

As the virtual complainant herself has admitted, the transaction between herself and the Appellant was one relating to a loan. From the perspective of the law of contracts, there has certainly been a breach of contract by the Appellant. According to Dr. Gour, "a mere breach of contract cannot give rise to a criminal prosecution. The distinction between a case of mere breach of contract and one of cheating, depends upon the intention of the accused at the time of the alleged inducement, which must be judged by his subsequent act but of which the subsequent act is not the sole criterion". (page 3634, supra) Dr. Gour has also pointed out that, "if the terms of the agreement are not carried out, it may attract civil as well as criminal consequences. The vital factor to be considered is whether at the time of the agreement, there was an intention to carry out the terms of the agreement or not. If at its inception there was no intention to carry out the terms, it would constitute the offence of 'cheating'. Not otherwise". (page 3635, supra) In view of the attendant facts and circumstances of this case, it cannot be concluded beyond a reasonable doubt that at the time of the making the request to the virtual complainant and when receiving the eight hundred thousand rupees, the Appellant entertained the intention of not re-paying the amount as per the undertaking he gave to the virtual complainant.

Charge against the Appellant

Section 165(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979 provides that, "when the nature of the case is such that the particulars mentioned in section 164 and the preceding sub-sections of this section do not give the accused sufficient notice of the matter with which he is charged, the charge shall also contain such particulars of the manner in which the alleged offence was committed as will be sufficient for that purpose". Particularly in offences such as 'cheating' which has multiple technical ways in which the offence may be committed, the manner in which the offence had been committed should be specified. Illustration "(b)" of section 165 provides as follows: 'A is accused of cheating B at a given time and place. The charge must set out the manner in which A cheated B." In compliance with this requirement, the charge against the Appellant contained the following averment: "… by tendering to her a cheque drawn for Rs. 8,00,000/= bearing No. 908494 drawn against Account No. 013001001397 maintained at National Development Bank, Ratnapura, and having told her that she could on the date contained in the cheque deposit the said cheque and obtain money …" (Emphasis added.) However, no evidence has been presented at the trial that the Appellant made such an utterance to the virtual complainant. Therefore, the prosecution has failed in establishing that the Appellant committed the offence of cheating in the manner in which the prosecution has alleged in the charge that the offence was committed. Thus, the evidence in the case is not compatible with the charge. That is another ground on which I conclude that the prosecution has failed to prove the charge of 'cheating' against the Appellant.

I am of the view that, in the circumstances of this case, the answers to the following questions would point towards the absence of culpability of the Appellant for the offence of 'cheating'.

(a) Did the Appellant entertain a dishonest intention when he solicited the loan?

(b) Based on a dishonest intention, did the Appellant practice deception by concealing from the virtual complainant the fact that the bank account was closed and that there was no money in the account to honour the cheque?

(c) Did the Appellant solicit the loan and thereafter borrow the money from the virtual complainant with the intention of not repaying it?

(d) At the time the loan was solicited, did the Appellant know that he would not be in a position to settle the loan?

(e) While entertaining grounds to believe that he will not be in a position to settle the loan, did the Appellant conceal from the virtual complainant the fact that he will not be able to repay the money that was being borrowed?

(f) Did the tendering of the cheque by the Appellant to the virtual complainant result in the virtual complainant being deceived and thereby did the virtual complainant decide to give the money to the Appellant?

In my view, the evidence presented at the trial is insufficient to conclusively answer any of the above questions in the affirmative. Thus, the conviction of the Appellant cannot be affirmed.

Arvindbhai Ravjibhai Patel v. State of Gujarat

I must now deal with the citing of the judgment in Arvindbhai Ravjibhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, by the learned Senior State Counsel in support of her submission, that the Appellant was culpable for having committed the offence of 'cheating'.

The first matter I wish to observe is that, the said judgment of the High Court of Gujarat, India, has been decided by Judge K. Vaidya sitting alone, in respect of an application by which Arvindbhai Ravijibhai Patel sought the quashing of an order made by the Chief Judicial Magistrate of Surat. Following a consideration of a complaint filed in the Magistrate's Court of Surat by one Dhirubhai Shambhubai Kakadia against Patel that the latter had cheated him to give a loan of Rs. 90,000/=, the Magistrate had made an order directing the Police to inquire into the complaint and report. Thus, the impugned order made by the Magistrate challenged in the High Court was not a judgment in respect of a conviction and sentence imposed against Patel by a Magistrate. In the said case, what the High Court had been called upon to consider was whether there was sufficient material before the Magistrate that would in terms of the applicable law warrant the Magistrate to require the police to inquire into the complaint and report back to the Magistrate. Thus, the matter that required adjudication by the High Court of Gujarat was not whether the evidence disclosed proof beyond reasonable doubt as to whether the accused (Patel) had committed the offence of 'cheating'. It should be noted that there is a significant difference in the threshold of evidence an appellate court is required to consider between the two scenarios. In the matter before Judge Vaidya, all what he was required to consider was whether the material before the learned Magistrate disclosed well-founded information that Patel had committed the offence of 'cheating', which would warrant the conduct of an inquiry into the complaint by the police. That question had been answered in the affirmative by Judge Vaidya. Thus, the judgment cited by learned Senior State Counsel has been decided on a totally different context and therefore notwithstanding the above being a judgment pronounced by a foreign court of law, I am constrained to conclude that it is not a 'relevant' judgment from the context of this matter.

The second matter that needs to be dealt with by this Court, relates to the citing of this particular judgment of a foreign court of law. I am conscious that, learned Senior State Counsel when citing this judgment did not invite this Court to invoke the doctrine of judicial precedent (stare decisis) and thereby did not invite this Court to feel legally bound by or even obliged to follow the ratio decidendi of the cited judgment. In fact, the doctrine of judicial precedent does not require a Court of a sovereign and independent country to be bound by a judgment of a foreign country, notwithstanding the foreign judgment having been pronounced by a relatively superior Court in the comparative judicial hierarchies of the two countries. In fact, being legally bound to follow a judgment of a Court of another country would be inconsistent with the sovereignty of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka and Article 3 read with Article 4 of the Constitution. Applying the doctrine of judicial precedent in respect of a judgment of a foreign Court, even though it may be in respect of a judgment of a relatively superior Court, would in my view also be inconsistent with the concept of sovereignty of nation states and contrary to Article 2 of the Charter of the United Nations which recognizes the principle of sovereign equality. However, an exception to this is found during the pre-republican era of Sri Lanka, when Sri Lankan courts were required to be bound by judgments of the Privy Council of the United Kingdom, pronounced in appeals to that Court from judgments of Courts of Ceylon (as Sri Lanka was called then). That is because, the law of the country (at that time) recognized the Privy Council to be the court of final resort.

Nevertheless, I wish to observe that the views of judges of superior courts can considerably be enriched by considering foreign judgments and appreciating the interpretation and application of the law by the justices who decided the relevant judgments and the judicial wisdom contained therein. Indeed, particularly during the embryological stage of the development of the fundamental rights jurisdiction, the Supreme Court of Sri Lanka gained much from judgments pronounced by the Supreme Court of India. A careful comparison of related judgments of the two national jurisdictions reveal how 'judicial borrowings' if I may use that terminology, has contributed towards the development of the law in Sri Lanka. Furthermore, Public and Administrative Law of this country has gained significantly and exponentially from judgments of the Privy Council and the House of Lords of the United Kingdom.

However, in view of the sheer number and the multiplicity of views contained in judgments of foreign courts of comparable jurisdictions, unless a judge is extremely careful and meticulously rigorous in examining the cited judgment in the backdrop of judgments of the same foreign jurisdiction not cited by counsel, it is probable that such judge may succumb to the consequences of possible cherry-picking of foreign judgments by counsel.

Be that as it may, it appears to me that the judgment in issue was cited by learned Senior State Counsel on the assumption that this Court should consider itself to be persuaded to follow the views expressed by Judge K. Vaidya and thereby be guided by his views. As observed earlier, the cited judgment is one of the High Court of the State of Gujarat, India. Based on the hierarchy of Courts in India, the High Court of the State of India cannot be equated to the Supreme Court of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka. Justice Thamotheram in Walker Sons & Co. (U.K.) Ltd. v. Gunatilake and Others [(1978-79-80) 1 Sri L.R. 231 at page 243] has expressed the view that it is the judgments of the highest Courts of a particular country which should be recognized as a judgment declaratory of the law of that country. I am in respectful agreement of that view. Therefore, the judgment of Judge K. Vaidya referred to by the learned Senior State Counsel cannot be considered as the law on the matter in terms of the law of India.

Subject to the absence of the term 'or damage or loss to the government', the offence of 'cheating' is defined in section 415 of the Indian Penal Code of 1860 in the identical manner in which it has been defined in the Penal Code of this country. Further, in criminal matters, the applicable legal principles pertaining to relevancy and admissibility of evidence, burden of proof, and judicial practices relating to assessment of credibility and testimonial trustworthiness of evidence of Sri Lanka and India are comparable. However, a Judgment of a High Court of a State of India would certainly not even attract persuasive influence on the Supreme Court of Sri Lanka. Therefore, even if the facts were identical, and the cited judgment also related to a consideration of an Appeal arising out of a conviction and sentence imposed by a trial court relating to the committing of the offence of 'cheating', I see no useful purpose having been served by citing the judgment referred to above.

If at all, what may serve as helpful guidance to the Supreme Court of Sri Lanka would be judgments of the Supreme Court of India, in instances where the jurisdictions of the two courts and the applicable laws are comparable.

In any event, I must place on record that Courts must exercise great caution and apply extreme diligence when considering a judgment of a Court of a foreign jurisdiction, as a judgment must be necessarily viewed and appreciated in the backdrop of the applicable law, sources of law, evolution of the law, jurisdiction of the relevant court, comparable binding judicial precedents, subsequent developments of judicial precedents, natural and inherent conduct of the people of that country, and the socio-cultural and other conditions and circumstances which prevailed in such country at the time the particular judgment was pronounced. All such relevant factors may not be apparent ex-facie in the cited judgment and would not be within the domain of knowledge of judges invited to consider such judgment of the relevant foreign Court.

Former Chief Justice of India Justice K. G. Balakrishnan in "The Role of Foreign Precedents in a country's Legal System" [National Law School of India Review, Volume 22 (No. 1) 2010] has expressed the view that, "… judges should be cautious against giving undue weightage to precedents decided in entirely different socio-political settings. … reliance on foreign precedents should also be shaped by the discipline expected of a common law judge in weighing the credibility and persuasive value of precedents from different legal systems".

From that perspective too, the judgment cited by learned Senior State Counsel provides hardly any assistance for the determination of this Appeal, and must be classified as being 'irrelevant'. In the circumstances, it would be necessary to call upon counsel to refrain from citing judgments of foreign jurisdictions that do not have any relevance to the case at hand required to be decided by a Sri Lankan Court.

Antecedents and the character of the Appellant

As referred to earlier, learned Senior State Counsel citing certain journal entries and proceedings of the case, submitted that the Appellant had several connected cases relating to several similar offences and that he had been once convicted of having committed an offence. Her submission was that these facts 'indubitably go toward the Petitioner's [sic] character, that he is a repeat offender who has engaged in cheating persons in a manner similar to that in which he cheated the virtual complainant in this matter". It appears from the said submission that the Respondent's position is that, the said antecedents amounting to bad character of the Appellant should be taken into account for the purpose of considering the lawfulness or otherwise of the conviction that is impugned by the Appellant in this Appeal.

Section 54 of the Evidence Ordinance provides as follows:

In criminal proceedings the fact that the accused person has a bad character is irrelevant, unless evidence has been given that he has a good character, in which case it becomes relevant." Explanations 1 and 2 of section 54 provide that this section does not apply to cases in which the bad character of any person is itself a fact in issue and that in such cases a previous conviction is relevant notwithstanding such evidence amounting to evidence of bad character. E.R.S.R. Coomaraswamy in "The Law of Evidence" (Volume I, page 684) has aptly summarized the position of the law in this regard in the following manner: "Section 54 lays down the general rule that in criminal proceedings, the fact that the accused has a bad character is irrelevant, except in exceptional cases mentioned therein. Evidence may not be given of the accused's previous convictions and misconduct on other occasions for the purpose of supporting an argument that he is the kind of person who would commit the crime charged. As Wigmore puts it, "the rule, then, firmly and universally established in policy and tradition is that the prosecution may not initially attack the defendant's character"." Lord Sumner in Thompson v. Rex [(1918) A.C. 232] has held that, "no one doubts that it does not tend to prove a man guilty of a particular crime to show that he is the kind of man who would commit a crime or that he is generally disposed to crime and even to a particular crime'. In Makin v. Attorney General for New South Wales [(1894) A.C. 57] it has been held by Lord Herschell that, it is not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused had been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment, for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that he is likely, from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence, for which he is being tried.

This is not a case where the character of the accused was a fact in issue. Indeed, in such cases, evidence relating to the bad character of the accused can be presented by the prosecution. Nor had the accused acting in terms of section 52 of the Evidence Ordinance presented to court evidence of his good character. In such instances, evidence amounting to the bad character of the accused can be presented to rebut the evidence presented on behalf of the accused. Thus, neither of these two situations are applicable.

The third situation whether the presentation of evidence which may amount to evidence of bad character may be relevant, would be instances where the prosecution seeks to present evidence in terms of sections 14 or 15 of the Evidence Ordinance for the purpose of establishing the existence of a particular state of mind of the accused at the time of committing of the offence which would constitute the means rea of the offence, or for the purpose of establishing a state of body or bodily feeling. Towards this objective evidence which may amount to bad character of the accused may be led, as well as evidence of similar occurrences involving the accused, commonly referred to as system evidence. Illustrations "(a)", "(b)" and "(c)" of section 14 and illustration "(c)" of section 15 provide ample illustration of this principle of evidence. However, in such situations too, evidence which amounts to bad character of the accused would be permitted by court only in exceptional circumstances if the prosecution can show a high degree of probative force in such evidence, the principle being that the court should protect the accused against the consequential prejudicial impact arising out of such evidence of bad character.

The fourth and the final circumstances under which evidence which may amount to bad character of the accused may be relevant, would be for the purpose of establishing the 'cause' and the 'motive' for the committing of an offence, which would be relevant in terms of sections 7 and 8(1) of the Evidence Ordinance, respectively. Illustration "(a)" of section 8 which provides that, "when 'A' is tried for the murder of 'B', the facts that 'A' murdered 'C', that 'B' knew that 'A' had murdered 'C', and that 'B' had tried to extort money from 'A' by threatening to make his knowledge public, are relevant", amply exemplifies the position of the law in this regard. However, even when evidence which may amount to bad character of the accused is sought to be presented by the prosecution as means of establishing the 'cause' and or the 'motive' for committing the offence, the trial Court must exercise great caution in ensuring that the probative value of such evidence outweighs its prejudicial effect.

It would be seen that the circumstances cited above by the learned Senior State Counsel which in any event has not been presented as 'evidence' before the learned Magistrate, do not come within any of the four situations described above, which make evidence of bad character relevant and admissible. Therefore, consideration of such factors submitted by the learned Senior State Counsel would be obnoxious to the law and hence this court refrains from doing so.

Impugned judgments of the High Court and the Magistrate's Court

It is a matter of regret that the learned Magistrate who found the Appellant guilty as charged in respect of all three offences, has not considered the evidence led by the prosecution from the perspective of the ingredients of the offences the Appellant had been charged with. After arriving at determinations regarding the credibility and testimonial trustworthiness of the witnesses who testified at the trial, a trial judge must necessarily consider the evidence from the perspective of the constituent ingredients of the offence the accused has been charged with. Having identified witnesses who are credible, the trial judge must conclude whether their testimony is trustworthy. He must thereafter apply the evidence emanating from such credible and trustworthy witnesses, to the ingredients of the offence, and consider and arrive at a conclusion on whether the available evidence would be sufficient to prove the ingredients of the offence. If following a consideration of the evidence for the prosecution, the learned trial judge arrives at an affirmative finding, he must thereafter consider the totality of the evidence presented by both the prosecution and the defence and determine whether the prosecution has proved its case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt.

The learned High Court judge has proceeded on the footing that, the Appellant had by tendering the cheque and giving an undertaking to the virtual complainant that the amount obtained as a loan would be returned as promised, had thereby created a belief in the mind of the virtual complainant that the money would be returned, and had therefore committed the offence of cheating. The learned High Court judge has also not considered the impact arising out of the pre-existing confidence / trust the virtual complainant had towards the Appellant. Nor has the learned High Court Judge considered whether the conduct of the Appellant amounted to deception, whether it was such deceptive conduct which resulted in the virtual complainant giving the money to the Appellant, and whether the Appellant entertained a dishonest intention.

In view of the foregoing, I answer the questions of law presented to this Court in the following manner:

(i) The Provincial High Court had failed to analyse whether the evidence led at the trial justifies the conclusion that the Appellant entertained the requisite mens rea of the offence of cheating, which in view of the manner in which the charge had been framed and the evidence presented by the prosecution was a dishonest intention.

(ii) The Provincial High Court had failed to analyze and conclude that the virtual complainant had not been deceived by the impugned conduct of the Appellant, which is a necessary ingredient to constitute a charge of cheating.

In view of the above, I conclude that both the judgments of the High Court and the Magistrate's Court are against the weight of the evidence and are not lawful.

In the circumstances, I allow this Appeal. Accordingly, I acquit the Appellant of the charge of cheating.

Mahinda Samayawardhena, J.

The two Plaintiffs filed this action in the District Court of Kegalle seeking to partition the land described in the schedule to the plaint among the two Plaintiffs, the 1st and 6th to 10th Defendants. Of all the Defendants, only the 1st and 2nd Defendants filed a joint statement of claim. At the trial, apart from the Plaintiffs, the 2nd to 5th Defendants raised issues. Upon conclusion of the trial, the learned District Judge delivered the Judgment partitioning the land depicted in the Preliminary Plan in accordance with the pedigree set out by the Plaintiffs. The appeal filed by the 2nd to 5th Defendants against this Judgment to the High Court of Civil Appeal was dismissed. Hence the appeal to this Court by the 2nd to 5th Defendants. This Court granted leave to appeal on the question whether the Plaintiffs have properly identified the land to be partitioned.

In a partition action, if the corpus cannot be identified, ipso facto, the action shall fail. If the corpus cannot be identified, there is no necessity to investigate title, as title shall be investigated on an identifiable portion of land. The Court shall not first investigate title and then look for the land to be partitioned. It shall happen vice versa. The finding that the corpus has not been identified decides the fate of the case without further ado, this finding shall only be reached after careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances of the case, and not as a convenient method to summarily dispose of long-drawn-out partition actions without analysing the complicated pedigrees set forth by the parties to the action.

A partition action cannot be filed to partition a portion of the land. The entire land should be brought into the action and the co-owners of the whole corpus should be made parties.

In the instant action, as described in the schedule to the plaint, the land sought by the Plaintiffs to be partitioned is as follows:

> The amalgamated land called Egodawatta and Batalawatta situated at Ampe in Kandupita Pattu of Beligal Korale of Kegalle District in the Sabaragamuwa Province and bounded on the North by Paddy Field, East by Paddy Field, South by Limit of Galpathage Watta, and West by Ditch and Stone Fence, and containing in extent 15 Lahas of paddy sowing area.

In terms of section 16(1) of the Partition Law, the Court issued a commission to survey the land and prepare the Preliminary Plan depicting the said land sought to be partitioned. The Preliminary Plan together with the Report was received by Court in 1991. In the Preliminary Plan, the land surveyed is described in the following manner:

> The amalgamated land called Egodawatta and Batalawatta situated at Ampe in Kandupita Pattu of Beligal Korale of Kegalle District in the Sabaragamuwa Province and bounded on the North by Madugahamula Kanati and Aswaddume Paddy field, East by Aswaddume Paddy field and Gamsabha road, South by Millagahamula Watta alias Hitinawatta, and West by Madugahamula Kanati and Paddy field containing in extent 1 acre, 1 rood and 32 perches.

In the Report to the Preliminary Plan, the surveyor records that at the survey the 2nd Defendant informed him that a portion of the land on the western boundary should be included in the corpus. However the 2nd Defendant did not show the portion which shall be included in the corpus to the surveyor. Neither was such an application made to Court.

According to section 16(2) of the Partition Law, on the application of a defendant, the Court can direct the surveyor to survey any larger or smaller land than that pointed out by the Plaintiff to him.

Section 16(2) reads as follows:

> The commission issued to a surveyor under subsection (1) of this section shall be substantially in the form set out in the Second Schedule to this Law and shall have attached thereto a copy of the plaint certified as a true copy by the registered attorney for the Plaintiff.
>
> The court may, on such terms as to costs of survey or otherwise, issue a commission at the instance of any party to the action, authorizing the surveyor to survey any larger or smaller land than that pointed out by the Plaintiff where such party claims that such survey is necessary for the adjudication of the action.

Perhaps in consideration of the said observation made by the surveyor in his Report, the Court granted at least eight specific dates for consideration of the Preliminary Plan prior to the 1st and 2nd Defendants filing their statement of claim in 1994. But none of the Defendants took steps to take out a commission to prepare an alternative Plan to show the portion of land purportedly excluded in the Preliminary Plan.

As I mentioned earlier, only the 1st and 2nd Defendants filed a joint statement of claim. The 3rd to 5th Defendants informed the Court that they would abide by the statement of claim filed by the 1st and 2nd Defendants.

In the second paragraph of the statement of claim of the 1st and 2nd Defendants, it is repeated that the entire land to be partitioned is not depicted in the Preliminary Plan, as a portion of the land on the western boundary has been left out. However, even in the statement of claim, the 1st and 2nd Defendants do not specify the excluded portion or at least the extent of it.

This is against section 19(2) of the Partition Law which lays down the detailed procedure to be followed by a Defendant who seeks to have a larger land partitioned. In short, such a defendant shall take all the steps afresh that a plaintiff in a partition action shall take, which include compliance with the provisions of sections 12-18 of the Partition Law. No such steps were taken by the 2nd-5th Defendants.

Section 19(2) reads as follows:

> 19(2)(a) Where a defendant seeks to have a larger land than that sought to be partitioned by the Plaintiff made the subject-matter of the action in order to obtain a decree for the partition or, sale of such larger land under the provisions of this Law, his statement of claim shall include a statement of the particulars required by section 4 in respect of such larger land; and he shall comply with the requirements of section 5, as if his statement of claim were a plaint under this Law in respect of such larger land.

(b) Where any defendant seeks to have a larger land made the subject-matter of the action as provided in paragraph (a) of this subsection, the court shall specify the party to the action by whom and the date on or before which an application for the registration of the action as a lis pendens affecting such larger land shall be filed in court, and the estimated costs of survey of such larger land as determined by court shall be deposited in court.

(c) Where the party specified under paragraph (b) of this subsection fails to comply with the requirements of that paragraph, the court shall make order rejecting the claim to make the larger land the subject-matter of the action, unless any other party, in whose statement of claim a similar claim shall have been set up, shall comply therewith on or before the date specified in paragraph (b) or within such extended period of time that the court may, on the application of any such party, fix for the purpose.

(d) After the action is registered as a lis pendens affecting the larger land and the estimated costs of the survey of the larger land have been deposited in court, the court shall-

> (i) add as parties to the action all persons disclosed in the statement of claim of the party at whose instance the larger land is being made the subject-matter of the action as being persons who ought to be included as parties to an action in respect of such larger land under section 5; and

(ii) proceed with the action as though it had been instituted in respect of such larger land; and for that purpose, fix a date on or before which the party specified under paragraph (b) of this subsection shall, or any other interested party may, comply with the requirements of section 12 in relation to the larger land as hereinafter modified.

(e) Where the larger land is made the subject-matter of the action, the provisions of sections 12, 13, 14 and 15 shall, mutatis mutandis, apply as if the statement of claim of the party seeking a partition or sale of the larger land were the plaint in the action; and-

(i) such party shall with his declaration under section 12, in lieu of an amended statement of claim, file an amended caption including therein as parties to the action all persons not mentioned in his statement of claim, but who should be made parties to an action for the larger land under section 5, and such amended caption shall be deemed for all purposes to be the caption to his statement of claim in the action;

(ii) summons shall be issued on all persons added as parties under paragraph (d) of this subsection and all persons included as necessary parties under sub-paragraph (i) hereof;

(iii) notice of the action in respect of the larger land shall be issued on all parties to the action in the original plaint together with a copy of the statement of claim referred to above;

(iv) the provisions of section 20 shall apply to new claimants or parties disclosed thereafter.

(f) If the party specified by the court under paragraph (b) of this subsection or any other interested party fails or neglects to comply with the provisions of section 12, as hereinbefore modified on or before the date specified in that paragraph, the court may make order dismissing the action in respect of the larger land.

(g) Where the requirements of section 12 as hereinbefore modified are complied with, the court shall order summonses and notices of action as provided in paragraph (e) of this subsection to issue and shall also order the issue of a commission for the survey of the larger land, and the provisions of sections 16, 17 and 18 shall accordingly apply in relation to such survey.

Although at the outset the 1st and 2nd Defendants filed a joint statement of claim, the 1st Defendant seems to have later accepted the Preliminary Plan and the pedigree of the Plaintiffs.

Ultimately, on the seventh date of trial, the 2nd to 5th Defendants made an application to Court to issue a commission for an alternative Plan. Notwithstanding this was a belated application, the Court took the case out of the trial roll and directed the said Defendants to take steps to issue the commission. However no steps were taken, and on the commission returnable date the said Defendants informed the Court that an alternative Plan was not necessary. Such was the nature of the complaint of the 2nd to 5th Defendants.

The 2nd to 5th Defendants raised issues at the trial. The first issue was whether the land to be partitioned was depicted in the Preliminary Plan and, if not, whether the Plaintiffs could maintain this action. The District Court answered this issue against the said Defendants. This issue was not specific and shall be understood in line with the second paragraph of the statement of claim of the 1st and 2nd Defendants, where they state that the entire land to be partitioned was not depicted in the Preliminary Plan because a portion on the western boundary had not been brought into the action.

It is significant to note that the complaint of the 2nd to 5th Defendants is not that a different land was surveyed but that the entire land was not surveyed; or, to be more specific, that a portion on the western boundary was not surveyed.

At the trial, the Preliminary Plan and the Report were marked X and X1 respectively by the 1st Plaintiff, without objection. Notwithstanding that the 2nd to 5th Defendants did not take out a commission for an alternative Plan, if they still had some concerns that a portion of the land had been left out by the surveyor, they could have summoned the surveyor to give evidence. This was not done.

Section 18(1) deals with the return of the surveyor's commission after the preliminary survey.

Section 18(2) states inter alia that the Preliminary Plan and Report may be used as evidence without further proof subject to the surveyor being summoned to give oral testimony on the application of any party to the action.

Section 18(2) of the Partition Law reads as follows:

The documents referred to in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of subsection (1) of this section may, without further proof, be used as evidence of the facts stated or appearing therein at any stage of the partition action:

Provided that the court shall, on the application of any party to the action and on such terms as may be determined by the court, order that the surveyor shall be summoned and examined orally on any point or matter arising on, or in connection with, any such document or any statement of fact therein or any relevant fact which is alleged by any party to have been omitted therefrom.

Let me now consider on what basis the 2nd to 5th Defendants state that a portion of the land on the western boundary is not included in the corpus. As I stated earlier, this was not addressed in the statement of claim but is discernible by going through the questions put to the 1st Plaintiff by learned Counsel for the 2nd to 5th Defendants during the course of the cross examination in the District Court. The 1st Plaintiff was cross examined by learned Counsel for the 2nd to 5th Defendants on the extent of the land to be partitioned. The cross examination was based on the premise that in the area where the land to be partitioned is situated (at Ampe in Kegalle), 8 lahas of paddy sowing area is equal to 1 acre. This was also emphasised in the written submissions tendered to the District Court after the conclusion of the trial. The 1st Plaintiff admitted this during the course of the cross examination.

The 1st Plaintiff in his evidence in chief described the boundaries of the schedule to the plaint as the land surveyed by the surveyor. These are the same boundaries which are stated in all the title deeds of the Plaintiff. They are P1 executed in 1961, P2 executed in 1980, P3 executed in 1939, P4 executed in 1927, and P5 executed in 1929. It is significant to note that all the deeds marked by the 2nd to 5th Defendants carry the same boundaries. They are 1V1 executed in 1965, 1V2 executed in 1980, 3V1 executed in 1988, 4V1 executed in 1988, 5V1 executed in 1965, and 5V2 executed in 1988.

The extent of the land as described in the old deeds (for instance, P5 executed in 1929) is 15 lahas of paddy sowing area. The schedule to the plaint is a reproduction of the land described in these old deeds. Without surveyor Plans being available, the extent of the land given in these old deeds is speculative. Hence it was a common occurrence at that time for a deed to purport to convey either much more or much less than what a person was entitled to.

According to the above conversion (i.e. 8 lahas of paddy sowing area being equal to 1 acre in that area), it was the position of the 2nd to 5th Defendants before the District Court that the Preliminary Plan shall depict a land little less than 2 acres but instead depicts a land only in extent of 1 acre, 1 rood and 32 perches. It is on this basis the said Defendants took up the position that only a part of the land was surveyed by the surveyor.

However, the position of the learned President's Counsel for the 2nd to 5th Defendants before this Court is contradictory. His position before this Court is that according to the accepted Sinhala land measures, as cited in Ratnayake v. Kumarihamy [2002] 1 Sri LR 64 at 80, 7 lahas is equal to 1 bushel, and 1 bushel being 2 roods, 14 lahas is equal to 4 roods or 1 acre.

According to this conversion, learned President's Counsel submits that 15 lahas would be a little over one acre, viz. 1 acre and 12 perches, but the surveyor surveyed a land of 1 acre, 1 rood and 32 perches, a land in excess of the land to be partitioned, and therefore there is a serious question as to the identification of the corpus.

This is a textbook case for highlighting the unreliability in comparing ancient land measures with English standard equivalents.

In Ratnayake v. Kumarihamy (supra), the Plaintiff filed a partition action seeking to partition a land of 4 lahas of kurakkan sowing extent. The extent of the land shown in the Preliminary Plan was 8 acres, 1 rood and 16 perches, which the contesting Defendants contended was far in excess of the extent described in the schedule to the plaint. Counsel for the Defendants contended that the English equivalent to the customary Sinhala measure of 1 laha of kurakkan sowing extent is 1 acre, and the Preliminary Plan depicted a land more than double the correct extent. However upon consideration of the totality of the evidence led in the case, the District Court held, and the Court of Appeal affirmed, that the land described in the Preliminary Plan was the land described in the schedule to the plaint, notwithstanding that it did not correspond to the traditional Sinhala measurement. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the Judgment of the Court of Appeal, which is reported in Ratnayake v. Kumarihamy [2005] 1 Sri LR 303. Udalagama J. in the Supreme Court stated at 307-308:

> I would also reiterate the observations of the President of the Court of Appeal in the impugned judgment that land > measures computed on the basis of land required to be sown with Kurakkan vary from district to district depending on the fertility of soil and quality of grain and in the said circumstances difficult to correlate the sowing extent with accuracy. Thus there cannot be a definite basis for the contention that 1 Laha sowing extent be it Kurakkan or even paddy would be equivalent to 1 acre.

This is a common issue confronted by Judges and Lawyers in partition actions where the extent of the land in old deeds is given by way of traditional land measures based on paddy or kurakkan sowing extent without reference to a Plan. The Plaintiff reproduces in the schedule to the plaint the schedule to the old deeds prepared decades if not centuries ago as the land to be partitioned. The surveyor commissioned to prepare the Preliminary Plan records the existing boundaries of the land, not the old boundaries stated in the schedule to the plaint. The surveyor further records the extent of the land in English standard measures and not ancient land measures. The difficulties arise when the traditional land measures are compared with the English standard equivalents. The common conversion tables found in various sources are unreliable.

If I may reiterate what has already been stated by experienced Judges in the past, it is not possible to correlate sowing extents accurately with surface extents. Such a correlation depends on various factors such as the size and quality of the grain, the fertility of the soil, the peculiarities of the sower and local conditions (e.g. the violence of the wind at the time of sowing and the water supply to the sowing area). In unfertile soil the seed would be sown thicker than in fertile soil. An inexperienced sower would scatter seeds unevenly, thereby requiring more seeds than an experienced sower. If the quality of the grain, be it paddy or kurakkan, is poor, more grain would be necessary than if the quality were high. It is also relevant to note that the sizes (the capacity) of the traditional measures such as lahas and neliyas differ not only between districts but also within districts.

In addition to the 2nd to 5th Defendants disputing the identification of the corpus by making a comparison between sowing extent and surface area, the said Defendants attempted before the High Court and this Court to add another string to their bow when they stated that, of the four boundaries shown in the Preliminary Plan, two boundaries differ from the boundaries given in the title deeds. I must mention that this is an afterthought. This was not in their contemplation when they filed their statement of claim (after the Preliminary Plan had been tendered to Court).

As I have already emphasised, the boundaries in the schedule to the plaint are given as stated in the deeds of which the first one was executed as far back as 1927. The land was surveyed to prepare the Preliminary Plan in 1991, i.e. 64 years after the execution of the first deed produced in the case. The 2nd to 5th Defendants admit that the northern and eastern boundaries as stated in the deeds correspond with those in the Preliminary Plan. But they say the southern and western boundaries do not match. This argument on boundaries, similar to the argument on the extent of the land, is unsustainable.

The 3rd and 5th Defendants gave evidence on behalf of the 2nd to 5th Defendants. The 5th Defendant in his evidence in chief did not speak about the boundaries or the extent of the land. In fact, in the cross examination he admitted that the land described in the schedule to the plaint is the land in suit, which means it is the land depicted in the Preliminary Plan.

The 3rd Defendant in her evidence in chief stated that a portion on the western boundary was not included in the corpus. I have already dealt with this matter to a certain extent.

Let me first deal with the southern boundary. According to the deeds, the southern boundary is "the limit (boundary) of Galpathage Watta". According to the Preliminary Plan, the southern boundary is Millagahamula Watta alias Hitina Watta. The 3rd Defendant in her cross examination accepted that Millagahamula Watta alias Hitina Watta and Galpathage Watta are one and the same land. Learned President's Counsel for the 2nd to 5th Defendants submits that the 3rd Defendant did not make a spontaneous admission to this effect and the said answer was only in response to a leading question put to her during the cross-examination. I am unable to accept this submission. The same question has been asked or suggested more than once.

Even assuming there was no such admission, it is noteworthy that in the old deeds the southern boundary is identified by the owner of the land and not by the name of the land. Galpathage Watta means "the land belonging to Galpatha". In the Preliminary Plan, the surveyor records the existing boundaries. Galpatha, who is mentioned in the old deeds, would not have been among the living at the time of the survey, and his descendants and successors would have been in possession of the land to the south of the land to be partitioned. Instead of giving the names of the present owners of the land on the southern boundary, the surveyor has recorded the name of the land. This discrepancy cannot be interpreted as the southern boundary in the Preliminary Plan being different from the boundary of the title deeds.

The same principle applies to the western boundary. The old title deeds identify the western boundary as "Ditch and Stone Fence". In the Preliminary Plan prepared 64 years after the first known deed executed in 1927, the surveyor identifies the western boundary as Madugahamula Kanati (the name of the land) and the Paddy Field. This does not necessarily mean there is a discrepancy in the western boundary. The name of the land to the western boundary is not given in the old deeds. The ditch and the stone fence which existed many moons ago cannot be expected to have remained unchanged when the surveyor went to the land more than 64 years after the execution of the first known deed. Furthermore, the stone fence indicates that there were two lands separated by a fence in 1927.

It is a grave error to conclude in partition actions that the identification of the corpus is not established upon a mere superficial comparison of the schedule to the plaint, which is a reproduction of the schedules to old deeds, with the existing boundaries as depicted in the Preliminary Plan. Boundaries do not remain unchanged. They change over the years due to various factors, be it natural or man-made. Whether or not the Preliminary Plan represents the land described in the schedule to the plaint shall be determined upon a consideration of the totality of the evidence led in the case and not solely by such a comparison.

Learned President's Counsel for the 2nd to 5th Defendants makes another point to contend that the land to be partitioned has not been properly identified. This relates to the Survey Report tendered to Court together with the Preliminary Plan. The surveyor has not stated in the Report that the land surveyed by him is in his opinion substantially the same as the land sought to be partitioned as described in the schedule to the plaint. Section 18(1)(a)(i)-(viii) of the Partition Law sets out the several items which shall be included in the Report. Section 18(1)(a)(iii) refers to the above requirement. In the Report relevant to this case, both this question and the answer are not there. This is different from leaving the question unanswered or answering the question in the negative. It is not clear whether the surveyor failed to mention it by mistake in his handwritten Report. It may have even been intentional since the 2nd Defendant had told the surveyor that a portion of the land to the west should be included in the corpus and the surveyor was awaiting further directions. Without raising this issue for the first time in this Court, the 2nd to 5th Defendants should have raised it in the District Court when the Court granted the parties a number of dates for consideration of the Preliminary Plan. I accept that the surveyor shall record the above-stated question and answer it in the Report. (Sopaya Silva v. Magilin Silva [1989] 2 Sri LR 105) However, failure to answer this question or answering it in the negative shall not be decisive. In other words, the Court cannot dismiss a partition action on the basis that the surveyor in his Report to the Preliminary Plan has failed to answer or answered in the negative the question "Whether or not the land surveyed by him is in his opinion substantially the same as the land sought to be partitioned as described in the schedule to the plaint". Nor can the Court blindly accept that the Preliminary Plan depicts the entire land to be partitioned, if the surveyor in his Report answers the above question in the affirmative. Whether or not the land has been correctly identified shall be finally decided not by the surveyor but by the Court having taken into consideration the totality of the evidence adduced before it. The answer to the said question by the surveyor is undoubtedly an important item of evidence but it cannot decide the whole case.

I must also add that in terms of section 16(2) of the Partition Law, together with the commission a copy of the plaint shall also be sent to the surveyor. In the commission issued in this action, the surveyor was directed to survey the land described in the schedule to the plaint and prepare the Preliminary Plan accordingly. Although the surveyor failed to answer the question required by section 18(1)(a)(iii), he states in the Report that he executed the commission in terms of the directions given. This means what is depicted in the Preliminary Plan is the land described in the schedule to the plaint. This observation shall not be taken as licence for Court Commissioners to be remiss in their duties in sending Reports to Court in partition actions.

In the facts and circumstances of this case, I hold that the land to be partitioned as stated in the schedule to the plaint is depicted in the Preliminary Plan. The corpus has been properly identified. I answer the question of law in respect of which leave was granted in the affirmative.

The Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mahinda Samayawardhena, J.

The two Plaintiffs filed this action against the three Defendants seeking a declaration that the land in suit is being held in trust by the Defendants for the two Plaintiffs and the two minor children of the 2nd Plaintiff. At the trial, the Defendants raised a preliminary question of law to the maintainability of the action on the premise that the alleged cause of action of the Plaintiffs is prescribed in law. The District Court held that the cause of action is not prescribed. It also stated in passing that in any event, prescription does not run against the two minors. The case was refixed for further trial.

On appeal, the High Court held that the action against the two Plaintiffs is prescribed but not against the two minors, and therefore the Order of the District Court is correct.

The Plaintiffs did not appeal against this Judgment but the Defendants did. This Court granted leave to appeal on the question whether the High Court erred in law when it decided to allow the action to proceed on the basis that prescription does not run against the two minors when the alleged minors are not parties to the case.

The Plaintiffs have not made the minors parties to the action notwithstanding they seek Judgment in favour of themselves and the minors. The Court knows nothing about the two alleged minors – not even their names, gender or age. Without any information, how can the Court pronounce Judgment in favour or against the minors?

When the High Court decided that the action of the two Plaintiffs is prescribed and the two Plaintiffs accepted that decision by not appealing against it, the Plaintiffs have no locus standi to maintain this action. After the above finding, there is no live action.

If the Plaintiffs want to maintain the action on behalf of the alleged two minors, there is a special procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code to follow. No such procedure was followed by the Plaintiffs in this case.

According to section 476 of the Civil Procedure Code, every action by a minor shall be instituted in the name of the minor by an adult person who in such action shall be designated in the plaint as the next friend of the minor. Section 477 of the Civil Procedure Code is also to similar effect. Such particulars shall appear in the caption of the pleadings.

In this case, the minors have not been named as Plaintiffs nor are they represented in Court through a next friend.

It shall be noted that any adult person cannot file a case on behalf of a minor with or without declaring himself the next friend. The appointment of next friend shall be made by the Court. The legislature in its wisdom has introduced such a procedure to safeguard the interests of minors.

According to section 481 of the Civil Procedure Code, a person of sound mind and full age is eligible to be appointed next friend of a minor, if his interest is not adverse to that of the minor and he is not a Defendant in the action. Such appointment has to be made on application by way of summary procedure supported by affidavit showing the required qualifications. The Defendant shall be made Respondent to the application, and the minor shall appear in Court when the application is made unless prevented by good cause.

For the purpose of disposing of this appeal, there is no necessity to analyse all the provisions in law with regard to next friends, but suffice it to say that the Civil Procedure Code inter alia provides for the removal of next friends.

The brief outline above goes to show that unless there is a formal appointment made by Court, a person cannot represent a minor in Court in the guise of safeguarding the interests of the minor. What I stated above is applicable when an action is filed by a minor.

The same is true when an action is filed against a minor, in which event the Court shall, under section 479 of the Civil Procedure Code, appoint an adult as guardian to defend the action on behalf of the minor.

The High Court was in error when it held that the Plaintiffs can continue with the action (despite their action being prescribed) as the reliefs have also been prayed on behalf of the minors. I answer the question of law in respect of which leave was granted in the affirmative.

The Judgment of the High Court insofar as it allowed the Plaintiffs to continue with the action on behalf of the minors is set aside and the appeal is allowed. The Plaintiffs' action in the District Court shall stand dismissed. The Defendants are entitled to costs in all three Courts.

P. Padman Surasena J

The Plaintiff - Appellant - Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiffs) filed the plaint dated 17-04-2012 in the District Court of Negombo praying inter alia for a declaration that the Defendant-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant) is not entitled to use as a right of way, Lot 5 and Lot 4 depicted in Plan No. 1177 dated 13-04-1982, prepared by R. I. Fernando Licensed Surveyor (hereinafter referred to as the Plan No. 1177). The said Lots are more fully described respectively in the 5th and 6th schedules to the plaint. According to the Plan No. 1177, the said Lots 5 and 4 jointly make a roadway to gives access to Lots 2 and 3 depicted in the same Plan, from St. Joseph's Street.

The 1st Plaintiff occupies Lot 1; the 2nd Plaintiff occupies Lot 2; and the Defendant occupies Lot 3 depicted in the said Plan. The said plan is a partition plan (surveyed and partitioned on 13-04-1982) prepared to partition then existed larger land called Beligahawatta amongst the three co-owners (siblings) at that time. The said three co-owners were firstly, Kurukulasuriya Maria Hema Celsia Fernando (the 1st Plaintiff), secondly, Kurukulasuriya Philip Antony Roshan Fernando and thirdly, Kurukulasuriya Micheal Joseph Rohan Fernando. The said three co-owners are the children of Kurukulasuriya Micheal Fester Fernando (father) and Kurukulasuriya Mary Melverin Florence Fernando (mother) who had owned the said larger land by virtue of deed No. 5121 attested on 02-05-1956 by P.D.F.de Croos Notary Public.

After the partition plan No. 1177 was prepared, the three co-owners executed the Deed of Partition bearing No. 404 dated19-02-1983, attested by M John Andrew Fabian Tissera Notary Public. According to the plaint, by virtue of the said Deed of Partition No. 404, the 1st Plaintiff became the owner of Lot 1; Kurukulasuriya Philip Antony Roshan Fernando became the owner of Lot No. 2; and Kurukulasuriya Micheal Joseph Rohan Fernando became the owner of Lot No. 3.

Thereafter, Kurukulasuriya Philip Antony Roshan Fernando by virtue of deed No, 42 attested on 16-08-1994 by G. A. L. Palitha Dammika Silva Notary Public, transferred Lot 2, to the 1st Plaintiff.

Thereafter the 1st Plaintiff transferred the said Lot 2, to her daughter (the 2nd Plaintiff) by deed No. 2875 attested on 17-05-2005 by7 M. J. Basil A Tissera Notary Public.

Kurukulasuriya Micheal Joseph Rohan Fernando Transferred Lot 3 to Kaluarachchige Ignatious Loyola Rodrigo and Wimalawathie Sangaraja by deed No. 1699 attested on 23-03-1993 by M. J. Basil A Tissera Notary Public. Thereafter, said Kaluarachchige Ignatious Loyola Rodrigo transferred his interest in Lot No. 3 to Wimalawathie Sangaraja by deed No. 1919 attested on 06-12-1994 by M.J. Basil A Tissera Notary Public which made said Wimalawathie Sangaraja the sole owner of said Lot 3. Thereafter, said Wimalawathie Sangaraja transferred Lot 3 to the Defendant by virtue of deed No. 87279 attested on 18-01-2007 by Jayasekara Abeyruwan Notary Public making the Defendant the present owner of Lot 3.[1]

The said sub division was done in such a way that only the Lot 1 would have a road frontage from St. Joseph's Street, and the remaining two blocks (Lots 2 and 3) would get access from St. Joseph's Street through Lot 5 and Lot 4 reserved as a road way in the Plan No. 1177 at the time of the said sub division. Thus, when coming from St. Joseph's Street, the first block of land one would meet, would be Lot 1; the second block would be Lot 2; and the last block would be Lot 3. The Defendant is the person who at the moment occupies the last block i.e., Lot 3. The above facts make it clear that both the Plaintiffs and the Defendant derive their respective titles from one and the same source.

While the case was pending in the District Court, the Plaintiffs filed the Petition dated 25-07-2013 supported by an affidavit,[2] praying for an enjoining order in the first instance and an interim injunction, to prevent the Defendant or her agents or servants from using or obstructing the aforesaid roadway. The Plaintiffs in their Petition have prayed inter alia;

a) for an enjoining order in the first place, preventing the Defendant from using the land strip Lot 4 depicted in Plan No. 1177 as a right of way; preventing the Defendant from bringing any vehicle on to the said land strip; preventing the Defendant from placing or storing any other object on the said land strip;
b) for an interim injunction thereafter, preventing the Defendant from using the land strip Lot 4 depicted in Plan No. 1177 as a right of way; preventing the Defendant from

[1] As has been pointed out by the learned District Judge at page 3 of his order, there appear to be some confusion in mentioning the Lot No.'s in the plaint.
[2] The date of swearing the affidavit has not been inserted (only the month & the year has been inserted).

bringing any vehicle on to the said land strip; preventing the Defendant from placing or storing any other object on the said land strip;

Strangely, the Plaintiffs for the reasons best known to them, had not sought/prayed to restrain the Defendant from using Lot 5 as a road. The learned District Judge having granted the enjoining order as prayed for, subsequently by his order dated 19-09-2014 refused to grant the interim order, and proceeded to dissolve the enjoining order subject to a cost of Rs. 17,500.

On an appeal, the Provincial High Court by its judgment dated 08-02-2019, had set aside the order of the learned District Judge and directed that the interim injunction be issued; hence the Defendant has preferred this appeal.

Upon the Appellant supporting the application for leave to appeal relevant to this appeal, this Court by its order dated 16-03-2021, had granted leave to appeal on three questions of law,[3] which are to the following effect;

a. whether the High Court has failed to appreciate that the order made by the District court refusing to grant interim injunction had been made upon a detailed analysis of the principles of law and the matters adduced in respect of establishing a prima facie fair chance of winning the action, the balance of convenience, and the equitable considerations;
b. whether the High Court had come to its conclusions without any evaluation, analysis or examination of the findings of the District court and without making its determination as to those findings of the District court;
c. whether the High Court has failed to appreciate that there was no peril of any damage being caused to the roofs of the buildings of the Plaintiffs by the mere user of the said access path by the Defendant.

At the outset, I must mention that I find it difficult to follow and understand any rationale in the judgment of the learned High Court Judge. I also have to say that no lawful reason for setting aside the learned District Judge's order, is discernible from the judgment of the learned High Court Judge. However, if at all there is some reason, that must be found in the following two paragraphs because only those two paragraphs, have indicated something resembling such a reason.

[3] Questions of law set out in paragraph 12 (ii), (iii), (iv) of the petition dated 21-03-2019.

> "In this case, even if Lots No. 4 and 5 are not permitted for the Defendant to use, it does not prejudice her as she has another road. This entire case is to determine whether Defendants have the right for Lots No. 4 and 5 that will be the final decision of the case. Therefore, that will be a part of the final decision. Until then, if Lots No. 4 and 5 are permitted to be used by the Defendant, there will be an irreparable loss to the Plaintiff because they are already getting a final remedy.
> According to the Plaint, it might damage to the roofs of buildings of the Plaintiffs. Therefore, it is best to maintain the status quo of granting a permanent injunction until the final determination of the case."

Although the Plaintiffs had only sought in their petition nothing more than an interim injunction, the learned Provincial High Court Judge (according to the second paragraph above), had granted a permanent injunction. However, in view of the qualification "until the final determination of the case" inserted soon thereafter, I would think that it is an interim injunction and hence would not proceed any further to discuss about that lapse in the Provincial High Court's judgment. Nevertheless, suffice it to say that the above lapse taken along with the illogical reasoning would still indicate the diligence with which the learned Provincial High Court Judge had dealt with this case.

The above two paragraphs of the judgment of the Provincial High Court indicates the followings as reasons.

i. 'Preventing the Defendant from using Lots No. 4 and 5 does not prejudice her as she has another road';
ii. 'Determination whether the Defendant has the right for Lots No. 4 and 5 will be the final decision of the case';
iii. 'If Lots No. 4 and 5 are permitted to be used by the Defendant, there will be an irreparable loss to the Plaintiff because they are already getting a final remedy';
iv. 'According to the Plaint, it might damage the roofs of buildings of the Plaintiffs'.

In the course of the argument, the learned counsel for the Defendant complained to this Court that the Plaintiffs had never complained to the District Court in their pleadings that there is a danger of damaging the roofs of the buildings of the Plaintiffs by the Defendant's use of the disputed roadway. Upon the aforesaid complaint, this Court requested the learned counsel for the Plaintiffs to point out any averment to that effect, in the pleadings of the Plaintiffs. However, the learned counsel for the Plaintiffs was unable to point out any such averment in the affidavit filed by the Plaintiffs along with the application for the interim injunction. Thus, the assertion by the learned High Court Judge that the usage of the disputed roadway by the Defendant, would damage the roofs of the buildings of the Plaintiffs, is not supported by any evidence and hence is a perverse conclusion. It is not a part of the case advanced by the Plaintiffs as no such averment is found in the Petition which prayed for the interim injunction. Thus, I see no factual or legal basis for the fourth reason mentioned above.

Neither party had moved Court at this stage to finally determine whether the Defendant has a right for Lots No. 4 and 5. Indeed neither the learned District Judge nor the learned High Court Judge has even attempted to decide that. Thus, the second reason given by the learned High Court Judge is a nonexistent reason.

As regards the first reason above, the learned High Court Judge appears to have been satisfied with the making of such a bare statement without any reference to any fact or any evidence as against the evaluation of the evidence adduced in the inquiry by the learned District Judge which has been set out in the District Court order. Thus, the assertion that the 'prevention of the use of Lots No.4 and 5 does not prejudice the Defendant as she has another road', is a misconception by the learned High Court Judge, which is not supported by evidence.

The third reason above, is a possibility of causing an irreparable loss to the Plaintiff. However, no one is able to ascertain what that irreparable loss would be, or how such a loss could be caused to the Plaintiffs, by the mere user of the disputed roadway by the Defendant.

The above observations would be sufficient for me to re-affirm my already mentioned view that there are no lawful reasons for setting aside the learned District Judge's order, discernible from the judgment of the learned High Court Judge. In my view that is sufficient to set aside the judgment of the Provincial High Court. However, I am mindful that the correctness of the refusal of the interim injunction by the learned District Judge would be another important consideration that should be addressed.

Before I proceed to consider the learned District Judge's order, let me glance through the law relating to Injunctions, focusing in particular on Interim Injunctions. Interim injunction is an equitable remedy and is not available as of right, such injunction will be granted at the discretion of the court. The effect and the purpose of such injunction is to preserve the status quo of the subject matter of the action until the final judgment is delivered. The Civil Procedure Code has dedicated its Chapter XLVIII for the procedure relating to applications for injunctions. Section 662 is the first section in that Chapter which is as follows.

> 662. Every application for an injunction for any of the purposes mentioned in section 54 of the Judicature Act, except in cases where an injunction is prayed for in a plaint in any action, shall be by petition, and shall be accompanied by an affidavit of the applicant or some other person having knowledge of the facts, containing a statement of the facts on which the application is based.

Section 662 is followed by few other sections in that Chapter and they form the procedure to be followed when an application for an injunction (for any of the purposes mentioned in section 54 of the Judicature Act), is made. As has been clearly stated in section 662, the 'purposes' for which such injunction may be obtained are set out in section 54 of the Judicature Act. The corollary of the above is that a Court can only grant such an injunction for the purposes set out in section 54 of the Judicature Act. This means that it is this section which vests Courts with jurisdiction to grant such injunctions.

In the case of Alubhay Vs Mohideen,[4] a case relating to an issuance of an interim injunction, De Sampayo J stated that it was section 87 of the Courts Ordinance No. 1 of 1889 which creates the jurisdiction of the Court to grant injunctions, and one must look to the Civil Procedure Code for the relevant procedure. Looking back at the recent legal history of the country, one could observe that the Courts Ordinance No. 1 of 1889 was replaced by the Administration of Justice Law No. 44 of 1973,[5] and the latter was in turn replaced by the Judicature Act No. 2 of 1978. This is why in Felix Dias Bandaranayake Vs. State Film Corporation and another,[6] Justice Soza stated that 'generally speaking section 54 of the Judicature Act No. 2 of 1978 is the jurisdictional section while sections 662, 664 and 666 of the Civil Procedure Code set out the procedure' for granting of injunctions. This concept has been long followed by our Courts. Thus, section 54 of the Judicature Act states the substantive law relating to injunctions in the following manner.

Section 54:

> (1) Where in any action instituted in a High Court, District Court or a Small Claims Court, it appears-

[4] 18 NLR 486.
[5] Jurisdiction to grant interim injunctions was in section 42 therein.

(a) from the plaint that the plaintiff demands and is entitled to a judgment against the defendant, restraining the commission or continuance of an act or nuisance, the commission or continuance of which would produce injury to the plaintiff; or

(b) that the defendant during the pendency of the action is doing or committing or procuring or suffering to be done or committed, or threatens or is about to do or procure or suffer to be done or committed, an act or nuisance in violation of the plaintiffs rights in respect of the subject matter of the action and tending to render the judgment ineffectual, or

(c) that the defendant during the pendency of the action threatens or is about to remove or dispose of his property with intent to defraud the plaintiff, the Court may, on its appearing by the affidavit of the plaintiff or any other person that sufficient grounds exist therefor, grant an injunction restraining any such defendant from-

(i) committing or continuing any such act or nuisance;

(ii) doing or committing any such act or nuisance;

(iii) removing or disposing of such property.

(2) For the purposes of this section, any defendant who shall have by his answer set up any claim in reconvention and shall thereupon demand an affirmative judgment against the plaintiff shall be deemed a plaintiff, and shall have the same right to an injunction as he would have in an action brought by him against the plaintiff for the cause of action stated in the claim in reconvention, and the plaintiff shall be deemed the defendant and the claim in reconvention the plaint.

(3) Such injunctions may be granted at any time after the commencement of the action and before final judgment after notice to the defendant, where the object of granting an injunction will be defeated by delay, the court may enjoin the defendant until the hearing and decision of the application for an injunction but for periods not exceeding fourteen days at a time.

The above section shows that a court may grant an injunction for one or more of the purposes set out in section 54 (1) under three limbs namely (a), (b), (c). While the aforesaid three limbs [(a), (b), (c)] set out the purposes for which injunctions may be granted, limbs (i), (ii) and (iii) appearing at the end of section 54 (1), set out what a Court can restrain by the issuance of an injunction. It is not accidentally that the same wordings found in the aforesaid three limbs [(a),

(b), (c)] have been incorporated in verbatim, in limbs (i), (ii) and (iii) appearing at the end of that section. This is why Justice Soza stated the following, in Felix Dias Bandaranayake case,[7]

> "It is necessary first of all to have a clear picture of the legal principles that are applicable to the question before us. The jurisdictional provisions have already been noted. This is an action instituted in the District Court and the application for an interim injunction was made at the time the plaint was filed. So section 54(1) (a) and (i) of the Judicature Act No. 2 of 1978 and sections 662 and 664 of the Civil Procedure Code apply. If it appears from the plaint that the plaintiff demands and is entitled to a judgment against the defendants, restraining the commission of an act or nuisance, which would produce injury to him the Court may, on its appearing by the affidavit of the plaintiff or any other person (and that would include the defendants as I have already pointed out) that sufficient grounds exist therefor, grant an interim injunction restraining the defendants from committing any such act or nuisance. The plaintiff must therefore have a clear legal right which is being infringed or about to be infringed. …"

The law, namely section 662 of the Civil Procedure Code as well as section 54 of the Judicature Act, make a clear distinction between an instance where an injunction has been prayed for in the plaint itself, and an instance where an injunction is sought in a petition filed subsequent to filing of the plaint. This is evident from the phrase "Every application for an injunction for any of the purposes mentioned in section 54 of the Judicature Act, except in cases where an injunction is prayed for in a plaint in any action, shall be by petition…" in section 662 of the Civil Procedure Code and the following phrase in section 54 of the Judicature Act;

> (a) from the plaint that the plaintiff demands and is entitled to a judgment against the defendant,…. (Emphasis is mine)

Thus, section 54(1)(a) applies to an instance where an injunction has been prayed for in the plaint itself. What an injunction issued in such a situation can restrain, is what has been stated in (i) appearing at the end of that section.

As the injunction in the instant case, was sought at a later stage after filing the plaint, it would be section 54(1)(b) and/or 54(1)(c) of the Judicature Act which would apply. This is also confirmed by the fact that both those limbs have the phrase 'during the pendency of the action' which denotes that both the 'act or nuisance' referred to in section 54(1)(b) and the 'removal or disposal of the defendant's property' referred to in section 54(1)(c) are situations which must have arisen during the pendency of the action.

The wording in limb 54(1)(c) namely "threatens or is about to" clearly indicates that section 54 (1)(c) caters to actions which the defendant intends taking in future. Further, section 54(1)(c) refers to a situation where the defendant 'threatens or is about to remove or dispose of his property with intent to defraud the plaintiff'. While the Plaintiffs in the instant case have not complained of anything of that sort happening, the requirement "with intent to defraud the plaintiff " is also absent in this case. The Plaintiffs have sought an injunction to restrain the Defendant from using the disputed roadway and that would not be an instance falling under section 54(1)(c) of the Judicature Act. Therefore, that limb has no application to the instant case. Thus, what needs to be considered is whether the Plaintiffs in the instant case have sought an injunction for a purpose which falls under section 54(1)(b) of the Judicature Act.

In relation to the above, the relevant catch phrase in section 54(1)(b) would be 'an act or nuisance in violation of the Plaintiff's rights in respect of the subject matter of the action and tending to render the judgment ineffectual'. As per this section, a plaintiff must satisfy two requirements; firstly, an occurrence of 'an act or nuisance in violation of the Plaintiff's rights in respect of the subject matter of the action'; and secondly the occurrence of the said act or nuisance would 'tend to render the judgment ineffectual'.

Although section 54 of the Judicature Act has given a wide discretion to courts to issue injunctions whenever it is just to do so, over the years our courts have developed three primary grounds or parameters or guidelines to guide themselves when deciding the question whether it should proceed to grant an interim injunction against a defendant. Those grounds could be summarized in to a brief form to read as follows.

1) Has the applicant made out a strong prima facie case?
2) Whether the balance of convenience is in his favour?
3) Do equitable considerations favour the grant of an injunction?

Let me pause there for a moment and turn back again to the case of Felix Dias Bandaranayake Vs. State Film Corporation and another.[8] His Lordship Soza J in that case, has laid down the steps the Court should follow in a chronological order. As the first step His Lordship has stated in that case thus,

> "In Sri Lanka we start off with a prima facie case. That is, the applicant for an interim injunction must show that there is a serious matter in relation to his legal rights, to be tried at the hearing and that he has a good chance of winning. It is not necessary that the plaintiff should be certain to win. It is sufficient if the probabilities are he will win. Where however the plaintiff has established a strong prima facie case that he has title to the legal right claimed by him but only an arguable case that the defendant has infringed it or is about to infringe it, the injunction should not be granted (Hubbard v Vosper).[9]"

His Lordship Justice Soza in the same case states the 2nd step to be followed when deciding whether to grant an interim injunction in the following manner.

> "If a prima facie case has been made out, we go on and consider where the balance of convenience lies- Yakkaduwe Sri Pragnarama Thero v. The Minister of Education.[10] This is tested out by weighing the injury which the defendant will suffer if the injunction is granted and he should ultimately turn out to be the victor against the injury which the plaintiff will sustain if the injunction were refused and he should ultimately turn out to be the victor. The main factor here is the extent of the uncompensatable disadvantage or irreparable damage to either-party. As the object of issuing an interim injunction is to preserve the property in dispute in statu quo the injunction should not be refused if it will result in the plaintiff being cheated of his lawful rights or practically decide the case in the defendant's favour and thus make the plaintiff's eventual success in the suit if he achieves it a barren and worthless victory.- see Bannerjee (ibid) pp. 578, 579."[11]

His Lordship Justice Soza in the same case has laid down a 3rd step also when deciding on the question of granting an interim injunction. It is in the following paragraph.

> "Lastly as the injunction is an equitable relief granted in the discretion of the Court, the conduct and dealings of the parties (Ceylon Hotels Corporation v Jayatunga)[12] and the circumstances of the case are relevant. Has the applicant come into Court with clean

In the case of Seelawathie Mallawa Vs. Millie Keerthiratne,[16] His Lordship Victor Perera J, too has adopted a similar view when he stated as follows.

> "The principles which the Court must take into account when deciding whether to grant an injunction or not have been formulated from time to time in decisions of our Courts and have sometimes been re-formulated on the basis of decisions of the English Courts. Generally the line of approach in exercising the Court's discretion whether to grant an interim injunction or not has been, first to look at the whole case before it. The primary consideration was the relative strength of the parties cases. The Court must have regard not only to the nature and strength of the plaintiff's claim and demand but also to the strength of the defence. It is when the Court has formed the opinion that the plaintiff had a strong prima facie case, that the Court had then to decide what was best to be done in the circumstances. ..... Initially the plaintiff therefore needs only to satisfy the Court that there is a serious matter to be tried at the hearing. …"

In the case of D. S. Dissanayake Vs. Agricultural and Industrial Credit Corporation and others,[17] His Lordship Justice H N G Fernando stated the same principle which can be seen in the following paragraph.

> "The proper question for decision upon an application for an interim injunction is " whether there is a serious matter to be tried at the hearing " (Jinadasa v. Weerasinghe1[1 (1929) 31 N. L. R. 33.]). If it appears from the pleadings already filed that such a matter does exist, the further question is whether the circumstances are such that a decree which may ultimately be entered in favour of the party seeking the injunction would be nugatory or ineffective if the injunction is not issued."

In a more recent case, M N Kariyawasam Vs. N W Sujatha Janaki and two others,[18] Her Ladyship Justice Chandra Ekanayake too has endorsed the same views. Thus, our Courts have consistently adopted the above process in many cases.

Having stated as above, a brief account of the law pertaining to granting of injunctions, let me now consider whether the refusal of the interim injunction by the learned District Judge in the instant case, is justifiable.

Although the learned District Judge has given many reasons for the rejection of the interim injunction in his painstakingly written order, for the purpose of disposing this case it would suffice to observe the clear conclusion by the learned District Judge that the plaintiffs have failed to establish a prima facie case. In that regard, as the learned District Judge has stated in his order, the Plaintiffs are yet to obtain the title of the Lots No. 5 and 4 based on prescription. Hence the burden of proving undisturbed, uninterrupted possession adverse to the title of the Plaintiffs, over the said lots, under the laws governing prescription, is on the Plaintiffs. However, as pointed out by the learned District Judge, the Plaintiffs have failed to address some of the important elements of such proof. The Plaintiffs have failed to adduce any date or any time period during which they have commenced the required adverse possession.

I also cannot find fault with the conclusion of the learned District Judge to accept and act on the affidavits of the Grama Niladhari of the area, and the Postman who on a daily basis had used the relevant road, to access the house of the Defendant to execute his official duties. In addition to the above, the learned District Judge has given in his order, number of other reasons as well. I do not find any reason to disagree with them. However, I would not venture into an exercise of analyzing all those reasons as what I have mentioned above would be sufficient for me to agree with the learned District Judge that the plaintiffs have failed to establish a prima facie case which is sufficient for the disposal of this appeal.

Thus, in my view, the evidence adduced in the inquiry by both parties do not point to or do not justify a conclusion that the Plaintiffs have established a prima facie case. Therefore, the Plaintiff's case for an interim injunction clearly does not pass the first threshold of necessity to establish a prima facie case. Therefore, the consideration of the question of balance of convenience would really not arise. However, for the sake of completeness I would albeit briefly, mention few observations on that aspect as well.

As has been mentioned above, the Plaintiffs' claim for the Lots 4 and 5 are purely based on prescription. This is because the Defendant's title and the Plaintiffs' tittle both emanate from the same source and therefore the Plaintiffs do not challenge the deed of the Defendant. Roadway over Lots 4 and 5 is the roadway giving access the Defendant's Lot from St. Joseph's Street. It is the same roadway which gives access to the 2nd Plaintiff's Lot according to the plan No. 1177. Thus, the balance of convenience by preventing just one party, namely the Defendant, from using the disputed roadway is definitely not in favour of the Plaintiffs. This is because both parties can continue to use the disputed roadway until a final determination is made by Court. I cannot see how a mere usage by one party, of a roadway which merely passes just two blocks of land (outside their boundaries) could cause an irreparable damage to the other parties. There is also no evidence to establish such a claim.

In any case, the usage by the Defendant, the disputed roadway, cannot be identified as an 'an act or nuisance, the commission or continuance of which would produce injury to the Plaintiff' which warrants granting an interim injunction under section 54(1)(a) of the Judicature Act. The said act cannot also be identified as 'an act or nuisance in violation of the Plaintiff's rights in respect of the subject matter of the action and tending to render the judgment ineffectual', which warrants granting an interim injunction under section 54(1)(b) of the Judicature Act.

As has been observed above, not granting the interim injunction against the Defendant would not anyway prejudice the rights of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs would also not suffer an irreparable damage as a result of the Defendant's use of the disputed roadway. The learned District Judge has given extensive reasons for refusing to grant an interim injunction prayed for, by the Plaintiffs. I cannot see any basis to deviate from the conclusions arrived at by the learned District Judge. The underlying principle of granting temporary relief is to maintain the status-quo until the final determination of the suit. In those circumstances, I hold that the learned District Judge's decision to refuse to grant an interim injunction in the instant case is a well-founded one. For the aforementioned reasons the plaintiffs are not entitled to the interim injunction sought.

I answer the questions of law as follows.

a. the learned District Judge has correctly evaluated the material when concluding that the Plaintiffs have failed to establish a prima facie case with a fair chance of winning the action and that the balance of convenience has been tilted in favour of the Defendant. The Provincial High Court has failed to correctly appreciate the reasons given by the learned District Judge for refusing to grant the interim injunction.

b. The Provincial High Court had come to its conclusions without any evaluation, analysis or examination of the reasons set out in the order of the learned District Judge. The Provincial High Court also has failed to give any lawful reason for setting aside the order of the learned District Judge.
c. The Provincial High Court has failed to appreciate that the Plaintiffs have not advanced any case on any possible damage being caused to the "roofs of the buildings of the Plaintiffs. In any case there is no such danger by the mere user of the said access path by the Defendant.

For the above reasons, I set aside the judgment of the Provincial High Court dated 08-02-2019 and procced to restore and affirm the order dated 19-09-2014 pronounced by the learned District Judge refusing to grant the interim injunction and dissolving the enjoining order. I allow this appeal with costs payable by the Plaintiffs to the Defendant.

S. THURAIRAJA, PC, J.

I find it pertinent to first establish the facts of this case. Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Podimenike, Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Menikhamy and Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Dolimenika i.e. Plaintiffs – Appellants – Respondents (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Plaintiffs – Respondents.) instituted partition action by plaint dated 1st July 1998 against Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Peiris Singho, Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Podinona, Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Kirimenika, Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Piyadasa, Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Jinadasa, Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Dingirimenika i.e. 1st – 6th Defendants – Respondents – Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the 1st – 6th Defendants – Respondents) and Wasala Mudiyanselage Rosalin Nona i.e. 7th Defendant – Respondent – Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the 7th Defendant – Appellant). In their Plaint the Plaintiffs – Respondents averred inter alia that the original owner of the land which was sought to be partitioned was one named Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Yahapathhamy who was a person subject to the Kandyan Law and the land was a Paraveni (ancestral) land. Upon his death his children, namely 1st Plaintiff – Respondent, 2nd Plaintiff – Respondent, 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent, 1st Defendant – Respondent, 2nd Defendant – Respondent and Ukkubanda (deceased father of the 4th – 6th Defendants inherited the land in equal share subject to the life interest of his widow Ranmenika.

Ranmenika passed away in 1992. Thereafter the Plaintiffs instituted an action to partition the land in the District Court. The 1st and 2nd Defendant – Respondents filed a joint statement of claim dated 25/07/2000 admitting that Wickramasinghe Mudiyanselage Yahapathhamy was a person who was subject to the Kandyan Law. However, they claimed that the Plaintiff – Respondents and the 2nd Defendant – Respondent are daughters who married in Diga during the lifetime of their father and have as such forfeited their right to succession to the paraveni property. They also claimed that Yahapathhamy was not the original owner of the land in question and that the 1st Defendant – Respondent had prescribed to the land and therefore he sought a dismissal of the Plaintiff – Respondent's action.

The 1A and 7th Defendant – Appellant being the wife of the 1st Defendant – Respondent filed her own statement of claims stating that the 1st Defendant had by Deed of Gift transferred the rights to the land in suit to her and therefore sought a dismissal of the Plaintiff – Respondent's action. The matter then proceeded to trial. The 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent gave evidence and stated that the 4 daughters of the deceased namely the Plaintiff – Respondents and the 2nd Defendant – Respondent went out inn Diga marriage prior to the death of the deceased. She also stated that she returned to the Mahagedara (Ancestral home also referred to as "Mulgedara") in 1972 with her 4 children after the death of her husband and has remained there since. However, the 1A and 7th Defendant – Appellant provided that the 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent had not adduced any evidence as to how her forfeited rights to succession were revived and re-admitted to the household upon the return to the Mahagedara in 1972.

Having considered the following the learned District Court judge held that the 1st to 3rd Plaintiffs have entered into valid marriages prior to the death of Yahapathhamy in 1973 and the mere return by the Diga married 3rd Plaintiff to the Mahagedara upon the death of her husband does not entitle her to claim rights as a Binna married daughter. Being aggrieved by this judgment the 2nd and 3rd Plaintiff – Respondents preferred an appeal in terms of Section 754(1) of the Civil Procedure Code to the Court of Appeal. Upon the promulgation of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) (Amendment) Act no. 54 of 2006, said appeal was heard by the Provincial High Court of the North Western Province holden at Kurunegala.

The primary issue that was to be determined by the High Court was the issue of whether the 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent who had gotten married under the General Marriage Ordinance on 28/03/1957 and who had subsequently returned to the Mahagedara after her husband's death in 1972 had acquired the rights of a Binna married daughter. The High Court judge came to the conclusion that there is no evidence to show that the 1st and 2nd Plaintiff ever came back within the paternal power to make them heirs of Yahapathhamy. It was also held that the 2nd Defendant – Respondent had disclaimed any rights in the case itself. The High Court Judge held that the heirs of Yahapathhamy for the land that was sought to be partitioned were the 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent, 1st Defendant – Respondent and the children of Ukkubanda and that they should inherit an undivided 1/3rd each from the land that was sought to be partitioned, thus the appeal of the Plaintiffs – Respondents was allowed.

Being aggrieved by this decision the 1A and 7th Defendant – Appellant an appeal to this court to have the decision of the High Court set aside. Leave to appeal was granted under (b), (d) and (e) of paragraph 18 of the Petition dated 13th August 2013. These questions of law have been reproduced for ease of reference.

b. the learned provincial high court judge has erred in law by coming to the conclusion that Yahapathhamy;

i. Had readmitted Dolimenika as a binna married daughter by allowing her to possess the land comprising of the mulgedara 7-8 years prior to his death.

ii. Could, in law, re-admit Dolimenika as a binna married daughter 7-8 years prior to his death during the subsistence of her diga marriage in contravention of Section 9(1) of the Kandyan Law Declaration and Amendment Ordinance No. 39 of 1938.

d. the learned Provincial High Court Judge has erred in law by coming to the conclusion that Yahapathhamy could, in law, grant rights in relation to immovable property, to the 3rd Plaintiff, in contravention of Section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance No. 7 of 1840

e. the learned Provincial High Court Judge has erred in law by misapplying the burden of proof required in proving that Dolimenika had in fact regained binna rights.

After considering the available material I find that the decisive factor in this matter is the issue with regards to the 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent's marriage. Namely whether it was in fact readmitted as a Binna marriage as the High Court had done in its judgment.

After perusing the material before us, it is apparent that the daughter was given in marriage under the General Marriage Ordinance in the year 1957 and after her husband's death in 1972 after approximately 15 years of marriage she was allowed to live with her parents in her Mulgedara and continued to do so until her father's death. Her claim is that upon coming back to her Mulgedara she acquired the rights of a woman under the Binna marriage.

For purposes of clarity, I will first differentiate a Diga marriage from a Binna marriage. Marriage in Diga and Binna are the two methods of marriage under the Kandyan Law. A Diga marriage according to the Kandyan law is when a woman is given away and is settled in the home of her husband, which is the more common of the two types of marriages. A Binna marriage is one where the bridegroom is received into the house of the bride and according to certain stipulations abides there permanently. This type of marriage would more commonly occur where the bride is an heiress or a daughter of a wealthy family in which there are few sons. The type of marriage entered into directly effects the succession to property. A Diga married daughter does not typically succeed to the property of her father. Whereas a Binna married daughter retains her to succession after the marriage. Hence one of the most pressing issues in this case is whether the 3rd Plaintiff had reacquired the rights of a Binna married daughter when she returned to her Mulgedara after the demise of her husband.

It is also notable that the 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent was married under the provisions of the General Marriages Ordinance. The general practice in relation to marriages registered under the General Marriages Ordinance is that where an entry as to the nature of the marriage is absent, the presumption is that the marriage is a Diga marriage. This was discussed in the case of Lewis Singho v Kusumawathie and others 2003 (2) SLR 128. In this case Dissanayake, J stated as follows;

> Applying the above principles where a party who is governed by the Marriage and Divorce (Kandyan) Act contracts a marriage under the Marriage Registration

Ordinance, in the absence of an entry in the certificate of marriage with regard to the nature of the so marriage contracted the presumption recognised under section 28(1) of the Marriage and Divorce (Kandyan) Act would be applicable and such a marriage would be presumed to have been one of Diga until the contrary is proved.

*Thus since in the certificate of marriage of Enso Nona (V1) which is one issued under the General Marriages Ordinance, where an entry with regard to the nature of marriage is absent, the presumption is that the marriage is Diga and not Binna.

(Emphasis added)

Fredrick Austin Haley in his book A Treaties on the laws and customs of the Sinhalese also wrote about this presumption. In page 195 of this book, it has been stated that in the absence of an entry in the register specifying its nature, the marriage is presumed to be a Diga one until the contrary is proved. This is also referenced in the aforementioned judgment by Justice Dissanayake. Thus it is presumed that the marriage of the 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent is a Diga marriage. It is also vital to note that the 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent when asked in cross examination whether she and the 2nd Plaintiff – Respondent went in Diga marriage, had replied in the affirmative.

Thus, it is apparent that for the 3rd – Plaintiff Respondent to succeed to her father's property, her Diga marriage should have converted into a Binna marriage as Diga married daughters have no right to their father's property. Section 9 (1) of the Kandyan Law Declaration and Amendment Ordinance sets out the nature of these two types of marriages. It states as follows;

(1) A marriage contracted after the commencement of this Ordinance in binna or in diga shall be and until dissolved shall continue to be, for all purposes of the law governing the succession to the estates of deceased persons, a binna or a diga marriage, as the case may be, and shall have full effect as such ; and no change after any such marriage in the residence of either party to that marriage and no conduct after any such marriage of either party to that marriage or of any other person shall convert or be deemed to convert a binna marriage into a diga marriage or a diga marriage into a binna marriage or cause or be deemed to cause a person married in diga to have the rights of succession of a person married in binna, or a person married in binna to have the rights of succession of a person married in diga.

(Emphasis added)

However there have been certain circumstances where daughters who have been married in Diga have acquired certain Binna rights. In Armour's Grammar of the Kandyan Law by Joseph Martinus Perera these circumstances have been established. A few of these circumstances are, where a Diga married daughter is recalled by her father and remained in the father's house until his demise, and if after she was married, she was married in Binna, and if the son lived away from his father's house settled in Binna in his wife's village, then the daughter and the son will inherit equal shares of the father's estate. Another instance is where the Diga married daughter returns destitute. In those circumstances she will be entitled to maintenance. However, in this matter it does not seem that the 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent had acted in a manner in which her Diga rights had converted into Binna rights. Although there has been a change of residence this does not necessarily confer the rights of a Binna married daughter on a Diga married one. In Sawers' Digest of Kandyan Law (page 2) the change in the nature of these marriages is discussed.

Daughters, while they remain in their father's house, have a temporary joint interest with their brothers in the landed property of their parents; but this they lose when given out in what is called a deega marriage*, either by their* parents or brothers, after the death of the parents. It is, however, reserved for the daughters, in the event of their being divorced from their deega husbands, or becoming widows destitute of the means of support, that they have a right to return to the house of their parents and there to have lodging and support and clothing from their parents estate; but the children born to a deega husband have no right of inheritance in the estate of their mother's parents

This principle was discussed extensively in the case of Jayasinghe v Kiribindu and Others 1997 (2) SLR 1. In this case it was stated as follows;

"There is no dispute that Kiribindu, the plaintiff-respondent, never left her parental home and lived in it before and after the death of her father. However, was she allowed to settle in binna in the mulgedera? Living in the mulgedera (or on ancestral properties e.g. see D.C. Kurunegala 19107 (1873) Ill Grenier 115; Dingiri Amma v. Ukku Amma, having a binna connection: cf Gonigoda v. Dunuwlla, cf also Doratiyawe v. Ukku Banda Korale, did not automatically confer rights of inheritance on a daughter who had been married in diga. Her rights would depend on whether her residence could be regarded as a settlement in binna in the house or property of the father. Whether there was a settlement in binna would depend on the establishment of that fact established by the evidence in a particular case. In Re Mahara Ratemahatmaya, where a man lived for some years in the family house of a woman with the intention of forming a marital connection, it was held by Rowe, C.J. and Morgan J. that, unless there be some substantial proof to the contrary arising from a proved disparity of rank or other legal obstacle, that would amount to a marriage in binna.

On the other hand, as we have seen, if a daughter who had gone out in diga be divorced, or left a widow, or ill-treated or reduced to penury by her husband's misfortune or bad conduct, she is entitled, on returning to her parents, to live with them and be supported.

However, although there was residence, that alone did not confer the rights of a binna married daughter on such a person."

(Emphasis added)

In this case it was further stated;

"undoubtedly the place of residence is an important indicator of the character of a marriage. Ordinarily, in the absence of contrary evidence we ought to be entitled to presume that the common course of usual events consistent with the ordinary practices of Kandyan Society followed. And so, a woman who after marriage lived in her mulgedara with her husband maybe supposed to have been settled in binna. On the other hand, it would be expected that a woman married in diga would have been led away from her parental home. It was a symbolic manifestation of the departure of the woman to join another family and bear children who will belong to a different genes.

Such a person would live in her husband's home or upon the property of her new family. However, if it was agreed that the marriage was a diga marriage, it would be a diga marriage, irrespective of the fact that the bride took up residence in her father's house…the determination of the character is, perhaps unfortunately, but nevertheless, somewhat more complex than seeking a response to the simple question: where did she live?"

Taking the aforementioned into consideration I find that the marriage of the 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent had not been converted into a Binna marriage. Furthermore, the burden of proof in proving against the presumption of a Diga marriage lies with the person who claims that she comes under a Binna marriage. The 3rd Plaintiff – Respondent has not provided this court with sufficient material to rebut the presumption of a Diga marriage nor has there been any material produced to prove that she had returned to the Mulgedara under any of the circumstances mentioned above that may confer on her any of the rights a Binna daughter might have.

Taking the aforementioned into consideration I answer the 1A and 7th Defendant – Appellant questions of law affirmatively.

On careful analysis of the material that was produced before the high court I am of the view that the judgment given in NP/HCCA/KUR/88/2003 is erroneous and thus I am inclined to allow the appeal of the 1A and 7th Defendant – Appellant.

The Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as "Appellant") owns four parts of land containing in total R. 1 P. 9.56. By letter dated 04.01.2016 (P4), he asked the Assistant Commissioner of Agrarian Services of Matale to declare these highlands. Permission was also sought to grow trees on the earth.

The Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as "Respondent") in a letter dated 24.03.2016 (P11) stated that the said lands are not paddy land. He claimed to do so under section 28 of the Agrarian Development Act No. 46 of 2000 as amended (hereinafter referred to as “Act”). In that letter, he sought to impose four conditions that must be met in order for the land to be used for non-agricultural purposes, namely:

01. ඉඩමේ කරනු ලබන සංවර්ධන කටයුතු වලදී රටේ පවත්නා නීතිරීති වලට අනුව අදාල පලාත් පාලන ආයතනය හා අදාල අනෙකුත් ආයතනයන්ගේ අනුමැතිය ඔබ විසින් ලබා ගත යුතු අතර එකී ආයතන විසින් පනවනු ලබන කොන්දේසි වලට අනුව කටයුතු කළ යුතුය.

The Appellant sought a writ of certiorari to quash those conditions. It was argued that the Respondent lacked the power to impose such conditions on the use of non-agricultural land.

The Court of Appeal refused notice and held that the Act provided the Respondent to protect both paddy and agricultural land. The Court concluded that the Respondent had the authority to impose terms and conditions on non-agricultural land use.

This Court has granted special leave to appeal on the following question:

> "Has the Commissioner General of Agrarian Development (Respondent-Respondent) the legal authority to impose conditions when he declares a land not to be a paddy land under section 28(1) of the Agrarian Development Act No. 46 of 2000?"

The long title of the Act states, among other things, that it is to provide for the utilisation of agricultural lands in accordance with agricultural policies. It is part of the Act and, as such, is considered an aid to construction. Moreover, the preamble to the Act elucidates that it has become necessary to set out the restrictions to be imposed on persons using agricultural land for non-agricultural purposes in order to ensure maximum utilization of agricultural land for agricultural production. In Union of India v. Elphinstone Springg and Weaving Co Ltd & Ors [AIR (2001) Supreme Court 724] the Supreme Court of India held that a long title along with the preamble is a good guide regarding the object, scope or purpose of the Act.

Hence, there can be no doubt that part of the object, scope or purpose of the Act is to provide for the utilization of agricultural lands in accordance with agricultural policies. That goal is pursued by restricting the use of agricultural land for non-agricultural purposes.

Part II of the Act is titled "utilising agricultural lands in accordance with agricultural policies". Section 22(1) of the Act plays a pivotal role in the implementation of this object, scope or purpose by imposing a duty on every owner cultivator or occupier of any agricultural land who desires to cultivate or manage such land to do so in accordance with standards of cultivation provided in the Act or any regulation made thereunder. Section 22(2) of the Act provides for the promulgation of regulations prescribing the crops to be cultivated, the livestock to be reared, the fish to be bred according to the situation and natural resources of the land, and generally for the efficient management of agricultural land and for better cultivation.

Accordingly, any restrictions on the cultivation or management of agricultural lands are sought to be done by the Act by standards of cultivation provided in the Act or regulations made thereunder.

The issue to be considered is whether the Act has additionally vested power in the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development to impose other conditions on owner cultivators or occupier of any agricultural land as to its use. The Court of Appeal concluded that he had this authority under sections 28 and 29 of the Act.

When interpreting empowering instruments, what is not permitted should be considered prohibited [Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. ltd. v. Hector Riche (1875) L.R. 653)]. It is the strict doctrine of ultra vires which was the subject of some refinement later so that it could be applied in a reasonable manner. Hence whatever may be regarded as incidental to, or consequential upon, those things which the Legislature has authorized ought not (unless expressly prohibited) to be held by judicial construction, to be ultra vires [Attorney-General v. The Great Eastern Railway Co. (1880) 5 A.C. 473].

Upon a careful examination of sections 28 and 29 of the Act, it is clear that they deal with determining whether a land is a paddy land and the identification of paddy lands which can be cultivated with paddy and other crops.

In this context, it is necessary to remember that, by definition, rice growing is included in the meaning of "agriculture" in the Act. Upon a further examination of section 100 of the Act, it is clear that although all “paddy land” falls within the meaning of “agricultural land”, all “agricultural land” does not fall within the meaning of “paddy land”.

Accordingly, I hold that sections 28 and 29 of the Act does not empower the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development to impose conditions on owner cultivators or occupier of any agricultural land as to its use.

Admittedly, section 31(1) of the Act empowers the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development or an officer appointed under section 38(2) of the Act to enter upon any extent of agricultural land to inspect and make inquiries. However, subsection 31(2) of the Act limits the scope of this inspection and investigation for the purpose of determining the matters specified in it. None of these matters pertain to the conditions imposed by the Commissioner General for Agrarian Development on agricultural land use.

On the contrary, section 31(3) of the Act empowers such officers to examine any permission issued under section 32(1) or 33(1) of the Act in order to ascertain whether the terms and conditions subject to which permission has been issued are being complied with. These provisions deal with the use of paddy land for purposes other than agricultural cultivation without the permission of the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development and filling up of paddy land or utilizing paddy land for any purpose other than cultivation.

