ARGUED ON: 26.09.2022.

DECIDED ON: 13.10.2023

Determination

Aluwihare PC, J

The Petitioner invoked the jurisdiction of this court in terms of Article 99(13)(a) of the Constitution seeking declarations from this court that the expulsion of the Petitioner from 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya', is invalid; that the seat he held in Parliament has not become vacant consequent to such expulsion and that the Petitioner has not ceased to be a member of Parliament.

The Petitioner was declared elected as a Member of Parliament under Article 99A of the Constitution and the same was gazetted by the Commissioner General of Elections under an order of the Election Commission on 18-12-2020.

The factual background

The Petitioner is the Chairman of the 'Wijaya Dharani National Council'; a political party but not a recognized political party under the provisions of the Parliamentary Elections Act No. 1 of 1981, as amended. The Petitioner, therefore, had decided to contest the general elections through the 1st Respondent which is a recognized political party registered with the Election Commission. Accordingly, a Memorandum of Understanding (hereinafter referred to as the MOU) was signed between the 1st Respondent, 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' party and 'Wijaya Dharani National Council' on 18.03.2020. This was to create a coalition or an alliance between the two political parties and to facilitate 'Wijaya Dharani National Council' to contest for the Parliamentary Elections under the 1st Respondent, 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya'. [P4]

In terms of the MOU entered between the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' and the 'Wijaya Dharani National Council', the parties had expressly agreed, inter alia, to the following conditions;

a) Clause 5; the parties had very clearly agreed that the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' being the first party to the same, has no right to influence or intervene or object to any political decisions and activities taken by the 2nd party to the MOU*, i.e.,* the 'Wijaya Dharani National Council' of which the Petitioner is a member as well as its chairman.

b) Clause 6;, the parties had agreed that the 1st Party Ape Janabala Pakshaya' will not have any influence on a member of parliament elected from the 2nd party 'Wijaya Dharani National Council' in relation to any activity of such member.

c) Clause 7; The members of the 2nd party [Wijaya Dharani National Council'] cannot be subjected to the rules and regulations of the 1st Party; Ape Janabala Pakshaya', no disciplinary action or other influence can be brought upon the members of the 2nd Party.

d) Clause 4, the parties also agreed to appoint a candidate nominated by the Petitioner, as a member of Parliament as the 1st appointee from the National List and in the event a 2nd member is to be nominated from the National list, such nomination to be done by the 1st Party.

Further, the members of the 'Wijaya Dharani National Council' were to remain separate and distinct as opposed to de jure members of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' and were not required to obtain the membership of the said 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya'.

Pursuant to executing the MOU, each candidate of the 'Wijaya Dharani National Council' party including the Petitioner, thereafter signed and executed a 'Letter of Promise', whereby the candidates agreed to abide by the terms and conditions stipulated therein, pledging allegiance to the 'Wijaya Dharani National Council'. The Pledge further confirmed that the Disciplinary Committee of 'Wijaya Dharani National Council' had disciplinary control over its members.

At the conclusion of the Parliamentary Election on 05.08.2020, the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' was informed by the Election Commission that it had secured one National List seat in Parliament, in terms of Article 99A of the Constitution.

The Petitioner, albeit, after a brief dispute among the coalition partners, was declared elected as a Member of Parliament under the Constitution provision referred to, by Gazette Notification dated 18.12.2020.

According to the Petitioner, he received a letter dated 30.06.2020 under the hand of the 2nd Respondent, calling for explanation in relation to five issues enumerated therein, on the basis that the Central Committee of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' had decided to hold an inquiry, in view of the several complaints received by the Party [P18]. Whilst calling upon the Petitioner to respond to the 'issues' referred to in the letter within seven days, it states that if the Petitioner is unable to provide acceptable explanation to the issues raised in the letter, the Disciplinary Committee of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' will take steps to issue a charge sheet' against the Petitioner.

The Petitioner has taken strong objection to the said letter on the basis that he cannot be subjected to any disciplinary control by the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' since the Constitution of the said Party has no application to the Petitioner as he is not a member of the said political Party and the Constitution of the said Political Party mandates taking disciplinary action against its members only. In any event, the MOU [P4] categorically states that the disciplinary control of the members of 'Vijaya Dharani National Council' is not within the preview of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya'.

The Petitioner has not replied the latter [P18] reasoning that, without any form of prejudice to the position of the Petitioner, the provisions contained in the Constitution of 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' have no application or authority as far as the Petitioner is concerned.

The Petitioner was sent a second letter [by the 2nd Respondent] dated 05.08.2020 containing eight charges and informing the Petitioner that a disciplinary inquiry relating the to the said charge sheet would be held on the 20th August 2020,requiring the Petitioner to attend the same. Due to the spread of Covid 19 pandemic, however, the Petitioner was informed that the said inquiry will not be held on 20.08.2021.

The Petitioner had then been sent a charge sheet again by a letter dated 01.10.2021 by the Chairman of the Disciplinary Committee of 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' containing the same charges as the previous charge sheet dated 05.08.2021 and informing the Petitioner that the inquiry into the charges will be held on 14.10.2021

The petitioner was also informed that in the event the Petitioner is found guilty for one or more of the charges stipulated therein, the same will be communicated to the Chairman of the party, the Political Board and Central Working Committee, for the consideration of the expulsion of the Petitioner from 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' and in the event of the Petitioner failing to attend the said disciplinary inquiry, the inquiry will be conducted by the said Disciplinary Committee, ex parte.

The Petitioner contended that he was hospitalised on the 13.10.2021 and as such, he instructed his Attorney, Dinesh Vidanapathirana to inform the Disciplinary Committee of his medical condition and his incapacity to participate at the inquiry. It is alleged that the Attorney concerned was prevented at the gate either to communicate with any official or from informing the medical condition of the Petitioner,This is affirmed by the Affidavit of Dinesh Vidanapathirana dated 11 .11.2021 [P22].

The 2nd Respondent, by his letter dated 15.10.2021, had communicated to the Election Commission, the decision of the Central Committee of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' to expel the Petitioner from the membership of the Party and had requested the Election Commission to annul the parliamentary seat held by the Petitioner.

The Petitioner had also received a letter dated 15.10.2021 informing him of the recommendation of the disciplinary committee and the purported decision of the Central Working Committee and the Chairman of the party; 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya'.

By letter dated 16.10.2021[P25], the 2nd Respondent had informed the Secretary General of the Parliament that the Petitioner has been expelled from 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' with effect from 14.10.2021 and consequently, the Parliament seat held by the Petitioner had fallen vacant by virtue of Article 99(13)(a) of the Constitution and had requested the Secretary General to take necessary action in terms of Article 99(13) of the Constitution read with Section 64 of the Parliamentary Elections Act No.1 of 1981.The Petitioner, by letter dated 08.11.2021 addressed to the 2nd respondent, placed his position relating to the dispute and challenged the decision taken by the disciplinary committee and the Central Working Committee of the party including the Chairman of 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya'.

The gravamen of the Petitioner is that he cannot be subjected to the disciplinary control or authority of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' or its Central Working Committee and as such the action taken against him is patently illegal and grievously unlawful and is also violative of the rules of natural justice. It was on the above premise that the Petitioner invoked the jurisdiction of this court in terms of Article 99(13) (a) of the Constitution.

Subsequent developments

After the Petitioner invoked the jurisdiction of this court, which was on the 11th of November 2021, the attorney on record for the 1st to the 3rd Respondent by way of a motion dated 21st January 2022, informed the Court that steps had been taken to withdraw the expulsion of the Petitioner and produced a copy of the letter signed by the 2nd Respondent dated 12.01 2022, sent to the Petitioner and copied both to the Secretary General of Parliament as well as the Chairman Election Commission [A]. The letter states that the decision taken by 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' on 14.10.2021 to expel the petitioner will be revisited by the Central Committee and the Chairman of the Party.

In response to the motion referred to above, the Petitioner by way of a motion dated 21st February 2022, brought to the attention of the Court that the withdrawal of the decision to expel the petitioner is conditional and as such the Petitioner wishes to pursue this application and invited this Court to make a final determination with regard to the validity or otherwise of the impugned expulsion.

Sequel to the said motion by the Petitioner dated 21.02.2022 referred to above, the 1st to the 3rd Respondent filing a further motion on 24th February 2022 informed court that steps have been taken to withdraw the expulsion of the Petitioner and had annexed a letter dated 14.02.2022 addressed to the Petitioner informing him that the decision taken by the Central Committee and the Chairman of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' 14.10.2021 to expel the Petitioner was rescinded [X]. The letter had been copied to the Secretary General, Parliament and the Chairman, Elections Commission. As opposed to the letter issued by the 2nd Respondent dated 12.01.2022 [A], the second letter referred to above [X] is clearly an unconditional rescinding of the decision to expel the Petitioner from the membership of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya'.

Even in this backdrop, relying on the decision in the case of Ameer Ali and Others V. Sri Lanka Muslim Congress and Others 2006 IV SLR 189, the learned President's Counsel for the Petitioner contended that notwithstanding the withdrawal of the expulsion of the Petitioner, this Court has the jurisdiction to determine the validity of the expulsion. The learned President's Counsel contended that the withdrawal of the expulsion is conditional and restricted only to one of the grounds on which the expulsions have been challenged before this court, namely the failure to comply with the principles of natural justice, thus, this Court should hear and determine the matter in its entirety.

The learned Counsel for the 1st to 3rd respondents, [the party, General Secretary and Chairman respectively], however, submitted that, since the expulsion had been withdrawn, it is unnecessary for this court to make any decision as to the validity of the expulsion and that the proceedings should be accordingly terminated.

In terms of Article 99(13)(a) of the Constitution, where a Member of Parliament ceases by expulsion to be a member of a recognized party on whose nomination paper, his name appeared at the time of becoming such Member of Parliament, his seat becomes vacant upon the expiration of a period of one month from the date of his ceasing to be such member. The proviso to the Sub-article states that the seat will not become vacant if prior to the expiration of one month the member applies to the Supreme Court and this Court determines in such application that the expulsion was invalid. It is to be noted that the withdrawal of the expulsion by the 2nd and 3rd respondents on behalf of the 1st respondent was done on 14.02.2022, after a period of one month had elapsed from the date of the impugned expulsion. Thus, the withdrawal [of the expulsion] was done at a time when this Court was seized with the matter and in terms of the proviso to the Constitutional provision referred to, the seat will become vacant only if this Court makes a determination that the expulsion is valid. Accordingly, the withdrawal by the respondents does not per se result in a position where the expulsion becomes invalid and the Petitioner is correct in requesting a determination to be made by the Court as to the validity of the expulsion. The learned President's Counsel submitted that the initial letter [A] seeking to withdraw the expulsions on the alleged non-compliance with the principles of natural justice in arriving at a decision to expel the Petitioner should be taken as a concession on the part of the 1st to 3rd Respondents of this ground of invalidity.

The sequence of events outlined above reveals that the patent failure to adhere to the principles of natural justice in the purported decision to expel the Petitioner from the party, without prejudice to the position held by the Petitioner that Petitioner is not subject to the disciplinary control or authority of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' and/or its Central Working Committee, the party Chairman or the Disciplinary Committee. Furthermore, the Petitioner asserts that the conduct of these bodies including the party itself is patently illegal and grievously unlawful and is also violative the fundamental postulates of the rule of law, and also the basic rules of natural justice, including the principle of Audi Alteram Partem, in as much as, it is very clear that the said purported disciplinary committee of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' arrived at the aforesaid recommendation/decision to expel the Petitioner from 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' political party, without affording any form of hearing whatsoever to the Petitioner and/or his legal representative.

In the case of Tilak Karunaratne vs. Sirimavo Bandaranaike and Others 1993 1 SLR 91, Dheeraratne J., having examined the nature of the jurisdiction conferred on this Court in terms of the provisions of Article 99(13)(a) observed; [at page 101]-

"The nature if the jurisdiction conferred on the Supreme Court in terms of the proviso to Article 99(13)(a) is indeed unique in character; it calls for a determination that expulsion of a member of Parliament from a recognized political party on whose nomination paper his name appeared at the time of his becoming such Member of Parliament, was valid or invalid. If the expulsion is determined to be valid, the seat of the Member of Parliament becomes vacant. It is this seriousness of the consequence of expulsion which has prompted the framers of the Constitution to invest that unique original jurisdiction in the highest court of the island, so that a Member of Parliament may be amply shielded from being expelled from his own party unlawfully and/or capriciously. It is not disputed that this Court's jurisdiction includes, an investigation into the requisite competence of the expelling authority, an investigation as to whether the expelling authority followed the procedure, if any, which was mandatory in nature; an investigation as to whether there was breach of principles of natural justice in the decision-making process; and an investigation as to whether in the event of grounds of expulsion being specified by way of charges at a domestic inquiry the member was expelled on some other grounds which were not so specified" ....

In the instant case, as referred to earlier Clauses 5, 6 and 7 of the MOU[P4] entered into between the Petitioner's party; 'Wijaya Dharani National Council' and the political party of the Respondents, 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' clearly spells out that the members of the 'Wijaya Dharani National Council including the Petitioner shall not be subject to the rules and regulations of the ' Ape Janabala Pakshaya' and such members cannot be called upon for any disciplinary inquiry.

In the circumstances aforesaid, it was submitted that the office bearers of the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' cannot influence, intervene, or object to the political decisions taken by the 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' nor is there any provision to subject the Petitioner to disciplinary control of 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya'. Thus, it would be of vital importance to consider whether officials of 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya' had a mandate to initiate disciplinary proceedings against the Petitioner in the first place. In this regard Justice Marsoof in the case Perumpulli Hewage Piyasena, v. Ilankai Tamil Arasu Kadchi [SC Application Special [Expulsion] No. 03/2010,SC minutes 8.02.2011] observed;

"For this purpose, before considering the grounds set out in paragraph 29 of his Petition dated 10th December 2010 for challenging his expulsion, it is necessary to consider whether, in the first place, the Petitioner was amenable to the disciplinary control of ITAK. This is a matter of fundamental importance which involves another important question, namely, whether the Petitioner is or was a member of ITAK, because it is obvious that only a member of a political party that can be dealt with by that party for any breach of discipline."

In the case of Ameer Ali and Others vs. Sri Lanka Muslim Congress and Others, 2006, 1 SLR 189, Sarath N. Silva J [as he then was]., observed that this Court has to examine the requisite competence of the expelling authority and the nature of the decision-making process including that of the "domestic inquiry" to be satisfied as to its bona fides and the compliance with the principles of natural justice.

In the circumstances, I hold that the decision to expel the petitioner from the membership of 'Ape Janabala Pakshaya on a purported decision of the Disciplinary Committee by the letter dated 15.10.2021 marked 'P23', is ex-facie illegal as it has not been made by the appropriate disciplinary authority in terms of the MOU.

For all the aforesaid reasons, I determine that for the purposes of Article 99(13)(a) of the Constitution, the purported expulsion of the Petitioner, Ven. Athuraliye Rathana Thero was invalid.

In all the circumstances of the case, I make no order as to costs.

Expulsion determined invalid.

Ms. Kanishka de Silva, Balapatabendi SSC for the 1st - 6th & 8th -10th Respondents.
Nuwan Kodikara for the 7th Respondent.

DECIDED ON : 20th October, 2023

ACHALA WENGAPPULI, J.

The Petitioner, Mohamed Hashim Mohamed Ziyard, by his petition dated 15th March 2017, invoked the jurisdiction conferred on this Court under Articles 17 and 126 of the Constitution, alleging infringement of his fundamental rights guaranteed to him under Articles 12(1) and 14(1)(g) by executive or administrative actions of the 1st to 6th and 9th Respondents.

When this matter was supported by the learned President's Counsel for the Petitioner on 03.07.2017, seeking leave to proceed, this Court thought it fit to grant leave only under Article 12(1). Pending hearing of the Petitioner's allegation, the caption to his petition was amended from time to time, in order to substitute several Respondents, in place of the ones who had since ceased to hold office. Relevant sub-paragraphs of the prayer to the petition too were amended to be in line with the reliefs sought against those substituted Respondents. On 30.10.2017, the Petitioner amended his caption by inclusion of the 9th Respondent, the Mahaweli Authority of Sri Lanka. On the same day the Petitioner also amended some of the reliefs sought in the prayer to reflect the changes made to the caption. On 27.01.2022, the Petitioner sought to add the Minister of Mahaweli, Agriculture, Irrigation and Rural Development, as the 10th Respondent with an amended caption. Latest to the series of amendments to the caption was made on 08.02.2022.

With the amendment made on 05.09.2019, the amended prayer of the petition reads as follows;

i. to declare that the failure to grant the Annual Permit to the Petitioner is an infringement and/or continuing infringement of the Petitioner's fundamental rights guaranteed to him under Article 12(1) of the Constitution by the 1D, 2nd, 3rd, 4A, 5A, 6A Respondents and 9th Respondent or any one or more of them;

ii. to declare that the decision to cancel the nomination made in favour of the Petitioner and the subsequent issuance of an Annual Permit to the 7th Respondent is an infringement of the Petitioner's fundamental rights guaranteed to him under Article 12(1) of the Constitution by the 1D, 2nd, 3rd, 4A, 5A, 6A Respondents and 9th Respondent or any one or more of them;

iii. to declare that the failure to grant an Annual Permit to the Petitioner is an infringement and/or continuing infringement of the Petitioner's fundamental rights guaranteed to him under Article 12(1) of the Constitution by the 1D, 2nd, 3rd, 4A, 5A, 6A Respondents and 9th Respondent or any one or more of them;

iv. to declare the Annual Permit bearing No. අනු/එව්/නො/CLO/වාණිජ/ 2016/28) dated 29.12.2015 issued in favour of the 7th Respondent in respect of No. 283, Puttalam Road, Nochchiyagama, is null and void;

v. to direct the 1st to the 6th Respondents and 9th Respondent or any one of them to issue an Annual Permit to the Petitioner in respect of No.283 Puttalam Road, Nochchiyagama.

The added 1D Respondent (hereafter referred to as the 1st Respondent) and the 7th Respondent have filed their Statements of Objection resisting the Petitioner's application and sought its dismissal with costs. In his Statement of Objections, the 1st Respondent made an attempt to explain away the basis on which the decision to cancel the Petitioner's selection to the disputed commercial property was made and the circumstances that led the 9th Respondent to issue an Annual Permit to the 7th Respondent, in respect of lot No. 283, for the second time.

The Petitioner's complaint to this Court is based on three decisions made to his detriment by the 1st to 6th and 9th Respondents, namely the decision to cancel the nomination already made in his favour, the decision to lease out lot No. 283 to the 7th Respondent and the decision to issue an Annual Permit (P30) in the 7th Respondent's favour. The petitioner therefore contends that these three decisions are arbitrary, capricious, unreasonable, and discriminatory.

At the hearing of this application, learned President's Counsel, who represented the Petitioner, submitted that;

a. the Petitioner's possession of the parcel of land under dispute had been regularised as far back as 2005, when he was selected for the issuance of a lease, which was communicated to him by letter dated 26.10.2007 (P13),
b. in furtherance to the said selection, the Petitioner duly complied with all the requirements set out in the letter P13, by making the relevant payments stipulated therein, including arrears of lease for the year 1999,
c. the Petitioner therefore had entertained a legitimate expectation that he would be issued with an Annual Permit as indicated to him by letter dated 16.05.2013 (P19), which re-confirmed the legitimacy of his expectation,

In these circumstances, learned President's Counsel for the Petitioner had contended that the 1st to 6th and 8th to 9th Respondents, in making the decisions referred to in the preceding paragraph, have acted arbitrarily, capriciously and unreasonably as they frustrated the legitimate expectation entertained by the Petitioner and thereby infringed his fundamental rights to equality and equal protection of the law, as guaranteed by Article 12(1) of the Constitution. It was also contended by the learned President's Counsel that, in doing so, the 9th Respondent had taken irrelevant considerations into account in frustrating the Petitioner's legitimate expectation, when it considered his eviction from the land by the 7th Respondent, but failed to consider the relevant consideration that the said eviction was carried out when the latter had no valid permit.

In addition, the learned President's Counsel highlighted that the Petitioner was not heard by the 9th Respondent, the Mahaweli Authority prior to making a decision adverse to his interests and it failed to give any reasons for taking such a decision. He further contended that the Mahaweli Authority is in violation of the statutory provisions contained in Land Development Ordinance and the Regulations made under it, when the said Authority decided to issue an Annual Permit in favour of the 7th Respondent, after cancelling the one that had been issued in 1992.

Learned Senior State Counsel, in her reply on behalf of the 1st to 6th and 8th to 10th Respondents, strongly resisted the Petitioner's application. It was contended by the learned Senior State Counsel that the 7th Respondent's illegal alienation of lot No. 283 and his failure to develop the same had resulted in the cancellation, not only of his selection to lot No. 283, but also the permit issued to him (1R2). None of these decisions were challenged before any Court by the 7th Respondent and thus remain valid to date. She then submitted, consequent to a complaint filed against the 9th Respondent Authority by the 7th Respondent before the Human Rights Commission, it was revealed that he had engaged in litigation with the Petitioner for over a decade pertaining to his rights to the land under dispute. It was further contended by the learned Senior State Counsel that the claim made by the Petitioner that his possession of the parcel of State land under dispute had been regularised by the 9th Respondent and that therefore he entertained a legitimate expectation to receive a permit in respect of that land, is misconceived in law and described as an attempt to place an incorrect position before this Court.

Learned Counsel for the 7th Respondent adopted a similar line by aligning with the position taken by the learned Senior State Counsel, in advancing a contention that the expectation claimed to have entertained by the Petitioner that he would be granted a permit was not a legitimate one and further submitted to Court that his client had vindicated his rights through Courts over the disputed parcel of State land, when the Petitioner illegally overstayed the lease, and thereafter employed other methods to deny him of his due right, that had been affirmed by Courts.

In view of the submissions made by the learned Counsel in respect of the parties they represent, it is helpful if the factual background relevant to the impugned decisions made by the 9th Respondent, which in turn gave rise to the allegation of infringement of fundamental rights, made by the Petitioner in the instant application is referred hereafter albeit briefly.

The 7th Respondent was in possession of an allotment of State land, in extent of 2.5 perches, situated in Nochchiyagama town, facing Puttalam-Anuradhapura main road and identified as lot No. 283 of the Nochchiyagama Town Plan since 1982. After coming into possession, the 7th Respondent had put up a building on that land. In the year 1987, the 7th Respondent entered into an "agreement" (P2) with the Petitioner and two others. In terms of the said "agreement", the 7th Respondent had "transferred his rights in the subject matter in dispute" in favour of the Petitioner and others. The "subject matter" referred to in that agreement is the said parcel of State land possessed by the 7th Respondent at that point of time. The 7th Respondent was paid a sum of Rs.225,000.00 by the Petitioner and others as the value of a partly constructed building that stood on that allotment of land. However, the Petitioner came into occupy that allotment only on 31.07.1992 with the commencement of the operation of a grocery store in the said premises under the name and style of "Akurana Traders". Since then, the Petitioner had regularly paid assessment rates and other taxes and secured supply of electricity to the premises under his name.

On 30.11.1995, the Petitioner claims that he was surprised to learn that, an ex parte Judgment had been entered against him in an action filed by the 7th Respondent in the year 1994 and, as a consequence of which, he was ordered by the District Court of Anuradhapura to handover vacant possession to the latter. When the Fiscal came to execute the Writ of Execution, the Petitioner informed the Court official that he was neither served with summons of the action nor was he served with the ex parte decree. He thereafter moved the original Court on 01.01.1996, by making an application under section 839 of the Civil Procedure Code, seeking to set aside the said ex parte decree, issuance of a direction of Court to serve summons on him and thereafter permit to tender an answer. The Petitioner was not successful in his application before the original Court and therefore sought intervention of the Court of Appeal against the order of the original Court, dated 11.10.1996, by moving in revision to have it set aside under application No. 712/1996. On 04.03.1997, parties have consensually settled the said revision application before the Court of Appeal by jointly seeking a direction on the District Court to re-inquire into the Petitioner's application by calling the Fiscal as a witness.

The District Court, having complied with the direction of the Court of Appeal and by its order dated 05.11.1998, once again dismissed the Petitioner's application. During that inquiry the Petitioner, his witness and the Fiscal, were heard by the original Court. The Petitioner then preferred an appeal to the Court of Appeal against the said order, in appeal No. CA 1175/98L(F) and also instituted an action against the 7th Respondent in case No. 16423/L on 16.12.1997. In that action, the Petitioner had sued the 7th Respondent for breach of the agreement P2 and claimed back the payment of Rs. 225,000.00 he made to the 7th Respondent, in addition to claiming damages quantified at Rs. 150,000.00 and compensation for improvements in a sum of Rs. 325,000.00. On the application of the Petitioner, Court made order on 28.08.2006 to layby same, on the basis that the appeal No. CA 1175/98(F) of the Petitioner was pending before the Court of Appeal.

Pending the hearing of appeal No. CA 1175/98(F), the 7th Respondent sought to execute the writ, and was successful in obtaining an order in his favour. The Petitioner once again resisted his eviction by the execution of the said writ after obtaining leave to appeal from the High Court of Civil Appeal of Anuradhapura, in application No. NCP/HCCA/LA/04/2010 on 18.10.2010. The 7th Respondent had thereupon sought Special Leave to Appeal from the said order of the High Court of Civil Appeal by moving this Court in SC/HC/CA/LA 376/2010.

The appeal bearing No. CA 1175/(F) was subsequently withdrawn by the Petitioner on the basis that "… a decision of Mahaweli Authority made in favour of the Appellant". But the 7th Respondent, pleaded his ignorance of any such decision made by the 9th Respondent. The Court of Appeal, however, dismissed the appeal of the Petitioner after allowing his application. The 7th Respondent too had reciprocated by withdrawing the application No. SC/HC/CA/LA 376/2010, filed by him before this Court, challenging the order of the High Court of Civil Appeal.

While the litigation process referred to above was continuing in multiple fronts between the Petitioner and the 7th Respondent, the 9th Respondent had conducted an investigative survey in January of 2005, in respect of the commercial properties coming under its purview in Nochchciyagama Town. During the said survey, officers of the 9th Respondent Authority discovered that some of these commercial properties, which had already been alienated by issuance of permits to its respective lessees, were occupied by third parties and not by its lessees. The purpose of the survey was to regularise the possession of those who were in unlawful occupation of such commercial properties. It was found a total of 39 such lessees, who were issued with permits, have either failed to develop the property or had irregularly alienated them, while others failed to pay annual lease rentals.

Upon these findings, the 3rd Respondent submitted a report to the 1st Respondent, through which he recommended to set aside the selection of all 39 lessees, including that of the 7th Respondent. The findings against the 7th Respondent were that he made an irregular alienation of the land and also failed to develop the commercial property alienated to him. However, no cancellation of his Annual Permit was made until 15.12.2008 (1R6). After the said investigative survey and with the issuance of P13, the Petitioner was informed by the 5th Respondent, that he has been selected to receive an Annual Permit over lot No. 283. It also directed him to make the initial deposit and to pay the lease rental for the year 2007.

In 2013, the Petitioner claims that he "received" a copy of a letter dated 16.05.2013 (P 19), issued by the 5th Respondent, with copies to the Resident Project Manager, Deputy Resident Manager and Unit Manager, stating that the Annual Permit issued to the 7th Respondent was cancelled for violating its conditions and that the selection of the said lessee was accordingly set aside. It also indicated of the Petitioner's selection by the 9th Respondent to receive a permit in respect of the same land (depicted as lot No. 283 of the Nochchiyagama Town Plan) with a view to regularising his illegal occupation of same. Importantly, it also indicated that the Petitioner would be issued with an Annual Permit, since he had paid up all annual lease rentals from 1999 to 2013.

It is stated by the Petitioner that few days after he received the letter P19, and with the execution of the writ, he was evicted from lot No. 283 on 23.05.2013 by the Fiscal of the District Court of Anuradhapura and the 7th Respondent was placed in possession of same. The Petitioner had then lodged a complaint to the Human Rights Commission and also informed the 9th Respondent Authority of his entitlement to that land. He conveyed his grievance to the Presidential Secretariat by lodging several complaints with it.

On 18.02.2017, the Petitioner received a letter from the 4th Respondent dated 15.02.2017 (P30) which indicated that the 9th Respondent Authority, during an inquiry held before the Human Rights Commission, had informed the said Commission of its decision to act in terms of the Court order and therefore decided to cancel the selection it made in his favour. It also indicated that the Hon. Minister of Mahaweli, the 10th Respondent, had approved the lease of the disputed parcel of State land in favour of the 7th Respondent and it was also decided to issue a lease to the 7th Respondent once again.

It is against the backdrop of these circumstances; the Petitioner alleges that his rights guaranteed under Article 12(1) had been infringed by the 1st to 6th and 9th Respondents and seeks relief in terms of his prayer. Particularly, the declarations sought from this Court are to the effect that the decisions made by the 1st to 6th Respondents and 9th Respondent; to cancel the nomination made in his favour, failure to grant him an Permit and the issuance of an Annual Permit to the 7th Respondent, are violative of his fundamental rights guaranteed to him under Article 12(1) of the Constitution.

In a petition alleging violation of fundamental rights "it must not be supposed, or suggested, that the need to obtain leave to proceed under Article 126(2) is a mere formality. The onus is on a petitioner seeking relief to establish a prima facie case". This pronouncement was made by Fernando J in Hettiarachchi v Seneviratne (1994) 3 Sri L.R. 293 (No.2) and that pronouncement was reconfirmed by a bench of seven Judges in Edward Francis William Silva, President's Counsel and three others v Shirani

Bandaranayake and three others (1997) 1 Sri L.R. 92. At this initial stage, this Court would consider whether the petitioner has satisfied that "… there is something to be looked into" and if so, grant leave to proceed, per Visuvalingam and Others v Liyanage and Others (1984) 1 Sri L.R. 305 (at p.316). In the instant matter the Petitioner was successful in establishing before this Court that he had a prima facie case but, only in relation to his claim of violation of rights under Article 12(1) of the Constitution.

The Petitioner, having satisfied this Court of the said initial threshold to obtain leave to proceed, now presents a contention based on the doctrine of legitimate expectation, which he allegedly to have entertained upon a promise or an undertaking made by the 9th Respondent, as reflected in the contents of a letter P13, which was once again confirmed by issuance of P19, but collectively frustrated by a series of subsequent decisions taken by the said Respondent and its officers, commencing with the cancellation of his selection to lot No. 283 by 1R16, and, culminating with the issuance of an Annual Permit 7R17, in favour of the 7th Respondent.

It must be stated that the doctrine of legitimate expectation, both in its procedural and substantive forms, are now part of the public law applicable in this Jurisdiction. However, before I proceed to consider the validity of the Petitioner's contention of frustrating his legitimate expectation, it is helpful if the underlying principles of that doctrine are stated here.

In the Privy Council Judgment of The United Policyholders Group and others (Appellants) v The Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago (Respondent) (Trinidad and Tobago) [2016] UKPC 17, made a pronouncement of the broader principle, as Lord Neuberger stated thus; "[I]n the broadest of terms, the principle of legitimate expectation is based on the proposition that, where a public body states that it will do (or not do) something, a person who has reasonably relied on the statement should, in the absence of good reasons, be entitled to rely on the statement and enforce it through the Courts."

Identifying some of the salient points in relation to legitimate expectation, his Lordship states (at paras 37 and 38);

> "First, in order to found a claim based on the principle, it is clear that the statement in question must be 'clear, unambiguous and devoid of relevant qualification';
>
> Secondly, the principle cannot be invoked if, or to the extent that, it would interfere with the public body's statutory duty;
> Thirdly, however much a person is entitled to say that a statement by a public body gave rise to a legitimate expectation on his part, circumstances may arise where it becomes inappropriate to permit that person to invoke the principle to enforce the public body to comply with the statement."

With this introduction, it is relevant at this stage to identify the category of cases under which the Petitioner's case could be considered. The Petitioner expected the 9th Respondent to grant a licence to occupy State land in the form of an Annual Permit. In the case of McInnes v Onslow Fane [1978] 3 All ER 211, Vice Chancellor Megarry dealt with three situations that arise in the consideration of licencing cases which he termed as application cases, forfeiture cases and expectation cases. He said (at page 218) "First, there are what may be called the forfeiture cases. In these, there is a decision which takes away some existing rights or position, as when a member of an organization is expelled, or a licence is revoked. Second, at the other extreme there are what may be called the application cases. These are cases where the decision merely refuses to grant the applicant the right or position that he seeks, such as membership of the organization or a licence to do certain acts. Third, there is an intermediate category which may be called the expectation cases, which differ from the application cases only in that the applicant has some legitimate expectation from what has already happened that his application will be granted. This head includes cases where an existing licence holder applies for renewal of his licence, or a person already elected or appointed to some position seeks confirmation from some confirming authority." His Lordship then added that "[T]he intermediate category, that of the expectation cases, may at least in some respects be regarded as being more akin to the forfeiture cases than the application cases; for although in form there is no forfeiture but merely an attempt at acquisition that fails, the legitimate expectation of a renewal of the licence or confirmation of the membership is one which raises the question of what it is that has happened to make the applicant unsuitable for the membership or licence for which he was previously thought suitable."