Accordingly, I hold that the provisions in Part II the Act only makes provision for terms and conditions to be imposed by the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development on the use of paddy lands. They do not expressly or implicitly allow him to impose terms and conditions on agricultural land use.

The learned President's Counsel drew our attention to a judgment of the Court of Appeal in Ranatunge v. Commissioner General of Agrarian Development and Another [C.A. (Writ) 180/2017; 17.07.2019] where I held that the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development is not empowered to impose any conditions pursuant to section 28 of the Act after he decided that the land is not a paddy land. I see no reason to change my conclusions therein.

Nonetheless, I am mindful of the decision in Peiris v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue (65 N.L.R. 457) where Sansoni J. held that an exercise of a power will be referable to a jurisdiction which confers validity upon it and not to a jurisdiction under which it will be nugatory. This principle has been applied even to cases where a Statute which confers no power has been quoted as authority for a particular act, and there was in force another Statute which conferred that power.

Therefore, though the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development has purported to act in terms of Section 28 of the Act in imposing the conditions set out in letter dated 24.03.2016 (P11), the whole Act must be examined to ascertain the true limits of the powers of the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development on imposing terms and conditions on the use of the agricultural land.

In this respect, I note that section 83 of the Act gives the Commissioner General for Agrarian Development the power to make certain orders. Such orders may take the form of requiring remedial measures where, amongst other matters, any irrigation channel, watercourse, bund, bank, reservation tank, dam, tank reach or irrigation reserve is blocked up, obstructed or encroached upon, damaged or caused to be damaged. This power is granted to ensure that the cultivation of paddy lands is done in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Limiting this power to remedial measures following damage runs counter to the purpose or objective of the Act. Accordingly, I hold that the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development has incidental or consequential power in terms of section 83 of the Act to take preventive measures to stop any of the acts specified therein from occurring. It includes the power to restrict agricultural land use to prevent any of the acts specified in section 83 of the Act from occurring.

Accordingly, I answer the question of law in the negative. However, under section 83 of the Act, the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development has the incidental or consequential power to take preventive measures to prevent any act specified therein from occurring. It includes the power to restrict agricultural land use to prevent any act specified therein from occurring.

I will now examine the conditions imposed by the Respondent by letter dated 24.03.2016 (P11) and its vires in that legal context. Condition 1 seems to be a repeat of the applicable laws. However, nothing in the Act indicates that the Respondent has powers to monitor the implementation of these laws. Therefore, condition 1 is ultra vires his powers.

Conditions 2 and 3 are restrictions on the agricultural land use. These are not restrictions imposed in terms of standards of cultivation provided in the Act or regulations made thereunder. Neither are they aimed at preventing any of the acts specified in section 83 of the Act. Accordingly, conditions 2 and 3 are ultra vires the powers of the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development.

Condition 4 is intended at preventing any obstruction to paddy cultivation and watercourse. The Commissioner General for Agrarian Development has the incidental or consequential power under section 83 of the Act to take such preventive measures. Therefore condition 4 is intra vires his powers.

The certificate issued pursuant to section 28 of the Act determines whether the lands are paddy lands. It does not entail any examination of possession or title. Accordingly, condition 5 is intra vires the power of the Commissioner-General of Agrarian Development.

For the reasons set out above, I conclude that conditions 1, 2 and 3 imposed by the Respondent in a letter dated 24.03.2016 (P11) are ultra vires. None of the other determinations or conditions are ultra vires.

The Appellant sought a writ of certiorari to quash the decision to impose five conditions set out in P11. As explained earlier, only conditions 1, 2 and 3 exceed the Respondent's authority.

In Thames Water Authority v. Elmbridge Borough Council [(1983) 1 Q.B. 570] it was held that where a local authority had acted in excess of their powers, the court is entitled to look not only at the document but at the factual situation and, where the excess of the power was easily identifiable from the valid exercise of power, to give effect to the document in so far as the exercise of the power had been intra vires. Similar approach was adopted in Regina v. Secretary of State for Transport ex parte Greater London Council [(1985) 3 W.L.R. 574] when it was held that in an appropriate case, certiorari will go to quash an unlawful part of an administrative decision having effect in public law while leaving the remainder valid.

Such severance of any ultra vires part of a decision is also circumscribed. In Agricultural, Horticultural and Forestry Industry Training Board v. Ayelsbury Mushrooms Ltd. [(1972) 1 W.L.R. 190] court held that where the bad can be cleanly severed from the good, the court will quash the bad part only and leave the good part standing. In R. v. North Hertfordshire District Council ex parte Cobbold [(1985) 3 AII.E.R. 486] court held that where a specific part of a licence could be identified as being offensive and therefore unlawful, it could only be severed from the licence so far as to leave the remainder untainted if the severance would not alter the essential character or substance of that which remained. It follows that severance would not be permitted where the words which is sought to sever were fundamental to the purpose of the whole licence.

I hold that conditions 1, 2 and 3 of letter dated 24.03.2016 (P11) can be cleanly severed from the other valid parts of the document without altering the essential character or substance of the remainder.

For the reasons set out above, I set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 06.10.2016 and issue a writ of certiorari quashing the conditions 1, 2 and 3 of letter dated 24.03.2016 (P11).

I make no order as to costs.

By way of Deed of Transfer No. 10950, the Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent (Plaintiff) transferred some of her undivided rights to the land described in the schedule to the Deed to her brother, the Defendant-Respondent-Appellant (Defendant). The Plaintiff states that although this Deed is ex facie an outright transfer, it was in fact security for a loan obtained by her from the Defendant, and there was an oral agreement between them that the Defendant brother would retransfer the property once she repaid the loan with interest. The Plaintiff's position is that she never intended to pass the beneficial interest in the property to the Defendant thereby resulting in a constructive trust being created in her favour.

Section 83 of the Trusts Ordinance, No. 9 of 1917, as amended, reads as follows:

> Where the owner of property transfers or bequeaths it, and it cannot reasonably be inferred consistently with the attendant circumstances that he intended to dispose of the beneficial interest therein, the transferee or legatee must hold such property for the benefit of the owner or his legal representative.

The Defendant had also acquired undivided rights to this property by other Deeds. He filed a partition action to partition the larger land making the Plaintiff also a Defendant. The partition case was concluded without contest. The Plaintiff did not raise her claim to the constructive trust in the partition action.

The Plaintiff states that the Defendant continuously postponed the retransfer of the property and she was ultimately compelled to file this case as a last resort to vindicate her rights.

The Defendant denies this version of the Plaintiff. The defendant states that the transaction was an outright transfer of the property and he is not holding the property in trust for the Plaintiff.

After trial, the District Court held against the Plaintiff on the basis that the partition decree wiped out the constructive trust, if any.

On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal reversed the Judgment and directed the District Court to enter Judgment for the Plaintiff.

The Defendant is now before this Court against the Judgment of the High Court.

The Defendant raised several questions of law but this Court granted leave to appeal on two questions, which in essence is whether the High Court erred in law when it decided that a constructive trust is not extinguished by a decree for partition, notwithstanding that the Plaintiff, being aware of the partition action, did not claim such a right in the partition action.

In the Partition Ordinance, No. 10 of 1863, section 9 dealt with the conclusive effect of a partition decree and there was no express provision protecting constructive trusts after a decree for partition was entered. Hence there was an ambiguity as to whether constructive trusts survived a partition decree.

In cases such as Babunona v. Cornelis Appu (1910) 14 NLR 45, Galgamuwa v. Weerasekera (1919) 21 NLR 108, the Court held against the survival of a constructive trust, but in cases such as Sultan v. Sivanadian (1911) 15 NLR 135, Weeraman v. De Silva (1920) 22 NLR 107, the Court held in favour of the survival of a constructive trust despite a partition decree being entered.

However this question was set at rest by a Full Bench of the Supreme Court in Marikar v. Marikar (1920) 22 NLR 137 wherein the Supreme Court, having reviewed the conflicting previous decisions authoritatively held:

> A trust, express or constructive, is not extinguished by a decree for partition, and attaches to the divided portion, which on the partition is assigned to the trustee.

The Full Bench of the Supreme Court took the view that section 9 of the Partition Ordinance was not intended to extinguish equitable interests, and the trustee, being the owner of the share, represents the beneficiary in respect of it, and a partition decree in favour of the trustee will be conclusive against all those who may claim the same share or any interest therein but is not intended to shut out the beneficiary himself.

Dr. L.J.M. Cooray in his treatise The Reception in Ceylon of the English Trust (1971), justifies this conclusion from a different perspective. He states at page 209 that notwithstanding the trust is wiped out by the decree for partition, "He [the trustee] may be regarded as a trustee under a constructive trust (distinct from the old trust which the decree has wiped out) which constructive trust arises under section 90 read with section 53 [of the Trusts Ordinance], when he receives a partition title to the former trust property under the decree."

This Full Bench decision was followed in subsequent decisions such as Punchimahatmaya v. Medagama (1949) 51 NLR 276. Notably, the District Court Judgment in the instant case makes no reference to Marikar v. Marikar.

The Partition Act, No. 16 of 1951, succeeded the Partition Ordinance. Unlike the Partition Ordinance, the Partition Act made special reference to trusts. Section 48(1) of the Partition Act (which corresponds to section 9 of the Partition Ordinance) recognised the finality and conclusiveness of a partition decree. It stated that such a decree is free from all encumbrances whatsoever other than those specified in the decree. It further expounded:

> In this subsection "encumbrance" means any mortgage, lease, usufruct, servitude, fideicommissum, life interest, trust, or any interest whatsoever howsoever arising except a constructive or charitable trust, a lease at will or for a period not exceeding one month, and the rights of a proprietor of a nindagama.

Although the Full Bench of the Supreme Court in Marikar's case held that a trust, be it express or constructive, would not be extinguished by a partition decree, the Partition Act enacted that a trust was extinguished by a partition decree unless specifically reserved in the decree or if it were a constructive or charitable trust.

When the Defendant in the instant case filed the partition action, the Partition Law, No. 21 of 1977, was in force. Similar to the Partition Act, section 48(1) of the Partition Law endowed partition decrees with finality devoid of encumbrances other than those specified in the decree. What is meant by "encumbrance" is defined in the Partition Law in the following manner:

> In this subsection and in the next subsection "encumbrance" means any mortgage, lease, usufruct, servitude, life interest, trust, or any interest whatsoever howsoever arising except a constructive or charitable trust, a lease at will or for a period not exceeding one month.

Hence, similar to the Partition Act, the Partition Law spares constructive trusts despite a partition decree being final and conclusive.

The learned District Judge in this case has accepted that in terms of section 48(1), a constructive trust is not wiped out by the entering of a partition decree. But the District Judge qualifies this by stating that the beneficiary of a constructive trust can claim the benefit of the said provision only if the partition decree had been obtained without the beneficiary's knowledge, and not in an instance where he remained silent having been fully aware of the partition action. The District Court took the view that as the Plaintiff had kept silent about the constructive trust after she was made a party to the partition action, the alleged constructive trust was wiped out by the partition decree and therefore the Plaintiff's action should fail. The District Court did not go into the merits of the Plaintiff's claim despite voluminous evidence being led on the question of the existence of a constructive trust.

This finding of the District Court is not correct and goes against the ratio decidendi of Marikar's case. Had the learned District Judge read the Judgment in Herat v. Amunugama (1955) 56 NLR 529, which he cites in his Judgment, he would have realised his mistake. In Herat's case, Gratiaen J. states at pages 534-535:

> It has no doubt been authoritatively decided that Section 9 of the Partition Ordinance does not necessarily extinguish constructive trusts – Marikar v. Marikar (1920) 22 NLR 137…. In Marikar's case (supra) the beneficiary (although a party) had not put in issue the bare legal estate of the constructive trustee.

Learned President's Council for the Defendant submits that in Marikar's case there was a constructive trust but in the instant case the Defendant denies any such trust. This is also not correct. In Marikar's case there was no admitted trust. There was only "an alleged constructive trust".

Let me quote the first paragraph of the Judgment in Marikar's case to clear any doubts:

> The question for determination in this case relates to an alleged constructive trust attaching to an undivided share > of a land which was the subject of a partition suit. The person beneficially interested under the alleged trust – though himself otherwise a party to the suit – did not assert a claim to his equitable right in the suit. Judgment was given, and a decree entered, without any reference to the trust. The question is therefore, whether, assuming the existence of the trust, it is extinguished by the decree, or whether it attaches to the share allotted in severalty.

I must emphasise that at the time Marikar's case was decided in 1920, there was no statutory safeguard to preserve constructive trusts and yet the Supreme Court interpreted section 9 of the Partition Ordinance (which stated that a partition decree is conclusive) liberally in order to protect trusts. Subsequent legislation expressly protected constructive trusts and therefore there cannot be any doubt on the matter. There is no necessity to rely on Marikar's Judgment any more.

The learned District Judge states that if a person is allowed to file a separate action to establish a constructive trust in respect of a portion of land which was the subject matter of a partition decree to which he was a party, it would lead to an "absurd interpretation" of section 48(4) of the Partition Law.

If two interpretations of a statute are possible and one leads to absurdity and the other is in harmony with common sense and justice, the Court has the option of selecting the latter. But if the language of a statute is plain, the Court cannot as a general rule give a different interpretation on the ground of absurdity. The intention of the legislature is clear when the legislature in express terms preserved constructive trusts despite finality of partition decrees in line with the dicta in Marikar's case.

The argument of learned President's Council for the Defendant is that the partition decree can be challenged before the District Court only on the grounds set out in section 48(4) of the Partition Law and nowhere in that section is it expressly stated that a partition decree can be challenged by a separate action filed on the ground of a constructive trust. This position is untenable because the challenge by the beneficiary is not against the partition decree but against the trustee.

Notwithstanding the Defendant proposed questions of law in relation to (a) prescription on a constructive trust, and (b) proof of the attendant circumstances in establishing a constructive trust, this Court did not grant leave on those questions. The High Court has adequately addressed (b) above and concluded that there exists a constructive trust as claimed by the Plaintiff.

I answer the two questions of law raised on behalf of the Defendant in the negative.

The Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Vijith K. Malalgoda PC J

The Applicant-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as "The Appellant") has preferred an application before the Labour Tribunal of Galle on 07th February 2013 for alleged unlawful termination of his employment by the Respondent-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as "The Respondent") and sought an order for reinstatement with backwages, reasonable compensation and for all statutory entitlements for the loss of his employment as a Boatman in the Seenigama Devol Maha Devalaya.

At the conclusion of the trial before the Labour Tribunal, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had come to a conclusion that the termination of the Appellant's service by the Respondent was in fact unjust. Further, considering the working history, nature of work and the income of the Appellant as a boatman, the learned President ordered the Respondent to pay Rs 2,100,000/= being the 7 years' salary, instead of making an order for reinstatement.

Being aggrieved by the said Order, the Respondent made an appeal to the Provincial High Court of Galle. By the judgment dated 31st May 2019, the learned High Court Judge partly allowed the Appeal and reduced the quantum of compensation to one year salary, i.e., Rs. 300 000/= considering the age of the Respondent and his future prospects as a boatman.

The Appellant preferred the instant application to this Court seeking to set aside the judgment of the High Court and to affirm the Order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal. This court considering the submission by both parties, granted special leave on questions of law identified in sub paragraphs (d) and (e) of the Paragraph 11 of the Petition dated 10th July 2019, which are as follows;

(d) Did his Lordship of the High Court err in law in failing to recognize that the Order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal was lawful, just and equitable?

(e) Did his Lordship of the High Court err in law in altering the quantum of compensation awarded?

When answering the 1st question referred to above, it is important to consider whether the order that was challenged before the High Court, which was delivered by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal was lawful, just and equitable.

When the Respondent appealed against the order of the Labour Tribunal to the High Court, the High Court made order to reduce the quantum of compensation, but did not interfere with the findings of the Labour Tribunal with regard to its decision that,

a) There was a Master-Servant relationship existed between the Applicant and the Respondent
b) The services of the Applicant was illegally terminated by the Respondent
c) The Labour Tribunal had decided to pay compensation instead of making an order for reinstatement

Even though the Appellant preferred the instant appeal before this court against the decision of the High Court to reduce the quantum of compensation without interfering with the rest of the order, the Respondent was satisfied with the said finding and did not appeal against the said order.

In the said circumstances it is not necessary for this Court to consider whether the order of the Labour Tribunal is lawful, just and equitable with regard to its finding on the above three issues which is not challenged in the instant application.

The only remaining issue that has to be looked by this Court is, whether the order made by the Labour Tribunal to pay Rs. 2100000.00 being seven years' salary instead of making an order of reinstatement, was lawful, just and equitable.

Based on the finding that was reached by the Labour Tribunal, that the services of the appellant who had worked as a boatman at Seenigama Devol Maha Devalaya had unjustly terminated, the Labour Tribunal had decided to grant compensation in lieu of reinstatement, since by then the appellant was reaching the age of 65 years. In the absence of a specific service agreement between the two parties, deciding the age of retirement and the other service benefits, the only document the Labour tribunal relied was the letter of appointment which was produced marked as A-9. However, A-9 is silent on its effect on continued long service and consequences of terminating the continued long service. In those circumstances the Labour Tribunal whilst concluding the last drawn salary as Rs. 25000.00 based on the evidence placed before the tribunal, computed the compensation on a mechanical basis to make it seven years' salary, but had failed to give any reason as to how the seven-year period was calculated.

In the absence of an accepted legal regime in calculating compensation in lieu of reinstatement, the method that should be followed by the Labour Tribunal had been identified in a series of appellate decisions.

In the case of Jayasuriya Vs. State Plantation Corporation (1995) II Sri L.R.379 at page 381 Amarasinghe J had identified the more logical method of computing the compensation as,

> "In determining compensation what is expected is that after a weighing together of the evidence and probabilities in the case, the Tribunal must form an opinion of the nature and extent of the loss, arriving in the end at an amount that a sensible person would not regard as mean or extravagant but would rather consider to be just and equitable in all the circumstances of the case……..
> ……. The essential question is the actual financial loss caused by the unfair dismissal because compensation is an indemnity for the loss. What should be considered is financial loss and not sentimental harm"

In the case of The Ceylon Transport Board Vs. Wijerathne 77 NLR 48 Vythialingam J had gone into this issue in more detail and observed that,

> "In making an order for the payment of compensation to a workman in lieu of an order for reinstatement under Section 33 (5) of the Industrial Disputes Act, a Labour Tribunal should take into account such circumstances as the nature of the employer's business and his capacity to pay, employee's age, the nature of his employment, length of service, seniority, present salary, future prospects, opportunities for obtaining similar alternative employment, his past conduct, the circumstances and the manner of the dismissal including the nature of the charge levelled against the workman, the extent to which the employee's action were blame-worthy and the effect of the dismissal on future pension rights. Account should also be taken of any sums paid or actually earned or which should also have been earned since the dismissal took place"

When granting compensation to the Appellant the Labour Tribunal was mindful of the decision in The Ceylon Transport Board Vs. Wijerathne (supra) and had referred to the guidelines identified in the said judgment as follows;

> "වන්දි නියම කිරීමේ දී සලකා බැලිය යුතු කරුණු සම්බන්ධව ඉතා පැහැදිලි ලෙස කරුණු ඉදිරිපත් කර ඇති නඩුවක් වනුයේ, The Ceylon Transport Board vs, Wijerathne (77 NLR 481) දරණ නඩුවයි. එම නඩුවේදී ඉදිරිපත් වූ නිගමනයන්, අනුගමනය කරමින් ශ්‍රේෂ්ඨාධිකරණය විසින් මඟපෙන්වීමක් ලබා දී තිබේ.

xv. සේවය රහිතව සිටි කාලයේ ඉපයූ වැටුප හා වෙනත් කරුණු."

However, when calculating the compensation, whether the Labour Tribunal was in fact followed the said guidelines supported by the evidence led before the tribunal and made a just and equitable order is a matter that has to be considered at this stage. When considering the above I am further mindful of the following observation made by Amarasinghe J in the case of Jayasuriya Vs. Sri Lanka State Plantation Corporation. (supra)

> "The Industrial Disputes Act No. 43 of 1950 Section 31D states that the order of a Labour Tribunal shall be final and shall not be called in question in any court except on a question of law. While appellate courts will not intervene with pure findings of fact, they will review the findings treating them as a question of law, if it appears that the Tribunal has made a finding wholly unsupported by evidence, or which is inconsistent with the evidence and contradictory of it; or where the Tribunal has failed to consider material and relevant evidence; or where it has failed to decide a material question or misconstrued the question at issue and had directed its attention to the wrong matters; or where there was an erroneous misconception amounting to a misdirection; or where it failed to consider material documents or misconstrued them or > where the Tribunal has failed to consider the version of one party or his evidence; or erroneously supposed there was no evidence."

It is also observed in the case of Sri Lanka State Plantation Corporation Vs. Lanka Podu Seva Sangamaya (1990) I Sri LR 84 that;

> "An appeal lies against an order of a Labour Tribunal on a Question of Law. Thus, the Appeal Court may intervene if the Tribunal appears to have made a finding for which there is no evidence - a finding which is both inconsistent with the evidence and contradictory of it."

As revealed before the Labour Tribunal, the Appellant was 64 years old and was working as the chief boatman at the time his services were terminated in August 2012. Even though the Appellant had claimed that he was fit enough to work as a boatman even at the age of 64, no evidence was placed before the tribunal with regard to his future prospects and/or opportunities for obtaining alternative employment. It is also evident that, in the absence of any agreed retiring age, the Respondent had allowed the Appellant to work until he reached the age of 64 years. However, the Labour Tribunal had failed to give its mind to this aspect of the case. In the absence of an agreed retiring age between the parties, the Labour Tribunal should be more responsible to take into consideration the reasonable age when computing compensation.

S. R. de Silva had considered the question of retiring age in the absence of a written agreement as follows;

> "……. While there is no law relating to the age of retirement, the general practice has been to retire such employees at 55. There are, however, exceptions. In the plantation industries (tea and rubber) the age of retirement of manual workers has been prescribed as 60 for males and 55 for females.

> Where the age of retirement is not covered by the contract of employment or a collective agreement; it is not unusual to find cases involving the justification of retirement being the subject matter of application to Labour tribunal. It could fairly and safely be assumed that retirement at the age of 60 would not be regarded as unreasonable by a Labour tribunal, even if retirement at that age was not contracted for."
> ['The Legal Framework of Industrial Relations in Ceylon' by S.R De Silva at page 586]

In the case of Elpitiya Plantations Ltd Vs. Ceylon Estates Staff Union and others (2004) 1 SLR 239, it was held that the optional age of retirement with the employer was 55 years, subject to the annual extensions until 60 years which is the compulsory age of retirement and the extensions of services may be given is a discretion on the part of the employer. Therefore, it was further held that the termination of the workman's service at 55 years was not just or inequitable.

In the case of M/S. British Paints (India) Ltd Vs, Workmen 1966 AIR 732, it was held that,

> "Considering that there has been a general improvement in the standard of health in this country and also considering that longevity has increased, fixation of age of retirement at 60 years -appears to us to be quite reasonable in the present circumstances. Age of retirement at 55 years was fixed in the last century in government service and had become the pattern for fixing the age of retirement everywhere. But time in our opinion has now come considering the improvement in the standard of health and increase in longevity in this country during the last fifty years that the age of retirement should be fixed at a higher level, and we consider that generally speaking in the present circumstances fixing the age of retirement at 60 years would be fair and proper, unless there are special circumstances justifying fixation of a lower age of retirement."

In the case of Guest, Keen, Williams Private Ltd Vs P. J. Sterling and Others 1959 AIR 1279 it was observed that,

> "In fixing the age of superannuation industrial tribunals have to take into account several relevant factors. What is the nature of the work assigned to the employees in the course of their employment? What, is the nature of the wage structure paid to them? What are the retirement benefits and other amenities available to them? What is the character of the climate where the employees work and what is the age of superannuation fixed in comparable industries in the same region? What is generally the practice prevailing in the industry in the past in the matter of retiring its employees? These and other relevant facts have to be weighed by the tribunal in every case when it is called upon to fix an age of superannuation in an industrial dispute."

However, as revealed before the Labour Tribunal, at the time of the Appellant's services were terminated, he has already passed the retirement age but admittedly he was engaged in a very responsible job.

Even though he has more experience and fitness to work as claimed by him, this does not mean that he should continue with his job until he feels unfit, in the absence of an agreed retiring age between the employer the employee. The learned President of the Labour Tribunal should have mindful of this aspect when computing compensation

Therefore, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal should have considered the financial loss caused to the Appellant as well as the retirement age or current age of the Appellant when computing the compensation, because it is erroneous to assess the compensation based on the uncertain loss and indefinite period for retirement.

When considering the above it is observed that there is no reasonable basis in computing compensation based on 7 years' wages as the Appellant was terminated at the age of 64 and thus, he does not have any future losses on the termination of the employment. Therefore, this court is of in the view that the Appellant cannot be reinstated because of his current age and on the other hand, awarding compensation as Rs 2,100,000 being 7 years' salary is erroneous and excessive.

When awarding 7 years' salary as compensation, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had also considered the fact that the Appellant was not paid EPF and gratuity by the employer but, payment of statutory dues cannot be considered in granting compensation since there is a statutory remedy available for non-payment of such dues.

When the Respondent appealed against the findings of the Labour Tribunal to the High Court, the High Court Judge while reducing the amount of compensation ordered by the Labour Tribunal had stated that;

> "Yet, considering the age of the Respondent (now the Appellant) and his future prospects as a workman, the compensation awarded by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal should be declared to be excessive.
> As such, having considered the age and the future prospects of the workman based on the nature of the work engaged by him, I hereby vary the amount of compensation to the sum of Rupees Three Hundred Thousand which is equivalent to one year salary of the Respondent"

However, the learned High Court Judge in reducing the amount of compensation ordered by the learned President had not provided sufficient grounds as to why he reduced the 7 years' salary of the Appellant into 1 year. On the other hand, for a just and equitable Order, it is not sufficient to say that 'considering the age of the Respondent and his future prospects…' to reduce the amount ordered by the learned

President without analyzing the material with regard to the computation of the compensation ordered by the learned President is erroneous or excessive.

Even though it is declared that the learned High Court Judge had failed to give reasons in reducing the compensation ordered by the Labour Tribunal, when considering the matters that has been already discussed in this judgement, payment of one year's salary as compensation to an employee whose services had been unlawfully terminated appears to be just and equitable.

I therefore answer both questions of law raised before this court in negative and dismiss the instant appeal without cost.

This Appeal is Dismissed. No cost.

The subject matter of this action is Lot 3 in Plan No. 170 (P1). There is no dispute that by order made in the District Court Colombo Case No. 11384/MB, Lipnus Perera became the owner of this land in 1942 (1V4), and he gifted this land to his son, the 2nd defendant, by deed No. 1642 (P2) in 1969. The 2nd defendant by deed No. 3047 (P3) gifted the land to the 1st and 2nd plaintiffs in 1979. Thereafter by deed No. 2861 (P4) the 2nd defendant sold the land to the 1st defendant in 1988. The plaintiffs filed this action seeking a declaration that they are the owners of the land by deed P3 and that the subsequent deed P4 has no force or avail in law.

The 2nd defendant died soon after the institution of the action. The 1st defendant filed the answer seeking a declaration that she is the owner of the land on deed P4 which gets priority over deed P3 on the basis that P3 was registered in a wrong folio and her subsequent deed P4 was registered in the correct folio.

The District Court held with the plaintiffs. On appeal, the Court of Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court and held with the defendant. This appeal by the plaintiffs is from the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

Learned counsel for the plaintiffs sought leave to appeal against the judgment of the Court of Appeal only on the following three questions of law:

(a) Have their Lordships of the Court of Appeal erred in holding that where a deed is registered in a new folio following a partition of a land, it is not necessary for the purpose of proving 'due registration' to prove that the 'new folio' in which the subsequent competing deed has been registered is a continuation of 'the folio in which the first registered instrument affecting the same land is registered'?

(b) Have their Lordships of the Court of Appeal erred in failing to follow the decisions of the Supreme Court in Meurling v. Gimarahamy 25 NLR 500 and Diyes Singho v. Herath 64 NLR 492?

(c) Is the said judgment of the Court of Appeal untenable in law that it has selectively ignored judgments of the Supreme Court which were binding on the said court?

In broad terms, the only question to be decided in this appeal is the question of prior registration.

There is no question of the due execution of both deeds P3 and P4. Learned counsel for the plaintiffs accepts before this court that the plaintiffs' deed P3 has been registered in a wrong folio. The contention of learned counsel for the plaintiffs is that the defendant's deed P4 has also not been duly registered and therefore the plaintiffs' deed P3 shall prevail since the 2nd defendant had no right to alienate by deed P4 after the execution of deed P3. This argument is entitled to succeed if P4 has not been duly registered.

Let me now consider whether P4 has been duly registered. Section 7(1) of the Registration of Documents Ordinance, No. 23 of 1927, as amended, states that any instrument affecting land, unless it is duly registered under Chapter III of the Ordinance, shall be void against all parties claiming an adverse interest thereto on valuable consideration by virtue of any subsequent instrument which is duly registered under this Chapter.

What is "due registration" as contemplated in this section? The answer is found in section 14(1) of the Registration of Documents Ordinance. The basic principle is that any instrument affecting land shall be registered in the folio in which the first registered instrument was registered or in another folio maintained in continuation thereof with cross references connecting the folios are properly made. (Heenappuhamy v. Charles (1973) 77 NLR 169)

Section 14(1) reads as follows:

> Every instrument presented for registration shall be registered in the book allotted to the division in which the land affected by the instrument is situated and in the folio in which the first registered instrument affecting the same land is registered, or in another folio (whether of the same volume or of another volume) bearing a separate number, opened in continuation thereof, cross reference being entered in the prescribed manner so as to connect the said folios.

Based on section 14(1), the argument of learned counsel for the plaintiffs is that the defendant failed to prove that her subsequent deed P4 was registered in the folio in which the first deed affecting the land was registered or in another folio opened in continuation of the said folio (in which the first deed affecting the land was registered).

I regret my inability to agree with this argument for the following reasons.

According to 1V4, the deed of Lipnus Perera was registered in folio M 433/268. Lipnus Perera amalgamated the said land of 1 rood and 8 perches with another land of 1 rood and 16.75 perches and subdivided the amalgamated land into 8 lots by Plan P1.

These new lots were registered in different new folios with cross references to the previous folio M 433/268 (1V4).

The new folio opened for Lot 3 (the subject matter of this action) is M 936/176 (1V6).

There is a cross reference in 1V6 which says "vide M 433/268 [1V4] and 417/83 for original lands."

There is a cross reference in 1V4 which says "vide M 936/175-180, 182 for Lots 4, 3, 2, 1, 6, 7, 8 after amalgamation of this land with another land."

It is in this new folio 1V6 that the unimpeached deed P2 and all other subsequent deeds including the defendant's deed P4 (save and except the plaintiffs' deed P3) were registered.

The plaintiffs' deed P3 was registered in a completely different folio M 1211/185 without any cross reference to folio M 433/268 (1V4) or M 936/176 (1V6).

Hence prima facie the new folio 1V6 is the correct folio.

The precise point made by learned counsel for the plaintiffs is that there is a reference in folio 1V4 that the said folio was brought forward from another folio, namely M 423, and since this latter folio was not produced in evidence, the defendant failed to prove that her deed P4 was duly registered in the folio in which the first registered instrument affecting the land was registered or in another folio opened in continuation thereof as required by section 14(1). Learned counsel cites Meurling v. Gimarahamy (1922) 25 NLR 500 and Diyes Singho v. Herath (1962) 64 NLR 492 in support.

Section 14(1) is subject to provisos. However learned counsel for the plaintiffs does not refer to them. Proviso (a) to section 14(1) reads as follows:

> [A]n instrument may, if the Registrar thinks fit, be entered in a new folio, cross references being entered in the prescribed manner so as to connect the registration with any previous registration affecting the same land or any part thereof.

It is admitted that a new folio was opened for Lot 3 after the subdivision by Plan P1. As I will explain below, this is permissible and learned counsel for the plaintiffs does not dispute it.

There is a difference between section 14(1) and the proviso (a) to section 14(1).

According to section 14(1) "Every instrument presented for registration shall be registered…in the folio in which the first registered instrument affecting the same land is registered, or in another folio…opened in continuation thereof, cross reference being entered in the prescribed manner so as to connect the said folios."

But the proviso (a) to section 14(1) states that if a new folio is opened (as opposed to continuing with the earlier one), cross references shall be made "to connect the registration with any previous registration affecting the same land". No doubt "any previous registration" does not encapsulate a wrong registration.

As I have already explained, the new folio 1V6 satisfies the requirement in the proviso (a) to section 14(1) by the cross reference to the previous registration M 433/268 (1V4).

In addition, the previous registration 1V4 also contains a cross reference to the new registration 1V6 thereby connecting both folios.

What is the purpose of registration? It is mainly to facilitate reference to all existing alienations or encumbrances affecting the land.

Under the proviso (a) to section 14(1), the Registrar of Lands has the discretion to open a new folio with cross references connecting the new registration with any previous registration.

A new folio is opened, for instance, when new allotments of land come into existence by way of partition, be it by way of a decree of court or amicable partition. (Ramasamy Chetty v. Marikar (1915) 18 NLR 503 at 505, Karunanayake v. Gunasekara (1962) 65 NLR 529)

When a new folio is opened without cross reference to the old folio and without a corresponding cross reference in the old folio to the new folio, it is a wrong folio. Nevertheless, it was held in Chelliah Pillai v. Devadason (1937) 39 NLR 68 that if proper references are later made in the correct folio and the wrong folio connecting both, "the new folio must be regarded as a right folio from the time the cross references are made."

There can be a rare situation where cross reference is not necessary for the reason that no deed affecting the land has been previously registered. This is recognised by the proviso (b) to section 14(1), which reads as follows:

> [W]here no instrument affecting the same land has been previously registered, the instrument shall be registered in a new folio to be allotted by the Registrar.

The two cases strongly relied on by learned counsel for the plaintiffs, Meurling v. Gimarahamy (1922) 25 NLR 500 and Diyes Singho v. Herath (1962) 64 NLR 492 are clearly distinguishable from the instant case. In these two cases, there was no question of new folios being opened but the competing deeds were registered in folios maintained in continuation of the original folios. What was considered in these two cases was the applicability of section 14(1) and not the proviso (a) to section 14(1).

In point of fact, when Meurling's case was decided in 1922, what was in force was the Land Registration Ordinance, No. 14 of 1891, wherein there was no corresponding section to the proviso (a) to section 14(1) of the Registration of Documents Ordinance.

In Meurling's case, the deeds were registered in two different folios and the folio in which any deed was first registered was rightly considered the correct folio. In the instant case there are no such complications.

In Diyes Singho's case, the plaintiff's competing subsequent deed was registered in the folio where the partition decree was registered, but that folio indicated that it had itself been brought forward from another folio which was not explained by the plaintiff who produced the subsequent deed. The partition deed was not registered in a new folio but in continuation of the earlier folio and there was no consensus that the partition decree was registered in the correct folio. Hence the applicability of the proviso (a) to section 14(1) of the Registration of Documents Ordinance was never considered. In the instant case there is no such question.

The Supreme Court in Diyes Singho's case made a pertinent observation at page 494: "The question whether an instrument has been duly registered as required by the Ordinance is a mixed question of law and fact." It is not a pure question of law.

In the instant case it is undisputed that Lipnus Perera became the owner of the land registered in 1V4 and, after the sub-division of the land, the lot in dispute (Lot 3) was registered in the new folio 1V6 with cross references made in both 1V4 and 1V6. Lipnus Perera then gifted Lot 3 by deed P2 to the 2nd defendant and it was registered in 1V6. At the trial, the plaintiffs did not put in issue that Lipnus Perera's deed (registered in 1V4 as far back as in 1942) or the 2nd defendant's deed P2 (registered in 1V6 as far back as in 1969) was registered in a wrong folio. No such suggestion was made to the officer from the Land Registry called to give evidence by the defendant. The only suggestion made to this witness was that there is a reference in 1V4 that it was brought forward from M 423 (which is the number of the volume; the folio number is unclear in 1V4).

Let me make two points clear: this is not a criminal case to raise some doubts and take advantage of the situation; and litigation is not a game of hide and seek.

Unless the matter (which is a question of fact or a mixed question of fact and law) is clearly and explicitly put in issue in the trial court, a party cannot pursue such matter for the first time on appeal.

In the instant case, the plaintiffs by way of issues 1-5 took up the position that by deed P3 they became the owner of the land and the subsequent alienation of the same land by the same person in favour of the defendant by deed P4 conveys no right to the latter. This position was taken up under the common law.

Whilst accepting that her deed is the subsequent deed from the same source, the defendant by way of issues 6-21 took up the position that the plaintiffs' deed was registered in the wrong folio and her deed was registered in the correct folio and therefore her deed supersedes the plaintiffs' deed. This position was taken under section 7(1) read with section 14 of the Registration of Documents Ordinance.

Thereupon the plaintiffs by way of consequential issues 22 and 23 took up the position that although the defendant's deed is registered in the correct folio, the defendant is disentitled to the benefit of prior registration because the defendant's deed was obtained and prior registration was secured by fraud or collusion. This position was taken under section 7(2) of the Registration of Documents Ordinance, which states "But fraud or collusion in obtaining such subsequent instrument or in securing the prior registration thereof shall defeat the priority of the person claiming thereunder." This was the focal point in the trial court but was not pursued before this court. The plaintiffs by way of consequential issues did not take up the position that the defendant's deed was registered in a wrong folio.

For the aforesaid reasons, I hold that the defendant has proved that her subsequent deed P4 was duly registered.

I also note that the first question of law before this court is on a wrong premise in that the Court of Appeal has not stated that where a deed is registered in a new folio it is not necessary to prove that the new folio is a continuation of the folio in which the first deed was registered. What the Court of Appeal has stated is "the deed No. 2861 (P4) has been duly registered in volume M 936 folio 176 (1V6) in continuation of folio 268 in volume M 433 (1V4)."

I answer all three questions of law in the negative and dismiss the appeal but without costs.

The Plaintiff instituted this action in June 2000 in the District Court of Vavuniya seeking a declaration that he is entitled to possess the land in suit on the strength of the Permit marked P2 issued in his name under the Land Development Ordinance, ejectment of the Defendant from the land on the basis that the Defendant has been in unlawful possession of it since January 1999, and damages. The Defendant filed answer seeking dismissal of the Plaintiff's action. In his answer, the Defendant, whilst admitting that he came into possession of the land in late 1998, further took up the position that the land was a state-owned forest land which he cleared for development. He also avers in the answer that the land described in the schedule to the plaint and the land described in the schedule to the answer are different. After trial, the District Court entered Judgment for the Plaintiff and on appeal, the High Court affirmed it. This Court granted leave to appeal against the Judgment of the High Court on the following two questions of law formulated by the Plaintiff:

(a) Did the High Court err in law when it failed to consider the proper onus of proof in this action?

(b) Did the High Court err in law when it failed that the allotment of land described in the schedule to the plaint and the allotment of land described in the schedule to the Power of Attorney has not been identified as one and the same land?

The first question of law quoted above is unclear, and at the argument, learned counsel for the Defendant-Appellant did not assist the Court to understand it either. However, I believe I was able to discern its meaning by reading the Judgment of the District Court along with the written submissions filed in this Court. Let me explain.

The Defendant raised issue No. 7 on the identification of the land. It reads as follows: "Are the boundaries of the land which are described in the schedule to the plaint and the boundaries of the land which are claimed by the Defendant one and the same?" The learned District Judge answered this question in the affirmative.

The land described in the schedule to the plaint and the land described in the schedule to the Permit are the same. The Permit was issued in 1990. The Plaintiff claims the land according to the metes and bounds described in the Permit.

In the schedule to the plaint, the boundaries given are as follows: North by the land of V. Ponniah and Road; East by the land of Suppiah Kathiresan; South by the land of R. Ponnammah; and West by the Path.

The answer of the Defendant was filed in 2001 – eleven years after the Permit was issued. In the schedule to the answer, the boundaries given are as follows: North by the land of Mahadevan; East by the State Forest; South by the land of Sivarasa; and West by the Neriyakulam Road.

It is relevant to bear in mind that the land in question and the parties to this action are from Vavuniya in the Northern Province. Many people in this province were displaced due to the civil war; perhaps as a result, the names of the claimants of the adjoining lands may have also changed over the years.

It is true that the Plaintiff has not taken out a commission to identify the land described in the schedule to the plaint. However, in the facts and circumstances of this case, this does not go to the root of the Plaintiff's case. The Permit P2 has been issued by the Land Officer in Vavuniya. At the trial, the Land Officer was summoned to give evidence on behalf of both parties. When he was summoned by the Defendant, he stated in his evidence that the Defendant made an application to him for a Permit to the land he was in possession of, and when he checked with the Settlement Officer and examined the Land Ledger, Alienation Registry etc., he realised that a Permit had already been issued on the land. The Land Officer then informed the Defendant of his findings. The Permit the Land Officer made reference to, was the Permit issued to the Plaintiff. At that point in time, the Defendant had not taken up the position that he was claiming a different land. This means the land described in the schedule to the Permit (and the plaint) and the land claimed by the Defendant are the same. The Land Officer was not cross-examined further on this matter. On this basis, the identification of the land was established before Court.

However, the learned District Judge states in his Judgment that the burden is on the Defendant to prove that the two lands – the land described in the Permit and the land in the possession of the Defendant – are different. This finding is erroneous. The burden is on the Plaintiff to prove that the land the Defendant is in possession of is the same as that described in the schedule to the plaint. However, no prejudice was caused thereby to the Defendant as the Plaintiff had already adduced evidence and the learned District Judge had already accepted that the land the Defendant is currently in possession of is the land described in the Permit and the plaint.

In the Judgment of the High Court, there is no specific reference to the burden of proof in terms of the identification of the corpus. The two sets of written submissions filed by the Defendant before the High Court are available in the brief. In the said written submissions, the Defendant has not taken up this issue on the burden of proof. The said written submissions are largely if not solely dedicated to the defects in the Plaintiff's Power of Attorney (as the action was filed by a Power of Attorney holder). If the Defendant did not take up such a matter before the High Court, the formulation of the first question of law in the manner as it stands is misleading. I answer the first question of law against the Defendant.

However, even if this question was answered in favour of the Defendant, I would not be inclined to set aside the Judgment of the High Court on that basis, as I am satisfied the Plaintiff has discharged his burden in establishing the identity of the corpus.

Let me now turn to the second question of law. Similar to the first, this question is also not very clear. I am unable to comprehend why it was raised. This question suggests that the land described in the schedule to the plaint and the land described in the schedule to the Power of Attorney are different. Perusal of the two reveals this is not so.

In fact, even if there was a discrepancy, it would be immaterial as the Power of Attorney holder has been given the appropriate authority to deal with the land described in the Permit. The Permit number and the other relevant instructions are given in the Power of Attorney itself. Furthermore, there is no legal requirement to describe the land by metes and bounds in the Power of Attorney. For the above reasons, I also answer this question of law against the Defendant.

There is no merit in this appeal.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

The Plaintiff – Appellant – Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Plaintiff or the Appellant) instituted an action against the Defendant – Respondent – Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Respondent or the Defendant) in the District Court of Maho praying inter alia for a judgment;

- Directing the defendant to retransfer the property described in the schedule to the plaint to the plaintiff by executing a deed of conveyance and,
- In the event the defendant fails to do so, for such transfer to be effected by executing a deed of transfer by the Registrar of the District Court of Maho, and,
- To evict the defendant and everyone under her and to give the vacant possession of the land to the plaintiff,
- For a sum of Rs. 75000/- for the damages already caused and Rs.1000 per month as damages for unlawful possession.

Plaintiff by her plaint dated 23.01.1993 inter alia stated that;

- The plaintiff who was the owner of the land described in the schedule to the plaint mortgaged the property to the defendant and obtained a loan by keeping the said land as a security, and the said mortgage(උකස්කරය) was executed as a transfer deed (deed of transfer no. 560 dated 27.01.1989 attested by W.T.M.P.B. Tennakoon, Notary Public) and together with it, another deed (පොරොන්දු පත්‍රය) was executed by the defendant undertaking to re-convey the land to the plaintiff, namely deed no. 563 dated 31.01.1989 attested by said W.T.M.P.B. Tennakoon, Notary Public.
- The plaintiff's signature was also obtained on some other documents at the time of signing the said deeds.
- Although the deed no. 560 had been executed as a deed of transfer, it was always considered by the plaintiff as a mortgage bond for the repayment of the loan obtained from the defendant. The consideration of Rs. 100'000 stated in the said deed is the balance amount of the loan obtained from the defendant and the interest that had to be paid.

- Although the plaintiff had endeavored to repay the balance of the said loan together with a reasonable interest thereon to the defendant, the defendant failed to accept the same. Thus, the plaintiff made an application to the Debt Conciliation Board (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the board) which was inquired into by the said board.
- Although the plaintiff suggested a settlement before the said board, the defendant refused to come into the said settlement. Having considered the said settlement as a fair offer, on 16.01.1991, the said board issued a certificate under Section 32(2) of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Ordinance)
- Although the defendant made an application to review against the said decision of the board, the said application was refused by the board.
- The land in issue had been in the possession of the plaintiff at every time material to the case. However, since the plaintiff had to go abroad for overseas employment, the plaintiff leased out the premises to Amarasinghe Arachchige Siri Amarasignhe by deed of lease no. 17 dated 16.09.1991 attested by T.M. Amarakoon, Notary Public for a period of 2 years and has kept one room to store the belongings of the plaintiff and left the country.
- However, subsequent to the issuance of the aforesaid certificate, the defendant on or around 01.11.1991 has ejected the lessee of the plaintiff, has thrown out the belongings of the plaintiff and has taken the possession of the land in issue unlawfully. The defendant is now in possession due to an order delivered by the Primary Court pursuant to an action filed by the Nikawaratiya Police. In this regard case No. 3599/L is pending before the same District Court.
- The damages caused to the property by the defendant amounts to Rs. 75'000/- and the defendant is causing continuing damages to the plaintiff due to unlawful possession at the rate of Rs,1000/- per month.
- Thus, a cause of action has arisen against the defendant to the plaintiff to file an action to get the reliefs as prayed for.

The defendant filed her answer dated 07.06.1993, and as per the answer;

- The defendant admitted the execution of aforesaid deeds no. 560 and no.563 but she has stated that she purchased the said land for Rs. 100000.00 by deed no.560 and agreed re-convey by deed no.563, if Rs.300000.00 was paid within 3 years from the date of execution of the said deed which was 31.03.1991.
- The defendant has stated that as the owner of the land, the defendant leased out the premises to the plaintiff by deed of lease no. 561 dated 27.01.1989 and thereafter it was again given on lease to the plaintiff until the month of May 1989 by deed of lease no. 769 dated 17.08.1989.
- A preliminary objection has been taken that the plaintiff cannot maintain the action since the defendant was the owner of the land in issue at every time material to this action.
- The defendant has stated that the said board, having considered the deed no.560 and deed no. 563 as a mortgage, made an effort to grant a relief to the plaintiff and requested the plaintiff to pay Rs.100000.00 and a reasonable interest to the defendant, but the defendant refused to accept it as it was not reasonable. Thus, on 16.01.1991, the said board dismissed the application of the plaintiff.
- It is averred that however, in order to give further reliefs to the plaintiff, the aforesaid board ordered the plaintiff to pay the defendant Rs. 100’000/- with 20% interest from 27.01.1989 less Rs.18000.00 within 18 months from 16.01.1991, namely before 16.07.1992 and issued a certificate under Section 32(2) of the said Ordinance.
- It is further averred, that the plaintiff has deliberately renounced the reliefs given under the certificate as from 17.17.1992, and the reliefs given by the said certificate is no more valid after 17.17.1992.
- The defendant has stated that since the plaintiff did not have any right in the land in suit after 27.01.1989, the deed of lease executed by the plaintiff as mentioned in paragraph 10 of the plaint is of no avail in law.
- It is also stated that, subsequent to the expiry of the lease granted by the defendant to the plaintiff, as the absolute owner of the land in suit, the defendant has a right to enjoy the land in issue.

Accordingly, the defendant prayed that the action filed by the plaintiff be dismissed and for costs.

As per the aforesaid pleadings it can be observed that the deed no 560 and 563 were not executed on the same day and there appears to be a deed of lease which gave possession back to the plaintiff from the defendant after the deed of transfer no.560, which, as per the plaintiff's stance, is the purported mortgage.

There were 7 admissions made by the parties.[1] On behalf of the plaintiff issues no. 1-9 were raised and on behalf of the defendant issues no. 10-28 were raised.[2]

Thus, at the trial, jurisdiction of the court was admitted and followings were among the admitted facts as per the said admissions made by the parties at the commencement of the trial.

1. Execution and signing of the aforesaid deeds no.560 dated 27.01.89 and 563 dated 31.01.89.
2. The fact that the plaintiff made an application to the aforesaid board and the said board held an inquiry.
3. The board suggested that the plaintiff shall pay the consideration of deed no.560, namely Rs.100000.00 along with the interest.
4. The board suggested that the interest be 20% per year.
5. The fact that the board issued a certificate dated 16.01.1991 under section 32(2) of the Ordinance.

Only one Chandimal Pathiraja, an officer from the Debt Conciliation Board had given evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. Neither the plaintiff, nor the power of attorney holder nor any other witness has testified at the trial for the plaintiff. Apparently, said Pathiraja has been called to give evidence with regard to the application made to the said board and issuance of the section 32(2) certificate and to tender the relevant documents in evidence. No evidence was, thus led with regard to the issues no.3 to 8 raised at the trial by the plaintiff. It appears that even the plaintiff later limited her case only to issues no. 1, 2 and to the costs and other reliefs raised in issue no.9, as she had stated in her written submission in the original court that she does not seek any relief as prayed in prayer (c) and (d) of the plaint and only seek relief as per prayer (a) (b) (e) and (f).[3]

Hence, the plaintiff's case before the original court rested upon the issues no 1 and 2 which queried whether the plaintiff is entitled to the relief (a) and (b) of the prayer in terms of the certificate issued by the aforesaid board as per section 32(2) of the Ordinance and if so, what would be the amount and interest that has to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant.

The plaintiff has tendered documents marked P1 to P4 at the trial, namely aforesaid certificate issued as per section 32(2) of the Ordinance, deed no.560, deed no.563 and minutes of the board meeting dated 27.02.1992 which refused to review the order due to the absence of the defendant respectively. The defendant gave evidence in support of her case and has tendered in evidence documents marked V1 to V7, namely, minutes of a board meeting dated 20.12.1990 which dismissed the application of the plaintiff on a previous occasion, aforesaid certificate issued as per section 32(2) of the ordinance, aforesaid deed no.560, deed of lease no. 561, aforesaid deed no.563, deed of lease no.769 and aforesaid minutes of the board meeting dated 27.02 1992.

After the conclusion of the trial learned District Judge delivered his judgment dated 22.03.1999 dismissing the action of the plaintiff with costs. The learned District Judge in his judgment inter alia stated that;

- Plaintiff had not given evidence to testify the facts adduced in his plaint and only an officer from the Debt Conciliation Board had given evidence on behalf of the plaintiff.
- The said board cannot order to pay the relevant amount and interest within a prescribed period in terms of section 32(2) or any other section of the Ordinance when there was no settlement between the creditor and the debtor.[4]
- A certificate issued under Section 32(2) of the Ordinance cannot be the sole basis for entering judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff has to file an action under the regular procedure and the plaintiff has to prove that a cause of action has arisen against the defendant, but she had failed to do so, therefore, not entitled to any reliefs prayed for in the plaint.
- No evidence was adduced on behalf of the plaintiff to the effect that the defendant was in unlawful possession of the property in question or that the defendant had caused damages to the plaintiff's properties or that a cause of action had arisen as set out in the plaint.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment, the plaintiff preferred an appeal to the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal having heard the arguments of both the parties dismissed the appeal of the plaintiff with costs. Learned Court of Appeal Judges in the said judgment inter alia stated that;

- In Silva Vs Sai Nona 78 NLR 313 it was held that the certificate issued under section 32(2) of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance read with Act No. 05 of 1959 cannot reduce a conditional transfer in law to a mortgage. As per the said judgment conditional transfer is treated as a mortgage only for the purpose of the jurisdiction of the board.
- The plaintiff has not made payments according to the requirements of the certificate of the Debt Conciliation Board. All these facts have been admitted by the parties at the trial.
- No evidence was adduced on behalf of the plaintiff to the effect that the defendant was in unlawful possession of the subject matter in question or that the defendant has caused damages or that a cause of action has arisen as set out in the plaint.
- The learned district judge has correctly analysed the evidence before him and has come to the correct conclusion that the plaintiff failed in proving that a cause of action had arisen against the defendant in this case.

Having heard the submissions of the counsel for the plaintiff and the counsel for the defendant in the special leave to appeal application filed against the judgment of the Court of Appeal, this court was inclined to grant leave to appeal on the questions of law set out in paragraph 16 of the petition of appeal undated, but, filed on 10.12.2014[5], which will be referred to and answered later in this judgment.

As said before, the plaintiff's case rested upon the issues no.1 and 2 raised at the original court. As per the way the said two issues were framed, the plaintiff to be successful, she must establish that, along with the admissions already made, by the issuance of section 32(2) certificate, she is entitled to a judgment in her favour as prayed in prayer (a) and (b) of the plaint. For this, she either has to establish that along with the admissions made, such certificate is sufficient to enter judgment and decree even without a cause of action or that in the backdrop of the admissions made, the issuance of such certificate itself gives a cause of action and proof for that cause of action for her to get a judgment in her favour. At this moment, it must be noted that the action was filed in the district court not to enforce a certificate under any given provision in law but on an alleged cause/s of action as averred in the plaint. It must also be noted that even though in paragraph 15 of the plaint, the plaintiff had averred that causes of action have accrued to the plaintiff, in the body of the plaint the plaintiff had not set forth separate causes of action as required by section 40(d) of the Civil Procedure Code but averred the cause/s of action as a composite whole through its averments. It appears, now, that the plaintiff had relinquished proving most of the averments in that composite whole and rely only on the production of the said certificate (P1) and purported decisions of the board connected to it (P4) along with the two deeds no.560 (P2) and no.563 (P3).

In deciding whether the learned judges below erred, it is necessary to peruse some relevant provisions in the Ordinance as amended in relation to the facts of the case at hand. However, as the said certificate and the order mentioned in it as part of it was made on 16.01.1991, the amendments made to the Ordinance by Acts no. 29 of 1999 and 4 of 2019 need not to be considered in this decision as they are amendments made after the issuance of the said certificate marked P1. Section 14 of the Ordinance provide for debtors and secured creditors to make application to the board to effect settlement of the debts. Thus, the scheme of the act is to effect settlement of debts through applications made by the debtor or the creditor. As per the section 19A as amended by the Act No. 20 of 1983, the board can entertain applications in relation to debts that are secured by conditional transfers of property as is a mortgage within the meaning of the ordinance, only if the application is made before the expiry of the period within which the property has to be redeemed by the debtor by virtue of any legally enforceable agreement between the debtor and his creditor. (As per the amendments made in 1999, now it is possible for the board to entertain application relating to debts secured even by transfers of immovable property as is a mortgage within the meaning of the Ordinance.) Thus, transfer deeds were not subject to the board's jurisdiction, unless it could have been considered as a conditional transfer as per the interpretation given in the Ordinance at the time the relevant application was made. Hence, it is pertinent to peruse the interpretations given to mortgage and conditional transfers in the Ordinance at the time of the relevant application, which are quoted below.

' "Mortgage" with reference to any immovable property, includes any conditional transfer of such property which, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, is in reality intended to be security for the repayment to the transferee of a sum lent by him to the transferor.'

Hence, it is clear for the purposes of the Ordinance to effect a settlement of a loan, the legislature has made provision to consider a conditional transfer as a mortgage if the circumstances shows that it was in reality a security for repayment of a loan. (With the amendments made to the Ordinance in 1999 now even transfer deeds can be considered as mortgages for the aforesaid purposes)

" 'Conditional transfer of immovable property' means any transfer, sale, or alienation of immovable property which is effected by a notarial instrument and which, by virtue of such instrument or any other notarial instrument, is subject to the right of the person by whom the property was transferred, sold or alienated or of any other person to redeem or purchase the property within a period specified in such instrument or such other instrument."

Thus, right to redeem or purchase the property may contain in the very document which becomes a conditional transfer without any doubt or in some other notarial document when the first document is a transfer deed on the face of it. It appears from the decision of the board contained in the overleaf of the P1 certificate as part of that certificate, the board considered the deeds no.560 and 563 together as a conditional transfer that falls within the interpretation of mortgage given in the Ordinance. However, as per section 21A of the Ordinance prior to the amendment made in 1999, which section was relevant to the application made to the board in the case at hand, the board had to consider certain matters before deciding a conditional transfer was in reality a mortgage as per the Ordinance. They were;

- The language in relevant notarial instruments,

- Any difference between the sum received by the transferor from transferee and the value of the property transferred,
- The continuation of the transferor's possession of the property transferred, and
- The existence of a legally enforceable agreement between the transferor and the transferee whereby the transferor is bound to pay interest or any sum that may reasonably be considered as an interest.

As per order referred to in P1 certificate as part of it, it is clear that the board decided to consider deeds marked 560 (P2) and 563 (P3) formed a conditional transfer and also fall within the interpretation of mortgage given in the Ordinance. However, order contained in the certificate(P1) does not indicate that the board considered that there was a lease agreement (deed of lease marked as V4) executed between the plaintiff (transferee) and the defendant (transferor) in between the execution of P2 and P3 and that, if V4 is a legally valid document, the plaintiff's possession after P2 can be referable to said V4. On the other hand, whether deed no.560 is a conditional transfer or not has to be decided on the intention of the parties as at the time they entered into that contract. It is true, even if there was no condition to reconvey in the same document, the intention can be shown through a subsequent deed such as P3 but when there is deed of lease written prior to P3 giving the possession of the property back to the plaintiff, it appears parties to those P2 and P3 considered P2 as an outright transfer that gave the possession of the property to the defendant. To support this view there was another deed of lease executed between the parties even after the execution of P3, marked as V6. Thus, it appears the background to the transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant suggests a possibility that the possession of the plaintiff of the property, after P2 was executed, was not due to the fact that it was a conditional transfer but due to a lease agreement and that P3 was a separate agreement to resell the property. However, for some reason the board had considered the deed of transfer P2 as a conditional transfer and, that it also fell within the interpretation of "mortgage" as contemplated by section 64 of the Ordinance. Thus, the board had tried to effect a settlement but the defendant refused to accept the said settlement. In this regard, it is pertinent to examine the provisions of section 32(2) that existed prior to the amendment made by Act no.29 of 1999.

“32(2). Where no amicable settlement is arrived at between the debtor and any secured creditor, the board shall dismiss the application so far as it relates to the debts due to the creditor, and may, if it is of the opinion that the debtor has made the creditor a fair offer which the creditor ought reasonably to have accepted, grant the debtor a certificate in the prescribed form in respect of the debts owed by him to that creditor.”

The gazette containing the relevant prescribed form is found in pages 127 to 130 of the brief. The said form is reproduced below.

“ The Debt Conciliation Ordinance, No. 39 of 1941

Form of Certificate under Section 32(2)

This is to certify that during proceedings No. …….

under the Debt Conciliation Ordinance, no.39 of 1941, between

…….of……(debtor) on the one hand and ……..of

……..(creditor) on the other hand, for the settlement of an alleged debt of ……..……rupees …… the said creditor has,

in our opinion, refused a fair offer of settlement made by the said debtor which the said creditor ought reasonably to have accepted.

2. The following particulars of the debt were furnished by the debtor under section ……of the Ordinance: -

(Particulars)

Dated the ……day of ……19…

…….

Chairman, Debt Conciliation Board

Thus, when the said section 32(2) is considered together with the prescribed form, it is clear even when the board considered a conditional transfer as a mortgage and proceeded to inquire into the application, if there was no amicable settlement, the board had to dismiss the application as per the provisions existed at the time the relevant application was made and considered. And there was no provision to include an order or decision of the board in the certificate. On the other hand, it is not logical to allow the board to make a decision on the application when the law requires it to dismiss the application. The section only allowed the board to express its opinion if it thought that a fair offer was rejected by the creditor. As per the prescribed form, particulars of the debt furnished by the debtor could have been entered in the said form. Under the provision to include particulars of debt furnished by the debtor, the board has included its purported decision in the certificate by referring to the interest ordered and to the order contained in the overleaf. Such an act or step by the board is not supported by any provision in the Ordinance. Thus, what is found in the certificate marked P1, that is within the legal provisions relevant to the matter, appears to be the opinion expressed by the board that a fair suggestion to settle the loan was refused by the defendant and the details provided by the plaintiff with regard the purported debt. It cannot be perceived how a court of law can grant reliefs as prayed for in prayer (a) and (b), namely an order to reconvey the property and to evict the defendant, on a mere expression of an opinion of the board as to the refusal of the settlement or on the other contents in P1 which are not envisaged or permitted by the section 32(2) to include in such certificate.

It is also pertinent to note that, even though, section 40 of the Ordinance makes the settlements reached under section 30 and 31 final between the parties subject to the board's power to review them, there was no provision in the Ordinance at the relevant time giving any finality to a certificate issued under section 32(2) or to the opinion expressed therein or to any order that may contained therein. As said before, other than dismissing the application and expressing the opinion as to the fairness of refusing the settlement, under section 32(2) there was no provision to make any other order or to include it in the certificate. Further, there was no provision in the Ordinance that make such an order or conclusions included in a certificate issued under section 32(2) unassailable before a court of law. The bar in relation to civil actions contained in section 56 of the Ordinance concern only entertaining of actions in respect of pending matters before the board or the validity of any procedure before the board or the legality of any settlement and certain application to execute decrees but not with regard to purported conclusions of the board that may contain in a certificate issued under section 32(2). Section 60 of the ordinance only make documents issued by the board prima facie proof of the contents of that document and that it was issued by the board. Thus, with regard to P1 certificate, one can argue that it is a prima facie evidence to say that the board was of the opinion stated therein and came to the decisions stated therein but it does not stop a civil court questioning the correctness of such conclusions in the said certificate and coming into its own decision with regard to the nature of the transactions.

After filing an application by the debtor or creditor, in the process endeavoring to effect a settlement, the board under certain sections of the Ordinance can make certain decisions. For example, under section 29(4) the board can issue a certificate in respect of debts owed by the debtor to the creditor when the creditor fails to show cause to the satisfaction of the board and under section 37, the board can decide the existence or the amount of the debt after hearing evidence when there is a dispute in that regard and, the decision shall be binding on all parties in all proceedings before the board. Even in this instant, no provision is made to bind parties on such decision in proceedings before court of law. Under section 47, the board is empowered to make orders or decision or settlements when a matter has been referred to it by a court. Section 48 provides that the court shall enter decree in accordance with such settlement, order or decision. However, there is no evidence or issue raised to indicate that the order or decision included in P1 is a decision made under section 29(4), 37 or 47. Thus, other than the opinion of the board with regard to the refusal of the settlement and the parts that relates to the dismissal of the plaintiff's application, the rest of the order/s or decision/s of the board that contained in P2 remain an order/s or decision/s which was/were not contemplated by section 32(2) of the ordinance.

Thus, on the face of it what is not contemplated by section 32(2) or the prescribed form are not matters ipso facto put in to effect by a court merely because the said certificate was tendered in court and conclusions or decisions of the board which are not contemplated by the said section 32(2) cannot be binding on the parties or the court which hear a case after the issuance of the said certificate. There may be an evidential value it bears to indicate that the application before the board was dismissed and the board was of the opinion that the settlement offered was fair and it ought to have been accepted by the creditor.

Furthermore, no provision of law is there in the ordinance that enable the board to convert a transfer or a conditional transfer to a mortgage. As discussed above, the Ordinance enable the board to consider conditional transfers (at present even transfer deeds) as mortgages in terms of the interpretations given in section 64 for the purposes of the ordinance to effect settlements of loans. Merely because the board considered a conditional transfer as a mortgage for such a purpose, a civil court of law is not bound to consider such deed as a mortgage when it becomes the subject matter in an action filed before it and the civil court has to decide the action on the facts proved before it. By tendering a certificate in terms of section 32(2), what can be proved is that the application before the board was dismissed and the board was of the view that the suggested settlement was fair and the plaintiff ought reasonably to have accepted it. It also could have proved the particulars of the debt as furnished by the debtor to the board to the extent revealed in the certificate as it can be considered as prima facie proof as indicated above.

It is also important to consider section 39(2)(a) of the Ordinance. Section 39(1) and 39(2)(b) relates to actions filed by the creditor and have no relevance to the matter at hand. Section 39(2)(a) prior to the amendment made in 1999 and as existed at the relevant time to the case at hand, is quoted below.

" (2) Where a certificate has been granted under this Ordinance in respect of a debt secured by a conditional transfer of immovable property and subsequent to the granting of that certificate an action is instituted in any court for the recovery of the property, the court-

(a) may, notwithstanding that the title to that property has vested in the creditor in relation to that debt, make such appropriate orders as are necessary to reconvey title to, and possession of, that property to the debtor, in relation to the debt, on the payment by the debtor of the debt together with the interest thereon in such installments and within such period not exceeding ten years, as the court thinks fit; and

The aforementioned section does not refer to an application to enforce the certificate. There is no other section in the Ordinance that enables a party to file an application to enforce the certificate issued under section 32(2). On the other hand, section 32(2) certificate, as per the law at the relevant time, could contain only a dismissal of an application and an opinion of the board as to the refusal of a suggested settlement and details about the debt as furnished by the purported debtor to the board. Thus, it could not contain a decision that can be enforced by a court merely by producing it. As explained above other orders or decisions contained in P1 certificate could not have been included in it as per section 32(2). Hence P1 certificate does not contain anything that can be enforced by mere production of it. Further the aforementioned section contemplates an action filed for the recovery of the property. As per section 6 of the Civil Procedure Code, every application to a court for relief or remedy obtainable through the exercise of court's power or authority or otherwise to invite its interference, constitute an action. It was stated in Lowe Vs Fernando 16 N L R 398 that generally "cause of action" is the wrong for the prevention or redress of which an action may be brought[6]. The wrong is the combination of the right and its violation. It is said that every action is based on a cause of action[7]. Thus, the action contemplated in section 39(2) (a) of the Ordinance also has to be based on a cause of action. In fact, the plaint in the action in the district court appears to have been drafted on purported causes of action- vide paragraph 15 of the plaint. Thus, to be successful in the action, the plaintiff had to prove her cause of action. By tendering or proving a certificate issued under section 32(2) of the ordinance which can lawfully contain a dismissal of an application tendered by the plaintiff to the board and an opinion of the board as to the reasonableness of the refusal of the defendant to accept a suggested settlement which in the opinion of the board was a fair settlement cannot prove a cause of action when it is considered with admissions made. To prove a cause of action, the plaintiff must prove a wrong done to her by the defendant. Mere opinion of the board along with the admissions mentioned above cannot prove such wrong. She should have proved that P2 is in fact a conditional transfer and she reasonably took steps to fulfill the conditions but the plaintiff failed to reconvey the property or at least that her proposed settlement was in fact a reasonable settlement but the plaintiff failed to accept it and reconvey the property. Mere proof of the opinion of the board cannot be considered as proof of such cause of action. She or person who had first-hand knowledge should have given evidence to prove such cause of action.

[6] See section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code which interprets the cause of action.
[7] Jakson V Spittel 1880 LR 5 CA 542 cited in Seylan Bank Ltd V Piyasena and Others (2005) 2 Sri L R 132

As only an officer from debt conciliation board gave evidence who has no knowledge of P2 and P3 deeds or the deeds of lease mentioned by the defendant, it cannot be considered that she proved any cause of action. In this regard, it is necessary to refer to the following decision in Silva V Sai Nona 78 N L R 313[8] which expressed its view as follows;

"In this context, the case Johanahamy V Susiripala (69 N L R 29) may be usefully referred to. In that case it was sought to be argued, as in the present case, that once the Debt Conciliation Board chose to treat a transaction involving a conditional transfer as a mortgage, it got transformed into a mortgage and the stamp of mortgage attached to the transaction even in proceedings outside the board also. This argument was rightly rejected. It was held that a conditional transfer was treated as a mortgage only for purposes of the jurisdiction of the board and that such recognition by the board as mortgage did not entail the consequence that title remained with the vendor (debtor)"[9]

"By virtue of this amendment,[10]the board is enabled to entertain, for the purposes of exercise its jurisdiction, a new category of transactions, viz, conditional transfer savouring of a mortgage. The Board is now authorised to effect a settlement between the parties to a conditional transfer. Any such settlement, on being reached and authenticated, supersedes the terms and stipulations of the original conditional transfer -sec.40.The question arises as to the consequences when no settlement between the parties is possible because of unreasonable attitude of the 'creditor' the transferee. Section 32 of the Ordinance provides for the dismissal of application in such an eventuality and for the grant of a certificate in terms of the section[11]."

"But when a conditional transfer has been squeezed into the definition of mortgage for the purpose of proceedings before Debt Conciliation Board, the engrafting does not outlive such proceedings and the transaction resumes its old label and nature after such proceedings get terminated by the dismissal of the application in terms of section 32 of the Ordinance[12]."

"The meaning given statutorily to the word 'mortgage' for the purpose of jurisdiction of the Board cannot be extended to other jurisdictions unless there is warrant in the language of the statute. The unnatural sense ascribed to the word should be confined to the statutory context and should not be extended to other contexts though in pari materia[13]."

The learned counsel for the plaintiff argued that the above decision now does not apply since section 39(2) has been introduced by an amendment after the said decision. I am not inclined to accept this argument in its totality as said before, the provisions to consider a conditional transfer as a mortgage are provided for the purposes of the Ordinance, namely to effect settlements of loans. If the legislature wanted to give power to the board to convert conditional transfers to mortgages it should have been given expressly in the ordinance or by an amending Act. As observed in the above case if there is no settlement, the document regains its old label and nature. Section 39(2) only gives a court a discretion to grant relief as provided by that section in a suitable case notwithstanding the title to the property vested in the creditor in relation to the debt, when a certificate has been granted with regard to a conditional transfer of immovable property, but as explained above, it has not done away with the proof of a cause of action.

In the backdrop of above discussion now I would consider the questions of laws allowed by this Court.

Question;

a) In terms of the provisions of Section 39(2)(a) of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance (as amended) the plaintiff is entitled to the reliefs prayed for in the plaint, on the admissions recorded and the documents admitted as evidence in the District Court without objection;

Answer;

The above assertion cannot be accepted as the admissions made and the documents marked were not sufficient to prove a cause of action; a wrong done by the defendant. A court of law is not bound to blindly follow an opinion of another institution. The court of law must form its own opinion

Question;

b) Has the Court of Appeal erred in applying to the facts of the present case the decision of Silva V Sai Nona 78 NLR 313, which has been decided before the enactment of S. 39(2)(a) of the Ordinance, and which therefore did not consider the meaning and effect of the said S.39(2)(a)?

Answer;

No

Question;

c) Has the Court of Appeal erred in holding that the certificate issued under the said S.32(2) of the Ordinance required the plaintiff to make payment of Rs.100,000/= to the Defendant along with an interest of 20% within 18 months?

Answer;

No. As the said order is included as a part of the certificate, but as per section32(2), such an order cannot be a part of the certificate.

Question;

d) Was the certificate under S.32(2) issued because there was no settlement?

Answer;

Yes.

Question;

e) Under the certificate there was no requirement that the plaintiff should pay money to the Defendant, there being no settlement between them;

Answer;

Yes, as per the law there cannot be any order made in a section 32(2) certificate requiring the plaintiff to pay as there was no settlement. However, the certificate issued included such an order as part of it which is not supported by provisions in section 32(2).

Question;

f) Has the Court of Appeal misunderstood and misinterpreted the meaning and effect of the certificate of non-settlement issued under the said S.32(2)?

Answer;

No. The Court of Appeal has only referred to the order contained in the certificate and has not expressed any view regarding whether such an inclusion of an order is correct but has stated that the plaintiff had not made payment as per the requirement in the said certificate. Since such an order was correctly or wrongly included in the certificate by referring to it among the contents of the certificate by stating that the said order is on the over leaf and 20% interest per year was ordered, the Court of Appeal was referring to the factual situation in relation to the certificate actually issued. The conclusion of the court of appeal was to affirm the analysis of the learned district judge as no cause of action was proved by the plaintiff.

Question;

g) Has the Court of Appeal erred by upholding as correct the finding of the District Court that the plaint of the Plaintiff did not disclose a cause of action?

Answer;

No, the decisions of the District Court confirmed by the Court of Appeal was that the plaintiff failed to prove a cause of action.

Question;

h) Has the Court of Appeal failed to analyze and carefully consider the provisions of section 39(2)(a) of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance (as amended). ” this court.

Answer;

No, sufficient analysis with reference to case law has been done and has come to the correct finding at the end.

For the foregoing reasons, this court cannot allow the appeal. Therefore, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT

YASANTHA KODAGODA, PC, J.

This judgment relates to an Appeal from a Judgment of the High Court of the Provinces of the Western Province holden in Avissawella, setting aside a Judgment of the District Court of Homagama.

At the argument stage before us, the Respondent was absent and unrepresented. This Court took up this matter for argument, after satisfying ourselves that the Appellant has on three occasions complied with directives issued by this Court in issuing Notice of this Appeal to the Respondent. In fact, Notices had been dispatched to the Respondent immediately after this Appeal was filed, immediately before the Application was taken up for consideration for the granting of leave to appeal, and thereafter following the matter being fixed for Argument. The Respondent did not respond to any of these Notices, and therefore this Court concluded that the defended is not interested in vindicating her position or defending the judgment delivered in her favour by the High Court.

Plaint, Answer and the Issues

On 23rd October 2009, the Plaintiff – Respondent – Appellant filed Plaint in the District Court of Homagama stating the following:

> That the Plaintiff is a company carrying out amongst other business activities, the running of a private hospital named Pannipitiya Nursing Home.
> That the Defendant joined the Plaintiff company as a Probationary Trainee. At the time the Defendant joined the Plaintiff company, the parties entered into a Service Agreement dated 16th October 2004 (a copy of which was attached to the Plaint marked "P1").

That the said agreement contained amongst others the following three conditions, namely, (i) there shall be a training programme of two years duration for which the cost would be borne by the Plaintiff, (ii) following the completion of the training, the Defendant shall serve the Plaintiff for a period of five years, and (iii) if the agreement is breached, the Defendant shall pay a sum of Rs. 50,000/= to the Plaintiff.

That the Defendant commenced the afore-stated training programme on 16th October, 2004.

That while serving the Plaintiff, with effect from 18th July 2008, without any prior notice, the Defendant ceased to report for work.

That two attempts made in writing to contact the Defendant failed.

That since the Defendant has breached a condition of the afore-stated agreement, she is obliged to pay the Plaintiff a sum of Rs. 50,000/=, and that she is estopped from pleading that she cannot pay the Plaintiff the said sum.

That in view of the foregoing, a cause of action has arisen to the Plaintiff to institute legal action to claim a sum of Rs. 50,000/= from the Defendant, together with legal interest thereon.

Wherefore, the Plaintiff prayed that Judgment and Decree be entered against the Defendant in favour of the Plaintiff, directing the Defendant to pay the Plaintiff a sum of Rs. 50,000/=, together with legal interest thereon.

In response, by Answer dated 18th May 2010, the Defendant – Appellant – Respondent took up the following position:

That the Plaintiff did not provide any service training or education to the Defendant, and that by observing the conduct of senior personnel, the Defendant secured an understanding regarding the work of a hospital laboratory.

That the Plaintiff did not conduct itself according to the agreement marked "P1" and that the said Agreement had been prepared to shield itself from labour and other laws of the country, that therefore the said Agreement was a sham contract, and thus based on such Agreement, it was not possible to institute legal action against the Defendant.

That without providing training to the Defendant as provided in the afore-stated Agreement, and without issuing a formal letter of appointment and sufficient wages, the Plaintiff had retained the services of the Defendant.

Wherefore, the Defendant prayed that the Plaintiff's case be dismissed.

On 30th July 2010, on behalf of the Plaintiff, the following issues were raised:

(1) Whether the Defendant has breached the conditions of Agreement marked "P1"?

(2) If so, whether the Plaintiff was entitled to the reliefs prayed for in the Plaint?

The issues raised on behalf of the Defendant were the following:

(3) Whether the Plaintiff had breached the conditions of Agreement marked 'P1'?

(4) Was the afore-stated agreement entered into, in order to enable the Plaintiff to shield itself from the industrial laws of the country?

(5) Was the afore-stated agreement intended not to be enforced and thus was a sham agreement?

(6) Did the Plaintiff obtain the services of the Defendant without providing her with training as provided in Agreement marked 'P1', without issuing her a letter of appointment and adequate wages?

(7) If the afore-stated issues are answered in the affirmative, can the Plaintiff obtain the reliefs prayed for in the Plaint?

Plaintiff's case

During the trial, the Administrative Officer of the Plaintiff company Shakila Nayana Kumari testified on behalf of the Plaintiff. According to her testimony, following an advertisement calling for applications, the Defendant had submitted an application for the post of 'Laboratory Technician', and following an interview, she had been selected for training for the post 'Probationary Laboratory Technician'. Under cross-examination, the witness has clarified that, the Defendant was recruited on 16th October 2004. This position tallies with the date on which Agreement "P1" has been entered into. At the stage of recruitment, the Plaintiff had entered into an agreement with the Defendant, marked "P1".

Following recruitment, a two years training had been provided to the Defendant. Subsequently, the Defendant had been confirmed in the position. After approximately 3½ years of service, the Defendant had presented a written request to leave the organization. It had been explained to the Defendant that she could not leave the organization in view of the agreement entered into. Subsequently, the Defendant had ceased to report for duty. Under cross-examination, the witness has stated that the defendant ceased to report for work with effect from 18th July 2008. Thereafter, two letters had been sent to her for no avail.

Under cross-examination, it had been suggested to the witness that no formal laboratory training was provided to the Defendant by the Plaintiff with the aid of trained laboratory technicians and qualified doctors. The witness has denied this suggestion. The witness has stated the names of two doctors and two senior laboratory technicians who participated as trainers. Learned Counsel for the Defendant has suggested to the witness that no trainers had participated in the training programme including those whose names were revealed as having functioned as trainers. This suggestion has also been denied by the witness. However, during the argument stage, learned Counsel for the Plaintiff – Respondent - Appellant submitted to this Court that, what was provided to the Defendant was an 'on the job training'. That, such a training was provided by serving technicians of the organization, has not been seriously contested by learned Counsel for the Defendant, when he cross-examined the witness. In fact, the witness's cross-examination seems to have been aimed at establishing that fact and that no formal training by external trainers was provided to the Defendant.

The witness has also testified regarding the conduct of an examination at the end of the training period. The examination had been conducted by three doctors. They had reported that the Defendant lacked 'theoretical knowledge'. The position taken up by learned Counsel for the Plaintiff – Respondent – Appellant during the appeal hearing before us, was that as the Defendant was not successful at the afore-stated examination, her training period was extended. The witness also took up the position that, following an extended training period of three months, the Plaintiff had deemed the Defendant to have been successful at the examination. However, the witness has not stated with effect from when the Plaintiff had successfully completed the training programme. Neither oral nor documentary evidence to that effect had been presented at the trial. The witness's position was that, before the certificate of 'completion of training' could be issued, the Defendant had ceased to report for work.

Under cross-examination, the witness has admitted that, the Defendant was not issued with a 'letter of appointment'. The witness has clarified that, a letter of appointment was not issued, because the Defendant had been required to enhance her theoretical knowledge. The witness has admitted that, following the training, the Defendant had not been issued with a certificate of 'successful completion of training'. The position of the witness was that, at a particular point of time, the Defendant was placed on the salary scale of a Medical Laboratory Technician. When questioned by the learned Counsel for the Defendant as to why the Defendant was paid the salary of a Medical Laboratory Technician without issuing a 'letter of appointment', the witness had no answer to give. It has also been suggested to the witness that it was the Plaintiff who breached Agreement marked "P1". This suggestion has also been denied by the witness. The witness has stated that the Defendant handed over to her a 'letter of resignation', stating that she was leaving due to personal reasons. However, this letter was not produced at the trial. No other evidence had been presented on behalf of the Plaintiff company.

Defendant's case

The Defendant had testified on her behalf. She has admitted having entered into "P1" with the Plaintiff. Following recruitment, she had been initially assigned to the 'emergency treatment unit' and had attended to miscellaneous functions of that unit. She had thereafter been assigned to the location where blood samples are obtained. At that location, she had attended to functions such as writing bills and taking samples to the laboratory. She had thereafter requested that she be given the opportunity of taking blood samples, and subsequently she had received that opportunity. She implied thereby that she obtained 'on the job training' in that regard. She emphasized that she did not receive any formal training either in the form of lectures or practical training. After some time working at the Plaintiff company, she had been assigned to the laboratory. At the laboratory, she had through her own observation and with the assistance of seniors who worked at the laboratory, gradually learnt various functions associated with testing of samples.

The Defendant has testified with regard to an incident where she had tendered a letter to the management requesting that an acknowledgement be issued that she handed over the originals of her educational certificates, and containing an undertaking that the company would release them to the Defendant when required. This request had resulted in the head of the organization having scolded her. Following that incident, she had decided to leave the organization. Afterwards, she had submitted a letter giving one months notice of her intended resignation. She claims to have thereafter been subjected to maltreatment. Thus, she had ceased to report for work.

In her evidence, the Defendant was emphatic that she (a) did not receive formal training for a duration of two years, (b) was not subjected to an examination (formal assessment) following a period of formal training, and (c) did not receive a letter confirming her in service.

The cross-examination of the Defendant by learned Counsel for the Plaintiff has been aimed at primarily establishing five matters, namely (i) that the Defendant received 'on the job' training, (ii) that the Defendant did not successfully complete the training programme as evident by the findings of the three consultant medical specialists who assessed her, (iii) that during her service at the Plaintiff company the Defendant was paid a salary, (iv) that the Plaintiff did not violate Agreement marked "P1", and (v) that the Defendant acted in violation of Agreement marked "P1". As regards '(i)' and '(ii)', the Plaintiff disagreed with the position taken up by learned counsel for the Plaintiff. Her position was that, she did not receive a formal training as provided for in "P1", and that her performance was not properly assessed. She has not contested the suggestion that she was paid a salary. Her position was that, while she did not act contrary to "P1", and that it was the Plaintiff who acted in breach of the said Agreement.

Judgment of the District Court

Following the conclusion of evidence, on 18th February 2013, the learned District Judge delivered judgment in favour of the Plaintiff. In the said judgment, the learned District Judge has taken into consideration the facts that, the Defendant has admitted that (i) in terms of Agreement marked "P1", the Defendant had been enrolled by the Plaintiff to a laboratory technician training programme, (ii) the said Agreement stipulated a training period of 2 years, (iii) following such training period, the Defendant was required to serve the Plaintiff for a further period of 5 years, and (iii) if the Defendant were to cease to work for the Plaintiff prior to the 7 years cumulative period, in terms of the Agreement, she was liable to pay the Plaintiff a sum of Rs. 50,000/=. Thus, the learned District Judge has arrived at the finding that the Defendant has intentionally breached a condition of the Agreement marked "P1", and that on a balance of probabilities, the Plaintiff has established its case against the Defendant. The the learned District Judge has answered the 1st and 2nd issues in the affirmative, 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th issues in the negative, and has held that the Defendant cannot in any event prove the 7th issue in the affirmative. Accordingly, the learned District Judge has ruled that the Plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for, and has accordingly granted the Plaintiff the relief prayed for.

Judgment of the High Court of the Provinces

Against the Judgment of the District Court, the Defendant appealed to the High Court of the Provinces holden in Avissawella. Following hearing of the Appeal, on 12th November 2015, the learned Judge of the High Court delivered Judgment allowing the Appeal with costs payable to the Defendant by the Plaintiff at Rs. 10,000/=. The learned High Court Judge has laid emphasis on the fact that, the obligation on the part of the Defendant to serve the Plaintiff for a period of 5 years would arise only after completion of the training period. According to Agreement marked "P1", at the end of the training period, a 'written and oral examination' should be held. Such an examination has not been held. The learned Judge has further held that, in any event, the contractual obligation of serving the Plaintiff for 5 years would arise only after the Defendant passed the afore-stated examination. In the circumstances, the learned High Court Judge has concluded that, it was in fact the Plaintiff who had breached Agreement marked "P1", and thus no cause of action had accrued in favour of the Plaintiff. Therefore, the learned Judge of the High Court has concluded that the learned District Judge had erred in holding with the Plaintiff and granting relief. Thus, he has while allowing the Appeal, dismissed the Plaintiff's action with costs.

Grant of leave and question of law

On 28th March 2017, following the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff – Respondent – Petitioner supporting the Petition seeking the grant of leave to appeal, this Court had granted leave to appeal on the following question of law:

> "Has the learned High Court Judge erred in law in coming to the finding that the Petitioner (sic 'Appellant') acting in breach of the Agreement "P1" failed to hold a written and oral examination, contrary to the evidence that the Respondent's work had been evaluated by three consultant doctors, which clearly amount to a proper examination of the skills acquired by the Respondent as a trainee laboratory technician?"