If this classification is adopted in respect of the matter before this Court and if the Petitioner could satisfy that he entertained an expectation which could be accepted by this Court as a legitimate one, then his claim could be considered as one coming under the "intermediate category" as the question that arises in the instant application could also be termed as a one involving "… what it is that has happened to make the applicant unsuitable for the … licence for which he was previously thought suitable". In the instant matter, however, the Petitioner does not complain of a situation where he had not been given the promised opportunity to be heard before the 9th Respondent, prior to making a decision adverse to him, and thereby going against an earlier undertaking given to him that it would. If that was the case, then the alleged frustration of the Petitioner's expectation could be termed as frustration of procedural legitimate expectation. What is complained by the Petitioner in the instant application is, after an assurance that he would be issued with a permit, the 9th Respondent desisted itself from issuing one, and therefore that action had frustrated his substantial legitimate expectation to a permit over lot No. 283.

In order to identify the underlying principles of law that were laid down in the judicial precedents both here and abroad over the years in relation to the doctrine of substantial legitimate expectation, I could conveniently rely on the Judgment of Ariyaratne and Others v Illangakoon, Inspector General of Police and Others - SCFR Application No. 444/2012 – decided on 30.07.2019. Prasanna Jayawardena J had undertaken an exhaustive survey of the subject applicable principles of law as contained in the collective judicial wisdom contained in the multiple pronouncements made by the English, Indian and Sri Lankan Courts on the doctrine of legitimate expectation. His Lordship thereafter crystallised the several principles enunciated by them in the said judgment.

The Petitioner too had relied on this Judgment in support of his contention that he did establish before this Court that the 9th Respondent gave him a specific, unambiguous and unqualified assurance that he had been selected to receive an Annual Permit in respect of lot No. 283 by issuance of P13, an undertaking which the said

Authority had now recanted its undertaking by cancellation of the said selection and issuing a permit to the 7th Respondent.

In such a situation, Prasanna Jayawardena J stated that a Court may, " … where it determines that the nature of the expectation, and the prejudice caused to that individual or group of persons by the public authority negating it, outweighs the public interest to such an extent that the negation of the substantive legitimate expectation would be unfair or unjust or disproportionate and constitute an abuse of power by the public authority; exercise its power of judicial review and hold that the substantive expectation is a legitimate one which the public authority is bound to fulfil." His Lordship also stated that " … the doctrine of substantive legitimate expectation applies in our jurisdiction in much the same manner as it now applies in England".

When determining the nature of the expectation, this Court would consider what Bingham LJ said in R v Inland Revenue Commissioners, Ex p MFK Underwriting Agents Ltd [1990] 1 WLR 1545 and also referred to in The United Policyholders Group and others (Appellants) v The Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago (Respondent) (Trinidad and Tobago) (supra). His Lordship stated that "a claim to a legitimate expectation can be based only upon a promise which is 'clear, unambiguous and devoid of relevant qualification'. In Perera v National Police Commission and 24 Others 2007 [B.L.R.]14, this Court re-iterated a pronouncement it had made in Anushika Jayatileke and Others v University Grants Commission (SC Application No. 280/2001 – decided on 25.10.2004), to the effect that " legitimate expectation derives from an undertaking given by someone in authority and such undertaking may not even be expressed and would have known from the surrounding circumstances."

If the Petitioner is successful in establishing the legitimacy of his expectation, then his case could be termed as a one belongs to the "intermediate category", per McInnes v Onslow Fane (supra), in which it was held that "the applicant has some legitimate expectation from what has already happened that his application will be granted." In the circumstances, it is also relevant to consider as to the nature of the burden imposed on a petitioner, who claims that the public body had frustrated his legitimate expectation based on a promise it had made earlier on. This was set out in the Privy Council Judgment of Francis Paponette and Others v The Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago [2010] UKPC 32. Sir Dyson SPJ states (at para.37) that;

> "The initial burden lies on an applicant to prove the legitimacy of his expectation. This means that in a claim based on a promise, the applicant must prove the promise and that it was clear and unambiguous and devoid of relevant qualification. If he wishes to reinforce his case by saying that he relied on the promise to his detriment, then obviously he must prove that too. Once these elements have been proved by the applicant, however, the onus shifts to the authority to justify the frustration of the legitimate expectation."

The question of legitimacy of the expectation was re-iterated in the case R v North and East Devon Health Authority, Ex p Coughlan [2001] QB 213 by Lord Woolf MR, by stating (at para 57) thus:

> " … once the legitimacy of the expectation is established, the Court will have the task of weighing the requirements of fairness against any overriding interest relied upon for the change of policy. "

The question of legitimacy of the expectation, as stated by the Privy Council in Francis Paponette and Others v The Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago (supra) received further clarification in De Smith's Judicial Review, 8th Ed, p. 686, where it is stated " to qualify as 'legitimate'…" such a claim must possess certain qualities and, in this context, learned authors listed out ten of them, based on judicial pronouncements, which insisted satisfaction of them by an applicant who seeks judicial review. A similar view was expressed in the text of the book, Administrative Law – Wade and Forsythe 10th Ed, p. 449, where it is stated "it is not enough that an expectation should exist; it must in addition be legitimate." The Judgment of Samaraweera v Peoples Bank and Others (2007) 2 Sri L.R. 362, where Fernando J stated (at p. 368) that the "… onus of proving that the petitioner has an outstanding record of performance or that the available staff cannot perform the specific duties is on the petitioner. There is no material before this Court that the petitioner qualified for an extension under the criteria. Hence it is my conclusion that the petitioner has failed to establish that he had a legitimate expectation of being extended in service in terms of the circular". This pronouncement reflects the application of the said consideration as his Lordship questions the legitimacy of the expectation entertained by the petitioner, in dismissing the application.

In a more recent pronouncement, Nimalsiri v Colonel Fernando and Others (SCFR 256/2010 – decided on 17.09.2015), Priyantha Jayawardena J stated that "… the expectation must be within the powers of the decision-maker for it to be treated as a legitimate expectation …" also indicating the importance of the legitimacy of the expectation. A similar approach could be found in Ariyaratne and Others v Illangakoon, Inspector General of Police and Others (supra) as it is stated that " … the first issue before us is to decide whether the petitioners have succeeded in establishing that they have a 'legitimate expectation' of being absorbed into the Sri Lanka Police Force ...". The Court of Appeal Judgment in Albert and Others v Chief Secretary – Southern Province (CA (Writ) Application Nos. 401- 407, and 411 to 413/2015, - decided on 11.10.2016) Surasena J decided "… all what the Petitioners have established before this Court is that they have had an illegitimate expectation and not a legitimate expectation." Thus, the legitimacy of the expectation had consistently been insisted upon by the Courts as a necessary precondition before it examines the validity of the reasons adduced by the Respondents in determining whether there was abuse of power, in frustrating such an expectation.

The Petitioner's claim of a legitimate expectation based on the letter P13, was controverted by the Respondents collectively. They have relied on factual considerations that impinge on the legitimacy of the expectation claimed to have entertained by the Petitioner. When the parties made claims based on factually contradictory positions, the following pronouncement made by Marsoof J, in Ravindra v Pathirana and 11 Others 2008 [B.L.R.] 177(at p. 180), becomes relevant;

> "[P]proceedings initiated under Article 126 of the Constitution have to be decided on the basis of evidence led by way of affidavit and the relevant provisions do not provide for the varicosity of the statement made in the affidavits been tested through cross examinations. In the circumstances, when conflicting positions are taken up, the Courts are called upon to make determination of fact based mainly on inferences that can be drawn from affidavits. Sometimes this could be a very difficult exercise."

It is already noted that the Petitioner's claim of legitimate expectation of an Annual Permit in respect of lot No. 283, issued by the 9th Respondent, is primarily founded upon the contents of letter P13, by which his selection to receive such a permit for the said commercial property was communicated to him. The said letter is dated 26.10.2007 and titled as "Regularisation of Unlawful Possession – 2005". It conveyed to the Petitioner that his selection for that particular lot was made after an inquiry and the Petitioner was required to make an initial deposit of Rs.48,000.00 before a stipulated date and he must also to pay lease rental for the year 2007. Since the Petitioner placed heavy reliance on the contents of P13, in support of his claim of legitimate expectation, it is helpful, if the contents of P13 are reproduced below in its entirety.

If at all, the only reference to an 'undertaking' that could be found in the contents of P13, is in the sentence where it conveys that, after an inquiry, the Petitioner had been "selected" for lot No. 283, which he occupies without any permission granted by the 9th Respondent. Remaining part of P13 warns the Petitioner of his continued failure to comply with the directions that had been issued up to that point of time and, it further alerts him to the consequences which would follow, if he fails to fulfil them any longer. The letter P13 is specific on the condition that if he fails to fulfil what was required of the Petitioner before the stipulated deadline the 9th Respondent had set up, his selection to receive a permit for lot No. 283 would be cancelled. In the circumstances, can it be said that the P13 is "a promise which is 'clear, unambiguous and devoid of relevant qualification"? With due respect to learned President's Counsel, who submitted that it is so, I must confess that I am not convinced of the acceptability of that submission as a correct representation of the contents of P13 for I do not think that the contents themselves do not qualify P13 to be treated as a letter conveying a promise or an undertaking, which is clear, unambiguous and devoid of relevant qualification. Even if, for the sake of argument, it is accepted that P13 as a clear and unambiguous promise for issuance of an Annual Permit, could it be then considered also as a promise which is devoid of any "relevant qualification"? I am not convinced that the answer is in the affirmative. The very act of setting up a deadline for the Petitioner to comply with, by the 9th Respondent had set out as mentioned in P13, itself disqualifies the said letter being treated as "a promise which is 'clear, unambiguous and devoid of relevant qualification". Particularly, the condition of regular payment of annual lease rentals, is a qualification that the Petitioner must satisfy each successive year, making him entitled to possess the parcel of State land for that particular year. That particular condition would continue to be in force, even if he is issued with a permit.

On the other hand, if the Petitioner was to entertain even an expectation on P13, he must first fulfil all the required criterion set out therein by the 9th Respondent in P13. The Petitioner did not make the deposit and the lease rental for the year 2007 before the said deadline of 25th November 2007. The Judgment of Galappaththy v Secretary to the Treasury (1996) 2 Sri L.R. 109, refers to an instance where the petitioner sought to challenge a decision by the treasury to impose import taxes upon importation of a motor vehicle. The petitioner had a permit to import a motor vehicle under concessionary tax scheme. Ranaraja J, rejected the contention that petitioner's legitimate expectations were summarily disappointed, on the basis that he " … cannot therefore claim that he had a legitimate expectation to a benefit under Circular P1 when he himself had breached its conditions."

The Petitioner also relied on the letter P19, as an instance of re-confirmation of the undertaking made by the 9th Respondent by issuance of P13. In fairness to the Petitioner, although he merely relied on P19 only as a re-affirmation of the 'undertaking' already made in P13, that document of course did contain a statement which could be construed as resembling of a 'promise or an undertaking' as it stated " මේ අනුව නොවිවියාගම නගර සැලසුමේ අංක 283 වාණිජ ඉඩමේ නිත්‍යානුකූල අයිතිය මොහොමඩ් කරීම් මොහොමඩ් රියාද් වන අයට හිමි ඇති බැවින් සහ වාර්ෂික බදු මුදල් හිඟයකින් තොරව මේ දක්වා ගෙවා ඇති බැවිනුත් ඉදිරියේදී වාර්ෂික අවසර පත්‍රයක් මොහු වෙත නිකුත් කිරීමට පියවර ගන්නා බැව් කාරුණිකව දන්වමි". It also contained that the 9th Respondent had accepted annual lease rental from the Petitioner from the year 1999. This action might lend support to the Petitioner's claim to the limited extent that, at least, he entertained an expectation that he would eventually be granted a permit and had acted in that expectation.

In the circumstances, it is apparent that the Petitioner's expectation on the so-called undertaking contained in P13, in itself does not qualify to be treated as a legitimate one and therefore does not make qualify as an expectation that should be protected by Court. However, since the Petitioner also relied on P19, as a document by which the 3rd Respondent had re-confirmed the alleged 'undertaking' it had made in P13, I would take this statement on its face value for the moment, with the intention of dealing with the contents of P19 in more detail during the latter part of this Judgment, and proceed to consider the Petitioner's application whether, in the totality of circumstances referred to above, he could have entertained an expectation that could be accepted as a legitimate one.

The disputed commercial property, being a parcel of State land, must be alienated by the State following lawful procedure as set out in Chapter III of the Land Development Ordinance. Section 20 of the Ordinance states that the selection of persons to whom State lands could be alienated under the Ordinance, shall be made at a Land Kachcheri, subject to subsections (a) and (b), while section 21(2) makes it obligatory on the part of the Government official to call for applications for the lands proposed to be alienated at that Land Kachcheri.

In this instance, however, the selection of the Petitioner was made, not as a result of a selection made after an inquiry upon an application presented to a Land Kachcheri by him, but apparently only on the basis of him being in de facto occupation of lot No. 283, when the officers of the 9th Respondent Agency conducted an investigative survey of the commercial properties under its purview in Nochchiyagama town in January 2005. During that survey, the Petitioner had claimed total responsibility for the development of the said parcel of State land by operating his business activity in the building he himself had construct on it.

Consequent to the findings of the said survey, the 7th Respondent was notified by the 9th Respondent to attend an inquiry on 22.02.2005, by pasting a notice on the said premises in terms of the law, as it was prima facie evident that the 7th Respondent had alienated the State land that had leased out to him to the Petitioner, and thereby violated its conditions. The 7th Respondent did not turn up for the inquiry and, in the circumstances, the 3rd Respondent recommended to the 1st Respondent that the selection of the 7th Respondent in respect of lot No. 283 be set aside, and the permit issued to him is cancelled. The permit 1R1 was cancelled by the 9th Respondent and on 15.12.2008, the 7th Respondent was informed of the said cancellation by 1R6.

The 7th Respondent was prompt in his reply by which he protested against the said cancellation of his permit, accusing the 9th Respondent of making a decision over a matter before the Court of Appeal, pending for its determination. Having referred to the letter 7R11, by which he was informed that until the pending litigation is over no further action could be taken in respect of lot No. 283, the 7th Respondent accuses the 3rd Respondent, in 1R7, that the latter had maliciously and in collusion with the Petitioner made the said cancellation and therefore he would institute contempt of Court proceedings against him for making an administrative decision disregarding the fact that the matter already under litigation. This seems to be the first instance where the 9th Respondent became aware that the other party to the litigation, instituted by the 7th Respondent, was none other than the Petitioner himself.

Thus, it is evident from the above considerations that the starting point of the administrative process, which culminated with selecting the Petitioner to be issued with an Annual Permit in respect of the State land he illegally occupied and the issuance of P13 in confirmation of the said selection, commenced with the said investigative survey conducted in January 2005 by the officers of the 9th Respondent. The report 1R2 also contained a statement of fact that, in addition to reporting his illegal occupation of the said lot, it was the Petitioner who constructed the building on that land and runs a grocery store. The officers, who were not privy to the activities conducted on that parcel of State land at any time prior to their inspection, had accepted and relied on that claim. It is natural for the Petitioner to make such a claim, since he needed to impress upon the officers, of same as a qualifying factor, if they were to make a selection for issuance of a permit. It is not clear whether the Petitioner, at that particular point of time had relied on the 'agreement' P2 as well, in order to further impress the officers on the fact that the 7th Respondent had transferred all his rights to him. He may well have done so, as an attempt to explain away the basis of him coming into illegal occupation of lot No. 283.

When the officers visited lot No. 283, the Petitioner was in possession of the same but had no permit over that lot. The Petitioner was therefore found to be the de facto illegal occupier of lot No. 283, instead of the 7th Respondent, who should be in its possession, being the lawful lessee, in whose favour an Annual Permit had been issued. It was therefore evident to the officers that the 7th Respondent was in clear violation of the conditions stipulated in the permit P7A/7R5, particularly with the express prohibition regarding the alienation of the State land referred to in that permit in any form. In the absence of any material to indicate any contrary position (as the 7th Respondent did not participate at the ensuing inquiry), the 3rd Respondent had rightly made his recommendation to set aside the selection of the 7th Respondent and to cancel his permit P7A/7R5.

Similarly, the selection of the Petitioner to the said lot No. 283 made by the 9th Respondent Authority too could be understood in the circumstances. Since the purpose of the investigative survey was to regularise the illegal occupancy of its commercial properties in Nochchiyagama town and at the time of the said inspection, it was found out it was the Petitioner, who was in occupation of lot No. 283, but without a permit. The Petitioner also claimed that he had put up a building in which he conducted his business activities. The officers were satisfied that the Petitioner was responsible for the development work carried out on the land. It must be noted here that, at that point of time, the officers of the 9th Respondent Authority were only concerned with regularising illegal occupation of State land and the selection of the Petitioner for issuance of a permit was made purely on that basis.

While the administrative process that commenced with the investigative survey carried out in 2005 to regularise the illegal occupation of State land continued at one end, it was revealed from the pleadings that the 7th Respondent had instituted an action over ten years before the said survey, in the District Court of Anuradhapura (case No. 15034/L), seeking eviction of the Petitioner from lot No. 283. The 7th Respondent had obtained a judgment in his favour on 08.02.1995, after an ex parte trial. The Writ of Execution was issued by the District Court on 28.11.1995. When the Fiscal sought to evict the Petitioner on 30.11.1995, that attempt was thwarted by Petitioner's acquaintances, who gathered in large numbers and thereafter occupied the premises under the said writ. The Petitioner then moved the District Court to vacate the said ex parte decree and the Writ of Possession. On 11.10.1996, the District Court refused the Petitioner's application after arriving at a finding that the summons of action and the ex parte decree, in fact were served on the Petitioner. The Court had thereby effectively rejected his claim of not serving either the summons or the decree personally to him and his plea of total ignorance of the litigation against him. The Petitioner, however, asserts to this Court that he became aware of the said action only when the fiscal made an attempt to evict him.

The Petitioner moved in revision of the said order before the Court of Appeal in C.A.R.A No. 712/1996. At the inquiry before that Court, the parties consented to set aside the impugned order and to re-inquire into the said claim of the Petitioner, before the original Court, by calling the Fiscal, who served processes of Court. At the conclusion of the re-inquiry, which was held consequent to the order of the Court of Appeal, the original Court, with its order dated 05.11.1998, once again held that the summons of action and the ex parte decree were in fact served on the Petitioner. This time the Petitioner preferred an appeal against the said order before the Court of Appeal in CA 1175/98(F) and was pending its hearing in January 2005. This was the status of the process of litigation between the Petitioner and the 7th Respondent, when the officers of the 9th Respondent authority conducted the investigative survey in 2005 and decided to issue a permit to the Petitioner, based on the findings of that survey.

This being the factual situation, it is necessary to consider the legal status of the Petitioner at the point of conducting the said investigative survey. His two-fold legal status at the time of the said investigative survey could be described in the following manner. Firstly, as already noted, he was the de facto illegal occupier of lot No. 283, as found out by the officers of the 9th Respondent. This was the primary criterion adopted by the 9th Respondent to select him for issuance of a permit, along with the fact of claiming credit for its development. Secondly, the Petitioner was also a Judgment Debtor of the 7th Respondent, who, by then had a valid Judgment and a decree against him, issued by a competent Court, declaring the latter's entitlement to evict the former. With the said Judgment and decree, the Petitioner's status had transformed from a lessee to an illegal occupier of a land, to which the 7th Respondent had a valid permit. Similarly, as far as the 9th Respondent is concerned too, the Petitioner was an illegal occupier of a State land, who occupied same without a valid authority.

It is thus clear that, in January 2005, the Petitioner was very much aware as to his status both factually and legally, vis a vis lot No. 283 and the 7th Respondent (although the former was yet to withdraw the appeal preferred against the finding of the original Court against him). Whether the Petitioner had disclosed this important aspect of his possession of lot No. 283 to the officers of the 9th Respondent authority in 2005 is not borne out either by his petition or by any of the documents tendered along with it. The 1st Respondent does not claim that his officers were informed of the litigation history that exists between the Petitioner and the 7th Respondent and of the status of the Petitioner, being a Judgment debtor, when they conducted the investigative survey. However, it is evident from the conduct of the officers, who made the recommendation to select the Petitioner to be issued with a permit, that they were not aware of the pending litigation over the possession of lot No. 283 that had been pending against the Petitioner nor of his status as a Judgment Debtor.

Then a question arises as to how does the failure of the Petitioner to inform of the pending litigation to the officers of the 9th Respondent becomes a relevant factor in the selection made in favour of him, as a prospective recipient of an Annual Permit in respect of lot No. 283?

Consideration of this question requires a brief reference, at the very outset of this segment of the Judgment, as to the circumstances under which the 7th Respondent came to possess lot No. 283. The 7th Respondent claims that in 1982 on a mere verbal authorisation of the officers he occupied lot No. 283 and made annual lease rentals. Despite the fact that the 7th Respondent came to possess the said lot in the year 1982, only in 1992 he was issued with an Annual Permit by the 9th Respondent Authority in respect of the said lot. The 7th Respondent had paid annual lease rentals up to 1994, until the 9th Respondent authority declined to accept any payments from him on account of the litigation he commenced in May 1994. On 06.02.1996, the 7th Respondent was informed by the Deputy Manager (Land) of the 9th Respondent authority, in replying to a complaint made by the former over this issue to the Minister of Land, that until the conclusion of the pending action, no further action on the land could be taken (7R11). The letter further directed the 3rd Respondent to report back to the Authority, once the Court case is over. This is a clear indication that the 9th Respondent Authority was of the considered view that it should not make any decisions in respect of lot No. 283, when it had already become subject matter of a litigation, initiated by the 7th Respondent.

The process of litigation referred to in 7R11, ended only on 15.01.2013, when the Petitioner decided to withdraw his appeal that was pending before the Court of Appeal in CA 1175/98(F), making the ex parte Judgement and decree of case No. 15034/L issued against him final and binding. However, contrary to the position indicated to the 7th Respondent by 7R11, the 9th Respondent authority did make decisions in respect of the subject matter of the litigation that was pending before the Court of Appeal. The 9th Respondent made the decision to select the Petitioner to be issued with an Annual Permit over the identical subject matter in January 2005, as conveyed to him by P13 in 2007. Clearly, when viewed against the said backdrop of circumstances, the 9th Respondent had applied two different standards when dealing with the Petitioner and the 7th Respondent. However, this complaint could validly be made only if it was made known to the 9th Respondent that the other party to the litigation referred to in 7R11, was the Petitioner himself. The 9th Respondent or any of its officers were not made parties to that action and therefore had no formal notice of the same or as to the parties in that litigation. Clearly, there was no material available, which would suggest even inferentially that the 9th Respondent was aware that the other contesting party to the said litigation instituted by the 7th Respondent was the Petitioner himself.

This was primarily due to the fact that the Petitioner either failed to disclose that fact to the officers who conducted the investigative survey or had willfully suppressed that fact, for the fear that it might result in an adverse ruling. Either way, it is evident that the Petitioner did not make a full disclosure of the relevant material to the officers who visited Akurana Traders in 2005, conducting an investigative survey with a view to regularise the illegal possession of its commercial plots, despite his expectation of a favourable ruling as to his possession of lot No. 283.

Moving on to the latter part of the question referred to in the preceding paragraph as to how that suppression had affected the decision-making process of the officers of the 9th Respondent Authority could be answered in the following manner.

It is clear from the recommendation made by the 3rd Respondent to the 1st Respondent (1R16) that the suppression of the fact of a pending litigation by the Petitioner to the officers who conducted the investigative survey had eventually resulted in a situation of having made an administrative decision by the 9th Respondent, which in effect contradicts a pronouncement that had already been made by a competent Court, as to the party who is entitled to possess lot No. 283. In the letter 1R16, the 3rd Respondent, after stating that the 7th Respondent had instituted action before the District Court against the Petitioner, recognises the fact that the 7th Respondent had thereby sought to resolve an issue that had arisen due to an informal alienation he himself had made over lot No. 283. The 3rd Respondent then appraises the 1st Respondent of the resultant effect of the decisions thus far made by stating;

" එනමුත් මෙම අධිකරණ තීන්දුව ලබදී තිබියදී ඩී. එම්. සෝමපාල යන අය නමින් ලබාදී තිබූ අවසරපත්‍රය අවලංගු කිරීම සඳහා අංක : ආර්.පී.එම්/ වි/ එල්/ සී 20 / 14/ 45 හා 2005.09/29 දිනැතිව කරන ලද නිර්දේශයන්ට අනුව අවසරපත්‍රය සහ තේරීම් පසෙක තැබීම අධ්‍යක්ෂ ජනරාල් විසින් අංක : එල්/ 04/ එච්/ ර.ඉ.පොදු 21 හා 2008.06.17 දිනැතිව අනුමත කර ඇත."

This is a clear indication as to the effect that the suppression of the Petitioner of the pending litigation from the officers of the 9th Respondent had resulted in the decision making process, which the 1st Respondent noted by stating that the cancellation of the selection of the 7th Respondent was made after the Judgment of Court was pronounced. Similarly, the 3rd Respondent describes in his observations to the Human Rights Commission (1R14), that the said cancellation had led to a tangled situation ("ගැටලු සහගත තත්වය") and indicated that he sought legal advice to resolve the said issue. Both these statements are allusive remarks made by the officers to denote the position that the 3rd Respondent would not have recommended the selection of the Petitioner to lot No. 283 by 1R3 to the 1st Respondent, if he was fully appraised of the fact that the 7th Respondent, who at that point of time, had already obtained an order of Court in his favour, which made him entitled to evict the Petitioner from lot No. 283. This apprehension could be understood as a realisation of the fact that the 9th Respondent had not considered or failed to consider the actual status of the Petitioner and his possession, when its officers made the selection. Indeed, the two-fold legal status of the Petitioner vis a vis the lot No. 283, was a very relevant considerations on which the selection of the Petitioner was very much dependent upon, as the subsequent events unfolded. When making the selection of the Petitioner to receive a permit, the 9th Respondent had admittedly considered only one aspect of the former's legal status, whereas it should have considered both.

In the context of the legal status, learned President's Counsel submitted that the eviction of the Petitioner was wrong, as at the point of the said eviction, the 7th Respondent had no valid permit in his favour to conform any right or interest over lot No. 283. It could well be that this also is a factor among several others, that had troubled the 3rd Respondent, when he referred to a "ගැටලු සහගත තත්වය" in 1R14, as an abridged reference to the knotty issue.

Under the given set of the circumstances, as revealed in the instant matter, and in view of the complex interplay of the different legal principles that ought to have been given due recognition in the decision-making process of the 9th Respondent, it is necessary that I make at least a passing reference to them before proceeding any further in this Judgment. It is not necessary to consider them in depth, in the absence of any submissions of any party regarding same.

One of the grounds on which the 9th Respondent decided to cancel the selection of the 7th Respondent to lot No. 283, was that he had illegally "alienated" the said lot. The 7th Respondent came to possess the said lot in 1984 allegedly on a verbal assurance given by the 9th Respondent, in lieu of a land he had surrendered to the State for a road widening project. The 7th Respondent then allowed the Petitioner and two others to occupy lot No. 283 in December 1987. The Annual Permit 7R5 was issued to the 7th Respondent only on 08.09.1992, which contained a condition that lot No. 283 should not be alienated in any form. This condition binds the 7th Respondent from the date of the permit. When the 7th Respondent allowed the Petitioner to occupy lot No. 283, there was no condition binding on him that it should not be alienated. In Lebbe v Samoon (1968) 71 NLR 452, Alles J held (at p. 455) thus, "If the permit had been issued to the defendant containing the conditions referred to in P1 it would have been open to the authorities to cancel the permit in view of the defendant non residence, but having failed to issue a permit, I do not think it is open to them to evict the defendant on that ground."

The Petitioner asserted to this Court that the 7th Respondent had "transferred his rights in the subject matter in dispute", namely his rights over lot No. 283, upon an agreement marked as P2. This was the consistent position of the Petitioner since the commencement of the dispute which he maintained in almost all of his correspondence that were annexed to his petition. The said agreement P2, that had been entered between the 7th Respondent and the Petitioner and his two associates in 1987, contains a clause which states that "…do hereby surrender possession of the said part or portion of the building constructed by me and the right of possession of the said land lot No. 283, together with all my rights, claim, and demand whatsoever, as lessee of the said lot No. 283, unto the said purchasers …".

It is on the strength of this clause only the Petitioner consistently claimed that the 7th Respondent had "transferred his rights in the subject matter in dispute" to him. It is not clear whether the Petitioner did in fact relied on P2, when the officers of the 9th Respondent conducted their investigative survey in 2005, but it could be reasonably deduced that he would have done so, as an attempt to explain away the basis on which he came into possess lot No. 283. If the cancellation of selection of the 7th Respondent was made by placing reliance on the clause from the said agreement P2, that had been reproduced above, that decision cannot be validated, in view of the provisions of Section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance. Section 2 of that Ordinance declares no such agreement shall "be in force or avail in law" unless the statutory provisions contained in subsections 2(a) and 2(b) are complied with.

Clearly, the agreement P2, being an instrument affects an interest, or an incumbrance affecting land, was not notarially executed and therefore did not conform to the provisions of Section 2.

However, when the permit was eventually issued to the 7th Respondent, he had already handed over possession of lot No. 283 to the Petitioner, after having the land 'leased' out to the latter for a period of seven years, as pleaded in his plaint to the District Court of Anuradhapura. The permit 7R5 specifically prohibited the 7th Respondent from alienation of lot No. 283 in any form including by subletting and, by his own admission in the said plaint, that factor alone would have made his permit liable to be cancelled, if that position was discovered by the 9th Respondent in 2005.

In instituting action against the Petitioner in case No. 15034/L before the District Court of Anuradhapura, the 7th Respondent sought inter alia a declaration from Court that he is the lawful permit holder to the lot No.283 and eviction of the Petitioner therefrom. At the time of institution of the said action, the 7th Respondent had a valid permit issued by the 9th Respondent, which remained valid up until the Judgment was pronounced. The legal status of a permit holder was considered by Gratian J in Palisena v Perera (1954) 56 NLR 407, where his Lordship held (at p. 408) that;

> " This is a vindicatory action in which a person claims to be entitled to exclusive enjoyment of the land in dispute, and asks that, on proof of that title, he be placed in possession against an alleged trespasser.
> It is very clear from the language of the Ordinance and of the particular permit P1 issued to the plaintiff that a > permit-holder who has complied with the conditions of his permit enjoys, during the period for which the permit is valid, a sufficient title which he can vindicate against a trespasser in civil proceedings. The fact that the alleged trespasser has prevented him from even entering upon the land does not afford a defence to the action; it serves only to increase the necessity for early judicial intervention."

The description used by Gratian J to describe the nature of title of a permit holder, to the land in respect of which it was issued, was that such a person has "… a sufficient title which he can vindicate against a trespasser in civil proceedings." Thus, when the District Court entered Judgment in favour of the 7th Respondent in case No. 15034/L, the Court only found that he had "a sufficient title which he can vindicate against a trespasser in civil proceedings" and therefore was entitled to evict the Petitioner, who by then became a trespasser. It must also be noted that when the District Court pronounced its judgment in that matter, the 7th Respondent in fact was in possession of a valid permit. If the Petitioner did challenge the validity of the permit of the 7th Respondent, on the basis of P2, after presenting himself before the District Court, the result would have been different.

The ownership of lot No. 283, remained in the State and it was only alienated to the 7th Respondent on an Annual Permit subject to the conditions stipulated therein, and such alienation enabled the latter to be in possession of the same and to take its produce. Thus, the Court, in holding in favour of the 7th Respondent, merely asserted his entitlement only to the extent described in Palisena v Perera (supra). Therefore, the Judgment of the said action does not confer to the 7th Respondent any other concomitant attributes of ownership in relation to lot No. 283, other than the ones specifically granted by the said permit.

It is correct to state that by the time the Petitioner was evicted, the permit issued to the 7th Respondent (1R1) was cancelled and therefore his right to be in possession of lot No. 283, granted by the 9th Respondent by way of a permit had extinguished. But the said eviction was made on the strength of Judgment entered in favour of the 7th Respondent, as per his rights on the date of the action. The significant time gap that had elapsed between the Judgment and its execution was a result of the time taken to conclude the appellate proceedings initiated by the Petitioner. The fact that the said Judgment was delivered after a trial held ex parte, a fact emphasised by the Petitioner, does not relegate same into a pronouncement of a lessor validity that could be disregarded by the Petitioner. The finding of Court that the summons of action as well as the ex parte decree was in fact served on him confirms of his willful refusal to participate in the action against him. The fact that the trial proceeded ex parte was due to the actions of the Petitioner and therefore he must accept the consequences it entails.

The Petitioner too had no permit issued to him in respect of lot No. 283, and therefore had no "sufficient title which he can vindicate against" the 7th Respondent to regain his lost possession. The 9th Respondent, not being a party to the litigation between the 7th Respondent and the Petitioner, obviously was not bound by the said Judgment. After the 7th Respondent was placed in possession by the Court after evicting the Petitioner, the 9th Respondent could have considered the option of recovery of possession of lot No. 283, from the 7th Respondent, who now was placed in possession of a State land by an order of Court, but occupying same without a valid permit. By then, the Petitioner's status too had changed with the issuance of P13 by the 9th Respondent, who granted permission to occupy lot No. 283, despite an already made pronouncement by a Court of law that he is a trespasser. The 9th Respondent, made the said decision without being privy to the nature of the litigation that exists between the 7th Respondent and the Petitioner,

It appears that, the 9th Respondent was reluctant to initiate any legal action against the 7th Respondent, at that particular point of time, in order to recover possession of lot No. 283. This could be perhaps due to the realisation that it had adopted a course of action, contrary to the position, indicated to the 7th Respondent in 7R11, by selecting the Petitioner to receive an Annual Permit and accepting lease rentals from him, despite the pending litigation. Letter 7R11, conveyed to the 7th Respondent that until the pending action is decided, 9th Respondent would not take any further action for renewal of his permit. When the 9th Respondent cancelled selection of the 7th Respondent to lot No. 283, on the basis of illegal alienation, the latter had already instituted action in 1994 to regain possession against his lessee and when it made the selection of the Petitioner in 2005, there was a Judgment of Court, ordering the Petitioner's eviction.

Earlier on in this judgment, it was already noted that the Petitioner's legal status at the time of his selection could be described as twofold. In relation to the 9th Respondent, he was a de facto illegal occupier of lot No. 283, while also being a Judgment Debtor in relation to the 7th Respondent and was subjected to a writ of execution, validly issued by the District Court in respect of lot No. 283. When the investigative survey was carried out in January 2005, and the officers of the 9th Respondent Authority found out that the Petitioner was in illegal occupation of lot 283, it could also be contended that a permit holder of a lot, could institute action to regain his lost possession. This is a situation where any permit holder might find himself in. If that in fact the case is, it was unreasonable for the 9th Respondent to deny such a permit holder of his entitlement to the limited ownership of the land it had already granted under the permit, in favour of a trespasser.

This seems to be the one among many reasons, that the Petitioner's selection was set aside, after it was revealed that there had been a litigation and he was evicted from the lot he occupied, by an order of Court. In 1R15 the 3rd Respondent used the term that the 7th Respondent had taken action to "regularise" ("නිරවුල්") the informal alienation, by making reference to the act of eviction of the Petitioner after an order of Court. The relevant sentence from 1R15 is reproduced below;

It seems that the decision to set aside the 7th Respondent's selection was made after it became evident that the 7th Respondent had leased it out and taken legal action to evict the overholding lessee. The 9th Respondent seems to have considered the institution of a case by the 7th Respondent as an action taken to rectify the situation created with his informal alienation. This is reflected from the statement " ඩී.එම්. සෝමපාල මහතාට නීත්‍යානුකූලව බැහැර කරන ලද ඉඩම පසුකාලීනව ඔහු විසින් නිරවුල් කර ගැනීමට කටයුතු කරනු ලැබුවත් ... "

Learned Senior State Counsel for the 1st to 6th and 8th to 9th Respondents however contended that the validity of the decision of the 9th Respondent to set aside the selection of the 7th Respondent for lot No. 283, was never challenged before a Court of law. I could agree with the learned Senior State Counsel on her submission on this point, but the actions of the 9th Respondent, when viewed in the proper context, clearly indicate, that the said Authority, without conceding to the 'error' it had made in setting aside the 7th Respondent's selection without considering his effort to secure possession, sought to correct the resultant problematic situation by reversing its decision to set aside the selection made in 2005, and thereafter to grant an Annual Permit afresh in favour of the 7th Respondent, under the powers vested in the 10th Respondent.

The "ගැටලුකාරී තත්වය" referred to by the 3rd Respondent, is an apt description of the situation the 9th Respondent Authority had encountered. This was primarily due to the fact that, when the investigative survey was carried out in January 2005, the Petitioner had not disclosed to the officers of the 9th Respondent that he is the defendant in the action instituted by the 7th Respondent, and there is an eviction order against him. The illegality of the Petitioner of occupying the parcel of State land does not confine to the interests of the 9th Respondent but also extends to the interests of the 7th Respondent as well. The 7th Respondent has had a valid permit, which conferred him certain rights over the parcel of land during its validity.

The 9th Respondent only considered the illegality of the occupation against its interests but failed to recognise the illegality of the said occupation against the interests of its own lessee, who by then had obtained a declaration as to the illegality of the occupation by the Petitioner on that parcel of State land. It needs to be highlighted once more that this failure could directly be attributed to the non-disclosure or suppression of that very fact by the Petitioner to the officers who conducted the investigative survey on behalf of the 9th Respondent.

All these factors become relevant to the instant application because of their influence and contribution to the decision made by the 9th Respondent, in making the selection of the Petitioner to receive an Annual Permit in respect of lot No. 283 and setting aside the selection of the 7th Respondent. The recommendation made by the 1st Respondent to the Secretary to the Mahaweli Ministry (1R15) indicated that the 7th Respondent's selection to lot No. 283, was set aside due to making an informal alienation of that land, in violation of the conditions stipulated in the permit. It also indicated that since the 7th Respondent had subsequently been restored to the possession of the said lot upon a Judgment of Court by evicting the Petitioner, and since the appeal against said Judgment was dismissed, the latter's selection to the said lot was set aside. This was done, in order to re-issue a permit to the 7th Respondent, who had now been placed in possession of the said lot by an order of Court. This is also the position of the 9th Respondent had taken, when the 7th Respondent complained to the Human Rights Commission under references HRC/AP/656/15/2013(W), per 1R13 and also in relation to the complaint of the Petitioner to that Commission under reference HRC/AP/350/S (1R14). The Petitioner did not attach any documents to indicate the outcome of the inquiry conducted by the Human Rights Commission, over his complaint under the said reference.

Thus, the contents of 1R14 and 1R15 clearly indicate the underlying considerations taken into account by the 9th Respondent in setting aside the selection made in 2005 in favour of the Petitioner. One such factor was the fact of restoration of the 7th Respondent back into possession of lot No. 283 by an order of Court. With making the said decision to set aside the selection of the Petitioner, the 9th Respondent made an attempt not to have an administrative decision which was in direct conflict with a judicial decision, which became binding both on the Petitioner as well as the 7th Respondent. Therefore, it is clear that the 9th Respondent's decision to set aside the Petitioner's selection to lot No. 283 was made upon the realisation that in the first place, it should not have made the selection of the Petitioner back in 2005, in view of the pending litigation between the two contesting parties in respect of the same parcel of land. In fairness to the 9th Respondent, it must be noted that although it was aware of a litigation instituted by the 7th Respondent, it would not have been known that the other party to that litigation is the Petitioner.

Interestingly, the 1st Respondent also conveyed to the Secretary of Mahaweli Ministry that an internal investigation would be initiated into the circumstances that led to the selection of the Petitioner in 2005. In fact, the Resident Project Manager issued a directive on Chief Internal Auditor calling for a complete report as to the inquiry conducted to regularise the illegal occupation of the Petitioner to the said lot (annex 4 to 1R15). This shows that the failure to consider the effect of the pending litigation over lot No. 283, had resulted in the subsequent setting aside of the Petitioner's selection to that particular lot.

Thus far in this Judgement, I have considered several aspects that had a direct bearing on the legitimacy of the expectation the Petitioner, which he claims to have entertained with the issuance of P13. These aspects include the contents of P13 and P19 and their effect, the litigation history between the Petitioner and the 7th Respondent and, finally, its relevance and the effect on his selection to receive a permit. I have also considered in detail the two grounds on which he was selected to receive a permit, namely occupation and development of lot No. 283, and the legal status of the Petitioner in relation to the occupation of the land and its development.

In addition to the failure to disclose regarding pending litigation against him, the Petitioner had apparently suppressed yet another factor, which also had a bearing on his selection to receive an Annual Permit on lot No. 283. It was noted that the officers of the 9th Respondent made a remark in 1R2, that the Petitioner had "constructed a permanent building and operates a business enterprise in it." Obviously, this information must have been provided to the officers by the Petitioner himself. However, in his petition, the Petitioner does not make any averment on developmental activity he carried out on that parcel of State land. Of course, he states therein that he obtained the electricity supply to the grocery store. Why this particular factor becomes relevant in the present analysis is, it is evident from the letter informing the 7th Respondent of the cancellation of his permit (1R6), that one of the reasons the 9th Respondent decided to set aside the 7th Respondent's selection to receive a permit was his failure to develop the commercial lot allocated to him. When the 7th Respondent allowed the Petitioner to occupy lot No. 283 in December 1987, there was in fact a building standing on that lot and that had admittedly been constructed by the former. Contrary to the claim of the Petitioner that he did put up the building, the informal agreement P2 also indicate that he paid the 7th Respondent a sum of Rs. 225,000.00, as the value of the building that stood on that lot in 1987.

When dealing with the legitimacy of an expectation, Wade, having posed the question (supra, at p. 449) "how is it to be determined whether a particular expectation is worthy of protection?", proceeded to answer same by identifying several considerations a Court could take into account in that regard. Listing as the fifth consideration (at p.450), it is stated that "... the individual seeking protection of the expectation must themselves deal fairly with the public authority". Similar view is taken in De Smith (supra) as it is stated (at p.692) "the representation must be preceded by full disclosure."

Both these texts quoted the Judgment R v Inland Revenue Commissioners, ex parte MFK Underwriting Agents ltd and Others [1990] 1 All ER 91, to illustrate the point. This was an instance where the Revenue authority had reportedly made known its view on taxation policy applicable to index-linked bonds, which it need not have done. When the Revenue authority decided to resile from its stated policy i.e. "not to challenge as disguised interest the indexation uplift" of such bonds, "provided that the bonds paid a commercial rate of interest in addition to the indexation uplift", the applicants sought to quash that decision seeking judicial review on the basis, that the Revenue authority had abused its powers by frustrating their legitimate expectation formed on the stated policy.

Bingham LJ held (p.110 f) "If it is to be successfully said that as a result of such an approach the Revenue has agreed to forgo, as has represented that it will forgo, tax which might arguably be payable on a proper construction of the relevant legislation it would, in my judgement, be ordinarily necessary for the tax payer to show that certain conditions had been fulfilled". In this context, his Lordships further stresses the point that, therefore, "… it is necessary that the taxpayer should have put all his cards face upwards on the table. This means that he must give full details of the specific transaction on which he seeks the Revenue's ruling …".

The requirement of an applicant, who expects a ruling of a public body, must "put all his cards face upwards on the table" in turn is based on a more fundamental principle, which Bingham LJ (p. 111 a) describes thus; "The doctrine of legitimate expectation is rooted in fairness. But fairness is not a one-way street. It imports the notion of equitableness, of fair and open dealing, to which the authority is as much entitled as the citizen … Fairness requires that its exercise should be on the basis of full disclosure".

Thus, it is clear that the Petitioner did not ""put all his cards face upwards on the table" when the officers of the 9th Respondent Authority conducted an investigative survey with a view to regularise illegal occupation of State lands in Nochchiyagama town in 2005, but expected a ruling from them in his favour that he was in occupation of the State land and he had developed the land. In respect of the development of the property as well, the Petitioner was selective in making available the required information. He apparently had claimed full credit to developing the lot by erecting a building on it and had his business of a grocery store house in it. In the process he had suppressed that it was the 7th Respondent who put up that building and he merely occupied it after securing electricity supply to that building.

This factor takes away the validity of any claim seeking to legitimise the expectation entertained by the Petitioner on P13, even if it is accepted as an undertaking that is 'clear, unambiguous and devoid of relevant qualification'. He clearly suppressed his actual status as a Judgment Debtor, who was to be evicted by an order of Court. He also shielded the development activity carried out by the 7th Respondent from the officers, who made an investigative survey.

Connected to P13, the document P19 too is a document relied upon by the Petitioner to substantiate his claim of the expectation he said to have entertained on P13, as it contains a re-confirmation of the 9th Respondent's earlier undertaking to issue an Annual Permit.

Perusal of the document P19 reveals that it had been issued in an official letterhead indicating that it had been issued by the Office of the Resident Project Manager – System H and is titled "අදාල අයගේ දැන ගැනීම සඳහා" and "නොවිවියාගම නගර සැලසුමේ අංක 283 වාණිජ ඉඩමේ නිත්‍යානුකූල අයිතිය සනාථ කිරීම". The letter P19 is dated 16.05.2013, and signed by one P.W.C. Mohotti, as the Project Manager. P19 indicates that it was copied to the Resident Project Manager, his deputy and the Block Manager. Having described the circumstances that led to the selection of the Petitioner to receive an Annual Permit for lot No. 283, the letter P19 then states "... මේ අනුව නොවිවියාගම නගර සැලසුමේ අංක 283 වාණිජ ඉඩමේ නිත්‍යානුකූල අයිතිය මොහොමඩ් කරීම් මොහොමඩ් රියාද් වන අයට හිමි ඇති බැවින් සහ වාර්ෂික බදු මුදල් හිඟයකින් තොරව මේ දක්වා ගෙවා ඇති බැවිනුත් ඉදිරියේදී වාර්ෂික අවසර පත්‍රයක් මොහු වෙත නිකුත් කිරීමට පියවර ගන්නා බැව් කාරුණිකව දන්වමි "

Judging by the persons to whom P19 was copied to, it appears to be an essentially an internal official communication. Surprisingly, it also has the title "අදාල අයගේ දැන ගැනීම සඳහා", depicting its purpose to inform the Petitioner's entitlement to lot No. 283 to the world at large. The Petitioner claims that he "received" the said letter P19, but it was neither addressed to him nor was it generated on his initiative and issued on request. The most striking feature in P19 is that it confers legal ownership of lot No. 283 to the Petitioner, whereas the 9th Respondent was yet to alienate the said lot, in favour of the Petitioner by issuance of an Annual Permit. The relevant part of P19 reads thus " මේ අනුව නොච්චියාගම නගර සැලසුමේ අංක 283 වාණිජ ඉඩමේ නිත්‍යානුකූල අයිතිය මොහොමඩ් කරීම් මොහොමඩ් රියාද් වන අයට හිමි ඇති බැවින් සහ වාර්ෂික බදු මුදල් හිඟයකින් තොරව මේ දක්වා ගෙවා ඇති බැවිනුත් ඉදිරියේදී වාර්ෂික අවසර පත්‍රයක් මොහු වෙත නිකුත් කිරීමට පියවර ගන්නා බැව් කාරුණිකව දන්වමි ". This is when, the Judgment in case No. 15034/L had already made a determination that " උප ලේඛණගත ඉඩමේ නිසි අවසර පත්‍ර ලාභියා පැමිණිලිකරු බවට තීරණය කරමි. ඒ අනුව විත්තිකරු සහ ඔහුගේ සේවක නියෝජිතාදීන් ඉවත්කර පැමිණිලිකරුට සාමකාමී බුක්තිය ආපසු ලැබිය යුතු බවට තීරණය කරමි.".

Clearly, the function of making a decision to alienation of State lands is not conferred or delegated to the then Resident Manager, who decided to issue P19 under his signature. The act of inclusion of the above quoted statement in the said letter and thereby conceding to the 'legal ownership' to the disputed parcel of the State land in favour of the Petitioner, is clearly an act well beyond the powers and functions of its author and therefore had been issued without having proper legal authority to do so. The Resident Manager could only have issued a confirmation of the selection of the Petitioner in respect of lot No. 283 and the fact that he had paid his annual lease rentals up to the time of its issuance, as these factors could be well supported on the available material before him and therefore lies well within his powers and functions. But, for some reason, best known to that particular officer who issued P19, he had made such a declaration of the Petitioner's legal status in relation to lot No. 283, challenging the Judgment of a competent Court, which decided against the Petitioner's interests in respect of the same parcel of land. The relevant pronouncement made in the Judgment of the District Court is "උප ලේඛණගත ඉඩමේ නිසි අවසර පත්‍ර ලාභියා පැමිණිලිකරු බවට තීරණය කරමි." The Resident Manager declares that "අනුව නොච්චියාගම නගර සැලසුමේ අංක 283 වාණිජ ඉඩමේ නිත්‍යානුකූල අයිතිය මොහොමඩ් කරීම් මොහොමඩ් රියාද් වන අයට හිමි ඇති බැවින් ..." and confers right over and above the said Judgment by making the said declaration. When the said declaration made by the then 3rd Respondent in P19 it was in direct conflict with the said determination of Court, which became final and binding on the Petitioner, after the withdrawal of his appeal. This act clearly amounts to a collateral attack on that Judgment.

It is not clear as to the circumstances that prompted Mohotti to issue P19 at that particular juncture, as the Petitioner was already appraised of a 'decision' made by the 9th Respondent in his favour. The Petitioner was so convinced of his entitlement to a permit, subsequent to that 'decision" and he had even withdrawn his own appeal, exposing himself to the risk of being evicted by Court. The 1st Respondent, in his Statement of Objections denies existence of letter P19 and no office copy of P19 was found, tendered to Court, or at least referred to in the same, leading to the reasonable inference that the said letter had been issued only to the Petitioner by the person who issued same. If P19 was issued on the strength of same 'decision' the Petitioner speaks of, then that 'decision'; in the absence of any documentary evidence confirming the fact that such a 'decision' had ever been made by the 9th Respondent, it is reasonable to infer that the existence of that 'decision' is only known to Mohotti and the Petitioner. Letter P19 was issued on 16.05.2013 and confirms that the Petitioner had paid annual lease rentals without default ("... වාර්ෂික බදු මුදල් නිහයකින් තොරව මේ දක්වා ගෙවා ඇති බැවිනුත් "). However, the Petitioner had tendered three receipts issued by the 9th Respondent in confirmation of payment of lease rentals marked P20. The receipt No. 275124 of 07.05.2013 indicates that the Petitioner paid arrears of lease rentals for the years 2004, 2012 and 2013 inclusive of the fines for such defaults. It could well be that the payments were made just nine days prior to the issuance of P19 in order to facilitate the Petitioner to be issued with P19. If that is the case, most probably it is, the effect of P19 is therefore reduced to a mere personal communication between them and had been issued without any authority and therefore cannot be binding on the 9th Respondent. How a Court should consider such an 'undertaking' or 'an assurance' had already been dealt in the Judgment of Ariyaratne and Others v Illangakoon, Inspector General of Police and Others (supra), where it was held; " … the law, as it presently stands, is that an assurance given ultra vires by a public authority, cannot found a claim of legitimate expectation based on that assurance."

This Court, in making the said pronouncement, was mindful of the uncertainty it might create in such claims and added;

> " … it has to be recognised that there may be many instances where a petitioner who relies on an assurance given by a public authority or one of its officials, reasonably believed that the public authority or official who gave it to him was acting lawfully and within their powers. It is also often the case that an individual who deals with a public authority will find it difficult to ascertain the extent of its powers and those of its officials. In such cases, much hardship will be done to an individual who bona fide relies on an assurance given to him by a public authority or one of its officials and is later told the assurance he relied on and acted upon, sometime with much effort and at great cost to him, cannot be given effect to because of a flaw regarding its vires. In such instances, the principle of legality comes into conflict with the principle of certainty and, the law as it stands now, is that the illegality of the assurance will defeat the value of > certainty which contends that the assurance should be given effect. However, that outcome can cause grave prejudice to an individual, for no conscious fault of his own."

It is evident from the segment that I have quoted above, if the Petitioner were to be considered a victim of an undertaking or an assurance given ultra vires by a public body, then he must qualify to be termed as "an individual who bona fide relies on an assurance given to him by a public authority…" for then only it could be said that the "outcome can cause grave prejudice to an individual, for no conscious fault of his own." When the Petitioner complains of an unenviable situation which he finds himself in, such as this, and if the material indicate that the Petitioner had a hand and contributed to such a situation, then, I do not think he could be considered as "an individual who bona fide relies on an assurance given to him by a public authority…" and therefore, the concern expressed by Court that the "outcome can cause grave prejudice to an individual, for no conscious fault of his own " has no application. In the circumstances, the document P19 would not render any assistance to the Petitioner's claim of entertaining a legitimate expectation, he had formed upon receipt of P13, as an instance of making a reconfirmation of the undertaking given in it.

Connected to the issue of the legitimacy of expectation, claimed to have been entertained by the Petitioner, his conduct too has a bearing in determining his application seeking relief from this Court. De Smith (at p. 694 under foot note 143) stated " … appropriate conduct of course be taken into account in the decision of Court as to whether, in its discretion, to award the applicant a remedy". Adaptation of this principle is reflected from the process of reasoning adopted by the English Supreme Court,

In the matter of an application by JR38 for judicial review (Northern Ireland) [2015] UKSC 42. This was an instance where the applicant sought judicial review, alleging that, subsequent to a request made by the Police, publication of a photograph in a newspaper, which depicted him participating in a disorderly and riotous conduct with the others, is violative of his right to privacy guaranteed under Article 8 of the European Convention of Human Rights. At the time of taking the said photograph, the applicant was only 14 years age and therefore was afforded special statutory protection as to his identity. The divisional Court, by majority decision dismissed the applicant's application and he preferred an appeal. The Supreme Court, having taken note of the fact of taking and use of a photograph of an individual would prima facie lie within the ambit of Article 8 of the said Convention, nonetheless, decided to dismiss the appellant's appeal on the basis that the act of publication could be justified in the circumstances. The Court, in dismissing the appeal, did weigh the competing interests of the appellant and interests of the public and applied the test of proportionality, since the police published the photographs only as the last resort. The Court, having observed that, "after a painstaking approach taken by the police service to the objective of identifying young offenders" did not yield any information, then referred to the conduct of the appellant, which contributed to the impugned publication of his photograph, in following terms; "… it is ironical that the appellant and his father were shown the photograph that was later published. Had they identified the appellant; no publication would have occurred".

A similar approach was adopted by Lord Denning in determining the appeal of Cinnamond v British Airport Authority [1980] 2 All ER 368. This refers to an instance where six car-hire drivers were prohibited by the Airport Authority to enter the Heathrow Airport for any purpose other than as a bona fide airline passenger. This was done by the Authority after repeatedly prosecuting them under its byelaws, which prohibited anyone loitering at the Airport. The six- car hire drivers have sought to quash that prohibition before the original Court but were unsuccessful. In dismissing their appeal, Lord Denning said in relation to the issuance of the said letter " … I would hold that the airport authority was perfectly in order, and within its rights, in writing the letter of 23rd November 1978 in which it prohibited these car-hire drivers from entering the airport until further notice. Mark you, only until further notice. If they show an intention to abide by the law in the future, if they are ready to give an undertaking, there is no doubt that the prohibition will be withdrawn. That has not happened. We have been told that, despite Forbes J's decision, these six car-hire drivers have been going on in the same way even since that decision in April 1979 until this very day". In view of the above, it is relevant to consider the conduct of the Petitioner in applying for relief from this Court.

This aspect of the Petitioner's claim of frustration of his legitimate expectation became relevant in view of the approach taken by the Courts as indicative from the Judgment of the Privy Council in The United Policyholders Group and others (Appellants) v The Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago (Respondent) (Trinidad and Tobago) (supra), where Lord Carnwath made the pronouncement that (at para 108); "[T]he initial burden lay on an applicant to prove the legitimacy of his expectation, and so far as necessary his reliance on the promise." In the preceding section of this Judgment, the aspect of the Petitioner's claim which dealt with the legitimacy of his expectation was considered and, in view of the Petitioner's unusual conduct, I now turn to consider whether he had discharged the remaining part of his initial burden, which dealt with the aspect of "… his reliance on the promise".

It is already noted that the learned President's Counsel had placed heavy reliance on the 9th Respondent's act of issuing P13 and depicting it as an instance of a clear undertaking made in favour of his client, the Petitioner. However, it is evident from the conduct of the Petitioner, that he was not so convinced of the said 'undertaking' contained in P13, despite his claim before this Court that it conveyed an undertaking by the 9th Respondent to fulfil his expectation to an Annual Permit in respect of lot No. 283. The document P13 is dated 26.10.2007 and contains a tag indicating that it had been issued as "final notice" and directed the Petitioner to make the initial payment along with the yearly lease rental for 2007 on or before 25.11.2007. Plainly it is indicative of the fact that the Petitioner had chosen to disregard the earlier communications that were meant to convey his selection to receive a permit.

It also specifically conveyed to the Petitioner that his continued failure to comply with its directions would make him liable to be set aside from his selection to lot No. 283. Undeterred by these warnings and not being convinced of the nature of his selection to receive a permit, the Petitioner opted not comply with the directions issued on P13. This is clearly an indication to the degree to which the Petitioner accepted his selection to receive a permit and the obvious doubts he entertained over the question whether the compliance of the said directions would in itself make him entitled to receive a permit to the said land. However, when he eventually made a payment, the deadline set up by P13, had already lapsed.

Nonetheless, the available material points to the conclusion that at some point of time the Petitioner did entertain a serious expectation that the 9th Respondent would issue an Annual Permit in his favour. This is indicative from the proceedings of the Court of Appeal on 15.01.2013, in CA 1175/98(F), by which the Petitioner invoked appellate jurisdiction of that Court seeking to set aside the order of the District Court pronounced on 05.11.1998 for the second time, rejecting his application to set aside the ex parte judgment (P18). Seeking permission of the appellate Court to withdraw his own appeal against the said order, learned President's Counsel, who represented the Petitioner before that Court, submitted that the said application was made "in view of a decision of the Mahaweli Authority made in favour of the Petitioner." Obviously, by then the Petitioner was convinced that the 9th Respondent had made a 'decision' favourable to him and after legal advice, instructed his Counsel to withdraw his appeal. He was aware that after the said appeal is withdrawn, the finding of the District Court, impugned by the said appeal, becomes binding upon him, in relation to the 7th Respondent and over the lot No. 283.

The only document the Petitioner had in his possession at the point of withdrawing his appeal which is indicative of an 'decision' taken by the 9th Respondent, was P13. But the conduct of the Petitioner amply demonstrated that he did not entertain any expectation on that particular 'decision. Therefore, it could safely be assumed that it is not the document that contained "a decision of the Mahaweli Authority made in favour of the Petitioner" and generated confidence in his mind to such a degree to decide to withdraw his appeal. The other 'decision' made in favour of the Petitioner was contained in document P19, which was yet to be issued when the appeal was withdrawn, as it is dated 16.05.2013.

The withdrawal of his appeal itself is an indication of the degree of reliance the Petitioner had placed on that particular 'decision', for him to ignore the probable exposure to risk of being evicted from lot No. 283, if that 'decision' is not implemented by the 9th Respondent.

What then is this 'decision', which generated such a strong confidence in the mind of the Petitioner to such a degree that he decided to withdraw his appeal challenging eviction from lot No. 283, disregarding its obvious consequences?

No explanation offered by the Petitioner as to this favourable 'decision' that led him to withdraw his appeal. In his petition, the Petitioner merely states that he "… moved to withdraw the appeal on the basis that the Mahaweli Authority had made a decision" in his favour. The cancellation of the 7th Respondent's selection to lot No. 283 in December 2008, also did not contribute in any way to boost up the confidence of the Petitioner had in P13, to make up his mind to withdraw his appeal thereafter. He waited another five years, and strangely acted on this favourable 'decision', presumably made somewhere in 2013, to instruct his Counsel to withdraw his appeal and thereby bringing the litigation he had with the 7th Respondent to a terminal point.

This is evident from the available material that, despite the issuance of P13, the Petitioner had relentlessly pursued all legally available options seeking to prevent his eviction from lot No. 283, by the 7th Respondent upon execution of writ issued by the Court. In doing so, the Petitioner had acted well within his rights, and sought intervention of appellate Courts against the multiple rulings made by original Courts that are adverse to his interests.

The Statement of Objections of the 1st Respondent also does not indicate the existence of any other favourable 'decision' made by the 9th Respondent, except to the one already conveyed to him through P13. Therefore, the circumstances referred to above indicate that the Petitioner's decision to withdraw his appeal was not made on the strength of either P13 or P19, and obviously was based on some other 'decision' said to have been made by the 9th Respondent, sometime in and around 2013.

Strangely, the very 'decision' on which the Petitioner had actually entertained his expectation, was not made available for consideration of this Court. This failure on the part of the Petitioner resulted in a situation where this Court was placed in a position that it cannot decide whether that particular 'decision' upon which the Petitioner had acted on, could be equated with a specific 'undertaking' of issuance of a permit, whereby he could legitimately expect the 9th Respondent to act on that undertaking. It is also not clarified by the Petitioner whether it is a 'decision' communicated to the Petitioner orally or in the form of a document, as well as the identity of the individual, who would have made that 'decision' on behalf of the 9th Respondent, in his petition.

Judging by the conduct of the Petitioner, it is evident that he had placed implicit faith on the said 'decision' and acted on that particular 'undertaking' to his detriment when he decided to withdraw his appeal on the strength of that 'decision'. In Francis Paponette and Others v The Attorney General of Trinidad and Tobago (supra), even if the applicant had relied on the promise made by an authority and acted on it to his detriment, the Court insisted that "If he wishes to reinforce his case by saying that he relied on the promise to his detriment, then obviously he must prove that too". In this instance too, the Petitioner had acted to his detriment, by placing reliance of that 'decision'. The documentary evidence does provide ample proof of it. However, that 'decision' or the person who made it is shielded by the Petitioner from this Court and to the Respondents, denying them an opportunity to place their standing on same. In the absence of any positive indication to an actual 'decision' made by the 9th Respondent, as indicative by the contents of the contemporaneous records that were made available in the form of documentary evidence tendered to this Court by the 1st Respondent (who should have made such 'decision' in the first place), it is reasonable to infer that if at all there is a 'decision' then it could well be a one made by a stranger. If this 'decision' is made by 3rd party, claiming to represent the 9th Respondent, it is not possible for the Petitioner to bind the 9th Respondent by placing any reliance on such a 'promise' irrespective of the fact that of his strong belief in it. De Smith (supra) states (at p. 689) " [A] legitimate expectation must be induced by the conduct of the decision maker. The representation by a different person or authority will therefore not found the expectation."

Clearly, the Petitioner had relied on that particular 'decision' of the unknown entity and founded his expectation on same, as indicative by his act of withdrawing of his appeal. But the Petitioner failed to prove that there was such a 'decision' on which he formed his legitimate expectation, instead he sought to establish that he relied on P13, to entertain an expectation but his own actions violating its conditions indicate that he did not entertain any serious expectations on P13, after it was issued.

It must be noted in this context that the deceptive conduct of the 7th Respondent also had not escaped the attention of this Court. He deliberately made out a false claim in his Statement of Objections stating that he was totally unaware of any decision made by the 9th Respondent cancelling his selection to lot No. 283 in 2008, until the year 2013. In his affidavit, the 7th Respondent, states under oath that "… until 2013 I was not aware about the fact that my permit had been cancelled and or suspended by the Mahaweli Authority …". However, the 1st Respondent, in his Statement of Objections, tendered a letter dated 15.12.2008 (1R6), by which the 7th Respondent was informed of the decision to cancel his permit. On 29.12.2008, the 7th Respondent, through his Attorney-at-Law, writes back to the 3rd Respondent in response. In that letter (1R7), the 7th Respondent states that the appeal No. CA 1175/98 was still pending, and it was wrong for the 9th Respondent to cancel his permit by way of an administrative decision and it was made contrary to letter issued to him (7R11). Clearly, the 7th Respondent had deceived his Attorney-at-Law, who drafted the Statement of Objections that had been filed on his behalf before this Court, to include such an averment, depicting a totally false claim. This deliberate act of deception practiced by the 7th Respondent demands unreserved condemnation of this Court.