Analysis of the evidence, application of the law and conclusions

In order to decide this matter, it is necessary to carefully examine the clauses of Agreement marked "P1". According to Clause 1 of "P1", which has been titled 'Service Contract', the Plaintiff has been designated as the 'employer' and the Defendant as the 'trainee'. It further states that, the trainee (Defendant) had entered a 'training programme' relating to the position 'laboratory technician'. The afore-stated 'training' will be provided at the expense of the employer (Plaintiff). The said 'training programme' shall be of 24 months duration, at the end of which, the trainee (Defendant) shall sit for a 'written and oral examination' that will be held and is required to pass the said examination. Clause 2 of the Agreement provides that, following the passing of the afore-stated examination, the trainee shall serve the employer at the Pannipitiya Medical Services (Pvt.) Ltd in the position of 'Laboratory Technician' for a period of 5 years. Should the trainee be unsuccessful at passing the afore-stated examination, the trainee shall serve the employer in a different position. Clause 2 does not state the duration of employment in the alternate position, should the trainee be unsuccessful at passing the afore-stated examination. Clause 3 provides that, (a) upon successful passing of the afore-stated examination, when the trainee commences functioning in the position 'Laboratory Technician', or (b) if the trainee is unsuccessful at the examination when functioning in the alternate position that is given to her, she would agree to contribute 8% of her salary as the 'trust fund contribution' and contribute towards a 'security deposit'. Clause 4 of the Agreement provides that, should the Agreement be breached under whatsoever circumstances, the trainee (Defendant) shall pay a sum of Rs. 50,000/= to the employer (Plaintiff). Clause 4 further provides that, should the trainee leave the training without completion or should she be expelled from the training on disciplinary grounds, the trainee shall pay the employer (Plaintiff) a sum of money stipulated by the employer as being the cost of the training.

From the relief prayed in the Plaint, it is evident that the Plaintiff has sought a decree from the District Court for liquidated damages. This according to the Plaint and the evidence presented on behalf of the Plaintiff arises out of the Defendant having failed to perform the obligation contained in clause 2 of the agreement by ceasing to work for the Plaintiff prior to the expiry of 5 years following the conduct of the examination. It is necessary to observe that, 'working for the employer for 5 years post passing of the examination' or 'working for the employer for an unspecified period in an alternate position following the trainee being unsuccessful at the examination' as provided in clause 2 of the agreement on the one hand, are alternate obligations conferred on the Defendant by agreement marked "P1". According to the Plaintiff, it is the first of these two obligations the Plaintiff claims the Defendant defaulted. Further, the Plaintiff alleges that, the Defendant failed to comply with the ensuing obligation of making a payment of Rs. 50,000/= prior to her premature departure from service at the Pannipitiya Nursing Home.

An analysis of the evidence presented before the learned District Judge is necessary to determine whether the Plaintiff is entitled in law to the relief of liquidated damages against the Defendant.

There is in my view cogent evidence on the following matters: On 16th October 2004, the Defendant had been recruited by the Plaintiff as a 'Trainee Laboratory Technician'. Following her recruitment as a 'trainee', the Plaintiff has provided some form of training to the Defendant. As opposed to providing to the Defendant a formal training programme, I am inclined to agree with the submission of the learned Counsel for the Appellant that, what was provided was an 'on the job training'. Though the learned Counsel for the Defendant during cross-examination of the witness of the Plaintiff and the Defendant during her testimony had sought to impeach the case for the Plaintiff on the footing that a formal training programme was not provided to the Defendant, it is my view that as the Agreement marked "P1" does not specify the nature and the content of the training programme that the employer (Plaintiff) was obligated to provide the trainee (Defendant), it cannot be successfully proved that the Plaintiff breached "P1" by not making arrangements for the Defendant to follow a 'formal training programme', and for having provided only a 'on the job training'.

As depicted in "P7", "P8" and "P9", on 18th March 2008, the Defendant had been subjected to an 'assessment' by two Consultant Pathologists and a Consultant Microbiologist / Virologist. Though not established in the form of direct evidence, from the date appearing immediately below the signature on "P7", it can be inferred that this examination had been held on 18th March 2008. Out of the three assessors, while Consultant Pathologist Dr. Geethika Jayaweera and Consultant Microbiologist and Virologist Dr. Geethani Wickramasinghe have in their report under the category 'comment' reported that they recommend the "promotion", Consultant Pathologist Dr. A. Eleyperuma has reported that the Defendant "needs to improve in the theoretical knowledge". The Agreement ("P1") provides clearly that, following a "training programme" of 24 months duration, the employer would subject the trainee to a "written and oral examination". It is thus clear that, whereas Agreement "P1" requires an assessment to be conducted upon the expiry of 24 months of training, the afore-stated assessment had been held following a period of approximately 40 months. Furthermore, the nature of the assessment to be conducted upon the expiry of 24 months of training has been described in "P1" as a "written and oral examination". However, the assessment carried out by the three medical specialists regarding the Defendant can only be described as a 'viva voice' or an 'oral examination'. The Plaintiff has offered no evidence that a 'written examination' was held. Thus, both as regards the time at which the assessment ought to have been carried out, as well as the nature of the assessment, it is clear that the Plaintiff has acted in breach of Clause 1 of the Agreement.

The position of the Plaintiff is that, as the Defendant was not successful at the afore-stated examination held on 18th March 2008, the 'training period' of the Defendant was extended. The Plaintiff sought to justify the extension of the training period of the Defendant, based on the comment made by Dr. A. Eleyperuma. It seems that, it was Dr. A. Eleyperuma's comment that resulted in the Plaintiff deciding to extend the 'on the job training'. The Plaintiff's position is that at some stage thereafter, they deemed that the Defendant had successfully completed the training. Though the witness for the Plaintiff has taken up that position, it appears that no formal assessment similar to the assessment carried out on 18th March 2008 had been held thereafter. No explanation in that regard has been provided, either. Further, witness Shakila Nayana Kumari has also taken up the position that the head of 'laboratory services' reported that the Defendant had developed to a stage where she could face a re-examination. Nevertheless, a re-examination has not been conducted. Nor had a formal entry been made reflecting that the Defendant had successfully completed the extended period of training. Furthermore, the Plaintiff has also failed to acknowledge the fact that the Defendant had successfully completed the training, by issuing the Defendant a certificate of completion of training or a formal letter of appointment signaling the completion of her training period and or completion of the period of probation. In fact, the position of the Plaintiff as provided by the Administrative Officer is that, a letter of appointment was not issued to the Defendant, because she had not successfully completed the training. Thus, this Court must necessarily conclude that, there is no cogent evidence that the Defendant had successfully completed the extended period of training, and thereby assumed duties of the substantive post of 'Laboratory Technician', at any time preceding her having ceased to report for work.

Be that as it may, Clause 2 of the Agreement specifically provides as to what the employer should do, if the trainee is unsuccessful at the 'written and oral examination'. It provides that should the trainee be unsuccessful, the trainee shall accept a different appointment that will be given by the employer to her. "P1" does not provide for an extension of the training programme. Therefore, in terms of the Agreement, the employer (Plaintiff) was not contractually entitled to extend the period of training on the premise that the trainee was unsuccessful at the examination. Thus, the afore-stated 'extension' of training period also amounts to a breach of the terms of the Agreement marked 'P1'.

According to Clause 2 of the Agreement, the obligation cast on the trainee (Defendant) to serve the employer (Plaintiff) for a period of 5 years arises only upon the trainee successfully passing the afore-stated 'written and oral examination'. The Plaintiff has not presented any evidence at the trial to establish that the Defendant passed such an examination at any point of time subsequent to the extension of the training period. Thus, there is no basis in terms of the Agreement to allege that the Defendant breached "P1" by not serving the Plaintiff for a period of 5 years following successful passing of the 'written and oral examination'.

In view of the foregoing, I conclude that the Agreement between the Plaintiff and the Defendant had been breached by the Plaintiff by its failure to comply with a substantial part of his obligations towards the Defendant, prior to the impugned failure on the part of the Defendant taking place. The impugned breach on the part of the Defendant is intrinsically linked and indivisible with the obligations on the part of the Plaintiff which the Plaintiff failed to fulfill. The fulfilment of the obligation cast on the Defendant contained in clause 2 of the Agreement is founded upon the Plaintiff fulfilling his obligations contained in clause 2 of the Agreement, which as pointed above by me was not fulfilled. The failure to either treat the Defendant as having been successful at the assessment and appoint her as a Laboratory Technician or in the alternative treat her as having been unsuccessful at the assessment and appointed her to an alternate position, goes into the root of the Agreement and is necessarily linked to the obligation cast on the Defendant to serve the Plaintiff for the stipulated time period. The breach on the part of the Plaintiff is inseparable with obligation cast on the Defendant to serve the Plaintiff. Therefore, I hold that, the Plaintiff had breached the Agreement well before the impugned failure on the part of the Defendant. In the circumstances, the Defendant was entitled to treat herself as having been discharged from her contractual obligations and thus was contractually entitled unilaterally terminate working at the Pannipitiya Nursing Home prior to the expiry of the stipulated 5 years period.

In this instance, the Plaintiff has sought liquidated damages as provided for in Clause 4 of the Agreement marked "P1". The grant of relief in the nature of liquidated damages arise only in instances where the Plaintiff had fulfilled his contractual obligations towards the Defendant and not breached the Agreement. As pointed out above, it is evident that in this instance, the Plaintiff had breached the Agreement well before the impugned breach by the Defendant. In such circumstances, the Plaintiff would not be entitled for liquidated damages.

In this regard, it is pertinent to recall an observation made by Justice Sisira De Abrew in Wickrema Pathiranage Mahesh Ruwan Pathirana v. Ginthota Sarukkale Vitharange Hemalatha Piyathilaka Ginthota (SC Appeal 218/2014, SC Minutes 15.02.2017) wherein he has held as follows: "It is an accepted principle in law that the wrongdoer is not permitted to take advantage of his own wrongful acts. This principle is applicable to a case of breach of contract".

It would also be seen that the learned High Court Judge was quite correct in holding that the Plaintiff – Respondent had acted in breach of the Agreement marked "P1" by not conducting a 'written and oral examination'. As explained by me above, the assessment held on 8th March 2008 carried out by three medical specialists, can only be recognized as an 'oral examination' which is short of the nature of the examination provided for by the Agreement marked "P1". Thus, I must answer the question of law referred to above, in the negative.

In the foregoing circumstances and the conclusions reached by me, I dismiss this Appeal, while upholding the Judgment pronounced by the learned High Court Judge.

Accordingly, the Appeal Dismissed.

P Padman Surasena J

The Applicant-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Applicant) filed an application for and on behalf of B. D. Niroshan (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Employee) in the Labour Tribunal of Nuwara Eliya complaining that the Respondent-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Employer) had unreasonably terminated the service of the Employee. The Applicant, through its application sought reinstatement of the service of the Employee and also sought for him, compensation for the complained termination of service, the consequential loss of promotions, increments and other benefits.

The Employee was serving as a Banking Assistant of the Nuwara Eliya Branch of the Employer. The Employer by the letter dated 07-09-2004 produced marked R 11, asked the Employee to show cause as to why he should not be disciplinarily dealt with, in relation to the charges set out therein. The said charges revolve around an incident in which the Employee was alleged to have removed from the counter, three cheques drawn from his own current account, to prevent them being presented for payment, as there were no sufficient funds in his current account to make the payment for the said cheques.

In the Labour Tribunal, the learned President, after considering the evidence presented before him, had concluded by his order dated 27-03-2009, that the counts 1, 2 and 3 set out in R 11 have been proved by the Employer on a balance of probability. The said counts are as follows.

1. While assigned to Nuwara Eliya Branch of the Bank as a Banking Assistant on 10th August 2004, you did wrongfully and dishonestly remove the following cheques drawn on your Current Account No. 87011 and presented for payment by 03 constituents of the Bank thereby denying the said constituents of the Bank receiving credit they were entitled to receive to the debit of your account on that day.

Constituent	Cheque No.	Date drawn	Amount (Rs.)
Mayura Trade Centre	809113	10.08.2004	4,000/-
Pushpa Hardware	816427	10.08.2004	3,830/-
Siraj Stores	816434	10.08.2004	500/-

2. You did improperly remove the cheques described in Charge 01 above for your personal gain as you did not deposit adequate funds in your current account to honour the said cheques.

3. You did issue the cheques described in Charge 01 above without depositing sufficient funds in your current account to meet such commitments thereby acting in contravention of the rules of discipline applicable to employees of the Bank.

The learned President of the Labour Tribunal in his order, had formed the view that the proof of the above charges is serious enough to warrant the dismissal of the Employee. However, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had thereafter concluded in the same order, that the decision by the Employer to terminate the service of the Employee is not a just and equitable order. The learned President seems to have based the said decision on the following reasons.

i. There is no evidence to establish that the Employer had taken any disciplinary action against the Trainee Banking Assistant Sirisoma although said Sirisoma had abetted the Employee to commit one or more instances of misconduct referred to in the charge sheet marked R 11*.*

ii. The documents marked A 9 and A 10 produced by the Employee have revealed that even the manager of the bank had deposited money into his account when the funds were insufficient to make payments to the cheques drawn.

iii. The documents produced by the Employee marked A 10, A 11 and A 12 have shown that W H Warakapola who had testified before the Labour Tribunal also had issued cheques from his account when the balance was not sufficient for the payment of those cheques.

iv. The evidence adduced before the Labour Tribunal does not reveal any prejudice being caused to the customers of the bank by the action of the Employee.

v. The money due to the customers has been duly credited to their account and no fraud has taken place.

vi. The document produced marked A 13 shows that the Employee had previously discharged his duties honestly.

vii. As per the document produced marked A 16 (dated 11-06-2004) the Personnel Manager of the Employer had even commended the Employee.

viii. The Employee who had joined the Employer in the year 1993 had not been subjected to any disciplinary proceedings before this incident.

ix. The dismissal from service is the maximum punishment that could be imposed on an employee.

x. As the employer-employee relationship is a human relationship, the seriousness of the misconduct must be considered as a question of fact when deciding the reasonableness of the punishment.

The learned President of the Labour Tribunal had ordered the reinstatement of the Employee in service but had decided not to award him the back wages. This is because the learned President of the Labour Tribunal has concluded that the Employer has established that the Employee had directly induced the Trainee Banking Assistant Sirisoma to act contrary to the rules of the Employer bank and that the Employee is directly responsible for the said inducement.

Being aggrieved by the order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal, the Employer had appealed to the Provincial High Court. The learned Provincial High Court Judge after conclusion of the argument of the said appeal, by his judgment dated 09-12-2010, had set aside the part of the order of the Labour Tribunal containing the direction to reinstate the Employee in service and affirmed the rest of the order of the Labour Tribunal including the conclusion that the Employee was not entitled to compensation.

Being aggrieved by the judgment of the learned Provincial High Court Judge, the Employee sought Leave to Appeal from this Court and accordingly, on the 28-03-2012, this Court granted Leave to Appeal on the questions of law set out in paragraph 10 (b) and (d) of the Petition dated 06-01-2011. The said questions of law are reproduced below.

i. Was the judgment of the Honourable Judge of the High Court just and equitable?
ii. Did the Honourable Judge of the High Court err in law by not evaluating the provisions of Section 31B (6) (c) of the Industrial Disputes Act?

Although the reinstatement of the Employee in service without back wages was ordered, the President of the Labour Tribunal in unequivocal terms has held; that the Employer has proved the acts of misconduct referred to in the first, second and third charges set out in R 11; and that the seriousness of the said charges is grave enough to warrant the termination of the service of the Employee. As has already been mentioned, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal has also concluded that the Employee had directly induced the Trainee Banking Assistant Sirisoma to act contrary to the rules of the Employer bank and that the Employee is directly responsible for the said inducement.

The Labour Tribunal has pronounced its order on 27-03-2009. The service of the employee was terminated with effect from 03-09-2004. The learned President of the Labour Tribunal has not directed in his order, to reinstate the Employee from the date of the termination of his service. Thus, the reinstatement of the Employee as per the order of the Labour Tribunal, would clearly result in a break in the Employee's service from 03-09-2004 to the date of reinstatement which could have been a date after 27-03-2009 which is approximately a loss of four and a half years of his service. Despite the above, the Employee has not challenged the order of the Labour Tribunal. This means that the Employee for all purposes has accepted the conclusions arrived at by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal.

The case of Peoples' Bank Vs Lanka Banku Sevaka Sangamaya[1] is directly on the above point. Further, the facts of that case also involve some incidents in which the workman in that case had issued several cheques to third parties from his account without sufficient funds in his account. In that case, the workman was a clerk attached to the Peoples' Bank who had served the bank for twenty-five years. On an application made by him to challenge the termination of his service, the Labour Tribunal had held that the termination of his service was justified, but ordered payment of compensation. He then appealed to the Provincial High Court but the Provincial High Court dismissed his appeal and affirmed the order of the Labour Tribunal. He thereafter did not appeal against the Provincial High Court judgment to any Superior Court. However, the Peoples' Bank appealed to the Supreme Court against the judgment of the Provincial High Court on the question whether the Provincial High Court had erred in affirming the order of the Labour Tribunal to pay compensation to the workman even when he was found guilty of misconduct and the termination of his service was held to be justified. This Court held that the workman had accepted the order of the Labour Tribunal which held that the termination of his employment was justified, since the workman had not appealed against the orders of the lower courts. The following two excerpts from the judgment of His Lordship Justice Sisira J. de Abrew would show how this Court looked at the relevant issues in that case.

"… The workman was a clerk attached to the Peoples' Bank (Appellant Bank) and served the bank for 25 years. He appealed to the High Court against the order of the Labour Tribunal and his appeal was dismissed by the High Court. He did not appeal against the said order to any Superior Court. Thus, the order of the Labour Tribunal which held his termination justified has been accepted by him. …."

"…… The Appellant Bank, after an inquiry, terminated his services for the said acts of misconduct. The Labour Tribunal however ordered compensation amounting to Rs.584,425/25 to be paid to him by the Appellant Bank. It is established that his services were terminated for the acts of misconduct committed by him. Then why should the Appellant Bank pay compensation to a person who was found guilty of misconduct and violated disciplinary circulars of the bank. This was the question that was presented, at the hearing of this appeal, to this court by learned counsel for the Appellant Bank. The most important question that must be decided in this case is whether the workman whose termination of services was held to be justified by the Labour Tribunal is entitled to compensation especially when he was found guilty of acts of misconduct. When considering this question, I must consider the following matters.

1. The workman had not caused any monetary loss to the Appellant Bank and the acts of misconduct committed by him are private transactions.
2. Whether the workman had an unblemished record.

I now advert to these matters. It is correct to say that acts of misconduct committed by him are private transactions between him and third parties and that he had not caused any monetary loss to the Appellant Bank. As I pointed out earlier the cheques issued by him have been dishonored by the bank on the grounds that there were no sufficient funds in his account and that the cheques were issued after the account had been closed. These acts clearly demonstrate that he was dishonest when he issued the cheques. When an employee of the Appellant Bank committed the above-mentioned dishonest acts, they will affect the reputation of the bank and such acts would undoubtedly erode the confidence of the people that they have towards the bank. Needless to say, that the existence of a bank depends on public confidence. When employees of the Appellant Bank behave in this manner, it will affect the reputation of the Bank and therefore the Bank must take disciplinary actions against such employees. In my view such persons cannot function in Banks. When compensation is awarded to the employees who committed the above acts of misconduct, such a decision can be construed as an encouragement to commit further acts of misconduct. ….."

In the instant case, the Employer has issued specific instructions to the members of the staff by way of a circular as to how they should maintain current accounts in the Employer bank. This circular dated 08th March 1984 has been produced marked R 7.

Reproducing at least some of the rules contained therein would be relevant. They are as follows.

i. All current accounts should be segregated and kept in one ledger or in one section of the ledger.
ii. Members of the staff should maintain their current accounts at the Branch to which they are attached.
iii. All credits to staff accounts should be referred to the Manager of the Branch and satisfactory explanation given for the source of such deposit and thereafter the credit slip must be authorized by him by placing his signature on the credit slip and only thereafter should the cheque or cash be deposited. The Manager should not delegate this authority to any other officer of the branch.
iv. Managers should not UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES grant members of the staff any temporary overdraft. Any request for temporary overdrafts should be referred by the Manager to the Loans Committee at Head Office with his recommendation. The facility may be granted only after approval is received.
v. Cheques issued by members of the staff without adequate funds in their accounts should be returned 'UNPAID' just like any other customers in the normal course of business. Disciplinary action will be taken against those who flout these instructions regarding grant of temporary overdrafts including the Manager who approved the unauthorized temporary overdraft.
vi. Current accounts of staff members should be closed on the first cheque returned by the branch for lack of funds.

The Employer bank had issued the above circular as far back as 08-03-1984. Thus, the Employee knew very well about the above rules and the seriousness of the actions he was engaged in. He therefore had taken upon himself, the risk of the Employer taking disciplinary action against him, when he issued the relevant cheques without sufficient funds in his current account. Moreover, as has been held by both the Labour Tribunal and the Provincial High Court, the Employee had induced Trainee Bank Assistant Sirisoma to achieve the results he had desired. The way he had chosen to achieve the expected results is exactly what his employer has sought to stop by issuing the circular R 7. Conclusion arrived at, by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal in that regard is that the Employee had directly induced the Trainee Banking Assistant Sirisoma to act contrary to the rules of the Employer bank and that the Employee is directly responsible for the said inducement. This is in addition to the conclusion that the proof of the acts of misconduct in the first, second and third charges is sufficient to warrant the termination of the service of the Employee. It is opportune at this stage to see how this Court has approached the question of termination of an employee of a bank. The following instances would shed more light on the said question.

In M Sithamparanathan Vs. People's Bank,[2] the workman was a Grade IV officer of the People's Bank who functioned as a ledger officer. He was served with a charge sheet setting out seven charges relating to an incident of authorizing payment of a fraudulent withdrawal of Rs. 4500/= from a savings deposit account. Although he was only found negligent regarding the said withdrawal, His Lordship Justice Siva Sellaiah in the judgment pronounced in the Court of Appeal, underscored in the following excerpt, the importance of taking into consideration, the element of a bank losing confidence in its employees.

"….. It is needless to emphasize that the utmost confidence is expected of any officer employed in a Bank. Not only has he to transact business with the public but also he has to deal with money belonging to customers in the safe custody of the Bank. As such he owes a duty both to the Bank to preserve its fair name and integrity and to the customer whose money lies in deposit with the Bank. Integrity and confidence thus are indispensable and where an officer has forfeited such confidence and has been shown up as being involved in any fraudulent or questionable transaction, both public interest and the interest of the bank demand that he should be removed from such confidence. …."

The above excerpt in the judgment of His Lordship Justice Siva Sellaiah was cited with approval, by His Lordship the then Chief Justice G P S de Silva in his judgment in the case of Bank of Ceylon Vs. Manivasagasivam.[3] The workman in that case was a Grade II Clerk in the Personnel and Administration Division of the Bank of Ceylon at the time of the termination of his service. The case for the bank of Ceylon was that there was a loss of confidence in the workman by reason of the part he had played in an attempt made by certain other persons to fraudulently transfer a sum of money from Sri Lanka to accounts which had been opened in a Swiss Bank. The evidence led on behalf of the bank had clearly shown that the certification of the signature of the person intending to open an account in a foreign bank by an "Approved Bank" is an essential requirement and that the Bank of Ceylon is one such "Approved Bank". The evidence had also clearly shown that it was by reason of the intervention of the workman in that case, that two other persons were able to secure the certification of their signatures by an "Approved Bank" in Sri Lanka. The said workman had been in the service of the bank of Ceylon for eleven years. His Lordship the then Chief Justice in his judgment holding that the High Court had failed to address its mind to a significant fact namely the kind of institution in which the workman was employed, cited the above excerpt from the judgment of His Lordship Justice Siva Sellaiah in M Sithamparanthan's case,[4] and stated as follows.

"…. It seems to be that by reason of the part played by the applicant in two transactions which, to say the least, were questionable, he has clearly forfeited the confidence reposed in him as an employee of the Bank. In these circumstances, the Bank should not and cannot continue to employ him. …"

In National Savings Bank Vs. Ceylon Bank Employees' Union,[5] the bank had dismissed a clerk in its service for an alleged misconduct at an examination conducted by the Banker's Training Institute as the said clerk (workman) was detected having in his possession, notes relevant to the question paper he was answering, by the supervisor at the examination hall. The Banker's Training Institute reported the matter to the bank. The National Savings Bank then called for explanation from the workman. The workman admitted having committed an offence by having in his possession, the notes relevant to the paper he was answering at the said examination but pleaded for mercy. The National Savings Bank however terminated his service. Upon an application filed by the workman, the Labour Tribunal after the inquiry, directed the reinstatement of the workman but did not award the back wages. The National Savings Bank appealed to the Court of Appeal against the said order of the Labour Tribunal. The Court of Appeal affirmed the order of the President of the Labour Tribunal. The National Savings Bank then appealed to the Supreme Court against the said order. His Lordship Justice Soza in his judgment had the following to say about the honesty of the employees of a bank.

[5] 1982 (2) SLR 629.

"…. The public have a right to expect a high standard of honesty in persons employed in a bank and bank authorities have a right to insist that their employees should observe a high standard of honesty. This is an implied condition of service in a bank. Conduct on the part of a bankman which tends to undermine public confidence amounts to misconduct. Whether the misconduct relates to the discharge of his duties in the bank or not, if it reflects on the bankman's honesty, it renders him unfit to serve in a bank and justifies the dismissal…"

"….. The learned President found that Amarasuriya has innocently taken the examination notes into the hall but in the same breath he declared that an offence has been committed, and a serious offence at that. He went on to hold that Amarasuriya was guilty of misconduct at an examination but not of misconduct at his workplace and ordered reinstatement. The learned President has failed to appreciate the fact that he was considering the case of an employee of a bank which is under a special duty to ensure that the honesty of its servants is not open to question. The dismissal of Amarsuriya was therefore justified. The order of the learned President cannot be allowed to stand. …"

In the case of D L K Peiris Vs Celltell Lanka Ltd.[6] the workman held the post of Assistant Manager - Credit Collections for the respondent (Celltell Lanka Ltd.), until his service was terminated. The said workman had prayed for reinstatement with back wages or in the alternative a payment of a reasonable compensation for the loss of his employment. The workman in that case had been ordered to proceed to Matale on official duty on 07-08-2003 and was ordered to stay in Kandy overnight, as was required to properly fulfill his duties there and return to Colombo only on 08-08-2003. The said workman had presented a hotel bill to the respondent (Celltell Lanka Ltd.)

for reimbursement. However, upon investigation it was revealed that the said workman in fact had not stayed in Kandy that night. To substantiate this position, the respondent (Celltell Lanka Ltd.) had led the evidence of three witnesses and produced as documentary evidence, several computer prints out of call records showing particulars of all calls made from that workman's cellular phone on the night the said workman claimed to have spent in Kandy. Her Ladyship Justice S. Thilakawardane when holding that it was not erroneous in law for the learned President of the Labour Tribunal to arrive at a conclusion that the workman in that case had engaged in misconduct and, most importantly, that the respondent (Celltell Lanka Ltd.) was reasonable in ceasing to repose trust in the workman, which is a basic trust that was necessary for the performance of the duties required of him, stated in her judgment as follows.

"The Appellant was an Assistant Manager, Credit Collections (outstation), a position of responsibility which demands integrity, competency, reliability and independence. Given the nature of the Appellant's services which was to independently handle the Respondent's work in the outstation districts, there was without a doubt an expectation by the Respondent that the Appellant was to act with the utmost integrity and honesty, arguably even more so than that required of an employee without such autonomy.

Once the Appellant fell short of this expectation it is perfectly reasonable, by any reasonable standard, that the Respondent would cease to continue to repose any confidence in the Appellant. Loss of confidence arises when the employer suspects the honesty and loyalty of the employee. It is often a subjective feeling or individual reaction to an objective set of facts and motivation. It should not be a disguise to cover up the employer's inability to establish charges in a disciplinary inquiry but must be actually based on a bona fide suspicion against the employee making it impossible or risky to the organization to continue to keep him in service. The employer-employee relationship is based on trust and confidence both in the integrity of the employee as well as his ability or capacity. Loss of confidence however, is not fully subjective and must be based on established grounds of misconduct which the law regards as sufficient. The concept of loss of confidence has been well expressed in the following terms:

> "the contractual relationship as between employer and employee so far as it concerns a position of responsibility is founded essentially on the confidence one has in the other and in the event of any incident which adversely affects that confidence the very foundation on which that contractual relationship is built should necessarily collapse…. Once this link in the chain of the contractual relationship…. snaps it would be illogical or unreasonable to bind one party to fulfill his obligations towards the other. Otherwise, it would really mean an employer being compelled to employ a person in a position of responsibility even though he has no confidence in the latter." (vide Democratic Workers' Congress vs De Mel and Wanigasekera ….)"

In the instant case, although the learned President of the Labour Tribunal has stated in his order that W H Warakapola had testified before the Labour Tribunal it is not factually correct. Evidence of only three witnesses namely, Thalindu Niranja Sirisoma who was working as a Banking Assistant at the Bank at the time of the said incident, Wasanthi Hemamala who was working as a Junior Executive at the Bank and Neil Christopher Rasiah who was working as the Manager of the Branch has been led on behalf of the Employer, while evidence of only the Employee has been led on behalf of the applicant.

In any case, even if one is to consider that both the Manager of the Branch and said W H Warakapola have issued cheques without sufficient funds in their accounts, the misconduct that the Employee in the instant case has committed is not confined to a mere issuance of cheques without sufficient funds in his account. It is much more serious as the Employee in the instant case had directly induced the Trainee Banking Assistant Sirisoma to act contrary to the rules of the Employer bank. Therefore, even if the documents produced marked A 9 to A 10 have established that the Manager of the Branch and said W H Warakapola have issued cheques without sufficient funds in their accounts, that cannot form a basis for the learned President of the Labour Tribunal to order the reinstatement of the Employee in the instant case in the given circumstances.

Another basis for the reinstatement of the Employee as per the order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal, is the fact that the Employer had not taken any disciplinary action against the Trainee Banking Assistant Sirisoma. However, it is the finding by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal himself that the Employee in the instant case had directly induced the Trainee Banking Assistant Sirisoma to act contrary to the rules of the Employer bank. Sirisoma gave evidence before the Labour Tribunal and explained in detail how he was induced by the Employee. In those circumstances, the Employer is justified in deciding that it is the Employee who had flouted the rules of the circular marked R 7 and not Sirisoma who was just a Trainee Banking Assistant at that time. In any case, Sirisoma had never issued any cheque. Thus, the said basis used by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal to order the reinstatement of the Employee in the instant case, cannot be accepted as valid.

The facts and the circumstances of the instant case, clearly justifies the decision of the Employer to discontinue the service of the Employee. The said circumstances are sufficient for the Employer to have lost confidence in the Employee. As has been discussed in the cases cited above, the banks would not be able to function with Employees in its staff who are not prepared to strictly adhere to the rules put in place by the banks to safeguard the trust reposed in them by their customers. When customers lose confidence in the bank, the bank would no longer attract business. When the bank does not attract business, it would not survive any further. Thus, in the instant case, the Employer bank is justified in terminating the service of the Employee. In the given circumstances, as held by the Provincial High Court, the Employee cannot justifiably claim compensation while the Employer cannot justifiably be compelled to pay compensation. Thus, I hold that the Employee in the instant case, is not entitled to receive any compensation from the Employer.

Therefore, I answer the question of law No. (i) in respect of which this Court has granted Leave to Appeal, in the affirmative.

The question of law No. (ii) in respect of which this Court has granted Leave to Appeal, questions whether the learned Judge of the High Court was obliged in law, to consider the provisions of section 31B (6) (c) of the Industrial Disputes Act. The relevance (if any), of that section to the instant case, would be only to the issue whether an order relating to payment of compensation to the workman, should have been made by the High Court.

For the reasons already set out above in this judgment, I have already held that the Employee in the instant case, is not entitled to receive any compensation from the Employer. Further, I have already answered in the affirmative, the question of law No. (1) (i.e., Was the judgment of the Honourable Judge of the High Court just and equitable?). This means that the said judgment of the High Court, which does not contain a direction to pay compensation to the Employee, is a just and equitable one. Thus, when the non-payment of compensation has been held to be a just and equitable order, the learned High Court Judge is not obliged to again consider section 31B (6) (c).

Moreover, in the instant case, I too would repeat the rhetoric question posed by His Lordship Justice Sisira J. de Abrew, in the case of Peoples' Bank Vs Lanka Banku Sevaka Sangamaya[7]: 'when it is established that the workman's service was terminated for the acts of misconduct committed by him, then why should the Bank pay compensation to a person who was found guilty of misconduct and violated disciplinary circulars of the bank.'

Having posed the above question, I too would concur with the view taken by His Lordship Justice Abrew, that awarding of compensation to the employees who had committed the acts of misconduct, would operate as an encouragement to the commission of such acts of misconduct.

Therefore, I hold that the learned High Court Judge is correct when he did not make any order granting compensation and hence, I am unable to hold that he was obliged to again consider Section 31B (6) (c) of the Industrial Disputes Act which would only be an irrelevant exercise in the face of the just and equitable order (as afore-stated) already made by him.

For those reasons, I answer the question of law No. (ii) in respect of which this Court has granted Leave to Appeal, in the negative.

The Plaintiff filed this action in the District Court of Kalutara against the two Defendants seeking a declaration in the prayer to the plaint that he has obtained a permanent servitude to use the road described in the third schedule to the plaint, ejectment of the Defendants from the encroached area of this road, and damages.

As I will explain below, instead of stating "he has obtained a permanent servitude to use the road described in the third schedule to the plaint", it would have been clearer had the Plaintiff simply stated that he has the right to use the road described in the third schedule to the plaint.

At the request of the Plaintiff, the District Court issued a commission to depict the encroached portion of the said road.

Plan No. 717B produced in evidence as P1 through the Court Commissioner shows the encroached portion marked Lot X.

After receipt of the said Plan and before filing the answer, the Defendants also moved for a commission. In execution of this commission, Plan No. 732 was received by Court. However, the Defendants did not produce this Plan in evidence.

Having studied both Plans, the Defendants filed answer stating that they have prescribed to the portion marked X in Plan No. 717B and therefore the Plaintiff's action shall be dismissed.

After trial, the District Court entered Judgment for the Plaintiff except for damages.

On appeal to the High Court of Civil Appeal, the High Court set aside the Judgment of the District Court but did not say the Defendants were entitled to their cross-claim of prescriptive title over the encroached portion of the road.

Being dissatisfied with the Judgment of the High Court, the Plaintiff preferred this appeal to this Court.

The High Court set aside the Judgment of the District Court on the ground that the Plaintiff failed to identify the subject matter in dispute:

> [T]he Plaintiff has failed to show the exact width of the road that was there before the encroachment and the present width of the road that is existing now. Hence the Plaintiff has totally failed to prove the width of the road which should be depicted on the said roadway. Hence the Plaintiff has failed to identify the subject matter in dispute.

The identity of the subject matter was never in controversy before the trial Court. There was no issue raised by the Defendants to that effect. Before the District Court, "the subject matter in dispute" was identified by both parties and the Court as Lot X in Plan No. 717B.

The Plaintiff's position was that the said Lot X was a portion of the road depicted as part of the western boundary of Lot 1 in the Final Partition Plan No. 2824 marked P3, whereas the Defendants' position was that they had prescribed to that portion of the road.

Notwithstanding the Defendants' appeal was allowed on the said ground, the High Court also raised some concerns about the presence of trees over 10 years of age and an electricity post fixed to draw an electricity line to the Plaintiff's house in the portion marked X in Plan No. 717B. The High Court states that the Plaintiff did not explain how such old trees came into being on this road if he had been using that road over the years.

In my view, the presence of old trees within the encroached area is beside the point. Let me explain.

The Plaintiff filed the partition action No. 4834/P in the District Court of Kalutara to partition Lot Nos. 1C and 10 in Partition Plan No. 934 marked P9 among the Plaintiff and several Defendants. The Preliminary Plan No. 2693 marked P6A and the Report marked P7 were prepared for the said partition action. According to this Preliminary Plan and Report, the disputed road in the instant action was part of the corpus in the said partition action. This Plan and Report further go to prove that a portion of this disputed road had been encroached by the 1st Defendant in the instant action at that time. The Court Commissioner had shown the encroached portion as Lot C in the said Preliminary Plan. However the 1st Defendant had not made an application to be added as a party to that action, which he ought to have done if he had a claim to that portion. The Final Partition Plan is Plan No. 2824 marked P3 where the now disputed full road is shown as part of the western boundary of Lot 1, which was allotted according to the Final Decree dated 21.02.1984 marked P4 to the Plaintiff in the instant action. Hence, the Plaintiff has every right to use this road as part of the subject matter in that partition action. He does not need to show any other right to use this road.

What the Court Commissioner did in the instant action was to superimpose the said roadway in Plan No. 2824 on his Plan No. 717B and show the existing encroachment. This is similar to what the Court Commissioner in partition case No. 4834/P did when he prepared the Preliminary Plan No. 2693 marked P6A.

Admittedly, the Final Decree in partition case No. 4834/P marked P4 was entered on 21.02.1984 and, according to her own police statement marked P11, the 2nd Defendant in the instant action put up a barbed wire fence enclosing the encroached area on 25.04.1994.

It is irrelevant to give unwanted prominence or importance to the ages of trees found on the encroached portion of the road. The Court Commissioner carried out the survey in the instant action in 1995. According to the Report, one tree is about 20 years old and the other about 15 years old. This means when the Final Partition Decree P4 in partition case No. 4834 was entered in 1984, the trees were already on that portion of the road. The Defendants cannot say that they planted these trees after the Final Decree P4 because the trees are much older than 11 years. Nor can they claim any prescriptive rights to that portion because the Final Decree P4 wiped out all such rights, if they had any.

The electricity post, which has been fixed to draw an electricity line to the Plaintiff's house is also within the portion marked X in Plan No. 717B. The 2nd Defendant in her evidence admits that the area the electricity post is fixed onto belongs to the Plaintiff. Electricity posts are not fixed on lands belonging to outsiders. They are fixed either on the side of the road or on the customer's land.

There is no evidence acceptable to Court that the Defendants acquired prescriptive title to the encroached area marked X in Plan No. 717B as required by section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. Even the High Court did not come to such a finding.

The High Court set aside the Judgment of the District Court on the completely erroneous basis of non-identification of the subject matter of the dispute.

This Court granted leave to appeal against the Judgment of the High Court on the following questions of law:

Have the learned Judges of the High Court erred in law by:

(a) arriving at the finding that the Plaintiff has failed to identify the subject matter of the action?

(b) arriving at the finding that the Plaintiff has not established a right to the use of the said roadway described in the third schedule to the plaint?

(c) setting aside the Judgment of the District Court dated 06.01.2005?

I answer all three of these questions in the affirmative.

I set aside the Judgment of the High Court and restore the Judgment of the District Court. The appeal is allowed with costs payable by the Defendants to the Plaintiff in all three Courts.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Petitioner/Appellant ("the plaintiff/appellant") came before this Court being aggrieved by the judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of the North Western Province, holden in Kurunegala ("the High Court").

By the said judgement, the High Court upheld the appeal of the 5th Defendant-Appellant-Respondent ("the 5th defendant/respondent") and set aside and dismissed the judgement entered by the District Court of Puttlam, permitting the partitioning of the land as prayed for by the plaintiff.

To state the facts of this appeal in brief, the plaintiff filed action in the District Court of Puttlam, in the year 2008, seeking to partition a divided southern portion of a land called and known as Amanakkangkadu in Kuruvikulam, Puttlam, in extent 0A 2R 4P described morefully and referred to in schedule 'B' to the plaint.

The land was to be partitioned among the plaintiff, the 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants in the following manner.

- plaintiff – 13/14th share of the land less 30.70 perches
- 1st defendant – 1/14th share of the land
- 2nd defendant - 23.94 perches
- 3rd defendant - 06.76 perches

The plaintiff's case was that by a deed bearing No. 1457 dated 01-01-1985, executed by A.M.M. Abdul Cader N.P., the plaintiff became entitled to an undivided 13/14th share of the land to be partitioned, which is morefully described in schedule 'B' to the plaint.

Out of the said undivided land, 30.70 perches was transferred by the plaintiff to her sister, the 2nd defendant. The 2nd defendant transferred 06.76 perches of the said portion of land to her daughter the 3rd defendant and the 3rd defendant, mortgaged the undivided portion of land in extent 06.76 perches, to the 4th defendant bank.

The plaintiff further pleaded, that prior to the execution of the aforesaid deed in 1985, in the year 1963, the total extent of the land was transferred to the plaintiff by one George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake by a deed bearing No. 9736 dated 04-07-1963 executed by S.M.M. Cassim N.P. and the plaintiff and her family was in possession of the said land, from such date.

In 1968, upon the plaintiff's father's request, this land was transferred to the plaintiff's father by the plaintiff in order to raise a loan. In 1973, the plaintiff's father died interstate and the rights to the land vested on the heirs, namely the plaintiff's mother and the seven siblings. The said heirs, except, the 1st defendant, in 1985, transferred their entitlement to the plaintiff by the deed bearing No. 1457 dated 01-01-1985 referred to earlier. Thus, the plaintiff became entitled to 13/14th share of the said land morefully referred to in schedule B to the plaint. The plaintiff thereafter, from her share entitlement transferred an undivided portion of the land to the 2nd defendant, as referred to earlier.

The plaintiff in 2008, filed the instant partition action in the District Court of Puttlam and the 1st defendant [who did not part with his entitlement of 1/14th share to the land] did not oppose the application. The 2nd and 3rd defendants accepted the plaintiffs title and moved that the land be partitioned as prayed for by the plaintiff. The 4th defendant bank in its statement of claim referred to the chain of title of the parties viz-a-viz the mortgaged land.

The 5th and 6th defendants who are siblings of the plaintiff and who were also executors to the aforesaid deed No 1457 dated 01-01-1985, filed a joint statement of claim. The 6th defendant claimed the property and the house built therein, on the ground of prescription and the 5th defendant claimed Rs.1.5 million for improvements, in the event the land is partitioned as prayed for by the plaintiff.

Thus, this application was opposed only by the 5th and 6th defendants. At the trial, the plaintiff, the Surveyor and the Notary Public who attested the aforesaid deed bearing No. 1457 gave evidence. The 5th and the 6th defendants failed to give evidence or lead any documentary evidence to establish the plea of prescription or the claim for improvements, taken up by the said defendants.

Having considered the evidence led and being satisfied that the plaintiff has proved the chain of title and established the identity of the land, the District Court permitted the partitioning of the land as prayed for by the plaintiff. The issues pertaining to prescription and improvements raised by the 5th and 6th defendants were answered in the negative and the 5th defendant's monetary claim was rejected by the District Court.

Being aggrieved by this judgement, the 5th defendant invoked the jurisdiction of the High Court and urged that the district judge has failed to investigate title in the said case.

It is a matter of interest, that the 5th defendant who did not claim an entitlement to the land to be partitioned, filed appeal papers and took up an entirely new ground and abandoned the claim for improvements pleaded before the District Court. The 6th defendant who jointly filed a statement of claim with the 5th defendant at the trial court, did not pursue the appeal to the High Court nor associate himself with the 5th defendants appeal.

The High Court accepted the contention of the 5th defendant pertaining to the title and upheld the appeal and the case of the plaintiff was dismissed with costs and the judgement and the interlocutory decree entered by the District Court was set aside.

The High Court, in its judgement held, that the District Court failed to perform its obligations in terms of Section 25(1) of the Partition Law No 21 of 1997 as amended ("the Partition Act") and repeatedly pronounced that the district judge failed to address its judicial mind to the mode of acquisition of title of Leopold De Silva Wikkramatilake the alleged predecessor in title of the plaintiff.

Being aggrieved by this judgement, the plaintiff invoked the jurisdiction of this Court and obtained Leave to Appeal on five questions of law.

The said questions referred to in paragraph 27(a) (b) (c) (d) and (i) of the Petition of Appeal are as follows: -

a) Did the High Court err in deciding that examination of title is only examining paper title excluding the title gained by prescription?
b) Did the High Court err by failing to consider that the 5th Defendant- Appellant-Respondent is estopped in raising doubts in the title of the Plaintiff- Respondent-Petitioner as he was also a party who executed the title deed in favor of the Plaintiff-Respondent- Petitioner?
c) Did the High Court err in failing to appreciate the fact that no other party other than the 5th Defendant- Appellant- Respondent had appealed against the Order of the District Court of Puttlam?
d) Did the High Court err in deciding that the evidence given in prescriptive rights accrued by the Plaintiff- Respondent- Petitioner and her predecessors cannot be considered as a title valid before the law?
i) Did the High Court err in deciding that paper title more than 50 years and prescriptive title more than 50 years is insufficient to establish the title and ownership of a land?

I wish to consider the above referred five questions of law, under two segments.

Firstly, the 1st, 2nd, 4th and 5th questions of law which pertains to the plaintiff's right and entitlement to the land to be partitioned; and

Secondly, the 3rd question which refers to the appeal filed by the 5th defendant and his right to challenge the interlocutory decree and the judgement given by the District Court in the instant application.

The four questions in the first segment in my view are interwoven and revolve around the title and investigation of such title viz paper title and prescriptive title, and goes to the root of a partition action.

Hence, I wish to analyze the questions of law raised before this Court, pertaining to title viz-a-viz the provisions of the Partition Act, with special emphasis on investigation of title by a court of law, as laid down in Section 25(1) of the Act.

Section 25(1) of the Partition Act reads as follows: -

> ".... the court shall examine the title of each party and shall hear and receive evidence in support thereof and shall try and determine all questions of law and fact arising in that action in regard to the right, share or interest of each party to, of, or in the land to which the action relates*...."* (emphasis added)

The aforesaid provision in the present Partition Act, as well as similar provisions in the earlier Partition Act of 1951 and the Partition Ordinances have been extensively analyzed by this Court on numerous occasions and the duty of a court to examine and investigate title has been repeatedly emphasized. [see Juliana Hamine v. Don Thomas (1957) 59 NLR 546; Cooray v. Wijesuriya (1958) 62 NLR 158; Jane Nona v. Dingiri Mahathmaya (1968) 74 NLR 105]

With the far reaching effects of the provisions of Section 48 of the Act, which speaks of final and conclusiveness of a partition decree, this Court has observed, that in the event the investigations are defective, a decree could be set aside in appeal. [see Mohamedaly Adamjee v. Hadad Sadeen (1956) 58 NLR 217]

Whilst observing the sacred duty of court to investigate title, the Appellate Courts have held, that no higher standard of proof is required in a partition action than in any other civil suit, where balance or preponderance of probability is the standard of proof and that the court could investigate title, only within the limits of pleadings, admissions and issues and evidence led before court and cannot go on a voyage of discovery [see Cynthia de Alwis v. Marjorie de Alwis and others [1997] 3 Sri LR 113; Karunaratne v. Sirimalie (1951) 53 NLR 444; Thilagaratnam v. Athpunathan and others (1996) 2 Sri LR 66]

Similarly, our Courts have emphatically held that clarity with regard to the identity of corpus is a fundamental factor to be considered in a partition application. [see SopiNona v. Pitipanaarachchi and others (2010) 1 Sri LR 87]

With regard to a person who pivots his title on 'adverse possession' and claims prescription, this Court has held that such adverse possession should be established by clear and unequivocal evidence and the burden is on the party who invokes prescription to establish such fact. Where a person's possession was originally not adverse but subsequently, became adverse, onus is on the person who claims that fact to prove such fact. [see De Silva v. Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (1973) 80 NLR 292; Sirajudeen and others v. Abbas [1994] 2 Sri LR 365]

Having referred to the legal position, pertaining to proof of title and chain of title, let me now examine the said legal provisions, in the light of the factual matrix of this case.

In the instant appeal, the plaintiff sought to partition the land in issue, between four parties, namely, the plaintiff and the 1st, 2nd, 3rd defendants who co-owned the property in suit and there was no contest by the said parties with regard to the partitioning of the land, identity of the corpus and the chain of title.

As discussed earlier, the plaintiff's case was that she became entitled to the entire land to be partitioned in extent 0A 2R 4P depicted in schedule B to the plaint, initially in the year 1963 and possessed the land from then onwards. The said land was transferred in the manner described earlier in this judgement and in 1985 the plaintiff became entitled to an undivided 13/14th shares of the said land out of which the plaintiff transferred an undivided portion of the land to the 2nd defendant as described.

Hence, the Plaintiff's case was, that the land morefully described in schedule B to the plaint be partitioned as prayed for in the plaint between the plaintiff, 1st, 2nd and 3rd defendants subject to the mortgage of the 4th defendant.

Thus, I cannot see any error in the judgement of the district judge permitting the partitioning of the land in the manner prayed for by the plaintiff, after investigating the title and being satisfied of the identity of the land and the chain of title. In fact, the district judge in the judgement, had referred to each and every deed, in the chain of title of the plaintiff as well as the 1st, 2nd, 3rd defendants respectively.

Similarly, the district judge cannot be faulted in disallowing the 5th and 6th defendant's claims made in the partition action either. The 5th defendant did not lead any evidence, oral or documentary to substantiate his claim for improvements or the 6th defendant with regard to his claim on prescription. Thus, even with regard to the contention of the 5th and 6th defendants, I am of the view, that the district judge properly investigated their claims and rejected same.

Moreover, it is observed that both the 5th and 6th defendants were executants to the deed bearing No. 1457 dated 01-01-1985. This is the deed by which the plaintiff obtained title to 13/14th shares of the corpus, [when plaintiff's mother transferred her 1/2 share and the plaintiffs seven siblings (excluding one) transferred their individual 1/14th share (1/7th of 1/2 share), being the intestate rights and entitlements flowing from the plaintiff's deceased father.

Thus, it is ironic that the 5th defendant who transferred his share entitlement to the plaintiff in 1985 and had no interest in the land, preferred a claim against the plaintiff, in the event the land was partitioned, for a sum of Rs.1.5 million and thereafter failed to pursue such claim before the trial court. The 6th defendant too, did not pursue his claim on prescription. Further it is observed, that the 5th and 6th defendants did not challenge the chain of title of the plaintiff either, at the trial.

Hence, in my view, the district judge quite rightly rejected the 5th defendants claim and answered the issues raised by the 5th defendant as well as the 6th defendant, in the negative.

However, it is not necessary for me to delve further into this aspect of prescription and improvements in this appeal, since the 5th defendant's principal ground of appeal before the High Court was that the District Court failed to examine the title to the land in issue. It is observed that the High Court judge upheld the appeal upon this basis, paying much attention to the fact that the learned District Judge failed to address the acquisition of title by the plaintiff's predecessor.

Thus, the High Court went a step ahead and investigated the plaintiff's predecessor's title not at the time of the transfer of the land in 1963, but many years earlier and with regard to the manner of acquisition of title by the plaintiff's predecessor. It is also a matter of concern that the High Court did not examine the 1985 deed by which the 5th defendant and other siblings transferred title to the plaintiff or the fact that the plaintiff, having obtained title upon the 1963 deed, held and possessed the land to be partitioned for a period of 45 years.

In the light of the findings of the High Court, I would now move on to examine the plaintiff's title in detail.

The land to be partitioned is in extent 0A 2R 4P and is described and referred to in schedule B to the plaint. This land is said to be a divided and defined portion of a larger land in extent 2A 2R 20P. The larger land is referred to and described in schedule A to the plaint.

The plaintiff relied on three deeds to establish the chain of title and the identity of the land to be partitioned.

The said deeds were;

1. Deed No.9736 executed on 04-07-1963 (P1), whereby the plaintiff became entitled to the entire land to be partitioned, in extent 0A 2R 4P (Schedule B);
2. Deed No. 12062 executed on 06-08-1968 (P2) whereby the said extent of land was transferred by the plaintiff to plaintiff's father; and

3. Deed No. 1457 executed on 01-01-1985 (P4) wherein the plaintiff's mother and her six siblings [excluding the 1st defendant] transferred their entitlement, totaling 13/14th share to the plaintiff. The 5th and 6th defendants were also executants to this deed.

The metes and bounds and the extent of the land referred to in the two schedules, A and B of the plaint, correspond with the schedules referred to in the three deeds mentioned above.

The Plan and the Surveyors Report prepared on a Commission issued by the District Court tallies with the description of the land and gives the extent and the metes and bounds as at that date. No party to the partition action, including the 5th defendant disputed the identification of the land, the extent and description of the land to be partitioned either by producing oral or documentary evidence or by challenging the evidence given by the plaintiff or on behalf of the plaintiff by the Surveyor or the Notary Public or any other witnesses. Thus, the identity of the land to be partitioned in my view, was not in dispute before the trial court. Similarly, the prescriptive possession of the plaintiff was also not challenged before the District Court and that too was not in dispute.

The plaintiff also marked in evidence, the three deeds referred to above without a challenge or objection being raised by any of the defendants, including the 5th defendant. Thus, the said deeds which refer to the plaintiff's entitlement and the chain of title was led unhindered and unchallenged.

Upon perusal of the aforesaid three deeds and the dates of execution, it is observed that the chain of title clearly runs back to the year 1963, i.e., 45 years prior to filling of the partition action.

By the deed (P1) executed in the year 1963, the title to the said corpus in extent 0A 2R 4P (morefully referred to in schedule B to the plaint) was transferred to the plaintiff by one George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatillake, (i.e. plaintiff's predecessor) and the said George Leopold De Silva Wikkramatilake held and possessed the said land by right of inheritance from his mother Mary Girtrude, widow of William Moses de Silva Wikkramatilake.

The deed P1, further indicates that Mary Girtrude, the mother of plaintiff's predecessor, held and possessed a larger land in extent 2A 2R 20P (morefully referred in schedule A to the plaint), by virtue of a deed executed on 05-07-1904 bearing No. 915. The land to be partitioned or the corpus in extent 0A 2R 4P was carved out from the southern portion of the larger land. Thus, the paper title of the land to be partitioned can be traced back to 1904, a period exceeding 100 years, prior to filling of the instant partition action.

The plaintiff, also led in evidence a communique received from the Puttlam Land Registry to establish that the aforesaid deed executed in 1904 had decayed. In the District Court judgement, reference is also made to the said fact which prevented the plaintiff to mark in evidence the deed of 1904 to establish the chain of title of the plaintiff running back to 100 years or the beginning of the 20th century.

Thus, it is observed that the district judge took cognizance of the aforesaid facts in investigating the title of the plaintiff and came to the correct conclusion, that the chain of title was proved by the plaintiff, with regard to the corpus in issue.

However, as stated earlier, the High Court upheld the appeal of the 5th defendant, upon the basis, that the plaintiff has failed to address the acquisition of title by the plaintiff's predecessor.

It is observed that the High Court judge when coming to the above conclusion held, in the light of the ratio in Cooray v. Wijesinghe (supra) that the plaintiff failed to adduce clear and unequivocal evidence to prove the following factors.

- the corpus was 1/5th part of the larger land;
- Mary Girtrude was the sole owner of the larger land;
- Mary Girtrude sold and transferred an undivided 1/5th share of the larger land to George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake the "alleged predecessor" in title of the plaintiff; and
- the "alleged predecessor" of the plaintiff, acquired exclusive title by prescription to the corpus, to the exclusion of other co-owners and therefore became the sole owner of the portion of land referred to in schedule B to the plaint.

It is further observed, that the High Court judge elaborated the above factors at great length and came to the finding, that the plaintiff could succeed in the partition action, only if the plaintiff could establish the entire pedigree beginning from Mary Girtrude and continuously used the term "alleged predecessor" when referring to George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake, contrary to the contents and wording in the 1963 deed (P1) which clearly denotes him being the vendor and the plaintiff's predecessor.

Similarly, the High Court also failed or did not venture to examine or consider the evidential value of the deed executed in the year 1963 by the plaintiff's predecessor or the rights and entitlements flowing from the said deed, especially the prescriptive rights and possession of the plaintiff of the said land from the year 1963 running into a period of 45 years.

In any event, the High Court did not examine or consider the effect and consequences of the other deeds, executed after 1963 and marked in evidence at the trial and especially the deed bearing No. 1457 executed on 01-01-1985 (P4) by which the 5th defendant himself (the appellant before the High Court) transferred his share entitlement together with his siblings to his own sister, the plaintiff. The High Court failed to evaluate the stand of the 5th defendant at the trial court i.e., not to challenge the partition action but only to obtain a monetary sum in the event the land was partitioned.

Further, it is observed, having failed to refer to the aforesaid deeds and its effects on the title of the plaintiff's pedigree, viz plaintiff paper title and prescriptive title to the land from 1963, the High Court Judge repeats, ad nauseam and harps on the fact that the learned district judge has totally failed and not given his judicial mind to investigate title and obligations imposed on him under Section 25(1) of the Partition Act and only emphasizes on the fact that the acquisition of title by the plaintiff's predecessor has not been proved before the trial court.

This Court in Cooray v. Wijesuriya (supra) and other cases discussed earlier in this judgement, observed that Section 25(1) of the Partition Act imposes an obligation on the court to examine the title of each party to, of, or in the land, to which the action relates.

In the instant application, the trial court referred to the title of each party to, of, or in the land to which the action relates, during the last 45 years, i.e. the deed executed in 1963 (P1), the deed executed in 1985 (P4), the deed executed by the plaintiff when transferring an undivided portion to the 2nd defendant, the deed executed by the 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants respectively.

The High Court on the other hand, did not refer to the district judges examination of title, especially in relation to the deeds marked P1, P2 or P4, but faulted the trial judge for not examining the acquisition of title of the plaintiff's predecessor, which would have taken place very much prior to the execution of the 1963 deed (P1).

Thus, in my view the High Court did not refer to the District Court finding on the corpus, the ownership and title of the land in issue or the legal status of the parties before court, but ventured to examine the position prior to 50 years i.e. prior to execution of the 1963 deed (P1). The High Court paid more emphasis on the status of the plaintiff's predecessor and his exclusive title to the corpus, to the exclusion of other co-owners, who are not parties to this action. The said co-owners have no interest in the corpus nor are parties who challenged or intervened in this action. The High Court also failed to address its mind to the prescriptive possession of the plaintiff or the rights accrued by the plaintiff from 1963 to the date of partition action i.e. a period of 45 years, but went onto hold that the plaintiff's pedigree should begin from, George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake's mother, Mary Girtrude and plaintiff should establish that Mary Girtrude sold and transferred the land to George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake.

In Karunaratne v. Sirimalie (supra) and Thilagaratnam v. Athpunathan and others referred to earlier in this judgement, the Appellate Courts observed, that no higher standard of proof is required in a partition action than in any civil proceeding and the court could investigate title, only within a limited sphere and cannot go on a voyage of discovery. Thus, the standard of proof is the balance of probability with regard to the evidence led before the trial court.

Having considered the aforesaid judicial pronouncements and the evidence led and the documents marked at the trial in the instant matter, I am convinced that the district judge investigated the title of each and every party before court, i.e. the plaintiff and the 1st to 6th defendants with regard to the corpus and came to a correct conclusion.

On the other hand, the High Court, in my view went on a voyage of discovery and upheld the appeal, paying much attention of the plaintiff's predecessor, George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake's title, his mother Mary Girtrude's title and the plaintiff's failure to adduce evidence with regard to plaintiff's predecessor acquiring title to the corpus way before 1963, an event which would have occurred 50 years prior to the plaintiff initiating partition proceedings before the District Court.

In a partition action, according to judicial pronouncements discussed at the beginning of this judgement, what is required from a trial court is to investigate and examine title of each party to the land to which the action relates. In the instance matter, as discussed above, the plaintiff's chain of title together with prescriptive title running back to 50 years, in my view, has been clearly and fairly established. Similarly, no party has raised or adverted to any adverse possession or prescriptive rights as against the rights and interests of the plaintiff. Thus, I see no merit in the submission made by the 5th defendant before this Court.

Nevertheless, in view of the finding of the High Court that acquisition of the plaintiff's predecessors title is the most crucial element in a partition action, I wish to delve into the said fact now.

The land to be partitioned in extent 0A 2R 4P (the land referred to in schedule B to the plaint) was transferred to the plaintiff by George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake by deed bearing No.9736 executed on 04-07-1963 (P1).

The recital to the deed reads:

> "that the vendor sold and transferred the land and premises held and possessed by the said vendor by right of inheritance from his mother Mary Girtrude wife of William Moses de Silva Wickramatileke late of Puttlam who held same under and by virtue of deed No 915 dated 05-07-1904..."

The schedule of the deed reads;

> "that of all that land called and known as Amankkangkadu situate at Kuruvikulam in Puttlam Pattu [....] bounded on [....] containing in extent 2A 2R 20P, in lieu of an undivided ⅕ share a divided southern portion of the aforesaid land divided with the mutual consent of the other co-owners containing in extent 2R 4P and bounded on [....]".

The plain reading of the above narrative in the deed executed in 1963 (P1), appears to be that,

- the larger land referred to in schedule A to the plaint was owned and possessed by Mary Girtrude by virtue of a deed executed in the year 1904 [i.e. the deed that is now decayed - vide (P1a), the communique issued by the Puttlam Land Registry];
- George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake held and possessed the said land, upon the right of inheritance of his mother, Mary Girtrude, together with other beneficiaries and thus co-owned the said land;
- George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake's entitlement to the said co-owned land was 1/5th share;
- in lieu of George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake's 1/5th share to the said larger land, with the mutual consent of the other co-owners, a portion to the south of the land was carved out and such carved out area was held and possessed by George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake;
- the said carved out portion of the land is defined by metes and bounds and is in extent of 0A 2R 4P and is the land referred to in schedule B to the plaint; and
- the said defined portion of the land was transferred by George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatileke (plaintiff's predecessor) to the plaintiff by deed bearing No 9736 executed on 04-07-1963 (P1).

Thus, in my view, the said deed executed in 1963 establishes the title of the plaintiff's predecessor to the land to be partitioned. This deed (P1) was led in evidence without any objection at the trial and the district judge pivoted the chain of title of the plaintiff with reference to this deed.

Similarly, there was no challenge to the prescriptive right of the plaintiff who held and possessed the said land, from the date of execution of the deed (P1) i.e. from 04-07-1963 for a period of 45 years. Undisputedly, by the deed executed in 1985 (P4), the 5th defendant himself granted his share of interest in the land to the plaintiff and did not put forward a case of adverse possession viz-a-viz the plaintiff.

Thus, I see no reason to cast any doubt with regard to the plaintiff's predecessor's title or to burden the plaintiff to establish the manner upon which the plaintiff's predecessor acquired title.

I am of the view that the judges of the High Court erred with regard to this factor, when it held, in order for the plaintiff to succeed, the "plaintiff should establish the entire pedigree beginning from Mary Girtrude and that Mary Girtrude was the sole owner of the larger land and that Many Girtrude had sufficient title vested in her to sell and transfer1/5th share or part therefrom to George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake."

The High Court, further erred when it proclaimed "that the plaintiff should establish that George Leopold de Silva Wikkramatilake acquired or prescribed to 1/5th share of the larger land, to the exclusion of other co-owners who owned 4/5th share" and "if the deed executed in 1904 was decayed, that the plaintiff should have led encumbrance sheets maintained at Puttlam Land Registry" and "the failure to prove the pedigree would inevitably result in the dismissal of the plaint."

I find the above reasoning of the High Court erroneous, misconceived, incomprehensible and outrageous and with respect, I cannot agree with the said finding.

The obligation imposed on a court by the Partition Act, I emphasize, is to examine the title of each party to, of, or in the land to which the action relates viz identification of corpus and chain of title and the District Court has full-filled such obligation and allotted shares accordingly.

The High Court sitting in appeal has not considered the relevant legal position and case law relating to such factors, but gone on a voyage of discovery, chartering through archaic history and going beyond the pleadings, to dismiss an application based on the failure to investigate acquisition of plaintiff's predecessor's title and has thus, in my view missed the wood for the trees.

This Court has time and time again held, that a party cannot be permitted to present in appeal, a case different from that presented before the trial court where matters of fact are involved which were not in issue at the trial. [see Candappa nee Bastian v. Ponnambalampillai (1993) 1 Sri LR 184; Setha v. Weerakoon (1948) 49 NLR 225]

Civil Procedure Code in the explanation to Section 150 of the Code states, that a case enunciated must reasonably accord with the party's pleadings.

Thus, the basis upon which the 5th defendant filed appeal papers and the extent to which the High Court judge traversed to uphold the appeal, in my view is not in accordance with the law and specifically the provisions of the Partition Act, which only requires a trial court to consider relevant and material evidence with regard to title of each party to the land to which the action relates.

Therefore, in my view, the High Court erred in its determination pertaining to examination of title of parties in the instant case.

In the aforesaid circumstances, I answer the 1st, 2nd,4th and 5th Questions of Law raised before this Court in the affirmative and in favour of the appellant.

Similarly, there is not an iota of doubt, that it was only the 5th defendant who went up in appeal against the judgement of the District Court and the 5th defendant did not claim any share of the land to be partitioned or any right in the District Court. Hence, the 3rd Question of Law raised before this Court, is also answered in the affirmative and in favour of the appellant.

Thus, I answer all five Questions of Law raised before this Court in favour of the appellant.

Therefore, for reasons enumerated herein, the judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court holden in Kurunegala dated 13th October, 2016 is set aside.

The judgement of the District Court of Puttlam dated 23rd April, 2012 is upheld. The Order allowing the partitioning of the land described in schedule B to the plaint, in the manner referred to in the said judgement of the District Court is also affirmed.

In the aforesaid circumstances this Court further holds, that the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant is entitled to a sum of Rs. 100,000/= payable by the 5th Defendant-Appellant-Respondent. This sum is payable to the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant in addition to the costs of the courts below.

Appeal is allowed with costs.

The plaintiff filed this action seeking to partition the land described in the schedule to the plaint between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant in equal shares. After trial, the District Judge dismissed the action. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the Judgment of the District Court and directed the District Court to enter the Interlocutory Decree as prayed for by the plaintiff (½ share of the land to the plaintiff and ½ share to the 1st defendant).

The 1st plaintiff in her statement of claim inter alia stated that she transferred her undivided ½ share to her two daughters (the 3rd and 4th defendants) by deed No. 8474. This was reiterated in the statement of claim of the 4th defendant. The deed was produced at the trial marked 4V1 through the evidence of the plaintiff.

Unfortunately, the existence of this deed escaped the attention of the High Court of Civil Appeal when it delivered the Judgment dated 29.06.2016.

Thereafter the 4th defendant filed a revision application in the High Court of Civil Appeal seeking to rectify this error. By Judgment dated 16.12.2019, the High Court of Civil Appeal dismissed this application on the basis that it is settled law that the rights of the parties shall be determined at the institution of the action and, as this deed had been executed after the institution of the partition action, the Court could not give effect to it.

The 4th defendant is before this Court against this Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal. This Court granted leave to appeal on the question whether the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law when it dismissed the application of the 4th defendant on the basis that the rights of the parties in a partition action shall be determined at the institution of the action.

The High Court of Civil Appeal has clearly misdirected itself in law on this point. A partition action cannot be equated to an ordinary civil action.

Section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code defines "action" as "a proceeding for the prevention or redress of a wrong" and "cause of action" as "the wrong for the prevention or redress of which an action may be brought, and includes the denial of a right, the refusal to fulfill an obligation, the neglect to perform a duty and the infliction of an affirmative injury". Partition actions are considered actions which fall not under section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code but under section 6 of the Civil Procedure Code which enacts "Every application to a court for relief or remedy obtainable through the exercise of the court's power or authority, or otherwise to invite its interference, constitutes an action."

Every action is based on a cause of action, but partition actions are not based on a cause of action as defined in section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. If at all there is a cause of action in a partition action, it is based on the inherent right of every co-owner to have a divided portion of the land in lieu of common ownership, or to have his proportionate share in the proceeds of the sale of the land in the event a sale is ordered instead of partition. (Abeysundara v. Babuna (1925) 26 NLR 459, Marshal Perera v. Elizabeth Fernando (1956) 60 NLR 229, Kiribanda v. Weerappu Chettiar (1948) 50 NLR 490)

I must also add that although on the face of the record there are plaintiffs and defendants in a partition action, all parties in a partition action play the dual role of plaintiff and defendant. This is made clear, inter alia, by sections 19, 25 and 70 of the Partition Law, No. 21 of 1977. Partition actions are sui generis and unique.

According to section 66 of the Partition Law, voluntary alienations are void if they have been effected "after a partition action is duly registered as a lis pendens under the Registration of Documents Ordinance".

The registration of the lis pendens is a significant milestone in a partition action. It is after the registration of the lis pendens that the attorney-at-law for the plaintiff is required to file the section 12 declaration which ensures that all persons involved in transactions affecting the land to be partitioned up to the point of the registration of the lis pendens are made parties to the action. In terms of section 13, even summonses are issued to the defendants only after the lis pendens is registered.

The High Court of Civil Appeal admits that this deed was executed after the institution of the action but before the lis pendens was registered. Hence this is not an invalid deed in terms of the Partition Law. The deed 4V1 is not a disputed deed. Nor does any party object to the application of the 4th defendant.

I answer the question of law in the affirmative and set aside the Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal dated 16.12.2019 and direct the learned District Judge to amend the Interlocutory Decree giving effect to the deed 4V1. In the result, the plaintiff is entitled to ½ share and the 3rd and 4th defendants are each entitled to ¼ share in the corpus. No costs.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff- Appellant) filed case Number 18887/L in the District Court of Colombo against the Defendant-Appellant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant-Respondent) seeking, inter alia, a declaration that he (the Plaintiff-Appellant) is the owner of the property described in the schedule to the plaint (hereinafter referred to as the property in question) and ejectment of the Defendant-Respondent and his agents from the said property and to keep the Plaintiff-Appellant in the vacant possession of the said property.

After trial the learned District Judge by his judgment dated 5.12.2008 granted relief claimed by the Plaintiff-Appellant in his plaint. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the learned District Judge, the Defendant-Respondent appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court by their judgment dated 6.6.2016, set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge dismissing the action of the Plaintiff-Appellant and declaring that the Defendant-Respondent is the owner of the property in question. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court, the Plaintiff-Appellant has appealed to this court. This court by its order dated 2.5.2017, granted leave to appeal on questions of law set out in paragraph 18 of the Petition of Appeal dated 14.7.2016 which are set out below.

1. Did the Civil Appellate High Court err in law ignoring the effect of such Admission in holding that the Respondent has meant to be admitted was only the fact of execution of the Deed of Gift No.1161 dated 18th May 1990 by recording Admission No.1 when there is no such claim by the Respondent in evidence or any other pleading?

2. Did the Civil Appellate High Court err in holding that J.W.T.M.P. Vithanage nee Botheju (the mother of the Respondent) has acquired prescriptive right to the land by commencing the adverse possession from September 1977, in the circumstances of this case?

3. Did the Civil Appellate High Court err in entering a judgment in favour of the Respondent and allowing her appeal when there is no issue on prescription, when the Answer of the Respondent is on the basis that the prescriptive possession commenced 30 years prior to the institution of this action and when there is no cogent evidence of prescriptive title to defeat the title of the Petitioner who became the owner by a Final Partition Decree?

4. Did the Civil Appellate High Court err in law holding that J.W.T.M.P. Vithanage nee Botheju (the mother of the Respondent) had a valid title to convey the Respondent by Deed of Gift No.1161 dated 18th May 1990 attested by N. Chelliah, Notary Public marked "V4"?

Since the Plaintiff-Appellant sought a declaration of title to the property in question, the burden of proof is on him to prove that he is the owner of the property. This view is supported by judicial decision in the case of D.A.Wanigaratne Vs Juwanis Appuhamy 65 NLR 167 wherein this court held that in action rei vindication the plaintiff must prove and establish his title.

In the case of Dharmadasa Vs Jayasena [1997] 3 SLR 327 this court at page 330 held that in a rei vindicatio action the burden is clearly on the plaintiff to establish the title pleaded and relied on by him.

In the case of Pathiran Vs Jayasundera 58 NLR 169 wherein His Lordship Gratiaen J at page 172, held that 'in rei vindicatio action proper, the owner of immovable property is entitled, on proof of his title, to a decree in his favour for the recovery of the property and for the ejectment of the person in wrongful occupation.'

In Peiris Vs Savunahamy 54 NLR 207 it was held that where in an action for declaration of title to land, the defendant is in possession of the land in dispute the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that he has dominium.

In the case of De Silva Vs Goonetileke 32 NLR 217 Macldonell CJ at page 219 held that "there is abundant authority that a party claiming a declaration of title must have title himself."

In the case of Jamaldeen Abdul Lathiff Vs Abdul Majeed Mohamad [2010] 2 SLR 333 this court held that to succeed in an action rei vindicatio, the owner must prove on a balance of probabilities, not only his or her ownership in the property, but also that the property exists and is clearly identifiable.

Considering the above legal literature, I hold that in a rei vindicatio action the plaintiff must establish that he is the owner of the property.

I will now consider whether the Plaintiff-Appellant has proved his title to the property in question. In DC Colombo case No.11215/P which was a partition case, the 20th Defendant Neemi Leela Elizabath Perera who is the Plaintiff-Appellant in this case was allocated Lot No 12 in Plan No.1524 A dated 20.11.1970 made by A.R.Dias Abeygunawardena Licensed Surveyor which is the Final Partition Plan in DC Colombo partition case No 11215/P. This is established by Final Decree in DC Colombo case No.11215/P marked as P23 in the trial in this case. This lot No 12 is the property described in the plaint. Therefore, the Plaintiff-Appellant has proved that she is the owner of the property in question. In an action for rei vindicatio, once the plaintiff established that he is the owner of the property in question, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that his possession of the land is legal or he possesses the land on a legal basis. This view is supported by the judicial decision of the Privy Council in the case of Siyaneris Vs Jayasinghege Udenis Silva 52 NLR 289 wherein the Privy Council held that in an action for declaration of tile to property, where the legal title is in the Plaintiff but the property is in the possession of the defendant, the burden of proof is on the Defendant.

It has to be noted here that the mother of the Defendant-Respondent Jayawardena Welathanthrige Thelma Manel Phylis Vithanage was the 18th defendant in the said partition case No.11215/P and no share was allocated to her in the partition case. This is clear when the Final Decree in DC Colombo case No.11215/P marked as P23 is examined. The date of the decree of the said partition case is 14.9.1977. The Defendant-Respondent in her answer [paragraph 8(a)] filed in the District Court takes up the position that her mother was in possession of the property in question for a period of thirty years prior to this action being filed. The action in this case was filed on 12.5.2000. If the paragraph 8(a) of the answer of the Defendant-Respondent is true, then her mother had been in possession of the property in question from 1970 onwards. The date of the decree of the said partition case is 14.9.1977. But the mother of the Defendant-Respondent was allocated no share in the partition case. This establishes that prescription claimed by the mother of the Defendant-Respondent had not been proved and is a false claim. The Defendant-Respondent in her answer claims prescription on the basis of her mother's claim for prescription. Since the Defendant-Respondent's mother's claim for prescription had not been proved and is a false claim, her (Defendant-Respondent) claim for prescription has not been established. For the above reasons, I hold that the Defendant-Respondent has not established prescription to the property in question. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court have concluded that the mother of the Defendant-Respondent had acquired title to the property in question by prescription. I have earlier pointed out that the claim of the Defendant-Respondent for prescription on the basis of her mother's claim for prescription had not been established. For the above reasons, I hold that the conclusion of the learned Judgers of the Civil Appellate High Court is wrong. On this ground alone the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court should be set aside.

The mother of the Defendant-Respondent, by Deed No.1161 dated 18.5.1990 marked V4 attested by Nagarajah Chelliah had transferred several allotments of land inclusive of Lot 11 and 12 of Plan No. 1524A dated 20.11.1970 made by A.R.Dias Abeygunawardena Licensed Surveyor which is the Final Partition Plan in DC Colombo partition case No 11215/P to the Defendant-Respondent. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court in their judgment dated 6.6.2016 concluded that the mother of the Defendant-Respondent had a valid title (on the basis of prescription) to convey the property to the Defendant-Respondent. I have earlier pointed out that the claim of the Defendant-Respondent for prescription on the basis of her mother's claim for prescription had not been established. Further I have pointed out earlier that the Defendant-Respondent's mother's claim for prescription had not been proved and is a false claim. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court by the said judgment declared that the Defendant-Respondent was the owner of the property in question. But the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court have failed to appreciate the fact that mother of the Defendant-Respondent was not given any share in the said partition case where she was the 18th Defendant although she (the mother of the Defendant-Respondent) claimed prescription to the property in question.

When I consider all the above matters, I hold that the mother of the Defendant-Respondent did not have any title to the property in question to convey the property in question to her daughter who is the Defendant-Respondent.

There was no issue raised in the present case with regard to the prescription. But the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court decided the case in favour of the Defendant-Respondent on the basis of prescription. Can a court of law decide to give title of property in suit on the basis of prescription without an issue being raised on prescription? At this juncture I would like to consider the following judicial decisions. In the case of Haniffa Vs Nallamma [1998] 1 SLR 73 at page 77 His Lordship GPS de Silva CJ held as follows.

"What is relevant for present purposes and what needs to be stressed is that once issues are framed, the case which the court has to hear and determine become crystallized in the issues. It is the duty of the court "to record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to the court to depend" (section 146 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code). Since the case is not tried on the pleadings, once issues are raised and accepted by the court the pleadings recede to the background. The Court of Appeal was in error in harking back to the pleadings and focusing on the "validity" and the "legality" of the pleadings."

If a party in action fails to raise an issue on prescription at the trial, his failure shows that he does not depend on prescription. In such a situation it is not correct for the court to give title of the property in suit on the basis of prescription. It has to be noted here that the Defendant-Respondent did not raise an issue in this case on prescription. But The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court have concluded that the mother of the Defendant-Respondent had acquired title to the property in question by prescription. I have earlier pointed out that the claim of the Defendant-Respondent for prescription had not been established. In my view, court cannot decide to give title of the property in suit on the basis of prescription without an issue on prescription.

The Defendant-Respondent at page 286 of the brief admitted in evidence that she even did not know the boundaries of the land in question. When it was suggested to the Defendant-Respondent that she has no any title to the land in question, she said that she did not know about it (page 287 of the brief). The above evidence shows that her claim for prescription to the property in question could not be accepted.

For the aforementioned reasons, I hold that the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court were wrong when they decided the case in favour the Defendant-Respondent. I hold that the learned District Judge was correct when he decided the case in favour of the Plaintiff-Appellant.

For the above reasons, I set aside the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court dated 6.6.2016 and affirm the judgment of the learned District Judge dated 5.12.2008.

In view of the conclusion reached above, I answer the 2nd,3rd and 4th questions of law in the affirmative. The 1st question of law does not arise for consideration.

The Plaintiff-Appellant is entitled to costs in all three courts.

SISIRA J. DE ABREW, J.

Heard both Counsel in support of their respective cases. This is an appeal against the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court dated 15.11.2010. This Court by its order dated 29.06.2011 granted Leave to Appeal on questions of law set out in paragraph 21 (i), (ii) and (iii) of the Petition of Appeal dated 21.12.2010 which are set out below,

1. Has not the learned Additional District Judge of Colombo erred in law and fact in setting aside that the consent decree which had been entered without precision of the corpus?

2. Have the honorable Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law and fact in affirming the consent decree which had been entered without a subject matter (the roadway) being ascertained in terms of law?

3. Have the honorable Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal misconceived in law and fact in concluding that the roadway is depicted in Plan bearing No.829?

Facts of this case may be briefly summarized as follows;

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff-Respondent) filed a case in the District Court of Colombo stating that his roadway has been blocked by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant-Appellant). The parties entered into a settlement. The learned District Judge entered the consent decree on the terms of settlement suggested by the parties. The consent decree of the learned District Judge contained the following conditions;

1ඈ සංශෝධිත පැමිණිල්ලේ ආයාචනයේ "ආ" ඡේදයේ ඉල්ලා ඇති පරිදි පැමිණිලිකරුගේ වාසියට නඩුව තීන්දු කිරීම සම්බන්ධයෙන් විත්තිකරුවන් එකගත්වය පලකර සිටිඈ

2ඈ තවදුණී විත්තිකරුවන් විසින් සඳහන් කර සිටින එකි ප්‍රවේශ මාර්ගයට බාධා අවහිර වන ආකාරයට දැනට කිසිදු කටයුත්තක් කර නොමැති බවත්ණී ඉදිරියටත් බාධා අවහිර කිරීම් නොකරන බවටත් විත්ති කරුවන් එකගතාවය පල කරයිඈ

3ඈ වෙනත් දිමනා හෝ නඩු ගාස්තු නොමැති බවටත් පාර්ශවකරුවන් එකග වේ.

This consent decree was entered on 17.08.2006. After the consent decree was entered the Defendant-Appellant filed papers in the District Court to vacate the said consent decree. Then the learned District Judge by order dated 29.06.2009 vacated the consent decree.

Being aggrieved by the said order of the learned District Judge dated 29.06.2009 the Plaintiff-Respondent appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court. The Civil Appellate High Court by its judgment dated 15.11.2010 set aside the said order of the learned District Judge dated 29.06.2009. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court the Defendant-Appellant has appealed to this Court.

The main argument of the learned Counsel for the Defendant-Appellant is that there is no corpus in this case. Therefore, he contends that the consent decree was a mistake. I now advert to this contention. Was there a mistake in the consent decree? Learned Counsel contended that there is no corpus in this case. But the Defendant-Appellant in paragraph 4 of his amended answer dated 14.02.2006 has admitted that there is an access road. Thus, the contention of learned Counsel for the Defendant-Appellant that there is no corpus fails in limine. Further, the Defendant-Appellant in the consent decree has admitted that there is an access road. Thus, even on the basis of condition

No.2 of the consent decree, the contention of learned Counsel fails. Therefore, the contention that there was a mistake in the consent decree is hereby rejected.

In the case of Gunasekara Vs. Leelawathie Srikantha Law Report Volume 5 page 86 Court of Appeal held as follows;

> "A compromise decree is but a contract with the command of a judge superseded to it. It can therefore be set aside on any of the grounds, such as fraud, mistake, misrepresentation etc., on which a contract may be set aside."

The main argument of the learned Counsel for the Defendant-Appellant is that there was a mistake in the consent decree. I have rejected the said contention. Thus, applying the principle laid down in the case of Gunasekara Vs. Leelawathie (supra), I hold that the learned District Judge could not have set aside the consent decree in this case. We therefore hold that the learned Judge was in error when he set aside the consent decree. For the above reasons, we answer the 1st question of law as follows,

"The learned District Judge has erred in law".

We answer the 2nd question of law in the negative. The 3rd question of law does not arise for consideration. For the above reasons, we hold that the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court were correct when they set aside the learned District Judge's order dated 29.06.2009.

For the aforementioned reasons, we affirm the judgment of the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court and dismiss this appeal with costs fixed at Rs100,000/-. In addition to this cost the Plaintiff-Respondent is entitled to recover the cost ordered by the Civil Appellate High Court.

Appeal dismissed.

SISIRA J. DE ABREW, J.

Heard Counsel for both parties in support of their respective case. This is an appeal filed against the judgment of the learned High Court Judge of Colombo dated 04.06.2015 wherein he has dismissed the appeal and the revision application filed by the Virtual-Complainant-Claimant-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Virtual-Complainant-Appellant). This Court on 08.05.2017 granted Leave to Appeal on the questions of law set out in paragraph 25(d), (e), (f) and (g) of the Petition of Appeal dated 14.07.2015 which are set out below;

1. Did the learned Magistrate as well as the Learned High Court Judge fail to consider that in the Statement made by the Claimant-Respondent to the police he categorically stated that the recovered items belonged to the Petitioner Corporation and it was stolen from the Petitioner Corporation?

2. Did the Learned High Court Judge misdirect himself in law in not considering at all the voluntary statement made by the Claimant-Respondent to the Police and its significance to the inquiry pertaining in disposal of the stolen jewellery?

3. Did the Learned High Court Judge and the Learned Magistrate misdirect themselves in law when they failed to appreciate that in view of the matters set out in the statement made by the Claimant-Respondent it is clear that there was a criminal element involved in his possession of the goods and therefore has misinterpreted the authorities referred to in the order of the Learned Magistrate?

4. Did the Learned High Court Judge misdirect himself in law when he failed to consider the facts that the affidavits also disclose that the Claimant-Respondent's possession had a criminal element?

Facts of this case may be briefly summarized as follows;

The 1st Suspect-Claimant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent) was arrested by Police in Galle. When he was arrested, Police found melted gold in his possession. He was produced before the Magistrate, Galle on 19.01.2009. Later, Galle Police informed the matter to the Slave Island Police. Slave Island Police filed a case bearing No. B 148/09 in the Magistrate's Court of Fort. The Suspect-Claimant-Respondent was cited as an Accused. Later, the learned Magistrate, Colombo-Fort discharged the Accused on the advice of the Attorney General. It has to be noted here that after he was discharged by the Magistrate on the advice of the Attorney General, he is no longer an Accused in the case. Thereafter, an inquiry was held under Section 431 of the Criminal Procedure Code to decide the person entitled to possession of the production in the case. Parties agreed to file affidavit at the inquiry. It has to be noted here that no person gave evidence in the witness box. After considering the affidavits filed by the parties, the learned Magistrate, Colombo-Fort by order dated 19.08.2013 decided to hand over the production in the case which is melted gold to the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent.

Being aggrieved by the said order of the learned Magistrate, Sri Lanka Insurance Corporation (the Virtual-Complainant-Appellant) filed an appeal and a revision application in the High Court and the learned High Court Judge by his order dated 04.06.2015 dismissed both the appeal and the revision application. Being aggrieved by the said order of the learned High Court Judge, the Virtual-Complainant-Appellant has appealed to this Court. This Court has granted Leave to Appeal. I have earlier set out the questions of law on which Leave to Appeal was granted. At the inquiry, before the Magistrate the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent filed an affidavit. The said Suspect-Claimant-Respondent filed a statement made by him to Galle Police along with his affidavit marked 'P9'. It has to be noted here that the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent, in the said statement marked 'P9', admitted that he had stolen jewellery from the possession of the Sri Lanka Insurance Corporation (the Virtual-Complainant-Appellant). The Suspect-Claimant-Respondent was an Audit Trainee of the Sri Lanka Insurance Corporation. The question that should be considered in this case is whether the said statement marked 'P9' made by the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent to Galle Police can be used as evidence in this inquiry. In considering this question, it has to be noted here that at the time of the inquiry conducted by the learned Magistrate, the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent had been discharged from the criminal case by the learned Magistrate on the advice of the Attorney General. Therefore, he is no longer a person accused of any offence. In this connection Section 25 of the Evidence Ordinance should be considered, which states as follows;

> "No confession made to a Police Officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence"

When the person who made the confession to a Police Officer has been discharged from the criminal case, he is not accused of any offence in the inquiry where the court is called upon to decide to whom the production should be handed over. Since the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent had been discharged from the criminal case at the time of the said inquiry, Section 25 of the Evidence Ordinance does not operate as a bar to use the confession of the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent at the inquiry. At this juncture, it is important to consider the judgment of Justice Wijeyawardene in the case of Joseph Vs. Attorney General 47 NLR page 446 wherein Court held that; "Where an Accused is acquitted on the ground that the evidence to prove the alleged offence is insufficient the Court can, nevertheless, by virtue of section 413(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, make an order for disposal of the property produced before it by directing its delivery to a person entitled to its possession if the Court considers that an offence has been committed in respect of that property. The opinion of Court as to the ownership of the property may be based on a confession made by the accused; section 24 of the Evidence Ordinance which makes confessions "irrelevant in a criminal proceeding" does not prevent a court from acting on them in an application under section 413(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. His Lordship Justice Wijeyawardene at page 448 and 449 made the following observation.