However, since it is the Petitioner who came before this Court, alleging that his legitimate expectations were frustrated, after careful consideration of the available material, I am inclined to agree with the contention of the 1st to 6th and 8th to 10th Respondents, as well as of the learned Counsel for the 7th Respondent that the Petitioner had failed to establish the legitimacy of the expectation he had entertained.

One of the complaints of the learned President's Counsel for the Petitioner was that no opportunity was provided for his client to place any material for the consideration of the 9th Respondent Authority, before it made the decision to cancel the selection made in his favour to receive a permit in respect of lot No. 283. In effect, this contention is founded upon rules of natural justice. In Secretary of State for the Home Department v AF (No 3) [2009] UKHL 28, para 72, Lord Hoffmann noted that the purpose of the audi alteram partem rule "… is not merely to improve the chances of the tribunal reaching the right decision … but to avoid the subjective sense of injustice which an accused may feel if he knows that the tribunal relied upon material of which he was not told." And in R (Osborn) v Parole Board [2013] UKSC 61, para 68, Lord Reed endorsed a normative understanding of the duty to act procedurally fairly:

> "[J]ustice is intuitively understood to require a procedure which pays due respect to persons whose rights are significantly affected by decisions taken in the exercise of administrative or judicial functions. Respect entails that such persons ought to be able to participate in the procedure by which the decision is made, provided they have something to say which is relevant to the decision to be taken."

However, the case of Cinnamond v British Airport Authority (supra), too refers to an instance where the applicants sought judicial review on the basis that the Airport Authority ought to have given an opportunity to them, so that they could be heard and, if such hearing was granted, they could have given reasons to why the prohibition issued by the Airport Authority should be modified. They cited a passage from Wade (4th Ed, p.455), which reads thus "… in the case of a discretionary administrative decision, such as a dismissal of a teacher or the expulsion of a student, hearing his case will soften the heart of the authority and alter their decision, even though it is clear from the outset that punitive action would be justified". This passage was cited before their Lordships, in order to counter the respondent's submissions that affording a hearing would not have make any difference to the prohibition already made.

Delivering his Judgment on this appeal, Lord Denning held that (at p.374),“ [I] can see the force of that argument. But it only applies where there is a legitimate expectation of being heard. In cases where there is no legitimate expectation, there is no call for hearing.” Similarly, in the instant application too, in view of the fact that the Petitioner had failed to establish the legitimacy of his expectation, the denial of an opportunity of being heard before an adverse order is made, therefore is not a requirement that would have tainted the decision taken by the 9th Respondent.

The premise on which the Petitioner had sought reliefs from this Court is by making a complaint of violation of his fundamental right to equality, guaranteed by Article 12(1) of the Constitution, despite him placing heavy reliance on certain public law principles in support of his contention. The specific relief he seeks in respect of the Annual Permit issued in favour of the 7th Respondent 7R12 is its annulment, which is a public law remedy available to him. In Perera v Prof. Daya Edirisinghe (1995) 1 Sri L.R. 148, Mark Fernando J observed that under the 1978 Constitution “… there is no doubt that Article 12 ensures equality and equal treatment even where a right is not granted by common law, statute or regulation, and this is confirmed by the provisions of Articles 3 and 4(d)” and added that “[T]he fact that by entrenching the fundamental rights in the Constitution, the scope of the writs has become enlarged is implicit in Article 126(3), which recognises that a claim for relief by way of writ may also involve an allegation of the infringement of a fundamental right.”

of Royappa v State of Tamil Nadu (A.I.R. 1974 S.C. 555) where it was stated that;

> "[E]quality is a dynamic concept with many aspects and dimensions, and it cannot be 'cribbed, cabined and confined' within traditional and doctrinaire limits. From a positivistic point of view equality is antithetic to arbitrariness. In fact, equality and arbitrariness are sworn enemies, one belongs to the rule of law in a republic while the other, to whim and caprice of an absolute monarch. When an act is arbitrary, it is implicit in it that it is unequal both according to political logic and Constitutional law and is therefore violative of Article 14."

In the circumstances, if the Petitioner could establish that the 9th Respondent had frustrated his legitimate expectation to an Annual Permit in respect of lot No. 283, on the strength of the promise made in P13 with P19, then the said frustration, in the absence of any acceptable justification by the said Respondent, would amount to abuse of power and thereby may have given rise to a situation where it could be said the actions of the 9th Respondent were violative of the fundamental rights guaranteed to him under Article 12(1). Therefore, the Petitioner's contention will have to be considered in the light of the jurisprudence of this Court pronounced on the principles on equality.

However, since the Petitioner was unable to satisfy this Court in respect of the legitimacy of his expectation which he claims to have entertained after the issuance of P13, the consideration of the question whether there was any infringement of the fundamental rights guaranteed to him under Article 12(1) by one or more of the officers of the 9th Respondent Authority, in frustrating his substantive legitimate expectation to a permit "is so unfair" and "will amount to an abuse of power" (per R v North and East Devon Health Authority, Ex p Coughlan [2001] QB 213), does not arise for consideration.

In view of the above reasoning, I hold that the Petitioner had failed to establish any violation of his fundamental rights under Article 12(1) and therefore his application for a declaration of such a violation by this Court should be refused.

The petition of the petitioner is accordingly dismissed. I make no order as to costs.

ARGUED ON : 27th September 2023

DECIDED ON : 14th December 2023

S. THURAIRAJA, PC, J.

The Petitioner, namely Weheragedara Ranjith Sumangala (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "the Petitioner"), filed this application on 28th March 2011 against the 1st to 6th Respondents (hereinafter sometimes jointly referred to as "Respondents") seeking relief in respect of the alleged infringement of his fundamental rights guaranteed by and under the Constitution of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka. Accordingly, on 26th April 2011, when the case was called for support, State Counsel representing the Respondents pleaded for time to be granted in order to expeditiously obtain instructions regarding the injuries purportedly sustained by the Petitioner. Thereafter, as the Respondents have not filed limited objections, on 30th May 2011, the Court granted leave to proceed for the alleged violation of Articles 11, 12(1), 13(1) and 13(2) of the Constitution in the manner and circumstances hereinafter described.

FACTUAL MATRIX

As stated by the 1st, 2nd, and 4th Respondents in their Statement of Objections dated 6th December 2011, the facts and circumstances of the instant case take place in the course of an investigation under the direction and instructions of the 5th Respondent, founded on a complaint by an unknown party concerning several thefts which occurred in the Moragahahena-Padduka area during the period preceding the events of this case. As stated by the Respondents, the Petitioner was arrested on 17th December 2010 on the 'reasonable suspicion' that he was part of a thieving gang connected to these thefts. However, upon the perusal of the evidence presented to this Court by both parties, there appear to be several inconsistencies with the Respondent's narration of the incidents of this case, which I will address in the course of this judgment. Thus, for the sake of clarity, I will first consider in brief the facts as narrated by both the Petitioner and the Respondent separately as stated in the Petition and Statement of Objections, respectively.

Facts as stated by the Petitioner

The Petitioner, who was at one time a soldier in the Sri Lankan Army, was discharged from military service on or about 7th September 2009, and at the time of this application was employed as a tinsmith and earned his living by doing motor vehicle repair work. On or about 15th December 2010 at around 9:15 a.m. the Petitioner was walking towards the 'garment junction' in Madagala to get into a three-wheeler of a friend named Chandana who was taking him to work at a house in Kahawala. At the said junction, the Petitioner noticed a motorcycle with the 4th Respondent and another. The Petitioner states that it was only after he was arrested in the manner elucidated hereinafter that he came to realise this other person with the 4th Respondent to be a police officer. The Petitioner got into the said three-wheeler and proceeded towards Kahawala. A few minutes into the journey the Petitioner realized that they were being surrounded on all 4 sides by motor bicycles and the three-wheeler was forced to stop. The 1st Respondent together with another police officer forced themselves into the back seat of the three-wheeler on either side of the Petitioner. The 1st Respondent and the other police officer forcefully took custody of the Petitioner's mobile phone, threatening the Petitioner saying "දගලන්න එපා, මරණවා [Don't struggle, will kill you]".

The Petitioner was then taken to the Dambara Cemetery and was questioned by the Respondents about one Chinthaka. The Petitioner stated that he did not know anything of this person apart from the fact that he owned cattle and a bakery. Upon giving this response, the Respondents started kicking the Petitioner's thighs several times till he was numb. Thereafter, 1st Respondent made a phone call to another, and the Petitioner heard him say "සර්, අල්ල ගත්තා [Sir, we caught]". Thereafter, as per the instructions of this 'sir' over the phone, the Respondents removed the Petitioner's t-shirt and blindfolded him with it.

About 15 minutes later, the Petitioner, still blindfolded, was dragged and put into a van with his hands cuffed at the back, at which time there were several other Police officers present. The 2nd Respondent questioned the Petitioner whether he had retained his gun from the military, to which the Petitioner answered in the negative. The 2nd Respondent had threatened the Petitioner that he would bury the Petitioner alive in the cemetery, causing the Petitioner to fear for his life.

Thereafter the 2nd Respondent had asked the 1st Respondent to put Chillie powder into two shopping bags and to tie it over the Petitioner's head so as to compel him to breathe in the Chillie powder. While the Petitioner was caused to choke and suffocate by being compelled to inhale the Chillie powder, the Police officers had watched the Petitioner and had only removed it when it seemed as though the Petitioner was about to die. Once again, the Petitioner was questioned regarding the weapon and the Petitioner had answered in the negative just as he had done before. The entire process of torture by Chillie powder was continued repeatedly while the other Police officers were striking the Petitioner's cheeks until he was bleeding out of his mouth and continued to beat him with what the Petitioner described as "three-wheeler belts".

The Petitioner states that during this process of torture, the 2nd Respondent further questioned the Petitioner about several other robberies he was purported to have been involved in, with a specific focus on the robbery said to have occurred at the house of the 4th Respondent whose house the Petitioner had overheard people say had been broken into a few days ago. When the Petitioner said he knew nothing about it, the entire process of torture continued. The Petitioner states that the torment came to a point that he could not bear it anymore, and, in fear for his life, he falsely admitted to robbing the said house of the 4th Respondent. In an attempt to be relieved of the torture, the Petitioner had fabricated a false incident, that, a person named Chaminda went into the house of the 4th Respondent while the Petitioner kept a lookout, and another named Nimal was also involved. The Petitioner also falsely admitted that he was given Rs.50,000 for having assisted in the robbery and that he did not know about the balance of monies stolen.

Thereafter, the beating stopped, and the 1st and 2nd Respondents along with the other Police Officers went to have a meal at the "Hasthigiriya Hotel" in Meepe taking the Petitioner in the van along with them. The Petitioner was not given any food to eat. The Petitioner was thereafter blindfolded and handcuffed, and taken to a place to shower, and thereafter to a place which the Petitioner later learnt was the Mirihana Police Station. The Petitioner was further questioned at the Police station by the 1st and 2nd Respondents with the aim of getting an admission from the Petitioner as to the robberies, to which he had previously admitted having succumbed to the torment caused by the Respondents. This time, however, the Petitioner was informed that he had 15 cases of Robbery against him in Padukka and was questioned further regarding this. Having answered in the negative, the Petitioner was once again subject to torture by way of Chillie powder as described above and additionally, two officers were standing on his thighs and jumping until his legs were numb while continuing the questioning. Unable to bear the pain and agony, the Petitioner had once again succumbed to the pressure and had made various admissions, including that he had broken into the co-operative store, removed the rubber from a lorry, stolen some gold jewellery, broken into his brother-in-law's house and stolen the television, VCD player and cassette player.

The Petitioner states that once all the admissions were written down by the 1st and 2nd Respondents, the beatings ceased for a while. Thereafter, since the Petitioner had indicated that he could show the purportedly stolen goods in his house, he was put into a van and brought back to his house around 6:00 a.m. on or about 16th December 2010 by the 1st, 2nd, and 4th Respondents and about four other Police Officers. The 2nd Respondent thereafter went into the house and asked the Petitioner's wife whether the television and the pendant worn by the Petitioner's child were stolen. The Petitioner's wife responded that the said television had been purchased from Singer Sri Lanka on an easy-pay scheme and showed the receipts. The 2nd Respondent further inquired as to the whereabouts of the stolen gold jewellery, to which the Petitioner responded that it was buried near the plantain trees. However, upon searching the place the 1st and 2nd Respondents discovered that there were no such goods. The 2nd Respondent asked the Petitioner as to why he had lied, to which the Petitioner responded that he had no option but to lie because he was afraid, which resulted in the 2nd Respondent and another Police Officer beating the Petitioner mercilessly, subjecting him to such degrading treatment in front of the Petitioner's wife and two children of ages 09 and 02 years respectively, traumatising his wife and children so much so that his eldest daughter fainted upon witnessing her father mistreated in such a manner.

The Petitioner states that one Police Officer began assaulting his legs and back with a pole handed over by the 4th Respondent until the pole broke. The Petitioner was then dragged into the kitchen and questioned again about the purported stolen goods.

Since there were no such goods, the Petitioner was mercilessly assaulted over and over again with another "පොල්ලක්" [club] until that, too, broke. The Petitioner states that thereafter the said Police Officers began trampling his face since he had fallen on the ground. The Petitioner states that at one point his wife and two children were taken to one of the rooms and were not permitted to come out, to prevent them from shouting, while the 1st and 2nd Respondents and other Police Officers continued to assault the Petitioner.

Immediately thereafter, the Petitioner was taken in the van again to the Mirihana Police Station. The Petitioner was taken to the top floor of the said Mirihana Police Station, handcuffed and asked to sit on the floor beside the chair. The Petitioner then saw that Chandana, the driver of the three-wheeler, was permitted to make a statement and to leave thereafter. The Petitioner was thereafter taken to what appeared to be 'the torture chambers' of the Mirihana Police Station, where he was assaulted mercilessly. The Petitioner states that one of the Police Officers assaulted the Petitioner's thighs with a pole till he was numb and fell. Thereafter a Police Officer began assaulting him with a 'three-wheeler belt' and then he was hung on a beam upside down with his legs and kept suspended for a while. Eventually, when he was taken down, he was forced to have a bath. The Petitioner states that thereafter he was taken upstairs again and questioned by the 1st and 2nd Respondents as to details of the aforementioned Nimal and Chaminda and one Jayasena also known to the Petitioner. Then one of the Police Officers said that they, too, had been brought and that the Petitioner would see them in the morning. The Petitioner states that on or about 17th December 2010, he was taken to a place within the Mirihana Police Station, where the said Nimal, Chaminda and Jayasena were. It was apparent that they too had been subjected to torture. The Petitioner was questioned again about their involvement in the purported robbery of the 4th Respondent's house, and he answered in the affirmative as he could not endure being tortured anymore. However, the torture continued and all of them were beaten mercilessly. The Petitioner states that thereafter he was taken upstairs, and one hand and leg were cuffed together onto one leg of a table, as on several other occasions.

The Petitioner further states that even though the Petitioner had explained to the Consultant Judicial Medical Officer that he had been cuffed to a table, it had been erroneously recorded as him having been cuffed to a bed, as demonstrated in the Medico-Legal Report.

The Petitioner states that on or about 18th December 2010, he was taken down to the said 'torture chambers' again where he saw the said Nimal suspended on a beam with his hands. Then again, the Petitioner was questioned as to whether he was saying the truth and the Petitioner at that point, said that he was compelled to fabricate it previously, only because he was powerless to escape the torture and merely to gain relief from the pain. Thereafter, on the same day, i.e., on or about 18th December 2010, the Petitioner was hung by his hands and suspended on a beam, while the said Nimal was taken down. During this time the Petitioner was questioned repeatedly regarding all alleged cases and as he denied his involvement, the torture persisted. In a while, the 1st and 2nd Respondents placed a chair on which the Petitioner was ordered to stand and yet again answer the questions posed at him with the sole purpose of manipulating him to secure an admission. However, the moment it was denied the chair was pulled away, causing the Petitioner to remain suspended by his hands. The Petitioner was left suspended in this manner for a while, causing him to suffer immense pain. The Petitioner states that eventually, when he could not bear it anymore, he admitted only to the robbery of the Co-operative Store and removing the rubber from the lorry and he also said that only Nimal, Chaminda and he were involved and that Jayasena was not. The Petitioner states that thereafter, the 2nd Respondent ordered that he (and others) be taken down, made to bathe, given Panadol and eventually given some food. The Petitioner states that even though he had been initially arrested on or about 15th December 2010, until such time (on or about 18th December 2010) he had not been given even a morsel of food. The Petitioner states that even then, the torture did not stop as they were taken upstairs and all of them except for Jayasena were beaten mercilessly with three-wheeler 'belts'. In fact, the Petitioner claims that he was beaten with a 'three-wheeler belt' by the 2" Respondent about 25-30 times until he was in unbearably excruciating pain. Thereafter, Nimal and Chaminda were questioned as to what was stolen and where the goods were. Subsequently, Nimal's wife brought an oven claiming that it was one of the 'stolen goods' and thereafter eventually the beatings ceased and they were handcuffed.

The Petitioner states that he came to know that his wife, on coming to learn that he was detained at the said Mirihana Police Station, had on several occasions come to the Police Station, but was refused access on every such instance. In fact, on one such occasion, when the Petitioner's wife was desperately searching for the Petitioner, she was informed by one of the female Police Officers at the Mirihana Police Station that the Petitioner was there but that she had been instructed not to grant access to him. The Petitioner further states that on or about 19th December 2010, all of them were confined to a cell and at around 6:40 p.m., were taken to the residence of the Acting Magistrate of Awissawella to obtain a detention order for 48 hours under the pretext of having to conduct further investigations. Accordingly, the detention was extended, and the suspects were to be produced in Court at 9:00 a.m. on 21st December 2010. The Petitioner however further states that the 2nd Respondent obtained such detention order by stating that the Petitioner and others had been arrested only on 18th December 2010.

The Petitioner further states that when the said Acting Magistrate questioned the Petitioner as to whether any injuries were inflicted while in custody, the Petitioner had said there had not been such. The Petitioner states that the reasoning for answering in this manner despite all the torture he had undergone over the past days was due to the fact that he feared for his life, being fully aware of the consequences he was likely to face and what further suffering he would be made to endure by the Police while being detained if he had informed the learned Acting Magistrate of the treatment meted out to him by the Respondents. The Petitioner further states that in the circumstances, the learned Acting Magistrate too, without any examination of the Petitioner, recorded that there were no injuries, as borne out by the said record.

The Petitioner states that he (and others) was not produced before the Court on 21st December 2010, in contravention of the said detention order.

Therefore, the learned Magistrate, on 22nd December 2010 declared that such detention was unlawful and ordered the Registrar of Court to call for a report from the Deputy Inspector General - Nugegoda on the matter. The Petitioner states that later that evening, they were produced before the learned Magistrate at which point, he informed the learned Magistrate about the torture endured. Consequently, the Petitioner was enlarged on personal bail of Rs. 50,000.00 and the learned Magistrate ordered that he (and others) be given necessary medical attention and that the case record be placed in the safe.

The Petitioner states that after his release, on or about 25th December 2010 the Petitioner was admitted to the Matale Hospital as it was not safe for him to remain at his residence. Thereafter, on or about 27th December 2010, he was examined by the Consultant Judicial Medical Officer, Matale who concluded that the nature and pattern of the injuries sustained by the Petitioner were consistent with the history given by him and he was further referred to a Neurologist and a Physiologist for further examination.

The Petitioner states that he made a complaint to the Human Rights Commission on or about 6th January 2011 concerning the aforesaid conduct and actions of the said Respondents and/or other persons set out in this application involving torture, inhuman and degrading treatment of the Petitioner and the infringement of the Petitioner's fundamental rights as guaranteed under the Constitution. However, on or about 10th March 2011 when the matter was taken up for Inquiry, the said 2nd Respondent was not represented and therefore the Inquiry has been postponed indefinitely.

The Petitioner states that on or about 28th January 2011 the Petitioner (as well as the said Nimal, Chaminda and Jayasena) received notice to be present in the Horana Magistrate's Court in respect of certain charge(s) against him. On such occasion, the Petitioner was once again unlawfully remanded and refused bail purportedly on the basis that there was a probability that he would continue to commit such offences if released on bail, even though the Petitioner had never had charges against him except the purported charges as elucidated above.

The learned Magistrate further ordered the Officer-in-Charge of the Moragahahena Police Station to submit a report on the purported stolen goods. However, as demonstrated by such report dated 11th February 2011, none of the charges against the Petitioner could be sustained and the Petitioner was consequently released on bail.

Facts as stated by the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents

The 1st, 2nd, and 4th Respondents by their Joint Statement of Objections, in denying all the averments of the Petition, stated that they were conducting investigations on the instructions and directions of the 5th Respondent, acting on an anonymous public complaint as to several thefts in the area, and that Petitioner and the 3 others were suspected to be involved in these thefts as a gang. Respondents are of the position that the arrest and taking into custody of the Petitioner and the subsequent detention were during these investigations as per the instructions given by the 5th Respondent. The Respondents also deny that the Petitioner was arrested on 15th December 2010 and state that he was arrested on 17th December 2010 with minimum force used only because there was resistance on the part of the Petitioner. The Respondents further hold the position that no injury or torture was caused to the Petitioner in the course of the custody, which allegedly was from 17th to 22nd December 2010.

Facts as stated by the 3rd Respondent

In summarizing the Affidavit by the 3rd Respondent denying the averments of the Petition, while the 3rd Respondent does affirm that he is the Head Quarters Inspector of the Mirihana Police area, and that he is unaware as to the other building referred to by the Petitioner where the torture had taken place. He also claims to be unaware of the other circumstances of the instant application. While being generally unaware of the torturous conduct which transpired according to the Petitioner, he affirms that no such torture or injury was caused to the Petitioner by the Respondents, and thus states that he cannot be held responsible for any of the aforementioned conduct.

Written Submissions on behalf of the 7th Respondents

The 7th Respondent makes an identical narration to that of the 1st, 2nd, and 4th Respondents, and goes a step further in the Written Submissions filed on their behalf to state that the Petitioner was arrested and investigated under and in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Special Provisions) Act, No. 15 of 2005, and have rightly obtained an order from the Magistrate to extend the period of investigation accordingly, and thereby the Respondents are not in violation of the fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 11, 12(1), 13(1) and 13(2) of the Constitution. At this instance, I wish to reiterate the fact that the events of the instant case occurred within the period beginning from 15th December 2010 until 22nd December 2010.

Affidavit of the 5th Respondent dated 05th October 2023

I wish to place on record that there was no Statement of Objections, nor any Written Submissions filed by and on behalf of the 5th Respondent up until 26th September 2023, on which date the 5th Respondent had tendered an Affidavit, which did not challenge much of the averments in the Petition dated 28th March 2011 nor the Counter Affidavit of the Petitioner. The said Affidavit only makes reference to the fact that the Respondents had sought permission from the learned Magistrate to further detain the Petitioner and several other suspects for the purposes of further investigations into a complaint made with regard to several incidents of thefts. The 5th Respondent states that permission was sought and granted pursuant to section 2 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Special Provisions) Act, No.2 of 2013.

ANALYSIS

I wish to first place on record that the subject matter and the issues surrounding the instant case do not concern the guilt of the Petitioner with regard to the criminal allegations levelled against him. The instant case concerns only and is limited to considering whether there has been a violation of the Petitioner's fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 11, 12(1), 13(1) and 13(2) of the Constitution, by the Respondents for the manner in which they conducted themselves towards the Petitioner.

Even the reconvicted criminals of the most notorious kind are entitled to their fundamental rights. No number of allegations or even past convictions can abrogate or limit one's fundamental rights except as permitted by the Constitution under Article 15. The presumption of innocence as enshrined within Article 13(5) of the Constitution, being a cornerstone of the due process of law, must at all times be upheld by investigating officers with the utmost conviction.

As such, needless to say, the allegations against the Petitioner, of which the Respondents invited this Court's attention, matter only insofar as to determine whether there is a reasonable suspicion or reasonable complaint against the Petitioner in considering Article 13(1). Such allegations matter nought in respect of all other fundamental rights—especially Article 11, for torture, inhuman and degrading treatment are absolutely abominable in law under all circumstances.

Article 13(1): Arrest

Article 13(1) of the Constitution provides as follows:

> "No person shall be arrested except according to procedure established by law. Any person arrested shall be informed of the reason for his arrest."

This Article insists upon two fundamental requirements in making an arrest. Firstly, it provides in no uncertain terms that an arrest may only be made "according to procedure established by law". Secondly, it further requires that a person be given reasons for his arrest. Section 23(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979 once again insists upon this Constitutionally recognized requirement of giving reasons for the arrest.

Police officers are required to act strictly within the parameters of law in effecting arrests. Here, the words 'according to procedure established by law' means, of course, according to the procedure set out in any specific written law established for the purposes of regulating the manner in which an arrest can be made, and, primarily with regard to the instant case, the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979.

Before deciding whether there had been an illegal arrest, it is necessary to determine whether there had, in fact, been an arrest.

It is well established in our law by cases such as Namasivayam v. Gunawardena [1989] 1 Sri LR 394 and Piyasiri v. Fernando, ASP [1988] 1 Sri LR 173, that an arrest can take place even without physical confinement. In the instant case, this question does not trouble us as the Respondents themselves have not denied arresting the Petitioner. The position held by the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents was that they had arrested and detained the Petitioner according to the provisions of the law using minimum force. [Paras 5 and 6 of the Statement of Objections of 1st, 2nd, and 4th Respondents dated 6th December 2011].

The procedure with regard to arresting a person without a warrant is set out in Chapter IV B (Sections 32-43) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979. Section 32 therein states as follows:

(1) "Any peace officer may without an order from a Magistrate and without a warrant arrest any person -

(a) who in his presence commits any breach of the peace;

(b) who has been concerned in any cognizable offence or against whom a reasonable complaint has been made or credible information has been received or a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been so concerned;

(c) having in his possession without lawful excuse (the burden of proving which excuse shall He on such person) any implement of house-breaking;

(d) who has been proclaimed as an offender;

(e) in whose possession anything is found which may reasonably be suspected to be property stolen or fraudulently obtained and who may reasonably be suspected of having committed an offence with reference to such thing;

(f) who obstructs a peace officer while in the execution of his duty or who has escaped or attempts to escape from lawful custody;

(g) reasonably suspected of being a deserter from the Sri Lanka Army, Navy or Air Force;

(h) found taking precautions to conceal his presence under circumstances which afford reason to believe that he is taking such precautions with a view to committing a cognizable offence;

(i) who has been concerned in or against whom a reasonable complaint has been made or credible information has been received or a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been concerned in any act committed at any place out of Sri Lanka, which if committed in Sri Lanka would have been punishable as an offence and for which he is under any law for: the time being in force relating to extradition or to fugitive persons or otherwise liable to be apprehended or detained in custody in Sri Lanka."

The Respondents insisted that there had been a reasonable complaint made and reasonable suspicion against the Petitioner, placing reliance upon the letter dated 10th October 2010, written by the villagers to the office of Deputy Inspector General, but bearing the name of the 5th Respondent, Deshabandu Tennakoon as the recipient—who was, in fact, a Superintendent of Police at the time material, as per his own admission by his Affidavit dated 05th October 2023 at paragraphs 1 and 5.

As held in Walahahangunawewa Dhammarathana Thero v. Sanjeewa Mahanama* SC FR 313/09, SC Minutes of 03.07.2013 at p. 89,

"In order to arrest a person under this subsection [subsection (1) of section 32] there should be a reasonable complaint, credible information or a reasonable suspicion. Mere fact of receiving a complaint or information does not permit a peace officer to arrest a person. Police Officer upon receipt of a complaint or information is required to commence investigations and ascertain whether the complaint is a reasonable complaint, the information is credible or the suspicion is reasonable before proceeding to arrest a person." (Emphasis added)

In Channa Pieris v. Attorney-General [1994] 1 Sri LR 1 at p. 46, His Lordship Amerasinghe J states as follows,

"A reasonable suspicion may be based either upon matters within the officer's knowledge or upon credible information furnished to him, or upon a combination of both sources. He may inform himself either by personal investigation or by adopting information supplied to him or by doing both, as the third respondent suggests he did in the matters before us, and as it was the case in Ragunathan v. Thuraisingham [SC Application 158/88 - SC Minutes of 23.08.89] A suspicion does not become "reasonable" merely because the source of the information is creditworthy. If he is activated by an unreliable informant, the officer making the arrest should, as a matter of prudence, act with greater circumspection than if the information had come from a creditworthy source. However, eventually the question is whether in the circumstances, including the reliability of the sources of information, the person making the arrest could, as a reasonable man, have suspected that the persons were concerned in or committing or had committed the offence in question"

It was held by Kulatunga J in Gamlath v. Neville Silva and Others [1991] 2 Sri LR 267 at p. 274, citing Muttusamy v. Kannangara 52 NLR 324 at 327 that,

"[A] suspicion is proved to be reasonable if the facts disclose that it was founded on matters within the police officer's own knowledge or on the state-ments made by other persons in a way which justify him giving them credit"

Having referred to some of the aforementioned authorities, Aluwihare J in Ganeshan Samson Roy v. M.M. Janaka Marasinghe and Others S.C (F/R) 405/2018, SC Minutes of 20.09.2023 at p. 11 opined as follows:

> "Police officers cannot mechanically make an arrest upon a mere complaint received, without forming the opinion that the allegation is credible. Thus, a police officer is required to make necessary investigations, unless the facts are obvious, to verify whether the complaint is credible or whether the information provided is reliable. An arrest upon a general or vague suspicion would lead to significantly abridging the personal liberties guaranteed to a person by the Constitution…"

However, if we were to stretch this logic irrationally, that could prove counterproductive and pernicious towards the legitimate goals of the criminal justice system. In this regard, Amerasinghe J in Channa Pieris v. Attorney-General [1994] 1 Sri LR 1 at p. 46 further explicated as follows:

> …the officer is not required to have reasonable grounds to believe. As Dias J. pointed out in Buhary v. Jayaratne [(1947) 48 NLR 224] "believe" is much stronger than "suspect" and involves the necessity of showing that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind of the fact in which he believed. (See per Seneviratne J. in Withanachchi v. Cyril Herath and others [SC 144-45/86 - SC Minutes 01.07.88]. However the officer making an arrest cannot act on a suspicion founded on mere conjecture or vague surmise. His information must give rise to a reasonable suspicion that the suspect was concerned in the commission of an offence for which he could have arrested a person without a warrant. The suspicion must not be of an uncertain and vague nature but of a positive and definite character providing reasonable ground for suspecting that the person arrested was concerned in the commission of an offence."

It is to be noted that the aforementioned letter dated 10th October 2010 addressed by name to the 5th Respondent marked 'Rx(1)' is an anonymous letter. It is signed by the "aggrieved villagers/neighbours". As such, the credibility of the information contained therein is most certainly questionable. The officers must in such instances be prudent to conduct an investigation so as to confirm such information before acting on the same. However, the Respondents have failed to produce sufficient evidence to satisfy this Court that they had conducted an appropriate investigation prior to instigating the arrest of the Petitioner.

It was most certainly reasonable for then Superintendent of Police, T.M.W.D. Tennakoon, to direct an investigation with regards to the complaint so received, as it is the duty of a police officer to duly respond to such complaints, even when they are anonymous. However, once such an order or direction is made by a senior police officer, as I shall discuss in detail later on, they are duty-bound to ensure that such directions are properly carried out, with due regard to the procedure established by law.

It appears in the instant case that the Respondents have failed to sufficiently investigate the anonymous complaint made. I do not wish to state, by any means, that police officers should refrain from acting on anonymous complaints, but rather that an officer must take some steps to confirm the legitimacy of such complaints. While wide powers are vested with police officers to carry out their investigations, when it comes to any act which may impinge upon the individual liberties of a person, officers must observe utmost caution. The officers in question could have, at the least, interviewed some persons living in the area and recorded their statements so as to verify the veracity of the allegations levelled against the Petitioner and several others by the anonymous letter and the unnamed informant. However, no evidence has been produced before this Court by the Respondents to establish that such actions have been taken. Therefore, in my view, it cannot be said that the Respondents have acted upon a reasonable complaint or upon reasonable suspicion as required by section 32 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979.

Informing the Reasons for Arrest

Apart from Article 13(1) itself, section 23(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979. Section 23(1) provides as follows:

> "In making an arrest the person making the same shall actually touch or confine the body of the person to be arrested unless there be a submission to the custody by word or action and shall inform the person to be arrested of the nature of the charge or allegation upon which he is arrested.

As Sharvananda J, as His Lordship was then, stated in Mariadas Raj v. Attorney-General FRD(2) 397 at pp. 402-404,

> "The law is solicitous for the freedom of the individual and has therefore enacted that the person who is arrested is entitled to know the reason for his arrest and has elevated this right into a fundamental right with the attendant sanctions for its breach… Article 13(1) embodies a rule which has always been regarded as vital and fundamental for safeguarding the personal liberty in all legal systems where the Rule of Law prevails… The purpose of this rule is to afford the earliest opportunity to the arrested person to remove any mistake, misapprehension or misunderstanding in the mind of the arresting official and disabuse his mind of the suspicion which actuated the arrest."

I unreservedly echo this astute observation of His Lordship. As apparent from the rationale so set out, the requirement of informing the reasons for one's arrest also marks a vital step in the investigation process. Even where an officer arrests the correct person, who is subsequently convicted by a court of law, if such person is not informed of the reason for his arrest at the time of arrest, that amounts to a violation of Article 13(1) of the Constitution, without prejudice to such conviction. Misidentifications are common enough that it is vital for law enforcement authorities to afford any person being arrested an opportunity to explain themselves.

In the instant case, as stated by the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents in their joint Statement of Objections dated 06th December 2011, the Petitioner and 3 others were arrested by the 2nd Respondent [para 6] while the Respondents were on police patrol, pursuant to the investigation which commenced under the order and instructions of the 5th Respondent [para 4].

As relayed by the Petitioner, the 1st and 2nd Respondents, while the three-wheeler was in motion, forced themselves into the same three-wheeler in which the Petitioner was travelling compelling the driver to take them to the cemetery, where the first acts of torture were recorded and was continuously questioned and compelled to admit to having committed or been associated with the several thefts in the area, particularly the theft of the house of the 4th Respondent. The law requires police officers to inform a person being arrested of the reason for the arrest with such precision so as to enable the arrestee to offer an explanation. There is no indication of such reasons being provided to the Petitioner as the three-wheel driver was compelled to drive towards the cemetery.

For the aforementioned reasons, the Court finds that there has been a violation of the Petitioner's fundamental rights as guaranteed under Article 13(1).

13(2): Subsequent Detention and Production Before Magistrate

To address the question as to whether the Petitioner has been produced before a Magistrate within the legally prescribed time period, it is vital to determine the exact time of arrest. The version of events submitted by the Petitioner and the Respondents greatly differed in this regard.

Irregularities as to the date of arrest

The Petitioner states in his Petition that he was taken to the Dambara Cemetery where the chain of torturous acts began, as narrated by the Petition dated 15th December 2010. However, all Respondents, particularly the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents by their Statement of Objections and Written Submissions and the 5th Respondent by his Affidavit dated 05th October 2023, strongly held the position that the arrest was in fact made on 17th December 2010. The only evidence presented by the Respondents to substantiate this position is the copies of the "හදිසි ඇමතුම් අංශයේ දෛනිකව පවත්වාගෙන යනු ලබන හදිසි ඇමතුම් තොරතුරු පොත" submitted as part and parcel of the Statement of Objections, marked 'Rx(2)'.

However, I wish to place on record that, having perused the said true copies of the purported 'Information Book' submitted by the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents marked 'Rx(2)', it is observable that the arrest of the Petitioner was, in fact, recorded to have been made on 18th December 2010, and not on 17th December 2010 as claimed in the Statement of Objections of the Respondents. This in itself is sufficient to construe that there are irregularities in the Respondent's narration of the facts and circumstances of the instant case, significantly weakening their position.

Per contra, the Petitioner relied on the affidavits of several other persons to substantiate his position, which provided this Court with a broader picture of what had transpired.

Accordingly, reproduced below [verbatim for accuracy] are several of the averments in the Affidavit of the Patrick Aarachchige Nimal Perera (hereinafter referred to as "Nimal Perera"), produced marked 'P12', annexed to the Counter Affidavit of the Petitioner, which concern the factual matrix of the instant case, along with an approximate translation of each averment. Nimal Perera was another who was subjected to torture along with the Petitioner during the period in question and was a party previously known to the Petitioner.

> "3. 2010. 12.15 වන දින රාත්‍රී 9.00-10.00 පමණ මගේ ජංගම දුරකථනයට රංජිත් සුමංගල යන අයගේ දුරකථනයෙන් ඇමතුමක් ලැබුණා. කතා කළ අය පවසා සිටියේ මට ටිකක් වැඩිවෙලා රබර් වත්තේ වැටිලා ඉන්නවා. පොඩ්ඩක් වරෙන් මාව ගෙදරට දාන්න යනුවෙනි. නමුත් ඒ කටහඬ රංජිත්ගේ නොවන බව මා හඳුනා ගත් බවත්, ඒ නිසා මම ත්‍රීවිල් පාර්ක් එකේ ඉන්න මගේ යාළුවන්ට කෝල් කරලා ඒ බව දැනුම් දුන් බවත් ප්‍රකාශකර සිටිමි.

I was asked to come and take him home. However, I noticed that the voice was not that of the said Ranjith, and therefore I called my friends at the three-wheel park informed them of this.]

[4. I state, thereafter what they said was that they were at the police station at that point, Ranjith and Chandana were missing, and have come to file a complaint about it. I was told to wait for a while and that they would come to the rubber estate to see who is there. After that, I went to the rubber estate with my friends of Three-wheel Park, and no one was there, and after that I went home and slept.]"

Upon Nimal Perera informing his friends at the three-wheel park, the same informed Nimal Perera that they were down at the Police station to file a complaint, as the said Ranjith and one Chandana were missing—Chandana being the driver of the three-wheel which the Petitioner had travelled in the same morning. The friends at the three-wheel park informed Nimal Perera that they would come to Rubber Estate in a short while. When they had arrived at the Rubber estate, there was no one to be found. Nimal Perera had gone home afterwards.

Varusha Hannedige Suwinitha Kumari (hereinafter referred to as "Suwinitha Kumari"), the wife of the Petitioner, in her Affidavit dated 25th March 2011, produced marked 'P3', annexed to the Petition of the Petitioner, states as follows:

"3. 2010. 12. 15 වන දින මාගේ ස්වාමිපුරුෂයා වැඩට යන බව පවසා උදේ නිවසින් පිටව ගිය බව ප්‍රකාශකර සිටිමි.

Furthermore, Devanarayanage Rathna Deshapriya (hereinafter referred to as "Rathna Deshapriya"), the employer of the Petitioner, under whom the Petitioner was employed at the time material, in his Affidavit dated 04th March 2011, produced marked 'P1' annexed to the Petition of the Petitioner, states as follows:

"5. රංජිත් ටිංකරින් වැඩ පුරුදු වීමට මා සමග එක්වුයේ 2004 වසරේදී පමණය. එතැන් පටන්, ඔහු මා සමග එක්ව අඛණ්ඩව වැඩ කරන බවත් ප්‍රකාශ කර සිටිමි.

8. 2010. 12. 15 වන දින රාත්‍රියේ චන්දන යන අයගේ මල්ලී මට දුරකථනයෙන් කතා කර, රංජිත් හා ඔහුගේ සොහොයුරා පැමිණ ඇති බවත් නමුත් රෑ වනතුරු ගෙදර පැමිණ නැති බවත්, මංජුල එගොල්ලන්ව කොහේ හරි යැව්වද කියා මගෙන් විමසා සිටි බවත් ඒ අවස්ථාවේ මා ඔහුට අද රංජිත් වැඩට ආවේ නැති බව ඔහුට කියූ බව ප්‍රකාශ කර සිටිමි.

At that point, I told him that Ranjith didn't come to work today.]

9. පසුව මා හා අනෙකුත් මිතුරන් රංජිත් හා චන්දන ගැන සෙවූ බවත්, පාදුක්ක පොලිසියටද ගොස් මොවුන් ගැන සොයා බැලූ බවත් නමුත් තොරතුරක් දැනගන්නට නොලැබුණු බවත් පසුව, මිරිහාන පොලිසිය විසින් රංජිත්වත් චන්දනවත් අත්අඩංගුවට ගෙන ඇති බව චන්දනගේ මල්ලිගෙන් දැනගන්නට ලැබුණු බවත් ප්‍රකාශකර සිටිමි

10. 2010.12.16 වන දින උදේ මා රංජිත්ගේ නිවසට පැමිණි බවත්, එදින උදේ 6.00 විතර රංජිත්ව ගෙදරට ගෙනවිත් නැවත පොලිසිය රැගෙන ගිය බව ඔහුගේ බිරිඳගෙන් දැනගන්නට ලැබුණු බව ප්‍රකාශකර සිටිමි.

[10. I state that on 16.12.2010, I visited Ranjith's house, and I got to know from his Wife that around 6.00 a.m. Ranjith was brought to the house and taken away again by the Police.]"

The Petitioner had also mentioned at his medical examination by the Judicial Medical Officer on 27th December 2010, that he was taken into custody on 15th December 2010, and was subjected to torture since then. The Judicial Medical Officer concludes in his report that the injuries are consistent with this history narrated by the Petitioner.

Therefore, having considered the totality of the above evidence presented by both Parties, the affidavits of the Petitioner which corroborate the fact that the Petitioner was taken in by the Police on 15th December 2010, and the irregularities in the ''"හඳිසි ඇමතුම් අංශයේ දෙනිකව පවත්වාගෙන යනු ලබන හදිසි ඇමතුම් තොරතුරු පොත"' excerpts submitted by the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents, it can be concluded that the Petitioner was, in fact, taken into custody by the Police on 15th December 2010, and was thus in police custody up until 22nd December 2010, on which date he was presented before the Avissawella Magistrate.

Code of Criminal Procedure, Act Nos. 15 of 2005 and 42 of 2007

In this regard, it is also necessary to duly appraise the position taken by the Respondents in defence.

Article 13(2) states that "[e]very Person held in custody, detained or otherwise deprived of personal liberty shall be brought before the judge of the nearest competent court according to procedure established by law and shall not be further held in custody, detained or deprived or personal liberty except upon and in terms of the order of such judge made in accordance with procedure established by law."

Sections 36, 37 and 38 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979 deal with the detention of persons arrested without a warrant.

Section 36 states that,

> "A peace officer making an arrest without warrant shall without unnecessary delay and subject to the provisions herein contained as to bail take or send the person arrested before a Magistrate having jurisdiction in the case."
>

Section 37 provides that,

> "Any peace officer shall not detain in custody or otherwise confine a person arrested without a warrant for a longer period than under all the circumstances of the case is reasonable, and such period shall not exceed twenty-four hours exclusive of the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the Magistrate."

The core issue of law which arises in the instant case is what was raised in the Written Submissions of the Attorney-General on behalf of the 5th, 6th and 7th Respondents, and by the 5th Respondent in his Affidavit tendered on 27th September 2023.

The position thus held by Respondents is that the act of arresting the Petitioner was done pursuant to the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 2005, particularly section 2 which provides as follows:

> "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979 other than the provisions of section 43(A) of that Act, any peace officer shall not detain in custody or otherwise confine a person arrested without a warrant for a longer period than under all the circumstances of the case is reasonable, and such period shall not exceed twenty - four hours exclusive of the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the Magistrate:

Provided that where the arrest is in relation to an offence as is specified in the Schedule to this Act, such period of detention in police custody may, on production before him of the person arrested and on a certificate filed by a police officer not below the rank of the Assistant Superintendent of Police submitted prior to the expiration of the said period of twenty - four hours, to the effect that it is necessary to detain such person for the purpose of further investigations, be extended upon an order made in that behalf by the Magistrate for a further period not exceeding twenty - four hours, so however that the aggregate period of detention shall not exceed forty-eight hours."

As mentioned previously, the Respondents state that the Petitioner was arrested in the course of a purported investigation into the thefts in the Moragahahena-Padukka area, and such investigations were under the order and instructions of the 5th Respondent, and accordingly, the Respondents contend that the Petitioner was taken into custody in compliance with the abovementioned provisions.

Before considering whether the above provisions have been complied with, I wish to place on record that the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 2005 which came into effect from 31st May 2005, by virtue of section 7 provides for the time frame within which the Act would be effective as follows.

"The provisions of this Act shall be in operation for a period of two years from the date of its coming into operation*."*

[Emphasis added]

Thus, the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 2005 remained valid only until 31st May 2007, unless further extended by any preceding written law or Gazette Extraordinary under the Order of the Minister of Justice. Accordingly, the duration was further extended by another two years by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, No. 42 of 2007 which came into effect on 09th October 2007, by virtue of section 7(1) read along with section 8 of the said Act, as provided below.

"7. (1) The provisions of this Act shall be in operation for a period of two years commencing from the thirty-first day of May, 2007.

8. Any act or thing done for which enabling provision is made under this Act, during the period commencing on the thirty-first day of May, 2007 and ending on the date of the coming into operation of this Act, shall be deemed to have been done validly."

Thus, the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, No. 42 of 2007 was to remain valid only until 31st May 2009, unless further extended by any preceding written law or Gazette Extraordinary under the Order of the then Minister of Justice. Thereafter, it was not renewed nor extended up until the events of the instant case transpired which was on 15th December 2010. During this period, there was no such Act in operation which would validate the acts done during 15th-22nd December.

The next extension was done by Gazette Extraordinary No. 1708/5 - 30th May 2011, which further extended the duration of application of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, No. 42 of 2007 to a further period of two years, commencing from 31st May 2011. Thereafter, the Code of Criminal Procedure (Special Provisions) Act, No. 02 of 2013 came into effect from 06th February 2013, which provided for an amended provision under section 2, as follows.

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979 other than the provisions of section 43 A of that Act, any peace officer shall not detain in custody or otherwise confine a person arrested without a warrant for a longer period than under all the circumstances of the case is reasonable and such period shall not exceed twenty-four hours exclusive of the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the presence of the Magistrate:

Provided that, where the arrest is in relation to an offence as is specified in the Schedule to this Act, such period of detention in police custody may, on production before him of the person arrested and on a certificate filed by a police officer not below the rank of the Assistant Superintendent of Police submitted prior to the expiration of the said period of twenty-four hours, to the effect that it is necessary to detain such person for the purpose of further investigations, be extended upon an Order made in that behalf by the Magistrate for a further period not exceeding twenty-four hours, so however that the aggregate period of detention shall not exceed forty-eight hours*:*

Provided further, that any person arrested and detained for a further period shall be afforded an opportunity to consult an Attorney-at-Law of his choice and to communicate with any relative or friend of his choice during the period of such detention."

However, the law as it stands today under the Code of Criminal Procedure (Special Provisions) Act No. 02 of 2013, section 8 provides as follows.

"8. Where during the period commencing on May 31, 2009 and ending on the date of the coming into operation of this Act, any power, duty or function was exercised, performed or discharged by any person to whom such power, duty or function was assigned by or under Criminal Procedure (Special Provisions) Act, No. 42 of 2007, such power, duty or function which was so exercised, performed or discharged, shall, notwithstanding that the provisions of the said Criminal Procedure (Special Provisions) Act, No. 42 of 2007 was not in operation during the that period, be deemed to have been validly exercised, performed or discharged, as if the said Act was in operation during such period:"

The effect of the above provision is to retrospectively give effect to any acts between 31st May 2009 to 6th February 2013, despite there not being any express written law to extend the time duration at the time in suit in the instant case. The 5th Respondent by his Affidavit tendered on 27th September 2023, relies on the aforementioned provisions to justify the detention of the Petitioner from 15th to 22nd December 2010, or, as was fabricated by the Respondents, from 17th to 22nd December 2010. This Court accepts that the Respondents have relied upon the correct legal provisions, but they have failed in its application in the instant case. Regardless of whichever date the arrest was made on, by virtue of section 2, no person can be detained in the custody of the police without being presented before the Magistrate for a time duration exceeding 24 hours.

In the instant case, the first time in which the Petitioner and the 3 others tortured and kept in custody were presented before the Acting Magistrate was on 19th December 2010 which was well over the 24-hour time limit. It was thereafter that a further extension was granted by the Acting Magistrate, to another 48 hours, during which period the Petitioner was not allowed to consult an Attorney, nor was he allowed to communicate with his wife and friends who had arrived at the Mirihana Police station but were denied access to him. This is a clear violation of the procedure set out above.

As such, it is palpably clear that the Petitioner has not been produced before the Magistrate as required by law. Therefore, I find that the Petitioner's fundamental rights under Article 13(2) of the Constitution have also been violated by the conduct of the Respondents.

Article 11: Torture, Inhuman and Degrading Treatment

Article 11 of the Constitution provides that,

> "No person shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment."

Article 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Article 7 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights similarly prohibit torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment in virtually identical terms.

Amerasinghe J, in W.M.K. De Silva V. Chairman, Ceylon Fertilizer Corporation (1989) 2 SLR 393 at p. 405, explains the ambit of Article 11 of the Constitution as follows:

> "In my view Article 11 of the Constitution prohibits any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental is, without lawful sanction in accordance with a procedure established by law, intentionally inflicted on a person (whom I shall refer to as 'the victim') by a public official acting in the discharge of his executive or administrative duties or under colour of office, for such purposes as obtaining from the victim or a third person a confession or information, such information being actually or supposedly required for official purposes, imposing a penalty upon the victim for an offence or breach of a rule he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidating or coercing the victim or a third person to do or refrain from doing something which the official concerned believes the victim or the third per son ought to do or refrain from doing, as the case may be."

This is in line with Article 1 of the United Nations Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment to which Sri L is a State Party since 1994. Accordingly, Article 1 provides for the definition of Torture as follows:

> "…torture means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, intimidating or coercing him or a third person, or any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions".

Atukorale J, in Amal Sudath Silva v. Kodituwakku Inspector of Police and Others* (1987) 2 SLR 119 at p. 126, observing the universality of this right, states,

"Article 11 of our Constitution mandates that no person shall be subjected to torture, or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. It prohibits every person from inflicting torture some, cruel or inhuman treatment on another. It is an absolute fundamental right subject to no restrictions or limitations whatsoever. Every person in this country, be he a criminal or not, is entitled to this right to the fullest content of its guarantee. Constitutional safeguards are generally directed against the State and its organs. The police force being an organ of the State is enjoined by the Constitution to secure and advance this right and not to deny, abridge or restrict the same in any manner and under any circumstances. Just as much as this right is enjoyed by every member of the police force, so is he prohibited from denying the same to others, irrespective of their standing, their beliefs or antecedents. It is therefore the duty of this court to protect and defend this right jealously to its, fullest measure with a view to ensuring that this right which is declared and intended to be fundamental is always kept fundamental and that the executive by its action does not reduce it to a mere illusion".

[emphasis added]

As has clearly been set out by His Lordship, this right is one which applies universally, without restrictions, to all persons, from saints to the most notorious. Article 11 encapsulates one of the most basic elements of human dignity, the principle which underpins all fundamental rights. As there can never be a justification for torture, this Court is only troubled with deciding whether the Petitioner has been subjected to such treatment which can be construed as torture, cruel, inhuman or degrading as contemplated in Article 11 by the Respondents.

In making these decisions, the evidence presented by the Petitioner must be considered in light of other corroborative evidence—primarily the medical reports assessing the physical and mental well-being of the Petitioner after the incident in question.

To summarize what has been provided in the factual matrix above, the Petitioner provides within the averments of the Petition dated 28th March 2011 a detailed description of the physical harm caused by the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents, primarily having hit him on several occasions with 'three-wheeler belts', handcuffed and tied to beams, suffocating him, beaten him physically, and having tied a bag of chilli powder over the Petitioner's head and compelling him to inhale it.

In his Medico-Legal Report of the Petitioner, Dr. Ajith Jayasena, Judicial Medical Officer, of the District General Hospital, Matale, makes note under Section 2.1 of the said Report of the Injuries identified having examined the Petitioner on 27th December 2010 which was a few days after the incident in question. Accordingly, the JMO makes note of several healing abrasions along the back of the Petitioner's neck and chest, and across his arms, and of several resolving contusions on the Petitioner's arm, back of his chest and abdomen. The report concludes that the injuries identified are consistent with the medical history as narrated by the Petitioner, and special attention was drawn to the injuries noted under section 2.1 No. 11 and 13 which are consistent with the Petitioner being suspended with a ligature at wrist joint. This medical report most certainly corroborates the averments as to the torturous acts committed against the Petitioner.

Furthermore, the said report concludes that the injuries identified in the medical examination are clearly consistent with the history given by the Petitioner. The Petitioner has further been diagnosed as suffering from Post Traumatic Stress Disorder with depressive features, having left ulnar claw with both ulnar and median nerve damage, suffering from injury to spinal nerves and has restricted movement of the neck and also the possibility of left-side mild ulnar nerve lesion without gross axonal degeneration and neuropraxia, all of which clearly indicate the gravity of the injuries suffered by the Petitioner at the hands of the said Respondents as complained of through this application.

Once again, I wish to place emphasis on the Affidavit of Nimal Perera, marked "P12", annexed to the Counter Affidavit of the Petitioner, which also establishes the torture endured by the Petitioner and other 3 detainees in the hands of the 1st, 2nd, 4th and 5th Respondents. Nimal Perera was taken in by the Police on 16th December 2010. The said affidavit states as follows:

[I do state that, from 19. 12. 2010 until the evening of 22. 12. 2010, we were detained at the Mirihana police station, and during the time we were detained, we were tortured by nearly 7 officers including Bandara, Dasanayake, Bhathia Jayasinghe, and Thennakoon]"

Furthermore, the Petition of the Petitioner states that he was taken back to his house at one point during his detention looking for the goods he was alleged to have stolen. At this point, he further states that he was beaten in front of his family mercilessly, so much so that it caused his eldest daughter to faint, out of sheer agony, unable to witness her father being treated in such a cruel manner.

The affidavit of Petitioner's wife, Suwinitha Kumari, produced marked 'P3' attached to the Petition of the Petitioner states, in this regard, as follows:

"7. ඒ අතර. මාගේ ස්වාමිපුරුෂයාද සිටි අතර, ඔහුගේ අත් පිටුපසට කර අත්වලට මාංචු දමා තිබුණි. අඳුනා ගන්න බැරි තරමට ඔහුගේ මුහුණ ඉදිමී තිබුණි. කෙළින් සිටගැනීමට නොහැකි තත්වයේ ඔහු සිටි බවත්, හරිහැටි සිහි කල්පනාව නොතිබුණු බවත් ප්‍රකාශ කර සිටිමි.

[14. I state that, as my husband was being dragged away, He was beaten again with the remaining piece of the broken doorpost. He was beaten and dragged. When I and the two children followed, we were chased away and told not to come, so we turned back and went home in fear.]

However high the threshold of proving torture may be, the Respondents in the instant case have unfortunately cleared it with much ease. The instant case is a glowing testimony as to the almost prophetic prudence of Sir Fitzjames Stephen in making admissions made to a police officer inadmissible when drawing the Indian Evidence Act—which we went on to adopt in our own Evidence Ordinance.

In view of the aforementioned, it is clear that the 1st, 2nd, 4th and 5th Respondents have all been directly associated with the torturing of the Petitioner. What the Petitioner has had to endure, without a shred of doubt, amounts to torture as contemplated under Article 11 of the Constitution. Furthermore, the narration of the incidents of torture by Nimal Perera as noted above is consistent with the narration as provided by the Petitioner. Thus, this Court concludes that the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th Respondents have violated the fundamental rights of the Petitioner as enshrined under Article 11 of the Constitution.

Violation of Article 12(1) of the Constitution

Article 12(1) of the Constitution provides that "[a]ll persons are equal before the law and are entitled to the equal protection of the law."

Article 12(1) of the Constitution serves as an umbrella provision which governs the fundamental right to equality, against class discrimination of persons, and to uphold equality in the application of law. Within Article 12(1) of the Constitution is enshrined the doctrine of Rule of Law, thereby affording equal protection before the law to all persons. Above all, Article 12(1) of the Constitution further embraces the all-important notion of human dignity, the golden thread running through the fabric of fundamental rights.

Article 12(1) of the Constitution stands an absolute bar against arbitrariness for it imposes a duty on all public officials regardless of their rank to uphold the law and only exercise the powers as have been vested upon them by law, thus establishing the supremacy of law above all other considerations. Public Officials—which most certainly includes police officers—cannot adopt a practice of selective application of laws, nor can there be arbitrary decisions, assuming the role of judge, jury and executioner.

In the instant case, the Respondents are of the position the arrests and detention were made under the direction and instructions of the 5th Respondents during an investigation regarding several thefts in the area acting on a complaint made by an unknown party to the 5th Respondent. In the Written Submissions of the Attorney General dated 26th September 2023 and the Affidavit of the 5th Respondent dated 05th October 2023, it was contended that the arrests and detention were lawful under section 2 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Special Provisions) Act No. 2 of 2013. The Respondents further contended the arrests to be in accordance with the procedures set out by law and that minimum force was used on the Petitioner during the arrests.

The question here is by no means the amount of force used at the time of effecting the arrest. As has been discussed above, the Petitioner was arrested and detained without a warrant and held and tortured in custody for more than 24 hours. There is an absolute and non-derogable prohibition against torture in all circumstances, even during times of armed conflict or states of emergency, for it is a sign of absolute lawlessness.

The arrestees, including the Petitioner, were only presented before the Magistrate to extend the period of custody for the purposes of the so-called investigations on 19th

December 2010, by which date 4 days had already passed. This, as established, is absolutely obnoxious to the 'special provisions' the Respondents themselves relied on.

Persons in detention, regardless of the charges or accusations against them, are entitled to the fullest protection of their human dignity and physical integrity. State institutions and those who serve the State are sternly reminded of their obligation to ensure that persons in detention are treated not only within the bounds of legality but with an uncompromising adherence to the principles of humanity. This stance is not only a legal mandate, but also a relentless moral imperative.

The manner in which the 1st, 2nd and 5th Respondents, being officers of the law, have conducted themselves, in concert with the 4th Respondent, is a stark betrayal of the Rule of Law. They have acted in a manner entirely repugnant to the virtues of a democratic republic.

In these circumstances, I have no qualm holding the treatment the Petitioner had undergone to be a gross violation of his fundamental rights recognised under Article 12(1) of the Constitution.

CONCLUSION OF THE COURT

Considering the inconsistencies in the Respondents' version of events and the fact that the Petitioner's version of events is corroborated by the Medical Report issued by the Judicial Medical Officer of the District General Hospital of Matale as well as the affidavits of those who were detained and tortured with him, this Court is left with no other option but to reject the position of the Respondents in toto and accept the Petitioner's version of events as true.

The Petitioner's fundamental rights under Articles 11, 12(1), 13(1) and 13(2) have been blatantly violated by the 1st, 2nd, 4th and 5th Respondents. The kind of conduct on display, judged even by the lowest of standards, amounts to a magnificent failure of all that the Rule of Law stands for.

This Court has time and time again made pronouncements setting out guiding principles as to how law enforcement officers must act. But all such attempts continue to fall on deaf ears. Violations of the kind we have observed in this case are, unfortunately, all too common. These are by no means isolated one-off events but are symptoms of longstanding institutional failures. When the Evidence Ordinance was first enacted in 1895, police officers were deemed too unreliable to make confessions made before them admissible. Lamentably, after well over a dozen decades, nought has changed.

In the words of Aluwihare J., as expressed in Mohammed Rashid Fathima Sharmila v. K.W.G. Nishantha SC. FR Application, No. 398/2008, SCM of 03rd February 2023, the matters are disturbing, to say the least. His Lordship further expressed concerns therein vis-à-vis the modus operandi of Sri Lanka Police:

> "…Sri Lanka Police established in 1806, has a history of over two centuries and one would expect it to develop into a body that comprises of professional law enforcement personnel. I am at a loss to understand, in the present day and time as to why such an established law enforcement entity is incapable of affording due protection to a citizen who is in their custody. Unfortunately, it is not rare to hear instances of suspects dying in the hands of the police. It only highlights the utterly unprofessional approach to duty by the personnel who man it and as a consequence, people are increasingly losing trust in the police. It had lost the credibility it ought to enjoy as a law enforcement agency. The incident relevant to this application had taken place in 2008, however, this court observes that instances of death of suspects in police custody are continuing to happen, even today. It appears that the hierarchy of the administration had paid scant attention to arrest this trend which does not augur well for the law enforcement and the rule of law."

Having expressed these worries, his Lordship directed the Inspector General of Police to formulate, issue and implement guidelines to the police elaborating as to how the standards may be improved.

Years prior to these observations, in Landage Ishara Anjali (Minor) v. Waruni Bogahawatte, SC (FR) Application No. 677/2012, SCM of 12.06.2019 Aluwihare J. has similarly raised concerns with regards to the growing number of incidents of abuse of power. There, too, the Inspector General of Police was directed to issue guidelines regarding the same. In addition to such direction, his Lordship has further postulated guiding principles to be included in any such guidelines to be issued.

Following the directions of His Lordship in Mohammed Rashid Fathima Sharmila v. K.W.G. Nishantha (supra), the Inspector General of Police has issued IGP Circular 2747/2023 dated 25th March 2023. While this circular has specifically referred to this case, I cannot help but notice that it has not sufficiently encompassed the guiding principles Aluwihare J. postulated in Landage Ishara Anjali (Minor) v. Waruni Bogahawatte (supra). In particular, the elements concerning human dignity, non-discrimination, proportionality and rights of children.

As such, we direct the National Police Commission and the relevant authorities to give due recognition to these principles in formulating any future guidelines. Moreover, we direct the National Police Commission to see to it that these guidelines—including Circular 2747/2023 and the principles I have noted it to have omitted—are properly implemented and are integrated into the training of police officers.

LIABILITY OF THE RESPONDENTS

The 3rd Respondent, Madiwaka Adikari Mudiyanselage Egodawele Wallauwe Senerath Adikari Egodawele, the Head Quarters Inspector, Mirihana Police Station, at the time material to this case, by his Affidavit dated 5th October 2011, averred that the conduct in question did not take place under his direct supervision. In view of the facts disclosed therein, the Counsel appearing for the Petitioner informed this Court on 11th

October 2017 that he does not intend to pursue any relief against the 3rd Respondent. Considering this, I make no pronouncements against the 3rd Respondent [Journal Entry dated 11.10.2017].

1st and 2nd Respondents

It is clear from the foregoing discussion that the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents have played a central role in the fundamental rights violations in the instant case. Upon perusal of the facts and circumstances of the instant case, it is apparent that most of the torture was in fact carried out by the 1st and 2nd Respondents, and it was they who had abducted the Petitioner on 15th December 2010 and took the Petitioner to the Cemetery.

The Petition of the Petitioner explains, in great detail, the role played by the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents in the violations in question. The Petition of the Petitioner very clearly claims the 1st and 2nd Respondents to have been instrumental in the arrest and the subsequent prolonged torture of the Petitioner.

Corroborating the same, the Affidavit of Chaminda Nishan, produced marked 'P10' attached to the Counter Affidavit of the Petitioner, specifically mentions officers Bandara (1st Respondent) and Bhathiya Jayasinghe (2nd Respondent) to have tortured the arrestees by various means.

Further corroborating, the Affidavit of Nimal Perera, produced marked 'P12' attached to the Counter Affidavit of the Petitioner, explicates how the officers Bandara and Bhathiya Jayasinghe tortured them in numerous despicably imaginative ways.

The Petition of the Petitioner also avers that he was tortured at his own home in front of his family, to such a grave extent that his elder daughter fainted at the sight of it. Affidavit of the Petitioner's wife dated 25th March 2011, produced marked 'P2' attached to the Petition, corroborates the acts of torture that took place at the Petitioner's home.

The 1st and 2nd Respondents themselves have not rejected their involvement in effecting the arrest, but rather argue the arrest to have been carried out according to the procedure established by law. All that they have produced in support are the documents marked 'Rx(1)', 'Rx(2)' and 'Rx(2)'. Said documents are titled "නුගේගොඩ හඳිසි ඇමතුම් අංශයේ දෙනිකව පවත්වාගෙන යනු ලබන හඳිසි ඇමතුම් තොරතුරු පොතෙන් උපුටා ගන්නා ලද සත්‍ය පිටපතකි." I am not able to provide a proper translation of the same as this purported "හඳිසි ඇමතුම් අංශයේ දෙනිකව පවත්වාගෙන යනු ලබන හඳිසි ඇමතුම් තොරතුරු පොත" is not an Information Book that is generally in use. Given the incongruities found between the aforementioned documents and the Respondents' own averments, this Court cannot attribute any probative value to the same. As such, the 1st and 2nd Respondents are no doubt liable for the violations of Articles 13(1) and 13(2) morefully dealt with earlier in the judgement.

In response to these clear and grave allegations set out in the aforementioned averments with regards to Articles 11 and 12, the 1st and 2nd Respondents, in their joint Objections with the 4th Respondent dated 06th December 2011 and their Written Submissions dated 19th November 2013, have merely offered a simple denial of the contents therein.