> "It is true that this Court has held these statements to be inadmissible in the criminal case against the accused. But section 24 of the Evidence Ordinance which makes those statements "irrelevant in a criminal proceeding" does not prevent a Court from acting on them in an application under section 413(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code which is not a "criminal matter".

Considering all the above matters, I hold that a confession made by a suspect to a Police Officer can be used as evidence in an inquiry where the Court is called upon to decide to whom the production in the case should be handed over if the Suspect has been discharged from the criminal case. In the present case when the inquiry was being conducted by the learned Magistrate, the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent had been discharged from the criminal case. Considering all these matters, I hold that his confession made to the Police Officer can be used in the inquiry where the Court is called upon to decide to whom the production should be handed over.

Next question that must be considered is whether the property seized by a Police Officer should be handed over to the person from whose custody it was taken or the Court has the power to hand it over to any other person. In early judicial decisions it had been settled that the property seized by a Police Officer should be handed over to the person from whose custody it was taken. In Punchinona Vs. Hinniappuhamy 60 NLR page 518 it has been held that where the seizure by a Police Officer or property alleged or suspected to have been stolen is reported to a Magistrate under Section 419 of the the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate, if he does not consider official custody to be necessary, has no alternative but to order the property to be delivered back to the person from whose possession it was seized and that the Magistrate has no power to order the property to be given to any other person on the ground that the latter is the true owner. But the judicial decision in the above case was not followed in Balagalla Vs Somarathne 70 NLR page 383 wherein it was held that where a person after discovering the stolen property has been sold to him, surrenders the property to the Police, the Magistrate has power under Section 419(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code to order the property to be handed over to the true owner and not to the person from whom it was taken by the Police.

In Silva and Others Vs. O.I.C. Police Station, Thambuththegama [1991] 2 SLR 83 His Lordship Justice S N Silva considering Section 431 of the Criminal Procedure Code held that there are limitations to the principle that property must be delivered to the person from whose possession it was seized, since it may result in the property being delivered to a person who may have obtained possession through criminal means. In such an event, Magistrate has to consider the question of title. In the said case His Lordship Justice S N Silva at page 91 made the following observation.

> "However, there are obvious limitations to its general application, because it may result in the property being delivered to a person having no legal right to possession but obtained possession through criminal means. Hence in the later cases starting from the Judgment of Sri Skandarajah, J in Sugathapala v. Thambirajah, 67 N.L.R. 91 certain modifications of this principle were evolved. This trend was followed by Sirimanne, J. in the case of Balagalla v. Somaratne, 70 NLR 382 and by Samarawickreme, J in the case of Thirunayagam v.Inspector of Police Jaffna 74 NLR 161, in the case of Freudenberg Industries Ltd v. Dias Mechanical Engineering Ltd., C.A. Application No. 69/79, CA Appeal No. 102/82, Court of Appeal Minutes of 14.7.1983. Seneviratne, J. examined the two lines of authority and observed that the principle that property be delivered to the person who had possession of it at the time of seizure will not apply if there is an "unlawful" or "criminal" element in such possession."

In this connection Section 431(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code must be considered, which reads as follows:

> " The seizure by any police officer of property taken under section 29 or alleged or suspected to have been stolen or found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence shall be immediately reported to a Magistrate who shall forthwith make such order as he thinks fit respecting the delivery of such property to the person entitled to the possession thereof, or if such person cannot be ascertained respecting the custody and production of such property."

After considering the above legal literature, I hold that the Magistrate, under Section 431(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, has the power to make an order to hand over the property seized by a Police Officer to a person other than the person from whose custody it was taken. I further hold that on the material placed before the Magistrate, if the Magistrate can decide that the person claiming the property has got it by way of stealing the property, the Magistrate has no authority to give it to the said person.

In this case, the statement made by the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent to the Police marked 'P9' must be considered. In the said statement, the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent has admitted that he had stolen jewellery (the production in the case) from the cupboards of the Sri Lanka Insurance Corporation (the Virtual-Complainant-Appellant). Therefore, on the strength of 'P9' itself, the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent is not entitled to claim the production in the case and the Magistrate could not have handed over the production in the case to the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent especially in view of the contents in document marked 'P9'. If there is material before Court that the person claiming the production has obtained the production by dishonest way, can the Court hand over such production to the said person? In this connection, I would like to consider the judgment of His Lordship Justice Sansoni in Kanapathipillai Vs. Meerasaibu in 58 NLR page 41, His Lordship Justice Sansoni in the said case (supra) at page 43 has made the following observation;

> "There is well established rule that the law will presume in favour of honesty and against fraud"

In this case, it is clear from the statement made by the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent marked 'P9', that he has stolen the jewellery from the cupboards of the Sri Lanka Insurance Corporation (the Virtual-Complainant-Appellant). Therefore applying the principles laid down in Kanapathipillai Vs Meerasaibu (supra), I hold that that the learned Magistrate could not have come to the conclusion that the Suspect-Claimant-Respondent was entitled to receive the production (melted gold) and that the learned Magistrate was clearly wrong when he, by his order dated 19.08.2013, came to the above conclusion.

The learned High Court Judge was wrong when he affirmed the above order of the learned Magistrate.

Considering all the above matters, I set aside the judgment of the learned High Court Judge dated 04.06.2015 and the order of the learned Magistrate dated 19.08.2013. The Suspect-Claimant-Respondent has admitted that he had stolen the said property (melted gold) from the cupboards of the Sri Lanka Insurance Corporation. The Internal Auditor of the Virtual-Complainant-Appellant in his affidavit filed in the Magistrate's Court has stated that clients of State Banks and Private Banks have pawned jewellery to the said Banks; that the Sri Lanka Insurance Corporation (the Virtual-Complainant-Appellant) has issued insurance policies in respect of the said jewellery; and that said jewellery was kept in the cupboards of Sri Lanka Insurance Corporation.

For the above reason, I hold that the Sri Lanka Insurance Corporation (the Virtual-Complainant-Appellant) is entitled to receive the production in the case (melted gold). The learned Magistrate, Fort is directed to act in accordance with this judgment.

We appreciate the submissions made by Mr. Anil Silva, PC, Mr. Asoka Weerasooriya and Ms. Ganga Wakishta Arachchi, SSC.

In view of the conclusion reached above, I answer the 1st and 4th questions of law in the affirmative. 2nd and 3rd questions of law do not arise for consideration.

The Plaintiff-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as "Appellant") instituted the above styled action in the Commercial High Court of the Western Province (Exercising Civil Jurisdiction) Holden in Colombo (hereinafter referred to as "Commercial High Court") against the Defendant-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as "Respondent") praying for damages in a sum of Rupees Twenty-Five Million (Rs. 25,000,000.00). The damages are claimed as a result of the alleged negligence of the Respondent.

After the framing of admissions and issues, the Respondent suggested that issue nos. 8(a) and 8(b) be determined as preliminary issues of law. Since the Appellant did not object to this application, the learned judge of the Commercial High Court decided to rule on the following issues as preliminary issues of law:

8 (අ) උත්තරයේ 1 වන ඡේදයේ සඳහන් කරුණු 1 ක් සහ/හෝ සමහරක් හේතු කොටගෙන මෙම නඩුව මෙම ගරු අධිකරණයේ පැවරීමට අධිකරණ බලයක් නොමැතිද?

(ආ) ඉහත විසඳිය යුතු ප්‍රශ්නයට විත්තිකරුගේ වාසියට පිළිතුරු ලැබේ නම් මෙම නඩුව නිෂ්ප්‍රභා සහ/හෝ ප්‍රතික්ෂේප කළ යුතුද?

The learned judge of the Commercial High Court held that the Court did not have jurisdiction to hear and determine the action as it is not an action to enforce any commercial transaction and that the cause of action is based on negligence and/or breach of duty of care and not on contract. Consequently, the action of the Appellant was dismissed.

Aggrieved by the dismissal of the action, the Appellant applied for permission to appeal. The Court has granted leave to appeal on the following question of law:

> "Has the learned High Court Judge misdirected himself by holding that the Commercial High Court does not have jurisdiction to hear the Petitioner's case?"

This appeal raises an important question of law concerning the jurisdiction of the Commercial High Court.

By virtue of Article 154P of the Constitution, a High Court was established for every Province in the country. Several constitutional provisions and other laws specify the jurisdiction conferred on this High Court.

The High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 10 of 1996 (hereinafter referred to as the "Act") sought to expand its jurisdiction in certain civil actions and matters specified therein.

The long title of a statute is part of it and, as such, is considered an aid to its construction. In Union of India v. Elphinstone Spinning and Waving Co Ltd & Ors [AIR (2001) Supreme Court 724] the Supreme Court of India held that a long title along with the preamble is a good guide regarding the object, scope or purpose of the statute. However, the long title of the Act is hardly of assistance in identifying its object, scope or purpose. There is no preamble to the Act.

However, the following excerpt from the speech made by the Minister at the Second Reading of the Bill in Parliament provides a clear understanding of the object, scope and purpose of the Act:

> "Mr. Speaker, the Bill that is now before the House relates to commercial litigation specifically. I do not think that there is any doubt that this is one of the impediments and constraints that has been identified with regard to investments and in our country. Sometimes there is a reluctance on the part of persons to invest in our country because of the awareness that when problems arise it takes such a long time to sort out these problems. There is no efficient machinery available for the rapid resolution of commercial disputes. This is of interest not only to foreign investors but to people who engage in entrepreneurial and commercial activity in our own country. One of the reasons for the exacerbation of this problem, Mr. Speaker, is a very wide jurisdiction of the District Courts. These commercial matters have to be adjudicated upon by the District Courts of our country and the District Courts are already burdened with a great variety of work involving money chums, contracts, frauds, testamentary jurisdiction, a whole variety of matters. So, commercial matters are just one among many items that they have to deal within the course of their day to day work. We think the time has come to make a departure from that practice and to bring into existence a separate forum which has special responsibility for the resolution of commercial disputes. Mr. Speaker, that is why we propose that this jurisdiction should henceforth be exercised by the High Court of the country."
> [Parliamentary Debates (Hansard), Volume 104 – No. 10, 22nd March, 1996, 1174]

Hence the Commercial High Court was established to reduce the jurisdiction of the District Court and vest exclusive jurisdiction over commercial matters in the Commercial High Court with a view to provide speedy resolution to such disputes.

Section 2(1) of the said Act reads:

> "Every High Court established by Article 154P of the Constitution for a Province shall, with effect from such date as the Minister may, by Order published in the Gazette appoint, in respect of such High Court have exclusive jurisdiction and shall have cognizance of and full power to hear and determine, in the manner provided for by written law, all actions, applications and proceedings specified the First Schedule to this Act, if the party or parties defendant to such action resides or reside, or the cause a action has arisen, or the contract sought to be enforce was made, or in the case of applications or proceeding under the Companies Act, No 17 of 1982 the registered office of the Company is situated, within the Province which such High Court is established."

The jurisdiction so vested in the Commercial High Court has two components, namely:

(1) Subject Matter Jurisdiction

(2) Territorial Jurisdiction

The subject matter jurisdiction is set out in the First Schedule to the Act while the territorial jurisdiction is set out in section 2(1) of the Act. The resulting jurisdiction is rendered exclusively to the Commercial High Court.

The territorial jurisdiction depends upon where the party or parties defendant to such action resides or reside, or the cause of action has arisen, or the contract sought to be enforced was made, or in the case of applications or proceeding under the Companies Act, No. 17 of 1982 the registered office of the Company is situated.

The matter before the Court does not involve the territorial jurisdiction of the Commercial High Court. The only issue is its subject matter jurisdiction.

Therefore, the decision in this case revolves around the interpretation to be given to Item (1) of the first schedule to the Act which, as amended, reads as follows:

> "All actions where the cause of action has arisen out of commercial transactions (including causes of action relating to banking, the export of merchandise, services affreightment, insurance, mercantile agency, mercantile usage and the construction of any mercantile document) in which the debt, damage or demand is for a sum exceeding twenty million rupees or such other amount as may be fixed by the Minister from time to time, by Notification published in the Gazette, other than actions instituted under the Debt Recovery (Special Provisions) Act, No. 2 of 1990."

The fundamental requirement for the Commercial High Court to have jurisdiction is that the cause of action must have arisen out of a commercial transaction.

The learned counsel for the Respondent drew our attention to the decision of this Court in D.A.D. Engineering (Pvt) Ltd. v. Subhasinghe (S.C. Appeal 45/2015, S.C.M. 15.12.2017] where it was held that the jurisdiction assigned to the Commercial High Court is a special jurisdiction and therefore the provisions of the Act will have to be strictly adhered to when the Commercial High Court is exercising the jurisdiction conferred on it. I do not believe the Court intended that the provisions of the Act should be interpreted narrowly.

On the contrary, the Court has consistently held that the jurisdiction of the Commercial High Court must be interpreted broadly [Cornel & Company Limited v. Mitsui and Company Limited and Others [2000] 1 Sri.L.R. 57]. In Seneviratne and Another v. State Bank of India [S.C. (C.H.C.) Appeal 53/2006, S.C.M. 17.12.2014] the Court held that the term "commercial" should be interpreted in a broad sense having regard to the many activities which are an integral part of banking and commerce.

Accordingly, in my view, the words cause of action has arisen out of commercial transactions in Item (1) must be given a broad interpretation. It is further supported by the use of the word "All".

The genus of Item (1) is a commercial transaction. Item (1) sets out certain classes of cause of actions which by definition falls within it. It is not intended to be comprehensive, as the term used is "including". One such class of cause of action is cause of action relating to banking. When the cause of action relates to banking, by definition it becomes a cause of action arising out of commercial transactions.

The learned counsel for the Respondent submitted that the Commercial High Court is vested with, what I refer to as subject matter jurisdiction, only where the cause of action arises from a commercial transaction as set out in the Schedule to the Act i.e., cause of action which arises pertaining to a contract. He further contended that in a delictual action, the cause of action consists of three conditions, namely:

(1) The defendant owed a duty of care towards the plaintiff

(2) The defendant breached this duty of care negligently

(3) As a result, the plaintiff suffered damages

On this basis, he submitted that the action of the Respondent is not a commercial transaction but delictual.

When examining the pleadings before the Court, the following facts appear to be uncontested between the parties:

(1) Appellant maintained an account with the Respondent.

(2) From time-to-time money was transferred to and from this account.

(3) Somewhere in 2016, the Appellant instructed the Respondent to transfer a certain sum of money from this account to the account of Passion Shipping Company Limited maintained at Standard Chartered Bank, Hong Kong.

Admittedly the Appellant's cause of is delictual. Nonetheless the right question is whether the cause of action relates to banking and not whether the cause of action is delictual. In answering this question Court will have to look not to the mere form, but to the grounds of the plaint and to the media on which the plaintiff asks for judgment.

The Appellant claims that the instructions given as a customer to its bank, the Respondent, was negligently breached in the transfer of funds from its account to the account of Passion Shipping Company Limited maintained at Standard Chartered Bank, Hong Kong.

The expression 'banking' embraces every transaction coming within the legitimate business of a banker [Tennant vs. Union Bank of Canada (1894 AC 31)]. In Indian Bank vs. Acuity Stock Brokers (Pvt) Limited [(2011) 2 Sri.L.R. 149 at 155-6] Suresh Chandra J. held:

> "There is no clear-cut demarcation of the transactions that one has with a Bank being classified as Banking Transactions. It is usual to consider lodging money into a bank account, withdrawing money, adding interest to an account, direct debits, deducting bank charges, basically any sort of activity involving a change of money in an account is a banking transaction which are usually listed in a bank account statement."

Clearly the transaction upon which the Appellant bases its cause of action is a banking transaction. The damages are claimed for breach of an alleged duty of care based on the banker-customer relationship. Hence the media upon which the Appellant has instituted this action is no doubt a banking transaction.

Applying the broader interpretation to Item (1), I hold that all causes of action relating to banking in which the debt, damage or demand is for a sum exceeding twenty million rupees or such other amount as may be fixed by the Minister from time to time, by notification published in the Gazette, is within the subject matter jurisdiction of the Commercial High Court except actions instituted under the Debt Recovery (Special Provisions) Act, No. 2 of 1990.

Accordingly, I hold that the cause of action of the Appellant is related to banking and falls within the subject matter jurisdiction of the Commercial High Court.

This conclusion is supported by the incongruous consequences of upholding the submissions of the Respondent.

In terms of section 3 of the Civil Law Ordinance No. 05 of 1852, in all questions or issues which may hereafter arise or which may have to be decided in Sri Lanka with respect to the law of banks and banking, the law to be administered shall be the same as would be administered in England in the like case, at the corresponding period, if such question or issue had arisen or had to be decided in England, unless in any case other provision is or shall be made by any enactment now in force in Sri Lanka or hereafter to be enacted.

In general, English law recognizes concurrent liability for breach of contract as well as tort. According to Burrows on Remedies for Torts and Breach of Contract (2nd Ed., page 4, Butterworths, 1994), on the same facts and in relation to the same loss, the plaintiff may be able to show not only that the defendant has broken his contract but also that he has committed the tort of negligence. He goes on to state that (at page 5) if the standard of liability is not more onerous, there should be in principle be no objection to the plaintiff choosing to obtain judgment either for the breach of contract or for the tort of negligence, depending on which is more favorable to him.

In Henderson v. Merrett Syndicates Ltd. [(1995) 2 A.C. 145 at 193-4 (HL)] Lord Goff held:

> "..the common law is not antipathetic to concurrent liability, and that there is no sound basis for a rule which automatically restricts the claimant to either a tortious or a contractual remedy. The result may be untidy: but, given that the tortious duty is imposed by the general law, and the contractual duty is attributable to the will of the parties, I do not find it objectionable that the claimant may be entitled to take advantage of the remedy which is most advantageous to him, subject only to ascertaining whether the tortious duty is so inconsistent with the applicable contract that, in accordance with ordinary principle, the parties must be taken to have agreed that the tortious remedy is to be limited or excluded."

This general principle has been applied in relation to law of banking. Under English law, there are many situations where a Bank is liable to its customer for breach of contract as well as in tort.

For example, in Barclays Bank plc v. Quincecare Ltd. and Another [(1992) 4 All ER 363 at 375-6] Steyn J. held:

> "Primarily, the relationship between a banker and customer is that of debtor and creditor. But quoad the drawing and payment of the customer's cheques as against the money of the customer's in the banker's hand the relationship is that of principle and agent: see Westminister Bank Ltd v Hilton (1926) 43 TLR 124 at 126 per Lord Atkinson. Similarly, when the bank in the present case acted on an order to transfer by immediate money transfer money from Quincecare current account to Philip Evans & Co in Bournemouth, the bank was acting as Quincecare's agent. As agent the bank owed fiduciary duties to Quincecare: see Bowstead on Agency (15th edn) pp 156-160. Prima facie every agent for reward is also bound to exercise reasonable care and skill in carrying out the instructions of his principal. Bowstead p 144. There is no logical or sensible reason for holding that bankers are immune from such elementary obligation. In my judgement it is an implied term of the contract between the bank and the customer that the bank orders. Moreover, notwithstanding what was said in Tai Hing Cotton Mill Ltd v Liu Chong Hing Bank Ltd [1985] 2 All ER 947 at 957, [1986] AC 80 at 107, a banker may in a case such as present be sued in tort as well as in contract: See Midland Bank Trust Co Ltd v Hett Stubbs & Kemp (a firm) [1978] 3 All ER 571, [1979] Ch 384. But the duties in contract and tort are coextensive, and in the context of the present case nothing turns on the question whether the case is approached as one in contract or tort."

Furthermore, according to Odgers on Paget's Law of Banking [15th Ed., page 662, LexisNexis] wrongful dishonour of payment order will usually render the bank liable to the customer for breach of contract, and it may also constitute the tort of libel.

Therefore, upholding the Respondent's submission creates uncertainty and confusion in the way the system works. A customer who may have a cause of action for breach of contract and a delictual claim against a bank relating to a banking transaction, will have to institute action in the District Court if he chooses the delictual claim and in the Commercial High Court if he chooses the breach of contract claim. The District Court action will provide for two appeals while the Commercial High Court action will provide only for one appeal.

In Shannon Realties Ltd. v. Ville de St. Michel [(1924) A.C. 185, 192-3] it was held:

> "Where the words of a statute are clear they must, of course, be followed; but, on their Lordships' opinion, where alternative constructions are equally open, that alternative is to be chosen which will be consistent with the smooth working of the system which the statute purports to be regulating: and that alternative is to be rejected which will introduce uncertainty, friction or confusion into the working of the system."

Moreover, the jurisdiction of the District Court will not be reduced in relation to commercial matters as intended by the legislature. Instead of a speedy resolution of commercial disputes, there will be a multiplicity of proceedings in both original and appellate courts which runs contrary to the legislative intent.

For example. there may be banking transactions between a customer and a bank where by contract the delictual liability of the bank is sought to be limited or avoided. Where the customer seeks to sue on the delictual liability, he will have to institute an action in the District Court. If the Bank wants to avoid delictual liability based on the contractual stipulations that may have to be done in a separate action in the Commercial High Court as any cross claim in the District Court action based on the exclusion of liability by contractual terms will be a matter for the Commercial High Court according to the Respondent.

For all the foregoing reasons, I answer the question of law in the affirmative and set aside the judgment of the Commercial High Court dated 19.12.2019.

The plaintiff – respondent – petitioner (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the plaintiff or plaintiff- petitioner) which is a limited liability company instituted an action in the District Court of Matale on 8th October 1981, seeking a declaration of title to the land more fully described in the second schedule to the plaint, and ejectment of the defendants and damages as stated in the plaint.

The defendant by his answer dated 15th October 1981 sought a dismissal of the action of the plaintiff.

As per the plaint dated 08.10.1981, the plaintiff company's position was that;

- The original owner of the land more fully described in the 1st schedule to the plaint, namely Ihalagedarawatte and Nithulgahagedarawatte of one rood and 8.8 perches in extent and depicted in plan no. 1128 dated 24.08.1928 of S.S. Kandasamy licensed surveyor, was one Maulana.
- Said Maulana by deed no. 1292 dated 02.07.1933 had transferred the same to one Junus Lebbe, who then transferred the same by deed No. 1475 dated 19.01.1940 to one S.A.C.H. Mohammadu Mohideen.
- Said Mohammadu Mohideen by deed No. 1054 dated 01.02.1975 transferred the same to the plaintiff company.
- The plaintiff has prescriptive title owing to undisturbed, independent possession of the corpus for over 50 years.
- The defendant without any title, from 01.10.1981, has forcibly taken a portion towards the south of the said land to his possession on the strength of a purported deed no.4902 dated 17.01.1976 executed by the aforesaid Moulana's children, who did not have any right to execute such a deed since Moulana already had transferred the land by the aforesaid deed no.1292.
- The extent of land in the forcible possession of the defendant is more fully described in the 2nd schedule to the plaint which is 9 perches in extent as shown in plan no. 288 dated 29.10.1975 of K. S. Samarasinghe, licensed surveyor, and the said plan 288 had been made using the details extracted from the aforesaid plan no. 1128 of S.S Kandasamy, licensed surveyor.

It is pertinent to note here that the plaintiff company has not taken a stance in its plaint that the original owner Moulana had separated 2/3rd of the land called Ihalagedarawatte and amalgamated it with Nithulgahagedarawatte.

The defendant in his answer admitted that aforesaid Moulana was the original owner of the land described in the 1st schedule to the plaint and inter alia stated;

- That the aforesaid Moulana did not transfer the entirety of the said land called Ihalagedarawatte and what he had in fact sold was only a 2/3rd share of the said Ihalagedarawatte which is more fully described in the 1st schedule to the answer.
- That with the demise of the said Moulana in 1964, the remaining 1/3rd share (9 perches) of the land devolved on his children.
- The aforesaid children by deed no. 4902 dated 17.01.1976 attested by S. Theivanayagam Notary public, transferred the aforesaid 1/3rd share to the defendant which is more fully described in the 2nd schedule to the answer.
- That the defendant is entitled to the aforesaid land described in the 2nd schedule to the answer by prescriptive possession from 1947.
- That the defendant, exercising his right to 1/3rd of the land, had already constructed a garage on it and denied that the plaintiff's position that he was attempting to make a garage or any building on the said land.

Thus, the defendant prayed for the dismissal of the plaint. However, in the 1st schedule to the answer, it is stated that the plaintiff's 2/3rd is shown in the aforesaid plan no.1128 and as per the body of the answer and 2nd schedule to it, it is indicated that defendant's 1/3rd is shown in the aforesaid plan no.288. It can be noted that nothing is mentioned in the answer relating to an existing co-ownership.

On 11.02.1982, issues nos. 1 to 6 were raised by the Plaintiff and 7 to 14 were raised by the defendant and during the trial on 16.02.2006, issues nos. 15 to 21 were raised on behalf of the substituted defendant and issues nos.22 and 23 were raised for the plaintiff. However, issues nos. 15 and 16 were not allowed by the original court. As per the issues raised at the beginning of the trial, the plaintiff's contention was that the land in the second schedule to the plaint is a portion of the land in the 1st schedule to the plaint and the plaintiff is entitled to the said land on the strength of the deeds referred to in the plaint and by prescription, and the defendant was in forcible occupation disputing its entitlement in the manner explained in the plaint. The defendant's contention through issues at the commencement of the trial was that he was entitled to the prescriptive title of the land in the 2nd schedule to the plaint and however, the plaintiff company only got undivided 2/3rd share of the land named Ihalagedarawatte from the original owner Moulana and, the defendant became entitled to the balance 1/3rd of the

The issues raised later on during the trial queried whether the plaintiff had already transferred the subject matter and as such, not the owner of the land as averred in the plaint by that time or whether the plaintiff had re-acquired the land by deed no. 7053 and whether the plaintiff could maintain the action and further, whether the district court had ordered on 26.08.2003 that the plaintiff could proceed with plaint only to recover damages. Anyway, such transfer by the plaintiff has not been proved which caused the framing of said issues during the trial and thus, as found by the learned High Court Judges trial judges answers to those issues cannot be faulted.

As per the plaint and the issues raised by the plaintiff, the action filed in the district court can be identified as a rei vindicatio action since the position of the plaintiff was that it is the title holder and the defendant has to be evicted from the possession of the portion of the land which is unlawfully and forcibly occupied by the defendant without any right. It is trite law that in a rei vindication action, the plaintiff must prove his title to get the reliefs prayed and defendant need not prove anything until that burden is satisfied.[1] Thus, the burden in proving that the land in the 2nd schedule to the plaint is a portion of the land in the 1st schedule to the plaint and that the plaintiff has the title to the land in the 1st schedule to the plaint including the land in the 2nd schedule to the plaint was on the plaintiff. Subsequent to the trial, the learned district judge delivered the judgment on 21.01.2008, in favour of the plaintiff company.

As mentioned above, this court observes that the defendant in his answer, on one hand claimed prescriptive title to the 1/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte and on the other hand, it appears contradictorily claim coownership to the said land based on his entitlement to an undivided one third. If he claims co-ownership with the plaintiff, he cannot claim prescription against the plaintiff. However, in the issue no.7 raised, he claims prescriptive title generally but has not specifically claimed against the plaintiff. Thus, it may be a claim of prescription as a co-owner generally against the 3rd parties but not against the other co-owners. However, since this is a rei vindicatio action, the plaintiff must first prove its title to the land it claims.

Being aggrieved by the aforesaid Judgment of the learned district Judge, the substituted defendant preferred an application to the civil appellate high court of Kandy. The judgment of the civil appellate high court of Kandy was delivered on 18.12.2013 in favour of the defendant, setting aside the Judgment of the learned district judge of Matale and dismissing the action of the plaintiff company.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the high court, the plaintiff preferred a leave to appeal application to this court and this court, as per the journal entry dated 19.05.2015, granted leave on the following questions of law as set out in paragraph 16 (i) to (vii) of the petition dated 24.01.2014;

"(i). Are the statements of their Lordships stating that,

"a party is not entitled to plead legal or paper title and prescriptive title together in the same action" and the statement in the Judgment after quoting S.3 of the Prescription Ordinance wherein Their Lordships state "It is clear from the above provisions that one cannot plead prescriptive title against one's own legal or paper title" accurate statements of law?

(ii). Have Their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court erred in Law by failing to recognize the fact that the original owner of the lands called Nithulgahagederawatte and Ihalagederewatte namely the said Moulana was entitled to demarcate and depict in Plan 1128 dated 28.8.1928 (P2) an amalgamated block of land comprising of the entirety of Nithulgahagederawatte and 2/3rd of Ihalagederewatte?

(iii). Thus was the finding of Their Lordships that "a co-owner cannot without the consent of the other co-owners or by instituting partition proceedings bring the co-ownership to an end" was without any factual basis in the present case?

(iv). Have Their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court erred in Law and misunderstood the point in dispute in the said case by stating that "the main question for determination here is whether "Ihalagederewatte" still remains co-owned or by the amalgamation of the two lands as stated in the schedules to the title deeds the co-ownership to "Ihalagederewatte" came to an end"?

(v). Have Their Lordships misdirected themselves in stating "it is not clear whether the property means the land described in the 1st Schedule to the Plaint or the entire Ihalagederewatte and the entire Nithugahagedarawatte"?

(vi). Have Their Lordships erred in Law in holding that the Petitioner who was claiming title to a defined extent of land so defined and divided by the original owner of the land himself had to prove an ouster against anyone else claiming a portion of the same land when it was nobody's case that there was any question of co-ownership involved?

(vii). Are the findings of Their Lordships in conflict with the following statement in the Judgment which states "however, it is not clear whether Moulana was entitled to the entirety of "Ihalagederewatte""

The main reliefs prayed for in the petition of appeal are to vacate the judgment of the civil appeal high court and to affirm the judgment of the learned district judge. To see whether the learned high court judges erred or whether the district court judgment can be restored it is necessary to see first the viability and correctness of the reasons given by or the findings of the learned district court judge.

As per the answer to issue no. 8 given by the learned district judge, he has come to a finding that Moulana was the original owner of the land called Ihalagedara watte. I do not find any dispute as to the original ownership of the said land among the parties as per the evidence led at the trial. Even the stance taken on behalf of the defendant was that undivided 2/3rd of the said land was transferred to the predecessors of title of the plaintiff by Moulana and the balance 1/3rd was transferred to the original defendant by the heirs of Moulana, and the defendant's argument on co-ownership apparently is not based on the fact that there are other people who has co-ownership to this land but owing to their stance that Moulana transferred only undivided 2/3rd of the said Ihalagedarawatte to the predecessors of the plaintiff creating a co-ownership between them. The plaintiff also appears to argue that, since Moulana was the original owner, it had the right to separate 2/3rd of the Ihalagedarawatte[2] and transfer it along with the other land, namely Nitulgahagedarawatte as per the plan no.1128 marked P2 and as such, there is no co-ownership and the plaintiff is entitled to the entirety of the amalgamated land depicted in the said plan without any co-ownership attached to it. One of the plaintiff's witnesses has stated in evidence that Moulana was the original owner of the land described in the 1st schedule to the plaint.[3] Thus, it is common ground between the parties that Moulana was the original owner of the Ihalagedarawatte. Thus, the finding of the learned district Judge that Moulana was the original owner of Ihalagedarawatte cannot be assailed.

Issue no.1 raised at the trial query whether the land in the 2nd schedule to the plaint is part of the land in the 1st schedule to the plaint and the learned district judge has answered it in the affirmative. This finding of the learned district judge also cannot be faulted as it is clear from the evidence led at the trial that the land in the 1st schedule is the land depicted in plan no 1128 marked P2 and land in the 2nd schedule is the land depicted in plan no.288, marked P1 and the latter was made without a survey on the ground but using details extracted from the P2. Further K.S. Samarasinghe, the licensed surveyor who made the plan marked P1 has clearly admitted in his evidence that entirety of P1 falls within P2 and P1 is the south end of P2.[4]

This being a rei vindicatio action, the plaintiff company to be successful, as per its stance taken through its pleadings and the issues, it has to prove that it has title to the entire land shown in plan marked P2 through deeds or prescription or at least to the land shown in plan marked P1 through deeds or by prescriptive possession.[5] Otherwise, plaintiff shall fail in establishing its case. However, no deed that the plaintiff relies on has any reference to plan marked P1. In fact, the defendant has got that plan prepared for him.[6] If the plaintiff is successful in establishing its title to the disputed land, then only the defendant needs to establish better title or his right to remain in the land. In this context, the crucial issues raised at the trial were issues no. 2,3, 9, 10, 13 and 14. Issues no.2and 3 raised by the plaintiff query whether the land in the 2nd schedule of the plaint belongs to the plaintiff on deeds cited in the plaint or by prescriptive possession while issues no.9 and 10 raised by the defendant query whether the plaintiff is entitled to the entirety of Ihalagedarwatte as claimed in the plaint or whether the plaintiff is entitled only to an undivided 2/3 share of the Ihalagedarawatte as stated in the answer. Issues no.13 and 14 query whether parties are co-owners and if so, whether the defendant could be evicted. It must be noted that there is no clear averment in the plaint where the plaintiff claims entitlement to the entirety of Ihalagedarawatte but it has claimed title to the entirety of amalgamated land shown in plan marked P2 which consists of 2 allotments of land Nitulagahagedarawatte and Ihalagedarawatte.

As per the judgment, the learned District Judge has answered issues no. 1and 2 in the affirmative indicating that the plaintiff is entitled to the land depicted in P2 and the 1st schedule to the plaint by deeds as well as by prescription, and has answered the issues no. 9 and 10 to say that the plaintiff has got an undivided 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte as a divided 2/3rd portion as per the plan. Issue no.13 and 14 has been answered rejecting the stance that parties are co-owners and giving the plaintiff entitlement to damages. As per the answers given, it appears that the learned district judge has come to the conclusion that what the plaintiff is entitled from Ihalagedarawatte was a divided 2/3rd as per the plan. It appears the plan refers here in these answers by the learned district judge is plan no. 1128 marked as P2. It is necessary to peruse why the learned district judge came to the said findings contained in the said answers to issue no.2,3,9,10,13 and 14 as evidenced by the contents of the district court judgment and see whether they are supported by acceptable evidence given by the witnesses or documents tendered at the trial. In this regard, it appears the learned district judge has come to certain inferences. Those inferences and this court's observations with regard to those inferences are mentioned below;

- Inference 1; The original owner Moulana had retained the service of S. Kandasamy licensed surveyor to prepare the plan no 1128 dated 24.08.1928, marked P2 and by making the said plan he had amalgamated two adjoining lands namely, Nithulagahagedarawatte of 21.6 perches and Ihalagedarawatte of 27.2 perches.[7]
- Inference 2; As per the deed no.1592 dated 02.07.1933, marked P4, executed after the making of aforesaid plan Moulana had sold the amalgamated land to [7] Vide page 6 of the said judgment.

Junus Lebbe and as per the said deed what has been amalgamated with Nithulagahagedarawatte as shown in the said plan was 2/3rd of the said Ihalagedarawatte and both lands have become one land of 1 rood 8.08 perches.[8]

- Inference 3; Moulana being the sole owner at that time, had all the rights to separate 2/3 of Ihalagedarawatte and to make a plan accordingly and make one land as amalgamated in plan marked P2.[9]
- Inference 4; Due to the execution of deeds marked P4 and P5, title to the land shown in P2 passed from Moulana to Junus Lebbe and then to Mohamadu Mohideen and the description of the land is same in the schedules of P4 and P5, and by deed marked P6 title devolved on the plaintiff company.[10]
- Inference 5; If, as per what the defendant states, Moulana had 1/3rd after transferring 2/3rd it should be situated outside the land in P2.[11]

Observations of this Court; The notes on the plan marked P2 does not state that it was made on the request of Moulana. In fact, there is no reference to Moulana on the face of it. Neither Moulana nor S. S. Kandaswamy, licensed surveyor has given evidence to say that it was Moulana who got the plan made through the said surveyor, S. Kandaswamy.; K. Kumaraswamy, licensed surveyor, son of aforesaid S. Kandaswamy, licensed surveyor was only 59 years old when he gave evidence, and he was the only witness born prior to the making of plan marked P2. He would have been about 5 years old when his farther made P2 and however, nowhere in his evidence has he stated that his farther made P2 on the request made by Moulana and his farther in making the said plan amalgamated an identified 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte with the other land Nithulagahagedarawatte on a request made by said Moulana. K. S. Samarasinghe, licensed surveyor who has given evidence for the plaintiff has not revealed any knowledge with regard to the making of P2. What he has stated in evidence is that he used P2 in making his plan no.288 marked P1. Police officer Karunaratne is a witness who went for the inspection after a complaint made to the police but has not stated anything with regard to the making of P2. Other lay witnesses who gave evidence for the plaintiff were born after 1950 as per their age at the time they gave evidence for the plaintiff in 1982 and as per P14.[12] Hence, none of the plaintiff's witness can state from their personal knowledge that in 1928, Moulana separated an identified 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte and amalgamated it with Nithulagahagedarawatte and got the service of S. Kandaswamy, licensed surveyor to make the plan marked P2 accordingly. Further, none of them have said that Moulana got the service of S. Kandasamy, licensed surveyor to amalgamate divided 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte with Nithulagahagedarawatte and accordingly to make the plan marked P2. None of the witnesses of the defendant has stated that Moulana got the service of S. Kumarasamy, licensed surveyor to amalgamate divided 2/3rd of Ihalagahagedarawatte with Nithulagahagedarawatte. Defendant's stance as said before is that only undivided 2/3rd of Ihalagahagedarawatte was sold to Junus Lebbe, one of the plaintiff's predecessors in title but not that the said plan marked P2 contains an identified 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte.

The certified copy of plan marked P2 found at page 384 of the brief, which appears to have been initialed by the trial judge when it was marked, only indicates that it was made by S. Kandaswamy, licensed surveyor in 1928, and it shows an amalgamated two allotments of land, one called Nitulagahagedarawatte and the other called Ihalagedarawatte. Nowhere does it state that only 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte was amalgamated in making the said plan. It is also observed that the total extent given in the plan is 1 Rood and 8.8 Perches, in other words 48 perches. As per the diagram, the portion shown as Nitulgedarawatte is 21.6 perches and the portion shown as Ihalagedarawatte is 27.2 perches. The said certified copy of plan P2 shows a protruded portion towards South, and as per the evidence that area seems to be the disputed area in the action filed in the district court. (However, there is a photo copy of the original of the same plan found at page 433 of the brief which is not initialed by the trial judge indicating that it was not the one marked at the trial. Anyhow, for the purpose of this decision this court has to consider the copy that appears to have been initialed by the trial judge). It appears that, prior to filing of the plaint, the plaintiff's witness K.

[12] Vide their age mentioned prior to the recording of evidence and P14 where witness Sihabdeen Ahamed Mohideen had revealed his age.

Kumarasamy, licensed surveyor, had surveyed a part of the amalgamated land on 11.12.1978, and made the plan no.7597 marked P3 which depicts the relevant area including the protruded portion but P3 indicates that the extent as 35 perches. In this plan, the surveyor has inserted a "clitch" mark to indicate that the protruded portion to the south is part of the portion shown to the north. K. Kumarasamy, licensed surveyor has admitted that he did not do a superimposition of P3 with the plan marked P2. Thus, the increase of the extent may be due to the change of location of the boundaries. However, it is evidenced from this plan that even though the plaintiff had put up buildings on the northern part, it has not done any construction on the disputed area though they claimed that they have possessed it. Hence, the possession of the parties of the disputed area has to be decided on other evidence.

It appears that the learned District Judge has heavily relied on the contents of the schedules in the deeds relied on by the plaintiff and interpreted the said schedule to come to his conclusions.[13] In fact, he has quoted a part of the said schedule in the deed marked P4 by which Moulana transferred the land as described in the said schedule to Junus Lebbe. The learned high court judges have quoted all the relevant parts of the said schedule in their judgment and even the plaintiff's counsel too have quoted the said schedule in their written submissions tendered to this court on 29.06.2015. The relevant schedule is quoted below and the portion quoted by the learned district judge is highlighted in bold letters for easy perusal.

"THE SCHEDULE REFERRED TO

Mohamed Thamby Vidane and another, according to the plan of survey No.1128 dated 24th August 1928 made by S.S. Kandasamy Licensed Surveyor annexed hereto." (highlighted by bold letters by me)

The second part of the afore quoted schedule clearly indicates what was contemplated there is an undivided 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte. Nowhere in the afore quoted schedule or in the body of the deed, it is stated that Moulana separated the said undivided 2/3rd share to a divided portion of the land and made the plan referred to therein the later part of the schedule. However, it appears that the learned district judge quoting the afore quoted highlighted portion, has interpreted the deed to indicate that what had been transferred by the deed is a one land as depicted by the said plan 1128(P2) and as such Moulana had given away a divided 2/3rd portion of the land called Ihalagedarawatte which 2/3rd formed the one land contained in the said plan along with Nithulagahagedarawatte.[14] It is pertinent to see whether the phraseology "Which said premises adjoining each other now form one property of the extent ……..according to the plan of survey No.1288……." can be interpreted to give the meaning given by the district judge without any supporting evidence in that regard. There is no doubt that the words "which said premises adjoining each other" refers to the premises described in the part 1 and part 2 of the schedule. In interpreting the schedule, now it is important to recognize the premises described in those two parts of the schedule. There cannot be any ambiguity that the premises described in the 1st part of the schedule is Nithulagahagedarawatte within the four boundaries described therein as it is an identifiable land described therein the 1st part of the schedule. However, the second part of the schedule refers to an undivided 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte and boundaries to Ihalagedarawatte has been mentioned there in the second part of the schedule. When it refers to an undivided 2/3rd, it does not indicate an identifiable portion of a land. Thus, an unidentifiable portion cannot mean a premises that can be amalgamated with another property to form one property. Only premises that can be identifiable in the second part of the schedule is the land called Ihalagedarawatte mentioned therein with the four boundaries to identify it. Thus, this court opines that what is meant by the words "Which said premises adjoining each other now form one property of the extent ……..according to the plan of survey No.1288……." is that Nithulagahagedarawatte and Ihalagedarawatte now form one property as depicted in plan 1288. To give another meaning to say that Moulana separated undivided 2/3rd as a divided 2/3rd and get it to form one land by amalgamating it with the other land called Nithulagahagedarawatte as depicted in plan 1288 amounts to an addition of words which are not there in the schedule. Thus, the interpretation given by the learned district judge to the schedule of the said deed cannot be accepted and the learned district judge erred in understanding and interpreting the schedule of the said deed.

As observed above there was no other oral or documentary evidence acceptable to court that Moulana separated divided 2/3rd from Ihalagedarawatte and amalgamated it with Nithulagahagedarawatte and got S.S. Kandasamy, licensed surveyor to depict in his plan as one land.

What the evidence led at the trial indicate is that the original owner Moulana transferred to Junus Lebbe entirety of Nithulagahagedarawatte and undivided

2/3rd of Ihalgedarawatte from the amalgamated land of Nithulagahagedarawartte of 21.6 perches and Ihalgedarawatte 27.2 perches but not the entirety of Ihalagedarawatte and, Moulana used the plan made in 1928 by S. Kandasamy, licensed surveyor to described the main land when he transferred as aforesaid to Junus Lebbe in 1933. It is true that plan marked P2 depicts an amalgamated land of the two lands mentioned above but there is nothing to say that it was only 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte contained in plan forming the amalgamated land. If 1/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte was left out in making that, one boundary adjoining Ihalagedarwatte in the said plan should have been described as the remaining part of Ihalagedarawatte belonging to Moulana but such description is not found among the description of boundaries in P2. Description of boundaries in the plan marked P2 around the land identified as Ihalagedarawatte tallies with the boundaries given to Ihalagedarawatte in the second part of the schedule quoted above indicating that there cannot be any left out 1/3rd portion of Ihalagedarawatte adjoining the land depicted in P2.

Thus, certain matters contained in the inferences of the learned district judge mentioned above are not supported by evidence led at the trial. Especially the parts of the said inferences that indicate that Moulana got the service of the said surveyor to separate an identified 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte to form a one property with Nithulagahagedarawatte and the balance 1/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte shall lie outside the land shown in plan marked P2 are mere conjectures and surmises which are not supported by the evidence led. If the said plan was made to transfer Nithulagedarawatte and identified 2/3rd of Ihalahedarawatte to Junus Lebbe, it is very unlikely to have a five-year gap between the plan and the transfer deed. Thus, it is the view of this Court that Moulana transferred the entirety of Nithulagahagedarawatte in plan marked P2 and an undivided 2/3rd only of Ihalagedarawatte shown in P2 to Junus Lebbe by P4. Anyway, it appears from the contents of P4 that Moulana had mortgaged the same property to Junus Lebbe in 1928 and certain payments were pending and the vendor and vendee agreed to execute a conditional transfer of the property as per P4, but there is no sufficient material to decide that in 1928 for the purpose of the mortgage Moulana separated 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte and made the plan P2.

It is true that, as the learned district judge observed, Moulana being the sole owner had the right and capacity to transfer a divided portion of Ihalagedarawatte but as per the documents, what he had transferred to Junus Lebbe was an undivided 2/3rd share. By that Moulana remained a co-owner to the land named Ihalagedarawatte even after he executed P4. Hence, through the other deeds marked by the plaintiff company, namely P5 to P6 the plaintiff company only gets title to Ihalagedarawatte as a co-owner along with Moulana and with his demise along with his heirs. As per the documentary evidence placed before the district court, plaintiff has been able to prove only a co-ownership to the land called Ihalagedarwatte.

The defendant claim title to 1/3rd owing to a deed of transfer no. 4902 from the children of Moulana which was marked as P10. It must be noted that there was no dispute that vendors of that deed were children of Moulana. Even the plaintiff's stance in paragraph 6 of their plaint was that the defendant claims title through the said deed marked P10 executed by the children of Moulana where those children had no right to execute such a deed. No issue had been raised challenging P10 as a deed not executed by the children of Moulana. Hence, the learned district judge's comment that it was not proved that vendors of P10 are the children of Moulana is irrelevant as it was not a matter that parties were at variance, even to raise an issue. Further, one of the plaintiff's witnesses had admitted in evidence that P10 was executed by Moulana's children.[15] Thus, as per the documents tendered in evidence parties were co-owners to Ihalagedarawatte. One co-owner cannot file a rei vindication action to evict another co-owner since all the co-owners have title to the land and since rei vindicatio is an action based on title. Even the learned high court judges have correctly stated that a co-owner cannot successfully maintain an action against another co-owner.[16] Thus, unless the plaintiff company could prove prescriptive title to the disputed area or to the whole land named Ihalagedrawatte found in P2, its action should fail.

[15] Vide page488 of the brief.

One co-owner's possession is the possession of other co-owners,[17] and if one's possession may be referable to a lawful title, it can be presumed that it/he/she possess by virtue of that lawful title and further, if one entered in to possession in one capacity, it is presumed that it/he/she continue to possess in the same capacity. A co-owner cannot put an end to the co-ownership by a secret intention in his mind.[18] Hence, the plaintiff company being a co-owner as per its paper title, has to prove ouster or something equivalent to ouster and adverse possession for ten years to claim prescriptive title. It has to prove an overt act or circumstances that a happening of an overt act could be presumed along with adverse possession over 10 years from such an event. Since this is a rei vindicatio action this court has to first see whether the plaintiff was successful in proving his case first. As indicated above he failed in proving exclusive title to Ihalagedarawatte on deeds. Therefore, now it is important to consider whether the plaintiff had proved its title by prescription against the defendant. The two surveyors and the police officer who came for inspection after the police complaint were not competent to give any evidence regarding ouster or of an overt act as they had come to give evidence on the plans they made and the inspection done as per the said police complaint respectively. Other lay witnesses called by the plaintiff, namely Mohomad Nasar Mohideen, Yathi Samul Huk Mohideen and Siabdeen Ahamaed Mohideen do not speak of any ouster or of an overt act or any adverse possession against the plaintiff. Some of them had just stated that before the dispute started, they possessed the disputed portion.[19] However, they do not reveal how they possessed the disputed area. Such mere statements of possession are not sufficient to prove even possession of the disputed area. As said before as per the plan marked P3, it is visible that there are no buildings constructed by the plaintiff on the disputed area and one witness of the plaintiff has stated in evidence that the disputed area is barren.[20] Hence there is no construction or plantation by the plaintiff to prove its possession with regard to the disputed area. The learned district judge has referred to V2, entries in the land registry, and has stated that the plaintiff had mortgaged the land in dispute in 1972, and it establishes that plaintiff exercised its rights and possession to the entire land. However, it appears V2 also refers to a mortgaging of undivided 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte, and such execution of a deed cannot consider as an ouster or an evidence of an overt act which might have taken place in an office of a Notary. Thus, there is no sufficient evidence even to prove possession of the disputed area by the Plaintiff. In such circumstances, a court cannot come to a conclusion that there was ouster or an overt act that changed the nature of possession of the plaintiff in relation to the disputed area.

On the other hand, the defendant claim he possessed the disputed area. The defendant, in his answer has claimed prescriptive possession from 1947 and the learned district judge has criticized this as the defendant got title through a deed in 1976, but the learned district judge has not considered that when one claim prescriptive possession that he can add the possession of his predecessors in title. However, the defendant being a co-owner as per the deeds, he also cannot claim prescriptive title against the plaintiff without proving ouster and adverse possession. As per P7 and P8 police complaints, the witnesses of the plaintiff company had complained to the police with regard to the premises 107 and the police officer who came to give evidence for the plaintiff had stated in his evidence that he went to the premises 107 for inspection and the disputed portion was in front of a house and there was no separate number for the disputed portion where the garage was made. Assessment clerk of the Matale Municipal Council who gave evidence for the defendant had stated that assessment number 107 was in the name of the defendant, and the witness Abdul Assis had stated that his residence is 107/1 and 107 is close to his premises and it was in the possession of the defendant and not with the plaintiff. However, even the defendant had not disclosed the manner he enjoyed the possession of the disputed portion prior to the dispute. It is true that there are certain weaknesses and contradictory stances in the defendant's case. As per the answer, the defendant had not taken a position that he is a co-owner but appears to have claimed a separated 1/3rd portion of Ihalagedarawatte and he appears to have admitted the plaintiff's entitlement to separated 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte.[21] Nevertheless, when issues were raised, the defendant has queried whether he is a co-owner and no objection has been taken against the relevant issues. Issues of a civil action need not be limited to the pleadings. Once issues are raised the pleadings recede to the background and the court has to hear and determine the case as crystalized in the issues.[22] Through the issues co-ownership of parties has been put in issue.

The counsel for the plaintiff tried to point out that as per the schedules of the answer the land claimed by the defendant is outside the plan marked P2. However, as the defendant has referred to the plan no.288 which is made from details extracted from the plan referred to in the schedule 1 and also due to the manner, the boundaries are described in the both schedules, this argument cannot be accepted. What the defendant had attempted to express in those schedules is to describe the 2/3rd portion and 1/3rd portion as separate entities. On the other hand, whatever may be the weaknesses in the defendant's case, as this is a rei vindicatio action, the burden to prove its title is with the plaintiff. The plaintiff had failed in proving exclusive title to the land called Ihalagedarawatte by deeds or by prescription but had proved that it was only a co-owner to an undivided 2/3rd of the land called Ihalagedarawatte and there was sufficient evidence to indicate that the defendant is the other co-owner. Hence, the learned district judge could not have entered the judgment in favour of the plaintiff. Thus, it appears that the final conclusion of the learned high court judges to allow the appeal and enter a judgment dismissing the plaint is correct. In that backdrop, now this court would consider the questions of laws allowed at the support stage.

The 1st question of law queries whether the statement made by the learned high court judges that "a party is not entitled to plead legal or paper title and prescriptive title together in the same action" is an accurate statement of law; This court also observes a misstatement of law here. A person who has paper title possesses the land as the owner and in a manner adverse to others without accepting anyone else as the owner, there cannot be any obstacle for him to plead prescriptive title coupled with the paper title. Even if his paper title fails for some reason such as technical or defect in the title, if he has possessed the property as the owner against others without accepting anyone else as the owner for 10 years or more, he may be successful in his claim on prescriptive title. Further, it is also queried whether the statement of the learned high court judges which connote that as per section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance that one cannot plead prescriptive title against one's own legal or paper title is an accurate statement of law. It is pertinent to note that, said section 3 does not contemplate a situation where a person claims prescriptive title against his own paper title. It contemplates where a defendant claim prescription on a title adverse to the plaintiff or a claimant and in the like manner a plaintiff or an intervenient party claims on a title adverse to the others. In fact, if one has paper title, his possession relates that title and it can be an adverse possession against others but not against his own paper title. On the other hand, if one has paper title, he needs not plead prescription against his own title. In the case at hand, plaintiff has not pleaded prescription against its own title but has pleaded it coupled with paper title against the defendant. Thus, making the said statement it appears that the learned high court judges have misunderstood the pleading of the plaintiff. However, as for the reasons indicated in the discussion above, this misstatement or misunderstanding cannot make the final conclusion of the learned high court judges faulted. Thus, the answer to the 1st question of law is "yes there seems to be a statement which is inaccurate and a statement made without proper understanding of the pleadings but the final conclusion need not be varied or set aside due to them".

[21] Vide the averments and the schedules of the answer.

The second question of law queries whether the learned Civil Appellate High Court Judges erred in law by failing to recognize the fact that the original owner of the lands called Nithulgahagederawatte and Ihalagederewatte namely the said Moulana was entitled to demarcate and depict in Plan 1128 dated 28.8.1928 (P2) an amalgamated block of land comprising of the entirety of Nithulgahagederawatte and 2/3rd of Ihalagederewatte. In this regard as observed above by this court, there was no acceptable evidence to say that Moulana separated 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte and made the plan marked P2 other than he used the said plan which amalgamated those two lands to describe the main land that contained what was transferred by P4. It is true that the original owner was entitled to separate identified 2/3rd of one land and to amalgamate it with the other but what was lacking was evidence to establish that. Hence this court cannot find that the learned high court judges erred in that regard. Thus, the answer to 2nd question of law is in the negative.

The 3rd question of law queries whether the finding of the learned high court judges that "a co-owner cannot without the consent of the other co-owners or without instituting partition proceedings bring the co-ownership to an end" was without any factual basis in the present case. As per the observation made above by this court, the plaintiff failed in proving that he got a divided portion of 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte and failed to prove prescriptive title to the disputed area. Thus, there is a factual basis for this statement as the plaintiff remained a co-owner. Thus, answer is in the negative.

The fourth question of law queries whether the civil appellate high court erred in Law and misunderstood the point in dispute in the said case by stating that "the main question for determination here is whether "Ihalagederewatte" still remains co-owned or by the amalgamation of the two lands as stated in the schedules to the title deeds the co-ownership to "Ihalagederewatte" came to an end. As per the observations and discussion made above by this court, it is clear that co-ownership was put in issue by the issues raised and the evidence also indicate that the co-ownership still exists. Thus, answer for this question of law is in the negative.

The 5th question of law asks the question whether the learned high court judges misdirected themselves in stating "it is not clear whether the property means the land described in the 1st Schedule to the plaint or the entire Ihalagederewatte and the entire Nithugahagedarawatte". The property described in the 1st schedule to the plaint was the land in plan marked P2. As observed and elaborated above by this court, there is no evidence to indicate that land in P2 contains only a divided portion 2/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte along with the other land. Thus, P2 appears to contain entire Ihalagedarawatte and Nithulagahagedarawatte. Hence there cannot be any difference in the 1st schedule to the plaint and the amalgamation of entire Nithulagahagedarawatte and entire Ihalagedarawatte as per the evidence led. On the other hand, said statement in the high court Judgment refers to the word "Property" in the 5th paragraph in the plaint. When it is read with the previous paragraphs it is clear that the said word refers to the land in the 1st schedule to the plaint. Thus, the answer to the 5th question of law is 'yes, there seems to be some confusion".

The 6th question of law questions whether the high court erred in Law in holding that the petitioner who was claiming title to a defined extent of land so defined and divided by the original owner of the land himself had to prove an ouster against anyone else claiming a portion of the same land when it was nobody's case that there was any question of co-ownership involved. As mentioned before, in the original court, issues have been raised with regard to the co-ownership and issues need not be limited to the pleadings. No objection has been raised against such issues. Thus, now no one can say that it was no body's case. However, evidence was not available to state that the original owner transferred a defined lot of land of Ihalagedarawatte. Thus, the learned high court judges did not err when they mentioned the need to prove ouster. As such the answer to 6th question of law is in the negative.

The question of law no.7 queries whether the findings of the learned high court judges are in conflict with the following statement in the Judgment which states "however, it is not clear whether Moulana was entitled to the entirety of "Ihalagederewatte. It appears that the learned high court judges came to the conclusion that 1/3rd of Ihalagedarawatte belongs to the defendant and 2/3rd of the same belongs to the plaintiff and they are co-owners. Both sides get their title from Moulana or his heirs. Thus, there seems to be a conflict, but as observed before, learned district judge's decision cannot be allowed to stand and the final conclusion to set aside that judgment and to dismiss the plaintiffs action by the learned high court judges is correct. Thus, the answer is 'yes there seems to be a conflict between the said statement and the findings, but it does not warrant the setting aside of the final conclusion reached by the high court'.
As indicated above there are some misstatements, misunderstandings, and conflicting statements in the learned high court Judges' judgment but the finding of the learned high court judges that the plaintiff cannot maintain a rei vindicatio action against another co-owner is valid and sufficient to vacate the original court judgment and dismiss the plaintiff's action. This court also shall not intervene in appeal when the substantial rights are not affected by the parties by the lower court judgment, even though there are obvious errors.

Hence this appeal is dismissed with costs.

The Plaintiff filed this action naming the 1st to 3rd Defendants as parties to partition the land described in the schedule to the plaint among them on the pedigree set out in the plaint. The 4th to 10th Defendants were later added as parties. The 4th to 8th Defendants filed a joint statement of claim seeking to partition the land among those Defendants on a different pedigree, and also claiming prescriptive title to the land. After trial, the District Court rejected the 4th to 8th Defendants' pedigree and their prescriptive claim and partitioned the land as prayed for by the Plaintiff. The revision application filed against this Judgment by the 4th to 8th Defendants was dismissed by the High Court of Civil Appeal. Hence this appeal by the 4th to 8th Defendants (Appellants).

This Court granted leave to appeal against the Judgment of the High Court on two questions of law: whether the High Court failed (a) to investigate title of the parties to the land, and (b) to consider the prescriptive title of the Appellants.

The High Court dismissed the revision application of the Appellants on procedural impropriety as well as on its merits.

Let me now consider the nature of the revision application filed before the High Court and the Judgment of the High Court thereon.

The Judgment of the District Court was delivered on 22.08.2014. The Appellants did not appeal against the Judgment as they were statutorily entitled to do if they were dissatisfied with the Judgment. Instead, they filed a revision application on 16.03.2015 – about 07 months after the delivery of the Judgment.

Revision is a discretionary remedy. A party cannot invoke this extraordinary jurisdiction of the Appellate Court as of right.

When a right of appeal is available against a Judgment or an Order, a party seeking to come before Court by way of revision shall explain in the petition why he did not exercise his right of appeal.

In the revision application filed before the High Court there was no such explanation at all.

Unlike in an appeal, there is no stipulated time limit within which a revision application may be filed in Court. The Petitioner must come to Court within reasonable time from the date of the impugned Judgment or Order. What constitutes reasonable time is a question of fact to be determined on the facts and circumstances of each individual case. In essence, the party seeking revision shall come to Court without undue delay. If there is a delay, he shall explain it in the petition.

However I must hasten to add that if the Judgment or Order sought to be challenged is palpably wrong, perverse, made without jurisdiction or suffering from a similar grave infirmity, the Court shall not dismiss a revision application on the ground of delay alone.

In the instant case, there was no explanation whatsoever for the undue delay in filing the revision application.

The existence of exceptional circumstances is a sine qua non for the invocation of revisionary jurisdiction. Such exceptional circumstances, albeit briefly, shall be averred in the petition for the Court to be satisfied on prima facie basis that notice in the first instance be issued on the Respondents.

In the instant case, the main ground urged under exceptional circumstances was the failure of the District Court to identify the corpus to be partitioned.

This assertion is simply devoid of merit. At the trial, when the Plaintiff raised the first issue of whether the land to be partitioned is depicted in the Preliminary Plan, counsel for the Appellants informed Court that there was no necessity to raise such an issue as the corpus was admitted by the Appellants. The Appellants, obviously, did not raise an issue on the identification of the corpus. The 7th Defendant-Appellant who gave evidence on behalf of all the Appellants in the District Court admitted the corpus in her evidence. Having taken up such a clear position in the lower Court, the Appellants cannot take up a diametrically opposite position in the Appellate Court. The doctrine of estoppel, and the doctrine of approbate and reprobate (which is one of the species of estoppel) forbit this.

The Appellants also stated in the revision application that the presumption of prescriptive title created in favour of them on the basis of their long possession had not been rebutted by the Plaintiff. In my view, the Appellants made this claim in passing.

By reading the impugned Judgment of the High Court, it is clear that the Appellants did not pursue this ground at the argument before the High Court, and the only ground urged before the High Court was the failure to identify the corpus.

Be that as it may, the Appellants do not in fact affirmatively state that they proved prescriptive title to the land against the Plaintiff but instead attempt to shift the burden of disproof onto the Plaintiff.

I accept that a presumption of ouster can be drawn on long exclusive possession in the unique facts and circumstances of a case. (Tillekeratne v. Bastian (1918) 21 NLR 12 at 24) But the well-established general principle is that the burden of proof of prescriptive title (as against the party who is able to point to a paper title) rests fairly and squarely upon the party who asserts such prescriptive title.

The Appellants must understand that what was filed before the High Court was not a final appeal but a revision application and they cannot clutch at straws for survival.

The purpose of revisionary jurisdiction is to promote the due administration of justice and correct miscarriage of justice. But it is well to remember that unlike in an appeal, not every error of fact or law may be corrected in revision. In short, the general ground that the Judgment is incorrect, which is sufficient to invoke the statutory right of appeal, does not per se constitute an exceptional ground to invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction of revision. The error complained of shall shock the conscience of the Court.

In a revision application, unlike in a statutory right of appeal, there is a threshold or vetting process before the applicant is afforded a full hearing.

In the facts and circumstances of this case, it is my considered view that the revision application should have been dismissed in limine without notice being issued on the Respondents.

The High Court, having taken the view that the Petitioner did not pass the gateway, nevertheless considered the merits of the application notably on the limited ground urged, i.e. failure to identify the corpus, before it dismissed the application.

The Judgment of the High Court is flawless.

Let me now consider the appeal before this Court.

Learned counsel for the Appellants stated at the argument that he confines his argument only to the question of prescription.

As I have already stated, in my view, the Appellants did not vigorously pursue the plea of prescriptive title before the High Court. Therefore the High Court did not consider it. Hence the Appellants cannot complain that the High Court failed to consider their prescriptive title to the land, and therefore this Court shall now consider it and allow the appeal.

What is before this Court is not a revision application but a final appeal. The Appellants have come before this Court not against the Judgment of the District Court but against the Judgment of the High Court.

Nonetheless, as this is the final Court, I thought I must consider the Appellants' plea of prescriptive title.

At the trial, the Plaintiff's father gave evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff and produced deeds and documents from the Land Registry marked P1-P4 and 1V1. He also marked the Preliminary Plan and the Report as X and X1, respectively. The 7th Defendant-Appellant gave evidence on behalf of the Appellants. In her evidence, she only marked the Death Certificate of her mother, which is an admitted fact.

According to the Plaintiff's pedigree:

The original owner of the land is Jamis Samarawickrama. By deed No. 11825 dated 28.02.1933, he alienated this property to his daughter Emalia Samarawickrama. The fact that this deed was registered at the Land Registry and is now destroyed is established by P1 issued by the Land Registry. Emalia Samarawickrama was the elder sister of Dinoris Samarawickrama who was the Plaintiff's grandfather. Emalia Samarawickrama gifted this land together with several other lands by deed No. 1588 dated 19.03.1967 marked P2 to Dayaratne Jinadasa and Nandawathie Jinadasa who are her two children, and to the 2nd and 3rd Defendants who are her grandchildren, in the proportion of 1/3 share each to her two children and the balance 1/3 share equally to her two grandchildren. Dayaratne Jinadasa married Rupa Jinadasa and his 1/3 share devolved on their children Lakkhi Jinadasa, Omala Jinadasa and Tissanath Jinadasa. Thereafter, by deed No. 1532 dated 27.02.2001 marked P3, they donated this 1/3 share to the Plaintiff. The aforesaid Nandawathie Jinadasa transferred her 1/3 share by deed No. 201 dated 18.01.1991 marked 1V1 to the 1st Defendant. The Land Registry extracts relevant to these transactions were marked P4. According to the Plaintiff's pedigree, the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant are each entitled to 2/6 share, and the 2nd and 3rd Defendants are each entitled to 1/6 share.

The learned District Judge accepted this pedigree.

Conversely, the Appellants unfolded a different pedigree but did not mark any deeds in evidence. Deeds executed after the lis pendens was registered were not marked.

According to the Appellants' pedigree as described in the evidence of the 7th Defendant-Appellant:

The original owner of the land is Thiloris Samarawickrama who is the younger brother of Jamis Samarawickrema (the original owner of the land according to the pedigree of the Plaintiff). Thiloris Samarawickrama had four children and one of them is the 7th Defendant-Appellant's father Jinoris Samarawickrema who married Angurukankanamlage Upona. After the death of Jinoris Samarawickrema and Angurukankanamlage Upona, the entire land devolved on their five children, the 4th to 8th Defendant-Appellants.

This pedigree was not accepted by the learned District Judge and the Appellants do not canvass it before this Court.

The 7th Defendant-Appellant admits in her evidence that Jamis Samarawickrema and Thiloris Samarawickrema were brothers, and her father Jinoris Samarawickrema was the son of Thiloris Samarawickrema; and that Emalia Samarawickrema (who executed the deed P2) was the daughter of Jamis Samarawickrema; and that Emalia Samarawickrema and Jinoris Samarawickrema had been on good terms throughout their lives as cousins.

On this basis, it is the submission of learned counsel for the Plaintiff that Emalia Samarawickrema, admittedly an affluent lady who had gifted 71 parcels of land by deed P2, allowed Thiloris Samarawickrema to possess the land that is the subject matter of this action.

The 7th Defendant-Appellant states that her father Jinoris Samarawickrema and her grandfather Thiloris Samarawickrema both lived on this land, the 4th to 8th Defendant-Appellants were born on this land, and there are three houses on the land where she, the 4th Defendant-Appellant and his son are living. The Plaintiff's father admits these facts in his evidence.

The 7th Defendant-Appellant has not seen her grandfather Thiloris Samarawickrema and says she does not know how her grandfather and father came into possession of the land. She does not dispute the Plaintiff's deeds but says she was unaware of those deeds and further says neither the Plaintiff nor anybody in the Plaintiff's pedigree ever possessed the land.

It is not possible to believe that the Appellants did not at least know that Emaliya Samarawickrema was the owner of the land at one point in time. The Appellants cannot say that their grandfather came to a no-man's-land. The Appellants shall explain how they came into possession of someone else's land.

In Sirajudeen v. Abbas [1994] 2 Sri LR 365 at 371, G.P.S. De Silva C.J. stated that a facile story of walking into abandoned premises after the Japanese air raid constitutes material far too slender to found a claim based on prescriptive title.

The only submission of learned counsel for the Appellants is that the Appellants and their predecessors have been in physical possession of the land since 1948. But long possession alone does not amount to prescriptive possession. In order to claim prescriptive title under section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, possession for over ten years is only one requirement. Such possession shall not only be "undisturbed and uninterrupted", but also, more importantly, "by a title adverse to or independent of that of the claimant or plaintiff". The possession shall be of a character incompatible with the title of the true owner.

The commencement of prescriptive possession can coincide with the commencement of possession itself if the possessor enters the land in a capacity inconsistent with the owner's title. If not, the possessor shall signify the change in the character of possession by an overt act or a series of acts indicative of a challenge to the owner's title. The prescriptive period begins to run only from that point and not from the date of entry to the land. (Sirajudeen v. Abbas [1994] 2 Sri LR 365, Reginald Fernando v. Pabilinahamy [2005] 1 Sri LR 31 at 37, Chelliah Vs. Wijenathan (1951) 54 NLR 337 at 342, Mitrapala v. Tikonis Singho [2005] 1 Sri LR 206 at 211-212)

Where the relationship between the two parties is very close such as in the instant case, the proof of change in the character of possession from innocuous to adverse is greater than in a case where the two parties are total outsiders. (De Silva v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue (1978) 80 NLR 292, Podihamy v. Elaris [1988] 2 Sri LR 129)

In the instant case, the Appellants have failed to prove that they commenced adverse possession from the outset or that they changed their character of possession subsequently. The evidence of the 7th Defendant-Appellant is that the Appellants continued their possession without any objection from the Plaintiff or the other co-owners. This is not sufficient to claim prescriptive tittle.

In the facts and circumstances of the case, the learned District Judge cannot be found fault with for rejecting the prescriptive claim of the Appellants.

I answer the questions of law in respect of which leave was granted in the negative.

The appeal is dismissed but without costs.

This is an appeal against the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court dated 8.1.2014 wherein the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge dated 1.3.2007 who held the case in favour of the 1st and the 2nd Defendant-Respondent-Appellants.

The Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff-Respondent) filed this action against the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants seeking a declaration of title to the property in dispute on the basis of prescription. The Learned District Judge by his judgment dated 1.3.2007 dismissed the action of the Plaintiff-Respondent and decided that the 1st Defendant is the owner of the property in dispute. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the learned District Judge, the Plaintiff- Respondent appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court by their judgment dated 8.1.2014 set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court, the 1st and the 2nd Defendant-Respondent-Appellants (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant- Appellants) have appealed to this court. This court by its order dated 1.6.2015 granted leave to appeal on question of law set out in paragraphs 10(1), 10(2), 10(3), 10(4), and10(5) of the Petition of Appeal dated 17.2.2014 which are set out below verbatim. In addition to the said questions of law, learned counsel for the 1st and 2nd Defendant-Appellants has raised a question of law which will be stated below as question of law No.6.

1. Have their Lordships in the Civil Appellate High Court of Kurunegala erred in Law by coming to the conclusion that the Respondent had prescribed to the land in question.

2. Have their Lordships in the Civil Appellate High Court of Kurunegala erred in Law by coming to the conclusion that the Appellant-Respondent clearly had more than 10 years of possession of the Corpus before he was evicted from the land on 20.08.1993.

3. Have their Lordships in the Civil Appellate High Court of Kurunegala erred in Law by failing to consider that the Respondent had adverse possession of the land against the Petitioners in determining that the Appellant-Respondent had prescribed to the land.

4. Have their Lordships in the Civil Appellate High Court of Kurunegala erred in Law by holding that the Respondent diligently defended his right to the land up to the time he was dispossessed on 20.08.1993 based on his evidence given before Court on 22.11.1982 (Respondent gave evidence before Court on 22.11.1982 showing that he was diligently defending his rights up to the time he was dispossessed on 20.08.1993)

5. Have their Lordships in the Civil Appellate High Court of Kurunegala erred in Law by holding that the Appellant-Respondent was entitled to damages as prayed for in the Prayer to the Plaint when there was no evidence to substantiate such damage.

6. Could the Plaintiff alleging prescriptive title to the corpus maintain this rei-vindicatio action against the 1st and the 2nd Defendant- Appellants?

Learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent contended that land described by the Plaintiff-Respondent and the land described by Defendant-Appellants are two different lands and that therefore the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court was correct. I now advert to this contention. If these are two different lands why did the Plaintiff-Respondent file this action to eject the 1st and the 2nd Defendant-Appellants? The above contention of learned President's Counsel fails on this question. I therefore reject the above contention.

The Plaintiff-Respondent claims title to this land on the basis of prescription. Therefore, he should prove prescriptive title in terms of Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance which reads as follows.

> Proof of the undisturbed and uninterrupted possession by a defendant in any action, or by those under whom he claims, of lands or immovable property, by a title adverse to or independent of that of the claimant or plaintiff in such action (that is to say, a possession unaccompanied by payment of rent or produce, or performance of service or duty, or by any other act by the possessor, from which an acknowledgment of a right existing in another person would fairly and naturally be inferred) for ten years previous to the bringing of such action, shall entitle the defendant to a decree in his favour with costs. And in like manner, when any plaintiff shall bring his action, or any third party shall intervene in any action for the purpose of being quieted in his possession of lands or other immovable property, or to prevent encroachment or usurpation thereof, or to establish his claim in any other manner to such land or other property, proof of such undisturbed and uninterrupted possession as herein before explained, by such plaintiff or intervenient, or by those under whom he claims, shall entitle such plaintiff or intervenient to a decree in his favour with costs:

Provided that the said period of ten years shall only begin to run against parties claiming estates in remainder or reversion from the time when the parties so claiming acquired a right of possession to the property in dispute.

To claim prescriptive title in terms of Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, one of the conditions that the claimant should prove is that his possession to the land in dispute is adverse possession. The Plaintiff-Respondent in his evidence says that his father cultivated the land in dispute from 1935 to 1973 and from 1973 to 20.8.1993 he possessed the land in dispute. Was his alleged possession to the land in dispute an adverse possession? The Plaintiff-Respondent in his evidence says that he gave the land in dispute to a church in the area for the purpose of conducting wedding ceremonies, musical shows and carnivals. But there is no clear evidence to establish that it was the land in dispute which was given to the church for the above purposes. There is also no clear evidence to establish that it was the Plaintiff-Respondent who gave the land to the church.

Dissanayake Aloysius Perera who is the 2nd Defendant in this case says in his evidence that his wife is the 2nd owner of the land in dispute and prior to her ownership her father was the owner of the land in dispute and that from 1975 they were in possession of the land in dispute.

Warnakulasuriya Camilus Fernando who was called by the Defendants in his evidence says that he plucked coconuts in the land owned by the 1st and the 2nd Defendants which is the land in dispute for a period of 20 to 25 years and that Nobert Peiris who was the original Plaintiff in this case never objected to the plucking of coconuts in the land in dispute.

Reginold Julian Dondinu who was called by the Defendants says in his evidence that he was the Grama Niladhari in the area in which the land in dispute is situated; that he never received any complaint regarding the land in dispute; and that the Plaintiff-Respondent was not in possession of the land in dispute.

If the Plaintiff-Respondent did not object to the plucking of coconuts in the land in dispute, how does he claim that he had adverse possession of the land in dispute? The above evidence clearly shows that the Plaintiff-Respondent did not have adverse possession to the land in dispute.

When I consider the totality of the evidence led at the trial, I hold that the Plaintiff-Respondent has failed to prove that his alleged possession to the land in dispute was adverse possession. The learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that the alleged possession of the Plaintiff-Respondent was not an adverse possession.

Can it be contended that mere possession for a period of over ten years amounts to the possession discussed in Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance? I now advert to this question.

In Tillekeratne Vs Bastian 21 NLR 12 it was held "(a) that it is open to the court from lapse of time in conjunction with the circumstances of the case to presume that a possession originally that of a co-owner has since become adverse and (b) that it is a question of fact whenever long continued exclusive possession by one co-owner is proved to have existed, whether it is not just and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case that the parties should be treated as though it had been proved that separate and exclusive possession had become adverse at some date more than ten years before action brought."

The above judgment in the case of Tillekeratne Vs Bastian 21 NLR 12 was disapproved by the Privy Council in the case of I.L.M.Cadija Umma and Another Vs S.Don Manis Appu and other 40 NLR 392. Privy Council held that

"the words in section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, viz., by a "title adverse to or independent of the claimant or plaintiff" cannot be construed as introducing the requirement known to the Roman law as Justus titulus or justa causa,.
The purpose of the parenthetical clause in the section, viz., "possession unaccompanied by payment of rent or produce or performance of service or duty or by any other act by the possessor from which an acknowledgment of a right existing in another person would fairly and naturally be inferred" is to explain the character of the possession which, if held without disturbance or interruption for ten years, will result in prescription.
The dictum of Bertram C. J. in Tillekeratne v. Bastian (21 N. L. R. 12) that the parenthesis has no bearing on the meaning of the words "adverse possession", disapproved."

Further Privy Council at page 395 of the above judgment has made the following observation. "Bertram C. J. (in Tillekeratne v. Bastian) relying on Lord Macnaghten's language in Corea's case, held that "the parenthesis has no bearing on the meaning of the words ' adverse title': it may henceforth be left out of account in the discussion of the question". Their Lordships cannot accept this dictum of the learned Chief Justice."

In Mithrapala and Another Vs Tikonis Singho [2005] 1 SLR 206 at page 211Court of Appeal referring to an unreported judgment in Court of Appeal No.418/2002(6) observed as follows. "But mere possession is not prescriptive title. A person in possession who claims title by virtue of prescription must prove that he had possessed the property in the manner and for the period set out in section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance".

In Sirajudeen and Two Others Vs Abbas [1994] 2 SLR 365 at page 370 this court held as follows. "But what needs to be stressed is that the fact of occupation alone would not suffice to satisfy the provisions of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. One of the essential elements of the plea of prescriptive title as provided for in section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance is proof of possession 'by a title adverse to or independent of that of the claimant or plaintiff.'"

In the case of Hamidu Lebbe Vs Ganitha 27 NLR 33 forty to fifty-year period of possession of the defendant who was a co-owner was not accepted as adverse possession against the plaintiff who had purchased ½ share from the brother the defendant. Ennis ACJ (De Sampayo J agreeing) at page 35 held as follows. "The defendant and his brother, Suddana, were clearly co-parceners in the land, and as such the possession per se of one could not be held as adverse to the other."

In Seeman Vs David [2000] 3 SLR 23 at page 26 Weerasuriya J as follows. "The learned District Judge had come to the finding that the Defendant-Respondents had acquired prescriptive rights to the entire property on the basis that along with their predecessors in title they had possessed the property for a period of 70 years.

This appears to be an erroneous view. To claim prescriptive rights the Defendant-Respondents ought to prove adverse and uninterrupted possession for a period of ten years."

Considering the above legal literature, I hold that mere possession for a period of over ten years does not amount to possession discussed in Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance; that a person claiming such possession is not entitled to succeed in a claim of prescription in terms of Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance; and that in order to succeed in a claim of prescription, the claimant should prove that his possession is adverse, uninterrupted and undisturbed possession for a period of ten years.

The learned District Judge in his judgment dated 1.3.2007 decided that the Plaintiff-Respondent had failed to prove that his alleged possession to the land in dispute was adverse possession and that therefore the Plaintiff-Respondent had failed to prove his case. I have earlier held that the Plaintiff-Respondent has failed to prove that his alleged possession to the land in dispute was adverse possession. The learned District Judge was correct when he came to the above conclusion. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court without giving due consideration to the above matters, have set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court were wrong when they set aside the judgment of the learned District Judge.

The learned District Judge after considering the Deed Nos. 1906 dated 15.12.1951, 4536 dated 18.8.1962 and 8922 dated 19.3.1988 came to the conclusion that the 1st Defendant-Appellant is the owner of the land in dispute on the basis of the above deeds. This decision is, in my view, correct. In view of the conclusion reached above, I answer the 1st, 2nd and 3rd questions of law in the affirmative. The 4th,5th and 6th questions of law do not arise for consideration.

For the aforementioned reasons, I set aside the judgment of the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court dated 8.1.2014 and affirm the judgment of the learned District Judge dated 1.3.2007. I allow the appeal of the 1st and the 2nd Defendant-Appellants with costs. The 1st and the 2nd Defendant-Appellants are entitled to costs in all three courts.

E. A. G. R. Amarasekara J

The Plaintiff – Respondent – Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff – Respondent or the Plaintiff) instituted an action in the District Court of Panadura against the Defendant – Appellant – Petitioner (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant – Petitioner or the Defendant) by his plaint dated 21.04.2009, praying inter alia for a declaration that he be entitled to the land described in the 5th schedule to the plaint, and for the eviction of the Defendant, his agents and servants from the said land described in the 5th schedule to the plaint and for damages. The same reliefs were prayed in the amended plaint dated 17.01.2011 where the 5th schedule has been described as per the plan No.1778 made by T.D K.R.P. Pathegama, Licensed Surveyor. The Plaintiff – Respondent in his amended plaint inter alia averred that;

- Ismail Marikkar Mohamadu became the owner of the land described in the 1st schedule to the plaint by deed No. 1451 dated 24.11.1944 attested by M.M.A. Raheem Notary Public.
- Said Ismail Marikkar Mohamadu transferred his rights acquired by the aforesaid deed to Waduge Pedrick Premachandra Fernando by deed No. 4374 dated 14.02.1947 attested by W.P. Senevirathne, Notary Public.
- Said Premachandra Fernando transferred a part of the said land described in the 1st schedule to the amended plaint which is described in the 2nd schedule to the amended plaint by deed No. 11483 dated 12.09.1969 attested by Arthur Wijesuriya, Notary Public to the Plaintiff, Waduge Sumanasiri Fernando and the Plaintiff also acquired prescriptive title.
- The common access road (පොදු ප්‍රවේශ මාර්ගය) to the lands described in the 1st and 2nd schedules to the amended plaint was the land described in the 3rd schedule to the amended plaint.

- The Plaintiff's father purchased the soil rights (පොළවේ අයිතිවාසිකම්) of the road described in the 3rd schedule to the amended plaint from the original owner, Ismail Lebbe Marikkar Mohamadu by deed No. 3408 dated 29.11.1969 attested by Ranjith Weerasekara, Notary Public subject to the right of way to access only the land described as lot C in the plan No. 3812.
- At the demise of the plaintiff's father, Waduge Premachandra Fernando, his rights devolved on the plaintiff and his siblings and the said siblings of the Plaintiff conveyed all the rights of the said roadway to the plaintiff by deed of gift No. 773 dated 23.02.2008 attested by Upul Kumara Munasinghe, Notary Public. Thereby, the plaintiff became entitled to the soil rights of the road described in the 3rd schedule to the amended plaint.
- The Plaintiff alienated a portion of the land described in the 2nd schedule to the amended plaint, which is the 4th schedule to the amended plaint by deed No. 12145 dated 20.04.1998 attested by A.P. Fernando, Notary Public.
- The subject matter of this action is the remaining portion of the land described in the 2nd schedule to the amended plaint (subsequent to the said alienation), which is described in the 5th schedule to the amended plaint.
- On or about 16.12.2000, the defendant informed the plaintiff that a portion of the land described in the 5th schedule to the amended plaint forms a part of the roadway described in the 3rd schedule to the amended plaint.
- The Defendant prepared a plan without informing the plaintiff and by the said plan the defendant unlawfully seized a portion of the land described in the 5th schedule to the amended plaint which is described in the 6th schedule to the amended plaint.
- Accordingly, a cause of action arose for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of land described in the 5th schedule to the amended plaint and to eject the defendants and all under him from the said land and for damages. (The correct dates of deeds No.773 and 12145 mentioned above should be 23.12.2008 and 20.04.1988 respectively)

The Defendant –Petitioner filed his answer dated 16th May 2011 and by the said answer stated inter alia that;

- The right of way shown in plan No. 3812 as lot B was widened to 10 feet around 30 years ago.

- Defendant and his predecessors in title have used this road for over 20 years. Therefore, the defendant and his predecessors acquired a prescriptive right to the said 10 feet wide road as per the provisions of the Prescription Ordinance.
- Said 10 feet wide road is depicted in the plan No. 25/63 dated 14.12.2006 prepared by the licensed surveyor, D.R. Kumarage.
- In the Eastern Boundary of the said road there was a line of bricks and that was destroyed and removed by the plaintiff.
- As per the schedule of the deed No. 3408, plaintiff's father was not given the soil rights of Lot C. Therefore, there is no legal right for the plaintiff to proceed with this action.

Accordingly, the Defendant – Petitioner stated that there is no cause of action accrued against the Defendant - Petitioner and thereby prayed for the dismissal of the action with costs. However, it must be noted here that the Plaintiff has never claimed soil rights to Lot C of Plan no.3812, but as per paragraphs no.7,8,9 and 10 of the amended plaint he claims soil rights to the lot B of plan no. 3812 subject to the right of way to lot C. Nevertheless, it appears, when framing issues, the Defendant Petitioner has framed issues querying whether the Plaintiff's father had soil rights to said Lot B in Plan no. 3812.

The plaintiff has taken out a commission and accordingly A D K R P Pathegama, licensed surveyor has prepared plan no.1778 to depict the alleged encroachment by the defendant and this plan has been later marked as P 6 at the trial.

At the commencement of the trial, it was admitted that the right of way to the lands described in the 1st and 2nd schedules to the amended plaint was the roadway described in the 3rd schedule to the amended plaint. Thereafter, issues No. 1 to 5 were raised on behalf of the Plaintiff – Respondent and issues No. 6 to 11 were raised on behalf of the Defendant – Petitioner.

Issues raised for the Plaintiff – Respondent basically put in question whether the Plaintiff is the owner of the land described in the 5th schedule to the amended plaint and whether the said land is depicted in the aforesaid plan made by Mr. Pathegama, Licensed Surveyor as lot 1 and 2 and further, whether the Defendant has unlawfully encroached aforesaid Lot 1 on or around 16.11.2000. When considering aforesaid issues along with the prayers in the plaint which is to be granted in case if the aforesaid issues are answered in favour of the Plaintiff, it is clear that the Plaintiff's case takes the form of a Rei Vindicatio action.