However, the Medico-Legal Report of the Petitioner issued by the Consultant Judicial Medical Officer of the District General Hospital, Matale strongly corroborates the version of events set out before this Court by the Petitioner. The history given by the Petitioner to the Judicial Medical Officer reflects what he has averred before this Court and the Judicial Medical Officer concludes and opines the history so given to be consistent with the 16 different injuries recorded in the Medico Legal Report.

The position of the 1st, 2nd [and the 4th Respondent, as the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents have filed joint Objections and Written Submissions] with regards to the Medico-Legal Report is to simply claim the injuries therein to be non-corroborative of the history recorded.

Such a simple and feeble denial cannot, by any means, displace an expert opinion. As such I have no qualm holding the 1st and 2nd Respondents liable for the violation of Petitioner's fundamental rights under Articles 11, 12(1), 13(1) and 13(2).

4th Respondent

With regards to the 4th Respondent, Petition of the Petitioner as well as the aforementioned Affidavits marked 'P2' [at para 6], 'P10' [at para 13] and 'P12' [at para 13] confirm the participation of the 4th Respondent in the conduct in question. In this regard, it is pertinent to note that the 4th Respondent is not a police officer, and moreover, he had not denied the contents of the aforementioned affidavits.

However, in the joint Written Submissions dated 06th December 2011, it was contended that his actions do not amount to executive and administrative action on account of the fact that he is not a public officer. At the very outset, I wish to note that this contention has no bearing on this Court's jurisdiction, as several other public officers are involved in the violations in question. Furthermore, as held in Faiz v. Attorney-General and Others [1995] 1 Sri L.R. 372, whether an act is executive and/or administrative is not conclusively dependent upon the colour of the actor's office. In appropriate cases, even the acts of a private individual may amount to executive and administrative action.

In Faiz v. Attorney-General (Supra) at p. 383, His Lordship Mark Fernando J held as follows:

> "Article 126, speaks of an infringement by executive of administrative action; it does not impose a further requirement this action must be by an executive officer. It follows at the act of a private individual would render him liable, if in the circumstances that act is "executive or administrative". The act of a private individual would be executive if such act is done with the authority of the executive such authority; transforms an otherwise purely private act into executive or administrative action; such authority may be express, or implied from prior or concurrent acts manifesting approval, instigation, connivance, acquiescence, participation and the like (including inaction in circumstances where there is a duty to act); and from subsequent acts which manifest ratification or adoption. While I use concepts and terminology of the law relating to agency, and vicarious liability in delict, in my view responsibility under Article 126 would extend to all situations in which the nexus between the individual and the executive makes it equitable to attribute such responsibility. The executive, and the executive officers from whom such authority flows would all be responsible for the infringement. Conversely, when an infringement by an executive officer, by executive or administrative action, is directly and effectively the consequence of the act of a private individual (whether by reason of instigation, connivance, participation or otherwise) such individual is also responsible for the executive or administrative action and the infringement caused thereby. In any event this Court would have power under Article 126(4) to make orders and directions against such an individual in order to afford relief to the victim."

The aforementioned was cited with approval by His Lordship Aluwihare J in Ganeshan Samson Roy v. M.M. Janaka Marasinghe and Others S.C (F/R) 405/2018, SC Minutes of 20.09.2023 at p. 21. The 6th Respondent of the Samson Roy Case was a private citizen, whose false complaint instigated an arbitrary arrest. The said 6th Respondent was directed to pay compensation to the Petitioner in view of his involvement in the violation of fundamental rights.

Hence, I do not see any jurisdictional impediment on account of the 4th Respondent's civilian status at the time material. As the 4th Respondent has interestingly opted to file joint Objections and Written Submissions with the 1st and 2nd Respondents, his contentions, too, suffer the same infirmities, which I have adverted to above. In view of this, I find the 4th Respondent liable for the violation of Petitioner's fundamental rights under Articles 11, 12(1), 13(1) and 13(2) for the same reasons as the 1st and 2nd Respondents.

5th Respondent

With regards to the 5th Respondent, it is clear from paragraphs 22, 23, 24 and 25 of the aforementioned Affidavit of Nimal Perera dated 08th June 2011, produced marked 'P12', he, then a Superintendent of Police, has paid a visit to the place where the Petitioner and several others were detained on 17th December 2010. The affidavit further states that the 5th Respondent himself beat the Petitioner with a 'three-wheel rubber band' after stripping him naked and ordering him to rub Siddhalepa on his genitalia. The 5th Respondent is specifically referred to therein by his name and rank, as it was then.

The Counter Affidavit of the Petitioner along with the aforementioned affidavits marked 'P10', 'P11' and 'P12', was filed before this Court on 02nd March 2012. Written Submissions of the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents was filed on 19th November 2013, almost 20 months later. Even at that point, nothing was filed on behalf of the 5th Respondent.

In the interest of justice, on 19th May 2020, the Court directed the Registrar to serve notices on the 3rd and 5th Respondents informing them of the next date of hearing. The notice sent to the 5th Respondent was not returned. Written submissions of the Attorney-General on behalf of the 5th and 6th Respondents was filed on 26th September 2023.

As can be seen, the Respondents of the instant case were afforded ample opportunities to plead their cases before this Court. Upon direction by the Court, the 5th Respondent, too, filed Affidavit dated 05th October 2023. The said Affidavit only related to the Code of Criminal Procedure (Special Provisions) Acts. The 5th Respondent, represented by the Attorney-General, has not at any point during the proceedings rejected or objected to the allegations against him hereinbefore set out.

Therefore, I find the 5th Respondent to have tortured the Petitioner in violation of his fundamental rights guaranteed under Article 11 of the Constitution. For this very reason, and by the very fact, I find the 5th Respondent to have further violated the Petitioner's rights under Article 12(1) of the Constitution.

It is also revealed by the Minute on the document marked 'Rx(1)', the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents' Statement of Objections and the excerpts from the "හදිසි ඇමතුම් අංශයේ දෛනිකව පවත්වාගෙන යනු ලබන හදිසි ඇමතුම් තොරතුරු පොත" annexed thereto marked 'Rx(2)' that the 5th Respondent himself ordered the investigation and that he has had intimate knowledge of the investigation.

With regards to the violation of Articles 13(1) and 13(2) of the Constitution, from the aforementioned facts, it is clear that the 5th Respondent had knowledge of the Petitioner's detention on account of his visit on 17th December 2010 for a brief session of torture. The 5th Respondent had received the anonymous complaint describing the involvement of the Petitioner and 3 others by name only 5 days before the arrest, and, when the 5th Respondent arrived at the torture chamber on 17th December 2010, he had inquired from another Police Officer "මොවුන් කවිද [who are they]", to which the other Police Officer replied "සර් මේ අර සාජන් මේජර්ගේ කේස් එකේ එවුන් [Sir, this is the parties involved in that Sargent Major's case]". Such a loose reference to a matter alludes to the fact that not only did the 5th Respondent have knowledge of the arrest of the Petitioner and the 3 others, but that he was kept updated on the events that transpired after the arrest on 15th December 2010. As such, it appears that the Petitioner was kept detained without producing before a Magistrate within the legally stipulated time frame with full knowledge of the 5th Respondent. Therefore, I hold the 5th Respondent, too, to have violated the fundamental rights of the Petitioner enshrined under Articles 13(1) and 13(2) of the Constitution.

While findings of fundamental rights violations are ample, the wrongdoers—especially the big fish in the pond—are seldom held duly accountable. Senior officers, under whose authority and direction their subordinates may act, have a special duty to ensure that they do not abuse such authority or go beyond such direction. Senior officers cannot merely give orders and thereafter sleep on this duty. They are to closely scrutinize the conduct of their subordinates. The stars that adorn their uniforms are not ornaments of power, but rather, reminders of the immense responsibility that comes with their authority.

Gross neglect of this duty would render them complicit in the actions of their unruly subordinates. The concept of commission by omission is well recognized in our constitutional jurisprudence by cases such as the Easter Sunday Cases,* SC/FR/163/2019, SC Minutes of 12th January 2023.

I am of the view that supervising officers are to be directly held liable for the conduct of their subordinates in appropriate instances, even in the absence of direct participation. Supervising officers can be held liable where there is affirmatory participation or participatory presence on the part of such supervising officers; or, where they have, directly or indirectly, implemented or enabled unconstitutional policies by turning a blind eye towards unconstitutional practices directly under their authority.

What is revealed to us in the instant case, apparent from what I have cited above from the affidavits, is a pattern of grave derelictions, which has persisted for a considerable period of time. Where such a pattern is observable, what other inference are we to draw than, either the wrongdoings have taken place with the blessings of the direct supervisors or that such supervisors have slept on the wheel? In either case, such supervisors are directly complicit in the actions so enabled.

From the circumstances established in the instant case, it is clear that the 5th Respondent has enabled, through his actions as well as inaction, the conduct of the 1st, 2nd and 4th Respondents, making him directly liable for the fundamental rights violations hereinbefore established. No material has been produced before this Court by the 5th Respondent so as to distance himself from such violations.

Therefore, I hold the 5th Respondent to have violated the fundamental rights of the Petitioner guaranteed under Articles 11, 12(1), 13(1) and 13(2) of the Constitution.

ORDERS OF THE COURT

Although relief is granted principally against the State in fundamental rights jurisdiction, in appropriate cases, cursus curiae with regards to awarding compensation has been to direct culpable officers to personally make amends. This appears to me a fit case to make such orders.

In cases of this nature, where the violations are grave, while the State must absolutely take responsibility, I do not see it sufficient to merely impose the liability on the State. I do not see it just and equitable to impose upon the taxpayer the burden of compensating for the transgressions of errant officials. Having borne the burden of their earnings over the years, must the taxpayer compensate for their misdeeds as well?

Furthermore, the amount of compensation awarded must sufficiently reflect the gravity of the offences as well as the audacity of the offenders. Especially where violations of Article 11 are to be found, it is necessary to award compensation in such amounts adequate to deter such degenerates.

Therefore, we direct the National Police Commission and other relevant authorities to take appropriate disciplinary action against the officers we have found to be responsible.

The Respondents are ordered to pay compensation to the Petitioner in the following manner:

1. The State is ordered to pay as compensation a sum of Rs. 100,000/- (Rupees Hundred Thousand) out of the funds allocated to the Police Department, given the institutional issues observed;
2. The 1st Respondent is ordered to pay as compensation a sum of Rs. 500,000/- (Rupees Five-Hundred Thousand);

3. The 2nd Respondent is ordered to pay as compensation a sum of Rs. 500,000/- (Rupees Five-Hundred Thousand); and
4. The 4th Respondent is ordered to pay as compensation a sum of Rs. 500,000/- (Rupees Five-Hundred Thousand).
5. The 5th Respondent is ordered to pay as compensation a sum of Rs. 500,000/- (Rupees Five-Hundred Thousand).

The 1st,2nd,4th and 5th Respondents are to pay the aforementioned sums, within six months from the date of judgement, out of their personal funds.

Application allowed.

A.L. Shiran Gooneratne J.

By Plaint dated 08/06/2009, the Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff) filed this Action No. DMR/1641/09 in the District Court of Kandy against the Defendant-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Defendant or Defendant company) and sought to recover a sum of Rs. 1,151,350/- together with interest based on a contract of insurance relating to Motor Vehicle No. CPGC 4672 against the said Defendant. The Defendant by Answer dated 27/08/2010, denied the said claim based on failure on the part of the Plaintiff to act in utmost good faith and sought a dismissal of the Plaintiffs action.

The said action was mentioned in the District Court on 28/01/2011 and was fixed for trial on 22/06/2011. Thereafter the respective parties filed list of witnesses and documents prior to the said date of trial, according to law.

When the said action was taken up for trial on 22/06/2011, the Defendant company was unrepresented and on default of appearance on the date fixed for trial, the Court made Order to proceed to hear the case ex-parte against the Defendant. The Court after hearing some evidence for the Plaintiff on the same day, put off the hearing for 29/11/2011. When the case was taken up on 29/11/2011, the Counsel representing the Defendant company gave no reasons for the default in appearance of a representative of the Defendant company or the Registered Attorney on the first date fixed for trial. However, a verbal application was made to vacate the said Order for ex-parte trial on payment of costs, and to permit the Defendant company to defend the said action. The Court refusing to grant the said application proceeded with the evidence already recorded. At the conclusion of the hearing, the learned District Judge by Order dated 05/11/2014 held with the Plaintiff and granted the reliefs as prayed for in the Plaint and an ex parte decree was entered accordingly.

Being aggrieved by the said Order, by Petition dated 02/04/2015, the Defendant made an application in terms of Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code seeking to vacate the said ex-parte Judgment and the decree entered in favor of the Plaintiff.

The instructing Attorney for the Defendant company, Chandani Wijayaratne filed affidavit dated 02/04/2015 and stated inter alia, that due to a bona fide mistake the date of trial was mistakenly taken down as 22/07/2011 as opposed to 22/06/2011. While asserting that the recording of a wrong date and the non-appearance on 22/06/2011 as a genuine mistake, she tendered to Court the following documents marked 'X1' to 'X6' which are now marked in this application as A9(i) to A9(vi), to vindicate her default. The documents marked are as follows -

A9(i) - Professional diary of Ms. Chandani Wijayarathna for the year 2011

A9(ii) - Entry of Case No. DMR/1641/09 on 22/07/2011

A9(iii) - A letter sent to the Petitioner, by Ms. Chandani Wijayarathna, informing the next trial date as 22/07/2011

A9(iv) - A letter sent to U.I Wijayathilake, Attorney-at-Law, by the Petitioner, to retain Mr. Wijayathilake's professional service as the Counsel and to appear on 22/07/2011

A9(v) - An internal memo from the Legal Department to the Manager of Kandy branch, to represent the Petitioner in Court on 22/07/2011

A9(vi) - Entries of 22/06/2011 in the Professional diary of Ms. Chandani Wijayarathna for the year 2011

Having considered the Petition, affidavits, oral evidence, and the written submissions tendered by the respective parties, the Additional District Judge by Order dated 21/08/2018, inter alia, held that -

a) when considering the available evidence, the Court is satisfied that the recording of the trial date as 22/07/2011 was a mistake on the part of the instructing Attorney;
b) with reference to satisfying Court with reasonable grounds in terms of Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code, held that the recording of a wrong date and the failure to examine the case record clearly amounts to an act of negligence on the part of the registered Attorney-at-Law;
c) the Defendant must not suffer due to an act of negligence on the part of the Defendants Attorney-at-Law; and permitted the Petitioners Application made under Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code to vacate the said ex-parte Judgment and decree, subject to payment of costs, and fixed the case for inter parte trial.

Being aggrieved by the said Order, the Plaintiff by Petition of Appeal dated 12/10/2018, appealed to the High Court of the Central Province exercising civil appellate jurisdiction holden in Kandy ("the Appellate Court"). The Appellate Court by Judgment dated 18/11/2020, set aside the said Order made by the Additional District Judge dated 21/08/2018 and reinstated the ex-parte Judgment and decree against the Defendant on the basis that the Defendant must suffer the consequences of an act of negligence of the Attorney-at-Law.

The Defendant company, by Petition dated 22/12/2020, is before this Court, to set aside the said Judgment dated 21/08/2018, delivered by the Appellate Court.

By Order dated 28/10/2021, this Court granted leave to appeal on the following question of law;

> "Did the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy err in law in failing to hold that the defendant had satisfied court that there are reasonable grounds for such default as provided for in section 86(2)"

The main position taken by the Plaintiff is that the learned District Judge having made a clear and express finding that there was negligence on the part of the Registered Attorney of the Defendant, erred in law by vacating the ex-parte Judgment dated 05/11/2014. In response the Defendant company takes up the position that the error made by the Registered Attorney was a case of mistake and not negligence and further states that the Attorney-at-Law had taken all steps required to be taken in the cause of action, in accordance with the Civil Procedure Code. It is further contended that the Attorney had reasonable grounds for non-appearance, which was established at the hearing and thus, the Defendant in the circumstances of this case, should not be deprived to proceed with the District Court trial.

In the above context it is important to consider the ratio in the case of Kathiresu vs. Sinniah (71 NLR 450), where H.N.G. Fernando J (as he then was), held that the absence of both the Proctor and the Petitioner on the given date, arising out of confusion of dates, was taken as a mistake and not due to the negligence of the parties. The Court came to the aforesaid conclusion primarily on the basis that the District Judge had accepted the affidavit and the evidence before Court as correct. The Court also observed that the District Judge "refused to set aside the decree nisi because he relied on certain decisions in which the failure of a party to appear was due to his own negligence." The Court cited with approval the case of Punchihamy vs. Rambukpotha (16 Times of Ceylon Law Reports page 19) where De Krester J held that;

> "The whole case indicates very gross carelessness on the part of the Defendant and it is most unfortunate that there should be now, in addition, a mistake on the part of the proctor. The mistake however is there and must be given effect to"

and noted that in Punchihamy vs. Rambukpotha (Supra) "the only reason for non-appearance was a mistake made by the parties' Proctor."

The Court allowed the Appeal and sent the case back to the District Court.

In the instant case too, the Additional District Judge accepted the affidavit and the documents marked 'X1' to 'X6' led in evidence as correct and held that the inadvertence on the part of the Attorney amounts to a mistake. However, having recognized that the burden is on the Plaintiff to prove that default was due to a genuine mistake, referred to Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code which requires the Defendant to satisfy court that the Defendant had reasonable grounds for such default. The Court held that the default arising out of recording a wrong entry as the date of trial and not verifying the said date from the registry, amounts to an act of negligence on the part of the instructing Attorney.

Therefore, the facts and circumstances in the case of Kathiresu vs. Sinniah (Supra) is clearly distinguishable from that which is found in the instant case.

The Court also held that an act of negligence on the part of an instructing Attorney should not be at the peril of the party the Attorney represents.

When deciding that the Defendant company must not suffer due to a mistake of the Defendants Attorney-at-Law, the learned Additional District Judge referred to the Supreme Court decision in P.M. Premarathna vs. Sunil Pathirana, [(inadvertently stated as Sunil Premarathna in the Impugned Order dated 21/08/2018) SC Appeal 49/2012 (SC minutes dated 27/03/2015)] which held as follows;

> "the litigant who has come before court for relief should not be deprived of his right to seek relief due to a lapse on the part of the lawyers preparing and filing the papers"

In P.M. Premarathna vs. Sunil Pathirana (Supra), the Court came to the above conclusion when it considered a lapse on the part of the Attorney where, the High Court dismissed the Appeal upholding the preliminary objections taken by the Plaintiff-Respondent on two grounds, namely,

- That all necessary parties who were before the District Court had not been named as parties to the Appeal, and
- That the notice of Appeal was invalid.

Accordingly, it is clear that the facts and circumstances in the case of P.M. Premarathna vs. Sunil Pathirana (Supra) can be differentiated from the facts of the instant case and that the learned Additional District Judge has erred in applying, the decision in the case of P.M. Premarathna vs. Sunil Pathirana, which is not applicable in this case.

In its Judgment dated 18/11/2020, the Appellate Court –

a) Upon a comparison of facts, referred to in the Judgment of Pakir Mohideen vs. Mohamadu Casim (4 NLR 299), with those in the instant case, applied the legal position –

   "If the Proctor did not do his duty, he is to blame for the absence of the defendant and the defendant must suffer for the fault of his Proctor".

b) Considered that at the inquiry there had been a specific finding by the learned Additional District Judge on negligence on the part of the Registered Attorney
c) The Appellate Court examined the rule laid down in Pakir Mohideen vs. Mohamadu Casim, and for the reasons mentioned therein held, that the said Order dated 21/08/2018 made by the learned Additional District Judge is erroneous and has to be set aside.

In Pakir Mohideen vs. Mohamadu Casim (Supra), Bonser C.J. made the said observation, where the Defendant had noted the trial date incorrectly when his proctor's clerk gave it to him, took no steps to get ready for trial and was absent at the trial. His proctor appeared and stated that he had no instructions and withdrew from the case. After ex parte proceedings decree nisi was entered against him. An application to set aside the Judgment on the ground that the Defendant had mistaken the date of trial was refused by the District Judge. The Supreme Court refused to revise that Order observing that the proctor had been forgetful or neglectful of the interests of his client in particular in failing to ask for instructions in the matter.

At the inquiry held to vacate the ex-parte Judgment, the Defendants position in brief was that, the default in appearance by the Registered Attorney on 22/06/2011 was due to a mistake in taking down the trial date as 22/07/2011. In her evidence in mitigation of her default in appearance before the learned Additional District Judge, the Registered Attorney produced documents in support of her position that all pre-trial steps akin to this action were taken with due diligence in the best interest of her client in the hope of defending the cause of action filed against the Defendant company.

Conformity with the law relating to pre-trial steps invariably flow from the date a case is first fixed for trial. No doubt it is the responsibility of the Registered Attorney to ensure compliance of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code to ensure that all pre-trial steps are taken with strict adherence to the laid down procedure.

As mentioned earlier, the instant action was taken up for ex parte trial on 22/06/2011 and further trial was resumed on 29/11/2011. On 29/11/2011, the Defendant company was represented by Counsel on instructions of the Registered Attorney. The Counsel submitted that the Registered Attorney is not before Court due to a professional commitment undertaken in the District Court of Nuwaraeliya. The Counsel further stated that he was instructed that this case was a partly heard trial and that he was not aware that the case was proceeding ex parte.

It is observed that the Registered Attorney failed to be present in Court or to provide the necessary instructions to the Counsel who appeared on 29/11/2011. At least by the 22/07/2011, the Registered Attorney should have known that the case was fixed for ex parte trial and accordingly instructed the Counsel of the next date of hearing. Not only did the Registered Attorney fail to inform the Counsel of the next step of the case but also failed to make a reasonable explanation for the default of non-appearance on the date first fixed for trial, at the first available opportunity. Further, the Registered Attorney in her evidence before the trial court failed to explain the reasons for not having instructed the Counsel who appeared for the Defendant company on 29/11/2011, that the case was fixed for ex parte trial or the default in non-appearance on 22/06/2011.

The Registered Attorney, in her affidavit and also in her evidence tendered before the trial court, repeatedly stated that she inadvertently recorded the date as 22/07/2022. The learned Additional District Judge was convinced that, there had been negligence on the part of the Registered Attorney due to her failure in not examining the case record to have the trial date confirmed. In response, the Defendant in the written submissions filed in the Appellate Court dated 10/10/2019, has taken up the position that it is not humanly possible to examine the case record by every Registered Attorney every time a date is appointed by Court ----, if that be a requirement to be followed, Registered Attorneys would be spending more time in record rooms perusing case records than in Court----.

In the Order dated 21/08/2018, the learned Additional District Judge specifically referred to the evidence given by the Plaintiff where he stated that, on the date the case was called to fix for trial ie, 28/01/2011, the Court had announced the trial date twice, once as 2011 June 22 and again as 06.22. This position was never challenged by the Defendant when the Plaintiff was cross examined. The position taken by the Registered Attorney is that the month June was heard as July and therefore had mistakenly reordered as July as perceived.

It is observed that the Registered Attorney took no remedial steps to file a motion or an affidavit to mitigate her default upon being aware that she had taken down the wrong date as the first date fixed for trial. In most part of her evidence in mitigation of default in non-appearance, the Registered Attorney tried to show that she has taken all necessary pre-trial steps required to be taken in keeping with the trial date as recorded by her ie, 22/07/2011, and that such process was duly conveyed to the Defendant company.

In U.W. JANDI vs. D.S. PINIDIYA and 16 others (1971) 74 NLR 433, (Divisional Bench) H.N.G. Fernando C.J. emphasized the importance of the rule set out in Pakir Mohideen vs. Mohamadu Casim[1 (1900) 4 N. L. R. 299.] and also cited in Scharenguivel vs. Orr [2 (1926) 28 N. L. R. 302.], that when there is negligence on the part of a proctor, in consequence of which some necessary step is not taken in an action, the client must suffer for his proctor's negligence, and opined thus;

> "The obvious ground for this ruling is that because a proctor is the recognized agent of his client, the fault of the agent has to be attributed to the client. The true justification for this principle does not however appear to be well understood by practitioners. It is that under the common law a client has a right of action against his proctor for damages which he may sustain as a result of the negligence of the proctor."

In the above case, where Weeramantry J. dissented, declared that;

> "It seems to admit of no argument that the date of any step in a case is the date given by the judge when the case is called before him at the roll. If a proctor proceeds on the assumption that the date which had been indicated to him in advance of the roll by an official of the court would be the date eventually accepted by the judge, and he neither attends the roll nor verifies the judge's confirmation of the date, he does so at his peril."

The Defendant company in their written submissions tendered to this Court has cited many cases which signifies the importance of giving a valid excuse for the default by the affected party in order to establish reasonable grounds and has emphasized the need to be reasonable as opposed to a rigid standard of proof as enunciated in David Appuhamy vs. Yassassi Thero (1987) 1SLR 235, Mallika vs. Karunaratne BALJ 2012 Vol. XIX Part II p.380, Sanicoch Group of Companies vs. Kala Traders (Pvt) Ltd BALJ 2016 Vol. XXII p. 44.

In the written submissions tendered to this Court, the Defendant placed much reliance in the case of Rohan Ajith Jude Silva vs. Y.B. Aleckman, [SC. Appeal No. 46/05 (SC minutes dated 18/11/2013)] to differentiate between a mistake and negligence of an Attorney-at-Law. In the above case the Supreme Court distinguished the precedent set out in Pakir Mohideen vs. Mohamadu Casim (Supra) ie. "The Plaintiff must suffer for his proctors negligence" and similarly followed in Packiyanathan vs. Singarajah (1991) 2 SLR 205, and Schareguivel vs. Orr 28 NLR 302, where it was held that, when a Judgment is entered against a party by default, it is not a sufficient excuse for his absence that his proctor had failed to inform him of the date of the trial, as opposed to the dicta in Kathiresu vs. Sinniah 71 NLR 450, where "the absence of both the proctor and the Petitioner on the given date, arising out of confusion of dates, was a mistake and not due to the negligence of the parties".

In Rohan Ajith Jude Silva vs. Y.B. Aleckman (Supra), this Court having examined the facts relating to the issue whether the error made by the Registered Attorney was due to negligence or a mistake and drawing a distinction between the two elements, the Court placed importance in Packiyanathan vs. Singarajha (Supra) where Kulatunga J. noted that;

> "it is necessary to make a distinction between a mistake or inadvertence of an Attorney -at-Law or party, and negligence. A mere mistake can generally be excused; but not negligence, especially continuing negligence. The decision will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case."

The Court also noted that these sentiments are similarly echoed in Wimalasiri and another vs. Premasiri [(2003) 3 SLR 330], Where, the Supreme Court refused to grant relief on the basis that their conduct was negligent stemming from the fact that measures had not been taken by neither the Attorney-at-Law nor the Appellant until the lapse of 9 months.

Upon a comparison of the facts and the rule referred to in the Judgment in the case of Pakir Mohideen vs. Mohamadu Casim, and the cases which followed the same precedent, Shiranee Tilakawardane, J. having differentiated the facts and circumstances of the case, did not dispel the application of the said dicta to the case but alluded to the importance of the Registered Attorney and the Petitioner taking all feasible Measures to remedy the delay upon discovery of it. And appreciated the effort made by them in rectifying the error, which qualified as one arising out of mistake as opposed to negligence.

In the instant case the Registered Attorney has failed to appear or to act in the required manner on the date fixed for trial. In the circumstances of this case this Court is called upon to decide as to whether such inadvertence/ mistake constitutes sufficient reasonable grounds to purge default. In Sanicoch Group of Companies vs. Kala Traders (Pvt) Ltd (Supra), the Supreme Court emphasized that when interpreting Section 86(2) the Court must use the yardstick of a subjective test rather than an objective test in determining what is reasonable. The Court also contemplated of a liberal approach in accessing the aspect of reasonableness as opposed to a rigid standard of proof.

Where an ex parte decree is entered against a party for default in failure to appear on the date fixed for trial, the burden is on the affected party to establish with reasonable grounds that such default was not due to negligence but due to a genuine mistake. If the Court is satisfied with the reasons offered, the ex parte Judgment and decree would be set aside and the defaulter would be permitted to proceed with the defence from the stage of default. If there is no sufficient evidence led before the trial court to determine the reasonableness of such failure to appear on the date fixed for trial, the ex parte decree will stand. Therefore, the burden is on the Attorney to prove the existence of reasonable grounds for the default in appearance when seeking relief. "Unless there is sufficient cause for the absence of the attorney who was entitled to appear, the matter should stand dismissed." Jinadasa vs. Sam Silva (1994) 1 SLR 232.

When deciding this case, it is important to examine whether the attended facts and circumstances of this case establish reasonable grounds considered to be valid in terms of Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

In a series of cases this Court has emphasized the importance of conformation of the next date to avoid any negligence on the part of the Attorney. It is the responsibility of an Attorney to be always vigilant of a pending case to take appropriate steps as warranted, on the given date, to ensure that no undue delay is caused to the detriment of his client or to the larger interest of administration of justice. Therefore, one cannot be complacent to record the next date as self-perceived and to take up a strong position that it is not humanly possible to examine the case record every time a date is appointed by Court. To say irrational, to the said stand at the outset, would be an understatement when a Registered Attorney is mandated to discharge professional duties promptly and with due diligence. If the Attorney is unable to be present at the office of the court in person to verify the next date fixed for trial, an application to obtain a copy of the previous day's proceedings, would certainly suffice for such purpose. "It is expected of a diligent counsel to verify the previous day's proceedings and if that was not done, such failure could not amount to a mistake." (The Attorney General vs. Herath and another [(2003) 2 SLR 162].

In a very recent Judgment delivered by this Court (Wimal Weerawansa vs. Ravindra Sandresh Karunanayake, [SC/Appeal No. 59A/2006, (SC minutes dated 29/07/2020)], E.A.G.R. Amarasekara, J. with Sisira de Abrew J. and Murdu N.B. Fernando, PC, J agreeing held;

> "Even if the court thinks that a genuine mistake can be considered to give relief to meet the ends of justice, what could have been avoided by due diligence cannot be considered as a mistake as it falls within the ambit of negligence. A lawyer being a human being, he/she may err in many aspects including what he heard as the next date of inquiry. The registered attorney who was in charge of the Defendant Petitioners brief must foresee such short comings that may take place. He is not a mere intermediatory between his client and the court to file documents and appear in court. He is a professional who can gain access to the case record through the registry and who can get the next date verified through the office of the court. ----

There was a time gap of more than two months in between. If the inquiry was fixed for the next day or the following day, one may say that there was no sufficient time to get the date verified. I do not think one can say that the registered attorney in the case at hand acted with due diligence, among others, with regard to the date fixed for the inquiry on the amended answer."

There is uncontroverted evidence that the date fixed for trial was announced by the officer of court twice in two different ways. It is also revealed in evidence that for nearly a period of 6 months, the Registered Attorney has failed to examine the case record to verify the next date of trial or to obtain a copy of the previous day's proceedings from the office of court. In her evidence before the learned Additional District Judge, it was admitted that the trial date was not verified by going through the journal entries. The Registered Attorney also admitted that she came to know that the first date fixed for trial was 22/06/2011 when she was in court on 22/07/2011. Thereupon, having known the correct trial date, she failed to take any meaningful action to rectify the error. The Counsel who appeared for the Defendant was unaware that the said action was fixed for ex parte trial or the reason for such default by the Registered Attorney, even on 29/11/2011, ie. after 10 months from the date first fixed for trial. Having being aware of the said default, no meaningful action was taken to rectify the error manifests the lack of due diligence and reasonable competence expected from a Registered Attorney in the discharge of his or her professional duties. When negligence is visible in the act of default, it can no longer be excused as a mistake. The conduct of the Attorney clearly resonates an act of negligence on her part.

For the aforesaid reasons, I hold that, the Registered Attorney has failed to show sufficient reasonable grounds to purge default envisaged in terms of Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Therefore, I answer the question of law on which leave to appeal was granted to the Defendant in the negative.

For these reasons, the Appeal of the Defendant is dismissed; the Judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed. No order for costs.

I agree

Judge of the Supreme Court

Samayawardhena, J.

I regret that I am unable to agree with the majority judgment.

In my view, at the inquiry into purging the default held under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code, the defendant's Attorney-at-Law and two officers of the defendant corporation gave sufficient evidence to establish that the Attorney-at-Law made a mistake in noting down the date of trial as 22.07.2011 whereas the actual date of trial was 22.06.2011.