The Defendant – Petitioner framed issues and mainly queried;

- Whether the defendants became the owners of the road described in the Plan No. 3812 of John R. A. Rodrigo, licensed surveyor around 30 years ago?
- Whether this 10-feet wide road is depicted in the plan No. 25/63 dated 17.12.2006 prepared by D.R. Kumarage, Licensed Surveyor. (The correct date of the said plan should be 14.02.2006)
- Whether the defendant and his predecessors in title used this roadway and accordingly, whether the defendant and his predecessors acquired prescriptive title to the said 10 feet wide roadway as per the provisions of the Prescription Ordinance?
- Whether the plaintiff's father became entitled to the soil rights of the roadway as described in the paragraph 7 of the plaint?
    - If not, whether the plaintiff became entitled to the soil rights of this roadway subsequent to the demise of his father?
    - If not, whether the plaintiff can maintain this action?

As per the proceedings dated 05.10.2011 and order dated 16.02.2012 of the district court proceedings, there had been another 3 counter issues numbered as 12,13 and 14 raised by the Plaintiff and the Defendant respectively, but not answered in the judgment of the district court. However, no party has expressed their concern over not answering those three issues in their submissions in this appeal. On the other hand, I am also of the view that those three issues were not materially relevant to the matter that was in dispute before the learned district judge as the dispute was limited to the fact whether the Defendant has encroached a portion from the land described in the 5th schedule to the amended plaint by adding it to the right of way he already had over the land described in the 3rd schedule to the amended plaint.

Both the District Court and the Civil Appellate High Court held in favour of the Plaintiff and being aggrieved by the judgment of the learned High Court judges, the Defendant filed a leave to appeal application to this court and this court granted leave only on one question of law which is quoted below.

"Did the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals err in law in failing to appreciate that the defendant and his predecessor-in-title had prescribed to a 10 ft wide road?"- vide journal entry dated 10.07.2018.

Answer to this question of law will mainly depend on whether there were sufficient facts before the learned district judge to establish that the Defendant and his predecessor have prescribed to a 10 feet wide Road and whether the Learned High Court Judges failed to realize that the learned District Court Judge was erred in evaluating evidence in that regard.

The Plaintiff has marked P1 to P8 at the trial which includes some deeds and plans to prove his case. It must be noted that none of these documents were impeached through issues and only P2, P2A and P6 and P6A were marked subject to proof when they were tendered in evidence for the first time. P2 is the plan made by J R A Rodrigo, licensed surveyor and P2 A appears to be the field notes relevant to the said plan P2. P6 and P6A are the plan No.1778 and its report made by T D K R P Pathegama, Licensed Surveyor. T D K R P Pathegama, Licensed Surveyor has given evidence to prove the plan and the report he made. Since J R A Rodrigo, Licensed Surveyor is dead, it appears one Ajith Prassanna Silva, Licensed Surveyor, who has previously used plans made by said J R A Rodrigo and who has seen the signature of said J R A Rodrigo, has been summoned to prove the said plan marked P2. Furthermore, at the close of the plaintiff's case, the Defendant has not reiterated the objections made to those documents. Thus, when the decision of Sri Lanka Ports Authority V Jugolinija Bold East (1981) 1 Sri L R 18 is considered together with section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code, all the documents marked by the plaintiff as P1 to P8 can be considered as evidence for all the purposes of the case filed before the District Judge. By tendering deed no. 11483 marked as P1, the Plaintiff has established how he became entitled to the land described in the second schedule to the plaint which is Lot A of the said plan marked P2 as stated in paragraph 4 of the amended plaint. As per the portion marked as P1A in the schedule of the said deed, the transferor of the said deed had acquired title through the deed No. 4373 dated 14.02.1947 attested by W.P. Senaviratne, Notary Public which supports the averments in the paragraph 3 of the amended plaint. Through P1 plaintiff has also acquired the right of way over the land described in the 3rd schedule to the plaint which is Lot B of the said Plan marked P2. Further the Plaintiff had acquired title to Lot 3 and 4 of Gulugahawatte in plan no.1868 through the same deed marked as P1.

Facts stated in paragraph 6 of the amended plaint was admitted at the beginning of the trial. Thus, it is common ground that the land described in the third schedule to the plaint, which is lot B of the plan marked P2, was used as a common access road to the land described in the first schedule as well as to the land described in the second schedule to the plaint. To prove that the Plaintiff has later acquired soil rights of the said common access road subject to the right of way attached to Lot C in plan no.3812 as averred in paragraphs 7, 8,9 and 10 of the amended plaint, the Plaintiff has marked the deeds No. 3408 marked as P3, and 773 marked as P4 respectively. P3 and P4 establish the fact that the father of the Plaintiff bought the soil rights of the Lot B in P2 and after his demise the siblings of the Plaintiff transferred their rights to the Plaintiff. By tendering the documents marked P1, P2, P3 and P4 in evidence which were not challenged as aforesaid, the Plaintiff by a preponderance of evidence has shown that one time he was the owner of the land in the second schedule to the plaint and he gained soil rights to the land in the third schedule to the plaint subject to the right of way attached to lot C of P2 over the land in the third schedule to the plaint which is lot B of P2.

By deed no. 12145 marked as P5, the Plaintiff has transferred part of the land in the second schedule to the plaint while amalgamating that part with aforementioned Lot 3 and lot 4 of the plan no 1868 for which he acquired title through P1. The said amalgamation is depicted in the plan no.6575 made by Licensed surveyor L W L de Silva marked as P7. Lot B in P7 which is the land depicted in the 4th schedule to the plaint contains the said part of the land the plaintiff parted with by executing P5.

The Plaintiff has produced in evidence the plan no. 1778 made by T D K R P Pathegama, Licensed Surveyor which depicts the superimpositions of the lots A2 and B of plan no.3812 (marked as P2) and superimposition of Lot B in plan no.6575. Surveyor Pathegama has given evidence in support of the plan he made which has been marked as P6 at the trial along with its report marked as P6A. In his report marked P6A he states that his superimposition is correct due to the reason that 4 points identified as P Q R S coincides with the corresponding points in plan no. 3812(P2). Nothing is at least suggested in cross examination of surveyor Pathegama to challenge the said preciseness of the plan made by the said surveyor. No evidence has been led by the defendant to challenge the accuracy of P6 and P6A. Thus, the deeds and the plans marked by the Plaintiff along with the evidence given by the surveyor Pathegama establish on balance of probability that the Plaintiff has the paper title to lot 1 and 2 of the plan marked P6 which is the remaining portion of the land in the 2nd schedule to the plaint after the execution of P 5 by the Plaintiff. Said Lot 1 and 2 of plan marked as P6 is the land in the 5th schedule to the plaint. Further, it was established that the plaintiff has soil rights to lot B of plan no.3812(P2) subject to the right of way attached to Lot C of the same plan. It is also proved that lot 1 of P6 is not a part of said Lot B of P2 (Common Access Road for which the Plaintiff has soil rights) and it is an encroached portion for which the Plaintiff has paper title as part of land described in the 5th schedule to the plaint. Since the Defendant's position is that he has prescriptive rights to it, it is more probable that he has the possession of that lot 1 of plan marked P6.

In this backdrop, to defeat the Plaintiff's claims, the Defendant must show that he has a legal right to this encroached portion shown as lot 1 in P6. The position of the Defendant in his answer was that the road access shown as B in plan no. 3812 (P2) was widened to a road of 10 feet width 30 years ago and he and his predecessors used this road way for more than 20 years. Thus, the Defendant states that he has gained prescriptive rights as per the provisions of Prescription Ordinance. Further, it appears that the Defendant has taken up the position that the soil rights of the said road way was not with the plaintiff's father and as such he cannot maintain this action indicating indirectly that as the Plaintiff is not the owner of soil rights of the disputed roadway, he cannot maintain this action. Even the issues raised at the trial by the Defendant were based on the same stances taken up in the answer. However, as shown above, the Plaintiff has proved paper title to the said lot B in P2 as well as to the disputed lot 1 which is the alleged encroached portion in the plan no.1778 made by Pathegama, Licensed surveyor marked P6. Furthermore, this is not an action to declare that the Defendant has no right of way over lot B in P2 but to evict the Defendant from the encroached portion of the land described in the 5th schedule.

Mr. Pathegama, licensed surveyor in his report marked P6A at paragraph 4:11 as well as in his evidence states that the Defendant is using a roadway one and half feet wider than the road way shown in plan marked P2 as Lot B. Thus, it is clear that the Defendant is now using the encroached portion shown as lot 1 in Plan marked P6 which is part of the land in schedule no 5 of the amended plaint as part attached to his roadway. Nevertheless, to prove prescriptive rights to this encroached portion or lot 1 in P6, the Defendant must show 10 years or more adverse possession or adverse user of this encroached portion as a right of way. The first witness called by the Defendant, one Premasiri Fernando has given evidence to prove the photographs (V1 to V3) and he has not given any evidence with regard to the user or possession of the encroached portion which is lot 1 of P6. Other than the said witness, only the Defendant and a Notary Public have given evidence in support of the version of the Defendant. Said notary public has given evidence with regard to the execution of deed No 2466 marked V4 and he was not a witness to establish the fact that the Defendant had adverse possession or user of the encroached portion which is lot 1 in P6 as part of a road access for more than 10 years. The Defendant in his evidence in chief has stated that he bought his land by aforesaid V4 and it was bought along with the right of way mentioned in that deed, and further that the said right of way is the matter in dispute. He has further testified that his predecessors in title said to him that the said right of way has been used by his predecessors in title for more than 15 years and even that the Plaintiff had admitted in evidence that the said road in V1 (though V1 has been referred to as a plan, in fact V1 is one of the photos tendered by the Defendant) was used for more than 60 years. However, it must be noted that the Plaintiff does not dispute the right of way given by deed marked V 4 which is lot B in P2 containing 3.20 perches. What is in dispute is part of the land described in the 5th schedule to the amended plaint which is shown as lot 1 in P6 and said lot 1 is found adjacent to aforesaid right of way, namely lot B of P2, on its west boundary as per the plan marked P6. The deed marked V4 has not given any soil right or right of way to this portion of land found outside along the west boundary of the said Lot B. Even if one assumes for the sake of argument that predecessors in title of the defendant acquired prescriptive rights to the said lot 1 in P6 or had commenced adverse possession or user of Lot 1 in P6, that area of land has not been conveyed to the Defendant by the said deed. The said deed conveyed only Lot C of P2 and the right of way over Lot B which does not contain the area that falls within Lot 1 of P6 as established by the evidence of T. D. K. R. P. Pathegama. Therefore, the Defendant cannot get the benefit of the possession or adverse user of his predecessors in title, if there was any such possession or user by them with regard to lot 1 of P6, which is situated outside the boundaries of Lot B of P2. On the other hand, no predecessor in title to the Defendant was summoned to give evidence to state that they had prescriptive rights, or had adverse possession or user of the Lot 1 in P6 and conveyed those rights to the Defendant. The deeds marked as P9 and P10 during the cross examination shows that even the predecessors in title of the Defendant had their right of way only over Lot B of P2 which Lot B does not include Lot 1 of P6. It can be observed that in V4 which was executed in 2008, east boundary of lot C in P2 which is Lot B of P2 has been described as a 10 feet wide road but when it described the right of way which is Lot B in P2 in its second schedule has not indicated it is a 10 feet wide road way but the extent has been given as 3.2 perches. However, in P9 which was executed in 2007 by the Defendant's predecessors in title, the east boundary of lot C has not been described as a 10 feet wide roadway. Even in P10 which was executed in 1968, east boundary of lot C has not been described as a 10 feet wide road. Both these P9 and P10 deeds described Lot B in their second schedule as a right of way of 3.2 perches but not as a 10 feet wide roadway. Mr. Pathegama, Licensed Surveyor through his plan and report marked as P6 and P6A and his oral evidence has established that in fact Lot B in P2 is a right of way of 3.2 perches with a width of eight and half feet and with the encroachment of the portion shown as lot 1 in his plan marked p6, it has become 10 feet wide. Since this right of way has not been described as a10 feet roadway in marked deeds written up to 2007 and such description is only found in the deed V4 which was written in 2008 in describing the east boundary of Lot C in P2, it is more probable that the encroachment could have taken place close to the date of V4. However, the Defendant has not led any evidence of a predecessor in title to show that one of them encroached lot 1 in P6 or had adverse possession or user of that portion.

The Defendant has acquired title to Lot C and the right of way over lot B of P2 only in January 2008. He has admitted in evidence that he did not use this right of way for 10 years. The Plaint in this case was filed in April 2009. Hence, the Defendant has not placed sufficient material before the learned District Judge to prove on balance of probability that he has prescriptive rights to the said encroached portion shown as lot 1 in P6. Therefore, this court cannot be satisfied that there were sufficient materials before the learned District Judge to hold that the Defendant and his predecessor have prescribed to a 10 feet wide Road and/or that the Learned High Court Judges failed to realize that the learned District Court Judge was erred in evaluating evidence in that regard.

For the foregoing reasons, the question of law allowed by this court has to be answered in the Negative.

However, this court observes that both the parties have made certain legal submissions in their written submissions that do not directly fall within the ambit of the aforesaid question of law allowed by this court and they are discussed below.

The Defendant in his written submissions quoting the following paragraph from Kathirathamby V Arumagam 39 C L W 27 try to argue that the Plaintiff failed in proving that he was ousted from possession and, as such, his action filed as a rei vindicatio action must fail.

(quote)

"When a person institutes an action asking to be restored to the possession of the land from which he has been forcibly ousted, the onus of proving ouster is on him. As the plaintiff has failed to prove ouster in this case, it must be necessarily be assumed that the possession of the defendant is lawful." (unquote)

The above quoted paragraph indicates an alleged cause of action based on an ouster from possession of the plaintiff and the failure of the plaintiff since he failed to prove his cause of action but it does not indicate that proof of ouster as a necessary ingredient of a rei vindicatio action.

The Plaintiff in his written submissions has quoted Wille's Principles of South African laws (9th edition-2007) at pages 539-540 as follows;

"To succeed with the rei vindicatio, the owner must prove on balance of probabilities, first, his or her ownership in the property. Secondly, the property must exist, be clearly identifiable and must not have been destroyed or consumed. Thirdly, the defendant must be in possession or detention of the thing at the moment the action is instituted. The rationale is to ensure that the defendant is in a possession to comply with an order for restoration."

A rei vindicatio action was described by Voet as follows;

"From the right of ownership springs the vindication of a thing, that is to say, an action in rem by which we sue for a thing which is ours but in the possession of another" [1]

It is well established in our law that what is necessary to be successful in a rei vindicatio action is the proof of title to the property and that the defendant is in the possession of it. [2] Even an owner with no more than a bare paper title (nuda Proprietas) who has never enjoyed possession could lawfully vindicate his property subject to any lawful defense such as prescription.[3]

On the other hand, the Defendant admits that he unlawfully seized a portion of the Plaintiff's property during his cross examination at page 191 of the brief. The Plaintiff's case as elicited by the issues is that whether the Defendant has grabbed a portion of his land which is described in the 5th schedule to the plaint. In this context, the argument of the Defendant that ouster is not proved and the case of the Plaintiff must fail holds no water.

In the written submissions filed on behalf of the Defendant, there is an attempt to indicate that the action that should have been filed by the Plaintiff was an actio negotoria to get a declaration that the property is free from a servitude. As indicated above, this also does not fall within the scope of the question of law allowed by this court. It must be noted that the Plaintiff does not dispute the right of way of the Defendant over lot B of plan marked P2. Same incident may give rise to different causes of action. The Plaintiff's position in the plaint was that there is a right of way given to Lot C in P2, the Defendant has encroached and seized a portion of his land and prepared a plan accordingly. Whether the intention of such encroachment was to expand the right of way or to claim soil rights to the encroached portion is not within the knowledge of the Plaintiff. What the Plaintiff knew was that a portion of his land has been grabbed by the Defendant. As mentioned before, even the Defendant in his evidence has admitted that he illegally seized a portion of the Plaintiff's land. In that backdrop, this court cannot find fault with the nature of the action filed by the Plaintiff. On the other hand, even if the said encroachment is not a total dispossession of the Plaintiff, it is clear that it affects the ownership rights of the Plaintiff as it deprives the Plaintiff of peaceful possession of the encroached portion. Such deprivation of a right falls within the interpretation of cause of action in terms of the section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code. Thus, he is entitled to file an action and get redress of the wrong done and ask for a decree to declare his right and to yield up the peaceful possession of the relevant immovable property in terms of section 217 of the Civil Procedure Code. Hence, it is the view of this court that the action filed by the Plaintiff is lawful.

As stated above, the question of law allowed by this court has to be answered in the negative, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff Mahaweli Authority and the defendant contractor entered into a written agreement marked P2 to make improvements to the spillway and tail canal of the Pimburattewa tank in the Polonnaruwa District. In terms of clause 59.2(a) of the agreement, the plaintiff terminated the agreement by letter dated 01.03.2006 marked P10 on the basis that the defendant had stopped work for more than 28 days without authorisation.

Clauses 59.1 and 59.2(a) of the agreement read as follows:

> 59.1 The employer or the contractor may terminate the services under the contract if the other party causes a fundamental breach of the contract.
> 59.2(a) Fundamental breach of contract shall include, but shall not be limited to, the contractor stops work for 28 days when no stoppage of work is shown on the current program and the stoppage has not been authorised by the engineer.

By letter P10 the plaintiff also informed the defendant that in terms of clause 60.1 of the agreement steps would be taken to decide on "the payment upon termination and completion of the balance work of the contract."

Clause 60.1 reads as follows:

> If the services of the contractor under the contract is terminated because of a fundamental breach of contract by the contractor, the engineer shall issue a certificate for the value of the work done and materials ordered less advance payments remaining to be recovered at up to the date of the issue of the certificate and less the percentage to apply to the value of the work not completed. Additional liquidated damages shall not apply. If the total amount due to the employer exceeds any payment due to the contractor, the difference shall be a debt payable to the employer.

Clause 60.1 shall be read with "Contract Data" as agreed upon by the parties which states "The percentage to apply to the value of the work not completed, representing the employer's [plaintiff's] additional cost for completing the works, is 25%."

P10 further stated that the defendant would be informed of when he would be required to be present at the site for the final measurements in order to prepare the final payment bill subsequent to termination.

Notwithstanding the defendant was informed of the date, he was not present at the site inspection. The summary of the final payment prepared ex parte is marked P12, whereby it was calculated that the value of 25% of the incomplete work of the defendant in terms of clause 60.1 of the agreement is Rs. 2,150,000.

Thereafter by the letter of demand dated 26.04.2006 marked P14 the plaintiff demanded this sum from the defendant.

As the defendant failed to make this payment, the plaintiff filed this action against the defendant in the District Court of Polonnaruwa on 24.04.2012 seeking to recover the said sum with legal interest. The defendant filed the answer seeking dismissal of the plaintiff's action and also made a claim in reconvention to recover a sum of Rs. 3,000,000 from the plaintiff for the termination of the agreement.

After trial, the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action on the basis that the action is prescribed in terms of section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance, as it was not instituted within six years of the date of termination of the agreement. The District Court also dismissed the defendant's claim in reconvention.

Being aggrieved by this judgment, the plaintiff appealed to the High Court of Civil Appeal. The High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court and directed the District Court to enter judgment as prayed for in the prayer to the plaint on the basis that the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff against the defendant on the date the demand was made by P14 and, as the action was filed within six years of the date of the demand, the action is not prescribed in terms of section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance.

This court granted leave to appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal on the following questions of law:

(a) Did the High Court of Civil Appeal fail to consider that the plaint filed on 24.04.2012 was prescribed in terms of section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance?
(b) Did the High Court of Civil Appeal misinterpret section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance?
(c) Did the High Court of Civil Appeal fail to consider that clause 60.1 of the agreement is part of the agreement and not a separate ground which triggers a separate cause of action upon termination of the agreement?
(d) Did the High Court of Civil Appeal misdirect itself when it decided that the cause of action against the defendant arose from the date the demand was made on 26.04.2006?

Both parties rely on section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance in that the plaintiff's position is that the prescriptive period of six years starts to run from the date of the demand by P14 (which was accepted by the High Court of Civil Appeal) whereas the defendant's position is that the prescriptive period of six years starts to run from the date of the termination of the agreement by P10 (which was accepted by the District Court). It is common ground that if the plaintiff's interpretation is accepted the cause of action is not prescribed and if the defendant's interpretation is accepted it is.

Section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance reads as follows:

> No action shall be maintainable upon any deed for establishing a partnership, or upon any promissory note or bill of exchange, or upon any written promise, contract, bargain, or agreement, or other written security not falling within the description of instruments set forth in section 5, unless such action shall be brought within six years from the date of the breach of such partnership deed or of such written promise, contract, bargain, or agreement, or other written security, or from the date when such note or bill shall have become due, or of the last payment of interest thereon.

Learned counsel for the defendant strenuously submits that in terms of section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance, an action shall be brought within six years "from the date of the breach" of the agreement and, in terms of the letter of termination P10 read with clause 59.2(a) of the agreement, the breach of the agreement occurred on the date of the letter of termination since discontinuing work for more than 28 days is a fundamental breach as per clause 59.2(a). This is no doubt an interesting argument in the literal application of section 6 but the legal application of the section in my view does not support the argument.

Let me explain. What is prescribed after the lapse of six years in terms of section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance? It is none other than the cause of action. Every action is based on a cause of action and section 40(d) of the Civil Procedure Code mandates the plaintiff to particularise his cause of action in the plaint. What is a cause of action? According to section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, "cause of action is the wrong for the prevention or redress of which an action may be brought, and includes the denial of a right, the refusal to fulfill an obligation, the neglect to perform a duty and the infliction of an affirmative injury." What is the cause of action the plaintiff says accrued to him in paragraph 9 of the plaint? It is the recovery of the value of 25% of the incomplete work calculated in a sum of Rs. 2,150,000 in terms of clause 60.1 of the agreement. This sum which the defendant is obliged to pay in terms of the agreement was not paid notwithstanding a demand was made by P14 dated 26.04.2006.

The next question is when does the prescriptive period of six years in terms of section 6 begin to run? Learned counsel for the defendant claims that clause 60.1 is part of the agreement which cannot be considered in isolation. I totally agree. Learned counsel then develops his argument to say that a separate cause of action cannot accrue to the plaintiff upon clause 60.1 when the cause of action has already accrued to the plaintiff upon the breach of the agreement which culminated in the termination of the agreement by P10. I cannot agree.

An agreement can give rise to several causes of action at different stages. The termination of the agreement under clause 59 gave rise to a technical cause of action but nothing flows from it. It is the next step set out in clause 60 that gives rise to a practical cause of action to either party. What is relevant is the breach of the agreement giving rise to a cause of action contemplated by section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance. The question at what point such a breach takes place depends upon the facts of the particular case.

In order for clause 60.1 to apply, the engineer shall prepare the final bill after the site inspection with the participation of the defendant. This is not possible at the termination of the agreement in terms of clause 59.1 although clause 59.1 is linked to clause 60.1.

The aforesaid argument of learned counsel would have succeeded if liquidated damages was the remedy the parties agreed upon after the breach of the agreement leading to its termination. In such an event, there is no further step to be taken to calculate damages as parties have already agreed pre-determined damages at the time of entering into the agreement. In the instant case, clause 60.1 expressly provides that apart from the calculated damages, "Additional liquidated damages shall not apply."

Although the cause of action is the wrong (in terms of section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code), the wrong is the combination of the right in the plaintiff and its violation by the defendant. In that context, I must further add that even if the remedy is liquidated damages, there shall be a demand and the refusal of that demand to constitute a breach of contract for the purpose of initiating the period of prescription.

Hence I take the view that the prescriptive period in the instant action begins to run from the date of the demand by P14, which is the date of the breach of the agreement insofar as the plaintiff's action is concerned.

For the aforesaid reasons, I take the view that the plaintiff's cause of action is not prescribed.

I answer the questions of law in respect of which leave to appeal was granted in the negative.

The judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Mahinda Samayawardhena, J.

The Plaintiff filed this action against the Defendant in the District Court of Badulla seeking to recover a sum of Rs. 872,000 with legal interest, on the basis that he sold 26,446.5 kg of paddy at a rate of Rs. 33 per kg to the Defendant in September 2009. According to the Plaintiff, at the time of the sale, the Defendant did not pay a single cent in cash but provided the Plaintiff with two post-dated cheques marked P1 and P2 – P1 for Rs. 20,000 and P2 for Rs. 850,000 – both of which were subsequently dishonoured. Although the action was not filed under the Bills of Exchange Ordinance or Chapter 53 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Plaintiff based his case on the aforesaid two cheques. The Defendant totally denies that he engaged in any paddy transaction with the Plaintiff and states that the Plaintiff was a money lender and that the Defendant borrowed Rs. 20,000 on P1, and P2 was additional security provided for the same. The Defendant sought dismissal of the Plaintiff's action. The District Court entered Judgment for the Plaintiff but, on appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal set it aside and the appeal of the Defendant was allowed. Hence the Plaintiff before this Court. This Court granted leave to appeal to the Plaintiff on the following questions of law formulated by the Plaintiff:

(a) Is the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal wrong in law?

(b) Has the High Court of Civil Appeal failed to consider the fact that the District Court has considered all the ingredients which should be contained in a judgment as per section 187 of the Civil Procedure Code?

(c) Can the High Court of Civil Appeal dismiss the Plaintiff's action without setting aside the judgment of the District Court?

Let me consider these three questions one by one.

The first question of law formulated by the Plaintiff is broad and unspecific. It is not clear on what basis the Plaintiff says that the Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal is wrong in law. At the argument before this Court, learned counsel for the Plaintiff stated that the analysis of evidence by the District Court was correct whereas the analysis of evidence by the High Court was incorrect. In the facts and circumstances of this case, I do not think so. When the High Court stated the Plaintiff had not proved his case on a balance of probability and then opined that the Defendant's version was more probable than that of the Plaintiff, the High Court took inter alia the following matters into consideration:

(a) Admittedly, the Plaintiff is a money lender and the paddy transaction the Plaintiff speaks of is not believable.

(b) It is unlikely that a person seeking to buy a large stock of paddy would come without a rupee in cash but with two post-dated cheques.

(c) If the alleged paddy transaction is a single transaction which took place on one particular occasion, it was unnecessary for the Defendant to have provided two post-dated cheques – one for Rs. 20,000 and the other for Rs. 850,000 – instead of offering one post-dated cheque.

(d) The alleged paddy transaction took place in September 2009, but according to the document V6 dated 06.10.2010, the Defendant had not yet paid back a sum of Rs. 42,000 previously borrowed from the Plaintiff in 2006. Therefore, it is unlikely the Plaintiff would have sold the Defendant a large stock of paddy worth a sum of Rs. 872,734.50 on credit.

(e) Admittedly, the Defendant is illiterate. He can sign his name but cannot read or write. The Defendant admits his signature on the two cheques. The Plaintiff's own witness Susantha admitted in his evidence that he (Susantha) filled the cheques at the request of the Plaintiff and in the absence of the Defendant.

I cannot find fault with the analysis of the learned High Court Judge in deciding that the Plaintiff failed to prove his case.

Learned counsel for the Plaintiff accepts that if the Plaintiff fails to prove the paddy transaction, the Plaintiff's action shall fail. The finding of the High Court that on a preponderance of probability the paddy transaction was not proved is acceptable.

In the facts and circumstances of this case, the Defendant's version is more probable than that of the Plaintiff.

At the argument, learned counsel for the Plaintiff heavily relied on the failure of the Defendant to reply to the letter of demand sent prior to the institution of the action. Counsel vehemently submits that the Defendant is estopped from denying liability due to the failure to answer the letter of demand.

In business matters, if the party receiving a letter, email or the like, disputes the assertions contained in it, he must reply, for failure to do so can be regarded as an admission of the claim made therein.

In the oft quoted decision of Saravanamuttu v. de Mel (1948) 49 NLR 529, it was held:

> In business matters, if a person states in a letter to another that a certain state of facts exists, the person to whom the letter is written must reply if he does not agree with or means to dispute the assertions. Otherwise, the silence of the latter amounts to an admission of the truth of the allegations contained in that letter.

The following dicta of Lord Esher M.R. in Wiedeman v. Walpole (1891) 2 Q.B. 534 was quoted with approval in Colombo Electric Tramways and Lighting Co. Ltd v. Pereira (1923) 25 NLR 193 at 195:

> Now there are cases—business and mercantile cases—in which the Courts have taken notice that, in the ordinary course of business, if one man of business states in a letter to another that he has agreed to do certain things, the person who receives that letter must answer it, if he means to dispute the fact that he did so agree. So, where merchants are in dispute one with the other in the course of > carrying on some business negotiations, and one writes to the other, "but you promised me that you would do this or that", if the other does not answer that letter, but proceeds with the negotiations, he must be taken to admit the truth of the statement.

The above has been quoted with approval in several cases, including Seneviratne v. LOLC [2006] 1 Sri LR 230.

However, I must add that although it is a general principle that failure to answer a business letter amounts to an admission of the contents therein, this is not an absolute principle of law. In other words, failure to reply to a business letter alone cannot decide the whole case. It is one factor which can be taken into account along with other factors in determining whether the Plaintiff has proved his case. Otherwise, when it is established that the formal demand, which is a sine qua non for the institution of an action, was not replied, Judgment can ipso facto be entered for the Plaintiff. That cannot be done. Therefore, although failure to reply to a business letter or a letter of demand is a circumstance which can be held against the Defendant, it cannot by and of itself prove the Plaintiff's case. The impact of such failure to reply will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. Vide the Judgment of Weeramantry J. in Wickremasinghe v. Devasagayam (1970) 74 NLR 80.

In the instant case, there is no strong evidence in favour of the Plaintiff to support the alleged paddy transaction. It is admitted that the Defendant is illiterate and the Plaintiff is a money lender. Document V1 goes to prove that the Plaintiff had lent money to the Defendant prior to the alleged paddy transaction and that loan remained unsettled. In the facts and circumstances of this case, the failure to answer the letter of demand P3 is not decisive.

The first question of law shall be answered in the negative.

The second question of law for me is meaningless. It is: "the High Court of Civil Appeal failed to consider the fact that the District Court has considered all the ingredients which should be contained in a judgment as per section 187 of the Civil Procedure Code". No argument in relation to the ingredients of a Judgment was advanced before the High Court by either party. The High Court did not consider such a matter in its Judgment; nor did the High Court set aside the Judgment of the District Court on the basis that the same did not contain all the requirements of a Judgment as per section 187 of the Civil Procedure Code.

This question shall be answered against the Plaintiff.

The third question of law is of a technical nature. The last paragraph of the High Court Judgment when translated into English reads: "For the above-mentioned reasons, the Court decides to allow the appeal of the Defendant-Appellant. Accordingly, the appeal is allowed and the Plaintiff-Respondent's action is dismissed. No costs."

Learned counsel for the Plaintiff argues it is wrong to have dismissed the Plaintiff's action without setting aside the Judgment of the District Court. Although the High Court does not expressly state that it sets aside the Judgment of the District Court, the same is implicit in allowing the appeal of the Defendant-Appellant. After allowing the appeal, the High Court was correct, for the reasons set out in the Judgment, to have stated that the Plaintiff's action in the District Court shall stand dismissed. Judgments need not be set aside on such flimsy technical grounds which have not prejudiced the substantial rights of the parties or occasioned a failure of justice.

I dismiss the appeal but without costs.

JUDGEMENT

Aluwihare PC J.,

The Plaintiff-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the 'Plaintiff') filed action against the 1st to 4th Defendants in the District Court of Kuliyapitiya for the partition of a land called "Ihalawatte" which is in extent of about 2 Acres. The 5th Defendant was added as a party, subsequently.

By judgement dated 13th May 2003, the Learned District Judge dismissed the Plaint on the ground that the Plaintiff had failed to prove both his pedigree and his title to the land sought to be partitioned.

Aggrieved by the said judgement, the Plaintiff appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court of the North Western Province, which affirmed the judgement of the learned District Judge and dismissed the appeal.

Against the said judgement, the Plaintiff moved this court by way of Leave to Appeal and Leave was granted on the questions of law referred to in sub-paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of paragraph 18 of the Petition of the Appellant (Plaintiff).

The questions of law in verbatim, are as follows;

a) Has the District Court and the High Court erred in failing to hold that the chain of title relied on by the Plaintiff Appellant Petitioner had been proved in terms of deed P1, mortgage bond 4D1 and crown grant 4D4, in preference to the chain of title relied on by the 4th Defendant because the lands described in his deeds 4D2, 4D3, 4D5 clearly did not apply to the land sought to be partitioned.

b) Did the District Court and the High Court err in holding that the Plaintiff Appellant Petitioner had failed to prove title to the land sought to be partitioned in this action.

c) Did the District Court and the High Court errs in holding that the Plaintiff Appellant Petitioner had failed to prove the devolution of title to the corpus.

The Corpus

The Plaintiff, instituted this action against the 1st to 4th Defendants seeking the partition of a land called "Ihalawatte" more fully described in the schedule to the Plaint. The Plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to an undivided ½ share of Ihalawatte, and that the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants were entitled to 1/6 shares each.

The 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants did not have any contest with the Plaintiff. The 4th Defendant, however, claimed title to the entire land based on title deeds and the 5th Defendant took up the position that the corpus was co-owned by him and the 4th Defendant in equal shares and prayed for the dismissal of the action.

In the Petition dated 21st December 2009, the land is described as a single land consisting of an 'old plantation' and 'new plantation', which is in the extent of about 2 acres.

The land sought to be partitioned was surveyed by the Court Commissioner S.B. Abeykoon who submitted a preliminary plan bearing No. 626/85 along with a preliminary report to the Court. According to the said Court Commissioner, the land sought to be partitioned was shown to him by the Plaintiff and the 1st, 2nd and 4th Defendants. The Court Commissioner while giving evidence had stated that the preliminary plan depicts the land described in the schedule to the Plaint. He also had stated that it was a parcel of land. Further, he had added that no one produced any previous survey plans relating to the land and that he relied on the boundaries shown to him by the parties present on the land, for the purpose of carrying out the survey.

The Contention of the Plaintiff

The main argument on behalf of the Plaintiff was that the conclusion arrived at by the learned District Judge, as well as by the Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal, to the effect that the Plaintiff failed to prove the devolution of title to the corpus, is erroneous.

The key point raised by the Plaintiff is that the Deed marked 'P1', mortgage bond marked '4D1' and crown grant marked '4D4' which the Plaintiff relied on, apply to the corpus for partition and show the devolution of title which is described in the Plaint. He argues that this is in stark contrast to the deeds produced by the 4th Defendant, marked '4D2', '4D3' and '4D5' which the Plaintiff claims have no application to the land sought to be partitioned.

The Questions of Law

I wish to consider the second and third questions of law [b & c], namely, whether the lower courts have misdirected themselves by holding that the Plaintiff has failed to establish, his title to the corpus [b] and the devolution of title to the corpus [c].

According to the pedigree relied on by the Plaintiff [annexed to the Plaint], in the year 1910, H.M. Davith Singho and H.M. Bandappu, had received a crown grant in equal shares to the land depicted in the survey plan No. 273672 which is in extent 3 Roods and 28 perches. After Bandappu's demise, Herath Singho, being the sole heir, had inherited the ½ share of the land owned by Bandappu. In the year 1984, Herath Singho by Deed No. 7260 [P1] sold his share to the Plaintiff, Solomon. According to the Plaintiff's pedigree, the Crown grant is 3 Roods and 28 perches in extent. The schedule to the Deed No. 7260, however, refers to, two allotments viz;

(1) land depicted in plan No. 273672, in extent of 3 roods and 28 perches and

(2) 1/3rd of another land, 1 and ¼ acre in extent, with distinct boundaries.

The Plaintiff has not produced a separate pedigree in relation to, either the 1st or the 2nd allotments of lands referred to above. Nor has he explained the basis of amalgamating the entitlement to an undivided land to another distinct separate land. The schedule to the Plaint, as stated earlier, refers only to a single parcel of land and nowhere in the Plaint is it said that the corpus is an amalgamated land. The Plaintiff, however, in the pedigree filed on his behalf, had made reference to a crown grant of 3 roods and 8 perches and possession for a long period of time and inheritance, vaguely giving the impression that the corpus contains in extent, more than what was given by the Crown grant. In his evidence, however, he has taken up the position that two parcels of land are involved. The Plaintiff had failed to explain as to how an undivided share in the second schedule of the Deed P1, became part of the 'amalgamated' land. Thus, the Plaintiff had presented a case that is materially different to what was pleaded, which is obnoxious to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code [Section 150 explanation 2]. The Plaintiff had admitted that what he purchased was the land that was received by Herath Singho by way of a crown grant [page 126 of the District Court record].

The Plaintiff in an attempt to impress that the corpus consists of two amalgamated lands in extent of two acres, had executed a deed of mortgage, on March 1985, two months prior to filing the partition action in the District Court [Deed no. 346 marked and produced as 4V1]. Under cross examination, the Plaintiff admitted that he mortgaged the property as he was in need of money, to one Pausthina, as claimed by the Plaintiff, one of his neighbours. He also admitted that even by the date on which he testified he had not taken any steps to have the mortgage discharged. Probed further, the Plaintiff admitted that Pausthina is none other than his wife [pages 135 -137 of the District Court record].

Considering the above, both the learned District Judge as well as the High Court of Civil Appeal was correct in holding that the Plaintiff had failed to establish, both, the title to the land sought to be partitioned as well as the devolution of title to the same.

In the circumstances, I answer both the questions of law referred to in paragraphs (b) and (c) above in the negative. In view of these findings, I am of the view that it would not be necessary to consider the question of law referred to in paragraph (a) above as the case for the Plaintiff is bound to fail.

Accordingly, the judgments of both the District Court as well as the High Court of Civil Appeal are affirmed and this appeal is dismissed subject to costs of Rs. 150,000/=.

ACHALA WENGAPPULI, J.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (later referred to as the Substituted Plaintiff- Respondent-Respondent and hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff) instituted the instant action, under Section 2(1) of the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977, before the District Court of Gampaha on 11.05.1994, primarily seeking to partition a commonly held land called Batadenikele alias Baddehikele, which is in an extent of two Roods and 8.53

Perches and morefully described in the schedule to her plaint, according to the pedigree set out therein. Having claimed a ½ share entitlement of the corpus on a deed of gift, the Plaintiff had also conceded to the entitlement of the 1st Defendant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 1st Defendant), to the remaining ½ share of the corpus. Both the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant relied on two deeds of gift, in proof of their respective entitlement. These two deeds of gift, Nos. 9854 of 18.09.92 and 7194 of 25.01.1993 were executed by the 2nd Defendant-Respondent-Respondent (later substituted by 2A Defendant-Respondent-Respondent and hereinafter referred to as the "2nd Defendant") and attested by Notary Public Pathiratne. The 3rd Defendant Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "3rd Defendant") was added to the said partition action on 29.11.1995, as a disclosed party, upon him making a claim before the surveyor as to the improvements effected to the dwelling house, during the preliminary survey of the corpus.

It is admitted by the parties that the 2nd Defendant is the original owner of the corpus, who had received his title upon a final decree of the partition case No. 18122/P, dated 12.05.1981. The 2nd Defendant had gifted a ½ share of the corpus to his 2nd wife, the Plaintiff and the balance ½ share to his eldest daughter, the 1st Defendant. The 3rd Defendant, who was in possession of the house standing on the corpus, is the only son of the 2nd Defendant.

In his statement of claim, the 3rd Defendant sought dismissal of partition action or, in the alternative, sought compensation for bona fide improvements made to the land as well as to the house, quantified at Rs. 950,000.00 and a declaration of Court to his entitlement to Jus Retentionis.

The District Court, having accepted that the 3rd Defendant is only entitled to compensation for improvements made to his paternal house by making additions to the existing building, further held that since he failed to prove the stated amount of compensation and owing to their very reason had desisted itself in awarding any compensation. The Court also held that he is not entitled to Jus Retentionis as well. The trial Court had thereupon decreed that the corpus be partitioned, with each of the half share, allocated to Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the trial Court for its failure to award any compensation, the 3rd Defendant preferred an appeal to the High Court of Civil Appeal, which had allowed his appeal and awarded him Rs. 300,000.00 for bona fide improvements, instead of Rs. 850,000.00 which he sought. He then preferred the instant appeal to this Court, challenging the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal, on the basis that it had awarded a lesser sum as compensation for the bona fide improvements than the amount and thereupon seeking an enhancement of the amount of compensation awarded to him by the said appellate Court.

This Court, having afforded a hearing to the contesting parties on 30.06.2015, thought it fit to grant leave to the following questions of law, that had been formulated by the 3rd Defendant in sub paragraphs I, II and III of the paragraph 14 of his Petition, dated 28.04.2015.

I. Did the learned High Court err when deciding that in the District Court a full trial was conducted, whereas on the 1st date of evidence of the 3rd Defendant-Appellant-Petitioner, a further date had been refused?

II. Did the learned High Court err in failing to assess the evidence adduced by the parties, where all parties admitted that the 3rd Defendant-Appellant-Petitioner was a bona fide improver?

III. Did the learned High Court err in failing to assess the evidence adduced by the parties, whereas the actual amount of compensation should be at least Rs. 800,000/- for the fully completed house?

Learned Counsel for the 3rd Defendant, in her submissions before this Court in support of the appeal, contended that since it was absolutely essential for him to establish the value of the improvements and developments he has carried out to the house, at the conclusion of his evidence before the trial Court, made an application seeking an adjournment to call another witness, in order to discharge that burden. Calling of this witness was necessitated due to an objection raised by the Plaintiff, that the documents relied on by the 3rd Defendant, are only to be admitted in evidence 'subject to proof'.

The said application for adjournment was refused by the trial Court and the 3rd Defendant therefore contends before this Court that, in view of the provisions of Section 25(1) and Section 76(1) to (3) of the Partition Law, although a wide discretion was conferred on the trial Court to allow such an application for an adjournment, it did not exercise its discretion reasonably in this particular instance, resulting in an adverse impact on his claim.

Learned Counsel for the 1st and 2A Defendants, in seeking to counter the submissions of the 3rd Defendant that the final decree of the partition action, on which the original owner (2nd Defendant) was allocated a share, was pronounced only on 10.03.1981 and therefore, the 3rd Defendant cannot claim any compensation for improvements that claims to have been effected prior to 1981. They further contend that, although the 3rd Defendant claimed "at least Rs. 800,000.00 for the fully completed house" in his petition seeking leave from this Court, his amended statement of claim to the trial Court, he limited the amount only to Rs. 350,000.00.

Thus, the issue of whether the trial Court's order of refusal to grant the 3rd Defendant an adjournment, depriving him an opportunity to call witness/witnesses on his behalf, was made erroneously, will have to be considered at the outset, in view of the scope of the 1st question of law.

In refusing the application of the 3rd Defendant for an adjournment, the trial Court noted that the instant action being a partition action, its trial had taken over 8 years to reach that stage of the proceedings. It also noted that the 3rd Defendant, in presenting his case, had failed to take any steps at all to call his witnesses, and not even made an attempt at least by moving for summons on them, in spite of having had the full knowledge of the requirement to prove the documents that he himself had tendered to Court during his evidence, as they were marked 'subject to proof'.

The legal question presented before this Court therefore revolves around the question whether the refusal to grant an adjournment is an erroneously made order or not. In support of his contention that it is an order erroneously made, the 3rd Defendant relied on the provisions contained in Section 76 of the Partition Law, which deals with adjournments.

Provisions of subsection 76(3) deals with trials as it states that "the Court may, for sufficient cause, either on the application of the parties or of its own motion, advance or postpone the trial to any other day, upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as to it shall seem proper." Once a partition action had been fixed for trial, there must be a 'sufficient cause' for the trial Court, for it to make an order to advance or to postpone an already fixed trial date.

The proceedings relating to the application of the 3rd Respondent, in seeking an adjournment for further trial, indicate that he made an application seeking permission of the trial Court to call the witnesses, who have already been listed by him, in relation to the documents marked V13, V14 and V15. He had thus made an application for adjournment to Court.

Perusal of the appeal brief reveals that the instant partition action had been instituted on 11.05.1994 and the trial Commenced on 28.02.2001 with the acceptance of the points of contest, by the trial Court. The Plaintiff had closed her case on 01.06.2007 and the Defendant's case commenced on 01.08.2007 with the 1st Defendant giving evidence. She called a witness on her behalf. That witness concluded his evidence on 08.12.2008. The trial adjourned to 11.05.2009 for further trial of Defendant's case and the 3rd Defendant had commenced his evidence. He was cross examined and re-examined on the same day and then only the application for adjournment was made. With the refusal of the application for an adjournment, the 3rd Defendant had decided to close his case with the available evidence. At that stage, the Plaintiff again moved trial Court to reject the documents, relied on and marked by the 3rd Defendant as V1, V2, V13, V14, V15 and V16, on the basis they were not proved.

The documents V1, V2, V13, V14, V15 and V16, included the two documents issued by the relevant bank branches, indicating that the 3rd Defendant had obtained loans to carry out repair work on a dwelling house. The remaining documents concern purchases of hardware items. It is also evident that the 3rd Defendant had, despite the objection, tendered these documents along with his written submissions and the trial Court too had considered the contents of those documents, in holding that he did in fact carry out renovation work to his father's house. Thus, his interests were not prejudiced at all, merely because the trial Court had not allowed an adjournment to call a witness.

In the list of witnesses filed by the 3rd Defendant he had cited 14 witnesses including himself. The 1st Defendant, who presented her evidence before Court had cited only four witnesses and called only one of them. When the trial was adjourned to 11.05.2009, the 1st Defendant and her witness had already concluded their evidence and it was for the 3rd Defendant to place his evidence on that day. When the 3rd Defendant sought to mark documents through the witness for the 1st Defendant, it was objected to and marked subject to proof. On 11.05.2009, the 3rd Defendant gave evidence and concluded his evidence. Clearly, he had not taken any steps to secure attendance of any of his witnesses on that date, although he knew very well that it was for him to prove the documents, that were marked subject to proof, by calling relevant witnesses on that day, to which step he had more than sufficient time to take.

The trial Court, after rejecting the 3rd Defendant's application to permit to call witnesses, had decided to proceed with the case. The 3rd Defendant thereafter closed his case on that day.

The judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal clearly indicates the several grounds of appeal that had been urged before it by the 3rd Defendant at the hearing of his appeal. The ground of appeal under "F", contained in the impugned judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal, had been raised only on the premise that the trial Court had erred, in its failure to award compensation for bona fide improvements to the house. The appellate Court had referred to the submissions of the 3rd Defendant, in which he submitted that if afforded an opportunity he could have proved these documents. None of these factors indicate that the 3rd Defendant ever did challenge the said refusal of an adjournment.

In these circumstances, I am not convinced that the order of the trial Court had been made erroneously since there was no sufficient cause for it to exercise its discretion conferred on it by section 76(3) of the Partition Law, in favour of the 3rd Defendant in granting the adjournment. No interlocutory appeal was taken by the 3rd Defendant against the said refusal to grant an adjournment and strangely, in prosecuting the final appeal preferred against the judgement of the trial Court to the High Court of Civil Appeal, the 3rd Defendant had failed to raise a ground of appeal on this particular order.

I propose to deal with the remaining questions of law formulated by learned Counsel in relation to the award made by the High Court of Civil Appeal on the entitlement of the 3rd Defendant on the question of compensation for bona fide improvements at this stage.

The question of law whether the High Court of Civil Appeal "err in failing to assess the evidence adduced by the parties where all parties admitted that the 3rd Defendant-Appellant-Petitioner was a bona fide improver", had been formulated, apparently on the presumption of fact that the status of the 3rd Defendant as a bona fide improver had not been disputed by the parties and therefore admitted by the parties. The question then proceeds to the remaining segment where it raises the issue whether the appellate Court had fallen into error in assessing the evidence led by the parties on his entitlement, when he in fact a bona fide improver.

There is no such admission that was marked before the trial Court at the commencement of the trial nor was there any admission by the Plaintiff or by the 1st Defendant that the 3rd Defendant is a bona fide improver. On the contrary none of the opposing parties even accept that he made any improvement to the house built by their father, the 2nd Defendant. When they were cross examined by the 3rd Defendant, it was suggested to them that he did carry out renovations to the house. But the Plaintiff, the 1st Defendant and her witness have strenuously denied any contribution by the 3rd Defendant in that respect. The parties, although disputed as to who made the improvements, only agree that there were certain renovations carried out to their father's house, in and around 1984.

During the trial, the 3rd Defendant conceded to the share entitlement of both the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant and proceeded only with his claim for compensation. It was his evidence that he was promised ownership of the family house by his late father, the 2nd Defendant and therefore in that belief he had made improvements to it periodically by renovating the old paternal house and by planting many trees by spending Rs. 850,000.00, commencing from about 1974. He described the extent of the improvements he had effected by stating that he made the existing wattle and daub house, belonged to his father, a brick walled one with walls plastered in cement. He also had added on a verandah, a kitchen and a toilet. He had relied on documentary proof in support of loans obtained to carry out these improvements and receipts issued by a hardware store.

The trial Court had correctly arrived at the conclusion in favour of the 3rd Defendant that he had in fact made certain improvements to his father's house and therefore is entitled to compensation on that account. This conclusion was reached on the basis that the house 'D' as shown in the preliminary plan 'X' had been altered by adding new constructions to it and the trial Court noted that the 3rd Defendant's entitlement to compensation limits to those new additions. In appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal too has held in favour of the 3rd Defendant by holding that the evidence clearly points to the fact that it was he who made the new constructions. However, the High Court of Civil Appeal, in determining the quantum of compensation that should be awarded to the 3rd Defendant, stated that the evidence does not support his claim that Rs. 850,000.00 was spent on those additions to the house and therefore limited its award to Rs. 300,000.00.

The High Court of Civil Appeal, in determining the amount to be awarded as compensation for improvements to the 3rd Defendant, considered the contents of the documents marked V15 and V16, that had been issued by the respective banks, in confirmation of the loans taken by him in relation to construction work on home improvement. The appellate Court, having accepted the two documents on the footing there was no challenge mounted by opposing parties as to its genuineness, had considered them in favour of the 3rd Defendant. Thereafter, the Court had proceeded to award Rs. 300,000.00 as compensation to the 3rd Defendant, based on the "evidence and circumstances" that were available before it, despite of his demand of Rs. 850,000.00. The answer given by the trial Court to issue No. 10 was accordingly amended by the High Court of Civil Appeal to reflect its reasoning in favour of the 3rd Defendant and conclusion it had reached on the point.

It was submitted by the learned Counsel at the hearing that the main point of argument is the quantum of compensation awarded by the High Court of Civil Appeal, to which he seeks enhancement.

In a partition action, a party claiming compensation for bona fide improvements, the applicable principle of law has stated by Pereira J, in Perera v Pelmadulla Rubber & Tea Company et al (1913) 16 NLR 306 as follows:

> "In the case of a bona fide possessor, what he is entitled to receive as the value of improvements effected by him is the amount by which the value of the whole property on which the improvements have been effected has been enhanced by reason of the improvements, or the actual expenditure incurred in effecting the improvements, whichever is less."

When the surveyor visited the corpus, in making the preliminary plan, the 3rd Defendant claimed that he had lived in the house since his birth and made improvement to it commencing from 1970 until 1991 with his own funding but did not quantify it. The assertion of the 3rd Defendant that he made improvements since 1970 was effectively refuted by his opponents when he admitted the fact that he was employed only in 1975. This resultant situation leaves with weak evidence as to the value of the improvements that are attributed to the 3rd Defendant who thereby left the Courts with insufficient evidence to decide on the quantum of his claim.

The documents that the 3rd Defendant referred to in his submissions as the items of evidence he was 'deprived' of an opportunity to 'prove' (V1, V2, V13, V14, V15 and V 16) would only add up to Rs.43,019.15, which the High Court of Civil Appeal in fact did consider in his favour in determining the amount at Rs. 300,000.00. As the learned Counsel for the 1st Defendant contends, these were the only documents that the 3rd Defendant relied on to prove his claim of compensation, in order to establish the varying amounts, which he cited from time to time. In the amended statement of claim the compensation was quantified by the 3rd Defendant at Rs. 850,000.00 but did not put that position to the Plaintiff. During cross examination of the 1st Defendant, it was suggested to her that he spent Rs. 500,000.00 to construct the 'new' house, which she denied. He then suggested he made improvements to the value of 350,000.00 to that house. That suggestion too was denied by the 1st Defendant. In cross examining the witness called by the 1st Plaintiff, it was suggested that he had spent Rs. 350,000.00 to add a room, a storeroom and a kitchen to the house. Strangely, the 3rd Defendant did not mention any specific amount as compensation for improvements and offered an explanation to his inability to produce any documentary proof of expenditure on the improvements and renovations that were made to the house on the basis that he had accepted his father's oral promise that he would have the ownership of the house and, having acted on that verbal assurance, he did not keep a record of the expenditure made on improvements. In advancing yet another position before this Court, the 3rd Defendant relied on the third question of law based on his perceived entitlement to Rs. 800,000.00 as compensation for the 'fully completed' house.

I have carefully considered the quantum of compensation awarded by the High Court of Civil Appeal, in the light of the available evidence that had been placed before the trial Court by the parties to the instant partition action, and find that there is no error on the part of the appellate Court made either on evidence or on the law, in determining the quantum of entitlement.

The District Court as well as the High Court of Civil Appeal had considered the available evidence on the entitlement of compensation for bona fide improvements to the 3rd Defendant. The High Court of Civil Appeal had corrected the judgment of the original Court, when it had quantified the entitlement of the 3rd Defendant to compensation for improvements at Rs. 300,000.00. It is clear from the evidence that the 3rd Defendant had opted for the mode in which he is expected to prove "the actual expenditure incurred effecting the improvements" rather than proving "the amount by which the value of the whole property on which the improvements have been effected has been enhanced by reason of the improvements." The 3rd Defendant had however failed to establish his proclaimed entitlement to compensation of Rs. 800,000.00, since "the actual expenditure incurred effecting the improvements" only points to the sum awarded by the High Court of Civil Appeal and therefore his entitlement is limited to Rs. 300,000.00.

In view of the forgoing, I proceed to answer all three questions of law against the 3rd Defendant and in the negative. Since all questions were answered in the negative, I accordingly affirm the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal and dismiss the appeal of the 3rd Defendant with costs.

Mahinda Samayawardhena, J.

The plaintiff filed this action seeking a declaration of title to the land described in the schedule to the plaint, ejectment of the defendant therefrom and damages. The defendant filed answer seeking dismissal of the action. After trial the District Court entered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the High Court affirmed it. This appeal is from the judgment of the High Court. This court granted leave to appeal on the following two questions of law:

(a) Did the District Court err in entering judgment despite the plaintiff failing to discharge the burden that his title deeds relate to the land occupied by the defendant?
(b) Did the High Court fail to appreciate that the District Court entered judgment for the plaintiff notwithstanding the plaintiff failed to identify the corpus?

In essence, leave to appeal was granted on the question whether the land in suit has been properly identified.

The identification of the land is of paramount importance for the plaintiff to succeed in a rei vindicatio action. The examination of title does not arise until the land which the plaintiff claims title to is properly identified. The burden is on the plaintiff, not on the defendant, to identify the land in suit.

In this case, the defendant who is in possession of the land known as "Millagahawatta" did not contest the plaintiff's title deeds. Throughout the action her position was that the plaintiff's title deeds relate to a different land, not to the land which she is in possession of. The defendant clearly stated in her answer that she purchased lots 1, 2, 3 and 5 in plan No. 1067/1967 of 25.04.1967 by deed No. 34 of 25.11.1970 and she is in possession of that land. Admittedly that land is different from the land the plaintiff claims title to and seeks the ejectment of the defendant from. The defendant attached a copy of her title deed (D1) and a copy of the plan (D2) to the answer, and the originals were produced at the trial. Her transferor's title deed (P19) also identifies the land according to the said old plan. The land the defendant claims title to as described in these deeds is as follows:

> All that divided and defined parcel of land called Millagahawatta comprising of Lots 1, 2, 3 and 5 (excluding Lot 4) depicted in Plan No. 1067/1967 dated 25th April 1967 made by H.L. Croos Da Brera, Licensed Surveyor situated at Thihariya in the Meda Pattu of Siyane Korale in the District of Colombo (now Gampaha) Western Province and bounded on the North the land of P.L. Mumeena Umma and Lot 4 shown on the said Plan No.1067/1967 on the East by the P.W.D. Road from Warapalana to Thihariya on the South by land of A.T. Razeem and others and on the West by land of C.L. Abdul Samad, land of A.L. Segu Mohomed and others and land of U.L. Abdul Rahiman containing in extent one Acre Three Roods Two Perches (A1. R3. P2) according to the said Plan No. 1067/ 1967.

It is clear from the above description that "Millagahawatta" is a larger land and the defendant claims a divided and defined potion of that larger land.

The plaintiff purchased his land, a portion of "Millagahawatta", about 22 years after the defendant had purchased her land. The land described in the schedule to the plaint as described in the plaintiff's title deed No. 6952 of 06.09.1992 (P8) is as follows:

Southern portion of Millagahawatta situated at Thihariya in the Meda Pattu of Siyane Korale in the District of Gampaha of the Western Province bounded on the North by a portion of the same land belonging to Ali Lebbe Pakir Lebbe, on the East by cart road to Thihariya, on the South by Dangaha Ovita belonging to Ali Thambi Lebbe Ama Lebbe, on the West although it says Ovita belonging to Ahamadu Lebbe Ali Lebbe and others, in fact, the land belonging to Ali Thambi Machcham Ahamadu Lebbe Machcham in extent 1A 3R 0P.

It is clear from the above description also that "Millagahawatta" is a larger land and the plaintiff claims a portion ("southern portion") of the larger land (1 acre and 2 roods), and that portion is bounded on the north by a portion of the larger land.

There is no plan prepared to identify this portion of land at or before the execution of the plaintiff's deed or after the institution of this action despite the defendant having raised the issue of identification of the land at the earliest possible opportunity.

The plaintiff marked the title deeds of his predecessors in title. According to the schedule to the first deed No. 16855 marked P2, "Millagahawatta" comprises more than 10 acres.

The transferor of the plaintiff's deed No. 6952 (P8), Riyal, became entitled to the land by deed of gift No. 2934 (P7) from his father, Shariiff. Shariiff became entitled to the land by deed No. 23381 (P6). It is to be noted that although Shariiff gifted the entire southern portion of "Millagahawatta" within those boundaries in extent of 1 acre and 2 roods by P7, according to deed P6 Shariiff had got only an undivided 2/3 share of that portion.

Learned President's counsel for the plaintiff quoting Balasooriya v. Neelakanthi [2017] BLR 202 and Punchiappuhamy v. Dingiribanda [2016] BLR 40 contends that if a plaintiff claims the entire land but establishes title to a portion of the land, he is entitled to have the trespasser ejected from the entire land. In these two cases there was no question of identification of the land whereas in the instant case the issue is the identification of the plaintiff's land on the ground. Hence those two cases are inapplicable here.

The plaintiff admits that the plaintiff's land is registered at the Land Registry in one folio (page 384 of the brief) and the defendant's land is registered in a different folio (page 473).

During the course of the argument, learned President's Counsel for the plaintiff stated that the question of identification of the land can be addressed at the execution of the decree and the fiscal can obtain the assistance of a surveyor to identify the land and hand over possession to the plaintiff. I am afraid I cannot agree. In the execution of the decree the fiscal cannot purport to identify the land in order to eject the defendant from it when the defendant has contested the case of the plaintiff on the premise that she is not in possession of the land described in the schedule to the plaint. Under such circumstances, in the first place, there is no executable decree. (David v. Gnanawathie [2000] 2 Sri LR 352, Gunasekera v. Punchimenike [2002] 2 Sri LR 43)

The District Judge entered judgment for the plaintiff on the basis that the land claimed by the plaintiff is different from the land claimed by the defendant. If the solution is so straightforward, the District Judge could have entered judgment for the plaintiff with consent soon after the defendant filed the answer because the defendant categorically stated in her answer that the land claimed by the plaintiff is different from the land claimed by the defendant: in fact, that is her defence against ejectment from the land and rightly so.

The High Court affirmed the judgment of the District Court on the grounds that (a) the defendant has not been in possession of "the land in suit"; (b) the plaintiff has established title to the land described in the schedule to the plaint; and (c) "the defendant has failed to identify the land he claims and prove his title to the same."

The High Court states the defendant has not been in possession of the land in suit. What is "the land in suit"? Has it been identified on the ground? This is the pivotal issue before court. The defendant need not prove that she is not in possession of the land described in the schedule to the plaint. The onus lies on the plaintiff to prove his case. As I stated previously, the defendant at the first opportunity tendered a copy of her plan and stated that she is not in possession of the land the plaintiff claims title to. Then the burden is on the plaintiff who filed the action to eject the defendant from the land to take out a commission to prepare a plan to depict the land he claims and to superimpose the defendant's plan thereon. This has not been done.

If the plaintiff fails to identify the land he claims dominium over, his action must fail. In the instant case the defendant has a strong case: she has title deeds, a plan and she is in possession of the land. She is presumed to have title to the land she is in possession of, and it was for the plaintiff to rebut that presumption which he has failed to do. (Peeris v. Savunhamy (1951) 54 NLR 207)

Marsoof, J. in Latheef v. Mansoor [2010] 2 Sri LR 333 at 378 stated:

> The identity of the subject matter is of paramount importance in a rei vindicatio action because the object of such an action is to determine ownership of the property, which objective cannot be achieved without the property being clearly identified. Where the property sought to be vindicated consists of land, the land sought to be vindicated must be identified by reference to a survey plan or other equally expeditious method. It is obvious that ownership cannot be ascribed without clear identification of the property that is subjected to such ownership, and furthermore, the ultimate objective of a person seeking to vindicate immovable property by obtaining a writ of execution in terms of Section 323 of the Civil Procedure Code will be frustrated if the fiscal to whom the writ is addressed, cannot clearly identify the property by reference to the decree for the purpose of giving effect to it. It is therefore essential in a vindicatory action, as much as in a partition action, for the corpus to be identified with precision.

I answer the questions of law on which leave to appeal was granted in the affirmative and set aside the judgments of the District Court and the High Court and allow the appeal. The plaintiff's action shall stand dismissed. The defendant is entitled to costs in all three courts.

E. A. G. R. Amarasekara J

The Plaintiff – Respondent – Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Plaintiff or the Plaintiff - Respondent) instituted the action no. L1446 in the District Court of Nuwaraeliya by plaint dated 02.07.2009 against the Defendant – Appellant – Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Defendant or Defendant - Appellant). This Court observes that even though as per the plaint, name of the defendant is Abeydeera Arachchige Charlotte Kamalawathie, in certain papers filed and in the last amended caption her name is mentioned as Abeydeera Arachchige Violet Kamalawathie. The caption above states the name as appearing in the original plaint.

As per the Plaint;

- The original owner of the land in the schedule to the plaint, namely, Hewawalpitage Madawattegedara Appuhami transferred the said property to one Abeydeera Arachchige John Singho by deed bearing no. 6275 dated 07.05.1946 attested by D.E. Samarasekara, Notary Public.

- Said John Singho departed his life leaving his children Somawathie, Mahindadasa, Nimaladasa and Mithradasa as heirs and the said heirs transferred the said land to Abeydeera Arachchige Charotte Kamalawathie (the Defendant) by deed bearing no. 292 dated 30.09.1980 attested by C.A. Wanigasuriya, Notary Public.

- Thereafter, the defendant transferred the said land to the plaintiff by deed bearing no. 3008 dated 05.05.2008 attested by Edmand S. Rajapakse, Notary Public.

- However, despite the said transfer and requests to handover the possession, the defendant has been in forcible and unlawful possession of the said land since 05.05.2008 without handing it over to the plaintiff causing damages at the rate of Rs.25000.00 per month.

The plaintiff prayed that the defendant be evicted from the land described in the schedule to the plaint and the plaintiff be given the possession of the said land with damages till he is given the possession.

As per the answer dated 12.03.2009 filed by the defendant;

- The defendant denied that she transferred the land in question to the plaintiff by deed No. 3008 as stated in the plaint, and thus, she is not in forcible or unlawful possession of the said land and further, the land belongs to her and no damage is caused to the plaintiff.

- The defendant has stated that she never transferred the said land but only mortgaged it. And also stated that her signature was taken on blank papers at the office of the Notary Public.

- The defendant has further stated that the plaintiff has no right whatsoever over the property in question and no cause of action can be accrued against the defendant.

Thus, the defendant prayed for a dismissal of the plaint, for a declaration that the defendant is the lawful owner of the land described in the schedule to the answer, a declaration that the defendant is entitled to the possession of the land and to revoke the deed No. 3008 as it was not lawfully executed.

As per the details given in the schedules to the plaint and the answer both schedules describe the same land.

The plaintiff filed a replication on the 16th February 2010 and denied the defendant's cross claim in the answer.

At the commencement of the trial, followings were recorded as admissions, namely;

- The jurisdiction of the court.
- The land in dispute is the land described in the scheduled to the plaint.
- The flow of title from the original owner to the defendant.

The trial proceeded on 10 issues raised by both the parties; first five issues were raised by the plaintiff and the rest by the defendant.

Subsequent to the trial, the learned District Judge delivered her judgment on 31.10.2013 in favour of the plaintiff, granting relief prayed in prayer (a) of the plaint, that is to evict the defendant from the land and to place the plaintiff in possession. The learned District Judge found that the deed no. 3008 was proved by the plaintiff since an attesting witness testified to the execution as well as there was no reiteration of objection to the said deed at the close of the plaintiff's case. As per the issues raised by the defendant, the sale of property by this deed was impeached. Thus, it was necessary to prove this deed as per section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance and the plaintiff has done it by calling one attesting witness who knew the defendant and, even the Notary has mentioned in his attestation that this witness knew the vendor of the said deed, the defendant. The learned District Judge disbelieved the defendant as unreliable due to the contradictory nature of her stances in giving evidence and also with the answer, and due to the other reasons given in the judgment. The learned District judge who had the opportunity to observe the witnesses has given sufficient reasons for not accepting the defendant's story. It is not necessary to analyse the reasons given by the learned District Judge in disbelieving the defendant and accepting the plaintiff's version since the question of law allowed by this court relates to a different matter. With the proof of the aforesaid deed in the backdrop of the admissions made, the plaintiff's title to the land was proved and as it was an undisputed fact that the defendant was in possession, the plaintiff obtained the judgment in his favour from the District Court.

Being aggrieved by the Judgment of the District Court, the Defendant preferred an appeal to the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy, and the learned High Court Judges dismissed the appeal by the Judgment on 14.12.2015, stating that the learned District Judge had correctly evaluated the evidence led at the trial.

When the leave to appeal application against the judgment of the High Court was supported before this Court, only one question of law was allowed which reads as follows;

"Whether the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law by failing to appreciate that the action filed by the Plaintiff is not an action for a declaration of title and without first praying for a declaration of title the Plaintiff cannot seek for the ejectment of a Defendant from land?"

It appears that both the courts below considered this as a rei vindicatio action. In this regard, it can be observed that the learned District judge had referred to the cases of D. Sarathchandra V Dingirimenike and Others CA 304/93F and Luwis Singho and Others V Ponnamperuma (1996) 2 Sri L R 320 and had discussed the burden of proof and related matters in a rei vindicatio action and even the High Court Judges have mentioned the said decision in Luwis Singho and Others V Ponnamperuma in relation to the burden of proof and, confirmed the view of the learned District Judge. However, even though the learned District Judge in quoting text in English language relating to the burden of proof in rei vindicatio actions from the above decisions, in Sinhala had used the term "'අයිතිය ප්‍රකාශ කර ගැනීමේ නඩුවක්' literaly meaning an 'action for declaration of title' " to describe the action filed in the District Court. The term "අයිතිය ප්‍රකාශ කර ගැනීමේ නඩුවක්' or ' an action for declaration of title'" may not perfectly represent the correct nature of a rei vidicatio action. That is because, even though a prayer for a declaration of title is generally included in a rei vindicatio action, there may be other declaration of title cases which may not fall within rei vindicatio actions in its proper sense, such as a case where declaration of title is pleaded but the defendant is prevented from challenging the title due to estoppel taking place owing to section 116 of the Evidence Ordinance. In such cases, strict proof of title by the plaintiff is not required like in a proper rei vindicatio action. In Pathirana V Jayasundara (1955) 58 NLR 169 at 171 it was held that if the essential element of a rei vindicatio action is that the right of ownership must be strictly proved, it is difficult to accept the proposition that an action in which the plaintiff can automatically obtain a declaration of title through the operation of a rule in estoppel should be regarded as a vindicatory action.

Even though, the said question of law contemplates the judgment of the learned High Court Judges, it appears nowhere in the High Court judgment, the learned judges have referred to the action as a declaration of title action but as said before they also have referred to Luwis Singho and Others V Ponnumperuma (supra) referred to by the learned District Judge to indicate that in this type of cases burden of proving the case is on the plaintiff. This is an indication that learned High Court judges considered this as a rei vindicatio action.

As per the averment of the plaint, the plaintiff had pleaded the chain of title and as the last deed, the plaintiff had referred to the deed executed by the defendant to transfer the title to him and further averred facts relating to forcible and unlawful possession of the defendant by not handing the possession over to him. Thus, on the face of the plaint there were sufficient material to describe the action as a rei vindicatio action. As said before, the learned High Court Judges have affirmed the District Court Judgment without making any comment on the term used in Sinhala to indicate a rei vindicatio action, namely 'අයිතිය ප්‍රකාශ කර ගැනීමේ නඩුවක්' which literally means an action for declaration of title" when there was no relief in the plaint praying for a declaration of title.

It appears that the use of Sinhala words "අයිතිය ප්‍රකාශ කර ගැනීමේ නඩුවක්' or "action for declaration of title" as aforesaid has paved the way for suggesting the above question of law which this court allowed. Nevertheless, as it has been used with quoted English texts from some superior court decisions by the learned District Judge, it is understandable that the said Sinhala phraseology had been used by the learned District Court Judge to mean a rei vindicatio action.

The argument of the counsel for the defendant is that;

- there are two types of actions that corresponds to rei vindicatio actions; namely declaration of title cases and ejectment cases.

- the present case is an ejectment case and not an action for declaration of title.
- in an action for ejectment, title of the plaintiff is not disputed but the right of the defendant to the possession is contested.
- in the instant action the defendant has disputed the title of the plaintiff and an action for ejectment could not be proceeded.

Thus, it appears now he takes up the position that without a prayer for declaration of title the plaintiff could not have proceeded with the case. This stance has not been taken in the original court through issues. It appears that this position was neither taken up in the petition of appeal to the High Court nor in written submissions to the High Court. However, as it is a question of law, this court will consider it later in this judgment.

The counsel for the defendant further submits that requisites of a vindicatory action consist of proof;

- that the plaintiff is the owner of the property
- that the property is in the possession of the defendant.

While referring to De Silva V Goonenetileke 32 N L R 217, Abeykoon Hamine V Appuhamy 52 N LR 49, Peeris V Savunhamy 54 N L R 207 , the counsel of the defendant states that in a rei vindicatio action or a declaration of title action, the plaintiff must have title and the initial burden is on the plaintiff to prove his dominium and the defendant is in the possession. It appears that in Peeris V Savunhamy (supra) even the superior courts sometimes used the term “action for declaration of title” to a rei vindicatio action, perhaps due to the nature of relief prayed therein.

I do not think that there is anything to disagree with what is said above with regard to the requisites and proof of a rei vindicatio action but nothing is shown on those grounds to blame the Judgments of the lower courts. The aforesaid cases have not addressed the matters raised in the question of law mentioned above. As per the question of law, lower court judgments are challenged on two grounds, namely;

- The judges failed to consider that the plaintiff’s action is not an action for declaration of title.

- Without first praying for a declaration of title, plaintiff could not have asked for the ejectment of the defendant.

As explained above there may be declaration of title cases that may not fall within the scope of a rei vindicatio action in its proper sense. However, a party in a rei vindicatio action, as per its wish, may ask for a declaration of title or ejectment of the defendant or both the relief. One may be able to categorize rei vindicatio actions accordingly as per the prayer, but what is necessary to consider at this moment is the validity and the relevance of the aforementioned two grounds contained in the question of law.

As said before, though the Sinhala term used was 'අයිතිය ප්‍රකාශ කර ගැනීමේ නඩුවක්' or 'action for declaration of title,' it has been used with certain extracts in English taken from some decided cases, in the context, it appears that the learned District Judge used the said words to mean a rei vindicatio action. Even the judgment of the High Court when consider as a whole, indicates that it considered the case at hand as a rei vindicatio action, even though in confirming the lower court judgment it did not make any comment on the said Sinhala term the lower court used to name the case at hand. On the other hand, even if there is an error in identifying or naming the nature of the action, this court has to see whether it is sufficient to vacate or vary the order since if substantial rights are not affected this court need not interfere. In this regard, now this court will consider whether the court can grant the relief of ejectment without a prayer for declaration of title in a rei vindicatio action, where the title has been disputed but the title is proved at the end.

In Attanayake V Aladin (1997) 3 Sri L R 386 dismissal of the plaintiff's action by the district court was confirmed on the ground that there was no declaratory relief prayed as to the title and stating that prayer for ejectment is only a consequential relief to the declaratory relief, but it has not considered the decision of the same court made in T.B.Jayasinghe V Kiriwanegedara Tikiri Banda (1988) II CALR 24 in coming to the said conclusion which clearly held that where title to the property is proved, mere failure to ask for a declaration of title to the property will not prevent one from claiming relief of ejectment. Even Dharmasiri V Wickramatunga (2002) 2 Sri L R 218 has held that the absence in the prayer for a declaration of title cause no prejudice, if in the body of the plaint, the title is pleaded and issues were framed and accepted by the court on the title so pleaded. In the case at hand title has been pleaded in the plaint and there was an admission as to the flow of title from the original owner to the defendant and the first issue was raised to query whether the defendant sold the property to the plaintiff to show that the title at the end came to the plaintiff and the second issue was raised to show that the defendant was in possession of the property. Both those issues were answered in favour of the plaintiff and proved the plaintiff's entitlement for an ejectment of the defendant as supported by the decisions in T.B.Jayasinghe V Kiriwanegedara Tikiri Banda (supra) and Dharmasiri V Wickramatunga (supra).

In Pathirana V Jayasundara (1955) 58 N L R 169 at 172 Gratian J quoted Maasdorp to state that the plaintiff's ownership of the thing is the very essence of the rei vindicatio. In Luwis Singho and Others V Ponnamperuma (supra) it was held that in a rei vindicatio action the cause of action is based on the sole ground of violation of the right of ownership. Thus, if the title holder is deprived of the possession, he can file a rei vindicatio.

In terms of section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code an action means a proceeding for redress of a wrong. Such an action is constituted when an application to court is made for relief or remedy obtainable through the exercise of the court's power or authority, or otherwise invites its interference.[1] Further a cause of action means the wrong for the prevention or redress of which an action may be brought, and includes the denial of a right, the refusal to fulfill an obligation, the neglect to perform a duty and the infliction of an affirmative injury[2]. In the case at hand, the plaintiff prayed for a redress of a wrong caused by the possession of the defendant of the land which he states that he is entitled to possess as the owner. In terms of the section 188 of the said Code, after the judgment the court has to enter decree specifying the relief granted or other determinations of the actions, and in terms of section 217(c) and (g), such a decree among other things may include an order of court commanding to yield up possession of immovable property as well as a declaration of a right or status respectively. Each relief under section 217 of the said Code can be given as a separate relief. Thus, once the plaintiff's title to the land is proved and it is established that the possession is with the defendant, plaintiff is entitled to his relief. Mere misnomer, if any, of the action done by a judge, cannot disentitle the plaintiff of his right for the judgment in his favour to evict the defendant when he is successful in proving the necessary requisites of a rei vindicatio action. In my view, Attanayake V Aladin (supra) does not represent the correct position of law.

[1] Vide section 6 of the Civil Procedure Code.
[2] Vide section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Further, as per Hanaffi V Nallamma (1998) 1 Sri L R 73 , once the issues are raised the pleadings recede to the background. The issues raised by the plaintiff query whether the defendant sold the land to the plaintiff and whether the defendant is in unlawful possession causing damages. Therefore, what was put in issue by the plaintiff was his right to possession as per the contract of sale of the land between him and the defendant. The plaintiff successfully proved that it was sold to him and the defendant was in possession except the damage caused. The defendant failed in proving her case. Thus, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief given by the district court.

For the foregoing reasons, I answer the question of law in the negative and dismiss the appeal with costs.

The name of the Defendant in the original plaint is Abeydeera Arachchige Charlet Kamalawathie. But in the Petition of Appeal filed in this court it has been typed as Abeydeera Arachchige Violet Kamalawathie. I have, in this judgment, stated the name appearing in the original plaint.

I have read the draft judgment of His Lordship Justice Gamini Amarasekara. I agree with His Lordship when he decided to dismiss the appeal.

This is an appeal against the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court Kandy dated 14.12.2015. The learned District Judge by her judgment dated 31.10.2013, held the case in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff-Respondent). Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the learned District Judge, the Defendant-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant-Appellant) appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court Kandy. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court Kandy by their judgment dated 14.12.2015, affirmed the said judgment of the learned District Judge. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court, the Defendant-Appellant has appealed to this court. This court by its order dated 4.7.2018, granted leave to appeal on the following question of law.

"Whether the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court erred in law by failing to appreciate that the action filed by the Plaintiff is not an action for a declaration of title and without first praying for a declaration of title, the Plaintiff cannot seek for the ejectment of a defendant from the land?"

The facts of this case may be briefly summarized as follows. The Plaintiff-Respondent filed action in the District Court of Nuwara Eliya seeking the ejectment of the Defendant-Appellant from the land in question. The Defendant-Appellant filed answer seeking to dismiss the Plaintiff-Respondent's action; for a declaration that she is the owner of the land in question; and for a declaration that that Deed No.3008 is null and void. The Defendant-Appellant stated in her evidence that she did not sign the Deed No.3008. The Plaintiff-Respondent stated in his evidence that he became the owner of the land in question in terms of Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 attested by Edmond Rajapakshe Notary Public. One of the important questions that must be decided in this case is whether the Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1 attested by Edmond Rajapakshe Notary Public has been proved or not. The Plaintiff-Respondent stated in his evidence that the Defendant-Appellant signed Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1 attested by Edmond Rajapakshe Notary Public and transferred the land in question to him. The Defendant-Appellant stated in her evidence that she signed only blank papers but did not sign Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1. However, she accepts the position that she received a sum of Rs.200,000/- from the Plaintiff-Respondent at the time she placed her signature on blank papers. The learned District Judge has noted that the Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1 is a printed form and that her signature is also found near printed letters. I have examined the Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1 and it is a printed form and the words Charlet Abeydheera (written in Sinhala language) have been written in pen near the printed letters of the said Deed. Thus, the learned District Judge was correct when she made the above observation. The Defendant-Appellant has further stated in her evidence that the signature found in her proxy given to her own Attorney-at-law is not her signature but similar to her signature. This proxy was marked as P2. The learned District Judge has noted in her judgment that that words Charlet Abeydheera(written in Sinhala language) are found in the proxy. I have examined the proxy marked P2 and the above mentioned observation made by the learned District Judge, in my view, is correct. The learned District Judge after considering the totality of the evidence has, in her judgment, rejected the evidence of the Defendant-Appellant but relied on the evidence of the Plaintiff-Respondent.

The Plaintiff-Respondent, in his evidence, states that the Defendant-Appellant, two attending witnesses and Edmond Rajapakshe the Notary Public signed the Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1. One of the attesting witnesses in the Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1is Wamuni Wasimalay. The Plaintiff-Respondent called Wamuni Wasimalay. He, in his evidence, confirmed the signatures found in the Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1 and identified his signature and the signatures of Charlet Abeydheera (the executant of the Deed), Irsha one of the attesting witnesses and Edmond Rajapakshe the Notary Public. He further stated in his evidence that he knew the Defendant-Appellant for the last 25 to 30 years. Edmond Rajapakshe the Notary Public who attested the Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1 in his attestation has stated that he knew the two attesting witnesses and they (the two attesting witnesses) knew Charlet Abeydheera, the executant of the Deed.

Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance reads as follows.

> "If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the court and capable of giving evidence."

When I consider the above evidence and Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, I hold that the Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008 marked P1 has been proved in accordance with Section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance and that the learned District Judge was correct when she accepted the said Deed.

When I consider all the aforementioned matters, I hold that the title to the property in question has been proved and that the Plaintiff-Respondent has proved that he is the owner of the property in question.

The next question that must be considered is whether the Plaintiff-Respondent in this case could seek the ejectment of the Defendant-Appellant without a specific prayer for a declaration of title. I now advert to this question. In order to find an answer to this question it is necessary to consider certain judicial decisions. In the case of Jayasinghe Vs Tikiri Banda [1988] 2 CALR 24 Viknaraja J held that where title to the property has been proved, as in this case the fact that one had failed to ask for a declaration of title to the property will not prevent one from claiming the relief of ejectment.

In Dharmasiri Vs Wickramatunga [2002] 2 SLR 218 Weerasuriya J held that even though the plaintiff has not asked for a declaration of title it does not prevent him from seeking the relief for ejectment.

In the case of Pathirana Vs Jayasundara 58 NLR169 at page 172 Gratiaen J held as follows.

> "In a rei vindicatio action proper the owner of immovable property is entitled, on proof of his title, to a decree in his favour for the recovery of the property and for the ejectment of the person in wrongful occupation."

In an action of this nature (Plaintiff seeks the ejectment of the Defendant without a specific prayer for a declaration of title), if it is established that the Plaintiff is the owner of the property in question, it becomes the duty of the Judge to declare that the Plaintiff is the owner of the property in question. This duty of the Judge cannot be obstructed by action or non-action of the parties. Thus, the failure on the part of the Plaintiff to state a prayer in the plaint for a declaration of title to the property in question does not and cannot prevent the Judge from declaring that the Plaintiff is the owner of the property in question when the Plaintiff's title to the property in question has been established at the trial. If the court fails to follow the above observation, then the Plaintiff will have to file another action for a declaration of title. If that is so, the principle enunciated by Sansoni CJ in the case of H.A.M. Cassim Vs Government Agent Batticaloa in 69 NLR 403 that 'there must be finality in litigation' would be violated. Considering the above observation and the legal literature, I hold that in an action for ejectment of the defendant from the property in question, once the plaintiff's title is proved, he (the plaintiff) is entitled to ask for ejectment of the defendant from the property in question even though there is no prayer in the plaint for a declaration of title.

In the present case, the Plaintiff-Respondent in the body of the plaint has pleaded his title to the property in question and the issue No.1 at the trial was whether the Defendant-Appellant, by the Deed No.3008 dated 5.5.2008, transferred the property in question to the Plaintiff-Respondent. The learned District Judge has answered this issue in the affirmative. When I consider the evidence led at the trial, I hold that the above decision of the learned District Judge is correct and that the Plaintiff-Respondent is the owner of the property in question.

For the above reasons, I answer the question of law raised in this case in the negative.

For the aforementioned reasons, I hold that the learned District Judge was correct when she decided the case in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent and that the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court were correct when they dismissed the appeal of the Defendant-Appellant. I therefore affirming the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court dismiss this appeal of the Defendant-Appellant with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

This Appeal arises from the Order of the Civil Appellate High Court of the Central Province holden in Kandy dated 30.07.2013. By the said Order, the Civil Appellate High Court ("the High Court") refused to grant Leave to Appeal and dismissed the Leave to Appeal Application filed in the High Court, challenging the Order made by the District Court of Nuwara Eliya dated 26.02.2013.

On 23.07.2014, this Court granted Leave to Appeal to the Plaintiff-Petitioner-Appellant, upon the said Order of the High Court on the following two Questions of Law:

I. Have their Lordships of the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law by failing to recognize the legal principle enunciated in the case of Ramachandran and Another; Anandasiva and Another vs Hatton National Bank 2006 [1] SLR 393, that property liable to be sold under the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act No. 4 of 1990 as amended is limited to the property mortgaged by the borrower himself and it would exclude the property mortgaged by a third party on behalf of the actual borrower/ debtor?

II. Have their Lordships of the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law by failing to consider that the Certificate of Sale does not transfer any title to the subject land from the plaintiff to the defendant under and in terms of Section 29 (N) (1) of the Peoples' Bank Act as amended?

The Plaintiff- Petitioner- Appellant ("the Plaintiff / Appellant") filed a "Land Case" against the Defendant-Respondent-Respondent ("the Defendant/ Defendant bank") in the District Court of Nuwara Eliya on 11.02.2013 seeking inter alia a declaration of title to six lots of land ("the land") more fully referred to in the plaint filed in the said case and to restrain the Defendant bank from evicting the Plaintiff and other persons occupying the said land under him and thereby taking possession of the said land, by way of an Enjoining Order, Interim Injunction and a Permanent Injunction. The Plaintiff also sought a declaration from Court that the Certificate of Sale dated 14.07.2010 annexed to the plaint is null and void and /or voidable and moved for an order to quash such Certificate of Sale.

The learned Judge of the District Court of Nuwara Eliya having heard Counsel for the Plaintiff rejected the application for issuance of an Enjoining Order as well as notice of Interim Injunction for reasons stated in the Order therein and only issued summons on the Defendant bank returnable on a given date.

Being aggrieved by the said Order, the Plaintiff went before the High Court in a Leave to Appeal application and the High Court refused to grant Leave to Appeal to the Plaintiff and dismissed the application. Thus, the Plaintiff is now before this Court having obtained Leave to Appeal on the two Questions of Law referred to earlier.

Prior to discussing the Questions of Law raised before this Court, I wish to look at the chequered history albeit brief which instrumented the Plaintiff to file this action in the District Court of Nuwara Eliya as revealed by the pleadings and documents filed before this Court.

1. The Plaintiff Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi is the Chairman and Managing Director of Yasodha Holdings (Pvt) Limited, a member of the Yasodha Group of Companies and was the lawful owner of the six lots of land, "the land" more fully referred to in the plaint.

2. In or around the years 1994 and 1995, the said Yasodha Holdings (Pvt) Limited ("Yasodha Holdings") obtained many banking facilities from the Defendant bank on several mortgage bonds executed, which were secured by the Plaintiff by pledging the six lots of land referred to earlier.