The High Court in the impugned judgment states that the failure to correctly note down the date was a mistake on the part of the defendant's Attorney-at-Law and according to Pakir Mohidin v. Mohamadu Casim (1900) 4 NLR 299 the defendant must suffer for the fault of his Attorney-at-Law. The High Court also makes an oblique reference to negligence on the part of the Attorney-at-Law as found by the District Court.

I take the view that an application under section 86(2) need not be decided on the basis that the defendant must suffer for the fault of his Attorney-at-Law. In terms of section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code, if the defendant satisfies the Court that he had reasonable grounds for the default, the Court shall set aside the judgment.

The question of law on which leave was granted in my view should be answered in the affirmative and the appeal should be allowed.

Argued on: 8th October, 2021

Decided on: 10th November, 2023

Priyantha Jayawardena PC, J

This is an appeal to set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 30th of March, 2012 which dismissed the Revision Application filed by the appellants on the grounds that there was an inordinate delay in filing the Revision Application and the appellants have failed to explain the reason for the delay.

On the 22nd of April, 1974, the plaintiff-respondents-respondents (hereinafter referred to as the "respondents") instituted action in the District Court of Mount Lavinia to partition a land called Kongahawatta and Otudena Dawatagahawatta alias Gorakagahawatta, situated at Watarappola, Mount Lavinia, in extent of 7 Acres, 1 Rood and 12.53 Perches (A7: R1: P12.53).

Thereafter, the 7th and 8th defendants-petitioners-appellants (hereinafter referred to as the "appellants") filed their Statement of Claim on the 9th of March, 1993 and pleaded that they are entitled to 14254/211680 share of Lot No. 17 of the undivided land depicted in the Preliminary Plan of the case.

At the trial, the contest was between the appellants and the 49th, 66th to 69th and 79th respondents, in respect of the deed bearing No. 3494 dated 1st of December, 1958 which was produced marked as "50D1", as to whether the said deed created a constructive trust.

After the trial, the learned District Judge delivered his judgment on the 1st of October, 1990 holding that the said deed marked as "50D1" did not create a constructive trust and that the interlocutory decree was entered accordingly. Hence, the appellants were allocated 142959/211680 shares of the corpus, which is equivalent to 1/15 share of the corpus.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the District Court, the appellants appealed to the Court of Appeal against the same. Thereafter, the Court of Appeal, by judgment dated 20th of February, 1998 held that the only issue to be considered in the appeal is whether Deed of Transfer No. 3949 dated 1st of December, 1958 (50D1) was a nominal transfer by one Dharmadasa to his mother, Mary Perera, which gave rise to a trust in favour of Dharmadasa and, upon his death, in favour of his heirs. The Court of Appeal held that there were sufficient attended circumstances to come to the conclusion that there was a trust and set aside that part of the judgment of the learned District Judge dated 1st of October, 1990. Accordingly, it was further held that the allotment of shares in the main partition action should be amended when preparing the Interlocutory Decree. Subject to the above judgment, the District Court judgment dated 8th of March, 1990 was affirmed by the Court of Appeal.

Consequently, in compliance with the Court of Appeal judgment, the learned District Judge amended the Interlocutory Decree on the 21st of February, 2000.

The appellants stated that, when the surveyor visited the land to be partitioned, it was discovered that the shares allotted to them were much less than what they expected to be given by the judgment.

Thus, the appellants made an application to the District Court on or around the 30th of May, 2002 under section 48(4) of the Partition Act No. 21 of 1977 as amended (hereinafter referred to as the "Partition Act") and/or section 189 of the Civil Procedure Code to amend and/or modify the said Interlocutory Decree.

In the aforesaid application to the District Court, the appellants stated that when the appellants checked the allocation of shares as per the amended Interlocutory Decree, it was discovered that they had been allotted only 588/70560 shares of the corpus, which is equivalent to about 1/120 shares of the corpus, whereas they should have been allotted a share equivalent to 1/15 of the corpus as shown in the plaint and for which evidence had been led at the trial.

Further, in the said application, it was stated that the appellants discovered that the shares that should have been devolved on them by Deeds marked as "7V1", "7V3", 7V4" and "7V6" [also marked as P6 to P9], that were produced in evidence at the trial without a contest and also by inheritance under the pedigree were not been taken into consideration in preparing the scheme of shares after the judgment of the Court of Appeal was delivered.

However, the 1st to 6th respondents and the 45th and 46th respondents objected to the said application of the appellants to amend and/or modify the said Interlocutory Decree.

After an inquiry, the learned District Judge by Order dated 28th of January, 2003 dismissed the application of the appellants.

Being aggrieved by the said Order of the learned District Judge dated 28th of January, 2003 the appellants filed a Revision Application in the Court of Appeal on the 27th of April, 2003 seeking, inter alia, to revise and/or set aside the said Order delivered by the District Court and to amend the Interlocutory Decree dated 21st of February, 2000.

After hearing the said Revisions Application, the Court of Appeal, by judgment dated 30th of March, 2012 dismissed the said Application of the appellants on the basis that there was an inordinate delay in filing the Revision Application.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Court of Appeal, the appellants sought leave to appeal from this court and prayed for:

"(a) Issue notice on the Plaintiff and the Respondents;

(b) Call for an examine the record of District Court of Mount Lavinia Case No; 849/P;
(c) Stay further proceedings in District Court of Mount Lavinia Case No; 849/P until final determination of this application;
(d) Set aside and/or revised the impugned judgment dated 30/03/2012 (marked "X13") in the Court of Appeal Case No: CA (Revision) 385/2003;
(e) Set aside the Order dated 28/01/2003 (marked "X10" above) and direct the learned District Judge to amend and/or modify the amended interlocutory Decree (marked X6) by allocating correct shares to the Petitioners; or
(f) In the alternative, set aside the Order dated 28/01/2003 (marked "X10" above) and the amended Interlocutory Decree (marked X6) entered in this case and amend the original Interlocutory Decree dated 01/10/1990 (marked "X4") by allocating correct shares to the Petitioners;
(g) Set aside the judgment and Interlocutory Decree dated 21/01/2000 (marked "X6" above) and the final decree that may be entered in the District Court of Mount Lavinia Case No; 849/P;
(h) Grant cost of this Application; and
(i) Grant Special Leave to Appeal
(j) Grant such other and further relief as to Your Lordships' Court shall seem fit."

[emphasis added]

Thereafter, this court granted leave to appeal on the following questions of law;

"(a) Is the said impugned judgment marked "X13" is ex facie wrong?

(b) Is the said impugned judgment marked "X13" is bad in law and against the oral evidence adduced in this case?

(c) Is the said impugned judgment marked "X13" is contrary to law and against the weight of documentary evidence adduced?

(d) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law by misdirecting themselves in failing to appreciate the fact that:

(i) the said Order of learned District Judge dated 28/01/2003 (marked "X10") is contrary to law and against the evidence adduced in that case;

(ii) the learned District Judge has failed to carry out the mandatory provisions of the Partition Act in examining the title of all parties and satisfy himself of the rights of all parties before court;

(iii) the learned District Judge has failed in his duty in acting solely on the computation of shares prepared by the Attorney-at-Law of the Plaintiff (Plaintiff-Respondents-Respondents herein);

(iv) the learned District Judge has failed to address his mind that as per his amended Interlocutory Decree subsequent Scheme of Partition (marked as "X14(a)" and "X14(b)" below), the Petitioners were the only party to this action to be deprived of their complete dwelling house where they have been peaceful and undisturbed possession for over 44 years, whilst they have established their entitlement for a bigger share of the corpus.

(v) the learned District Judge has wrongly interpreted the provisions of section 48(4) of the Partition Act and/or section 189 of the Civil Procedure Code and failed to amend and/or modify the amended Interlocutory Decree as contemplated in the said sections;

(vi) the learned District Judge has wrongfully and illegally held that the Petitioners were attempting to introduce new Deeds and claim shares in the land, whereas, in fact they have only drawn attention to the Deeds that have been already produced and marked in evidence, namely Deeds marked 7V1, 7V3, 7V4 and 7V6 (currently) marked "X7(a)", "X7(b)", "X7(C)" and "X7(d)" respectively) and the shares inherited under the Pedigree proved in evidence;

(vii) the learned District Judge has completely misunderstood and misconstrued the Petitioners' application to amend the amended Interlocutory Decree?

(e) Did the Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law in erroneously concluding that the finality that is given to an Interlocutory Decree and the final judgment of a partition action by the Partition Act cannot be disturbed by Court of Appeal by invoking the revisionary jurisdiction of that court?

(f) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law in failing to appreciate that the Petitioner have established fit and proper grounds to show their Lordships that the decision of learned District Judge was so erroneous that, with no doubt, shocks the conscience of the court which warrant the intervention of the Court of Appeal by invoking the revisionary jurisdiction?

(g) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law in failing to appreciate that the same court on the same subject matter has taken a very pragmatic and contrary view of the Petitioners' application invoking revisionary jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal by the Order of their Lordships dated 13/05/2003 when it was supported for a stay order at the outset (marked X12)?

(h) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law by misdirecting themselves in failing to appreciate that there was no ground for illiterate and unemployed 7th widow Petitioner and her 5 children to suspect that the learned District Judge would come to such an erroneous conclusion after proving in evidence of their entitlement in the corpus and also due mainly to their inability to determine the actual extent of land allotted in the original interlocutory decree actual extent of land allotted in the original interlocutory decree only representing by way of complicated mathematical calculations?

(i) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law in erroneously concluding that the Petitioners were guilty of being non-vigilant right throughout the case, when the Petitioners have in fact taken some timely action to challenge what in their understanding was wrong and in the given circumstances and that is much better than doing nothing at all?

(j) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law by misdirecting themselves in failing to appreciate that considering the circumstances prevailed in the present case there was total want of investigation of tile and that there is paramount duty cast on the court by the Partition Law itself to investigate title?

(k) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law by misdirecting themselves in failing to appreciate that the judgment entered for the partition of the land is clearly contrary to law as there has been a total failure by the court to investigate the title of each party?

(l) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law by misdirecting themselves in failing to appreciate that a grave miscarriage of justice had actually occurred and also failing to appreciate that there is a paramount duty imposed by the statute on the court to ensure that the rights of persons claiming title to the land are not placed in jeopardy by the decree sought from court?

(m) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law by misdirecting themselves in failing to appreciate that the evidence adduced and grounds set out before their Lordships' have in fact established extraordinary and exceptional circumstances which warrants the intervention of the Court of Appeal by way of revision notwithstanding the purportedly unexplained delay of 13 years, in seeking revisionary jurisdiction of their Lordships' Court?

(n) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law in erroneously concluding to dismiss the Petitioners' revision application simply on the ground of delay, without giving very extraordinary reasons to justify such dismissal, when it is well-established that the impugned Order of learned District Judge dated 28/01/2003 (marked "X10") and the amended Interlocutory Decree dated 21/02/2000 (marked "X6") are manifestly erroneous and failing to appreciate that it would be unjust to allow the mischief of the order and/or interlocutory decree to continue and reject such revision application simply on the ground of delay?"

During the hearing of the instant appeal, it appeared that most of the questions of law referred to above did not reflect the correct questions of law arising from the judgment of the Court of Appeal. Hence, with the consent of the parties, this court raised the following question of law and the parties agreed to have the hearing confined to the new question of law raised by this court.

> "Did the Court of Appeal err in law by coming to the conclusion that there is an inordinate delay in filing the Revision Application and the parties have not explained the reason for the delay in the Revision Application filed in the Court of Appeal?"

In the circumstances, the other questions of law will not be considered in this judgment.

Did the Court of Appeal err in law by coming to the conclusion that there is an inordinate delay in filing the Revision Application?

After hearing the first appeal preferred by the appellants the Court of Appeal delivered the judgment on the 20th of February, 1998 and held, inter alia;

> "We are satisfied that there were enough attended circumstances to come to the conclusion that the mother Mary Perera held the shares in question in trust for the son Dharmadasa and his heirs the 7th to 12th defendant-appellants abovementioned….. We make order that shares transferred by Dharmadasa to Mary Perera on Deed 50D1 should devolve on the 7th to 12th defendant-appellants and the allotment of shares in the main petition case should be adjusted and amended accordingly when preparing the Interlocutory Decree. Except for these changes the judgment dated 08.03.90 shall remain unaffected*."*

Thereafter, the learned District Judge amended the said Interlocutory Decree on the 21st of February, 2000 as directed by the Court of Appeal.

Subsequently, the appellants made an application to the District Court on the 30th of May, 2002 under section 43(4) of the Partition Act No. 21 of 1977 as amended and/or under section 189 of the Civil Procedure Code to amend and/or modify the said amended Interlocutory Decree, stating that the allocation of shares in the amended Interlocutory Decree is not in conformity with the deeds produced at the trial before the District Court.

After an inquiry, the learned District Judge by Order dated 28th of January, 2003 dismissed the application of the appellants on the grounds that the District Court does not have jurisdiction to amend the judgment of the Court of Appeal and that the reliefs pleaded by the 7th to 12th appellants cannot be granted either under section 189 of the Civil Procedure Code or under section 48(4) of the Partition Act, the said provisions can only be invoked under special circumstances.

Thereafter, the appellants filed a Revision Application in the Court of Appeal, seeking, inter alia, to revise and/or set aside the said Order of the District Court.

After hearing the appeal, the Court of Appeal, by judgment dated 30th of March, 2012 dismissed the said Revision Application of the appellants and held, inter alia:

> "In this instant application the Petitioner was a party to the partition action from early 70s until the judgment was delivered in March 1990 and thereafter he challenged the judgment and was an appellant until the judgment was finally delivered by the Court of Appeal in 1998. The appeal was not on the grounds urged in this Revision Application but in fact the purported error complained of in this Revision Application was in existence at the time the final appeal was preferred. In these circumstances this Court cannot entertain a revision application to revise an order that was made 13 years ago*, in view of this inordinate delay and, as the delay is not explained, this Court dismisses this application without costs."*

A careful consideration of the said judgment of the Court of Appeal shows that the appellants sought to revise the original judgment delivered by the District Court on the 1st of October, 1990 and the application to revise the same was made to the Court of Appeal on the 23rd of February, 2003. i.e., after the appeal was decided by the Court of Appeal on the 23rd of February, 2003.

Thus, it is necessary to consider the delay in filing the said Revision Application and the maintainability of the said Revision Application.

The jurisdiction to hear Revision Applications are set out in terms of Article 138 of the Constitution and section 753 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Article 138(1) of the Constitution states;

> "The Court of Appeal shall have and exercise subject to the provisions of the Constitution or of any law, an appellate jurisdiction for the correction of all errors in fact or in law which shall be committed by the High Court, in the exercise of its appellate or original jurisdiction or by any Court of First Instance, tribunal or other institution and sole and exclusive cognizance, by way of appeal, revision and restitutio in integrum, of all causes, suits, actions, prosecutions, matters and things of which such High Court, Court of First Instance, tribunal or other institution may have taken cognizance:

Provided that no judgement, decree or order of any court shall be reversed or varied on account of any error, defect or irregularity, which has not prejudiced the substantial rights of the parties or occasioned a failure of justice."

Further, section 753 of the Civil Procedure Code states;

"The Court of Appeal may call for and examine the record of any case, whether already tried or pending trial, in any court, for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the legality or propriety of any judgment or order passed therein, or as to the regularity of the proceedings of such court, and may upon revision of the case so brought before it pass any judgment or make any order which it might have made had the case been brought it in due course of appeal instead of by way of revision."

It is pertinent to note that though an appeal is a right conferred on the litigants a revisionary jurisdiction is a discretionary remedy and cannot be exercised as of right. Further, courts exercise revisionary jurisdiction only when the parties satisfy the courts that there is a real need to exercise the discretion of the court to entertain a Revision Application. Hence, the petitioners should aver sufficient reasons in the petition to justify when making an application to invoke the discretionary power of the court.

A similar view was expressed in Wijesinghe v Tharmaratnam Sri Skantha's Law Reports Vol. IV 47 at 49 where it was held;

"Revision is a discretionary remedy and will not be available unless the application discloses circumstances which 'shocks the conscience of the court'."

Further, in Dharmaratne and Another v Palm Paradise Cabanas Ltd. and Others (2003) 3 SLR 24 at 30 it was held;

"The practice of Court to insist on the existence of exceptional circumstances for the exercise of revisionary powers has taken deep root in our law and has got hardened into a rule which should not be lightly disturbed. The words used by the legislature do not indicate that it ever intended to interfere with this 'rule of practice'."

As stated above, the petitioner should plead the 'exceptional circumstances' which warrant court to exercise its discretion in deciding to entertain a Revision Application. Further, the 'exceptional circumstances' will vary from one application to another, and such circumstances are unique to each and every application. Moreover, if a petitioner avers 'exceptional circumstances' in the petition, the learned judge is required to consider such matters and satisfy himself that there are 'exceptional circumstances' that warrant the exercise of discretion to entertain the application of the petitioner. A similar view was expressed in Rustom v Hapangama (1978-79) 2 SLR 229 where it was held;

> "It must depend entirely on the facts and circumstances of each case and one can only notice the matters which courts have held to amount to exceptional circumstances in order to find out the essential nature of these circumstances."

However, if the court is not satisfied that the 'exceptional circumstances' that are pleaded in the petition do not warrant the invocation of the discretion of court due to the facts and circumstances of the case or due to the law applicable to the relevant Revision Application, the court shall not exercise such discretion in favour of the petitioners.

Further, if a right of appeal was available and the petitioner failed and/or neglected to use the said right, the petitioner should state in his petition the reason for failing to exercise the right of appeal. Furthermore, in order to invoke the discretionary power of court, the petitioner should disclose all relevant material facts and should not misrepresent or suppress material facts. Hence, a petitioner should come to court with clean hands (Uberrima Fides). Moreover, there should be no laches in making the application

Laches

As stated above, a Revision Application should be made within a reasonable time. Thus, delay in making an Application for Revision for an Order made by a lower court results in refusing the application. If there is a delay in making an Application for Revision, the petitioner should explain the reason for such delay in the petition filed in court. A similar view was expressed in Rajkumar and Another v Hatton National Bank (2007) 2 SLR 1 where it was held;

> "The power of revision vested in the Court of Appeal in discretionary. Vide Colombo Apothecaries Ltd. v Commissioner of Labour, Rasheed Ali v Mohamed Ali (supra), and Wijesinghe v Tharmarathnam. On a careful consideration of the above judicial decisions, I hold that revision being a discretionary remedy is not available to those who sleep over their rights. I further hold that it is not the function of the Court of Appeal, in the exercise of its revisionary jurisdiction, to relieve parties of the consequences of their own folly, negligence and laches."

Furthermore, a long and unexplained delay disentitles a petitioner to get any relief by way of revision. A similar view was expressed in the following cases.

In Gnanapandithan v Balanayagam 1998 (1) SLR 391, it was held;

"The question whether delay is fatal to an application in revision depends on the particular facts and circumstances of the case."

Further, in Carlo Perera v Lakshman Perera (1990) 2 SLR 302 it was held;

"The Defendant-Petitioners sought to explain the delay partly on the basis that they had to obtain a certified copy of the proceedings from the District Court. It is noted that the certified copy was obtained on 17.12.1984. This application was thereafter filed on 31.1.1985. Thus, it is seen that the application has been filed within a period of five months of the order that is challenged. It had been filed within six weeks of the certified copy being obtained. Counsel for the Defendant-Petitioners has not cited any precedent in which an application has been dismissed because it was filed within a period of five months of the impugned order. To my mind there has been no undue delay in filing this application. The Rules require that a certified copy of the proceedings be filed together with an application in revision. It is seen from the record that there has been some delay in obtaining the certified copy. The Defendant-Petitioners cannot be faulted for this matter. I accordingly see no merit in this ground of objection."

A careful consideration of the judgment of the Court of Appeal shows that the appellant was seeking to revise the Interlocutory Order of the District Court made on the 1st of October, 1990.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that the Court of Appeal had not erred in law by concluding that there had been an inordinate delay in filing the said Revision Application. It is pertinent to note that even in prayer (f) to the petition filed in this court, the appellant seeks to revise the Interlocutory Order made by the District Court on the 8th of March, 1990.

In any event, as correctly stated by the learned District Judge, it is not possible to vary or set aside the judgment delivered by the Court of Appeal on the 20th of February, 1998 the District Court or by a Revision Application filed in the Court of Appeal. In fact, the said Revision Application is a collateral attack on the previous judgment of the Court of Appeal delivered on the 20th of February, 1998. A similar view was expressed in Cadermanpulle v Ceylon Paper Sacks Ltd*. (2001) 3 SLR 112 at 117 where it was held:

> "When the reliefs claimed by the petitioner in this application are considered, it became apparent that the petitioner has claimed the same reliefs which he has claimed in his leave to appeal application. In other words, petitioner is trying to achieve in this application what he could not achieve in his leave to appeal application, in a devious manner, after the lapse of nearly two years from the original order delivered by the learned District Judge. This inordinate delay has not been explained away by the petitioner to the satisfaction of this court. Moreover, the petitioner has not disclosed exceptional circumstances why his application for revisionary relied should be entertained by this court after a lapse of nearly two years from the original District Court order."

Conclusion

In light of the above, the following question of law is answered as follows;

Did the Court of Appeal err in law by coming to the conclusion that there is an inordinate delay in filing the Revision Application and the parties have not explained the delay in the Revision Application filed in the Court of Appeal?

NO

In the circumstances, I affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 30th of March, 2012. The appeal is dismissed without costs.

Samayawardhena, J.

The plaintiff filed this action against the defendant in the District Court of Gampaha seeking a declaration of title to the land described in the schedules to the plaint and a permanent injunction preventing the defendants from constructing buildings on the land described in the third schedule to the plaint. The defendants are the owners of Lots 65 and 66 of plan 860 marked V1 and the plaintiff is the owner of land on the western boundary of the defendants' land – vide plan 279 at page 295 of the Brief. The dispute between the two parties ultimately boils down to a boundary dispute. The defendants filed answer seeking to demarcate the boundary between the two lands as per the plan 279 marked V3.

After trial, the District Court entered judgment for the defendants. On appeal, this was affirmed by the High Court. This Court granted leave to appeal against the judgment of the High Court on the question whether the High Court erred in affirming the judgment of the District Court where relief was granted in favour of the defendants as prayed for in the prayer to the answer by demarcating the boundary as per plan 279 whilst stating in the body of the judgment that the boundary should be demarcated as per plan 860.

Learned counsel for the plaintiff states before this Court that the plaintiff is willing to demarcate the boundary between the two lands according to plan 860 but not according to plan 279.

What is plan 279? Is it different from plan 860? Plan 279 was prepared on a commission issued by Court. This plan and the report were marked V3 and V3A through the surveyor who prepared this plan. He was called as a witness by the defendants. His evidence-in-chief was led on 26.01.2009 and he was not cross-examined on the same date but on 05.05.2009. It is significant to note that his cross-examination was confined to two pages and the plaintiff did not really challenge his evidence at all. According to his evidence (vide report V3A), plan 279 was prepared by the superimposition of plan 860 on the existing boundaries. In other words, plan 279 depicts both the existing boundaries (with darker markings) and the superimposed boundaries as shown in plan 860 (with lighter markings). I repeat that this evidence was not challenged in cross-examination. Therefore, the argument of learned counsel for the plaintiff that the plaintiff is prepared to demarcate the boundary according to plan 860 but not according to plan 279 as they are two different plans is unsustainable. Both plans address the same issue – the latter in clearer terms. According to the report, the survey had been carried out with the participation of both parties and the correct boundary had been shown on the ground and marked by the surveyor in front of both parties.

I see no reason to take a different position than that taken by the two Courts below. The question of law has to be answered against the plaintiff. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Argued on : 15/09/2020

E.A.G.R. Amarasekara J.

As per the amended petition dated 12.12.2011 filed on behalf of the 20(a), 31st to 33rd Defendant-Appellant-Appellants (hereinafter sometimes referred to as Defendant- Appellants), the first judgment dated 28/06/1995 delivered by the District Court of Kuliyapitiya was set aside by the Court of Appeal and the Court of Appeal directed to take steps and hold a trial de novo. The case proceeded to trial for the second time and, after trial the learned trial judge delivered his judgement on 09/05/2003 to partition the subject matter of the District Court action. Being aggrieved by the said judgement the 31st to 33rd Defendant Appellants lodged an appeal to the Court of Appeal which was subsequently transferred to the Civil Appellate High Court of Kurunegala. Aforesaid Petition of Appeal to the Court of Appeal has been tendered along with the Petition marked as P1. It must be noted at the beginning, the Petition of Appeal to the Court of Appeal dated 07.07.2003 tendered along with the Petition to this court marked as P1, has been referred to as the petition of Appeal of the 20(a) Defendant-Appellant appeared by his Attorney-at-Law Mr. Sunil Jayakody and it has been signed at the end by the Attorney-at-law of the 20(a) Defendant-Appellant but the prayer in the said petition is made by the 31st, 32nd and 33rd Defendant- Appellants. Relevant caption of the said petition to the Court of Appeal named only the 20(a) Defendant-Appellant as the Appellant. However, paragraph 13 of the original petition as well as of the amended petition to this court refers to a petition of appeal made by 31st to 33rd Defendant Appellants. Thus, in the first instance I wonder whether there was a proper Petition of Appeal on behalf of the 20(a) Defendant-Appellant before the Civil Appellate High Court which contained a prayer for 20(a) Defendant Appellant. However, in the amended petition to this court at paragraph 21, the Appellants state that the Learned High Court Judges dismissed both the appeals upholding a preliminary objection, indicating that there was another appeal which was subject to the same preliminary objection. It may be the one filed by the 31st-33rd Defendant-Appellants which is found among other documents in the Civil Appellate High Court brief. The observations I have made above does not relate to the matter in issue, but I think it is worthwhile to record those observations as this matter is pending before our courts for more than half a century and delayed further after the de novo trial on this type of applications.

The said appeals before the Civil Appellate High Court were dismissed as stated above after considering the preliminary objections taken up by the substituted Plaintiff-Respondent on the premise that the Notice of Appeal of each appeal was out of time. Being dissatisfied with the said dismissal of the appeals, the Defendant Appellants filed a leave to appeal application dated 18.01.2011 before this court and thereafter tendered an amended petition dated 12.12.2011. This court granted leave on 27.11.2013 on the following questions of law.

"a) Did their Lordships err in law when they held that the Notices of Appeal submitted by 31st, 32nd and 33rd and 20(a) Appellant/Petitioners along with documents were only on 02/06/2003 which is totally erroneous as it is very clear that all the other documents clearly carry the seals and also the signature of the Registrar and also the receipts issued by the postal department as 26/05/2003?

b) Did their Lordships fail to consider that in terms of Section 75(4) [Sic] of the Civil Procedure Code, filing of the Notice of Appeal is the 1st step of lodging an appeal and without the Notice of Appeal, there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code to accept security bonds, cost of appeal and serving Notice of Appeal through courts?

c) Is the appellant entitled in law to contradict the record of the District Court in Appeal?"

The judgment, as said before, was delivered on 09/05/2003. Thus, as per the provisions of section 754(4) of the Civil Procedure Code Notice of Appeal had to be lodged on or before the 30/05/2003 as it has to be tendered within 14 days from the judgment exclusive of the day judgment /order was pronounced, and of the day on which the notice was presented and Sundays and public holidays.

Journal entry dated 02.06.2003 in the District Court record indicates that the Appellants tendered their Notices of Appeal of their respective appeals along with the other accompanying documents and it does not mention that the said notices were tendered to court on a date prior to that date, i.e., 02.06.2003. However, it clearly mentions the dates of some of the accompanying documents tendered along with the said notices such as Security Deposit Receipts Nos. K/20 557722 and K/20 557723 both dated 26.05.03. The said Journal entry among other things further indicates that postal article receipts Nos. 7230 to 7235 and 7236 to 7241 as proof that notices were posted to the registered attorneys of other parties, security bonds, stamps, stamped envelopes and secretary's certificate pertaining to the appeal were also filed along with the said notices of appeal of respective appeals. The secretary's certificate mentioned there in the journal entry seems to be the Registrar's certificate that has to be sent by the Registrar when he sends the case record to the appellate court as per section 755(5) of the Civil Procedure Code after filling of the petition of appeal. As Registrar's Certificate is meant to be sent by the Registrar after filing of the Petition of Appeal, the reference to the secretary's certificate mentioned therein the journal entry must be a form prepared by the Appellant's Attorney at Law which was to be perfected by the Registrar before sending it as the Registrar's Certificate after filing of the Petition of Appeal. The said Registrar's certificate dated 07/07/2003 perfected and signed by the Registrar is found in the brief along with written submissions tendered to High Court marked P2 with Petition to this court. In the said submissions made to the High Court (P2) to challenge the correctness of the journal entry dated 02/06/2003, the Appellants had contended that the said certificate dated 07/07/2003 could not have been handed over on 02/06/2003. The said certificate has been signed by the Registrar of District Court on 07/07/2003 deleting the word 'මැයි' which is there to indicate the month of May. This shows that this form was prepared in May. As said before, when looking at the said deletion in the Registrar's certificate along with the journal entry dated 02.06.2003, it is clear that the form which was to be perfected by the Registrar as his certificate was prepared in May and tendered on 02.06.2003 along with the other accompanying documents and, now the Appellants are trying to give a different interpretation to the contents in the journal entry using the date on which the Registrar signed the said Registrar's certificate. Registrar has to sign and prepare the certificate only when he sends the brief to the Appellate court. Thus, the mere fact that the date of the Registrar's Certificate being 07/07/2003 does not establish that the certificate as a draft form that has to be perfected by the Registrar as his certificate was not tendered along with other documents on 02/06/2003 and the said minute dated 02.06.2003 was erroneous.

It appears that the Defendant-Appellants heavily rely on the dates that appear on the accompanying documents that were to be tendered along with the Notice of Appeal. The accompanying documents and the notice of appeal of each appeal evinced following facts;

a) The security bonds of the Defendant-Appellants have been signed on 26/05/2003 and the Registrar has placed his signature and written the date as 26/05/2003.

b) The receipts bearing numbers K/20 557722, K/20557723 issued by the District Court for the payment of cash as security which was annexed to the Notices of Appeal were dated 26/05/2003.

c) Notices of Appeal are dated as 26/05/2003

d) The postal article receipts and the other documentary evidence tendered in proof of posting Notices of Appeal of the Defendant-Appellants indicate that they were done on 26/05/2003.

Since the accompanying documents have to be tendered to court with the Notice of Appeal of the relevant Defendant-Appellant or Appellants, they have to be prepared, signed or posted, as the case may be, prior to the tendering of Notice of Appeal of the relevant party or parties. Therefore, dates on those documents may be the dates that they were prepared, signed or posted and do not prove that the date of tendering the relevant Notice of Appeal is the same date or is a date other than the date the minute was made, namely 02/06/2003.

On the other hand, date stamp on the two Notices of Appeal of 20(a) Defendant-Appellant and 31st, 32nd and 33rd Defendant-Appellants clearly show that they were tendered to District Court only on 02/06/2003. Even the Registrar in his hand writing has made a note on those Notices of Appeal indicating that they were tendered to the District Court on 02/06/2003 at 10.am. Thus, the facts indicate that the Notices of Appeal were tendered only on 02.06.2003 even though, the accompanying documents and the Notices of Appeal bore the date of 26/05/2003. As said before, since those accompanying documents have to be prepared, signed and posted, as the case may be, prior to the tendering of relevant Notice of Appeal so that they could be tendered with the Notice of Appeal to the Court of first instance, the dates of the accompanying documents could not be used to challenge the correctness of the Journal Entry dated 02/06/2003. Even the Notice of Appeal could bear a different date than the date it was tendered as it has to be prepared before tendering it to Court. What is important is the date it was tendered to court. If the date of the journal entry and the date stamp of the respective Notices of Appeal or Registrar's note on the Notice of Appeal were incorrect, the Appellants could have easily raised it in the original court, so that the learned District Judge could have held an inquiry and decided the correctness of the Journal Entry and the date stamps by questioning the Registrar, while perusing the motion register/book etc. The Judges hearing appeal have to be guided by the entries in the case record and cannot decide on extraneous facts, in the absence of sufficient material to contradict the entries in the record.

After making my observations relating to the facts revealed by the case record as above, now I would refer to the relevant legal provisions and the decided cases in this regard.