3. Yasodha Holdings failed to repay the monies due to the Defendant bank on the facilities obtained and on 10.07.1997 the Defendant bank adopted a resolution in terms of section 29D of the People Bank Act No. 29 of 1961 as amended, to sell by public auction 'the land' mortgaged by the Plaintiff in order to recover the monies due to the Defendant bank from Yasodha Holdings.

4. Yasodha Holdings challenged the said resolution by way of a Writ Application in the Court of Appeal. The principle ground of challenge was that the resolution was ultra vires as it related to a third party mortgage. The said Writ Application bearing No. 1268/98 was dismissed by a Divisional Bench of three Judges of the Court of Appeal on 29.02.2008.

5. Being aggrieved by the said Court of Appeal judgement, Yasodha Holdings then came before this Court by way of a Special Leave to Appeal application bearing No. SC/SPL/LA 60/2008 and on 03.12.2008 the Supreme Court refused to grant

Special Leave to Appeal to Yasodha Holdings and dismissed the said Special Leave to Appeal application.

6. Whilst the above stated Writ Application filed by Yasodha Holdings was pending before the Court of Appeal, the Defendant bank resorted to execute the mortgage bonds by way of filing a regular action dated 09.07.2007 in the Commercial High Court of Colombo. According to the Defendant bank, such a course of action was initiated in order to overcome the period of prescription with regard to filling an action upon a mortgage bond.

7. Consequent to the Supreme Court rejecting the Application No. SC/SPL/LA/60/08 filed by Yasodha Holdings for Special Leave to Appeal against the judgement of the above said Court of Appeal Writ Application bearing No.1268/98 on 03.12.2008, the Defendant bank proceeded with the summery procedure by publishing notice to sell by public auction the land referred to in the resolution dated 10.07.1997. The position of the Defendant bank was that by rejection of the Special Leave to Appeal application, the Supreme Court, upheld the Court of Appeal judgement that the resolution was a valid resolution in the eyes of the law and capable of execution.

8. On 25.03.2009, Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi, the Managing Director of Yasodha Holdings (the same appellant before this Court), challenged the above said course of action of the Defendant bank, by going before the Court of Appeal in yet another Writ Application bearing No.188/09. The main grievance of Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi before the Court of Appeal was that the Defendant bank, having resorted to regular action by filling an action before the Commercial High Court to adjudicate the dispute between the parties cannot usurp and nullify the judicial process already initiated in filling regular action by proceeding with the summary procedure and moving to parate execute, “the land” mortgaged by him, a third party, and to sell by public auction the said land, to recover the monies due from Yasodha Holdings to the Defendant bank.

9. On 15.06.2009, the said Writ Application bearing No. 188/09 was supported before the Court of Appeal for granting of notice and interim relief by the learned Counsel for Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi. The Defendant bank strenuously objected to the application filed on the ground that it was a blatant attempt to challenge and assault the same resolution which was upheld as a valid resolution by the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court through the due process of law.

10. The Court of Appeal having reserved Order, thereafter granted notice only and refrained from granting interim relief as prayed for in the Writ Application. It is observed, although an interim order was not issued by the Court of Appeal restraining the sale of the land, the Defendant bank did not proceed with the sale on the scheduled date.

11. Consequent to filling its objections to the said Writ Application bearing No. 188/09, the Defendant bank proceeded with the summary procedure and re-fixed the sale for 07.11.2009. At that stage, Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi once again moved court for interim relief against the said sale and the Court of Appeal on 05.11.2009 granted an interim order as prayed for by Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi staying the impugned sale of the land fixed for 07.11.2009.

12. Being aggrieved by the said interim order, the Defendant bank came before this Court in a Special Leave to Appeal application, bearing No. SC/SPL/LA 294/2009, and on 11.02.2010, this Court granted Special Leave to Appeal to the Defendant bank with regard to the issuance of the above said interim order by the Court of Appeal restraining the Defendant bank from proceeding with the auction sale of the land in issue.

13. Thereafter, the said Special Leave to Appeal application, now bearing SC/Appeal No. 11/2010 was heard before this Court and on 09.07.2010, the Supreme Court allowed the Appeal and set aside the Court of Appeal Order and permitted the Defendant bank to proceed with the sale of the land by public auction.

14. Consequent to same, on 14.07.2010, the Defendant bank auctioned the mortgaged land and there being no bidders purchased the said land as signified by the Certificate of Sale annexed to the proceedings.

15. Thereafter, on 11.01.2011, the Defendant bank filed an action in the District Court of Colombo bearing No. DLM 10/2011 against Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi, (the Plaintiff in the instant case) moving for a Direction of Court, by virtue of section 29P of the People's Bank Act, to evict the said Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi and others occupying the land in issue under him and to take possession of the land purchased by the Defendant bank.

16. On 31.01.2012, Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi filed objections to the said case before the District Court of Colombo and the case proceeded inter partes.

17. Whilst the above case was progressing in the District Court of Colombo, the Plaintiff, Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi filed the instant "Land Case" bearing No.1633/L before the District Court of Nuwara Eliya seeking a declaration of title to the very same land and moving for restrainment of the Defendant bank, by way of an Enjoining Order, an Interim Injunction and a Permanent Injunction.

18. The District Court of Nuwara Eliya did not grant the Enjoining Order or notice of Interim Injunction restraining the Defendant bank from evicting the Plaintiff Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi and the Plaintiff filed a Leave to Appeal application against the said Order in the High Court of Kandy. That application was also rejected by the High Court and dismissed with costs, which culminated in the present appeal to this Court.

Hence, the Appellant Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi is now before this Court challenging the very same resolution upheld by this Court, in a subtle manner.

From the foregoing multitude of cases filed, it is amply demonstrated,

- that the land morefully referred to in the resolution dated 10.07.1997 to be parate executed was sold by public auction consequent to the judgement of the Supreme Court in case No. SC/Appeal 11/2010 dated 09.07.2010 wherein this Court permitted the Defendant bank to proceed with the sale;

- that thereafter, by virtue of the provisions of the Peoples' Bank Act, the Defendant bank went before the District Court of Colombo on the Certificate of Sale issued in its favour to obtain an eviction order against Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi from possessing the said land;

- that whilst the said case was pending, Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi went before the District Court of Nuwara Eliya praying for a declaration of title to the very same land and also to restrain the Defendant bank from dispossessing him and the District Court refused the said application for an Order of restrainment; and

- the High Court refused to grant leave and dismissed the Leave to Appeal application filed against the Order of the District Court.

It is observed that the High Court dismissed the Leave to Appeal application on three main grounds.

Firstly,

Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi, is not entitled to and estopped in challenging the resolution dated 10.07.1997 in any manner, as the Supreme Court, being the apex court of the country has settled the validity and legality of the said resolution.

Secondly,

The instant case has been filed by Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi in order to negate or delay the process contemplated by law, and being very well aware that the Defendant bank has filed action in the District Court of Colombo based on the Certificate of Sale and its entitlement to obtain possession of the said land by virtue of the provisions of the law.

Thirdly,

Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi, has failed to establish a prima facie case and no justifiable ground exist to interfere with the Order of the learned District Judge.

Having referred to the background, history, facts and circumstances which culminated in the Appellant filing a land case in the District Court of Nuwara Eliya which paved the way for the Appellant to come before this Court once again, I would now examine the first ground referred to by the learned judges of the High Court in refusing to entertain the Leave to Appeal application filed in the High Court, namely the appellant is estopped in challenging the validity and legality of the resolution dated 10.07.1997.

As correctly held by The High Court, this Court in SC Appeal 11/2010 (stemming from Court of Appeal Writ Application bearing No. 188/09) now reported as Peoples' Bank and Seven others v Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi [2010] 1 SLR page 227 at page 235 observed as follows:

"The main issue in this case which was the validity of the Parate Resolution dated 10.07.2010 was raised in the Writ Application 1268/98 and the Court of Appeal by its decision dated 29.02.2008 held the Resolution was valid and refused a Writ of Certiorari to quash the said Resolution. The Supreme Court on the 03.12.2008 denied Leave to Appeal against the judgement of the Court of Appeal. Therefore, the resolution dated 10.07.1997 has been determined conclusively to be valid and executable by the decision of this Court on 03.12.2008. This is final and conclusive and cannot be reviewed and / or rescinded by any other Court."

In the said judgement, this Court considered the main argument put forward that whilst the Petitioner in CA 1268/98 (the 1st writ application) was the company Yasodha Holdings, in CA 188/09 (the 2nd writ application) the Petitioner was not the company but Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi the Managing Director of the company, who was not a party to the 1st writ application but a separate individual who mortgaged his land to the Defendant bank and thus, a third party in the eyes of the law and the matter revolved around a 3rd party mortgage, and went onto observe as follows:

"The Petitioner – Respondent (i.e Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi) is the same Chairman / Managing Director of the Company Yasodha Holdings and the Company is fully owned and controlled by Petitioner-Respondent (i.e Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi). All the benefits from the Company accrue to Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi and his family. Despite the corporate veil, the Company Yasodha Holdings and Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi are in fact one and the same entity and represent the same interest. Clearly this was the pith and substance of the finding of the Court of Appeal" (page 236)

> "Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi cannot be considered as a third party against the Company Yasodha Holding.[ ] the judgement of this Court in SC/ SPL/ LA 60/2008 [CA Appeal 1268/98] acts as a complete bar to a proceeding by the same party which once again seeks to question the validity of the Parate Resolution dated 10.07.1997 [ ] in light of the judgement of this Court in SC(SPL)LA 60/2008, the later application in CA/ Writ 188/99 cannot also succeed in view of the principle of 'collateral estoppel' whereby a party is barred re-litigating an issue already finally determined against such party in an earlier decision". (page 237) (emphasis added)

Thus, it is observed that in the instant case, the High Court correctly relied upon the ratio decidendi of the afore said judgement of this Court in SC/Appeal 11/2010, in holding that the legality and validity of the Resolution dated 10.07.1997 cannot be impugned nor can it be challenged on any ground or on any basis, before any Court.

It is further observed in the instant case, the High Court correctly analyzed and came to the finding that there was no merit in the contention of the Petitioner (Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi) that the learned District Judge erred in its Order by following the decision in Hatton National Bank v. Jayawardhana and others [2007] 1 SLR 181 instead of the decision in Ramachandran and another v. Hatton National Bank [2006] 1 SLR 393, based on the above reasoning and finding of the High Court, which is that the Petitioner cannot and is estopped in challenging before the District Court the Resolution dated 10.07.1997, since the Petitioner Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi has already canvassed the said Resolution before the Supreme Court in an earlier instance and has not been successful and thus, legally not entitled to attack the said decision once again. In my view, the afore said reasoning of the learned High Court Judges is legally valid and correct and cannot be faulted.

Hence, I see no reason to interfere with the Order of the High Court on the said ground too.

As discussed earlier, consequent to the sale of the land and issuance of the Certificate of Sale, the Defendant bank filed action in the District Court of Colombo on 11.01.2011, to evict Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi. Prior to the said case coming to a final conclusion, Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi co-laterally challenged and filed the instant land case, in the District Court of Nuwara Eliya on 11.02.2013. Eight long years have already passed and still the said case is at summons returnable stage. Hence, I am of the view that the finding of the learned Judges of the High Court was correct, when holding, that the Appellant filed the case in the District Court of Nuwara Eliya only to negate and delay the process begun by the Defendant bank in resorting to the due process of law as clearly laid down in the Peoples' Bank Act, and by going before the District Court of Colombo to evict the Appellant from the land more fully referred to in the Certificate of Sale.

Similarly, the finding of the High Court that the Appellant has also failed to establish a prima facie case against the Defendant bank, in order to obtain interim relief from the District Court of Nuwara Eliya is also ex-facie correct and cannot be faulted, for the reasons already discussed in this judgement.

Therefore, upon the said ground too, I see no reason to interfere with the Order made by the High Court in refusing to grant Leave to Appeal to the Plaintiff, on the Order made by the District Court of Nuwara Eliya dated 26.02.2013.

The Law Courts of Sri Lanka have been structured for administration of justice and the primary object of a judicial officer is to dispense justice to the citizenry who come before courts, without fear or favour and in terms of the Rule of Law. This does not mean that the citizenry are given the freedom of the wild ass to abuse the said process, at their whim and fancy and attack and challenge the statutory process by filling multiple actions before numerous courts, in the length and breadth of Sri Lanka.

In the instant matter, the Supreme Court has twice over in SC/SPL/LA 60/2008 and in SC/Appeal 11/2010 categorically upheld;

- that the resolution dated 10.07.1997, is legal and valid and is enforceable in law,
- such decision is final and conclusive and cannot be reviewed and/or rescinded by any other court; and
- the parties are estopped in collaterally challenging the said decision of the Supreme Court.

In terms of the Resolution dated 10.07.1997 (issued more than two decades ago) the land has now been sold. A Certificate of Sale has been issued. By virtue of the provisions of the Peoples' Bank Act, an action has been filed to evict the occupiers of the land. In such a background, the Appellant filling a 'Land Case' to obtain a declaration of title and in the interim, restraining order, in my view is not in good faith and tantamount to an abuse of the process of the law. Such action is reeling with bad taste. It is not an instance of coming to court with clean hands. Hence, the course of action resorted to by the Plaintiff, in my view, is with an ulterior motive. It is to de-rail and delay the actions initiated by the Defendant bank in accordance with the provisions laid down in the Peoples' Bank Act.

The District Court and the High Court has quite correctly refused to issue a restraining order, by way of an Enjoining Order or an Interim Injunction or even notice of an Interim Injunction against the Defendant bank.

This Court too, did not issue any Interim Orders, although Leave to Appeal was granted on 23.07.2014.

The scope of this appeal is very limited. The Appellant is before this Court only to obtain an Order of Restrainment, an issuance of an Enjoining Order and/or notice of Interim Injunction. There is no substantive relief prayed for from this Court.

Hence, I see no merit in this appeal. The Appellant has failed to show any good ground or reason to set aside the Orders of the High Court and the District Court. Similarly, the Appellant has failed to substantiate the relief prayed for in the Petition of Appeal, in order for this Court to issue an Enjoining Order and/or notice of Interim Injunction.

Therefore, based on the factual matrix discussed in this case, I am of the view that the appeal should stand dismissed.

Nevertheless, this Court granted Leave to Appeal to the Appellant on two questions of law in this application. Hence, I would now move onto consider the said questions referred to in full at the beginning of this judgement.

The 1st Question of Law relates to the failure of the High Court to recognize the legal principles enunciated in the case of Ramachandran and another, Anandasiva and another v. Hatton National Bank which is reported in [2006] 1 SLR at page 39, pertaining to third party mortgages. (herein after referred to as "Ramachandran v. HNB case")

In the above referred Ramachandran v. HNB case, a Divisional Bench of this Court by a majority decision held that the property liable to be sold under the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act No 4 of 1990 as amended, is limited to the property mortgaged by the borrower himself and it would exclude the property mortgaged by a third party on behalf of the actual borrower/debtor.

In the said case, the sureties of a loan came before Court challenging the resolution adopted by the bank to sell by public auction, the land referred to in the surety bond and the Court held that the said land cannot be sold under the afore maintained Act No 4 of 1990 as it was mortgaged not by the borrower but by a third party and more so as the said third party is completely unaware of the borrowers acts and has no access to the bank or to the information pertaining to the monies paid by the borrower or the sum in default, whereas a borrower who has continuous transactions with the bank is very much aware of the amount paid and the sum in default.

It is observed that in the instant case, although the learned Judges of the High Court, in its Order did not refer, analyze and examine in detail the findings of the aforesaid Ramachandran v. HNB case, it heavily relied on the decisions of the apex court pertaining to the validity and legality of the Resolution dated 10.07.1997.

Hence, at this juncture, I wish to look at the "said decisions of the apex court" in greater detail.

As discussed earlier in this judgement, this Court in the case of Peoples' Bank V. Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi SC/APP 11/2010 S.C. minutes 09.07.2010, now reported in [2010] 1 SLR 227 categorically held, that the judgement of this Court in SC /SPL/ LA 60/2008 stemming from CA App 1268/98, namely, Yasodha Holdings V. Peoples' Bank, act as a complete bar to a proceeding by the same parties to attack and challenge the very same Resolution.

In SC/SPL/LA 60/2008 referred above, this Court dismissed the Leave to Appeal application filed by Yasodha Holdings and upheld the judgement in CA/1268/98, the judgement of a three judge bench of the Court of Appeal, given in favour of the Defendant bank.

Hence, I wish to delve into the said Court of Appeal judgement bearing no. CA 1268/98, in greater detail now.

In the said Court of Appeal judgement, CA 1268/98, the Court exhaustively considered the Ramachandran v. HNB case (supra) as well as the judgement in Hatton National Bank v. Samathapala Jayawardhana and two others SC/CHC/Appeal 06/2006 of S.C minutes 11.07.2007 (now reported as Hatton National Bank v. Jayawardhana [2007] 1 SLR 181), and came to the following finding:

> "Yasodha Holdings, the Petitioner in the said case cannot claim that the mortgage of the property of Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi which secured facilities from the respondent bank falls within the category of 'third party mortgages' (vide page 12 of the Court of Appeal judgement) Yasodha Holdings v. Peoples' Bank CA 1268/98 decided on 29.02.2008.

In the aforesaid CA 1268/98 judgement, the Court of Appeal examined the four mortgage bonds wherein Yasodha Holdings and Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi are referred to as the 'obligor' and 'mortgagor' respectively and the said 'obligor' and the 'mortgagor' requested the Peoples' Bank to lend and advance monies and grant accommodation and facilities to the 'obligor' Yasodha Holdings, and the 'obligor' in consideration thereof mortgaged as security the properties owned by the 'mortgagor' Yasairi Kasturiarachchi in his personal capacity.

The Court of Appeal also considered the significance of the signatories to the mortgage bonds, namely Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi and J. Kasturiarachchi being Directors of Yasodha Holdings and Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi on his own volition being the 'mortgagor' together with the specific reference given to the said wording in the attestation clause of the Notary Public.

The Court of Appeal in its well-reasoned out judgement went onto refer to the following facts:

- that Yasodha Holding is a family concern;
- that there are only three share-holders in the said Company, Yasodha Holdings, namely Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi, his brother Jagath

Kasturiarachchi and Yasasiri Kasturiarachchis' wife Udayangana Kasturiarachchi, each holding one share each;

- that the said three shareholders are also the only Directors of the Company;
- that Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi is the Chairman and Managing Director of the Company; and
- that the Company was incorporated on 30.03.1992 and within 18 months the impugned mortgage bonds were executed to obtain financial facilities running into millions by mortgaging the property of Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi.

Thus, the Court of Appeal came to the finding that Yasasairi Kasturiarachchi cannot be treated as a 'third party', as per the ratio decidendi of Ramachandran v. HNB case.

Furthermore, in order to arrive at its decision, the Court of Appeal extensively relied upon another judgement of the Supreme Court, namely the case of Hatton National Bank v. Jayawardhana (supra). In the said case, this Court held that the two Respondents therein, (Husband and Wife) cannot hide behind the veil of incorporation of the Company Nalin Enterprises (Pvt) Limited and referred to the Directors being the alter ego of the company. In the said case, the 1st Respondent (husband) was the Managing Director of Nalin Enterprise and the second Respondent (wife) was the other sole Director of Nalin Enterprise (pvt) limited and the Court held that in an appropriate circumstance, the court can lift the veil of incorporation.

Thus, the Court of Appeal in CA 1268/98, having referred to the above propositions, a number of landmark English authorities on Company Law and the correspondence Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi had with the Defendant bank, unreservedly went onto hold, that Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi cannot claim that he is a third party and rely upon the judgement of Ramachandran v. HNB, to evade responsibility.

Thus, it could be seen that the Court of Appeal, in its unanimous judgement exhaustively looked into all aspects of 3rd party mortgagers and came to the conclusion that the Resolution dated 10.07.1997 is legal and valid and enforceable.

This judgement was upheld by the Supreme Court by dismissing the Special Leave to Appeal application filed by Yasodha Holdings, in SC/SPL/LA 60/2008 as already adverted to and in SC/Appeal 11/2010, upholding that the Resolution was final and conclusive and unequivocally and without any ambiguity holding that the Resolution cannot be reviewed and/ or rescinded and / or challenged collaterally.

I see no reason to deviate from such finding. The circumstances of this intricate and interwoven case is such that the Court could and the Court should lift the veil of incorporation and ascertain the true identity of the person behind the scene, is it an innocent 3rd party or a not so innocent party, in order to mete out justice and come to a correct finding as to who the actual borrower or the debtor is.

Thus, I am of the view, that the High Court did not err in law in coming to its findings and correctly relied on the 'decisions of the apex court' and dismissed the Leave to Appeal application filed therein.

Further the said decisions of the apex court, although not specifically mentioned by the Learned Judges of the High Court, SC/Appeal 11/2010 and SC/SPL/LA 60/2008 stemming from CA 1268/98 clearly and precisely considered the legal principles enunciated in the Divisional Bench decision in Ramachandran v. HNB and came to the correct finding that the property mortgaged by Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi does not fall within the four corners of a third party mortgage. The High Court categorically held that on the strength of the Resolution dated 10.07.1997, the legality of which was confirmed by the Supreme Court, that the Plaintiff-Petitioner Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi i.e. the Appellant before this Court, has not established a prima facie case against the Defendant bank to obtain relief from the said court and dismissed the Leave to Appeal application filed therein with costs fixed at Rs. 25,000/=.

Thus, I am of the view, that the learned Judges of the High Court correctly came to the finding, that the property of Yasasiri Kasturiarachchi liable to be sold under the provisions of the Peoples' Bank Act, cannot be excluded as a 3rd party mortgage as adverted to by the Appellant and no Restrainment Order can be obtained to prevent evicting the Appellant from the impugned property. Hence, the High Court correctly refrained from issuing a Restrainment Order as prayed for by the Appellant.

In the aforesaid circumstance, I answer the 1st Question of Law raised before this Court in the negative.

The 2nd Question of Law relates to the Certificate of Sale and passing of title to the Defendant bank.

In my view, an answer to this question does not arise in this case as the District Court and the High Court did not consider nor examine this issue.

As discussed earlier in this judgement, the scope of this appeal is very limited. It only pertains to issuance of Restraining Orders, specifically, an Enjoining Order until the final determination of the Interim Injunction Inquiry and notice of Interim Injunction on the Defendant bank.

The Appellant has not sought any substantive relief from this Court. The District Court has only issued summons on the Defendant bank. The matters pertaining to Certificate of Sale and passing of title of the properties will have to be first determined by the relevant District Court.

In the said circumstance, an answer to the 2nd Question of Law raised before this Court in my view, does not arise.

Therefore, for reasons more fully adumbrated in this judgement, the appeal of the Plaintiff- Petitioner- Appellant is dismissed. The Order of the Civil Appellant High Court holden in Kandy dated 30.07.2013 and the Order to the District Court of Nuwara Eliya dated 26.02.2013 is affirmed.

The appeal is dismissed with costs fixed at Rs. 500,000/=.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent-Respondent instituted this action in the District Court of Homagama to partition the land called Mahawatte containing in extent 3 Bushels paddy sowing more fully described in the schedule to the plaint dated 7th April 1981.

A Preliminary Plan No. 1445 dated 26th January 1982 (P3A) was prepared by Sena Iddamalgoda, Licensed Surveyor where the extent of the corpus was specified as R.3 P. 31.

A second Preliminary Plan No. 400 dated 24th December 1982 (P4A) was prepared by Mervin Samaranayake, Licensed Surveyor where the extent of the corpus was specified as A.2 R.1 P. 5.7. The increase in extent was as a result of the 7th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent-Respondent insisting that a larger portion of land should be surveyed. The extra portion of land in extent R.3 P.5.7 is marked as Lot 3 in P4A. The Survey Report (P4B) states that Miriyagallage Don Obious Singho, Henadheerage Gnanawathie, Henadheerage Emis Singho and Henadhirage Johanis Singho made claims to Lot 3 before the surveyor.

On or before 29th July 1987 the original case record was destroyed by fire and a new case record was reconstructed on 12th July 1988.

At the commencement of the trial, parties reached a settlement which was duly approved by the learned District Judge by judgment dated 24th April 2003. Aggrieved by the said judgment, 15th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent-Respondent appealed to the Court of Appeal which set aside the judgment and directed the learned District Judge to enter judgment strictly according to the terms of settlement entered between parties. Accordingly judgment (P13) and interlocutory decree (P14) was entered on 19th October 2010.

On 15th November 2013 the Petitioner-Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as "Appellant") filed an application in the District Court of Homagama seeking to set aside the interlocutory decree and to be permitted to enter into the case and file a statement of claim. The Appellant contended that although his father Henadheerage Emis Singho and sister Henadheerage Gnanawathie made claims to Lot 3 in Preliminary Plan No. 400 (P4A), they were not aware whether this land was included as part of the corpus and that the Appellant only became aware that it was so included when the surveyor came to the land to block out on 12th November 2013. The learned District Judge dismissed the application.

Thereafter the Appellant invoked the revisionary jurisdiction of the High Court (Civil Appeal) Western Province holden at Avissawella seeking to set aside the judgment and interlocutory decree and to be permitted to enter into the case and make a claim. This application was dismissed and hence this appeal.

Leave to Appeal has been granted on the following questions of law:

(i) Was the said judgment of the High Court (Civil Appeal) Western Province holden at Avissawella contrary to law and against the submission made?

(ii) Whether the High Court (Civil Appeal) Western Province holden at Avissawella erred in law when it decided that the Petitioner has failed to establish that the Court defaulted to serve him notice due to failing to tender the journal entries from 1981 to 1988, which has been destroyed due to fire, and to ascertain whether the Court had failed to issue notice on the Petitioner in terms of Section 20 of Partition Law, in the absence of any journal entry which is beyond the control of the Petitioner which does not permit the Court to conclude that the Petitioner had failed to establish the fact that he was not served the notices by Courts?

(iii) Whether the High Court (Civil Appeal) Western Province holden at Avissawella erred in law when it decided that the Petitioner has failed to establish that the Court has defaulted to issue notice since Kalupahanage Shanthilatha had been made the 15th Defendant of the case as a result of the claim she made before the Commissioner who made the Preliminary Survey dated 1st October 1982 marked "P3A"?

(iv) Whether the High Court (Civil Appeal) Western Province holden at Avissawella failed to consider the statutory provisions given in the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977 to add a party to a pending case as set out in Sections 18(1), 21(a), 21(b) and 69(1)(b) of the Partition Act?

The learned counsel for the Appellant after citing several authorities submitted that although section 48 of the Partition Law invests interlocutory and final decrees entered under the Partition Law with finality, the revisionary powers of the appellate courts are left unaffected when there is a fundamental vice in the proceeding resulting in a miscarriage of justice. In particular reliance was placed on the decision in Somawathie v. Madawela and Others [(1983) 2 SLR 15].

In seeking to establish a miscarriage of justice, the learned counsel for the Appellant relies heavily on the provisions in section 20(1) of the Partition Law which reads:

> "20(1) The Court shall order notice of a partition action to be sent by registered post -
>
> (a) to every claimant (not being a party to the action) who is mentioned in the report of the surveyor under subsection (1) of Section 18; and
> (b) to every person disclosed under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) of Section 19 by a defendant in the action."

It is contended that the Appellant did not receive any notice in terms of these provisions and as a result his rights have been affected.

Notice in terms of these provisions should be sent only to claimants mentioned in the report of the surveyor or to a person disclosed by a defendant under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) of section 19. However, neither of the two surveyor reports (P3B) (P4B) mentions the Appellant as a claimant to the land surveyed. Furthermore, none of the defendants have disclosed the Appellant under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) of Section 19. Accordingly, I hold that the Appellant is not entitled to be noticed in terms of section 20(1) of the Partition Law.

The fundamental proposition sought to be established by the Appellant is that he did not receive notice in terms of section 20 of the Partition Law. For the reasons given above, he is not entitled to such notice.

In any event, there is nothing in the evidence before Court to indicate that the District Court failed to give effect to section 20 of the Partition Law. The burden of establishing any such failure is upon the Appellant as it is he who asserts. This he has failed to do. I will now examine this aspect in greater detail.

It is true that his father Henadheerage Emis Singho and sister Henadheerage Gnanawathie made claims before the surveyor to the corpus. However, the claim made by the Appellant to the corpus is not based on paternal inheritance. He claims upon deeds bearing Nos. 24440 (P19) and 1916 (P20).

The two vendors of deed no. 24440 (P19) are Miriyagallage Don Obious Singho and Miriyagallage Karunadasa and it has been executed on 26th September 1984 which is two years after Miriyagallage Don Obious Singho made a claim before the surveyor. There is nothing on record to indicate that Obious Singho had made any application alleging lack of notice. Miriyagallage Karunadasa never made a claim before the surveyor to the land surveyed.

The vendor of deed no. 1916 (P20) is Miriyagallage Don Saveriyel and it was executed on 25th October 1992. However, Don Saveriyel did not make any claim before the surveyor.

Although the father of the Appellant, Henadheerage Emis Singho also made a claim before the surveyor to the corpus, there is no evidence of any claim made by him of any lack of notice until his death on 22nd March 1993 (P36).

More importantly the Survey Report (P4B) states that Henadheerage Gnanawathie, sister of the Appellant, also made a claim to Lot 3 before the surveyor. However, she has not made any application to the District Court claiming that she was not noticed in terms of section 20 of the Partition Law.

Since the record was destroyed by fire, the next best evidence of the alleged failure on the part of the District Court to comply with section 20 of the Partition Law would have been the evidence of Gnanawathie that she was not duly noticed as required by law. Nevertheless, the Appellant has failed to provide any evidence from Gnanwathie with his application to the District Court although he claimed before the High Court (Civil Appeal) Western Province holden at Avissawella that Gnanawathie also resides on the land depicted in Preliminary Plan no. 400 (P4A).

One of the questions of law for determination includes a reference to section 69(1)(b) of the Partition Law. However, that has no application since the Appellant sought to be added as a party after the judgment was delivered.

Accordingly, I answer the questions of law (i), (ii) and (iv) in the negative. Question of law (iii) does not arise for determination in view of the answers given to the other questions of law.

For the aforesaid reasons, I affirm the judgment of the High Court (Civil Appeal) Western Province holden at Avissawella dated 18th December 2014 and the judgment and interlocutory decree dated 19th October 2010 of the learned District Judge of Homagama and dismiss the appeal. Registrar is directed to take steps accordingly.

The Substituted Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent-Respondent is entitled to his costs in this Court as well as in the High Court (Civil Appeal) Western Province holden at Avissawella.

The Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent (Respondent) instituted this action in the District Court of Kuliyapitiya for the partition of the land called Nelligahamula Watta alias Parahena alias Parawatta containing in extent A.2 R.2 P.8. There is no dispute between the parties as to the identity of the corpus. It is admitted that the corpus is more fully depicted in preliminary plan No. 3524 dated 21.03.1997 (X) prepared by licensed surveyor R.B. Navaratne.

Parties are also in agreement that Punchi Banda Ratnayake was allotted this land by partition decree in case No. 1553/P of District Court of Kurunegala dated 02.03.1972. The dispute revolves on the pedigree pleaded by the Respondent and the Defendant-Respondent-Appellant (Appellant).

According to the Respondent, Punchi Banda Ratnayake transferred an undivided one acre of the corpus to the Respondent by deed No. 3223 (P2) dated 15.03.1995 attested by R.K.R.F.J. Caldera, Notary Public. It is further contended that Punchi Banda Ratnayake died issueless on 24.09.1995 and therefore his brothers, sisters and their heirs, including the Appellant, succeeded to the balance portion of the corpus on intestate succession.

The Appellant on the contrary contends that Punchi Banda Ratnayake executed two deeds of transfer in favour of the Appellant, namely deed No. 5401 dated 21.09.1977 (4V3) for a divided one acre of the corpus and deed No. 908 dated 11.11.1980 (4V4) for a further undivided 1 ½ acre of the corpus. Alternatively, the Appellant contends that he has acquired prescriptive title to the corpus and sought a dismissal of the partition action.

The learned District Judge held that the paper title claimed by the Appellant lost priority to the paper title claimed by the Respondent since the two deeds relied on by the Appellant, namely deed No. 5401 dated 21.09.1977 (4V3) and deed No. 908 dated 11.11.1980 (4V4), were not registered in the correct folio in the land registry whereas deed No. 3223 (P2) relied on by the Respondent was registered in a folio which was connected to the folio in which the final decree in case No. 1553/P of District Court of Kurunegala was registered.

However, the learned District Judge concluded that the Appellant had prescribed to the corpus and dismissed the partition action.

The Respondent appealed to the High Court of Civil Appeal holden in Kurunegala.

The High Court of Civil Appeal held that Punchi Banda Ratnayake possessed the corpus until his demise and that he had taken income derived from the coconut cultivation on the corpus. It was held further that the Appellant had failed to prove any ouster. The High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court and directed that the corpus be partitioned on the pedigree pleaded by the Respondent. Aggrieved by this judgment, the Appellant has filed this appeal.

Leave to appeal was granted on the following questions of law:

(a) Did their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court seriously misdirect themselves when they held that the subject matter of this case is co-owned land?

(b) Did their Lordships' Court of the Civil Appellate High Court fail to consider the finding of the Learned District Judge that the 4th Defendant/Respondent/Petitioner had exclusive possession for the corpus since 1980 although the 5th Defendant/Respondent/Respondent had undivided rights for only 10 perches (A0-R0-P10)?

I observe that Punchi Banda Ratnayake became the sole owner of the land sought to be partitioned by virtue of partition decree in case No. 1553/P of District Court of Kurunegala dated 02.03.1972. The land became co-owned again when he executed deed 5051 (4V1) dated 14.10.1976 for an undivided 1 ½ acre in favour of Asilin Nona. A further undivided 1 acre was transferred by him again to Asilin None by deed No. 5105 (4V4) dated 19.12.1976.

The total extent of land transferred to Asilin Nona as aforesaid was re-transferred by her to Punchi Banda Ratnayake by deed Nos. 6274 (4V6) dated 10.11.1980 and deed No. 5400 (4V5) dated 21.09.1977.

Punchi Banda Ratnayake transferred 2 ½ acres in total to the Appellant by deed No. 5401 (4V3) dated 21.09.1977, which is for an undivided one acre, followed by deed No. 908 (4V4) dated 11.11.1980, which is for an undivided 1 ½ acre.

Hence by 11.11.1980, the Appellant had paper title for an undivided 2 ½ acres and Punchi Banda Ratnayake held an undivided 8 perches of the corpus.

In evaluating the claim of prescriptive rights by the Appellant, one must bear in mind two significant legal principles governing prescriptive rights among co-owners.

In Corea v. Appuhamy et al. (15 N.L.R. 65) the Privy Council held that, in law, the possession of one co-owner is also the possession of his co-owners and that it was not possible to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind and that nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster could put an end to that possession.

Moreover as the Appellant and Punchi Banda Ratnayake are brothers, the required proof of change in the character of possession to adverse is greater than in a case where the parties are total outsiders [De Silva v. Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (80 N.L.R. 292)].

It was incumbent on the Appellant to prove a starting point for his prescriptive rights. His evidence is that he began possessing the corpus from 1980. This coincides with the execution of deed No. 908 (4V4) dated 11.11.1980 after which he became the owner of an undivided 2 ½ acres of the corpus. However, the possession of the Appellant did not in my view take the character of adverse possession from such inception due to the absence of evidence of change of character as the Appellant entered possession as a co-owner. [Chelliah v. Wijenathan (54 N.L.R. 337 at 342)].

Nonetheless, it is in evidence that between 1982/1984 the Appellant constructed a building on the corpus consisting of three rooms, which are being used as shops. This is shown in the preliminary plan No. 3524 (X) dated 21.03.1997 prepared by licensed surveyor R.B. Navaratne and was claimed only by the Appellant during the preliminary survey. Kareem Ismail testified that he constructed this building at the request of the Appellant who paid for its construction. At the preliminary survey, none of the other parties including the Respondent, claimed that these buildings were being held in common [Appeal Brief, page 105]. In my view these facts are cogent evidence in establishing the beginning of adverse possession in favour of the Appellant.

This position is further buttressed with the evidence that the Appellant leased these shops to third parties and exclusively appropriated the rentals to the exclusion of any other. The Appellant, by deed No. 7191 (4V7) dated 15.08.1984, leased one of the shops to Devendra for a period of five years from 15.08.1984. Chandralatha, a sister of Devendra, testified that she and her brother leased this shop from the Appellant in 1984 and that she is in occupation of it even as at 2002 when she testified. During her cross-examination on behalf of the Respondent, she testified that the rental was paid to the Appellant and that no rental was ever paid to Punchi Banda Ratnayake and that one Jayasekera who was occupying another shop also paid rent to the Appellant. The learned counsel appearing on behalf of the Respondent failed to challenge this evidence. Moreover, the Respondent testified that the present occupiers of the shops on the corpus are in occupation under the Appellant [Appeal Brief, page 92].

The Appellant also led the evidence of one Nandasoma who testified that he took on lease the corpus from the Appellant in 1981 for eight years to cultivate pineapple and that the cultivation covered an extent of 1 ½ acres of the corpus. Although no documentary evidence of the lease was produced, Nandasoma claimed that the receipt was lost, the 5th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent corroborated the fact that there was a pineapple cultivation on the corpus.

In order to counter the case of the Appellant, the Respondent testified that Punchi Banda Ratnayake possessed the corpus until his death in 1995 and used to live in a small house on the corpus [Appeal Brief, page 95]. However, it was mere ipse dixit and in this context it is important to bear in mind the principle that mere statements of possession are insufficient to establish prescriptive rights. It is necessary that the witnesses should speak to specific facts and the question of possession has to be decided thereupon by Court [Sirajudeen and two others v. Abbas (1994) 2 Sri.L.R. 365]. In any event, this evidence was contradicted by the 2nd Defendant-Respondent-Respondent who testified that Punchi Banda Ratnayake lived in a small room on a land adjoining the corpus belonging to one of his brothers [Appeal Brief, page 173].

More importantly, the fact that Punchi Banda Ratnayake continued to possess the corpus is not credible given that he lost his undivided 8 perches share in the corpus when he executed deed No. 1866 (5V4) dated 04.11.1985 by which it was transferred to one Herath Mudiyanselage Jayatilake who later transferred his share by deed No. 2314 (5V5) dated 01.09.1988 to the 10th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent. No evidence was led that either of them possessed the corpus thereafter. In fact, the preliminary plan No. 3524 dated 21.03.1997 (X) shows that the corpus has been possessed as one unit and that there are no boundaries indicating it as having being possessed as two distinct lots.

Hence, there is cogent evidence to establish that the Appellant had prescribed to the corpus by the time this action was filed in November 1995 as correctly held by the learned District Judge.

No doubt the Appellant did admit that the 5th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent had paper title to the balance undivided 8 perches. However, this admission was erroneous. Moreover the 5th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent testified that he did not enter into possession of the undivided 8 perches.

In any event, mere acknowledgement of the paper title of the 5th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent by the Appellant cannot, in my view, stand in the way of setting up a claim of prescriptive title as it is by very nature a mode of defeating paper title. In Wijesundera & Others v. Constantine Dasa and Another [(1987) 2 Sri.L.R. 66], G.P.S. De Silva J. (as he was then) held that the knowledge on the part of the defendant that title to the property was in another was not a bar to his claim to prescriptive title, but tended rather to strengthen their claim, having regard to all the facts and circumstances of that case. In my view, it applies with equal force to the facts and circumstances of this case as well.

More significantly, the 5th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent did not prefer any appeal against the judgment of the learned District Judge who held that the Appellant had established his prescriptive rights to the full extent of the corpus.

For the foregoing reasons, the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in concluding that the Appellant had failed to establish his prescriptive title. Accordingly, I answer the two questions of law in the affirmative.

I set aside the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal holden in Kurunegala dated 17.12.2009 and affirm the judgment of the learned District Judge of Kuliyapitiya dated 11.11.2002 and direct that decree be entered accordingly. Registrar is directed to take steps accordingly.

The Appellant is entitled to his costs in both the High Court of Civil Appeal holden in Kurunegala and this Court.

Appeal allowed.

Judgement

Aluwihare PC. J.,

This is an appeal against an order of the High Court setting aside an award made by the Labour Tribunal of Kalutara.

Background to the Case

The Applicant-Respondent-Petitioner [hereinafter the Applicant] had been employed with the Respondent-Appellant-Respondent Hotel [hereinafter the Respondent], as a Chef from 1992 to 2010. On 21st April 2010, whilst on duty, the Applicant had been found sleeping. The reason attributed by the Applicant for the conduct alleged, was the aggravation of his diabetic condition. When he reported to work on the following day [22nd April], he had been served with a letter, suspending him from service with effect from the said date. Thereafter, the Applicant's services had been terminated with effect from 10th June 2010. On 16th August 2010, the Applicant made an application to the Labour Tribunal in terms of Section 31b of the Industrial Disputes Act, pleading that the termination of his services was unjust and unreasonable.

The Labour Tribunal Decision

In its answer to the Labour Tribunal, the Respondent did not dispute the Applicant's period of employment at the Hotel or the salary he drew at the time his services were terminated. The Respondent also admitted that the Applicant's services were terminated due to disciplinary reasons.

The Respondent's position was that the Applicant frequently reported to work late and that he had been warned on several occasions in writing (letters dated 30th October 2006 alleging that the Applicant had reported to work late on 10 days in September, letter dated 20th November 2006 alleging the Applicant had reported to work late on 14 days in October, and letter dated 15th February 2007 where the Applicant had reported to work late on 7 days in the months of November and December). In spite of the warnings so given, the Applicant had continued to report to work late, in the months of February and March 2007 as well and as a disciplinary measure, the Applicant had been sent on no-pay leave from around mid- May 2007 to mid-June 2007 [letter dated 7th May 2007]. The letters marked as 'R2' to 'R6' were submitted to substantiate the above position. The Respondent asserted further, that on 21st April 2010, the Applicant, whilst on duty, had been found sleeping in the rest room (provided for the workers' benefit).

Under these circumstances, the Applicant had been suspended from service with effect from 22nd April 2010. Thereafter, by letter dated 10th May 2010 ('R8') charges had been framed against the Applicant and he had been requested to show cause within 7 days, as to why disciplinary action should not be taken against him. The Applicant, however, had failed to show cause during the 7-day period granted. After a lapse of about a month, the Respondent had taken steps to inform the Applicant that his services were no longer required, by the letter dated 10th June 2010 ('R9').

At the inquiry before the Labour Tribunal, two witnesses had given evidence on behalf of the Respondent. The Respondent also relied on the documents marked 'R1' to 'R10'. On behalf of the Applicant, the Applicant himself and another witness gave evidence and the documents marked 'A1' to 'A10' were submitted. Delivering its order, the Labour Tribunal ordered the reinstatement of the Applicant without a discontinuation of his services, however, the reinstatement was ordered without back wages. Although the Labour Tribunal reached the conclusion that the employer [Respondent] had placed acceptable evidence to establish the 1st charge leveled against the Applicant, the basis on which the Labour Tribunal made the direction for reinstatement appears to be, that the Respondent had not afforded an opportunity to the Applicant to offer his explanation as to the allegations. The learned President had gone on to hold that the Employer had acted in violation of the rules of natural justice.

The Decision of the High Court

The Respondent appealed to the High Court of the Province, where the order of the Labour Tribunal was set aside. The Learned High Court judge was of the opinion that, as the Applicant failed to show cause as to why he should not be dealt with and steps should not be taken against him, the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal could not have ordered the reinstatement of the Applicant. Accordingly, the High Court set aside the order of the Labour Tribunal and held that the Respondent was justified in terminating the services of the Applicant.

Questions of Law

On appeal by the Applicant, this Court granted Leave to Appeal on the following questions;

a) In the circumstances pleaded, is the judgment of the High Court which had dismissed the application of the applicant just and equitable in terms of law?

b) Could the High Court set aside the order of the Labour Tribunal considering only the fact that, the supplicant (sic) had not answered the charges levelled against him on 10. 05. 2010?
c) In the circumstances pleaded, is the judgement of the High Court according to the law and according to the evidence adduced in the case?

The Allegations against the Applicant

The charges preferred against the Applicant, as per the charge sheet ['R8'] were;

1. Neglecting mandatory services and leaving the kitchen without permission on 21st April 2010.
2. Neglecting mandatory services for a period exceeding 3 hours on 21st April 2010 by going to the hostel without permission during work hours.
3. Acting in breach of discipline or attempting to act in breach of discipline by the actions in 1 and 2 above.

As reflected in the above charge sheet, the Applicant's services were terminated specifically for being absent from his workstation on 21st April 2010.

The Evidence

The Administration Manager of the Hotel, Indika Upulnath De Silva, witness for the Respondent, maintains that the charge sheet was sent by registered post to the Applicant. A postal receipt for registered post bearing the date 10th May 2010 was submitted marked 'R8A' along with the charge sheet 'R8'. Although the Applicant initially took up the position that he did not receive the charge sheet (page 193 of 'x'), under cross examination, he has stated (at pages 214 and 215) that he received 'R8' but not 'R9' [Letter of termination]. Later however, (at page 227) he has stated that he received the letter informing that his services were terminated ('R9'), but not 'R8'. Thus, his testimony appears to be infirm.

The Applicant admitted that he failed to show cause as required by 'R8' but did not submit any reasons for such failure except the initial denial of the receipt of 'R8'. In the written submissions, the Applicant maintained that he led sufficient evidence before the Labour Tribunal to indicate that he was not guilty of the charges levelled against him. The Applicant submitted blood reports marked 'A7' to 'A9' and 'A11' obtained in 2005, 2008, 2009 and 2010 respectively indicating Fasting Plasma Glucose levels as high as 197.80 and 216.8, in order to establish that he was suffering from diabetes for a period of about 7-8 years. The Applicant submitted a medical report marked 'A3' issued by Dr. Namal Jayatilaka of the Government Hospital of Bentota on the same date as the incident i. e. 21st April 2010 as an explanation for being absent from work for 3 hours.

The Applicant had been treated by Dr. Namal Jayatilaka and according to the medical report 'A3', his condition is stated as "uncontrolled Diabetes Mellitus with Fasting Blood Sugar 365mg/dl." The evidence of the Applicant and Dr. Jayathilaka, however, indicate that the test referred to in 'A3' was in fact not a 'fasting' blood sugar test. From the summation of the evidence relating to this issue, it is evident that the medical report 'A3' does not accurately indicate the Applicant's blood sugar level. Therefore, 'A3' cannot be relied upon to reach the conclusion that the Applicant had in fact experienced a soaring blood sugar level on the day in question.

Furthermore, it was contended that the failure to show cause was not a bar to hold a domestic inquiry against the Applicant. The Respondent, however, had not proceeded to hold one. It was contended on behalf of the Applicant that these facts were not appreciated by the High Court and had the totality of the evidence adduced by the Applicant been considered in the correct perspective, the High Court would not have held that the termination of the Applicant's services was just and equitable.

The Operations/Security Manager of the Hotel, Wilson Wickramaratne giving evidence on behalf of the Respondent maintained that on 22nd April, an inquiry was conducted by him, and a statement from the Applicant (marked 'R10') was recorded. However, the evidence led at the Labour Tribunal indicates that the alleged inquiry into the matter by the Operations Manager, Wickramaratne had not been a comprehensive one. No other employee in the kitchen had been questioned regarding the absence of the Applicant from his workstation.

Furthermore, no statements other than the statement of the Applicant had been recorded (at page 118 of 'X').

The Respondent points out that, in the said statement ('R10') the Applicant had neither mentioned that he was suffering from uncontrollable diabetes nor that he had been recommended 3 days of rest by the doctor, whom he had consulted the previous day. In the Applicant's statement, there was no mention of consulting a doctor on the previous day either. Furthermore, the medical certificate purported to have been issued by the doctor when he was consulted on the previous day, had not been produced by the Applicant, at the time of making the statement. While the Applicant maintains that it was handed over to the Security Officer of the Hotel, the Respondent denies receiving such a medical certificate. According to the Applicant, the original of the medical certificate ['A3'] had been handed over to the Security Officer at about 3 pm on 22nd April 2010 as the Applicant had not been allowed to enter the Hotel premises. The Respondent maintains that if a document was given to the security officer, it would have been handed over to an officer at the Hotel's Reception desk. The position taken up by the Respondent was that the Applicant has belatedly obtained a backdated medical certificate in an attempt to state that he was ill on the day in question.

In the written submissions tendered, the Respondent pointed out that, by 'R10', the Applicant had admitted that he did not inform the Sectional Head nor his immediate superior in writing or verbally that he was not well. In addition, the Respondent had also pointed out that when there was a resident Doctor in the Hotel, the Applicant had not made use of the facility; that he admitted guilt; and gave an undertaking that he would not repeat such conduct in the future.

The Issues

The Applicant claims that no domestic inquiry was conducted before the decision to terminate his services was reached. Holding a domestic inquiry, however, is not mandatory in terms of the Sri Lankan law. In St. Andrew's Hotel Ltd. v Ceylon Mercantile Union, Case No. 138/85 decided on 01. 09. 1993 and in Director CWE v. C. Ranatunge CA 272/89 [CA minutes 18.10.93], it was held that there is no duty to hold a domestic inquiry unless there was a special provision to do so in terms of the contract of employment or the collective agreement. It is accepted that a domestic inquiry will, however, be useful in establishing the bona fides of the employer.

On behalf of the Respondent, it was argued that the principles of natural justice apply only to administrative tribunals and not to the employer-employee relationship. This submission has no merit as it is generally accepted that judicial decision-making in any case, regardless of its nature, should be governed by the principles of natural justice, in order to guarantee a just decision-making process, by ensuring the right to a fair trial and avoid prejudice.

In the Indian case D. K. Yadav v. JMA Industries Ltd. 1993 SCR (3) 930, 1993 SCC (3) 259, K. Ramaswamy J. holding that the termination of an employee without following principles of natural justice is violative of Article 21 of Constitution of India (i.e. "No person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law") stated; "The cardinal point that has to be borne in mind, in every case, is whether the person concerned should have a reasonable opportunity of presenting his case and the authority should act fairly, justly, reasonably and impartially. It is not so much to act judicially but is to act fairly, namely the procedure adopted must be just, fair and reasonable in the particular circumstances of the case. In other words, application of the principles of natural justice that no man should be condemned unheard intends to prevent the authority to act arbitrarily effecting the rights of the concerned person." Therefore, the norm that the person facing the allegation should be given a reasonable opportunity of presenting his case in line with the principles of natural justice is not excluded from labour matters and operates to ensure that the decision making authority acts fairly and justly.

The Colombo Apothecaries Co. Ltd v. Ceylon Press Workers Union (1972) 75 NLR 182 case dealt with the question of absence without prior permission over a period of time. The employee in question was absent without leave on numerous occasions from the printing press where he was employed. On several occasions he was informed that he had vacated his post but was reinstated after he gave his explanations. Finally, the services of the employee were terminated, particularly on the ground of absence without prior permission over a period of time despite warnings by the employer. The question was whether the employee was entitled to absent himself without notice regardless of repeated warnings. Weeramantry J. held that the employee's services were liable to be terminated observing that "While an employee is no doubt entitled to his quota of leave, he must not, as far as is avoidable, draw on this leave without prior notice to the management; nor must he repeatedly draw on such leave in such a manner as would throw out of gear the work of the establishment he serves." (at page 186). In coming to this conclusion, the court took into account the nature of the work carried out by the errant employee as a compositor whose work had to be completed in order for the process of printing to go on as previously planned and on schedule, commenting that absence without notice meant that the employer could not in advance entrust the respondent-employee's work to another employee in his place. It was emphasized that the consideration should not be whether the total number of days on which the employee was absent was within or in excess of his leave entitlement, but rather the impact on the smooth working of the establishment.

In the said case the services of the employee were terminated "on the ground of misconduct and particularly of absence without prior permission over a period of time although warned by the employer". In the present case, however, the charge sheet had been drawn up only with respect to the Applicant's conduct of sleeping while on duty on the 21st of April.

In the Colombo Apothecaries case (supra), Justice Weeramantry (at page 186), went on to state that, "The fact that an earlier default had been pardoned or excused does not, in my view, wipe it off the slate so completely as to render that default totally irrelevant. That default assumes relevance and importance in the context of a complaint by the employer of successive and repeated defaults of the same nature. When one is considering how reasonable or unreasonable has been the conduct of each party, it would be wrong to view the final act in the series in isolation as though it existed all by itself. Here as elsewhere in the field of labour law, a proper assessment of a dispute can only be made against the background of the conduct and relationship between the parties." [emphasis added].

This view ought to be applied in the case at hand as well. While the fact that the Applicant's affliction prevented him from reporting to work on some days could be looked upon with sympathy, the failure to inform his employer cannot be considered lightly. The Applicant had been excused and issued warning letters on 3 occasions. When he failed to mend his ways, he had been sent on compulsory leave, with the incident on 21st April finally leading to his termination. It would not be fair by the employer to consider the final incident which led to the termination, in isolation.

From the evidence led before the Labour Tribunal it was revealed that the work of the Applicant was necessary for putting together, on time, the meals served for the guests staying at the hotel. This was a job where the work simply had to be completed by a given deadline if the residents of the Hotel were to be satisfactorily served their meals in keeping with the standards of the Respondent Hotel as a Ayurvedic resort, catering predominantly to foreign tourists. The Applicant has maintained that on the day he was found sleeping, he had finished the work for the day. This submission is not acceptable as it is a matter for the employer, and not the employee, to decide whether the work for the day was completed or not. Once an employee reports to work the common norm is that the employee would remain in his or her workstation until the end of the duty hours. Furthermore, regarding the days on which the Applicant was absent without prior notice, it has to be stated that it would have led to disruption in the working of the kitchen as another person would have to be assigned the usual tasks of the Applicant at short notice. This would have no doubt affected the ability to provide the meals on time, or in the least made the process of serving the meals on time challenging. The unreasonable conduct of one party in the employer-employee relationship, should not burden the other party.

This court observes that the Respondent was engaged in the hospitality trade where success largely depends on the customer satisfaction or the satisfaction of the guest to be precise. Thus, in the highly competitive present-day business world the sustenance of a business of this nature hinges on the customer reviews. Hence the employees are not only expected but are under a duty to rise up to industry demands and to act reasonably and with a sense of responsibility. As Justice

Weeramantry observed in the case of Colombo Apothecaries (supra) the absence of the Applicant from the place of work cannot be considered in isolation. As referred to earlier, Justice Weeramantry emphasized that it is the impact on the smooth working of the establishment that should be given paramountcy, rather than whether the employee was within or in excess of his leave entitlement.

We are mindful that in labour matters judicial forums are vested with a just and equitable jurisdiction. T. S. Fernando J. commenting on the parameters of the phrase 'just and equitable' in Richard Pieris and Co. Ltd. v. Wijesiriwardena (1961) 62 NLR 233 at 235 stated "justice and equity can themselves be measured not according to the urgings of a kind heart but only within the framework of the law". In Associated Cables Ltd. v. Kalutarage (1999) 2 SLR 314 it was held that although the Labour Tribunal was required to make a just and equitable order it must not only be just and equitable but the procedure adopted to that end must be legal and every judicial body exercising judicial powers must so arrive at an order only on legal evidence.

In Municipal Council of Colombo v. Munasinghe (1969) 71 NLR 223 at 225 it was observed that "The mandate which the Arbitrator in an industrial dispute holds under the law requires him to make an award which is just and equitable, and not necessarily an award which favours an employee." A similar view was expressed by A. R. B. Amerasinghe J. in Elmo Rex Lord & Theresa Margaret Lord Partners v. Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya SC Appeal No. 37/99, decided on 07. 03. 2001; "The law relating to employment is not a one-way street. Justice, fairness and equity must be meted out even-handedly to employees and employers alike." In Millers Ltd. v. Ceylon Mercantile Industries and General Workers Union (1993) 1 SLR 179 at 183, G.R.T.D. Bandaranayake J. expressed the opinion that an award is just and equitable only if it takes into consideration the interests of all the parties.

Therefore, it is clear that equity is not sympathy and that a court is barred from reaching a just and equitable decision based solely on sympathetic considerations. A just and equitable decision in an industrial matter is one which takes into consideration the situations of both the employer and the employee and assumes a holistic approach to the issue at hand based on the existing legal framework.

Applying this definition of the law, we think it fit to answer question (a) affirmatively in that; the judgment of the High Court which dismissed the application of the applicant, is just and equitable in terms of law.

The Learned High Court Judge set aside the award of the Labour Tribunal, on the basis that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had granted relief on the premise that the Respondent had not given an opportunity to the Applicant to explain the allegations against him. The material placed at the inquiry, however, is indicative of the contrary in that it was the Applicant who did not respond to the allegations within the stipulated time period. At page 4 of the learned Labour Tribunal President's award, he had clearly stated that he arrived at the conclusion that the termination of the services of the Applicant was not just and equitable as the Respondent was in breach of the rules of natural justice, by not affording the Applicant an opportunity to show cause to the charge sheet. It appears that the learned President of the Labour tribunal had misdirected himself in arriving at this conclusion. In the examination in chief, the Applicant had said that he was served with a letter of suspension on 22nd October 2010 ['A10' or 'R7'] and the same contained a single allegation, requiring him to show cause. The Applicant, however, denied that he was served with the charge sheet 'R8'. In fact, R8 had been dispatched under registered cover, and the receipt of registration has also been marked as 'R8A'. Under cross examination, however, the Applicant had admitted that he received 'R8' (the charge sheet) but he did not respond [proceedings of 06.07.2011]. Considering the above, it is evident that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had erred in arriving at his conclusions. The High Court, having observed that the learned President had misdirected himself, had quite correctly set aside the order. In the circumstances I answer the question of law referred to in paragraph (b) above also in the affirmative.

The final question this court is called upon to answer is, whether the judgement of the High Court was according to the law and according to the evidence adduced in the case (question (c)). As stated above, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal having come to the conclusion that the Respondent has established the first charge preferred against the Applicant has misdirected himself in holding that the respondent had violated rules of natural justice by not giving an opportunity to the Applicant to answer the allegations leveled against him. The evidence, however, reflects the contrary and in the circumstances this court cannot fault the judgement of the High Court. Accordingly, question (c) too is answered in the affirmative.

Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed, however, the Applicant would be entitled to his statutory dues for the period of service with the Respondent.

In the circumstances of this case, I do not order costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The three Plaintiffs filed this action in the District Court of Galle seeking a declaration of title to the land described in the schedule to the plaint, ejectment of the two Defendants therefrom, and damages. The Defendants filed a joint answer seeking dismissal of the Plaintiffs' action, a declaration that they are the owners of the land, and damages.

At the trial, admissions were recorded, and issues were raised and the case was re-fixed for further trial. The Defendants were not ready on the date of further trial and the trial was postponed. On the next date, the Defendants were absent and their Attorney-at-Law informed Court that she had no instructions. The Court fixed the case for ex parte trial against the Defendants.

At the ex parte trial, the evidence of the 1st Plaintiff was led by a President's Counsel and documents P1-P7 were marked. The learned District Judge did not ask a single question from the witness nor was any clarification sought from Counsel for the Plaintiffs. The ex parte Judgment was postponed. By the ex parte Judgment delivered on 24.04.2009, the District Judge dismissed the Plaintiffs' action on the basis that the Plaintiff failed to identify the corpus.

On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal affirmed the Judgment of the District Court. Hence the Plaintiffs before the final Court.

This Court granted leave to appeal on the question whether the High Court erred in law when it held that the corpus had not been identified in view of the unique facts of this case.

In my view, this question of law shall be answered in the affirmative and the appeal shall be allowed. Let me explain.

The parties to this action are members of the same family. They are not strangers to one another. The land in suit, which was their mother's property, is described in the schedule to the plaint.

The Defendants inter alia in paragraphs 2 and 15 of the answer admitted the corpus and, in the prayer to the answer, sought a declaration of title to the corpus in their favour. Furthermore, at the trial, by way of a formal admission recorded as admission No. 2, the corpus was admitted. In terms of section 58 of the Evidence Ordinance, admitted facts need not be proved unless "the court may, in its discretion, require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions." But in this case, the Court did not require the corpus to be proved or properly identified despite its admission by the Defendants.

Obviously, no issue was raised at the trial on the identification of the corpus. Both the Plaintiffs and the Defendants raised issues on the premise that the corpus was admitted. For instance, issue No. 26 raised by the Defendants is: "Have the Defendants acquired prescriptive title to this land and the house?" Be it noted that the Defendants speak of "this land". Then what is this fuss about non-identification of the corpus?

What the learned District Judge states in essence is that although the land is described by a Lot number in the schedule to the plaint, the Plan number is not mentioned and therefore the land has not been properly identified. This is an omission on the part of the Plaintiffs' Attorney-at-Law. What is typed in the schedule to the plaint as the subject matter of the dispute is the land described in the schedules to the deeds, which are all pleaded and produced in evidence. The Plan number is mentioned in the schedules to all these deeds.

The Plaintiffs filed this action seeking a declaration of title and ejectment of the Defendants from the entire land described in the schedule to the plaint, not from a portion of it. The Defendants' counter claim is also for the entire land. There is no ambiguity whatsoever as to the identification of the corpus by the Defendants against whom this action has been filed.

The system of justice we practice is adversarial as opposed to inquisitorial, and therefore, the Judge shall decide the case as it is presented before him by the two contesting parties and not in the way the Judge prefers it to have been presented before him.

In the Supreme Court case of Saravanamuthu v. Packiyam [2012] 1 Sri LR 298, the Plaintiff instituted the action in the District Court against the Defendants for a declaration of title to the land described in the schedule to the plaint, ejectment of the Defendants therefrom, and damages. The Defendants in their answer admitted their residence and the situation of the land as averred in the plaint but denied the Plaintiff's claim. In the answer, they stated that the land is the same as that described in the schedule to the plaint, but described the land in the answer according to their deed. After trial, the District Court entered Judgment for the Plaintiff. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal ordered a re-trial on the basis that Counsel for both parties had failed to draw the attention of Court to the discrepancy between the schedules to the plaint and the answer.

On appeal to this Court, Sripavan J. (later C.J.), whilst stating at page 301 "It must be remembered that the jurisdiction of the Court is limited to the dispute presented for adjudication by the contesting parties", held at page 302 that "In view of the specific admission made by the Respondents in paragraph 4 of the answer there was no dispute amongst the parties as to the identification of the corpus even though the corpus is described differently in the answer. It is observed that no issue was raised before the District Court as to the identity of the corpus. The High Court sought to deal with the point that had not been an issue before the learned District Judge." The appeal was allowed and the Judgment of the District Court was restored.

Although the trial in the instant action was taken up ex parte against the Defendants, without purging the default, the Defendants were allowed to participate at the argument before the High Court, as in an appeal filed against a Judgment entered inter partes.

It is unfortunate that the High Court of Civil Appeal affirmed the Judgment of the District Court and dismissed the appeal with costs.

The learned High Court Judge attempts to justify the conclusion of the District Judge in a perplexing manner. He states:

> The Plaintiffs have produced title deeds for the land described in the plaint. It is also correct that both parties have admitted the land described in the schedule to the plaint as the subject matter of this action. The subject matter means the land for which the dispute arose between the Plaintiffs and the Defendants. The Defendants admitted that the dispute arose for the land described in the plaint. However, there is no proof that the defined lot 1 of lot D mentioned in the title deeds of the Plaintiffs is the portion of land where the dispute arose between the Plaintiffs and the Defendants. Hence it is essential to depict the land for which the Plaintiffs seek a declaration of title.

The learned High Court Judge states there is no proof that the defined Lot 1 of Lot D mentioned in the title deeds of the Plaintiffs is the portion of land in respect of which the dispute arose between the Plaintiffs and the Defendants. In the schedule to the plaint, the land is described as the defined Lot 1 of Lot D. The High Court Judge acknowledges that the Defendants admit that the dispute arose in respect of the land described in the plaint. I fail to understand this line of thinking of the learned High Court Judge.

Litigation is not wordplay, nor is it a game to be won by the cleverer or more astute. It is a far more serious contest authorised by law, in a court of justice, for the purpose of enforcing a right.

Unless the matter goes to the root of the case, cases need not be dismissed on flimsy technical grounds.

In Silva v. Selohamy (1923) 25 NLR 113, decided nearly a century ago, Schneider J. remarked at 114: "It is not the policy of the Civil Procedure Code to throw out applications for relief for defect in pleadings. On the contrary, its policy would appear to be otherwise."

The High Court relied upon Latheef v. Mansoor [2010] 2 Sri LR 333 to dismiss the appeal which reaffirmed the established principal that – be it rei vindicatio or partition – if the corpus cannot be identified, the action cannot be maintained. There is no question about the legal principal expounded in Latheef's case but the issue lies in the applicability of this principal to this case where the facts are totally different.

In Latheef's case, there was a real dispute in the identification of the corpus. There was no admission recorded as to the corpus and the 1st to 5th issues raised at the trial revealed that there was a dispute regarding the identity of the corpus. The Court then issued not one but two commissions to different surveyors to identify the corpus. After the return of the commissions, the 6th issue was raised putting the identification of the corpus in issue. The identity of the corpus was so complex that this Court dedicated 12 pages in the Judgment (pages 378-390) to deal with this question. In the instant action there is no such issue.

A principle laid down in a case shall be understood in the context of the peculiar facts and circumstances of that particular case. Such principles have no universal application unless the facts and circumstances in both cases are on all fours.

In the House of Lords decision of Quinn v. Leathem [1901] AC 495, the question arose on the applicability of the former decision of the same House in Allen v. Flood [1898] AC 1, which, if boldly applied, the Plaintiff had no case. "If upon these facts so found the Plaintiff could have no remedy against those who had thus injured him," Lord Halsbury remarked, "it could hardly be said that our jurisprudence was that of a civilized community, nor indeed do I understand that any one has doubted that, before the decision in Allen v. Flood in this House, such fact would have established a cause of action against the Defendants."

> [E]very judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it. Such a mode of reasoning assumes that the law is necessarily a logical code, whereas every lawyer must acknowledge that the law is not always logical at all.

I set aside the Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal and the Judgment of the District Court and direct the learned District Judge to enter ex parte Judgment as prayed for in the prayer to the plaint on the uncontroverted evidence led at the trial.

The Plaintiffs are entitled to costs in all three Courts.

ACHALA WENGAPPULI, J.

The 1st Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent (later substituted by the 1A Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent) and the 2nd Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent, instituted a Rei Vindicatio action before the District Court of Kuliyapitiya in May 2003, against the Defendant-Respondent-Appellant (later substituted by 1A-D Defendant-Respondent-Appellants; hereinafter referred to as the "Defendant"), seeking a declaration of title to the land and to the building covering an extent of 747 square feet, (described as a Kada Kamaraya) standing thereon, morefully described in the schedules A and B of the plaint, and also the eviction of the Defendant therefrom. The Defendant, in his answer, seeking the dismissal of the plaint, had also laid down a claim of acquisition of prescriptive title to the said building and to the land on which it stood.

Therefore, dispute that had been presented by the parties for determination of the trial Court could be narrowed down to the question as to who has the right to own the said 'Kada Kamaraya' and the parcel of land on which it stands, situated within a land in extent of one acre and 29 perches, described in schedule "ඇ" of the plaint.

The Plaintiffs have claimed that they have the paper title to the land described in schedule "ඇ" and produced the relevant deeds before the trial Court. On 17.05.1978, the 1st Plaintiff's father had leased out the said land in its entirety, including the building standing on it to one Karunatilleke for a period of 15 years. It is alleged by the Plaintiffs in their plaint that the Defendant had entered the said building illegally within the one-year period commencing from 17.05.1978, during which they have lost possession of their land temporarily. The lessee did not vacate from the land and the building at the expiry of the 15-year lease period, and had to be evicted by the fiscal, upon a writ of execution issued by Court in case No. 10741/L, an action instituted by the Plaintiffs seeking declaration of title and eviction of the said lessee. The fiscal, in execution of the writ, had placed the Plaintiffs back into possession of their land and only to the section of the building occupied by the overholding lessee, leaving out the remaining part of it, apparently on the claim that the Defendant's grandfather Balin Appuhamy had constructed the said Kada Kamaraya.

The Plaintiffs have thereafter instituted action on 21.08.2001, in case No. 13005/L and thereby sought to evict the Defendant from the said Kada Kamaraya, but had withdrawn it on 01.08.2002, reserving their right to re-institute proceedings. The Plaintiffs have thereafter instituted the instant action on 20.02.2003, seeking declaration of title to the land inclusive of the Kada Kamaraya and eviction of the Defendant.

The Defendant, in support of his claim of acquisition of prescriptive title to the Kada Kamaraya he possessed, asserted uninterrupted and long adverse possession. He also had taken up the position that the present dispute is Res Judicata among the parties, relying upon the dismissal of the earlier case No. 13005/L filed against him.

At the commencement of the trial before the District Court, the Defendant had suggested two issues (Nos. 12 and 13) particularly to the effect that whether he had conferred with title to the disputed "parcel of land" (idam kebella) upon the deed No. 12182 of 08.09.2003 (marked as "P14") and, whether he, along with Balin Appuhamy, had possessed the said kada kamaraya and the parcel of land covered under it for over 10 years, prior to the institution of the instant action. At a subsequent stage of the proceedings, the Defendant had suggested yet another issue (No. 17), whether the pleadings and the judgment of case No. 13005/L, are Res Judicata among the parties.

The trial Court, having considered the material presented before it, decided issue No. 17 in favour of the Defendant and dismissed the Plaintiff's action.

Being aggrieved by the said dismissal, the Plaintiffs have preferred an appeal to the High Court of Civil Appeal in appeal No.

NWP/HCCA/Kur/34/2009(F). The High Court of Civil Appeal, by its judgment on 28.04.2014 answered the said issue No. 17 as "not proved". The appellate Court, having concluded that the Defendant failed to establish that he had acquired prescriptive title to the Kada Kamaraya and to the land on which it stands, proceeded to answer issue Nos. 12 and 13 also as "not proved" and allowed the appeal of the Plaintiffs.

With the pronouncement of the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal, the Defendant thereafter sought Leave to Appeal from this Court on several questions of law that had been formulated and inserted in paragraph 8 of his petition.

This Court, after hearing Counsel on 12.07.2016, granted leave only on the question of law, "did the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal err in failing to consider the prescriptive title of the Defendant and his grandfather Balin Appuhamy? "

At that stage, learned President's Counsel for the Respondent, raised the following consequential issues of law.

1. Is the Petitioner entitled to challenge the issue of prescription as he has failed to appeal against the Judgement of the District Court with regard to the issues raised by the Defendant in respect of prescription?

2. The Defendant is also not entitled to raise on the question of prescription in these proceedings as he has failed to challenge the issue pertaining to prescription in terms of section 772 of the Civil Procedure Code?

3. In any event, the Defendant is not entitled to claim prescription as much as his claim in the District Court was only with regard to a room of a building and not with regard to a land?

In support of the appeal, learned Counsel for the Defendant contended before this Court that the High Court of Civil Appeal misled itself and thereupon had fallen into error when it answered issue No. 13, raised on the acquisition of prescriptive title, as "not proved" by attributing its reason, to his failure to present the deed P14, on which he had relied on in establishing the said issue. Learned Counsel also pointed out that the Defendant, in his answer, had taken up the position that Balin Appuhamy was in occupation of the disputed Kada Kamaraya for well over ten years prior to the institution of the instant action, and, in addition, presented a substantial body of evidence before the trial Court, which clearly indicate the position that since coming into possession of the said Kada Kamaraya, it was unaccompanied by any payment of rent or produce, or performance of service or duty or any other act by him from which an acknowledgement of a right existing in the Plaintiff could be inferred with.

In support of this contention, learned Counsel relied on the statement made by the Plaintiffs in their plaint that the Defendant came into "illegal" occupation of the disputed building prior to May 1978 and was in possession of the said Kada Kamaraya since that point of time onwards denying the title of the Plaintiffs over it. He added that the character of the Defendant, when coming into occupation of the said building was not of a licensee, who had entered the premises with leave and license of the Plaintiffs and thereby acknowledging the rights of the Plaintiffs over that premises, but as a trespasser, who did not recognize any property rights of them over the said premises.

Learned Counsel for the Defendant sought to strengthen his argument further by adverting to the failure of the Plaintiffs to take steps to evict the Defendant along with the overholding lessee on 09.06.2001, in spite of the fact that he too was in the occupation of the disputed building at the time of the execution of the writ. Since then, and until the institution of the instant action in 2003, the Defendant was in possession of the said building and thus uninterruptedly maintained his title, adverse to or independent of that of the Plaintiffs, for well over two decades and therefore clearly acquired prescriptive right over the disputed building. It was also contended by the Defendant, that the trial Court, having considered the evidence and in dismissing the Plaintiffs' action, had arrived at a conclusive finding of fact that the Defendant had possessed and continued to be in possession of the disputed premises over a long period.

Learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiffs, in resisting the appeal of the Defendant, submitted that the trial Court, having arrived at a finding that the Defendant was in possession for over long period of time either "legally or illegally"; nonetheless, had proceeded to answer the issue Nos. 12 and 13, suggested by the Defendant over his claim of acquisition of prescriptive title, as "does not arise for consideration" since the matter is Res Judicata among parties. Learned President's Counsel highlighted the fact that the Defendant did not prefer an appeal against the said specific findings on those pivotal issues nor has he made any application under section 722 of the Civil Procedure Code contesting them, although the law had specifically provided for such a course of action. His contention, therefore, is that the Defendant cannot reagitate the issue of prescription before this Court.

I shall now proceed to consider these submissions against the backdrop of the evidence that had been placed before the trial Court and the reasoning contained in the judgments of the Courts below.

It is evident from the judgement of the District Court, in dismissing the Plaintiff's action, it was of the view that an identical cause of action had already been decided by that Court, in case No. 10741/L (referring to the first case instituted by the Plaintiffs against the Defendant for his eviction) and its appeal was pending determination before the Court of Appeal. Therefore, the trial Court decided that the matter is Res Judicata among the parties. The reasoning of the trial Court, adopted in arriving at that conclusion, also indicate that it considered the failure of the Plaintiff to evict the Defendant along with the overholding lessee from the building at the time of executing the writ, despite the fact that the Court order was for the entirety of the land, as a factor indicative of the renunciation of their rights over that part of the building by the Plaintiffs.

In exercising its appellate jurisdiction, the High Court of Civil Appeal has held that the trial Court was in error, when it answered the issue No. 17 that the matter is Res Judicata among parties. The High Court had thereupon proceeded to allow the Plaintiffs' appeal by holding that the "defendant has not also proved what is stated in issue No. 13, the alleged prescriptive title of Balin Appuhamy" and the deed of gift P14, in relation to issue No. 12.

The only question of law, upon which this Court had granted leave to the Defendant to proceed with his appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal, read "Did the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal err in failing to consider the prescriptive title of the Defendant and his grandfather Balin Appuhamy?". In view of the limited scope of the question of law on which leave was granted, learned Counsel had understandably confined his challenge to the impugned judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal, only on the basis that it had failed to consider the evidence available on the acquisition of prescriptive title by Balin Appuhamy.

The quotation from the judgment of the trial Court, inserted in the preceding paragraph of this judgment, clearly indicate that the High Court of Civil Appeal, before arriving at the said impugned conclusion, did in fact consider the issue of acquisition of prescriptive title after evaluation of the evidence presented before the trial Court. The appellate Court also had added that "… the Defendant has not been able to show any right or title that would allow him to remain in that property …".

One of the consequential questions of law, as formulated by the learned President's Counsel, too is connected to the issue of acquisition of prescriptive title as it has been formulated to read "in any event, the Defendant is not entitled to claim prescription as much as his claim in the District Court was only with regard to a room of a building and not with regard to a land?".

In view of the scope of the area covered under the above questions of law, it is necessary for this Court to consider same within that defined area, in the light of the applicable principles of law and in reference to the evidence that had been presented before the trial Court.

The dispute among the Plaintiffs and the Defendant, as already noted, is the right to own the Kada Kamaraya, and the portion of land covered under that building. The 1st Plaintiff claims paper title to the said land, over which the said building was erected on, based upon the deed of transfer No. 18705 of 14.09.1975, executed in his favour by his father Mallawa Arachchige Kiri Banda, the original owner. The said land is depicted in Plan No. 65A/L.R.C. Ku 15/Ku. 14.

The 1st Plaintiff had leased out the said land with its building to one Wickramasinghe Arachchilage Piyadasa Karunatilleke on 17.05.1978, for a period of 15 years by the execution of an Indenture of Lease No. 20122. The lessee was accordingly permitted to occupy the building standing on it and to enjoy the fruits of the land. During this period, the lessee Karunatilleke operated a metal crusher and a sawmill on that land and had his office located in that building. At the expiration of the lease period of 15 years, the 1st Plaintiff informed his lessee to handover vacant possession. Since the lessee did not vacate, the 1st Plaintiff instituted action in case No. 10741/L before the District Court of Kuliyapitiya, in seeking declaration of his title to the said land and the eviction of the said overholding lessee. The trial Court held in favour of the 1st Plaintiff and a writ of execution was eventually issued. Pending determination of the appeal preferred by the said lessee challenging his eviction, the trial Court issued a writ of execution. Neither the present Defendant nor his grandfather Balin Appuhamy were parties to that litigation.

The fiscal of the Court, in order to execute the writ issued in favour of the 1st Plaintiff, visited the land on 18.10.2000. During his visit, it was noted down by the fiscal that the building standing on it had two "කඩ කාමර" adjacent to each other and one Balin Appuhamy is in possession of one, while the other was possessed by the lessee Karunatilleke, the defendant in case No. 10741/L. Upon enquiry, the fiscal was informed by the Defendant that the building was erected by Balin Appuhamy, who had occupied it since for over "50" years. The Defendant before the trial Court in the instant action is Balin Appuhamy's grandson, who continued to be in possession of that part of the building after Balin Appuhamy's demise. The 1st Plaintiff, when enquired by the fiscal claimed that his father too had shared the construction cost of that building. The Plaintiff's claim of sharing the construction cost of the Kada Kamaraya was not disputed by the Defendant at any point of time.

The fiscal, in executing the writ of Court, had thereafter placed the 1st Plaintiff in possession of the land on 09.06.2001, and only on the part of the building occupied by Karunatilleke leaving out the Kada Kamaraya in the Defendant's possession, after instructing him to make a claim before the trial Court within two weeks. The witness who produced the certified copy of the fiscal report in case No. 10741/L, marked as "X" before the trial Court, said that the Court record indicate that the Defendant had tendered an affidavit presenting a claim. But the Defendant failed to produce a copy of his affidavit tendered to Court on the direction of the fiscal, nor did he elicited the nature of the claim he had presented in the said affidavit, in that case or the decision made by that Court on it, before the trial Court.

There is oral evidence led on behalf of the Defendant through a retired Grama Niladhari, who had served the area from 1972 to 1978, and could recall that Balin Appuhamy had ran a grocery in that building during his tenure of office.

Clearly it is with the above evidence, the Defendant had sought to counter the paper title of the 1st Plaintiff to the disputed building under section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. The instant action, being a Rei Vindiactio action, both the trial Court as well as the High Court of Civil Appeal have accepted that the Plaintiffs have proved their paper title to the land. Therefore, it is for the Defendant to establish that the action of the Plaintiffs is prescribed as he had acquired prescriptive title, a title adverse to and independent of the paper title of the Plaintiffs. In doing so, not only must he establish that the point of time he had commenced such possession, but also he must furnish proof of undisturbed and uninterrupted possession of that property for over ten years. The applicable principle of law had been succinctly stated by Gratiaen J in the judgment of Chelliah v. Wijenathan (1951) 54 NLR 337. His Lordship states (at p, 342), "where a party invokes the provisions of Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance in order to defeat the ownership of an adverse claimant to immovable property, the burden of proof rests fairly and squarely on him to establish a starting point for his or her acquisition of prescriptive rights." G.P.S. de Silva CJ in Sirajudeen v Abbas (1994) 2 Sri L.R. 365, had re-emphasised that statement of law.

The Defendant, although sought to 'tack' the period his grandfather had possessed the building to the period of his own, and thereby strived to establish that they have held that property adverse to or independent to the paper title of the Plaintiff for over the required ten-year period, but was conspicuously silent in his evidence on exactly when did Balin Appuhamy commence his adverse possession against the Plaintiffs.

At the hearing before this Court, learned Counsel for the Defendant referred to paragraph 20 of the plaint, where it was stated that the Defendant had entered the premises "illegally" during the period the Plaintiffs lost possession from 17.05.1978, and sought to pin the commencement of his claim of prescription to that date. This contention does not take the Defendant's claim any further, as it is not an acceptable substitute for the total absence of any evidence as to the starting point of his claim of prescription, presented before the trial Court.

Why the reference in a plaint, in this instance, could not be taken as the starting point of the prescriptive period, in the absence of any specific evidence to that effect presented before the trial Court, could be explained further. This is primarily due to several reasons.

The averment in the plaint, even if it is taken as an item of 'evidence' on the point as the learned Counsel submits, is clearly an obscure statement as to its meaning. It could well be a due to an instance of poor draftsmanship as the said averment reads " වර්ෂ 1978.05.17 දින සිට (අ) (ආ) උපලේඛනයන්හි ඉඩම් කොටස් වල භුක්තිය සහ හිමිකම් අවුරුදු එකක් පමණ මෙම පැමිනිලිකරුට නොලැබී තිබීම මත මෙම නඩුවේ විත්තිකරු බදු ඉඩමේ 1වැනි උපලේඛණයේ ඉඩමෙහි පිහිටි ගොඩනැගිල්ලේ නීති විරෝධීව ඇතුල් වී ඇත.". It speaks of the fact that the 1st Plaintiff had lost the possession of the building for a period of one year from 17.05.1978. This is the day on which the 1st Plaintiff had entered into a lease agreement with Karunatilleke for a period of fifteen years. The lease was in respect of the land in its entirety including the only building standing on it. It is highly improbable that the said lessee would have entered into such an agreement with the father of the 1st Plaintiff, if the Defendant was already in occupation of the building standing on that land. There is clear evidence that the lessee had his office to the sawmill in that building. The statement that the Plaintiff had lost possession for over one year does not logically fit in anywhere as the lessee is entitled to possess the land along with the building, during the lease period. In fact, it is said in evidence that the lessee was in possession of the leased-out building and the land for over 20 years, until the fiscal had placed the 1st Plaintiff back in possession, in June 2001. This statement, therefore, does not indicate exactly when Balin Appuhamy came into possession. It merely states he had come to possess when the Plaintiffs have lost possession of their land temporarily.

If this is the correct position as asserted by the Defendant, then the only building standing on the land, must have been the one put up by Balin Appuhamy who possessed it since that point of time as evident from the contents of the fiscal report, marked as 'X'. That proposition creates another ambiguity as to the building the father of the 1st Plaintiff had leased out on 17.05.1978 to his lessee. If the only building was already in possession of Balin Appuhamy, then the lessee would have been placed in possession of 'another' building by the 1st Plaintiff's father on his land. But the plan of the land, to which the 1st Plaintiff had claimed paper title, led in evidence indicates there is only one building standing on it.

The contention of the learned Counsel for the Defendant that Balin Appuhamy was in possession of the Kada Kamaraya prior to 1978 not as a licensee, who had entered the premises with leave and license of the Plaintiffs and thereby acknowledging the rights of the Plaintiffs over that premises, but as a trespasser who did not recognize any property rights of them over the said premises, does not fit in with the evidence presented before the trial Court. If Balin Appuhamy was already in possession of the only building standing on that land as a trespasser prior to 1978, then why did he allow the lessee, who acknowledged the title of Plaintiffs, to have his office in the same building?

All these factors favour an inference that Balin Appuhamy's construction of the Kada Kamaraya, and occupying it since its construction, is clearly a subsequent event to the leasing out the land described in schedule A of the plaint on 17.05.1978. However, despite the fact it was the Defendant's burden to establish the starting point of his adverse possession, absolutely no evidence was produced by him as to when did Balin Appuhamy come to occupy same. It is also relevant to note that the incoherent statement from the plaint was not put to the 2nd Plaintiff who gave evidence before the trial Court, by the Defendant, during her cross examination.

Once the issues are raised and accepted by Court, the parties must present evidence in relation to such issues, in assisting the trial Court to reach a determination in respect of each of them. The District Court will have its jurisdiction circumscribed only to determine the dispute, as presented before it by the parties through the issues and on the material presented before it, per Pathmawathie v Jayasekare (1997) 1 Sri L.R. 248. This Court, in Hanaffi v Nallamma (1998) 1 Sri L.R. 73 stated at p. 77, "since the case is not tried on the pleadings, once issues are raised and accepted by the court the pleadings recede to the background. The Court of Appeal was in error in harking back to the pleadings …".

The Plaintiffs too had adopted to a similar strategy before the trial Court to fill out a significant gap in their case in challenging the claim of acquisition of prescriptive title, by introducing the position that Balin Appuhamy came into possess that part of the building due to actions of the lessee, who had allowed him to occupy the building during the lease period, only through their written submissions tendered before that Court. Even if there was evidence to that effect, it will not fill the gap left by the Defendant in his failure to establish a starting point as there too was no mention of a starting point to the adverse possession.

The only evidence presented before the trial Court, touching on the circumstances under which Balin Appuhamy came to possess the part of the building, is from the said fiscal's report, in which the Court officer had noted down the explanation of the 1st Plaintiff as well as of the Defendant for not executing the writ on that part of the building. The Defendant relied on a particular segment of the fiscal report by marking it as V3a. The contents of this segment will be considered in greater detail at a later stage of this judgment. For the purpose of consideration of the area presently under review, it is relevant to note that both Balin Appuhamy and the 1st Plaintiff's father were dead when the 1st Plaintiff instituted the instant action. Owing to that reason there is no direct evidence presented through the witnesses who had personal knowledge of the circumstances under which the Defendant came into possess the Kada Kamaraya standing on the 1st Plaintiff's land. The contents of the fiscal report, being a contemporaneous official record as to the respective positions taken up by the parties, although based on hearsay material, were admitted as evidence in the trial before the Court and not disputed by either party as to its contents or to its reliability.

In that segment of the report V3a, it is indicated that the Defendant had claimed before the fiscal that his grandfather Balin Appuhamy, having constructed the building, was in its possession for over "50" years. Once more, the Defendant had not referred to any starting point or explained exactly when and how Balin Appuhamy came into possess that part of the building, in answering the fiscal's query.

Clearly there are ample evidence before the trial Court, that the Defendant and his predecessor were in continuous possession of the part of the building they allegedly occupied since late-seventies. The Grama Niladhari Somapala, stated to Court that Balin Appuhamy had operated a grocery store in the disputed premises and have distributed food provisions under the Government sponsored food stamps scheme. Having called the said witness, the Defendant did not elicit the time of commencement of that business, the capacity in which Balin Appuhamy operated that grocery store or whether there any official records as to its ownership.

Considering the available evidence, I am of the view that the Defendant, in his attempt to discharge the evidentiary burden as to the starting point of his adverse possession, has undoubtedly failed in that task, and cannot circumvent his failure by placing reliance on an averment in the plaint as the contents of the pleadings could not be taken as 'evidence' presented before Court. The failure of the Defendant to present evidence before the trial Court as to the starting point at which he had commenced his adverse possession is therefore fatal to his case, leaving his claim restricted to an instance of mere possession of the Kada Kamaraya for over a period of ten years, with no specific point of commencement of any adverse possession.

In addition to the proof of the starting point of the period of prescription, it was also incumbent upon the Defendant to establish that his possession for over ten years by a title adverse to or independent to that of the Plaintiff, as the section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance imposes such a requirement, in proof of a claim of acquisition of prescriptive title.

It had been emphasized by the appellate Courts that, in a claim of acquisition of a prescriptive title under section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, mode of proving such acquisition is by way of presenting cogent evidence with specific reference as to the nature of possession. The applicable law had clearly been laid down by this Court in Sirajudeen v Abbas(supra) where G.P.S. de Silva C.J., citing Walter Pereira's Laws of Ceylon, 2nd Edition, page 396, concurred with the learned author in stating that "as regards the mode of proof of prescriptive possession, mere general statements of witnesses that the plaintiff possessed the land in dispute for a number of years exceeding the prescriptive period are not evidence of the uninterrupted and adverse possession necessary to support a title by prescription" and, citing the judgment of Peynis v. Pedro 3 SCC 125, added that "it is necessary that the witnesses should speak to specific facts, and the question of possession has to be decided thereupon by Court".

The only reliable evidence pointing to the nature of the possession of over that part of the building could be found contained in the said fiscal report, marked 'V3a' by the Defendant himself and his oral testimony on that incident. It indicates that when the fiscal had enquired from the Plaintiff as well as the Defendant as to the basis of the latter's possession of Kada Kamaraya, they have stated their respective positions to the Court official. The positions taken up by the two contesting parties at that point of time are the only available evidence in relation to the circumstances under which Balin Appuhamy came to possess the Kada Kamaraya and nature of the relationship he has had with the father of the 1st Plaintiff, the original owner of the land, long before the instant action was instituted.

The issuance of the writ of execution by the Court, was on the basis that the building standing on the land is in the possession of the overholding lessee Karunatilleke, in its entirety. The fiscal, during his first visit to the land had noted that the present Defendant too was in occupation of the building, but his possession is limited only to a part of the building. Anticipating a legal issue in execution of the writ in its existing form, the Court officer had thereafter sought further directions from trial Court, reporting back his observations, based on what the parties have claimed before him. It is in this context; that he had enquired from the Plaintiff and the present Defendant as to the reasons for the latter's possession of a part of the building.

The Defendant claimed that his grandfather Balin Appuhamy had constructed the building and occupied it for over 50 years, while the 1st Plaintiff asserted that his father too had financially contributed to the construction cost of the building. The Defendant, in his evidence before the trial Court referred to the enquiry made by the fiscal in the presence of Sugathadasa, the 1st Plaintiff. He stated that the 1st Plaintiff came along with the fiscal in executing the writ. When questioned by the fiscal, the 1st Plaintiff admitted that the building is possessed for over "50" years by Balin Appuhamy. He also added that his father had shared the construction cost of the Kada Kamaraya with Balin Appuhamy. The evidence of the Defendant varied with the contemporaneous record of the fiscal only as to the number of years of possession. It is undisputed that the other part of the building was in the possession of the overholding lessee.

It is important to note from that evidence that there was some form of agreement or an understanding existed between the Plaintiff's father and the Defendant's grandfather over the cost of construction of the building. Both parties admittedly have contributed towards the construction cost of the building that had been put up on the 1st Plaintiff's land. Whether the construction was in relation only to an addition made to an already existing building or to a partition of an already constructed building is not clarified by the Defendant. But the fact that the Plaintiff's father's contribution towards construction cost of the Kada Kamaraya is clearly admitted by the Defendant.

This factual position is indicative of the Defendant conceding to the right of the 1st Plaintiff over his land and to the building constructed over it. The Defendant never claimed acquisition of prescriptive title over the land, when the Court official made enquiries in executing the writ. It is therefore clear that when Balin Appuhamy had accepted an unspecified part of the construction cost of Kada Kamaraya from the 1st Plaintiff's father, the former had conceded to the latter's rights over the land and the Kada Kamaraya. The Defendant, however, in his evidence said that his grandfather constructed the building on his own land, and thereby contradicted his own statement to the fiscal.

Therefore, it is clear that Balin Appuhamy, when moving into the building he claims to have constructed over the 1st Plaintiff's land, had conceded to the rights of the Plaintiffs and occupied it under the 1st Plaintiff's father and thus assumed a subordinate character in possessing the said Kada Kamaraya. If that in fact the case is then the Defendant must, in the alternative, establish at which point that he had emerged from that subordinate character, which could be referable to an act of ouster for he must possess the property by a title adverse to or independent of that of the Plaintiffs.

In Seeman v David (2000) 3 Sri L.R. 23, at p.26, it had been stated that:

> "it is well settled law that a person who entered property in a subordinate character cannot claim prescriptive rights till he changes his character by an overt act. He is not entitled to do so by forming a secret intention unaccompanied by an act of ouster. The proof of adverse possession is a condition precedent to the claim for prescriptive rights".

It is the Defendant's evidence that his grandfather was in possession of that part of the building since its construction and only in November 1983, Balin had rented it out to one Lionel Ekanayake for a period of five years said to be on a notarially executed document, before the execution of the said deed of gift in his favour in the year 1987. However, in this instance too the Defendant did not produce any document in support of that claim, nor this position was ever put to the 2nd Plaintiff who gave evidence before the trial Court. The 2nd Plaintiff, in her evidence stated that she was unaware of the reason for exclusion of the Defendant from the execution of the writ. She also learnt that Balin Appuhamy, who was in possession of the building, had fraudulently executed a deed at a subsequent stage, a position the Defendant himself conceded to during his evidence.

It is significant to note that the Defendant never claimed that he did not pay any rent to the Plaintiffs during his evidence. This is an important aspect of the Defendant's case in establishing adverse possession. It was for him to establish that he never paid any rent from the day he came into possession, if he was to be considered as a trespasser as his Counsel contends. Strangely, the Defendant was totally silent on that important aspect during the trial, having had the opportunity to say so.

The Defendant also admitted that neither him nor Balin Appuhamy paid any assessment rates to the local authority in respect of the building at any point of time. On the other hand, the Plaintiffs had tendered proof of payment of assessment rates but did not clearly establish that they were paid in respect of the premises in dispute. The witness from the local authority however, denied the fact that the disputed premises was given the assessment number 146 as the Defendant suggested. Countering the claim of the Defendant, the Plaintiffs have led evidence in support of a complaint made by them to the Government Agent in September 1993, regarding illegal felling of trees by the lessee.

The Defendant, in support of his claim of prescription, relied heavily on the finding of the trial Court that he was in possession of the disputed building for a 'long period' of time. However, the trial Court, as pointed out by the learned President's Counsel, opted to answer the issue Nos. 12 and 13 raised on the point as "does not arise" since the matter is Res Judicata among the parties. At most, the findings of the trial Court only support the Defendant's case to the extent that he was in possession of the building for well over the requisite time period of ten years.

However, the mere fact of long possession does not qualify any person to claim prescriptive title under section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. Having come into possession of an immovable property under a subordinate capacity, a person could subsequently acquire prescriptive title to an immovable property by changing the character of his possession by an overt act of ouster. It had already been laid down in Sirajudeen v Abbas (supra) that "…what needs to be stressed is that the fact of occupation alone would not suffice to satisfy the provisions of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. One of the essential elements of the plea of prescriptive title as provided for in section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance is proof of possession by a title adverse to or independent of that of the claimant or plaintiff". Sharvananda J, as he was then, stated in de Silva v Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (1973) 80 N.L.R. 292 stated at p.295 that;

> "The principle of law is well established that a person who bases his title in adverse possession must show by clear and unequivocal evidence that his possession was hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of his title to the property claimed. In order to constitute adverse possession, the possession must be in denial of the title of the true owner. The acts of the person in possession should be irreconcilable with the rights of the true owner; the person in possession must claim to be so as of right as against the true owner."

In Solomon Dias v William Singho & Others (2015) 1 Sri L.R. 277, Gooneratne J stated at 286 that "… mere possession for a period of time cannot give rise to a plea of ouster". The resultant position is there was no acceptable evidence presented by the Defendant establishing an overt act of ouster.

In view of the contention advanced by the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiffs that, if at all what Balin Appuhamy had conveyed to the Defendant is his 'right' over the possession of the building only and therefore he is not entitled to acquire prescriptive title to it as his claim in the trial Court was only regard to a room of a building and not with regard to a land it stood on, it is necessary to consider the question of law that had been formulated on that premise, at this stage of the judgment.

Learned Counsel for the Defendant sought to counter that contention by stating that in terms of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance not only lands but immovable properties are also made subject to acquisition of rights by prescription.

It could well be that the learned President's Counsel relied on the dicta of Drieberg J in Samaranayake v. Mendoris (1928) 30 N L R 203, in presenting his contention on this point. In that judgment, Drieberg J, quoted the following passage from The Digest, XLVI., 1, 12 (Monroe's Translation) where the underlying law had been stated clearly. It stated "where a man builds on another man's ground with his own materials, the building becomes the property of the person who owns the soil itself, and, if the' former knew that the ground was another's, he is regarded as having lost the ownership of the materials of his own free will; consequently, even if the building should be demolished, he has no good right of action to recover the materials".

Sansoni J, as he was then, in Kangaratnam v Suppiah (1957) 61 NLR 282, following the dicta of Drieberg J in Samaranayake v. Mendoris (ibid), stated that "it is clear beyond doubt that our law does not recognize the ownership of a building apart from the land on which it stands". In this context, it is relevant to mention here that the changes in the contemporary socio-economic considerations have made inroads to the said common law principle, referred to in Samaranayake v. Mendoris, with the subsequent enactment of Condominium Property Act No. 12 of 1970, which was subsequently replaced by Apartment Ownership Law No. 22 of 1973 as amended.

It is correctly pointed out by the learned Counsel for the Defendant that section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance refers to "lands or immovable property" and the Kada Kamaraya containing of 747 square feet is clearly be taken as an item of immovable property. In his answer the Defendant had taken up the position in paragraph 3 that on the deed No. 12182 he has become the 'owner' of both the building as well as the land on which it stood. In paragraph 4, he states that he and his predecessor Balin Appuhamy had possessed the Kada Kamaraya for over 10 years prior to the institution of action, a position he maintained before the trial Court as well.

Learned Counsel for the Defendant, having referred to the inclusion of "immovable property" in section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, did not elaborate any further in his submissions as to the failure to produce the said deed of gift before the trial Court, in support of his claim of acquisition of prescriptive title to the land.

Both parties have contributed towards the cost of the building, although the individual share of each party is not known. Balin Appuhamy had accepted the 1st Plaintiff's father's contribution both in monetary terms as well as by providing a plot of land to build on. The Defendant did not make a claim to the land in the presence of the fiscal. The evidence available before the trial Court clearly points to the reasonable inference that the Plaintiff's father, having allowed Balin Appuhamy to build over his land and by sharing the cost of construction, had thereby become a co-owner of the building.

The above factual position was revisited once more, in order to consider them in the light of another important principle of law. The factual position referred to above, seemed of an instance where the principle of jus superficiarium applies. In Ahamadu Natchia v Muhamadu Natchia (1905) 8 NLR 330, Layards CJ stated the applicable principle in jus superficiarium as follows:

> "The ownership of a house apart from the site on which it stands is well known to our law. It is called the right of superficies. The jus superficiarium is the right which a person has to a building standing on another's ground. It cannot be termed full ownership, for no one can be legally full owner of a building who has not the ownership of the soil. It is the right to build on the soil and to hold and use the building so erected, until such time as the owner of the soil tenders the value of the building, if the amount to be paid has not been previously agreed upon. The right is acquired and lost like immovable property and is even presumed to be granted when the owner of the ground > permits another to build thereupon. The right can be alienated, and consequently there can be no doubt of its passing to the heirs of the original owner of the right (Grot. 2, 46, 9, 10, and 11).

In determining the appeal upon a retiral, Muhamadu Natchia v Ahamadu Natchia (1906) 9 NLR 331, Lascelles ACJ thought it fit to emphasise that an agreement between the landowner and the person who acquires the right is the foundation of the right under jus superficiarium. His Lordship strongly recommended adopting a cautious approach in situations where this principle of law applies since "… claims to a right of 'superficies' should not be allowed unless the agreement between the parties is clearly demonstrated. To sanction laxity of proof in this respect would be to expose proprietors of house property to serious danger from claimants alleging that some former owner has permitted them or their ancestors to build on his land." It has been held by Gratian J in Samarasekera v Munasinghe (1954) 55 NLR 558, that the servitude of jus superficiarum could "… also be acquired by prescription where a person who, in appropriate circumstances, has erected a building on another's land and has without interference by the soil-owner exclusively enjoyed the use and enjoyment of it as a superficiary for the requisite period of ten years". His Lordship had further clarified such acquisitions on prescription are confined to the servitude, and not to soil-rights.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council, in the judgment of Suppiah v Kanagaratnam (1960) 61 NLR 553, were in "complete agreement" with the principles of law that had been enunciated in the judgments of Samaranayaka v Mendoris (supra) and Kangaratnam v Suppiah (supra), and quoted the section reproduced below from Grotius, contained in Book II of his Jurisprudence of Holland at Ch. 46, sections

> "8. The right of superficies is the right which a man has to a building standing upon another man's ground.
> 9. This right is not full ownership, because in law no one can be full owner of the building if he is not at the same time owner of the ground: but it is the right of building upon the site, and of retaining and using the building until the ground-owner pays the value of the building or an agreed sum.
> 10. This right is acquired and lost like immovable property: and is understood to be effectively granted when the owner of the soil allows anyone to build upon it."

Their Lordships, in referring to the pleadings before them, observed that "It is difficult to suppose that anyone reading these pleadings and the issues framed thereon would infer that the plaintiff at the trial was going to endeavour to establish a right to a jus superficiarium as against the defendant in his capacity as lessee under a lease for 20 years. This right in Roman Dutch law, which seems but rarely to have arisen for consideration in the Courts of Ceylon and as to the nature of which it is necessary to refer to the ancient jurists, is nowhere mentioned in the pleadings or issues."

In the instant appeal too, the Defendant did not present a claim of prescriptive title to the disputed building by placing reliance on the principle of jus superficiarium before the trial Court but was content with presenting purely a claim of acquisition of prescriptive title upon possession of the building and the land under it

These principles of law, although relevant to the consideration of the consequential question of law formulated by the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs, have no application to the question of law formulated by the Defendant. The High Court of Civil Appeal had considered the challenges mounted by the Defendant to the paper title of the Plaintiffs by claiming acquisition of prescriptive title by suggesting issue Nos. 12 and 13 and decided that the Defendant had failed to establish either of these two issues by presenting evidence. In answering the issue No. 12 against the Defendant, the High Court stated that he had failed to prove the very deed on which he claimed title to the land where the disputed building stands. Issue No. 13 too had been answered by the High Court of Civil Appeal on the basis that the Defendant did not prove the alleged acquisition of prescriptive title, either by Balin Appuhamy or by tacking on to the period of possession under Balin Appuhamy to that of his own.

The Defendant's complaint was the High Court of Civil Appeal had failed to consider his case that had been presented before the trial Court on the lines that had been argued before this Court by the learned Counsel. The High Court of Civil Appeal decided issue No. 12 in the negative primarily due to non-production of the deed of gift No. 12182 before the trial Court. The Defendant had admittedly relied on the said deed in support of his claim to the land by raising issue No. 12 over it at the commencement of the trial, and therefore it was incumbent upon him to establish the very basis on which he claim title to the land covered under the Kada Kamaraya, by proving due execution of the said deed, under section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. During the trial before the District Court, the Defendant was called by the Plaintiff as a witness during his case. During his examination in chief, said deed was marked as P14. The Defendant then conceded to the position put to him by the Plaintiff that it is a fraudulent deed, an allegation already made by the 2nd Plaintiff, in her evidence. The appeal brief contained a copy of the said Deed of Gift (at p. 246). Having placed reliance on it by making specific reference to it during his evidence by marking it as P14, the Defendant nonetheless withheld its production to Court and did not lead evidence of its due execution. The copy of the deed bears marking given to it 'P14', but the absence of the initials of the trial Judge on it seems to suggest that it had not been produced before Court and thereby abandoning his claim based on the said deed.

It has already been referred to earlier on in this judgment that the High Court of Civil Appeal did consider the issue Nos. 12 and 13 of the Defendant and answered them as "not proved". I have carefully re-evaluated the evidence placed before the trial Court in its totality and of the firm view that the appellate Court had correctly answered the said two issues. Despite the fact that there was evidence that the Defendant was in possession of the disputed part of the building since late seventies until the institution of the instant action in February 2003, he had starved his case of any evidence, either in relation to the starting point of adverse possession or in relation to the point at which the permissive possession was changed to that of an adverse possession, by proof of an overt act of ouster. Thus, it is amply clear that the High Court of Civil Appeal had more than one reason to answer the issue Nos. 12 and 13 in the negative as they remain unproved.

It is appropriate to consider the remaining two questions of law, as formulated by the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs as consequential issues of law, I part with this judgment.

With the dismissal of the Plaintiffs' action on the basis of Res Judicata by the trial Court, he had preferred an appeal to the High Court of Civil Appeal challenging the said dismissal. One of the grounds on which the Plaintiffs relied on in support of their appeal was that the trial Court had erroneously determined that the Defendant was in possession of the building for a long time either legally or illegally. The Plaintiffs have mounted a challenge on that conclusion reached by the trial Court on the footing that the trial Court had failed to consider the basis on which the Defendant was in possession. The Defendant's position is that he was in long possession of the building and therefore had prescribed to its ownership. Clearly, in view of these considerations, the acquisition of prescriptive title had been very much an issue before the High Court of Civil Appeal. The appellate Court had accordingly pronounced its determination on those issues concerning prescription after due consideration.

The Defendant sought leave to appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal and after hearing Counsel, this Court granted leave to consider the question whether the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal err in failing to consider the prescriptive title of the Defendant and his grandfather Balin Appuhamy?

Thus, the claim of acquisition of prescriptive title by the Defendant through his grandfather Balin Appuhamy had become the core issue of this appeal. Its consideration is necessitated by the question of law that had been formulated on the issue of prescription to which this Court had granted leave. In granting leave, this Court acted under section 5C (1) of the High Court of the Provinces (Amendment) Act No. 54 of 2006, since it was of the "opinion the matter involves a substantial question of law or is a matter fit for review by such Court". Article 127(1) of the Constitution conferred this Court with jurisdiction "for the correction of all errors in fact or in law which shall be committed by", Court of Appeal and any Court of First Instance, and in this particular instance, by the High Court of Civil Appeal holden in North Western Province at Kurunegala and the District Court of Kuliyapitiya.

In the circumstances, the question whether the Defendant is entitled to challenge the issue of prescription since he has failed to appeal against the Judgment of the trial Court with regard to the issues raised by him in respect of prescription has already been decided by this Court when it granted leave having considered same as a "substantial question of law".

The mere failure to prefer an appeal by the Defendant, against the determination of the trial Court on the issues that had been raised on his plea of prescription, where the Court had not answered in either way due to the reason that they did not arise for consideration, does not therefore preclude the Defendant from reagitating them before this Court, in view of the fact that this Court had already granted leave on the issue of law dealing with the question of prescription. But the Defendant could only agitate the issue only to the extent to which leave was granted by this Court.

It was contended on behalf of the Plaintiffs that the failure of the Defendant to challenge the issue pertaining to prescription in terms of section 772 of the Civil Procedure Code disentitles him from raising the same before this Court. The section 772 allows a respondent, not only to support a decree but also to take any objection to such decree, which he could have taken by way of appeal, although he had not appealed against any part of it. To avail this opportunity, such a respondent was obligated by the provisions of that section to give seven days' notice in writing of such objection.

This contention need not be considered in detail, in view of the finding contained in the two immediately preceding paragraphs. Suffice it to state that mere failure to act under section 772 of the Civil Procedure Code, does not operate as an absolute bar or an automatic disqualification against such a respondent, as the appellate Courts have consciously retained a wide discretion to hear such a respondent, in fulfilling its responsibility "to do complete justice between the parties", despite him not seeking relief under the said section. This point had already been clarified by this Court in Ratwatte v Gunasekera (1987) 2 Sri L.R. 260, where Sharvananda CJ, in view of the contention that the plaintiffs in that particular instance had failed to comply with the provisions of section 772(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, said "… the provision does not bar the Court, in the exercise of its powers to do complete justice between the parties, permitting him to object to the decree, even though he had, failed to give such notice. The Court of Appeal has inherent jurisdiction to grant or refuse such permission in the interest of justice."

Thus, the answers to the question of law raised by the Defendant and the consequential questions of law raised by the Plaintiffs are as follows :-

Question of law of the Defendant - No

Question of Law No. 1 of the Plaintiffs - Yes, only to the extent to which leave was granted,

Question of Law No. 2 of the Plaintiffs – Yes, only to the extent to which leave was granted,

Question of Law No 3 of the Plaintiffs – No.

The appeal is dismissed with costs as the only question of law raised by the Defendant is answered in the negative.

Introduction

Hettige Don Brampi Singho the Defendant-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Appellant) preferred an appeal to this Court against the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court of Rathnapura which issued a Judgment in favour of Tennakoon Mudiyanselage Dingiri Mahathmaya the Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Respondent) and this court granted leave to appeal on the question of law set out in paragraph 14 (a) of the Petition dated 5th December 2011.

The relevant question of law is reproduced for ease of reference

"14(a) Have the Learned High Court Judges erred in holding that the respondents have identified the subject land?"

Learned President's Counsel who appeared for the Appellant reiterated that his appeal is solely on non-identification of the corpus. Both learned Counsel made comprehensive submissions and this Judgment has taken into consideration the Petition, Affidavit, Written Submissions and all annexed materials.

It will be prudent to set out the facts of this case and in the process, it will be mandatory to refer to the history (which is available in the brief) of this litigation.

Brief Facts

The deceased Respondent, Tennakone Mudiyansalage Dingiri Mahathmaya of Sannasgama filed a plaint at the Court of Request of Ratnapura under the case number C.R No. Class RET/20 No. 20256 to eject the deceased Appellant, Hettige Don Brampi Singho and Dhanapala Arachchilage Carolis Appu. The case was settled and the terms of settlement were duly filed on the 21st December 1927. The terms of settlement were as follows:

1. Plaintiff be declared entitled to the land called "Medawatta" and the partly tiled and thatched house standing there all.
2. The defendants to remain in the said house paying an annual rent of Rs. 3 to the plaintiff for a period of 50 years.
3. Parties to bear their own costs.

Following this on the 10th February 1928 the Commissioner of Request entered the Decree.

Further, a lease agreement was entered on the 30th November 1927 between Tennakone Mudiyansalage Dingiri Mahathmaya (Deceased Respondent) and Hettige Don Brampi Singho (Deceased Appellant) for a lease amount of Rs. 150/= covering a period of 50 years. A Deed of Lease No. 12525 (hereinafter referred to as "Deed of Lease No. 12525") dated 30th November 1927 attested by D.P.S. Rajapakse was signed by all parties and duly registered to effect this understanding.

Since Hettige Don Brampi Singho (Deceased Appellant) did not vacate the said land and premises upon the expiration of the Deed of Lease No. 12525 in or around 30th November 1977, the deceased Respondent filed this present action to evict him from the said property at the District Court of Ratnapura on the 8th March 1978.

Tennakone Mudiyansalage Dingiri Mahathmaya who was the original 1st Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent died during the pendency of the action and was substituted by Piyaseeli Podimenike Tennakoon who is the Substituted Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent. Further Hettige Don Brampi Singho who was the original Defendant-Respondent-Appellant died during the pendency of the action and was substituted by H. Dona Kamalawathie who is the Substituted Defendant-Respondent-Appellant. It is also noteworthy that the Plaint was amended on the 12th May 1994. The Appellant filed their answer on the 13th February 1980. The Learned District Court Judge dismissed the plaint on the basis that the land is not properly identified.

The Respondents appealed against the said Order to the Civil Appellate High Court. The Learned Judges decided that the District Judge has misunderstood the nature of the case and therefore had misdirected himself in dismissing the case for non-identification of the property. The Civil Appellate Judges entered a judgment in favour of the Respondent.

The Appellant has invoked the jurisdiction of this court by way of a Petition dated 5th December 2011 and this Court has granted leave to appeal on the above-mentioned question of law. Since both Counsels made submissions on both judgments, I have carefully perused the same.

Identity of the Corpus

In Mary Beatrice et al. v Seneviratne (1997) 1 SLR 197 Senanayake J took the opportunity to quote the following passage from Maasdorp, Institutes of Cape Law 4th Edition Volume 3 page 248;

> "A lessee as already stated is not entitled to dispute his landlord's title and consequently he cannot refuse to give up possession of the property at the termination of his lease on the ground that he is himself the rightful owner of the said property. His duty in such a case is first to restore the property to the lessor and then litigate with him as to the ownership."

The above passage was accepted by the Supreme Court in the case of Bandara v Piyasena 77 NLR 102.

Taking into consideration the above passage and the judgments in Bandara v Piyasena (supra) and Mary Beatrice (supra) it could be seen that this is an action in relation to the fulfilment or non-fulfilment of contractual obligations arsing between a lessor and lessee. Therefore, this is an action filed against a tenant holding over. Hence a distinction can be made between a rei vindicatio action and an action against a tenant holding over. [Vide Pathirana v Jayasundera 58 NLR 169 @ 173]

As per the sole question of law raised, it is pertinent to peruse the judgments of the District Court and the Civil Appellate High Court. I find the observations made by the Judges of the Civil Appellate Court acceptable as the learned District Judge had misidentified this case as a case of actio rei vindicatio. It could also be seen that the learned District Judge had relied on the case of Peeris et al v Savunhamy 54 NLR 207 in arriving at his decision. Due to the importance placed by the District Court judge on the case of Peeris v Savunhamy, it is essential that I take into consideration the dictum of that judgement and its applicability to the present case.

The case of Peeris v Savunhamy dealt with two issues in its appeal. Firstly, it dealt with the burden of proof upon the plaintiff to prove that he has a dominium and secondly, the court dealt with the issue of whether the court could reverse the findings of a trial judge if it was demonstrated that he had misjudged the facts. In that case the plaintiff sought to vindicate title to an undivided share of a land. However, the plaintiff had no title deeds for her share and based her entire claim on prescriptive possession. The court held that in an action for declaration of title to land, where the defendant is in possession of the land in dispute, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that he has dominium and further the courts went on to state that a finding of fact may be reversed on appeal if the trial Judge has demonstrably misjudged the position.

In my view this case is not relevant to the facts in issue, as in the present case the establishment of the dominium is not the issue but the identity of the corpus. It is appropriate to take into consideration the observation made by Lord Halsbury in the case Queen v Leathern (H.L.) 1901 at 495 with regard to the application of case laws;

> "…that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved or assumed to be proved since the generality of the expressions which may be found they are not intended to the expositions of the whole law but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it. Such a mode of reasoning assumes that the law is necessarily a logical code, whereas every lawyer must acknowledge that the law is not always, logical at all."

Following the decision in Peeris v Savunhamy many cases elaborated the position with regard to the establishment of the identity of the corpus. In the case of Seyed Mohamed et al. v Perera 58 NLR 246, Sinnetamby J in not following the decision in the case of Peeris v Savunhamy was of the view that to identify the premises in dispute in an action for declaration of title to immovable property, the Court may take into consideration statements of boundaries in title deeds of adjoining lands belonging to persons who are strangers to the action and who have not been called to give evidence. The evidence of such title deeds may become inadmissible only if objection to their production is taken in the court of first instance; they cannot be objected to for the first time in appeal.

The Supreme Court in Ratnayake et al. v Kumarihamy et al. (2005) 1 SLR 303, in deciding whether the trial court had correctly identified the extent of the corpus was of the opinion that both oral and documentary evidence could be considered to identify a corpus on a balance of probability.

This shows that the established law or procedure in identifying the extent of a corpus in a dispute takes into consideration statement of boundaries in title deeds of not only the land in dispute but the adjoining lands even though they are strangers to the action and both oral and documentary evidence is considered on a balance of probabilities. As found in any rei vindicatio action, the burden of proof in an action against a tenant holding over is on the plaintiff and they need to prove such an onus on a balance of probability. [Vide Loku Menike et al. v Gunasekare (1997) 2 SLR 281]

Now I consider the judgment of the High Court, where the learned judges had identified the issues, briefly set out their reasons and had come to their conclusions stating that the said corpus is adequately identified.

In order to identify the corpus "Medawatte" we need to trace the point at which both parties agree to the extent and identity of the corpus. This could be seen with regard to the settlement agreement entered into at the Court of Requests of Ratnapura on the 21st December 1927. Accordingly, the Commissioner of Request entered the Decree on the 10th February 1928.

It is pertinent to reproduce the relevant portion of the decree where the corpus is identified and explained.

Decree

"This action coming on for final disposal before W. Samsons esqur Commissioner of Requests, Ratnapura on the 10th Day of February 1928, in the presence of Messrs Attygala, Muttettuwegama, on the part of the Plaintiff, and of Messrs Wijetilaka and Peeris, on the part of the Defendants, it is ordered and decreed, that the Plaintiff be and the same is hereby declared entitled to the land called Medawatta situate at Sannasgama bounded on the North by Digarolleidama, East by Palegampolagewatta, South by High Road and West by Landewatta, containing in extent, 3 Seru Kurakkan sowing and the part by titled and thatched house thereon."

(Emphasis added)

It is also important to take into consideration the description of the corpus provided in the Deed of Lease No. 12525 for clarity as all parties have signed that agreement thereby agreeing on the identity of the corpus.

"ඉහත කී බදු දීමනාකාර යාට අයිතිව තිබූ සබරගමු පළාතේ රත්නපුර දිස්ත්‍රික්කුවේ නවදුන් කෝරළේ උඩපත්තුවේ සන්නස්ගම තිබෙන මැදවත්තට මායිම් උතුරට දිග රොලෙල් ඉඩමද නැගෙනහිරට කරෝලිස් අප්පුගේ වත්තද දකුණට මහපාරද බස්නා ඉරට ලන්දෙ වත්තද මෙහි තුළ කුරක්කන් සේරු තුනක පමණ වපසරිය ඇති ඉඩම තුළ මෙහි බදු ගැණුම්කාරයා විසින් ගොඩ නඟා පදින්විව සිටින දැනට උළු සහ වල් සෙවිලි ගෙය පිළිබඳ බිම් බද්දද..."

(Emphasis added)

English translation of the description mentioned above:

The said Lessor owned an allotment of Land with the land lease called Medawaththa together with the tile and weed roofed house built by the lessee standing thereon situated at the village of Sannasgama in the Uda Pattu of Nawadun Korale in the District of Rathnapura Sabaragamuwa Province and is bounded on the NORTH by Digarolel Land on the EAST by Land claimed by Karolis Appu on the SOUTH by Main Road and on the WEST by Landewaththa containing in extent of three (3) Seru of Kurakkan...

(Emphasis added)

This brings us to the present action filed in 1978 by the Respondent to evict the Appellant upon the expiration of the Deed of Lease No. 12525 on the 30th November 1977. The schedule in the original plaint filed in 1978 described the property as follow:

"සබරගමු පළාතේ රත්නපුර දිසාවේ නවදුන් කෝරළේ උඩපත්තුවේ සන්නස්ගම තිබෙන මැදවත්තට මායිම්: උතුරට දිගරොල්ලේ ඉඩමද, නැගෙනහිරට කරෝලිස් අප්පුගේ වත්තද, දකුණට මහපාරද, හා බස්නාහිරට ලන්දෙ වත්තද යන මෙකී මායිම් තුළ කුරක්කන් සේරු තුනක් පමණ වපසරිය ඇති ඉඩම හා එහි තුල පිහිටි ගොඩනැගිල්ලන් සමඟ."

(Emphasis added)

English Translation of the above schedule in the original plaint filed in 1978:

"Allotment of Land called Medawaththa together with the building and everything standing thereon situated at the village of Sannasgama in the Uda Pattu of Nawadun Korale in the District of Rathnapura Sabaragamuwa Province and is bounded on the NORTH by Digarolle Land on the EAST by Land claimed by Karolis Appu on the SOUTH by Main Road and on the WEST by Landewaththa containing in extent of three (3) Seru of Kurakkan…"

(Emphasis added)

According to the amended plaint dated 12th May 1994 the schedule described the property as follows.

"සබරගමු පළාතේ රත්නපුර දිසාවේ නවදුන් කෝරළේ උඩ පත්තුවේ සන්නස්ගම තිබෙන මැදවත්ත නැමති ඉඩමට මායිම්: උතුරට දිගරොල්ලේ ඉඩමද, නැගෙනහිරට කරෝලිස් අප්පුගේ වත්තද,

English Translation of the above schedule in the amended plaint filed in 1994:

Allotment of Land called Medawaththa together with the buildings and everything standing thereon situated at the village of Sannasgama in the Uda Pattu of Nawadun Korale in the District of Rathnapura Sabaragamuwa Province and is bounded on the NORTH by Digarolle Land on the EAST by Land claimed by Karolis Appu on the SOUTH by Main Road and on the WEST by Landewaththa containing in extent of three (3) Seru of Kurakkan.

Presently, said land is depicted in Plan No. 1004 dated 12/07/1983 made by M.S. The appellant filed his answer dated 13th February 1980 and described the property as follows:

> "සබරගමු පළාතේ රත්නපුර දිසාවේ නවදුන් කෝරළේ උඩ පත්තුවේ සන්නස්ගම පිහිටි උතුරට පහල ලියැද්ද, සහ පිටකුඛුර ද, නැගෙනහිරට හෙන්ද්‍රික් අප්පුගේ ඉඩම සහ පාලුගම්පල දෙනිය ද, දකුණට මහ පාර සහ බස්නාහිරට ලන්දෙ වත්තද, මායිම් වූ කුරක්කන් සේරු 10 ක් පමණ වපසරිය වූ මැදවත්ත, ආටිගලවත්ත, සහ නවගමුවගේ පහලවත්ත නොහොත් දිගරොල්ල සහ ඒකාබද්ධ ඉඩම වේ."

> In the original answer the appellant took the position that the property is a combined property and Weerasingha Haramanis Da Silva Goonathilaka was entitled to 5/16 shares. Further the said Haramanis da Silva Goonathilaka had sold this property and subsequently he is entitled for undivided 5/192 shares.

It could be seen that from 1927 up until 1978 there has been no different description of the corpus in issue. The description of the corpus is said to have been changed after this case was filed.

It comes to my attention that there is a court proceeding at the District Court of Ratnapura marked by the Appellant uner V4. The Appellant had instituted a land & damage case against Dhanapala Arachchillage Joslin Nona and Walliwala Gamage Gunasena. The case number was 8091 and the date of the plaint was 7th November 1968. In paragraph 2 of the plaint, it states as follows:

> "The person called Tennakone Mudiyansalage Dingiri Mahathmaya the original owner of the land called and known as "Madawatta" situated at Sannasgama within the jurisdiction of this court and more fully described in the schedule hereto."

The schedule referred there is identical to the first case filed in 1927, and the plaint in the present case. It is observed that one Mr. B.L. Abeyratne proctor had appeared for the said Brampi Singho the Deceased Appellant who was a plaintiff in a different case No. 8091 dated 7th November 1968 at the District Court of Ratnapura. In the present case the answer and the amended answer states that one Mr. B.L. Abeyratne had appeared for them (appellant). It is also observed that in the Civil Appellate High Court in Ratnapura one Mr. B.L. Abeyratne appeared. This shows that the Appellant themselves acknowledge the fact that the Respondents are the owners of the corpus in dispute and they are in agreement with the identity of the corpus – Medawatte.

The above evidence the fact that the owner is the Respondent and the property in dispute was the property stated in the schedule. Considering all, I find that the findings of the learned High Court Judge is reasonable and supported by evidence as envisaged in the judgment of Ratnayake v Kumarihamy. (supra) Therefore, I hold that the corpus is properly identified.

Bona Fide Conduct

In the amended answer filed in the District Court dated 29th July 1994, in paragraph 12 the appellant takes up a position that he was forced to sign the said deed of lease No. 12525 (Which was executed on the 30th November 1927). This is the first time that the appellant takes up a position that he was forced to sign the said deed.

The circumstances of entering a lease agreement are sufficiently explained at the beginning and it could be seen that from 1927 there has been no complaint made to any relevant authorities of being forced to sign a deed.

Further the Appellant filed a case against Dhanapala Arachchilage Joslin Nona and another at the District Court of Ratnapura under case number 8091, in the plaint at paragraph 3 states as follows;

> "3. The plaintiff built a tiled house on the land and the said Dingirimahatmaya by and upon deed of lease No. 12525 dated 30th November 1927 gave a lease of the said land to the said plaintiff for a period of fifty years form 30th November 1927. "

> (sic)

This shows that such a position was raised by the Appellant to mislead the courts and to get a favourable decision. Such a position taken by the Appellant and later not pursued is disrespectable to the judicial system and it is supported by two Maxims of Equity.

Firstly, we can consider this issue under the maxim of "he who comes in to equity must come with clean hands."

It is an established fact that if a person who approaches the court must come with clean hands and put forward all the material facts otherwise, he shall be guilty of misleading the court and his application or petition may be dismissed at the threshold.

If an applicant makes false statement and/or suppresses material facts or attempts to mislead the court, the court may dismiss action on that ground alone.

In Har Narain v Badri Das [1964] 2 S.C.R. 203, Gajendragadkar J. speaking for the Court observed:

> "It is of utmost importance that in making material statements and setting forth grounds in applications for special leave, care must be taken not to make any statements which are inaccurate, untrue or misleading."

In that case the Court revoked the leave granted because the appellant had made certain inaccurate and misleading statements in his petition for leave to appeal to the Indian Supreme Court.

He who comes into equity must come with clean hands. A court of equity will refuse relief to a plaintiff whose conduct in regard to the subject matter of the litigation has been improper. [Vide Arunima Baruah v Union of India [2007] 6 SCC 120]

As discussed earlier it is observed that the appellants had not acted in good faith. Further they tried to mislead the court through their amended answers stating that the said lease was signed by force. This court will not tolerate any person who is misleading the judicial system and it should be seriously noted and dealt with. As such this court is empowered to dismiss this application in limine and order cost as way of penalty.

Secondly, we can consider this issue under the maxim of suppressio veri et suggestio falsi (suppression of truth and suggestion of falsehood).

This is a fairly new maxim of equity. It has developed to form as a rule of law. Suppressio veri and/or suggestio falsi means that when with respect to a material fact of the case, either suppression of truth or suggestion of a false statement is proven, then the injured party can seek relief. Both of these are considered to be equally wrong. In this situation it is important to consider the case of Regina v Lucas (1981) 2 All ER

1008 which advances the proposition that a lie, if established, would corroborate the story of the opponents. Following this decision Atukorale, J in Karunanayake v Karunasiri Perera (1986) 2 Sri L.R 27 (with Sharvananda, C.J and Colin-Thome, J agreeing) expressed the view that principle envisaged in the Lucas case applies equally to civil cases as it would to criminal cases.

In this situation it could be seen that the Appellants have suggested a false position thereby falling within the maxim of suggestio falsi. The courts in similar jurisdictions such as India, in the case of K.K. Anathan Pillai v State of Kerala (1968) AIR Ker 234, during an ex parte proceeding, the party that had appeared, did not disclose the complete material facts in order to get a stay order in their favour. Later, when the Court discovered this, it was held that such a stay order issued on untrue facts would be deemed invalid. In another Indian case Nand Lal v State of Jammu & Kashmir (1960) AIR JK 19, it was held that when the relevant facts of the case are not correctly and precisely mentioned in the petition, then by application of this maxim, the writ petition will be dismissed, without going into the merits of the case.

As stated earlier it is the view of this court not to tolerate any person who is misleading the judicial system and it should be seriously noted and dealt with. Through the application of such a maxim a false suggestion such as in this case could lead to dismissal of this petition of the Appellant.

In applying both these maxims of equity in the present scenario it could be seen that the Appellant by making a false statement has invited the courts to dismiss this application and order costs. I am of the view that a cost should be imposed upon the Appellant for disrespecting the judicial system and damages must be awarded to the Respondent.

Summary

Considering all the above matters, I dismiss this appeal with costs. Respondents are also entitled to recover the costs in both the District Court and the High Courts. In view of the conclusions reached, I answer the above questions of law in the negative.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

The Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the "plaintiff-respondent") instituted a partition action in the District Court of Gampaha. The corpus as described in the schedule of the plaint is 24.61 perches in extent. The said land is depicted as lot 4 in plan no. P/3263 dated 13 May 1980 (the final partition plan in the aforesaid District Court of Gampaha Case P/17889), which is a divided portion of a land called Higgaha watte. Two defendants are cited in the plaint and the plaintiff-respondent claimed that he along with the two defendants are the lawful co-owners of the corpus. The entitlement of each one of them is set out in paragraph 6 of the plaint. He claims that he is entitled to 480/1392 shares and the 1st and 2nd defendants are entitled to 288/1392 and 624/1392 shares of the said land, respectively.

However, the two defendants disputed the claim of the plaintiff-respondent. They claimed that the plaintiff-respondent has no entitlement to any shares of the said property and the two defendants are the only lawful co-owners.

There is no dispute on the identity of the corpus. All parties agreed that the corpus in question was a part of the corpus in a prior partition action (P/17889). According to the final decree of the said partition action dated 04 May 1981, three persons namely Leelawathie, Rosana alias Seeta Fernando and Kusumawathie derived 480/1392, 288/1392 and 624/1392 shares of the said land respectively. Rosana alias Seeta Fernando is the 1st Defendant in the partition action initiated by the plaintiff-respondent. Said Kusumawathie had transferred all here rights and shares to one Siridasa in 1983 (subsequent to the initial partition action) and said Siridasa transferred all rights and shares derived from Kusumawathie to the 2nd Defendant.

The main contention in this case is as to who derives the shares allocated to aforesaid Leelawathie, from the final decree in the initial partition case No P/17889.

The final decree of the partition case under consideration was issued on the 04th of May 1981. The plaintiff-respondent claims that he derived the co-ownership to this property through the Deed No 451 dated 02.11.1981. Aforesaid Leelawathie [one of the three co-owners on whom the shares were devolved by the final decree in the aforementioned initial partition action (P/17889)] conveyed 10 perches (480/1392 shares) that she derived from the partition case to the plaintiff-respondent through the aforesaid Deed No 451 dated 02.11.1981. This deed was produced marked "P3" at the trial. It is on this basis that the plaintiff-respondent sets out the devolution of the title. Respective shares of the three persons, whom he named as co-owners of the said property has been calculated on this basis.

However, the two defendants disputed the devolution of the title set out by the plaintiff-respondent. They claimed that Leelawathie did not have a right to convey the shares devolved from the final decree in partition action P/17889, to the plaintiff-respondent in 1981. It is their contention that said Leelawathie, had conveyed the 'lot or lots' that would be allocated to her at the final determination of the partition action 17889/P, to one of the other two co-owners namely Kusumawathie by the deed no 3936 attested in 1976, while the said partition action was in progress. (The aforesaid deed 3936 was marked 1V2 by the defendants through the cross-examination of the plaintiff-respondent subject to proof but did not lead further evidence to prove the execution of the said deed).

Thereafter said Kusumawathie on 3rd November 1983 transferred all shares she derived from the Final Decree in Case No. 17889/P of District Court of Gampaha and all shares said Leelawathie derived from the said Final Decree (which were already transferred to her on 28 October 1976 by aforesaid deed No. 3936 by said Leelawathie) to one R.D. Siriyadasa by deed No 5346 attested by Valentine Dias N.P. (The aforesaid deed 5346 was produced marked 2V1). Thereafter, said R.D.Siriyadasa transferred all his rights derived from said Leelawathie to L.H.Winston Suraweera (the 2nd Defendant in the partition action relevant to this matter) on 20th January 1984 by the deed No 5454 attested by M.P.Padmini Pathirathna N.P. (The aforesaid deed 5454 was produced marked 2V2). Therefore, defendents claim that the 2nd Defendant had derived all rights and shares of said Kusumawathie (including shares of Leelawathie, which were transferred to Kusumawathie by deed 3936 that was produced marked 1V2, subject to proof) and the plaintiff-respondent could not derive any rights through the transfer effected by Leelawathie by deed 451 dated 02 November 1981.

The trial in the District Court proceeded on thirteen points of contest. One of the points of contest raised by the plaintiff-respondent was:

No. 2 Whether rights to the land should be devolved on the parties in accordance with the plaint?

Three of the points of contest raised by the two defendants include:

No. 5 – Whether Leelawathie had transferred her rights to Kusumawathie by the Deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976

No. 6 – Whether the Plaintiff has any title or possessory Rights to the property in question

No. 7 – Whether all rights of the land should be devolved in the two defendants as in accordance with the scheme of devolution set out by the two defendants.

The plaintiff-respondent raised two additional points of contest namely:

No. 12 – Whether the deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976 pleaded in the statement of claim of the two Defendants' is a fraudulent deed (චිත්තිකරුවන්ගේ හිමිකම් ප්‍රකාශයේ සඳහන් අංක 3936 සහ 1976.10.28 දින දරණ වැලන්ටයින් ඩයස් නොතාරිස් තැන සහතික කළ ඔප්පුව වංචනික ලෙස සකස් කරන ලද ඔප්පුවක් ද?)

No. 13 – Whether the deed No 451 dated 02.11.1981 had gained priority by being properly registered under the provisions of the Registration of Documents Ordinance.

In this matter, three different stages of the proceedings namely raising points of contest, the order allowing the deed 3936 marked 1V2 be produced subject to proof and the delivery of the judgement, did take place before three different judges. It was not the same learned judge before whom the points of contest were raised, who delivered the judgement. The Learned District Judge who delivered the judgment dated 03.09.2009 held in favour of the two defendants. He answered points of contest Nos. 5 and 7 affirmatively and answered point of contest No. 6, "has no right". Furthermore, he held that points of contest Nos. 12 and 13, 'do not arise'. The learned trial judge accepted the scheme of partition of the two defendants and entered a judgment in favour of the two defendants.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the learned district judge, the plaintiff-respondent appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court. The learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court set aside the judgment of the District Court and held in favour of the plaintiff-respondent. The learned judges of the Civil Appellate High Court ordered that the corpus be partitioned in accordance with the devolution of title and shares set out by the plaintiff-respondent.

The main ground on which the Learned High Court Judges set aside the Judgment of the District Court is that the Learned Judge's decision to consider deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976 as evidence, is contrary to section 114(1) of the Civil Procedure Code and hence, was a misdirection of law. They further held that point of contest No. 12 namely - Whether the deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976 pleaded in the statement of claim of the two Defendants' is a fraudulent deed (විත්තිකරුවන්ගේ හිමිකම් ප්‍රකාශයේ සඳහන් අංක 3936 සහ 1976.10.28 දින දරණ වැලන්ටයින් ඩයස් නොතාරිස් තැන සහතික කළ ඔප්පුව වංචනික ලෙස සකස් කරන ලද ඔප්පුවක් ද?) - should have been answered affirmatively.

The two Defendants-Respondents-Petitioners-Appellants (hereinafter referred to as the "defendant-appellants") being aggrieved with the decision of the Civil Appellate High Court are challenging the above decision of the Civil Appellate High Court, before this Court. This Court had granted special leave to appeal on the following three questions of law raised by the defendant-appellants:

1). Did their Lordships at the Civil Appellate High Court err in law in deciding that deed no 3936 (1V2) is a fraudulent document for the mere reason that the same has been marked subject to proof?

2). Did their Lordships at the Civil Appellate High Court err in law by wrongly applying the principles laid down in the case of Hilda Jayasinghe v Jayawickrema 1982(1) SLR 349?

3). Did their Lordships at the Civil Appellate High Court err in law by failing to appreciate the fact that the deed no 1V2 (No 3946) is properly registered as per the law and therefore it should have the benefit of priority?

This Court had further accepted the following two questions of law raised by the plaintiff-respondent:

4). Whether the due execution of the Deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976 marked as '1V2' is proved in terms of Section 68 of the Partition Law in the circumstances of this case?

5). If that issue is answered in the Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent's favour, whether the questions referred to in the Petition will not arise?

Learned Counsel for the defendant-appellants and the plaintiff-respondent in the course of their oral submissions as well as in the written submissions contended that the two main issues that need to be determined by this Court are:

1. Whether the Deed No. 3936 dated 28.10.1976 had been proved?

and if this question is answered in the affirmative,

2. Whether the said deed should get priority over the deed No 451 dated 02.11.1981, the deed through which the plaintiff-respondent gained co-ownership to the land in question?

It is settled law, that a party to a partition action is not prevented from alienating or mortgaging the right to which such party might become entitled after a partition had been decreed in respect of the land, while the partition action is in progress. However, such transaction becomes effective to vest rights in the transferee only after the interest is, in law allotted to the party, namely, only at the stage when the final decree in the partition action is entered. [Sirisoma et al v Saranelis Appuhamy 51 NLR 337, at 343-345, Subaseris v Prolis 16 NLR 393 at 395, Louis Appuhami v Punchi Baba 10 NLR 196 at 198, Abdul Ally v Kelaart and Another (1904) 1 Bal 40 at 43-44].

The plaintiff-respondent does not contest existence of such right to a party in a partition action. However, the issue to be determined by this Court is whether in the given situation, there was admissible evidence available for the trial judge to consider and hold that Leelawathie, conveyed the 'lot or lots' that would be allocated to her at the final determination of the partition action 17889/P, to one of the other two co-owners namely Kusumawathie by the deed no 3936 attested in 1976, while the said partition action was in progress. In other words, whether it was lawful for the trial judge to have considered the deed produced marked "1V2" in the context of the points of contest raised and the objections raised in this matter?

The plaintiff-respondent contends, that the learned district judge erred when he decided in favour of the defendant-appellants by relying on the deed no. 3936 dated 28.10.1976 marked "1V2", for the reason that the appellants failed to prove the said deed in the course of the trial. To the contrary, defendant-appellants contend that no formal proof of deed marked "1V2" is required due to section 68 of the Partition Law No 21 of 1977 as amended.

Section 68 of the Partition Law provides:

"It shall not be necessary in any proceedings under this law to adduce formal proof of the execution of any deed which, on the face of it, purports to have been duly executed, unless the genuineness of that deed is impeached by a party claiming adversely to the party producing that deed, or unless the court requires such proof".

The defendant-appellants tendered the deed in question marked 1V2, in the course of the cross examination of the evidence of the plaintiff-respondent. At that stage the plaintiff-respondent did not accept the said deed and moved that the deed be tendered "subject to proof". However, defendant-appellants at that stage disputed such requirement. Nonetheless, the learned trial judge having considered this matter ordered, "the said deed be marked subject to proof". However, no evidence had been presented during the trial to prove the execution of the deed marked "1V2". When the trial resumed before a new judge on 30 March 2009, the plaintiff-respondent had moved that the deed marked 1V2 be struck off as it had not been proved. Defendant-appellants at that stage had re-iterated that no further proof of the said deed was required. It is in this background that the learned trial judge in his judgement dated 03 September 2009 held that there is no requirement to prove the deed "1V2". The learned trial judge arrived at the said conclusion on the premise that the plaintiff-respondent had not challenged and impeached the genuineness of the deed "1V2" in his plaint and therefore did not have a right to raise point of contest No. 12 namely "Whether the deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976 pleaded in the statement of claim of the two Defendants' is a fraudulent deed". Furthermore, the learned trial judge held that the need to answer point of contest No. 12 did not arise, as the plaintiff-respondent did not impeach the said deed in the pleadings of the plaint. The learned trial judge was of the view that provisions in section 68 of the Partition Law can be invoked in favour of the defendant-appellants in this matter.

The plaintiff-respondent in this matter raised point of contest No. 12 namely – "Whether the deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976 pleaded in the statement of claim of the two Defendants' is a fraudulent deed", as a further issue, after the defendant-appellants raised the point of contest No.

5 namely "whether Leelawathie referred to in paragraph 3 of the plaint transferred all her rights to Suduwahewage Kusumawathie by the deed no 3936 attested by Valentine Dias Notary on 28 October 1976". Therefore, the plaintiff respondent by raising the point of contest No. 12 had impeached the genuineness of the deed "1V2" at the first given opportunity in these proceedings. The learned trial judge erred when he held that the plaintiff did not have a right to raise the point of contest No. 12 on the premise that he has no such right as he failed to challenge the genuineness of the said deed in the plaint. It is settled law that the issues or points of contest in a civil case need not be confined to the pleadings. (Attorney-General v Smith 8 NLR 229 at 241, Silva v Obeyesekera 24 NLR 97 at 107, The Bank of Ceylon, Jaffna v Chelliahpillai 64 NLR 25 at 27, De Alwis v De Alwis 76 NLR 444 at 448). Furthermore, the plaintiff-respondent in his evidence refused to accept the deed 1V2. He further contended that the defendant-appellants failed to produce this deed at the police inquiry held consequent to a compliant he made. According to his evidence, police had called all the parties to attend the inquiry with respective deeds. The defendant-appellants did not produce any deed at that stage whereas the plaintiff-respondent produced the deed of transfer P3. This portion of evidence of the plaintiff-respondent had neither been challenged nor contradicted by the defendant-appellants. When all of these facts are taken together, I am of the view that the plaintiff-respondent had in fact impeached the genuineness of the deed "1V2" and therefore the trial judge should not have dispensed with the formal proof of the deed "1V2" relying on section 68 of the Partition Law. Hence, it remained the duty of the trial judge to have considered whether the deed marked "1V2" has been proved in accordance with the law.

Section 114(1) of the Civil Procedure Code mandates that;

"No document shall be placed on the record unless it has been proved or admitted in accordance with the law of evidence for the time being in force".

Furthermore, section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance provides that;

"If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of court and capable of giving evidence".

At the trial, defendant-appellants did not present any evidence to establish the execution of the deed marked "1V2". On behalf of the defendant-appellants, it was submitted before this court that the dispensation of the proof of execution of the deed "1V2" being lawful on the basis that the "execution of a document impeached as having been obtained by fraud need not be proved unless particulars of the alleged fraud relate to its due execution, such as that the execution of the document was done in blank". This proposition is based on the observation of Lawrie ACJ in Baronchy Appu v Podihamy (1902) 2 Brownie's Reports 221 at 222….

Lawrie ACJ in the said case observed;

> "It has, I think been decided that when a deed is impeached as having been obtained by fraud it is not necessary to prove its execution by calling the attesting witnesses".

He further observed that;

> "I am inclined to think that the evidence of at least one of the attesting witnesses was necessary to prove that it was a document which was signed, and not a blank sheet of paper".

The Court of Appeal in Piyadasa v Binduva alias Gunasekera, [1992] 1 SLR 108 at 109 having cited the aforementioned observation of Lawrie ACJ observed;

"this decision supports the view that a document formally and duly executed need not be proved even if the signature of the executant was obtained by fraud or deception, but where the document was fraudulently or illegally executed, the due execution must be proved, because the alleged execution is in fact no execution at all".

These two judgements tend to support the proposition that in situations where a party who signed a deed takes up the position that he signed the deed due to a fraud or deception practiced on him, no formal proof of the 'execution' is warranted. Such contention is on the premise that such position amounts to an admission on the 'execution of the deed'. Such a proposition is in line with section 70 of the Evidence Ordinance, which reads as:

"The admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested"

However, such a proposition does not support the contention that no formal proof of the execution of a deed is warranted as provided under section 114(1) of the Civil Procedure Code read with section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, when 'the genuineness of such deed' is impeached as provided under section 68 of the Partition Law. Instances on which the genuineness of a deed can be impeached is far wider than the specific instance of a specific position that a person signed the deed due to a fraud or a deception practiced on him. To the contrary, section 68 of the Partition Law provides that no formal proof is required in situations when 'a deed on the face of it purports to have been duly executed' unless the 'genuineness of the deed is impeached by a party claiming adversely to the party producing that deed' (emphasis added).

Therefore, in a partition action when the genuineness of a deed is impeached, the party who seeks to make his claim based on such deed should provide evidence of its execution as required under section 114(1) of the Civil Procedure Code read with section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, unless law dispenses with, such proof. The evidentiary requirement arising under section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance is aptly discussed by the Supreme Court in its decision in Samarakoon v Gunasekera [2011] 1 SLR 149.

In Samarakoon v Gunasekera (supra at 154) the Supreme Court held;

> "A deed for the sale or transfer of land, being a document which is required by law to be attested, has to be proved in the manner set out in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance by proof that the maker (the vendor) of that document signed it in the presence of witnesses and the notary. If this is not done the document and its contents cannot be used in evidence."

Further explaining the factual position that arose in that case and explaining the legal proposition in the proper context the Supreme Court further observed;

> "In the present case, the defendants had not challenged the due execution of deeds P3, P5 and P6. When they objected to those documents at the time the same were marked in evidence what they did was to challenge the plaintiff to prove those documents in the proper way in which a document required by law to be attested has to be proved if it is to be used as evidence. The plaintiff thus had notice that he had to prove P3, P5 and P6 in the manner provided in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. He had failed to lead the evidence necessary to prove those documents in accordance with the provisions of section 68. At the close of the plaintiff's case when the documents marked were read in evidence the defendants have stated that documents not proved should be excluded. This was a reference to documents marked subject to proof and proved in accordance with the law. In view of the failure of the plaintiff to prove documents P3, P5 and P6 on which the title claimed by him depended, the learned trial Judge had rightly excluded those documents and had held that the plaintiff had failed to prove his title."

Similarly, in my view in the instant case also, trial judge's decision to consider deed marked "1V2" as evidence and decide the devolution of title based on the purported transfer of rights by Leelawathie to Kusumawathie, without formal proof of deed marked "1V2", is contrary to section 114(1) of the Civil Procedure Code read with section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. Thereby the learned trial judge had erred in law when he held in favour of the defendant-appellants based on the deed "1V2" which was not proved in accordance with the law. The Supreme Court in Perera & Others v Elisahamy (1961) 65 CLW 59, considering the applicability of section 69 of the Partition Act (the provision similar to section 68 of the Partition Law) observed:

> "Section 69 of the Partition Act is of no avail in the instant case as that section does not apply to cases in which the genuineness is impeached or the Court requires its proof". (at page 60)

Citing with approval the judgment of the Privy Council in [(1928) A.I.R (Privy Council) 127] the court further observed:

> "A court cannot act on facts which are not proved". (at page 60)

The plaintiff-respondent's claim to the land in question and the devolution of title is based on the final decree in District Court of Gampaha Case P/17889 and Deed No 451 dated 02.11.1981 which was produced marked "P3". Defendant-appellants did not impeach the genuineness of the deed marked "P3". Furthermore, one of the attesting witnesses to this deed did testify at the trial. Therefore, the plaintiff had proved his rights to the land and the learned trial judge had erred when he failed to consider plaintiff's rights as proved by evidence in court.

In view of the reasons enumerated hereinbefore, I am of the view that the trial judge's decision to answer point of contest No. 2 as – "Entitled as per the judgment" and the decision to answer points of contest Nos. 5 and 7 namely "Whether Leelawathie who is referred to in paragraph 3 of the plaint had transferred all her rights to Suduwa Hewage Kusumawathie by the deed No 3936 attested by Notary Valentine Dias on 28 November 1976?" and "whether all rights to the relevant land should be vested with the 1a and 2a defendants in line with their statement of claim?" in the affirmative, is an error of law.

I hold that the point of contest No. 2 should be answered in the affirmative and points of contest Nos. 5 and 7 should be answered in the negative.

I see no reason to deviate from the decision of the learned judges of the Civil Appellate High Court where they have held that the learned trial judge erred when he concluded that no rights could be devolved on the plaintiff-respondent based on deed "P3". Furthermore I hold that the rights of the parties should be decided as determined by the Civil Appellate High Court. Therefore I affirm the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court of Gampaha dated 17 December 2014.

However, the learned judges of the Civil Appellate High Court had proceeded further and answered point of contest No 12 - Whether the deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976 pleaded in the statement of claim of the two Defendants' is a fraudulent deed (විත්තිකරුවන්ගේ හිමිකම් ප්‍රකාශයේ සඳහන් අංක 3936 සහ 1976.10.28 දින දරණ වැලන්ටයින් ඩයස් නොතාරිස් තැන සහතික කළ ඔප්පුව වංචනික ලෙස සකස් කරන ලද ඔප්පුවක් ද?) - in the affirmative after holding that the learned trial judge erred when he answered point of contest No. 12 – "Does not arise". The learned judges of the Civil Appellate High Court arrived at this finding in the process of resolving the issue that they identified as the most important issue in this matter. According to them, "whether the deed bearing no. 3936 (which was produced marked 1V2) could be considered to be a genuine deed due to the reason that the said deed remained a deed which was not proved as the plaintiff demanded that the said deed be produced subject to proof". The learned judges of the Civil Appellate High Court had formulated this question on the assumption that the failure to prove the relevant deed leads to the conclusion or an inference that the said deed is a fraudulent deed. In my view such construction is a misdirection of fact and law.

The sole impact of the challenge to the genuineness of the said deed by the plaintiff respondent in this matter is on the mode of proving the said deed in court. As discussed earlier in this judgment, when a party to a partition action impeaches the genuineness of a deed claiming adversely to the party which produces such deed, such second mentioned party cannot invoke the benefit under section 68 of the Partition Law but should proceed to prove the execution of such deed as provided under section 114(1) of the Civil Procedure Code read with section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. However, the failure to prove the execution of a deed as required under aforesaid circumstances per se in the absence of any other evidence to establish the fraudulent nature of the deed, could not lead to an adverse conclusion on the genuineness of the deed. Such a failure would lead to a situation that the contents of such deed cannot be considered as evidence by court, only.

Therefore, the learned Civil Appellate High Court Judges decision to answer point of contest no. 12 namely "Whether the deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976 pleaded in the statement of claim of the two Defendants' is a fraudulent deed (විත්තිකරුවන්ගේ හිමිකම් ප්‍රකාශයේ සඳහන් අංක 3936 සහ 1976.10.28 දින දරණ වැලන්ටයින් ඩයස් නොතාරීස් තැන සහතික කළ ඔප්පුව වංචනික ලෙස සකස් කරන ලද ඔප්පුවක් ද?), in the affirmative is an error of fact and law.

Hence, the judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court in this matter dated 17 December 2017 is varied. Accordingly I hold that the answer of the learned trial judge to point of contest no. 12 namely – "does not arise" should remain unaltered, due to the reasons enumerated hereinbefore.

In view of the foregoing reasons, I proceed to answer legal issue No 4 raised before this Court (Whether the due execution of the Deed No 3936 dated 28.10.1976 marked as '1V2' is proved in terms of Section 68 of the Partition Law in the circumstances of this case?) in the negative and legal issue No 5 (If that issue is answered in the Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent's favour, whether the questions referred to in the Petition will not arise?) in the affirmative. In view of these findings the need to answer other legal issues does not arise.

I hold that the rights of the parties should be decided as determined by the Civil Appellate High Court of Gampaha in the judgment dated 17 December 2014 and therefore affirm the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court of Gampaha dated 17 December 2014 subject to the variation on its decision relating to the point of contest No. 12, as decided hereinbefore. The appeal of the two defendant-appellants is dismissed with costs.

Judgment

Background

On 16th June 2005 the Complainant – Respondent – Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the "Respondent") "Officer-in-Charge, Colombo Crimes Division, Sri Lanka Police" [erroneously referred to in the caption of the Petition by which Special Leave to Appeal was sought, as the "Officer-in-Charge, Special Crimes Division"] instituted criminal proceedings against the above-named Accused – Appellant – Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "Appellant") in the Magistrate's Court of Maligakanda (Case No. 22070/05). In the charge sheet attached to the complaint filed by the Respondent in terms of section 136(1)(b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, it was alleged that the Appellant had committed the following offences:

1. That on or about 8th April 2005, at the Public Library in Colombo 7 situated within the jurisdiction of the Magistrates Court, exhibited for sale, gave on rent, or possessed for trading purposes, unlawfully prepared copies of a record named 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' containing songs titled 'Yowun Wasanthae' and 'Onna Ekoomath' which are owned and lyrics composed by Sunil Ariyaratne, and thereby committed an offence punishable in terms of section 178(2) of the Intellectual Property Act, No. 36 of 2003.

2. That on or about the same date, place and in the course of the same transaction of the afore-stated offence, exhibited for sale, gave on rent, or possessed for trading purposes unlawfully prepared copies of a record named 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' containing 15 songs including the song titled 'Onna Ekoomath Eka', of which the music was composed by, sung, and is owned by Mirihana Aarachchige Nanda Malini, and thereby committed an offence punishable in terms of section 178(2) of the Intellectual Property Act, No. 36 of 2003.

3. That on or about the same date, place and in the course of the same transaction of the afore-stated offence, exhibited for sale, gave on rent, or possessed for trading purposes unlawfully prepared copies of a record named 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe', which contained songs titled 'Sannaliyane' and 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' owned by Mahagamage Raveendra Mahagamasekera and originally produced by his father, and thereby committed an offence punishable in terms of section 178(2) of the Intellectual Property Act, No. 36 of 2003.

On 22nd September 2005, after the charges were read out to the Appellant, he pleaded 'not guilty', and accordingly the case was taken up for trial. Witnesses Sub Inspector Roshan Hewawitharana, Sub Inspector Prasad Weeraratne, Professor Sunil Ariyaratne, Visharadha Mirihana Arachchige Nanda Malini, and Mahagamage Raveendra Mahagamasekera testified for the prosecution. No evidence was presented for and on behalf of the Appellant. At the end of the trial, the learned Magistrate delivered Judgment finding the Appellant 'guilty' as charged, and accordingly convicted him. He was sentenced to a substantive term of 6 months imprisonment suspended for a period of ten years, and to a fine of Rs. 5,00,000/= with a default sentence of oneyear imprisonment.

The Appellant appealed against the afore-stated conviction and sentence to the High Court of the Western Province holden in Colombo. Following the hearing of the Appeal, delivering Judgment dated 20th May 2014, the learned High Court Judge affirmed the conviction and sentence imposed by the learned Magistrate, and accordingly dismissed the Appeal.

The Appellant sought from this Court, Special Leave to Appeal against the Judgment of the High Court of the Western Province. On 4th September 2014, the Supreme Court granted Special Leave to Appeal in respect of the Judgment of the High Court of the Western Province, on the following two questions of law:

1. Has the High Court erred in law by failing to apply the law with respect to the productions marked "P2", while the evidence of the prosecution has created a reasonable doubt as to the integrity of the said productions?

2. Has the High Court failed to consider the fact that the prosecution has not proved its case beyond reasonable doubt?

The case for the prosecution presented before the learned Magistrate can be summarized in the following manner:

According to the evidence of Professor Sunil Ariyaratne, Visharadha Mirihana Aarachchige Nanda Malini, and Mahagamage Raveendra Mahagamasekera, upon receiving information that a particular person was illegally selling at the compound of the Colombo Public Library, music compact disks (music CDs) containing songs in respect of which they held proprietary rights, on 8th April 2005, they have gone to the Colombo Crimes Division of the Sri Lanka Police and lodged complaints relating to this matter. The complainants alleged that several video compact disks (VCDs) containing such unlawfully copied songs were also being sold at the same location.

On the same day, a team of police officers led by Sub Inspector (SI) Roshan Hewawitharana conducted a raid at the premises of the Colombo Public Library using Sub Inspector Prasad Weeraratne as a decoy. When the police party reached the premises of the Colombo Public Library the time was around 3.10 pm, and there had been an exhibition at the premises with multiple stalls. The Appellant was at one stall. On a table near the Appellant were some compact disks for sale. The compact disks (CDs) for sale included CDs titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' and 'Sannaliyane'. Decoy Weeraratne had inquired from the Appellant about the price at which the two CDs were being sold, and the Appellant had responded that each one was being sold at Rs. 150/=. Thus, the decoy had given the Appellant a 500/= Rupee note, which SI Hewawitharana had previously given him at the police station to be used during the raid, and purchased from the Appellant two CDs which contained the afore-stated titles. The Appellant had returned change of Rs. 200/=. As soon as the transaction was completed, the decoy had given the previously agreed beckoning signal and the rest of the police officers including SI Roshan Hewawitharana had come to where SI Weeraratne and the Appellant were. The Appellant had been arrested by SI Hewawitharana. He had recovered the 500/= Rupee note which was tendered by the decoy to the Appellant from the right-hand trouser pocket of the Appellant. At the time of the arrest, further eight CDs titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' had been taken into the custody by the police from the possession of the Appellant. Thereafter, the Appellant had been taken in police custody to the police station along with the CDs. At the police station, officers have got down an audio CD playback device to play the CDs and also a television set, and played the CDs. They had done so in the presence of the three complainants, having got them down to the police station following the raid. They have listened to the songs in the CDs. There is also evidence that at the police station, the police had shown to the complainants a film contained in another CD recovered from the Appellant's possession. It is necessary to note that the three charges contained in the charge sheet relate to one out of the two CDs purchased from the Appellant by the decoy SI Weeraratne, namely the CD titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe'.

Following the examination of the CDs by the police officers and the complainants at the police station by listening to and viewing them, they had been duly sealed and placed in safe custody, after registering the productions under reference 'PR 46/05'. It is in evidence that for the purpose of sealing the productions the investigators have used both the left thumb impression of the Appellant and the police seal. Several items relating to the raid, namely (i) the 500/= Rupee note bearing No. H/79 420550 which was used to purchase the two compact disks, (ii) the two compact disks that were so purchased, and (iii) the eight compact disks that were taken into custody from the possession of the Appellant, were produced at the trial and marked "P1" (currency note), "P2A" and "P2A1" (two CDs purchased by the decoy from the Appellant) and "P3" (the eight CDs taken by the police from the possession of the Appellant).

According to Professor Sunil Ariyaratne, the compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' was played at the police station in the room of a police officer. He observed that the disk contained three songs of which he had composed the lyrics, namely 'Onna Ekomath', 'Bambarindu Bambarindu' and 'Yowun Wasanthe'. These three songs were listed as items 8, 9 and 15 in the disk. Professor Ariyaratne's position was that while he possessed co-ownership of the intellectual property rights of these songs, the Appellant had not been conferred with copying or publication rights of these songs. Documentary proof in this regard was produced at the trial. According to him, at the police station they had viewed the film 'Sarungalaya' from a CD collected by the police during the raid. That too had contained his songs. However, it is necessary to note that the charge sheet does not contain a charge based on the 'Sarungalaya' film, nor is there a reference to the song 'Bambarindu Bambarindu', which is said to be a song of that film.

During the trial in the Magistrate's Court, "P2A" and "P2A1" had been re-played. "P2A" was a compact disk entitled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe'. "P2A1" was entitled 'Sannaliyane'. "P2A" contained inter-alia the songs 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe', 'Onna Ekomath', 'Bambarindu Bambarindu' and 'Youwun Wasanthe'. Professor Ariyaratne has produced marked "P5" and "P6" documents to establish his intellectual property ownership of the film 'Diyamanthi' in which the song 'Yowun Wasanthe' is found, and the film 'Saradiyelge Putha' in which the song 'Onna Ekomath' is found. His position was that as reflected in the said documents, he possessed the right to authorize copying of the songs into CDs, a right which he had not transferred to anyone.

According to Visharadha Mirihana Arachchige Nanda Malini, "P2A" which had the title "Galana Gangaki Jeewithe", also had the words "Edaa Geetha Edaa Handinma" (having the meaning 'songs of that era, from the voices of that era'). She testified that this particular CD contained 15 songs, all of which were originally sung by her. She said that the CD contained the song 'Onna Ekomath'. This was a song in the film 'Saradiyelge Putha'. After singing the song for the production of the film she had obtained ownership of the song from the producer of that film. According to her, her ownership of the song is reflected in "P6". She also testified that "P3" had eight CDs, all of which contained songs sung by her for different films and copied and included into those CD without her permission.

According to Mahagamage Raveendra Mahagamasekera, his father Mahagama Sekera had been a lyricist. He died in 1976. His father had not conveyed intellectual property rights with regard to the songs authored by him, to anyone. Thus, upon his death, the intellectual property rights of his late father had been inherited by his mother, himself and his brother. After lodging the complaint, he had been asked to come to the police station to attempt to identify the CDs that had been taken into custody during a raid that had been conducted by the police. He had listened to some compact disks at the police station. He had identified in the compact disk titled 'Galanagangaki Jeewithe', five songs written by his late father and in the disk titled 'Sannaliyane' another two songs. He testified that, songs of his father are contained in the disks titled 'Galanagangaki Jeewithe' and "Sannaliyane'. The songs of which the lyrics had been composed by his late father found in the compact disks had been 'Me Sinhala Apage Ratai', 'Meepup Ladimi', 'Ratna Deepa', 'Pilae Pedura', 'Sannaliyane', 'Obe Deesa', 'Wakkada Langa', 'Aetha Kandukara' and 'Malahiru Basina'.

Following the closure of the case for the prosecution, the learned Magistrate had explained the rights of the Accused and called upon the Accused - Appellant to, if he so wishes, present evidence on his behalf. In response, the Accused - Appellant exercising his right to remain silent, did not testify or offer any evidence on his behalf.

The learned Magistrate having considered the applicable law and the evidence presented before court, concluded that the prosecution had discharged its burden of proving the case against the Accused - Appellant beyond reasonable doubt, and found him guilty of having committed all three offences contained in the charge sheet. Accordingly, the Accused - Appellant was convicted and sentenced by the learned Magistrate, in the manner stated above.

Submissions made by learned counsel

During the hearing of this Appeal and in his written submissions, learned counsel for the Appellant urged on behalf of the Appellant the following matters relating to the questions of law in respect of which special leave to appeal was granted.

As regards the first question of law relating to the prosecution not having established the integrity of the production marked "P2", it was submitted that there exists a contradiction between the testimonies given by SI Prasad Weeraratne and Sunil Ariyaratne, in that, while according to Prasad Weeraratne he purchased two CDs titled 'Sannaliyane' and 'Galanagangaki Jeewithe' and he watched them and realized that they contain songs, according to Sunil Ariyaratne, he watched the film 'Sarungalaya' at the Police Station. Further, according to Sunil Ariyaratne, what was produced as evidence during the trial was not what he watched at the police station. Counsel pointed out that when the compact disk was played in court, what was heard was a song titled 'B*ambarindu Bambarindu'*. It was submitted that Sunil Ariyaratne had not identified the production marked "P2" at the police station. Therefore, learned Counsel for the Appellant submitted that what was produced at the trial marked "P2" was not what was taken into custody by the police, but an introduction. Learned counsel cited Perera v. Attorney General, 1998(1) Sri L.R. 378 in support of his submission that in view of the foregoing, there exists a serious doubt regarding the genuineness of the productions. He further submitted that while according to police witnesses, "P2" was sealed soon after Sunil Ariyaratne, Nanda Malini and Raveendra Mahagamasekera examined them and they did so in the presence of the Appellant, according to Nanda Malini, she listened to the CDs on another day too, approximately two weeks after having listened to them on the first occasion. Learned counsel for the Appellant submitted that this too raised a doubt regarding the integrity of the production in issue.

As regards the second question of law relating to the prosecution not having proven its case beyond reasonable doubt, learned counsel relied with special emphasis on the issue pertaining to the doubt arising with regard to the integrity of the production marked "P2". Learned counsel for the Appellant submitted that the prosecution had not established that Sunil Ariyaratne, Nanda Malini and Raveendra Mahagamasekera had ownership of the works contained in the two CDs. He also submitted that from an overall perspective, the prosecution had not discharged its burden of proving the prosecution's case beyond reasonable doubt.

In response to the submissions of the learned counsel for the Appellant, learned Senior State Counsel who appeared for the Respondent submitted that the prosecution has established that what was produced as productions by the prosecution and in particular "P2", were in fact what was recovered from the custody of the Appellant and therefore the integrity of the productions was intact. She also submitted that in a case where the productions are readily identifiable, evidence relating to the 'chain of custody' of such productions need not be established by the prosecution. Learned Senior State Counsel in her further written submissions has pointed out to the following features of the two CDs marked and produced as "P2A" and "P2A1", namely, (i) the titles of the two CDs (i.e. "Galana Gangaki Jeewithe" and "Sannaliyane"), (ii) the unique production reference (i.e. PR46/5) given by the police to those CDs, (iii) the date and the markings placed on the two CDs by the police when they were purchased by the decoy, and (iv) the two CDs having been shown to the three complainants at the police station soon after the detection, were aspects that supported the prosecution's position that what was purchased from the Appellant were in fact produced at the trial. Learned Senior State Counsel submitted that the three complainants had identified certain contents of the two CDs as containing their works, and therefore the CDs contained intellectual property in respect of which they have proprietary rights. She submitted that these evidential features were proof that what were produced at the trial were in fact what was recovered from the custody of the Appellant. In support of her submission, she cited McCormick on Law of Evidence (3rd Edition, West Publishing Co.). It was also pointed out by the learned Senior State Counsel that during the cross-examination of the two police officers it was not even suggested to them that what was shown to Sunil Ariyaratne, Nanda Malini and to Raveendra Mahagamasekera were not the CDs that were purchased by the police decoy from the Appellant. Thus, learned Senior State Counsel pointed out that no allegation of foul play can now be made against the police. She submitted that the prosecution had fulfilled its duty of establishing the integrity of the productions 'without a scintilla of doubt'.

As regards the second issue raised by learned counsel for the Appellant, learned Senior State Counsel has in her written submissions, adverted to the following: In view of the constituent ingredients of the offence contained in section 178(2) of the Intellectual Property Act, the prosecution does not have the legal burden of proving that the intellectual property in issue (which the Appellant sold to the decoy) were owned by Sunil Ariyaratne, Nanda Malini and Raveendra Mahagamasekera. What is necessary is to establish that the Appellant did not have copyrights of the works contained in the two CDs. Learned Senior State Counsel submitted that the ingredients of the offence have been successfully proven by the prosecution. She also pointed out that the Appellant had failed to establish that he had any rights in respect of the works in issue.

It is necessary to point out that the written submissions tendered on behalf of the Appellant contained certain other submissions which were not urged at the hearing of this Appeal. At the conclusion of the hearing, it was agreed by counsel that post-argument written submissions will be confined to only the matters that were in fact urged on behalf of the parties during the hearing of this Appeal. Court indicated to learned counsel that the judgment will also relate only to matters that were urged during the hearing. Therefore, I will confine this judgment to my opinion and conclusions relating only to the matters that were in fact urged by learned counsel (as reflected above) during the hearing and to the corresponding submissions contained in the written submissions. However, while doing so, I will consider from multiple perspectives, whether the prosecution has proven the charges against the Appellant beyond reasonable doubt.

Consideration by Court and conclusions

In view of the inextricable link between the first and second questions of law, I propose to deal with both questions together.

Real (physical) evidence

Learned counsel for the Appellant laid heavy emphasis on the production which he referred to as "P2", which should actually be a reference to compact disks (CD) marked and produced at the trial as "P2A" and "P2A1". His primary submission was that "the prosecution had failed to establish the integrity of "P2", namely, that the prosecution had failed to prove that "P2" was the CD recovered from the Appellant's custody, and that "P2" contained unauthorized copies of songs of which the three complainants had copyrights".

Productions marked and produced as "P2A", "P2A1" and "P3" are items of real evidence. It is to be noted that unfortunately though, such items of physical evidence are produced in certain trials, without much attention being given to requirements of the law pertaining to their admissibility and evidential significance. The present case is a good example.

According to the law of Evidence, as of right it would not be possible for a party to a criminal or civil case to present a physical object as an item of evidence, on its own standing. This is because it would not come within any one of the four categories of 'evidence' also referred to as 'judicial evidence', recognized by the law of Evidence, namely 'oral evidence', 'documentary evidence', 'contemporaneous audio-visual recordings' and 'computer evidence'. The latter two categories of evidence, namely 'contemporaneous audio-visual recordings' and 'computer evidence' gained recognition in the eyes of the law by the Evidence (Special Provisions) Act, No. 14 of 1995. What is contemplated by 'contemporaneous audio-visual recordings' are recordings of the occurrence of the facts in issue or relevant facts embedded in certain media, and they can take the form of audio recordings, video recordings, audio-visual or video recordings, and still photographs. Section 60 of the Evidence Ordinance which provides that oral evidence must in all cases whatsoever, be direct, provides further, in its second proviso that, "if oral evidence refers to the existence or condition of any material thing other than a document, the court may, if it thinks fit, require the production of such material thing for its inspection". (Emphasis added.) Such material things when produced at a trial are referred to as real evidence. Thus, it would be seen that the law of Evidence has not completely precluded the presentation of physical material as evidence. Therefore, the sequence to be followed in the presentation of a physical object as real evidence would be, first, to present oral evidence regarding the existence or condition of such a physical object, and thereafter, secondly, invite the Court to consider permitting the production of such physical object for inspection. What is important to note is that in terms of section 60 of the Evidence Ordinance, once such a material thing is presented to the Court, the function of the Court is to inspect it. That is for the Judge or Jury as the case may be, to directly perceive such an object using his or their own senses. If necessary, the Court may record its observations regarding such material object that was produced. However, as in the case of oral and documentary evidence, a physical object is not ordinarily produced at the trial for the purpose of proving or disproving the existence or non-existence of a fact in issue or a relevant fact. The practice in Sri Lanka is to refer to such items as 'productions'. In most other jurisdictions they are referred to as 'exhibits'.

E.R.S.R. Coomaraswamy (Volume I, at page 68) in his monumental work on the Law of Evidence, has stated that though 'real evidence' does not come within the ambit of 'Evidence' under section 3 of the Evidence Ordinance, real evidence is an item of 'judicial evidence' and the judge is called upon to see the thing himself and the knowledge derivable therefrom is generally obtained without the use of any medium. However, in view of the second proviso to section 60 of the Evidence Ordinance which provides for the admission of real / physical evidence, it is necessary to bear in mind that, such evidence in the nature of physical objects are not sui generis (does not stand alone by itself), and is necessarily associated with an item of oral evidence which provides a description of the existence or condition of such physical item. In other words, the Court may in terms of section 60 permit the production of a material object for inspection, only if oral evidence refers to the existence or the condition of any material thing. In the alternative, acting in terms of section 165 of the Evidence Ordinance, the Court may on its own motion order the production of any document or thing in order to discover or to obtain proper proof of relevant facts.

Therefore, such evidence (physical / real evidence) in my view will serve the purposes of (i) providing clarity to oral evidence and enable the judge or the jury as the case may be to correctly comprehend the relevant item of oral evidence, (ii) providing corroboration of oral testimony and documentary evidence, (iii) being used as an aide to the assessment of credibility and testimonial trustworthiness of testimony provided by one or more witnesses, and (iv) being a basis for the Court to determine the cogency or sufficiency of evidence presented in the form of oral and documentary evidence. Thus, an item of real evidence cannot by itself generally be used to 'prove' the facts in issue, which in criminal cases amounts to the constituent ingredients of the offence. In certain situations, a physical object may be produced at a trial for the first time, for the purpose of its identification. That may aid the proof of a fact in issue or a relevant fact.

The impact or the legal consequences arising out of the absence of a particular physical item of evidence being presented by the prosecution at a trial will depend on a host of considerations, including the attendant facts and circumstances of the case. In such situations, the principal factor to be taken into consideration is, what purpose, if any, would the prosecution have achieved, had they produced the relevant item of real evidence. As

E.R.S.R. Coomaraswamy has put it, "non-production of a physical object, which might conveniently be produced for inspection by the Court, does not render oral evidence respecting the same inadmissible" (Volume II, Book I, page 19). The legal consequences arising out of a doubt being created with regard to the integrity of a physical object that was produced, would be founded upon a consideration of the purpose sought to have been achieved by the party which produced the object. The legal consequences that may arise by a party not producing a material object which was within their control to produce, would be the rendering of nugatory the purpose such party could have achieved by having produced it. It may also affect the cogency of the evidence. There may be situations where the circumstances of the case may justify the judge from drawing an adverse presumption in terms of section 114(f) of the Evidence Ordinance.

I will now apply these principles of law with regard to the submission made by learned counsel for the Appellant relating to the productions produced at the trial, and in particular to production marked "P2A" ("Galana Gangaki Jeewithe"), which he erroneously submitted had been marked as "P2". In this regard, it is necessary to recall that all three charges relate to songs said to have been contained only in one CD, and that being the CD titled "Galana Gangaki Jeewithe".

Particularly in view of the emphasis shown by the learned counsel for the Appellant with regard to these productions, I examined the productions relating to the Magistrate's Court case. The examination of the productions revealed the following:

Production marked "P2A"

This production is a compact disk (CD) with a cover. The cover contains the title "Galana Gangaki Jeewithe". In addition to the title of the CD, the front cover contains the following in Sinhala and English. "Eda Geetha Eda Handinma", "Solid Gold Old Songs" and "Old is Gold". Its rear contains the following words: "Nanda Malini Geyu Chithrapata Geetha", and "Sahaya Gayana – Narada Dissasekera, W.D. Amaradeva, Sisira Senaratne, Victor Ratnayake". It also contains references to the existence of 15 songs inside the CD and a list of such songs. Within brackets there is a reference to the film in which the relevant song is to be found. Among the list of the songs are "Galana Gangaki Jeewithe" ("Ranmuthuduwa") as item No. 1, "Onna Ekomath" ("Saradiyelge Putha") as item No. 8 and "Yowun Wasanthe" ("Diyamanthi") as item No. 15. It should be noted that, it is these songs, that are referred to in the three charges contained in the charge sheet.

Production marked "P2A1"

Though another CD entitled "Sannaliyane" and marked "P2A1" was available among the productions, I do not propose to set out details of that CD, as none of the charges relate to a CD by that name. Suffice for me to state that "P2A1" contained a list of songs, which included the songs which Raveendra Mahagamasekera claimed had been authored by his father late Mahagama Sekera.

Constituent ingredients of the offence

Section 178(2) of the IP Act provides as follows:

"Any person knowing or having reason to believe that copies have been made in infringement of the rights protected under Part II of the Act, sells, displays for sale, or has in his possession for sale or rental or for any other purpose of trade any such copies, shall be guilty of an offence, and shall be liable on conviction by a Magistrate for …"

Therefore, the actus reus of this offence is that the offender should have (i) sold, (ii) displayed for sale, or (iii) had in his possession for sale or for rental or for any other purpose of trade, a 'copy' that has been made in infringement of the rights protected under Part II of the Act. The offence does not require the prosecution to prove that the copying was carried out by the offender, as 'copying' is not a constituent ingredient of the offence. The mens rea of the offence is that the offender should have either (i) known or (ii) had reason to believe that the 'copy' in issue had been made by whomsoever in infringement of the rights protected under Part II of the Act.

Copyrights

In the context of the IP Act, the term 'copy' is a reference to a 'copy' of a 'work' that is recognized by that Act. In terms of section 5 of the IP Act, a 'work' means 'any literary, artistic or scientific work referred to in section 6'. In terms of section 6, both 'musical works, with or without accompanying words' and 'audio-visual works' fall within the ambit of 'protected literary, artistic or scientific work', provided they are 'original intellectual creations in the literary, artistic and scientific domain'. Therefore, original songs are 'works' that are protected in terms of the Act. In terms of section 6(2) of the Act, such 'works' shall be legally protected by the sole fact of their creation, and irrespective of their mode or form of expression, as well as of their content, quality or purpose. Section 9 of the Act provides that 'subject to the provisions of sections 11 to 13, the owner of copyright of a work shall have the exclusive right to carry out or authorize inter alia the acts of (a) reproduction of the work*, and (b)* the public distribution of the original and each copy of the work by sale, rental, export or otherwise, of such work'. These two rights along with the other rights contained in section 9 of the IP Act are referred to as 'economic rights'. Sections 11 to 13 confers exceptions with regard to copyright protection, namely copying for the purposes of fair use and copying following the lapse of seventy years following the death of the author. In terms of section 10 of the IP Act, authors of 'works' are also conferred with 'moral rights', which includes the right to have his name indicated prominently on the copies of the work. It is important to note that authors are entitled to such 'moral rights', independently of the 'economic rights', and even when the author is no longer the owner of the 'economic rights' of a work. In terms of section 5 of the Act, an 'author' is the physical person who had created the 'work'. He would normally have both the economic and moral rights of the relevant 'work'.

As per section 6(1)(e) of the IP Act, for the purposes of the application of the provisions of the Act, a song would be a protected 'work', as it is a 'musical work with accompanying words in the artistic domain'. Similarly, as per section 6(1)(f), a film (motion picture) would also be a protected 'work', as it is 'an audio-visual work in the artistic domain'. The term 'audio-visual work' has been interpreted in the IP Act to mean 'a work that consists of a series of related images which impart the impression of motion, with or without accompanying sounds, susceptible of being made visible, and where accompanied by sounds susceptible of being made audible'. Section 5 of the IP Act provides that the 'author' means the physical person who has created the relevant 'work'. In the context of a song, for the purpose of the application of the IP Act, the 'author' of a song would be the lyricist, music composer, and should there have been a producer, such producer of the song. This is in view of the fact that they perform constituent and indispensable functions relating to the creation of a song. The 'author' of a film would be its proprietor, who is designated as the 'producer' of the film. In terms of section 5 of the IP Act, the 'producer' of an 'audio-visual work' means the physical person or legal entity that undertakes the initiative and responsibility for the making of the relevant audio-visual work or sound recording. Thus, in terms of the law, the producer of the film would originally have the film's economic and moral rights.

The lyricist, music composer and the producer of a song jointly have economic rights to inter alia authorize the reproduction of the song. That is a reference to the 'copying' of the song from one media to another. If a song is made for the purpose of an 'audio-visual work' (such as a film) and integrated into such film, unless otherwise provided, the producer of the film will be vested with the economic and moral rights of the film, which would include such rights in respect of components of the film including the song included in the film. Therefore, when a song is embedded in a film, unless specifically protected through agreement, the lyricist, music composer and the producer of the song would lose economic rights in respect of the song. Thus, right to authorize copying of the song into a media (such as a compact disk) will be vested with the producer of the film. Reproducing the song without obtaining the authorization of such a person who has economic rights of the work, would amount to an infringement of the economic rights of the owner of the film, namely the producer. The position would be different if the song is produced again and provided a new fixation. However, it is important to note that when a song becomes a component of a film, though the lyricist, music composer and the producer of such song lose their economic rights, they retain moral rights with regard to the original song. It is also necessary for the purposes of this Appeal to be mindful that a producer of a film or any other subsequent copyright owner of such film, may in terms of section 16 of the Act grant a license, an assignment or transfer to any other person in writing, and the right to carry out any of the acts arising out of economic rights in whole or any part of such economic rights. Unless specifically precluded in the licensing, assignment or transfer agreement, there is no prohibition in law for a licensee, assignee or transferee to re-transfer the rights he has received to another third party.

Section 17 of the Act prescribes the rights of performers, such as singers of songs. In terms of section 17(1) of the Act, subject to the provisions of section 21 of the IP Act (provision which sets out certain limitations), a performer (such as the singer of a song) shall have exclusive right to carry out or to authorize inter alia the reproduction of a fixation of his performance or a substantial part thereof. According to law, for a work to be protectable, it must be fixed to a tangible medium of expression. A work is considered to be fixed when it is stored on some medium in which it can be perceived, reproduced, or otherwise communicated. Thus, when a song is recorded onto a compact disk (CD) the work is deemed to be fixed to the compact disk on which the song has been recorded. That is referred to as a fixation. Therefore, the authorization of the singer of a song is required for the preparation of copies of the fixation in which such song has been recorded. Thus, the preparation of copies of such a compact disk without obtaining the authorization of the original performer (singer), would amount to an infringement of the rights of such performer. However, when a song has been sung for inclusion in a film and such song has been included into such film, unless otherwise specifically provided in the agreement between the singer and the producer of the film, the singer loses his rights under section 17(1). That is in view of section 17(2) of the Act which provides that once a performer has authorized the incorporation of his performance into an audio-visual fixation (such as a film), the provisions of section 17(1) shall have no further application. If the performer once again performs with the permission of the producer of the film, that performance will be recognized as a different performance, and section 17(1) will become applicable once again. However, if such subsequent performance is a component of a different fixation, the rights of the singer will be limited to the agreement between the singer and the producer of such subsequent fixation. In this case, the position of the complainants is that unauthorized copying had taken place from the original films.

Fixations such as compact disks containing unauthorized reproductions / copies of *works such as songs, songs extracted from films and films themselves, are generally referred to as 'pirated copies'.

The essence of the above narrative of the law relating copyrights which is a component of Intellectual Property Law, as is relevant to the facts of this case, is that the preparation of unauthorized copies, the sale, and the possession for sale pirated copies of songs including songs copied out of films and copying of songs into other fixations, whether in their audio-visual form or audio only form, is prohibited by the Intellectual Property Act. The violation of that prohibition amounts to an offence, as the preparation of such copies infringes upon the rights recognized by Part II of the IP Act. Additionally, in terms of section 178(2) of the Act, selling, displaying for sale, and having in possession for sale, rental or for any other purpose of trade any such copies prepared in violation of copyrights, is also prohibited by law, and the violation of such prohibition constitutes an offence.

Charges

The first charge preferred against the Appellant relates to the songs 'Yowun Wasanthe' and 'Onna Ekomath', which the prosecution claimed were in a compact disk entitled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe'. The second charge also relates to the song 'Onna Ekomath' in the same disk. The third charge relates to the songs 'Sannaliyane' and 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' in the disk named 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe'. According to the first charge, the position of the prosecution was that Sunil Ariyaratne had 'ownership' of the songs 'Yowun Wasanthe' and 'Onna Ekomath'. According to the second charge, the prosecution alleged that Mirihana Arachchige Nanda Malini also had 'ownership' of the song 'Onna Ekomath'. According to the third charge, the prosecution alleged that Raveendra Mahagamasekera had ownership of the songs 'Sannaliyane' and 'Galanagangaki Jeewithe' said to have been in the same CD titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe'. Thus, it would be seen that, all three charges are related to a compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' in which the songs 'Yowun Wasanthe', 'Onna Ekomath', 'Sannaliyane' and 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' were said to have been found.

Actus reus* of the offence

I will now examine and arrive at a conclusion on whether the prosecution has proven the actus reus or the physical element of the offence contained in section 178(2) of the Act. For that purpose, it is necessary to re-visit the evidence led at the trial.

According to the evidence of Professor Sunil Ariyaratne, he had been the lyricist of the songs 'Yowun Wasanthe' and 'Onna Ekomath'. The song 'Yowun Wasanthe' had been a component of the film 'Diyamanthi'. Professor Ariyaratne had obtained copyrights for the audio-visual display through multi-media of the film 'Diyamanthi' from the producer of the film, Wasantha Obeysekera. Thus, he exclaimed that he had copyrights of the songs in the film 'Diyamanthi' and documentary proof thereof was tendered to court by producing the document marked "P5". Therefore, his position was that he had copyrights of the song 'Yowun Wasanthe'. The song 'Onna Ekomath' had been a component of the film 'Saradiyalge Putha'. Professor Sunil Ariyaratne and Visharadha Nanda Malini had jointly obtained copyrights for audio-visual display of the film 'Saradiyelge Putha' from the producer of the film Neil Rupasinghe, and a document in proof of that was produced marked "P6". Therefore, his position was that he and Nanda Malini had joint copyrights for the song 'Onna Ekomath'. He had not transferred copyrights of these two songs to any other person. Nor had he given such rights to any other person authorizing the copying of these two songs onto compact disks or to sell disks containing such copies.

On 8th April 2005, when Professor Ariyaratne was informed by officers of the Colombo Crimes Division that sequel to his complaint, a raid had been conducted, and thus to call-over at the police station, he complied. At the police station, he listened to and viewed several compact disks that had been recovered by the police during the raid. It is indeed a fact that according to Professor Ariyaratne, at the police station he had viewed a film titled 'Sarungale as well. Among the items he listened to, was a compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' which contained the abovementioned songs in respect of which he possessed copyrights. He has observed that the songs were of the nature of the original songs. He noted that the 'publisher' listed on the label of the compact disk, namely Sajindra Video, of No. 32, Super Market, Padukka, had not been conferred with copyrights relating to these songs. Additionally, the compact disk did not contain a reference that the lyricist of these songs was Professor Sunil Ariyaratne. It is this compact disk which was produced marked "P2A" during the trial.

According to Visharadha Nanda Malini, the song 'Onna Ekomath' had been originally sung by her for the film 'Saradiyelge Putha'. She had done so, having directed the music of that song too. She had also obtained copyrights of that song through a document marked "P6". Her position was also that she had neither transferred rights in respect of that song to any other person or given permission for copying the song onto compact disks or for selling such disks containing her songs. She also testified that the compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' (marked and produced at the trial as "P2A") contains fifteen songs, and all of them were sung by her. The song 'Onna Ekomath' was the eighth song in that compact disk. She vouched for the fact that, the recording she listened to at the police station, contained her own voice. On being shown "P6" which was previously produced by Professor Sunil Ariyaratne, Visharadha Nanda Malini admitted that it was through "P6" that she too claimed copyrights to the song 'Onna Ekomath'. Having examined the eight compact disks marked "P3", the witness testified that they too contained pirated copies of her film songs.

According to Mahagamage Raveendra Mahagamasekera, his late father Mahagama Sekara had composed the lyrics of the songs 'Ratna Deepa' 'Pile Pedura', 'Sannaliyane', 'Obe Deesa', 'Wakkada Langa', 'Eatha Kandukara', 'Mala Hiru Basina', 'Me Sinhala Apege Ratai' and 'Meepup Ladimi'. He had identified these songs in the two CDs that were played at the police station after the raid. There had been two of his father's songs in the CD titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' five of his father's songs in the CD titled 'Sannaliyane'. Neither his father nor his mother, brother or himself, being the only heirs who jointly succeeded to his father's rights, had transferred those rights to anyone else or authorized the preparation of copies onto compact disks. However, he has not stated that the CD titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' (marked and produced by the prosecution as "P2A") contained songs 'Sannaliyane' and 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' composed by his father. Thus, it is necessary to conclude that, through the evidence of Raveendra Mahagama Sekera, the prosecution has failed to establish the actus-reus of the third charge.

This witness has testified to the manner in which he got to know of the Appellant. In 2004, he had received information that a particular person was selling pirated copies of compact disks containing songs of which the lyrics had been written by his late father. Thus, he had visited the premises of the Colombo Public Library and met the Appellant who was selling the compact disks. The witness had purchased such a compact disk and asked for a receipt. The Appellant had declined to issue a receipt. The Appellant had explained that he (the Appellant) had purchased some gramophone records, and thus he was entitled to produce and sell compact disks containing the relevant songs. The witness had responded that his father had not authorized any person to reproduce his songs. He had thus said that what the Appellant was doing was 'illegal', and that if he (the Appellant) were to continue to engage in such conduct he would be compelled to take legal action. After some time, as he had received information that the Appellant was continuing with the particular 'illegal' activity, the witness had informed the situation to Professor Sunil Ariyaratne and to Visharadha Nanda Malini, and had with them proceeded to the police and lodged a complaint.

From the foregoing evidence, I hold that the prosecution has successfully and beyond reasonable doubt proved that Professor Sunil Ariyaratne had economic rights in respect of the songs 'Yowun Wasanthe' and 'Onna Ekomath', which were components of the films 'Diyamanthi' and 'Saradiyelge Putha', which inter-alia conferred the right on him to authorize the copying of those songs to audio-visual media such as compact disks. Thus, copying of such songs without his permission would amount to a violation of the copyrights of Professor Sunil Ariyaratne. Further, Professor Sunil Ariyaratne also possessed moral rights with regard to those songs. I also hold that Visharadha Nanda Malini had economic rights with regard to authorizing the copying to audio-visual media such as to compact disks, of the song 'Onna Ekomath' which was a component of the afore-stated film 'Diyamanthi'.

The economic rights of Professor Sunil Ariyaratne and Visharadha Nanda Malini had not been given by license, or assignment or transferred by them to either the Appellant or to any other person.

I hold that the prosecution has failed to establish that Raveendra Mahagamasekera had moral rights of the song 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe', which the prosecution claimed in the third count in the charge sheet was in a CD titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe'. Further, though the prosecution has through the evidence of Raveendra Mahagamasekera established that the late Mahagama Sekera was the lyricist of the song 'Sannaliyane' and hence Raveendra Mahagamasekera, his mother and brother had rights in respect of such song, as that song was not in the CD titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe', the third charge fails. Further, though outside the scope of the third charge, it is necessary for me to point out that, the evidence of Raveendra Mahagamasekera reveals that the economic rights he jointly possessed with his mother and brother relating to songs authorized by his late father had been infringed by the unauthorized copying and possessing for sale CDs containing songs authored by the late Mahagama Sekera. These songs are to be found in CDs marked "P2A" and "P2A1". However, as the third charge has been framed in a faulty manner, the said evidence cannot be relied upon by the prosecution to prove the third charge.

The prosecution has established without any doubt that the Appellant 'sold' inter-alia a compact disk to Sub Inspector Prasad Weeraratne, which was prior to its sale in the possession of the Appellant. The said compact disks 'purchased' by Sub Inspector Prasad Weeraratne had been titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe'. That compact disk ("P2A") along with the compact disk marked "P2A1" and the other eight compact disks had been brought to the police station along with the Appellant. Soon afterwards, the compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' had been played to be heard by Professor Sunil Ariyaratne, Visharadha Nanda Malini and Raveendra Mahagamasekera. Professor Sunil Ariyaratne and Visharada Nanda Malini identified several songs including the three songs referred to in the first and second charges in respect of which they had the copyrights referred to above. The prosecution has established beyond doubt the integrity of the compact disk 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' from the stage it was 'purchased' from the Appellant to the stage at which it was played to be heard by the three complainants. Therefore, the integrity of the compact disk in issue is not in doubt, up to the stage when it was identified that the disk contained songs copied in violation of the copyrights of the owners of such copyrights, namely the afore-stated two complainants. Thus, I conclude that, the prosecution had proved beyond reasonable doubt the actus reus of the offence, namely that the Appellant had in his possession for sale a compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' which contained copies of songs 'Yowun Wasanthe' and 'Onna Ekomath' of which the copyrights were vested with Professor Sunil Ariyaratne and Visharadha Nanda Malini. Such copies had been made in infringement of the rights protected under Part II of the Act.

Integrity of the productions

In view of the submissions strenuously made by learned counsel for the Appellant that the integrity of the production marked "P2" had not been established by the prosecution, in that the prosecution had not established beyond doubt that the compact disks in issue (marked "P2A" and "P2A1") were in fact the compact disks recovered from the possession of the Appellant and were also the disks that were played at the police station and listened to by the three complainants, I need to point out the following: As pointed out by me previously, the production relating to the three charges are the productions that were marked "P2A". The abovementioned analysis of the evidence, reveals clearly that from the perspective of the need to maintain the integrity of the production, what was necessary for the prosecution to establish is that the compact disk that was listened to by the complainants at the police station was in fact one out of the several disks recovered from the possession of the Appellant. I hold that the said duty has been performed by the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt.

The situation would have been quite different had the prosecution attempted to get the songs identified for the first time by the complainants during the trial in the well of the Court. Then, it would have been incumbent on the prosecution to establish the integrity of the productions from the time they were taken into custody to the point they were produced in Court during the trial.

Even if the submission strenuously put forward by the learned counsel for the Appellant is accepted as being correct, it is necessary to point out that the prosecution has established that the compact disk marked "P2A"and produced at the trial was in fact that which was recovered from the possession of the Appellant and identified by the complainants at the police station. That conclusion has been reached by me due to the reasons that (a) there is cogent and reliable evidence that the compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' having been 'purchased' from the Appellant was soon afterwards played at the police station to be heard by the three complainants, (b) the defence has not presented any evidence either through prosecution witnesses themselves or through defence witnesses indicative of the said compact disk having been 'introduced' or 'switched' either by the police or by a complainant, (c) as pointed out by the learned Senior State Counsel the compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' had certain unique identification features, (d) soon after listening to the compact disks, the compact disks were sealed using the left thumb impression of the Appellant and the seal of the Officer-in-Charge of the police station (these being un-impugned items of evidence), (e) the productions had been entered in the Production Register of the police station and thereby assigned a 'PR' number (un-impugned), and (f) as observed by the learned Magistrate, the afore-stated seals were intact at the time the productions were opened for the first time at the trial (another item of un-impugned evidence). Thus, there can be no doubt regarding the integrity of the productions, even from the standard and degree expounded by the learned counsel for the Appellant.

Mens Rea* of the offence

It is now necessary to examine whether the Appellant possessed the requisite mens rea which is also referred to as the 'fault element of the offence'. In view of the manner in which the offence contained in section 178(2) has been structured, it would be necessary for the prosecution to prove that at the time the Appellant possessed for sale the compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe', he either (i) 'knew', or (ii) 'had reason to believe', that the copies of the four songs 'Yowun Wasanthe', and 'Onna Ekomath' contained in the said compact disk, had been made in infringement of the rights protected under Part II of the Act.

Thus, the issue is whether the Appellant knew or had reason to believe that the compact disk in issue ("P2A") contained pirated copies of the afore-stated songs. The term 'k*new'* as the literal meaning of the English word 'knowledge' denotes and signifies the existence of specific knowledge by the accused regarding a particular fact. The term 'reason to believe' has been interpreted in section 24 of the Penal Code. It provides that, "a person is said to have 'reason to believe' a thing, if he has sufficient cause to believe that thing, but not otherwise". (Emphasis added.) Thus, the term 'had reason to believe' denotes the existence of certain related knowledge on the part of the accused, based upon which, from an objective standard it can be reasonably inferred that the accused ought to have known the existence of the relevant fact. In other words, what the Court needs to consider is whether in the circumstances of the case, the accused either 'knew' or 'had sufficient cause to believe' the existence of the particular fact.

'Criminal Law in Sri Lanka' by Wing-Cheong Chan, Michael Her, Neil Morgan, Jeeva Niriella and Stanley Yeo (LexisNexis, India, 1st Edition, 2020), states as follows: "Knowledge involves an awareness that something exists or is likely to exist in the future. … Knowledge is a subjective state of mind which is different from an objective assessment of whether one should know certain facts. It cannot be imputed to a person merely from the consequences resulting from the act. … Since the Penal Code sometimes uses the terms 'knowing' and 'having reason to believe' in the same section, it can be inferred that the fault element of 'knowing' something must be given a subjective meaning. … It may be possible to infer that an accused had knowledge from proof that they had suspicion of the true facts, but deliberately refrained from making further inquiries which would have confirmed the suspicion."

As Dr. Sir Hair Singh Gour in 'The Penal Law of India' (Diamond Jubilee - 10th Edition, Volume 1, page 242) has pointed out, "what is a sufficient cause in a given case so as to justify the presumption, is a matter upon which no general statement can be made, for it must depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case". This is a reference to the presumption of the existence of 'knowledge'.

The formulation 'had reason to believe' also in my view prevents an accused from taking up a position which can be aptly referred to as wilful ignorance or voluntary blindness to the obvious. Further, this element of mens rea has been included in most offences where knowledge is the foundational mens rea, as it would otherwise be impractical in most situations for a prosecution to prove through evidence that the accused actually had the required knowledge of the existence of the relevant fact. When in the 'mens rea', the term 'had reason to believe' is the alternate component to 'knowledge', the burden on the prosecution is to establish that certain related circumstances were known to the accused, and hence from an objective footing he ought to have known of the existence of the relevant fact. Thus, from the perspective of sufficiency of evidence to prove the mens rea, it would be pertinent to note that to prove the requirement of 'had reason to believe' would require a lesser threshold of evidence than the threshold required to prove 'knowledge'.

Unlike with regard to the actus reus of an offence, the mens rea of an offence is a state of mind of the perpetrator, and hence it would not be possible to prove such ingredient through direct evidence. The existence of the mens rea of an offence has to be inferred by Court, based on a consideration of circumstantial evidence led by the prosecution, coupled with principles of evidence, such as inferences arising out of evidence, presumptions, and matters in respect of which the Court is entitled to take judicial notice. With regard to mens rea in offences that contain the element 'knowing or having reason to believe', to find the accused guilty, upon a consideration of the available evidence which is likely to be in the nature of circumstantial evidence, the Court must be in a position to arrive at an irresistible and inescapable sole interference that the accused either had the requisite knowledge, or should have had reason to believe in the existence of the relevant facts pertaining to such knowledge. Thereafter, such knowledge can be imputed as the state of mind of the accused. An inference less or different to that will accrue to the benefit of the accused and he shall be entitled to be acquitted. Even after the Court arrives at such inference based on the prosecution evidence, it may be possible for the accused to negate that inference upon a presentation of direct evidence that may emanate from the Accused himself, that he did not have the requisite state of mind and was acting in good-faith.

If one were to consider the evidence led at the trial including the attendant circumstances, it can be reasonably inferred that either the Appellant had himself made unauthorized copies of the songs or had procured the compact disks from a person such as the person / institution referred to in the label of disks (Sajindra Video, of No. 32, SuperMarket, Padukka) who had made the unauthorized copies. If in fact the Appellant had in good faith received the disks containing unauthorized copies of the songs in issue from either Sajindra Video or from some other third party, that would be a matter especially within his own knowledge. Section 106 of the Evidence Ordinance provides that, when any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving such fact lies upon him. The Appellant has not presented any evidence in this regard or with regard to any other matter. In this regard it is also necessary to take into consideration the evidence of Raveendra Mahagama Sekera, about the incident which had taken place in 2004, where he met the Appellant and purchased a compact disk containing unauthorized copies of his father's songs. On that occasion, the Appellant had taken up the position that he had purchased an old record containing those songs (referred to by the Appellant as a 'gramophone record') and hence he had the right to sell copies of the songs. Nevertheless, Raveendra Mahagama Sekera had challenged the Appellant that what he was doing was 'illegal'. Thus, in 2004, the Appellant's position was that he had obtained copies of the songs, and that he had the right to do so. Another important item of circumstantial evidence is that the prosecution has proved that the other compact disk purchased by Sub Inspector Prasad Weeraratne from the Appellant titled 'Sannaliyane' ("P2A1"), and the other eight compact disks ("P3") secured from the Appellant's possession, all contained pirated material such as unauthorised copies of songs of Visharadha Nanda Malini and songs authored by the late Mahagama Sekera. Finally, both the external appearance of the compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' ("P2A") "Sannaliyane" ("P2A1") and their contents did not contain any reference to the lyricists of the songs contained in the compact disk, namely Professor Sunil Ariyaratne and the late Mahagama Sekera. The external appearance of the disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' however contained a reference to the singer of the songs contained in it, namely Visharadha Nanda Malini, in the phrase 'Nanda Malini Gayuu Chithrapata Geetha' (meaning 'film songs sung by Nanda Malini'). Thus, there was an ex-facie infringement of the moral rights of lyricists Professor Sunil Ariyaratne and Mahagama Sekera in the two CDs marked "P2A" and "P2A1".

In view of all the afore-stated circumstances, I conclude that an irresistible and inescapable inference arises that the Appellant knew or certainly had reason to believe that the compact disk titled 'Galana Gangaki Jeewithe' contained copies of the songs 'Yowun Wasanthe' and 'Onna Ekomath which had been made in infringement of the rights protected under Part II of the Intellectual Property Act. Thus, I am satisfied that the prosecution has discharged its burden of proving beyond reasonable doubt that the Appellant entertained the requisite mens rea of the offence contained in section 178(2) of the Intellectual Property Act, with which he was charged.

Proof beyond reasonable doubt

As pointed out by the learned counsel for the Appellant, indeed, in a criminal trial, the prosecution must prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt. Learned Senior State Counsel also did not express disagreement with this standard of proof expected from the prosecution in any criminal case, which is a salient feature in adversarial criminal cases in common law jurisdictions. The degree of proof 'beyond reasonable doubt' apart from its historical roots in the common law tradition and the adversarial system of criminal justice, specifically arises out of a fundamental right enshrined in Article 13(5) of the Constitution. That being, the 'presumption of innocence until and accused is proven guilty' and the right to a 'fair trial'.

These two fundamental rights are cornerstones of our criminal justice system in which fairness is a governing principle. It is a principle enshrined in in Sri Lanka's legal system. However, the presumption of innocence is rebuttable, and will prevail only until the presumption is vacated by Court, due to the cogency of evidence that the prosecution has presented. The importance and the weight of the presumption of innocence is such, that in order to vacate that presumption, the case for the prosecution must be proven beyond reasonable doubt. A 'reasonable doubt' means a doubt in respect of which a valid reason can be attributed. For a 'doubt' to be recognized as amounting to a 'reasonable doubt', the ground for the development of the doubt must be objective and reason based. There should be a logical basis for the entertaining of the doubt. That is the distinction between a 'mere doubt' and a 'reasonable doubt'.

John Woordroffe & Amir Ali in 'Law of Evidence' (18th Edition, Volume 1, page 325) has described 'proof beyond reasonable doubt' in the following manner:

"For a doubt to stand in the way of conviction of guilt, it must be a real doubt and a reasonable doubt – a doubt which after full and fair consideration of the evidence, the judge really, on reasonable grounds, entertains. … If the data leaves the mind of the trier in equilibrium, the decision must be against the party having the burden of persuasion. … If the mind of the adjudicating tribunal is evenly balanced as to whether the accused is guilty or not, it is its duty of the tribunal to acquit. If the evidence adduced by the prosecution has been so discredited as a result of cross-examination or is as manifestly unreliable that no reasonable tribunal can safely convict based on it, the prosecution must fail. The court cannot be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt, if there are still some reasonable hypotheses compatible with the innocence of the accused. There is no emancipation of the mind, unless all reasonable doubts have been eliminated from it. Proof beyond reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond the shadow of doubt. The benefit of doubt, to which the accused is entitled to, is reasonable doubt; the doubt which rational thinking men will reasonably, honestly and conscientiously entertain, and not the doubt of a timid mind."

Lord Denning in Miller v. Minister of Pensions [(1947) 2 AER 372] referring to the degree of proof the prosecution must satisfy, has held that "… it need not reach certainty, but it must carry a high degree of probability. Proof beyond reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond a shadow of doubt. The law would fail to protect the community if it admitted fanciful possibilities to deflect the course of justice. If the evidence is so strong against a man, as to leave only a remote possibility in his favour which can be dismissed with the sentence 'of course it is possible, but not in the least probable', the case is proved beyond reasonable doubt, but nothing short of that would suffice."

In The King v. Vidanalage Abraham Appu [40 NLR 505] Acting Chief Justice Soertsz has held that " … so far as the case for the prosecution in a criminal trial is concerned, it will not suffice for it to make out a case of grave suspicion against an accused person, it must establish its case, and so long as there is reasonable doubt left, there is no proof. The phrase 'to prove beyond reasonable doubt' is explanatory of the meaning of the word 'prove'."

In terms of section 3 of the Evidence Ordinance, a fact is said to be proved when, after considering the matters before it, the Court either believes it to exist or considers its existence so probable that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists. Therefore, on an application of the principle contained in section 3 of the Evidence Ordinances buttressed by the earlier mentioned judicial precedents, I am of the opinion that, a criminal case can be considered to have been proved by the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt, if in the objective mind of the Judge or the jury, as the case may be, the prosecution has presented sufficient cogent evidence which causes the Judge or the jury to believe that the accused had committed the offence he has been charged with, or the judge or the jury considers that the accused having committed the offence to be so probable that the judge or the jury ought, under the circumstances of the case, act upon the supposition that the accused committed the offence. A case is 'proven beyond reasonable doubt', when a state of mind develops in the judge or the jury as the case may be, as to belief in the truthfulness of the assertion made by the prosecution, and the absence of a logically sound reason to doubt that assertion.

If either due to the sheer nature of the prosecution's evidence, or as a result of the defence impugning the prosecution's evidence, or through the presentation of defence evidence, or through a combination of such means, the defence raises what the judge / jury believes to be a 'reasonable doubt' regarding the case for the prosecution, the benefit of such doubt must necessarily accrue to be benefit of the accused, and the accused would therefore be entitled to be acquitted. The prosecution is required to prove all the ingredients of the offence the accused has been charged with (which would include the actus reus and the mens rea of the offence*), 'beyond reasonable doubt*'. It must be borne in mind that proving the prosecution's case beyond reasonable doubt requires a very high degree of cogency and sufficiency of evidence. It is a very high standard to meet. Mere conjecture, theories, suspicion or even proving a case to a degree that the judge or the jury would form the view that the accused may have committed the offence, is wholly insufficient. Furthermore, proving a case on a balance of probabilities is also wholly insufficient. However, proving a case beyond reasonable doubt is distinct from and lesser in degree than proving a case to a degree of mathematical accuracy. The law does not require the prosecution to prove its case with scientific precision and to a degree of mathematical accuracy. Proving a case beyond reasonable does not mean that there should be proof beyond a shadow of doubt or fanciful or imaginary doubts. Prosecutions have to primarily rely on human testimony. With all the inherent weaknesses of human testimony, it would not be reasonably possible and would in fact be unattainable to achieve such an extremely high degree of proof. Therefore, what is necessary is to prove the prosecution's case beyond reasonable doubt, which in fact means that, on an objective consideration of the evidence presented by the prosecution and should the defence have opted to present evidence, on a consideration of such defence evidence as well, would a reasonable person considering the evidence objectively, entertain either absence or lack of belief that the accused in fact committed the offence.

As E.R.S.R. Coomaraswamy has put it, "the presumption of innocence merely means that the prosecution must prove the case against the accused beyond reasonable doubt. The two rules mean the same concept … The presumption of innocence is so strong that in order to rebut it, the crime must be brought home to the accused beyond reasonable doubt". [The Law of Evidence, volume II, Book I, page 297-8]

It is indeed a well enshrined and recognized cardinal principle that an accused has the right to remain silent during the trial. In this case, the Accused - Appellant has exercised that right. There is no compulsion that may be imposed on an accused to present defence evidence or to prove his innocence. However, particularly in the backdrop of a prosecution having proved a minimum of a strong prima facie case against the accused, hiding behind the presumption of innocence and exercising the right to remain silent, if the accused chooses to remain silent and not offer any evidence, if the circumstances justify, such silence and absence of evidence in favour of the accused may attract certain consequences in law in the nature of an adverse inference, and thereby entitle the judge or jury to arrive at certain adverse findings against such accused.

According to the curses curiae of this Court, on the application of, as well as quite independent of, the much debated dictum of Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Lord Cochrane and others (1814) Gurney's Reports 479, when the prosecution has established a strong prima facie case, the continued silence on the part of the accused and his failure to explain incriminatory items of evidence, which, if the accused is in fact innocent, be well within his power to explain, would elevate the strong prima facie case to the level of a presumptive case, thereby in appropriate cases justifying a finding of guilt against the accused. In such circumstances, it would be lawful and fair for the Court to conclude that the prosecution has proven its case beyond reasonable doubt. {See Queen v. Sumanasena, [66. NLR 350], Seetin v. The Queen [68 NLR 316], R. v. Seeder de Silva [41 NLR 337], Ilangatilaka v. The Republic [(1984) 2 Sri L.R. 38], Basnayake v. OIC, Special Crimes Detection Unit, Anuradhapura [(1988) 2 Sri L.R. 50], The Attorney General v. Potta Naufer and Others [(2007) 2 Sri L.R. 144], and Somaratne Rajapakse and Others vs. Honourable Attorney General [(2010) 2 Sri L.R. 113].}

In the backdrop of all the earlier referred to cogent items of direct and circumstantial evidence presented by the prosecution, notwithstanding the prosecution having presented a very strong case against the Appellant, the Appellant did not offer any explanation on his behalf either by giving evidence or calling witnesses or through both such ways. There was no attempt by the Appellant to explain any item of evidence presented by the prosecution against him. The Appellant did not refute the allegation against him by way of evidence. He did not even attempt to explain the incriminatory items of evidence against him, which were well within his control to explain, if he was not guilty of having committed the offences contained in the charge sheet. Thus, taking as a whole the entire body of evidence presented by the prosecution and the accused's failure to provide an innocent explanation in respect of any of those items of evidence, I am of the view that the prosecution has proven its case against the Appellant beyond reasonable doubt, and hence the conviction of the Accused - Appellant is lawful.

Suggestions put to prosecution witnesses

Counsel for the Accused - Appellant has during cross-examination suggested to Professor Sunil Ariyaratne, that due to a personal animosity he had with the Appellant, he had submitted to a Police Officer named Lugoda of the Colombo Crimes Division a CD which he himself had prepared, bribed him, and got a "false case" filed against the Appellant. It has also been suggested to him that his evidence that they watched the 'Sarungalaya' film at the police station is false, and that they did not watch any film at the police station, and that he did not identify any production at the police station. Further, it has been suggested that what was shown to the witness by the police was not what was recovered from the possession of the Appellant. These suggestions have been vehemently denied by the witness.

Similarly, a suggestion has been made to witness Raveendra Mahagamasekera. It has been suggested to this witness that he is not the son of Mahagama Sekera. From the perspective of this witness's personal character, this is a very serious allegation to have been made. Undoubtedly, Raveendra Mahagamasekera would have been insulted, embarrassed and annoyed by the said suggestion, which he had vehemently denied. In view of Raveendra Mahagamasekera's own testimony that he is the son of Mahagama Sekera and the testimony given by Professor Sunil Ariyaratne and Visharadha Nanda Malini relating to Raveendra Mahagamasekera, it is overwhelmingly evident that Raveendra Mahagamasekera is in fact the son of the late well known and much respected lyricist Mahagama Sekera, and not an imposter. It is also evident that the defence counsel had no material at all, to establish the truth of such malicious and offensive suggestion, as, if he had, he would have impeached the testimony given by Raveendra Mahagamasekera using such material. After Raveendra Mahagamasekera denied the suggestion, the defence presented no evidence to contradict the witness and thereby assert the truthfulness of his suggestion.

It is necessary to observe that suggestions are in fact a component of a comprehensive cross-examination. Suggestions are factual assertions or propositions put to a witness during cross-examination by the counsel conducting such cross-examination, for the purposes of (i) impeaching the credibility and testimonial trustworthiness of a witness, (ii) attempting to elicit an item of evidence favourable to the party on whose behalf the cross-examination is being conducted, such as an admission, (iii) indicating to Court the position of the party on whose behalf the cross-examination is being conducted, regarding the testimony given by the particular witness, and (iv) indicating to Court the position of the party on whose behalf the cross-examination is being conducted, the overall case of the opposing party.

From an ethical perspective, suggestions must necessarily be founded upon instructions received by the counsel conducting the cross-examination from his client. Professional ethics of Attorneys require that for the purpose of deciding on the nature of the cross-examination to be conducted, for counsel not to rely on mere verbal instructions received from the client, but to examine and assess the veracity of the instructions he receives, prior to acting on instructions received and making suggestions. In fact, this requirement is not limited to making suggestions, but to all professional conduct of counsel. Counsel should not put suggestions to a witness, unless he in good faith believes the contents of such suggestion to be true. It would be unethical to put suggestions to a witness during cross-examination, which the counsel himself knows or has reason to believe is false. Thus, in the administration of justice, there is no room for baseless and ill-founded suggestions being made. It is the responsibility of Court to prevent the making of baseless suggestions, and if that is not possible, frown upon the making of such suggestions and where appropriate initiate disciplinary action against the Attorney-at-Law who acted in violation of this professional ethic.

In the circumstances, I am compelled to conclude that the question put under cross-examination containing the afore-stated suggestions, come within the ambit of section 151 and 152 of the Evidence Ordinance which empowers the Court to forbid the asking of indecent and scandalous questions, and questions aimed at annoying or insulting a witness. When such a question in the form of a suggestion is put to a witness, it would be desirable for the trial judge to inquire from counsel whether the Attorney has reasonable grounds for the framing of and making such a suggestion, and an evidential basis to establish the truth of the contents of such suggestion. On a strict application of the law, in this case, the defence counsel who appeared on behalf of the accused should have been reported to the Supreme Court in terms of section 150 of the Evidence Ordinance. Courts of law should not be permitted to be used as platforms to make wild and sweeping allegations against witnesses, which cannot be substantiated, and thereby baselessly, unnecessarily and inappropriately injure the character and reputation of witnesses, harm the witness's state of mind, and to bring disrepute to the system of administration of justice.

Dr. A.R.B. Amerasinghe in "Professional Ethics and Responsibilities of Lawyers" (Chapter XII) has stated as follows: "An attorney must not in the course of making submissions or cross-examining a witness say or lead a witness to say anything that might mislead the court. In particular, counsel must not make any statement to court or put any proposition to a witness that is not supported by reasonable instructions, or that lacks factual foundation by reference to the information available to court*. Counsel has a particular responsibility to the court when cross-examining a witness* not to put to the witness allegations in the form of questions which counsel knows that the witness does not have the necessary information or knowledge to answer, or where there is no justifiable foundation for the question*."* (Emphasis added.)

No suggestion if denied by the witness, would by itself be considered as evidence, or would be capable of creating a reasonable doubt regarding the testimony of the particular witness, unless, the truth of the contents of such suggestion is established by way of evidence, or through a combination of evidence and presumptions, matters in respect of which the Court may take judicial notice, and inferences which the Court is lawfully entitled to arrive at. In this case, the defence has neither presented evidence of its own behalf, nor elicited evidence from prosecution witnesses in proof of any of the suggestions made.

Therefore, I conclude that the above-mentioned suggestions made to Professor Sunil Ariyaratne and to Raveendra Mahagamsekera, and to the other witnesses who testified for the prosecution, have not given rise to a reasonable doubt either regarding their respective credibility or the case for the prosecution. The baseless and frivolous suggestions made to the afore-stated prosecution witnesses by the Attorney-at-Law for the Accused has to be responded to by this Court by the condemnation his conduct necessarily deserve.

Conclusions

Therefore, I answer the two questions of law in respect of which special leave to appeal was granted in the following manner:

1. The learned Magistrate and the learned Judge of the High Court have correctly applied the law with respect to productions marked "P2A", as the evidence for the prosecution has not created a reasonable doubt as to the integrity of the said productions.

2. As regards the first and the second counts on the charge sheet, the prosecution has in fact proven its case beyond reasonable doubt. In the circumstances, the learned Magistrate and the learned High Court Judge have correctly considered the evidence and concluded the fact that the prosecution has proved the first and the second charges in the charge sheet beyond reasonable doubt. However, the learned Magistrate and the learned High Court Judge have erred in holding that the prosecution had proved the third count in the charge sheet beyond reasonable doubt.

Accordingly, I affirm the conviction imposed by the learned Magistrate with regard to the first and second counts on the indictment.

Sentence

An examination of the journal entries reveals that, following the finding of the accused guilty of having committed all three offences in the charge sheet and convicting him, the learned Magistrate has imposed what may be referred to as a 'composite punishment' in relation to the three charges contained in the charge sheet. The scheme of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act and in particular section 16 of the Act envisages that when an accused is convicted of having committed more than one offence, the High Court Judge or the Magistrate as the case may be, should impose separate sentences in relation to each of the offences in respect of which he has been found guilty. That has not been done in this matter. Thus, the sentence imposed by the learned Magistrate is unlawful to that extent.

The law relating to intellectual property such as copyrights have been developed for multiple reasons including the need to protect intellectual property such as original creations, and confer on the authors of protected works certain rights which would inter-alia confer on them lasting reputation for their creations as well as financial and commercial entitlements. Infringement of copyrights negates those objectives and inhibits the growth of creations. Violation of copyrights is an avenue of illicit business activity, which must be condemned. The conduct of the Accused – Appellant would have certainly caused financial loss to the complainants. The Accused – Appellant has for financial gain engaged in selling pirated copies of music CDs. His conduct has been premediated, well organized, fraudulent, and carried out with the objectives of unlawful financial gain for himself, and causing financial loss to the complainants. It has also resulted in depriving the complainants of legitimate financial gain. I also see no mitigatory circumstances in favour of the Accused receiving a lenient sentence. In my view, in a matter of this nature involving infringement of intellectual property rights, the sentence to be imposed should be founded upon the need to punish the accused for the offence committed, impose deterrence on society, and effect compensatory relief to the complainants. These are sentencing policies, which should govern the sentence to be imposed. Taking the afore-stated factors into consideration, the sentence imposed by the learned Magistrate, in my view is lenient. However, the prosecution has not appealed and moved the High Court of the Provinces for enhancement of the sentence. Nevertheless, it is necessary for this Court to ensure the lawfulness of the sentence imposed.

In the circumstances, I impose a term of 6 months imprisonment suspended for a period of ten years and a fine of Rs. 5,00,000/= with a default sentence of imprisonment of one year, per each of the two charges the Accused – Appellant stands convicted of having committed. The sentences are to run concurrently.

In view of the foregoing, the conviction of the Accused – Appellant with regard to the first and second counts on the charge sheet are affirmed. The Accused – Appellant is acquitted with regard to the third count on the charge sheet. Subject thereto, this Appeal is dismissed.

As there is merit in the Appeal in so far as the third count in the charge sheet is concerned, no order is made as regards costs.

The Accused - Appellant - Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Appellant) along with his wife stood charged in the Magistrate's Court of Balapitiya. The charge has alleged that the accused on 02-07-2007 had assaulted one Alagiyahandi Nandawathie de Silva with hand and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 314 read with section 32 of the Penal Code. Both the Appellant and his wife had pleaded not guilty to the said charge.

The wife of the Appellant who was named as the 2nd Accused in the charge sheet, had passed away in the course of the trial in the Magistrate's Court. Thereafter, the trial had proceeded only against the Appellant.

At the trial, the virtual complainant Alagiyahandi Nandawathie de Silva, her sister Sriyawathie de Silva and Police Sergeant 21709 Koswatta Gedara Nishshanka (an officer from Ahungalla Police Station) had given evidence. After the prosecution closed its case, the Appellant had given a dock statement.

Learned Magistrate at the conclusion of the trial, pronounced the judgment dated 28-04-2015, convicting the Appellant for the above charge.

Being aggrieved, by the said judgment of the learned Magistrate, the Appellant had appealed to the High Court of Southern Province holden at Balapitiya. The High Court, by its judgment dated 09-05-2017 had affirmed the conviction and enhanced the compensation payable to the virtual complainant. The Appellant, in this appeal, seeks to canvass the above judgments before this Court.

Upon the Petitioner supporting the special leave to appeal application relevant to this appeal, this Court by its order dated 10th October 2018, had granted special leave to appeal on the following questions of law.

i. Did the Provincial High Court has misdirected itself in analyzing the evidence led by the prosecution and the medico-legal report marked P 1?

ii. Did the Provincial High Court misdirected itself in failing to analyze the contradictions in the evidence of the virtual complainant and the contents of the medico-legal report marked P 1?

iii. Did the Provincial High Court err in entering the Judgment without dealing with the infirmities of the judgment of the learned Magistrate?

In order to answer the above questions of law, it would be necessary to turn, albeit briefly, to the evidence adduced before Court in this case.

The virtual Complainant Alagiyahandi Nanadawathie de Silva has commenced narrating the incident relevant to the charge revealing the fact that the Appellant is the person to whom she had leased out her land. As the period of the said lease had ended, she along with her sister Alagiyahandi Sriyawathie de Silva had gone to the said land on the date of the incident with the intention of re-taking the possession of the house in the said land. According to her, the extent of this land is about six acres. As they entered the property, the Appellant who had refused to hand over the keys of the house, had started assaulting the virtual complainant's head. This had taken place in the porch as she entered the house. The virtual complainant has also further stated that the wife of the Appellant also assaulted all over her body with a Cinnamon stick. Sriyawathie who was with her at that time had then run away. The virtual complainant states that the Appellant and his wife had thereafter dragged her out and pushed her to the road. She had fallen at that time. Having flagged down a three-wheeler thereafter, she had then gone to Ahungalla Police Station. She had not known that her hand was fractured until she went to the hospital. She has categorically stated that it was her right hand, which was fractured because of this incident. Further, she also has stated that she obtained an X ray image of her right hand and that it was her right hand, which was treated and bandaged in the hospital. She had made a complaint to the police before she got herself admitted to Balapitiya hospital.

It is to be noted that this witness had shown the wrist area of her right hand as the location of the injury when answering the questions during the cross-examination.

The Medico legal report (MLR) of the Virtual Complainant has been produced marked P 1 in the course of the trial. The short history given by the patient in the said MLR is recorded as "assaulted by a known person and fallen on ground after the assault". The said MLR has confirmed that there have been two injuries on the body of the Virtual complainant. They have been described in the MLR as follows.

1) Contusion measuring 2 x 2 cm on left wrist joint

2) Scaphoid bone fracture of left wrist.

The first two questions of law in respect of which this Court has granted leave to appeal are centered around the question as to whether the Provincial High Court has misdirected/erred in analyzing evidence adduced by the prosecution vis a vis the contents of the MLR marked P 1. It was in that backdrop that the learned counsel for the Appellant submitted before this Court that the discrepancies highlighted by the defence in the course of the trial go to the root of the prosecution's case. He further submitted that the said discrepancies have affected the credibility of the main prosecution witness in this case, namely the virtual complainant.

It is a fact that the virtual complainant has categorically stated that it was her right hand, which was fractured because of this incident. It is also a fact that the MLR shows injuries only on her left wrist. It is on that basis that the learned counsel for the Appellant argues that the evidence of the virtual complainant is not corroborated by medical evidence.

As the two of the above positions are clearly irreconcilable to each other, there exists a clear discrepancy (with regard to the question whether the injury was on the left or right hand) between the positions taken up by the virtual complainant on one hand and the medical evidence adduced by the prosecution on the other. While the prosecution has not called the particular Medical Officer who had examined and prepared the said MLR to give evidence before the Magistrate, even if it had happened, the Medical Officer concerned could not have taken a different position, as he is required to base his evidence on the contents of the report he had made. Therefore, the categorical assertion by the virtual complainant that it was her right hand, which was fractured because of this incident and the fact that she obtained treatment to her right hand, becomes clearly contradictory to the contents of MLR.

As the aforementioned first two questions of law relate to the question as to whether the Provincial High Court has misdirected/erred in analyzing evidence adduced by the prosecution vis a vis the contents of the MLR marked P 1, this Court must next find out how the learned High Court Judge had considered this issue.

The view expressed by the learned High Court Judge is that the above discrepancy had not misled the learned Magistrate, as the said discrepancy is not related to the causing of injury referred to in the charge. The said view is on the basis that the only charge framed against the Accused is for causing hurt to the virtual complainant by assaulting with hands. Hence, the learned High Court Judge has taken the view that the above discrepancy is not relevant to the case at hand. (i.e. the injury on the hand is not directly relevant to the charge). It is on the same basis that the learned High Court Judge has concluded that the learned Magistrate had not misdirected herself on the said discrepancy.

The inference most favourable to the defence in the given situation would be to the effect that the virtual complainant has told in Court, something that is not true. However, as all falsehood is not deliberate (as held in the case of Boghinbai Hirjibai V State of Gujarat[1]), there is an onerous task for the Court then to ascertain whether such falsehood is due to a deliberate attempt to mislead Court with a view of obtaining an order or any other benefit in favour of the witness who uttered such falsehood. This is in addition to the other duties of Court such as ascertaining whether such discrepancies go to the root of the case and shake the overall credibility of such witness.

There could be broadly two reasons as to why the virtual complainant in the instant situation had taken up such a position. Those reasons could be as follows.

I. She has deliberately told Court something, which she knew to be false.

II. Due to an inadvertence, she has mixed up the facts and did not remember whether it was her right or left arm, which was injured.

I would now consider whether the virtual complainant in the instant situation has deliberately told Court something, which she knew to be false.

At the outset, it is relevant to note that this witness was around 64-68 years of age[2] at the time of giving evidence before the learned Magistrate. This incident had occurred on the 2nd July 2007 and the virtual complainant had given evidence on 14-02-2012. This means that the said witness had given evidence before the Magistrate's Court about 4½ years after she sustained the injuries.

Her evidence is that she felt a pain in the hand after she fell down. It is also her position that she realized that her hand was also injured only in the hospital. Thus, this seems to be not an injury serious to the extent that the witness should have felt a severe pain at the time of injury. If the injury is so serious to the extent of creating a lasting severe pain, then one may be justified in thinking that it would be improbable for such a person not to remember the exact hand on which such injury was inflicted. However, in the light of the evidence adduced

[2] Her age has been recorded at the commencement of her evidence as 64 and that as 68 at the commencement of the cross examination.

in the instant case, it is difficult to identify the injury caused to the wrist of the virtual complainant as one, which had brought about a severe pain, which one would expect to last in her mind for a considerable length of time due to its severity. Further, this injury is not one caused directly due to the assault but due to the fall. That may have been another factor as to why the witness could not remember whether it was the left or right hand that hit the ground causing that injury.

I cannot see how she could have got any additional advantage by falsely stating that it is her right hand that was injured due to the relevant fall and not the left hand. This shows that there has not been any necessity for this witness to falsely assert that it was her right hand that was injured in the course of this incident. Thus, the most that a Court of law can infer in this instance is that the witness has mixed up her left and right hands. One needs to be mindful that this is not a case where the assertion of the witness can never be supported by the medical evidence due to absence of any injury whatsoever. To the contrary, had the witness managed to avoid the mix up of her left and right hands, this would then be a classic case where medical evidence perfectly supports the evidence of the virtual complainant who has stated that she felt a pain in the hand after she fell down. Therefore, the above discrepancy alone would not be sufficient to vitiate the conviction of the Appellant.

E R S R Coomaraswamy in his work 'The Law of Evidence'[3] has described as to how a Court should evaluate contradictions and omissions in the following way.[4] "…. Another test that is applied in the evaluation of evidence is the test of inconsistency, contradictions per se and discrepancies in the evidence of the witness. A witness is often contradicted by his statements to the police under section 110 of the Code,[5] or by his depositions in the magistrate's court. Some may be positive contradictions, while others may be omissions, which may be of material facts or immaterial facts. In evaluating discrepancies, contradictions and omissions, it is undesirable for a court to pick out sentences and consider them in isolation from the rest of the statements. The entire statement should be taken into consideration to ascertain whether they are due to a deliberate attempt to suppress or depart from the truth. Witnesses should not be disbelieved on the basis of trifling discrepancies and omissions.[6]"

Thus, it would be necessary for the Court to examine the instant discrepancy along with the other infirmities relied upon by the learned counsel for the Appellant.

[5] Act No. 15 of 1979. (Cap 26).
[6] Dashiraj vs. The State A.I.R. (1964) Tri. 54.

Learned counsel who appeared for the Accused before the Magistrate's Court had drawn the attention of the court to an omission in the statement of this witness to Police to show that this witness had not stated in her statement to Police that she suffered any pain in her hand. It is to be noted that this witness in the course of answering the questions posed to her in cross-examination, has categorically stated that her hand was not injured in the course of the assault.

The virtual complainant is consistent and firm when she had stated that it was her right hand, which was injured. She had even proceeded to show that to Court. The omission pointed out by the defence in the trial is to the effect that she had not stated in the statement to police that her hand had been injured. This fact is corroborated by the virtual complainant herself as she had stated in her evidence that it was only in the hospital that she realized that her hand had also been injured. As has been mentioned above, this witness had made a complaint to the police before she got herself admitted to hospital. Thus, the fact that her hand had been injured when she fell was not within her knowledge by the time she made her statement to Police. Therefore, the purported omission the learned Counsel for the Appellant is relying upon, does not in any way affect the consistency of the evidence of this witness.

The learned defence counsel had also drawn the attention of Court to the fact that this witness had not stated anything with regard to the assault by the wife of the Appellant in her statement to police. I observe that this is a piece of evidence only against the wife of the Appellant, the prosecution against whom was abated due to her demise. On the other hand, this Court needs to consider whether indeed an omission of this nature has been established by the defence in this case.

According to section 155 of the Evidence Ordinance one of the ways in which credit of a witness can be impeached by the adverse party is by proving that such witness has made a former statement, which is inconsistent with that witnesses's evidence in Court. One tool used by the defence counsel in trial Courts to achieve this purpose is to highlight the fact that such witness has failed to state some material fact to the statement made by such witness to Police. Such failures are commonly referred to as omissions attributed to that witness. Once such omissions are proved, then the trial Court must consider whether such omission affects the credibility of that witness. Thus, condition precedent to such consideration by Court is the firm establishment of such omission. This is because the necessity to consider such an omission does not simply arise if indeed there is no such omission in existence.

It would be relevant at this stage to refer to the Court of Appeal judgment in the case of Keerthi Bandara V Attorney General.[7] In that case, His Lordship Justice Sisira De Abrew stated as follows.

"…… We lay it down that it is for the Judge to peruse the Information Book in the exercise of his overall control of the said book and to use it to aid the Court at the inquiry or trial. When defence counsel spot lights a vital omission, the trial Judge ought to personally peruse the statement recorded in the Information Book, interpret the contents of the statement in his mind and determine whether there is a vital omission or not and thereafter inform the members of the jury whether there is a vital omission or not and his direction on the law in this respect is binding on the members of the jury. Thus when the defence contends that there is a vital omission which militates against the adoption of the credibility of the witness, it is the trial Judge who should peruse the Information Book and decide on that issue. When the matter is again raised before the Court of Appeal, the Court of Appeal Judges are equally entitled to read the contents of the statements recorded in the Information Book and determine whether there is a vital omission or not and both Courts ought to exclude altogether the illegal and inadmissible opinions expressed orally by police officers (who are not experts but lay witnesses) in the witness box on this point. … "

Moreover, the Evidence Ordinance in section 145 specifically provides for the manner in which a witness can be cross-examined and confronted with the statements made by such witness previously and the procedure to be adopted when proving such statements. It is worthwhile to reproduce here the said section.

Section 145.

(1) A witness may be cross-examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing and relevant to matters in question without such writing being shown to him, or being proved; but if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him.

(2) If a witness, upon cross examination as to a previous oral statement made by him relevant to matters in question in the suit or proceeding in which he is cross examined and inconsistent with his present testimony, does not distinctly admit that he made such statement, proof may be given that he did in fact make it; but before such proof can be given the circumstances of the supposed statement sufficient to designate the particular occasion must be mentioned to the witness, and he must be asked whether or not he made such a statement.

The scheme of the above section clearly demands that the following mandatory steps must be adhered to, when marking and proving an inconsistency.

Firstly, a cross-examining counsel who intends to show that the evidence of the witness under cross examination is contradictory with a previous statement made by him, must ask questions relevant to such matters in question without such previous statements being shown to him.

Secondly, if such witness comes out with something that is prima facie inconsistent with any part of such statement, it is then only the section allows such counsel to bring such parts of such statement which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him, to the attention of such witness.

Thirdly, if such witness has stated something inconsistent with his previous statement and does not distinctly admit making such previous statement, then the cross-examining counsel is under a duty as per sub section 2 of the above section to ask whether or not such witness has made such a previous statement.

Fourthly, it is thereafter only the cross-examining counsel can proceed to prove that such witness has in fact made such previous statement.

The second question of law as set out towards the beginning of this judgment also raises the question whether the Provincial High Court misdirected itself in failing to analyze the contradictions in the evidence of the virtual complainant. Therefore, I would now deal with the effect of the two contradictions marked V 1 and V 2 by the defence in the trial.

By the contradiction marked V 1, the learned counsel who appeared for the Accused at the Magistrate's Court had attempted to show that the virtual complainant has stated in the evidence in chief that she had received a blow to the lower part of her right arm when the accused assaulted her. Thus, I will reproduce below, the relevant portion from the Magistrate's Court proceedings which reflect the said questions and answers leading to the said purported marking of the contradiction V 1, V 2 as well as the other purported discrepancies.

When one peruses the evidence in chief of the virtual complainant as a whole, it can clearly be observed that her evidence in court was that her right arm had rested hard on the ground when she fell after being pushed by the Accused. It is therefore a matter for regret that the learned counsel who appeared for the Accused in the Magistrate's Court had replaced his own version in place of that of the witness when he questioned the witness in the following manner; දැන් තමන් කලින් දවසේ සාක්ෂි දිලා කියා සිටියා, තමන්ගේ අතටත් වැදුනා, ගහපු පාර ?

Thus, it is clear that the above purported portion of the evidence, which the learned counsel had used to contradict the witness, is not indeed a part of her evidence before Court. Therefore, the learned counsel who appeared for the accused in the Magistrate's Court deliberately, without any excuse, had attempted to mislead the witness by asking questions as if she had stated so in the evidence in chief. In any case, while the witness had not admitted making such statement in Court, the prosecution also had not proved that she had made such statement. Thus, I am of the view that the contradiction V 1, is something that does not in reality exists in the evidence of the virtual complainant.

As regards the other contradiction V 2, it can be clearly observed that the virtual complainant in both her evidence in chief and cross-examination has been consistent that it was only in the hospital that she got to know that her right hand had been injured. Further, the unfair manner in which the said counsel had questioned the witness clearly shows that the contradiction V 2, is a contradiction illegally created by counsel and not an inconsistency in the evidence of the witness.

Learned counsel who appeared for the Accused before the Magistrate's Court had also attempted to highlight certain other items of evidence of the virtual complainant as omissions in her statement to Police. I have carefully perused the evidence of the virtual complainant on record and I am unable to trace any satisfactory proof of the said other so called discrepancies as well. The learned counsel for the reasons best known to him has been satisfied to leave it at that without even making any attempt to adduce proof before Court that the virtual complainant had indeed made such statements. They are either non-existent or are not proved to the satisfaction of Court. A closer look at the questions and answers set out above would manifestly show that it is so. Thus, it is not possible for a Court of law to consider them as omissions in the statement made to Police by the virtual complainant.

Therefore, as reflected from the above record of proceedings, I am of the view that the two purported contradictions marked V 1 and V 2 by the defence in the trial before the Magistrate's Court are non-existent contradictions and hence should not be considered as discrepancies in the evidence of the virtual complainant.

The learned defense counsel had also suggested to this witness that there were no signs of assault on her head.

As the sister of the virtual complainant (prosecution witness No. 2) also stated in her evidence that the 1st Accused assaulted both the virtual complainant and herself with hands. She also stated that the wife of the Accused had assaulted with a stick. She further states that she ran away from the scene when they came to assault her further. She states that there were bruises on the body of the virtual complainant.

In the case of Bandaranaike V Jagathsena and others [8] this Court has taken the view that when version of two witnesses do not agree the trial judge has to consider whether the discrepancy is due to dishonesty or to defective memory or whether in the witness' powers of observation were limited.[9]

In the Indian case of State of Uttar Pradesh V M K Anthony,[10] it was held as follows.

" … while appreciating the evidence of a witness, the approach must be whether the evidence of the witness read as a whole appears to have a ring of truth. Once that impression is formed, it is undoubtedly necessary for the court to scrutinise the evidence more particularly keeping in view of the deficiencies, draw-backs and infirmities pointed out in the evidence as a whole and evaluate them to find out whether it is against the general tenor of the evidence given by the witness and whether the earlier evaluation of the evidence is shaken as to render it unworthy of belief. Minor discrepancies of trivial matters not touching the core of the case, hyper-technical approach by taking sentences torn out of context here or there from the evidence, attaching importance to some technical error committed by the investigating officer not going to the root of the matter would not ordinarily permit rejection of the evidence as a whole. If the Court before whom the witness gives evidence had the opportunity to form the opinion about the general tenor of evidence given by the witness, the appellate Court which had not this benefit will have to attach due weight to the appreciation of evidence by the trial Court and unless there are reasons weighty and formidable it would not be proper to reject the evidence on the ground of minor variations or infirmities in the matter of trivial details. Even honest and truthful witnesses may defer in some details unrelated to the main incident because power of observation, retention and reproduction defer with individuals. Cross examination is an unequal dual between a rustic and refined lawyer. … "

In the light of the above conclusions it is my view that the learned High Court Judge was right when he concluded that the so called discrepancies has not affected the credibility of the virtual complainant or that the said purported discrepancies have not created any reasonable doubt in the prosecution's case. Therefore, I answer all of the aforementioned questions of law in the negative.

The two plaintiffs filed this action against the four defendants seeking a declaration that the 1st and 2nd defendants are holding the property in suit conveyed by deed No. 256 in trust for the plaintiffs, and the 2nd defendant's transfer of his rights in favour of the 1st and 3rd defendants by deed No. 11848 is confined to such limited rights. They sought an order retransferring the property in their names and damages. No relief was sought against the 4th defendant bank to whom the property had been mortgaged and the 4th defendant was later discharged from the proceedings.

The 1st and 2nd defendants filed the answer seeking dismissal of the action. The 3rd defendant filed a somewhat perplexing answer in that the answer commences by denying the averments in the plaint and concludes by seeking a decree that the 1st and 2nd defendants are holding the property in trust for the plaintiffs. Notably, the 3rd defendant does not state in the answer that she is prepared to transfer whatever rights passed on to her by deed No. 11848 in the name of the plaintiffs. At the trial, the plaintiffs raised issues seeking all the reliefs prayed for in the prayer to the plaint, including the reliefs sought against the 3rd defendant.

Halfway through the trial, the 1st and 2nd defendants made an application to the District Court to make the 3rd defendant a plaintiff in the action on the basis that the 3rd defendant supports the case of the plaintiffs. This application was refused by the District Court mainly on the ground that it was a belated application. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal set aside this order and directed the District Court to add the 3rd defendant as the 3rd plaintiff. It is against this Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal that the plaintiffs have preferred this appeal.

This Court granted leave to appeal against the Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal on the questions whether the impugned Judgment is contrary to inter alia sections 14 and 18 of the Civil Procedure Code, and whether the High Court failed to consider the reason the 3rd defendant was not made a plaintiff and the fact that the 3rd defendant has no cause of action against the 1st and 2nd defendants.

The High Court of Civil Appeal allowed the application of the 1st and 2nd defendants under section 18(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, which reads as follows:

> The court may on or before the hearing, upon the application of either party, and on such terms as the court thinks just, order that the name of any party, whether as plaintiff or as defendant improperly joined, be struck out; and the court may at any time, either upon or without such application, and on such terms as the court thinks just, order that any plaintiff be made a defendant, or that any defendant be made a plaintiff, and that the name of any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the court may be necessary in order to enable the court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in that action, be added.

The High Court of Civil Appeal highlights that in terms of section 18(1), "the court may at any time, either upon or without such application, and on such terms as the court thinks just, order that any plaintiff be made a defendant, or that any defendant be made a plaintiff".

After the amendments to the Civil Procedure Code by Act No. 9 of 1991 and Act No. 8 of 2017, section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be read in isolation but in conjunction with section 93(2). (Colombo Shipping Co Ltd v. Chirayu Clothing Pvt Ltd [1995] 2 Sri LR 97)

Section 93(2) of the Civil Procedure Code reads as follows:

> On or after the day first fixed for the Pre-Trial of the action and before final judgment, no application for the amendment of any pleadings shall be allowed unless the Court is satisfied, for reasons to be recorded by the Court, that grave and irremediable injustice will be caused if such amendment is not permitted, and on no other ground, and that the party so applying has not been guilty of laches.

The basic rule embodied in section 93(2) is that no amendment of pleadings shall be allowed on or after the day first fixed for the pre-trial of the action. As this section stands today, the Court no longer has the discretion to allow the amendment of pleadings after the day first fixed for the pre-trial of the action. The Court can now allow the amendment of pleadings after the day first fixed for the pre-trial of the action if and only if the Court is satisfied that (a) grave and irremediable injustice would be caused if such amendment is not permitted and (b) the party seeking such amendment is not guilty of laches. Both these requirements must be satisfied, not one. (Kuruppuarachchi v. Andreas [1996] 2 Sri LR 11)

The plaintiffs filed the action on 06.11.2009 and the 3rd defendant filed the answer on 26.04.2010. The 1st and 2nd defendants knew the 3rd defendant's standpoint by 26.04.2010. The case was first fixed for trial on 16.12.2010.

This was after the amendment to section 93(2) by Act No. 9 of 1991 but before the amendment by Act No. 8 of 2017. At the time of Act No. 9 of 1991, there was no pre-trial, only trial. The only change made to section 93(2) by Act No. 8 of 2017 was the substitution of the words "day first fixed for the trial" with the words "day first fixed for the Pre-Trial".

The application to add the 3rd defendant as the 3rd plaintiff under section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code was made by the 1st and 2nd defendants on 06.11.2015 in the middle of the trial after voluminous evidence had been recorded on several dates of hearing. There is no explanation for the delay in making the application. The 2nd defendant is clearly guilty of laches. Nor has the Court been convinced that grave and irremediable injustice would be caused if such amendment is not permitted.

Allowing the application of the 1st and 2nd defendants under section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code necessarily entails the amendment of pleadings. It is not just a matter of amending the caption. The amendment of pleadings was not legally permissible at the stage the application was made and therefore the application to add the 3rd defendant as the 3rd plaintiff ought to have been refused.

The High Court of Civil Appeal took the view that no cause of action is disclosed in the plaint against the 3rd defendant and there is no explanation in the plaint as to why the 3rd defendant was made a defendant. The plaintiffs have clearly explained in the plaint the basis upon which the 3rd defendant was brought in (i.e. the execution of deed No. 11848 by the 2nd defendant in favour of the 3rd defendant) and the relief sought against her. This does not appear to be a collusive action as suggested by the High Court of Civil Appeal.

Can the 3rd defendant be made the 3rd plaintiff on the facts and circumstances of this case? Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code enacts "All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative, in respect of the same cause of action." According to section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, a cause of action is the wrong for the prevention or redress of which an action may be brought. The 1st and 2nd defendants have committed no wrong to the 3rd defendant. Hence no cause of action has accrued to the 3rd defendant against the 1st and 2nd defendants. The 3rd defendant, in my view, cannot be made a plaintiff.

The questions of law in respect of which leave was granted are answered in the affirmative.

I set aside the Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal and restore the order of the District Court dated 11.03.2016. The plaintiffs are entitled to costs in all three Courts recoverable from the 1st and 2nd defendants.

Argued on: 04.09.2020

L.T.B. Dehideniya, J.

Plaintiff-Appellant- Respondent (hereinafter sometime referred to as the Respondent) instituted an action by plaint dated 30.05.2006 seeking damages from the Defendant – Respondent –Petitioner (hereinafter sometime referred to as the Appellant). In her plaint, the Respondent had alleged that the Appellant had made a false complaint to the Polgahawela Police Station accusing the Respondent of Theft. Upon the said complaint, the Respondent had been arrested, produced in Court, remanded for 10 days and thereafter released on bail. The Magistrate Court of Polgahawela had discharged the Respondent on or about 06.12.2005, on the basis that the witnesses had not presented themselves in Court. Consequent to the filing of the action in the District Court, the proceedings against the Respondent before the Magistrate Court (Case bearing No.13028) had been reopened. The matter had been taken up for trial and the Respondent was acquitted and discharged on or around 16.03.2010. The Respondent's cause of action of the District Court action arose when the Respondent was discharged by the Magistrate's Court on the account of the fact that the witnesses had not presented in Court, before the case was reopened.

The Respondent contested that the Appellant's act of false allegation of theft, constituted an aggression upon her person, her dignity or her reputation, and that the act was intentional. The Respondent has further stated that, in consequence of the complaint made by the Appellant, the Respondent had been arrested, assaulted by Police and thus suffered physical and mental trauma, the Respondent had to relocate with her family due to extreme social stigma and resulted in losing her small business and the education of the Respondent's child had got affected. The Respondent had denied the charges of theft and further contends that the Appellant had no reasonable or probable cause to make the said complaint and the Appellant has committed an injuria with the intention of impairing Respondent's dignity, reputation and personality. Accordingly, the Respondent claimed a sum of Rs.400, 000/- as damages

The District Court of Polgahawela delivered the judgement dated 01.09.2010 in favour of the Appellant holding that no sufficient evidence was led that would establish that the Appellant acted maliciously or that she made a false complaint. District Court further held that the Respondent's claim was not explicit enough to consider whether the Respondent's action was based on actio injuriarum or malicious prosecution. Being aggrieved by the said judgement the Respondent tendered an appeal there from to the High Court of Civil Appeal of the North Western Province. Upon hearing the parties, the High Court of Civil Appeal delivered the judgement dated 04.08.2014 in favour of the Respondent, set aside the Judgement of District Court of Polgahawela holding that the Respondent's action comes under the actio injuriarum and not malicious prosecution. The Learned High Court Judges further affirmed that the Appellant has failed to establish a reasonable and probable cause in making the allegations of theft. It is from the aforesaid judgement that this appeal is preferred.

This Court granted leave to appeal on the following questions of law;

1) Did the High Court err in law by failing to appreciate that the rights of parties are determined as of the date of the institution of the action and that consequently the Judgement of the Magistrate's Court could not have formed the foundation of the judgement in favour of the Plaintiff?

2) Did the High Court err in law by failing to consider that the action before the District Court could not be maintained while proceedings were still pending before the Magistrate's Court and that no cause of action would accrue until a finality had been reached in respect of such proceedings in terms of the law?

3) Did the High Court misdirect itself in law applying the judgement of Alwis v. Ahangama?

The Appellant's case is based on the ground that the judgement of the High Court of Civil Appeal of the North Western Province, is wrong, contrary to law and against weight of the evidence led before the Court. When carefully considering the evidence tendered before the Magistrate Court in the initial action, it appears that the Appellant had made the said complaint only upon a 'suspicion' against the Respondent (Appellant's Statement to the Police Station of Polgahawela marked as පැ.1 in the original action). Examining all the evidence presented, it appears that the series of events in which the Appellant lined up the theft that allegedly took place at her place of business was based on the conclusions drawn from the suspicion of the Respondent. Among the factual evidence submitted in the said police complaint and the evidence presented at the proceedings, multiple contradictory evidence has been detected. Although it is recorded in පැ.1 the police complaint, that the Appellant went home having closed the shop at about 5.00 p.m., it seems to be an inaccurate fact since the evidence of the Appellant in Case bearing No.13028 in Magistrate's Court as well as in the District Court of Kurunegala (Case bearing No.9540/M) was that her daughter closed the shop in that evening (at p.61 of the proceedings). However, when the learned counsel had shown the Appellant what was recorded in the Police Records, the Appellant was unable to provide a justifiable reasoning for the contradictions of the evidence.

Further, the Appellant has clearly stated in her Police Complaint that there was no eyewitness evidence of the theft suspected to have been committed by the Respondent; except the evidence that the missing clothing items were there for sale with few cloth merchants, namely; Rajapakse

Siril Anandathilake and Nisantha Bandara, at the fair of Polgahawela. However, the police statements obtained from the said merchants were not submitted and they had not been produced before the Court as witnesses. When carefully considering the Police Records, it appears that the said merchants had failed to recognize the clothing items as the exact same missing clothing items belongs to the Appellant. Further, when the learned counsel cross-examined, the Appellant had failed to even recognize the identities of the two merchants.

As per the aforesaid context;

i. The Appellant has failed to substantiate the allegation of theft against the Respondent by clear evidence.
ii. Contradictions identified in the Appellant's evidence throughout the court proceedings has damaged the credibility of the Appellant's allegations against the Respondent.

Accordingly, with the perusal of the factual evidence pertaining to the present application, it is clear that there was no reasonable or probable cause for the Appellant to suspect the Respondent of theft.

The learned District Judge in the judgement dated 01.09.2010 held that the Respondent's claim was not explicit enough to consider whether the Respondent's action was based on actio injuriarum or malicious prosecution. The District Court further held that, the action must be dismissed since the Respondent had failed to establish direct evidence on malice or injuria with regard to the complaint of theft of the Appellant against the Respondent. The law has introduced a set of essential factors in establishing an action of actio injuriarum and malicious prosecution. R.G Mckerron (The Law of Delict, Reprinted Edition, 2009 at p.53) describes actio injuriarum as an act committed with dolus (wrongful intent) or as it is usually termed in this connection, animus injuriandi which consisting an impairment of the Plaintiff's personality.

> "The interests of personality protected by the actio injuriarum are those interests 'which every man has, as a matter of natural right, in possession of an unimpaired person, dignity and reputation'. The plaintiff therefore, show that the act complained of constituted an impairment of his person, dignity and his reputation.
>
> Examples such acts are;

- Assaults of all kind
- The unjustifiable infliction of any restraint upon the liberty of another
- The use of defamatory or insulting words concerning another
- The malicious and unwarranted institution of criminal proceedings against another" [emphasis added]

The legal principle of "ABUSE OF LEGAL PROCEDURE" under actio injuriarum action has been discussed and accepted in case law jurisprudence. In Alwis v. Ahangama [2000] 3 Sri L.R 225 Justice Fernando referring to R.G Mckerron (The Law of Delict, Reprinted Edition, 2009 at p.259), held that in both injuria and malicious prosecution has a general requirement to be fulfilled, which is to "set the law in motion".

> "Every person has a right to set the law in motion, but a person who institutes legal proceedings against another maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause abuses that right and commits an actionable wrong…
> The chief classes of proceedings to which the rule applies are:1)Malicious criminal prosecutions 2)Malicious imprisonment or arrest 3)Malicious execution of property 4)Malicious insolvency 5)Malicious civil actions"

In light of the well-established legal principles discussed above, it is clear to this court that in the present application, the Appellant has 'set the law in motion' by making the police complaint against the Respondent. Furthermore, it is undeniable that, being arrested upon the said complaint, the Respondent was produced in Court and remanded for 10 days, itself constructs an injuria since the said complaint of the Appellant has led to an impairment of personality, dignity and reputation of the Respondent.

It is a question with great importance before this Court that, whether the Appellant has acted maliciously when making the alleged complaint of theft against the Respondent. The necessary ingredients forming a charge of malicious criminal arrest are discussed in Chitty Vs. Peries (41 N.L.R 145 at page 147), Howard CJ stated that the Plaintiff must show (i) that his arrest on a criminal charge was instigated, authorized or effected by the Defendant (ii) that the Defendant acted maliciously and (iii) that the Defendant acted without reasonable and probable cause.

The Respondent has stated that the Appellant lodged the Police complaint purely on malicious intent. Upon the process of adducing evidence before the Court, the Respondent has stated that the Appellant had a quarrel with the Respondent over a personal dispute, and consequently made the said Police complaint , wilfully or intentionally to cause harm, without legal justification against the Respondent. When carefully observing the evidence led before this court, it appears that the Appellant has failed to rebut the Respondent's evidence on the aforesaid personal dispute (at p.2-3 of the proceedings) and had no other reasonable or probable cause for the allegations of theft against the Respondent, except the said personal dispute. Further, it is clear to this court that it was the Appellant's Police complaint that led to the arrest of the Respondent. Therefore it is evident that, the necessary ingredients forming malice have been satisfied by the Respondent. Therefore, it is conspicuous that, the respondent's claim in this case is not based on malicious prosecution as understood in the English Law, but founded on principles of actio injuriam known to the Roman Dutch law.

It is a pivotal issue, whether the respondent could maintain this action if the criminal proceedings against the respondent in the Magistrate's Court had not reached a finality at the time the present civil proceedings was instituted against the Petitioner. The Appellant submits that, one of the essential requirements to be fulfilled to maintain such a case is termination of criminal proceedings in the Magistrate's Court in favour of the Respondent, at the time when civil proceedings for damages was instituted. The key to this issue depends on the degree of the definition of the "cause of action". In this regard the definition of the cause of action given in Ranghami v. Kirihamy (1904) 7 NLR 357 would be a useful guidance in resolving the issues. Layard C.J at p.359 stated as follows;

> "Brett, J., had previously in Jackson v. Spittal (5 C. P. 552) laid down that a cause of action was the act on the part of the defendant which gives the plaintiff his cause of complaint. Taking that as the true definition of 'cause of action'.."

This definition has been accepted and adopted in the case of Somasiri v. Ceylon Petroleum Corporation [1992] 1 Sri. LR 39 at p.43. As far as the present application is concerned what caused the Respondent to institute a civil action? It is the malicious initiation of a criminal proceeding against the Respondent without any reasonable and probable cause. It is the very act of maliciously making a Police complaint without a probable cause, that led the Police to arrest the Respondent, which has made the Respondent institute the civil action upon the injuria. Further, when carefully observing the factual evidence, it is obvious that the Respondent instituted the civil action for damages after she was discharged by the Magistrate's Court, on or about 6th December 2005 by reason of the witnesses had not presented themselves in Court. Therefore, even the proceedings against the Respondent before the Magistrate Court (Case bearing No.13028) had been reopened after the filing of the action in the District Court, The Respondent's cause of action for the civil action arose when the Respondent was discharged by the Magistrate's Court on the account of the fact that the witnesses had not presented in Court, before the case was reopened. Moreover, according to the proceedings, leading evidence of the District Court commenced only on 24.03.2010, after the Respondent was acquitted and discharged on or around 16.03.2010 by the Magistrate's Court (Case bearing No. 13028). And the said judgement was marked and produced at the trial of the District Court.

Looking at the decided cases, where similar legal issues were discussed, it also appears that there is no legal impediment to the Respondent to maintain a civil action against the Appellant, when the Respondent has tendered convincing evidence of 'cause of action' against the Appellant.

> The plaintiff-respondent instituted action seeking damages alleging that the defendant petitioner without any reasonable and probable cause maliciously prosecuted him by instituting criminal proceedings in the Magistrate's Court. The criminal action in which the plaintiff-respondent was being prosecuted had not been terminated. The defendant-petitioner contended that, no cause of action had accrued to the plaintiff-respondent to sue him in a civil action for malicious prosecution as the criminal action had not been terminated at the time the present civil action for malicious prosecution was instituted against him. The District Court held that the action is maintainable.
>
> Held:
> (1) As far as the present civil action is concerned, it is the institution of criminal proceedings maliciously without any reasonable and probable cause that had caused the plaintiff to institute Court proceedings.

(2) The plaintiff-respondent's claim is not based on malicious prosecution as understood in the English Law but founded on principles of actio injuriam known to the Roman Dutch Law.

The reasoning adopted In Alwis vs. Ahangama [2000] 3 Sri. L.R by Fernando J., at p. 238, provides legal guidance in determining whether a civil action is maintainable in an application where similar legal issues arise as discussed in the present application.

"I therefore hold that the Plaintiff's action was maintainable. Being an action in respect of an injuria allegedly committed by the Defendant, by (a) maliciously, and (b) without reasonable and probable cause (c) making a defamatory complaint (of theft) against the Plaintiff (d) which resulted in legal proceedings against the Plaintiff (namely his arrest and production in the Magistrate's Court)"

Therefore, taking into account the relevant case law and legal principles, I am of the view that the Respondent's civil action seeking damages for injuries occurred as a result of the false Police complaint is maintainable against the Appellant.

The harm or loss which gives rise to the actio unjuriarum is a violation of a personality interest, usually classified as corpus, or bodily integrity, dignitas, or dignity; and fama, or reputation.as per the averments of the plaint dated 30.05.2006, the Respondent had sought damages for the patrimonial loss and the injuries done to her personality, dignity and reputation. However, when carefully observing the evidence led before the Court, it appears that the Respondent has not tendered evidence on patrimonial loss she suffered due to the false complaint made by the Appellant against the Respondent. Therefore, when assessing damages in respect of non-patrimonial loss, which does not have an economic or pecuniary value, the court exercises its own judgement in the matter and strives to determine awards which will be fair to the Respondent as well the Appellant.

The allegation of theft made by the Appellant without a reasonable and probable cause had led the Police to arrest the Respondent, detained at a remand prison for ten days. The Respondent had to endure many hardships including humiliation of being labelled as thief, her child being insulted at school as a child of a thief which had effected the child's education and his mental health, and she and her family had to change the locality and relocate to Colombo in order to avoid `the extreme social stigma. Furthermore, the Respondent had to give up her small business when relocating to Colombo, causing her severe financial hardship. In respect to all the evidence tendered by both parties, it is clear to this court that the Respondent has been able to successfully establish her evidence on the injuria caused by the Appellant's Police complaint of theft against the Respondent. However it is important to point out that, the Appellant has failed to rebut the aforesaid evidence in the Court.

I answer the questions of law as follows,

1) No
2) No
3) No

By considering above circumstances, I am in the view that, this Court will not interfere with the judgement of the High Court of Civil Appeal of the North western Province.

Vijith K. Malalgoda PC J

Petitioners-Petitioners before this court (hereinafter referred to as Petitioners) initially went before the Court of Appeal, seeking the grant of mandates in the nature of Certiorari quashing the decision of the Council of Legal Education (hereinafter referred to as the 1st Respondent) to admit only 177 students to the Sri Lanka Law College for the academic year 2014 and Mandamus on the 1st

Respondent and/or the 2nd Respondent Principal, Sri Lanka Law College and/or the 3rd Respondent Minister of Justice to increase the intake up to 225 students to the Sri Lanka Law College for the academic year 2014.

The Court of Appeal by its order dated 17.11.2014, refused to issue notice on the Respondents and dismissed the Petitioners application.

Being aggrieved by the said order of the Court of Appeal, the Petitioners sought special leave from the Supreme Court. This Court on 28.09.2015 granted Special Leave, on the following questions of Law;

1. Was the Court of Appeal in error by holding that the Petitioners' legitimate expectation was based solely upon the number of students selected on previous years irrespective of merit based on their performance at the Entrance Examination?
2. Was the Court of Appeal in error in holding that "the paramount consideration be given to the performance of the candidate than the number of vacancies that exist" when the Petitioners have obtained 64 and 65 marks which is far above the 40% by Rule 23 (2) (VII)?
3. Was the Court of Appeal in error by not giving sufficient weight to the number of vacancies that exist or to be decided as a relevant factor when concluding that the Petitioners had no legitimate expectation?
4. In any event, was the Court of Appeal in error by holding that the Petitioner had no legitimate expectation?
5. Whether a Writ of Mandamus will lie when a discretion is available to the Public Authority?

As submitted by the Petitioners, they responded to an advertisement published on 05.05.2013 calling for applications for the Entrance Examination to admit students to the Sri Lanka Law College, for the academic year 2014. Accordingly, all of them had sat for the said examination on 06.10.2013, which was conducted by the Commissioner General of Examination.

According to the Petitioners, the results of the said examination was not available until the 1st Respondent displayed a list of 177 candidates on 25th January 2014, who obtained more than 66 marks at the said examination, as the students who had been selected for the academic year 2014. However, the results of the said examination were published in the internet on 30th January 2014.

The Petitioners who had not scored more than 66 marks but scored 64 or 65 marks at the said examination, complained against the said decision of the 1st Respondent to declare the cut-off point for the academic year at 66 marks as an arbitrary decision taken based on factors unsupported with justifiable reasons.

In this regard the Petitioners have further claimed that there was an average intake of 225 students annually, to the Sri Lanka Law College, and therefore restricting the intake to 177 in the academic year 2014, was against their legitimate expectation.

Petitioners submitted that the intake for the year 2014 was the lowest intake to the Sri Lanka Law College since 1981 and in the said circumstances argued that the 1st Respondent's decision to deviate its policy by restricting the intake to 177 students without a valid reason, is unfair and unreasonable.

In support of their contention the Petitioners mainly relied on the statistics with regard to the intake of students to Sri Lanka Law College for the period 1981-2012, (P-6 and F) and performance Report published by the Ministry of Justice for the year 2012. (P-10 and L)

As revealed before this court, in terms of Section 7 (1) of the Council of Legal Education Ordinance No. 2 of 1900(as amended) (hereinafter referred to as the Ordinance), it shall be lawful for the 1st Respondent, Incorporated Council of Legal Education, with the concurrence of the Minister, to make such by-laws, rules and orders as to it shall seem necessary for defined purposes.

Rule 23 (2) (VII) of the Rules of the 1st Respondent, made under Section 7 of the Ordinance provided for the selection criteria to the Sri Lanka Law College as;