In terms of Section 754(4) of the Civil Procedure Code, Notice of Appeal shall be presented to the Court of first instance within a period of 14 days from the date when the decree or order appealed against was pronounced, exclusive of the day of that date itself and of the day when the petition is presented and of Sundays and public holidays. Further, if such conditions are not fulfilled the court shall refuse to receive the Notice of Appeal. It is common ground that the date of judgment is 9/5/2003. 11th, 18th and 25th of the said month were Sundays and 14th, 15th and 16th were public holidays. Since the day on which the petition is presented can be excluded, the Notice of Appeal should have been presented on or before the 30th of May. As mentioned before, the minute dated 02.06.2003 in the case record, the Registrar's hand written note on the Notices of Appeal and the date stamps on the relevant Notices of Appeal evinced that they were presented to the District Court only on 02.06.2003. The Appellants attempted to create a doubt as to the date of presentation of the Notices of Appeal by referring to the dates found on the accompanying documents. As said before they had to be prepared prior to the moment of tendering the relevant Notice of Appeal so that they could be tendered along with the relevant Notice of Appeal.

As argued by the Defendant-Appellants, if the Notices of Appeal were tendered on 26/5/2003, namely the date on which the accompanying documents were made or posted etc. and the minutes dated 02/06/2003 and /or the date stamp and/or Registrar's hand written notes on the Notices of Appeal were incorrect, as said before, it was the duty and responsibility of the Defendant-Appellants' and their lawyers to bring it to the notice of the relevant District Judge who had the opportunity of holding an inquiry in that regard to come to a correct finding on the facts alleged while giving an opportunity for the opposite parties to cross examine the witnesses and place other evidence. If such a step was taken by the Appellants before the District Judge to rectify any alleged error, the High Court Judges or this Court sitting in appeal gets the benefit of such inquiry in evaluating the stance taken by the parties. Mere self-serving statements made during an appeal would not be appropriate to be used to contradict what is recorded or found in the case record. Afterall, there is a presumption that all judicial and official acts have been regularly performed (See section 114 of the Evidence Ordinance).

a) In Shell Gas Company V All Ceylon Commercial and Industrial Workers Union [1998], 1 Sri LR, 118, the Court of Appeal held that it is not open to a petitioner to file a convenient and self-serving affidavit for the first time before the Court of Appeal and thereby seek to contradict a judicial or quasi- judicial record and that if a litigant wishes to contradict the record, he ought to file the necessary papers before the court or tribunal of first instance, initiate an inquiry before such authority, obtain an order from the deciding authority of first instance and thereafter raise the matter in appropriate proceedings before the Appeal Court so that the appellate court would be in a position on the material before it to make an appropriate adjudication with the benefit of the order of the deciding authority in the first instance. The decision in Jayaweera v Asst. Commissioner of Agrarian Services Ratnapura and another [1996] 2 Sri LR, 70, also expressed a similar view.

b) In King V. Jayawardena [1947] XLVIII NLR – 497 Dias J, in a criminal appeal, referring to decided cases pointed out that the record cannot be contradicted or impeached by affidavits and it would be improper to allow an affidavit to be filed on material point by a person who cannot be cross examined by the opposite parties.

c) In Vannakar V Urhumalebbe [1996] 2 Sri LR 73 CA states that if a party had taken such steps to file papers before the presiding officer of the Court of first instance, then an inquiry would be held by him and the self-serving statements and averments would be evaluated after cross-examination of the affirmant when he gives evidence at the inquiry. If such a procedure was adopted the court of appeal would have the benefit of the recorded evidence which has been subjected to cross-examination and the benefit of the findings of the judge of the court of first instance. When such a procedure is not adopted, the Court of Appeal could not take into consideration self-serving and convenient averments in the affidavit to contradict or vary the record.

At this point, I must reiterate the presumption that official and judicial acts have been regularly performed. Thus, this Court has to conclude that the Notices of Appeal were presented to the District Court only on 2/6/2003.

In Nachchiduwa V Manzoor (1995) 2SLR 273 the Court of Appeal held that the act of the Registered Attorney in tendering the Petition of Appeal to the Registrar and the act of the Registrar in placing the date stamp and his initials on the Petition of Appeal constitute the presentation of the Petition of Appeal.

No doubt the same principle applies to the presentation of Notice of Appeal. Thus, in my view, the date stamp and the note made by the Registrar on relevant Notices of Appeal are decisive and thus the Notices of Appeal were tendered to Court only on 02.06.2003 which was out of time.

Hence, we cannot find any reason to interfere with the impugned order dated 08.12.2010 by learned High Court Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court of Kurunegala. For the reasons given above, the questions of law (a) and (b) mentioned above are answered in the negative and the question of law (b) has been framed on a wrong premise since the case record confirms that the Notices of Appeal along with the accompanying documents were tendered only on 26.05.2003. Thus, question of law (b) also has to be answered in the negative.

This case seems to have been pending for more than a half a century in our courts. The partition action was filed in1961 and the de novo trial was ordered in Nineteen Nineties and concluded in 2003. Due to the lack of diligence in filing the Notices of Appeal within time by the Defendant Appellants, the learned High court Judges have dismissed the appeals of the Defendant-Appellants. The fault that caused the dismissal by the High Court was of the Defendant Appellants and their lawyers.

I do not see any merit in this appeal. Therefore, I dismiss this appeal while giving the entitlement to the Plaintiff-Respondents to claim taxed costs with an additional Rs. 200000/- as costs of this appeal.

Appeal Dismissed.

Judgement

Aluwihare, PC, J.

The instant Appeal is a result of protracted litigation culminating in a series of legal proceedings. The Plaintiff – Appellant – Petitioner – Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff) filed action No. 3711/Special in the District Court of Colombo against the original 1st Defendant – Respondent – Respondent – Respondent, the said Kuruwita Arachchige Mulin Perera (hereinafter the 1st Defendant) and against the 1st and 2nd Defendant – Respondent – Respondent – Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the 2nd and 3rd Defendants respectively) on 11.05.1993 and sought inter alia;

1) A declaration that deed No. 259 of 26th May 1992 is null and void/not a legally valid deed and/or a fraudulent deed

2) A declaration that the 1st Defendant does not have a legally valid title to the land depicted in the First Schedule to the Plaint

3) The transfer of the land depicted in the 2nd Schedule of the Plaint by the 1st Defendant to the 2nd Defendant was not valid

4) The mortgage of the land in the 2nd Schedule, by the 2nd Defendant to the 3rd Defendant bank is not legally valid

5) A declaration that the Plaintiff is the legal owner of the Corpus by virtue of deed No. 363 of 13th February 1988

The Plaintiff also made a complaint to the Colombo Fraud Investigation Bureau and parallel proceedings were initiated before the Magistrate Court, during the pendency of the action in the District Court against the original 1st Defendant and two other co-accused, who were the witnesses to the said deed. The charge was that the deed bearing No. 259 executed on 26.05.1992 was a forgery, which was allegedly executed in favour of the 1st Defendant by the Plaintiff Appellant. In the District Court and Magistrate Court (as the virtual complainant), the Plaintiff has contended that the 1st Defendant had fraudulently executed deed No. 259 and the Corpus described in the 1st Schedule to the Plaint in the District Court as a gift of transfer. Thereafter, the 1st Defendant transferred the land to the 2nd Defendant, who subsequently mortgaged the land to the 3rd Defendant Bank.

The Plaintiff concluded his case on 02.07.1997 at the District Court and the Learned Judge of the District Court by judgement dated 21.07.2000 dismissed the action of the Plaintiff. However, on 25.05.1999 the Magistrate Court entered a conviction against the 1st Defendant and the two other co-accused on the basis that deed No. 259 was fraudulently executed. This evidence was not available for the Learned Judge of the District Court. It is also pertinent that the 1st Defendant preferred an appeal to the Provincial High Court against the conviction of the Magistrate Court, but during the pendency of the appeal, the 1st Defendant passed away. The other two co-accused did not challenge the conviction entered by the Magistrate's Court.

The Plaintiff preferred an appeal from the judgement of the District Court to the Court of Appeal on 18.09.2000. Certain attempts to reach a settlement between the parties and the death of the parties delayed the matter for numerous years but on 18.03.2014 the Plaintiff informed Court that he intends to introduce fresh evidence, namely the conviction of the 1st Defendant in the Magistrate Court by way of an application under Section 773 of the Civil Procedure Code. Accordingly, by way of Petition and affidavit, the Plaintiff on 18th July 2014 made a formal application to have fresh evidence adduced. The Court of Appeal having considered the said application, by Order dated 13.02.2017 dismissed the application of the Plaintiff to adduce fresh evidence. Thereafter, the Plaintiff sought Special Leave to Appeal from this Court. This Court granted special leave on 11.01.2021 on the questions of law referred to in paragraphs 16(c) and (d) of the Petition of the Plaintiff dated 17.10.2017, which are as follows;

c) Did the Learned Judges of Court of Appeal has totally disregarded the fact that the conviction of the 2nd accused (2nd Defendant) and 3rd accused stands since there was no appeal?

d) Did the Learned Judges of Court of Appeal interpreted section 41 A1 of the Evidence Ordinance (Amended Act No. 33 of 1998) incorrectly?

It appears that due to inadvertence the formulation of the questions of law appears to be incorrect. There was no conviction against the 2nd Defendant nor was the 2nd Defendant a party before the Magistrate Court proceedings, the conviction was against the 1st Defendant and Bentara Mudumanthrige Ranjith (1st witness to deed No. 259) and Kankanamge Padmadasa (2nd witness to deed No. 259). Further, Section 41A (1) of the Evidence Ordinance, relates to relevancy of a conviction in an action for defamation, hence, the relevant section of the instant Appeal should be Section 41A (2). Also, the parties in their written submission had made no mention of Section 41A (1), therefore, for the purpose of this appeal, the questions of law reformulated to the extent necessary in order to address the issues raised in the appeal and they are as follows;

1) Did the Learned Judges of the Court of Appeal disregard the fact that the conviction of 2nd accused, and 3rd accused stands since there was no appeal?

2) Did the Learned Judge of the Court of Appeal interpret Section 41A (2) of the Evidence Ordinance (Amended Act No. 33 of 1998) incorrectly?

I wish to commence by addressing the second question of law as formulated above.

Question of Law 02: Did the Learned Judge of the Court of Appeal interpret Section 41A (2) of the Evidence Ordinance (Amended Act No. 33 of 1998) incorrectly?

Section 773 of the Civil Procedure Code enables the Court of Appeal to admit fresh evidence in appeal and provides as follows;

"Upon hearing the appeal, it shall be competent to the Court of Appeal to affirm, reverse, correct or modify any judgment, decree, or order, according to law, or to pass such judgment, decree or order therein between and as regards the parties, or to give such direction to the court below, or to order a new trial or a further hearing upon such terms as the Court of Appeal shall think fit, or, if need be, to receive and admit new evidence additional to, or supplementary of, the evidence already taken in the court of first instance, touching the matters at issue in any original cause, suit or action, as justice may require or to order a new or further trial on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence subsequent to the trial." [Emphasis added]

A similar power is granted by Article 139(2) of the Constitution to the Court of Appeal. These statutory and Constitutional Provisions permit the Court of Appeal to admit fresh evidence subsequent to a trial. However, to ensure the finality of litigation, the Courts are cautious in abducing fresh evidence. Another reason is stated by Lord Hodson in Ladd v Marshall [1954] 3 All ER 745 at p. 751, and he cited with approval the dicta of Lord Loreburn LC in Brown v Dean [1910] A.C 373 and held as follows;

"When a litigant has obtained a judgment in a court of justice, whether it be a county court or one of the High Courts, he is by law entitled not to be deprived of that judgment without very solid grounds"

On the other hand, however, if fresh evidence that is to be adduced would make a material difference to the case already decided, and the justice demands, in view of the court to permit fresh evidence, then adducing fresh evidence should be permitted to avoid a miscarriage of justice. The principles to be applied in adducing fresh evidence are namely those enunciated by Lord Denning in Ladd v Marshall [supra] at p. 748 where the court held that;

"The principles to be applied are the same as those always applied when fresh evidence is sought to be introduced. In order to justify the reception of fresh evidence or a new trial, three conditions must be fulfilled: first, it must be shown that the evidence could not have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trial: second, the evidence must be such that, if given, it would probably have an important influence on the result of the case, although it need not be decisive: third, the evidence must be such as is presumably to be believed, or in other words, it must be apparently credible, although it need not be incontrovertible."

These principles were adopted by the Court in Beatrice Dep v Lalani Meemaduwa [1997] 3 Sri L.R 379 and subsequently affirmed in a series of decisions. Therefore, in order to adduce fresh evidence, three conditions must be satisfied, which are as follows;

(1) It must be shown that the evidence could not have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trial.

(2) The evidence must be such that, if given, it would probably have an important influence on the result of the case, although it may not be decisive.

(3) The evidence must be such as is presumably to be believed or, in other words, it must be apparently credible, although it need not be incontrovertible.

Reasonable Diligence

The first criterion requires the Appellant to satisfy the Court that the evidence could not have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trial. Our system is one of adversarial, the litigant must present before the Court with the evidence to prove his or her case to satisfy the evidentiary burden embodied in the provisions of Chapter IX of the Evidence Ordinance as applicable. Fresh evidence will not be admitted merely because the result of the first trial was or may have been occasioned by the unsuccessful party's inattention, or due to an innocent mistake. The opposing party has no duty to atone for the litigant's mistakes, and the blame falls squarely on the shoulders of the errand litigant.

In the instant Appeal, however, it is apparent that the evidence was not available, as the Plaintiff concluded his case on 02.07.1997 and the convictions against the 1st Defendant, namely for forgery and the other two co-accused were entered on 25.05.1999, in the Magistrate Court. Therefore, I am of the opinion the first condition referred to above, is satisfied.

Influence of the Evidence

The Amendment to the Evidence Ordinance by Act No. 33 of 1998, made a conviction in a Criminal Court a relevant fact in a Civil Court. A conviction is admissible evidence in a civil suit where the fact that he (the person who is so convicted) has committed the acts constituting the offence is a fact in issue.

The 1st Defendant and the co-accused were convicted in the Magistrate Court [in case No. 59322/1 (marked F 1)] of the following charges;

a) Falsely representing a person unknown to the complaint as Hettiarachchige Dominic Marx Perera and endeavored to deceive one Gamini Harischandra Premasundra

Notary Public thereby committed the offence of cheating under Section 400 of the Penal Code

b) Making a false document which was dead No. 259 and thereby committed the offence forgery, punishable under Section 454 of the Penal Code

In my opinion, this evidence would have influenced the result of the case since the authenticity of deed No.259 is central to the Plaintiff's case. The Plaintiff sought a declaration in the District Court that deed No. 259 of 26.05.1992 was fraudulently executed by the 1st Defendant and she along with the two other co-accused were convicted in the Magistrate Court. I am further of the view that the offence for which the 1st Defendant was convicted, and the subject matter complained of by the Plaintiff in the District Court are the same, therefore, would have an important influence if not direct, on the outcome of the case.

Credibility of the Evidence

Needless to say, a judgement of a competent Court would be credible evidence. A competent Court would enter judgment after careful evaluation of the facts and relevant legal principles. Moreover, a criminal conviction, as in the instant Appeal, would carry a higher burden of proof and would be a credible item of evidence in a subsequent civil proceeding if the judgement is relevant.

In my view, the conjunctive criteria provided above are satisfied by the Plaintiff. The Court of Appeal, however, held that once the 1st Defendant passed away the Appeal was left in "limbo" and Section 41A (2) of the Evidence Ordinance has no application. the Court of Appeal held that;

"The provision makes it clear that only two categories of convictions become relevant. The phrase "being a judgment or order against which no appeal has been preferred within the appealable period, or which has been finally affirmed in appeal, shall be relevant" makes it crystal clear that for a conviction to become relevant, it must be

(a) a conviction that has not been appealed against (it must be an unappealed conviction) or

(b) a conviction that has been affirmed in appeal (it must be an affirmed conviction)"

The Court of Appeal held further that;

"What the Plaintiff-Appellant seeks to have admitted is a conviction that appealed against but not adjudicated upon or affirmed as a result of the demise of 1st Defendant. Had the eventuality of the death of the 1st Defendant not intervened, there would have been two possibilities. Either the conviction would have been affirmed or it would have been set aside. Such a conviction which was left in limbo cannot fall within either category (a) or (b) contemplated by Section 41A (2). When the 1st Defendant (who was the 1st accused in the MC prosecution) passed away, her conviction was neither unappealed nor can it be said to have been affirmed in appeal."

I do agree with the observation of his Lordship that Section 41A (2) contemplates two categories of convictions, but in my opinion, once the 1st Defendant passed away, the appeal was abated. The appeal cannot be left in a state of "limbo." The legal principles in this regard are aptly summarized in reference to several Indian authorities by Her Ladyship Chief Justice Dr. Shirani Bandaranayake in Gamarallage Karunawathie of Mahena, Warakapola v. Godayalage Piyasena of Boyagama, Ambanpitiya S.C. Appeal No.09A/2010 (S.C Minutes 05.12.2011). However, the judgement was declared per in curium in in Bulathsinhala Arachchige Indrani Mallika v. Bulathsinhala Arachchige Siriwardane of Dummalasooriya SC Appeal 160/2016 (SC minutes 02.12.2022) as the decision was made without considering the applicable provisions of the Partition Act. Although the ratio in Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra) may not be applicable to partition actions, I am of the view, however, that the decision in Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra) is sound law as far as the instant case is concerned. It was held in Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra) at p.8 as follows;

"Reference was made to the decision in State of Punjab v Nathu Ram (Supra) in Swaran Singh Puran Singh and another v Ramditta Badhwa (dead) and others (AIR 1969 Punjab & Haryana 216). In Swaran Singh (Supra), the decision in Nathu Ram (Supra) was clearly analyzed and the Court had laid down the following proposition on the basis of the decision given in Nathu Ram (Supra):

1. On the death of a respondent, an appeal abates only against the deceased, but not against the other surviving respondents;

2. in certain circumstances an appeal on its abatement against the deceased respondent cannot proceed even against the surviving respondents and in those cases the Appellate Court is bound to refuse to proceed further with the appeal and must, therefore dismiss it;

3. the question whether a Court can deal with such matters or not will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case, and no exhaustive statement can be made about those circumstances;

4. the abatement of an appeal means not only that the decree between the appellant and the deceased respondent has become final, but also as a necessary corollary that the Appellate Court cannot in any way modify that decree directly or indirectly."

In my opinion with the death of the 1st Defendant, the appeal in the Provincial High Court abated and once the appeal abated the conviction in the Magistrate Court against the 1st Defendant became final. Therefore, the conviction of the 1st Defendant falls under abovementioned first limb. A contrary interpretation would be quite illogical. For example, in similar parallel proceedings, a defendant may appeal against a conviction to the Provincial High Court and subsequently withdraw the appeal. When civil proceedings are brought against the defendant and an attempt is made to lead evidence concerning the conviction, the defendant may argue that the appeal was in "limbo", therefore, the conviction is not admissible. On this basis, I am of the opinion that the Court of Appeal erred in interpreting Section 41A (2) of the Evidence Ordinance.

Question of Law 01: Did the Learned Judges of the Court of Appeal disregard the fact that the conviction of 2nd accused and 3rd accused stands since there was no appeal?

As mentioned in Gamarallage Karunawathie of Mahena, Warakapola v. Godayalage Piyasena of Boyagama, Ambanpitiya [supra], on the death of a respondent, the appeal only abates against the deceased but not against the surviving respondents but, as the 1st and 2nd defendants in the Magistrate Court did not appeal against the conviction, the conviction remains final. However, it would not be necessary to consider this question of law in view of the opinion expressed by this Court in respect of the question of law No. 02.

Conclusion

In view of the conclusions arrived at by this court on the question of law No.1 on which Special Leave was granted, I answer the said question of law in the affirmative and accordingly the Order of the Court of Appeal dated 13th February 2017 is set aside. In the instant case the Plaintiff [Appellant] should be permitted to produce the evidence in relation to the conviction of the 1st Defendant for forgery before the Court of Appeal in terms of Section 773 of the Civil Procedure Code and the Court of Appeal is directed to consider the appeal (in case No.CA/713/2000/F) of the Plaintiff on its merits inclusive of the fresh evidence permitted by this court.

Appeal allowed.

This appeal arises from the judgment of the Provincial High Court of the Western Province (Exercising Original Civil Jurisdiction) Holden in Colombo ("High Court") dated 12.12.2006.

In or around December, 1997 and January, 1998, the Plaintiff-Appellants ("Appellants") sold and exported 225 metric tons of parboiled rice to the Defendant-Respondent ("Respondent"). It was sold and exported under two invoices bearing numbers SAC/MS/205/97-98 dated 27.12.1997 ("P2") for 100 metric tons of rice to the value of USD 27,500/- and SAC/MS/217/97-98 dated 02.01.1998 ("P4") for 125 metric tons of rice to the value of USD 34,375/-.

Excluding a part payment of USD 7000/-, made for the amount due under the invoice marked P2, no further payments were made by the Respondent to settle the amount owed under these transactions. Therefore, an amount of USD 54,875/- was due to the Appellants by the Respondent.

By fax dated 07.07.2000 ("P6"), the Appellants requested that the Respondent pay the outstanding balance. In response, by letter of 21st August, 2000 ("P7"), the Respondent informed the Appellants that arrangements are being made to settle the said sum of USD 54,875/- within one year. While the Appellants acknowledged the receipt of P7 by letter dated 23.08.2000 (“P8”) and thanked the Respondent, subsequently by letter dated 06.11.2000 (“P9”) they informed the Respondent that the payment of the said sum of USD 54,875/- must be made within one month’s time.

Since the Respondent failed to make any payment, the Appellants by letter of demand dated 08.01.2001 called upon the Respondent to make payment within fourteen days of receipt of the said letter. Subsequently, on or about 01.06.2001, the Appellants brought this action before the High Court against the Respondent seeking recovery of the said sum of USD 54,875/-.

After trial, the learned High Court Judge concluded that the Respondent owed the Appellant USD 54,875/- for rice sold and delivered. However, he dismissed the action on the basis that it was prescribed. He proceeded on the basis that the action is one for goods sold and delivered thus falling within the ambit of section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance. He rejected the position that P7 is an acknowledgement and concluded that, even if taken into account, the action must fail because it was not based on P7.

Aggrieved by the judgment, the Appellants have preferred this appeal. According to journal entry dated 02.12.2011, the learned counsel for both parties agreed that the written submissions maybe confined to the matters set out in paragraph 10 of the Petition of Appeal. The Respondent has, in his written submissions, sought to put forward the position that this is a suggestion made by the Court and seeks to rely on other grounds to oppose this appeal. The journal entry clearly indicates that the grounds on which the appeal is to be decided was agreed upon by both counsels. Therefore, I am not inclined to consider reasons other than paragraph 10 of the petition of appeal.

They are:

"10. The Plaintiff-Appellants plead that in the circumstances the following substantial questions of law arise for Your Lordship's determination:

(a) Does the letter dated 21.08.2000 marked P7 sent by the Defendant-Respondent to the Plaintiff-Appellants, amount to an acknowledgment of liability in writing to pay the sum claimed for in the prayer to the Plaint?

(b) If so, in any event, is the cause of action of the Plaintiff-Appellants set out in the Plaint, taken out from the limitation imposed in terms of Section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance?

(c) Thus, has the Learned Judge erred in holding that the cause of action of the Plaintiff-Appellants is prescribed in law?"

Is P7 an acknowledgment of liability?

The first point to be determined is whether the document marked P7 is an acknowledgment of liability in writing to pay the sum claimed for in the prayer to the plaint.

However, before addressing this issue, I consider it relevant to deal with a submission made both before the trial court and before us on behalf of the Respondent. It was argued that the Respondent did not draft the contents of the document marked P7, but merely signed a blank document at the Appellants' request.

The document marked P7 is addressed to S. Albert and Company, the partnership business run by the Appellants and it is written on a letter head of M/S Uthaya Enterprises, the sole proprietorship business owned and run by the Respondent. Most importantly, the letter is signed by the Respondent, which was accepted by the Respondent during his testimony.

Addressing this submission of the Respondent, the learned Judge of the High Court has held as follows:

> "තව ද, මෙම සාක්ෂිකරු සාක්ෂි දෙමින් ප්‍රකාශ කර ඇත්තේ, පැ. 7 වශයෙන් සළකුණු කර ඇති ලිපිය මගින් විත්තිකරු මෙම මුදල් පැමිණිලිකරුවන් වෙත ගෙවීමට ඇති බව පිළි ගෙන ඇති බවයි. එම ලිපියේ ඇති අත්සන විත්තිකරුගේ බව විත්තිකරු සාක්ෂි දෙමින් පිළි ගෙන ඇත. Furthermore, the Learned Judge of the High Court answered in the affirmative issue no. 9 raised on behalf of the Appellants which reads as follows:

> "9. Finally, by his letter dated 21/08/2000 has the defendant requested further one year to settle the said money?"

Hence there is no doubt that the learned High Court Judge considered the document marked P7 to be a genuine document signed by the Respondent voluntarily with full knowledge as to its contents.

The primary findings of fact by trial judges who hear and observe witnesses should not be mildly disturbed on appeal. Moreover, upon perusal of the brief, I find no reason to reject the findings of the learned Judge of the High Court as to the authenticity of the document marked P7. As such I will proceed on the basis that the Respondent is the author and signatory (signee) of the document marked P7.

The relevant parts of P7 read as follows:

"NON REALIZATION OF PARBOILED RICE EXPORT BILLS
UNDER INVOICE NO. SAC/MS/205/97-98- USD. 27,500/-
AND INVOICE NO. SAC/MS/217/97-98- USD. 34,375/-"

"WE ARE ALSO WISH TO STATE THAT OUR BUSINESS AT PRESENT ARE VERY SLOW, HOWEVER ARRANGEMENTS WILL BE MADE TO SETTLE THE BALANCE OUTSTANDING AMOUNT OF USD. 54,875/- WITHIN ONE YEARS TIME."

It is seen that the heading of P7 makes specific reference to the invoices marked P2 and P4. It is followed by an unequivocal statement that arrangements will be made to pay the outstanding balance within one year. The acknowledgement is in writing and refers to the exact amount that the Appellants are pursuing. Most significantly, it is signed by the Respondent. P7 is thus both an acknowledgement of the debt and an undertaking to pay it within one year. Accordingly, I have no hesitation in holding that the letter dated 21.08.2000 marked P7 sent by the Respondent to the Appellants, amounts to an acknowledgment of liability in writing to pay the sum claimed for in the prayer to the Plaint.

If so, in any event, is the cause of action of the Appellants set out in the Plaint, taken out from the limitation imposed in terms of Section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance?

The question is premised on the basis that the Prescription Ordinance No. 22 of 1871 as amended ("Prescription Ordinance") extinguishes the cause of actions covered in sections 5 to 10 therein and an acknowledgment of the debt takes the cause of action out of the limitation period. I will begin by reviewing the accuracy of this premise.

The doctrine of prescription works twofold. First, it can allow a person to acquire the property or servitudes of property belonging to another person by long and uninterrupted possession by adverse title to the other party. In a sense, this mode permits a person to acquire new rights while extinguishing the rights enjoyed by another party. This is acquisitive prescription which is given statutory recognition in section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. On the other hand, extinctive prescription is where obligations are extinguished after a specified period of time. In extinctive prescription no new rights are created unlike acquisitive prescription although one may argue that in theory there is in fact a right created in one party not to be sued on the extinguished obligation.

Extinctive prescription can operate in two ways. On the one hand, it can prevent an action from being brought on a debt while safeguarding the debt as a natural obligation. The South African Prescription Act 1943 is a case in point. On the other hand, it may extinguish the debt or obligation as the Prescription Act 1969 of South Africa. This distinction has far-reaching consequences. Where the obligation survives but the action is prescribed, the surviving obligation has other utilities such as the possibility to be the basis of set off or compensatio which is not possible where the obligation is extinguished.

The point to be considered is what form of extinctive prescription is contained in sections 5 to 10 of the Prescription Ordinance. Before examining this point, I would like to examine briefly the situation under Roman Dutch law, which is our common law.

Lee traces the introduction of extinctive prescription in Roman Law to an enactment of Theodosius II (A.D. 424) whereby actions, in the absence of any other provisions in law, were barred by the lapse of thirty and in some cases forty years. No substantive rights were extinguished [Lee, The Elements of Roman Law, Sweet & Maxwell Limited, London, 4th Ed. (1956), page 125]. Grotious takes the view that in Roman Law, obligations are not extinguished by time and that a bar only is afforded against them, whilst Roman Dutch Law recognized both forms of extinctive prescription [See The Introduction to Dutch Jurisprudence of Hugo Grotious, Charles Herbert, John Van Voorst, Paternoster Row, London, 1844, page 469]. Voet is of the opinion that the effect of prescription is not ipso jure to destroy the obligation itself [Weeramantry, The Law of Contracts, Vol. II, p. 766].

However, in Terunnanse v. Menike (1 N.L.R. 200 at 202) it was held that the Prescription Ordinance and the previous Ordinance No. 8 of 1834, kept alive the repeal by Regulation No. 13 of 1822 of "all laws heretofore enacted or customs existing " with respect to the acquiring of rights and the barring of civil "actions by prescription," and that the consequence of that Regulation and those Ordinances was to sweep away all the Roman-Dutch Law relating to the acquisition of title in immovable property (including positive and negative servitudes) by prescription, except as regards the property of the Crown. Any doubt as to the applicability of extinctive prescription under Roman Dutch Law was cleared in Dabare v. Martelis Appu (5 N.L.R. 210 at 215) where it was held that the limitation of actions under the Common Law was completely abrogated, first by the Proclamation of 1801 and then by Ordinance No. 8 of 1834. The sweeping away of the whole of Roman Dutch Law on both acquisitive and extinctive prescription was confirmed by the Privy Council in Corea v. Appuhamy (15 N.L.R. 65 at 77) where it was held that the whole law of limitation is now contained in the Prescription Ordinance.

The question then arises whether there is any utility of decisions of English Courts in interpreting the Prescription Ordinance. In Emanis v. Sadappu (2 N.L.R. 261 at 269) Withers J. denied any such use and held that the Prescription Ordinance should be construed by its own language. Weeramantry (The Law of Contracts, Vol. II, page 777) appears to agree with this position in stating that resort should not be had to the principles of English law in construing the sections of the Prescription Ordinance. The only exception identified therein is where resort will be made to English law in those branches of our law governed by it, but that too merely to determine the time of accrual of the cause of action and no more. However, Weeramantry (supra. at p. 803) states that English decisions under Lord Tenterden's Act may be relied upon to aid in the interpretation of the Prescription Ordinance.

Moreover, Weeramantry (supra. page 800) takes the view that an acknowledgment or promise to pay a statute barred debt is valid and may be sued upon, whether the debt in question be one governed by English or Roman Dutch Law. In support of this proposition the decisions of Philips v. Philips [(1844) 3 Hare 281], Spencer v. Hemmerde [(1922) 2 A.C. 507 (HL)], Hoare & Co. v. Rajaratnam (34 N.L.R. 219 at 224) and Mohideen Saibo v.

Walters [(1887) 8 S.C.C. 99] are cited. This statement appears to be a validation of the proposition found in some decisions of English Courts that the theoretical basis of an acknowledgment of a statute barred debt is a fresh obligation and not merely as an extension of the limitation period and hence the action must be based on the acknowledgment and not the statute barred debt.

Accordingly, I must out of the greatest of respect to the great judge and jurist, examine closely the position in English Law on limitation in general and acknowledgment in particular and its impact on the debt.

This examination must first recognize that English statutory law recognizes both acquisitive prescription (sections 3 and 17 of the Limitation Act 1980) and extinctive prescription. The point to be considered is what form of extinctive prescription English Law adopted.

The Limitation Act, 1623 did not recognize that an acknowledgment of a debt stopped the running of time. As far as this Act was concerned, nothing would allow simple contractual debts to be recovered after six years.

The doctrine of acknowledgment was developed by judges to mitigate the rigors of the Act. Thus, where the debtor acknowledges the debt or made a part payment, it was held that in the interests of justice the debtor will no longer be able to invoke the Limitation Act, 1623. Yet opinion was divided on the theoretical basis of that doctrine. Some judges took the view that the acknowledgment must also imply a promise to pay the debt and arguably therefore the plaintiff must sue on the fresh promise and not the old debt [See Tanner v. Smart (6 B. & C. 603)]. This line of authority was given statutory recognition in Lord Tenterden's Act 1828 and Mercantile Law Amendment Act 1856.

The first English case cited by Weeramantry in support of the proposition that an acknowledgment of a debt barred by statute may be sued upon is Philips v. Philips (supra. at p. 299) where Wigram V.C. held as follows:

> "The legal effect of an acknowledgment of a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations is that of a promise to pay the old debt, and for this purpose the old debt is a consideration in law. In that sense, and for that purpose, the old debt may be said to be revived. It is revived as a consideration for a new promise. But the new promise, and not the old debt, is the measure of the creditor's rights."

This reasoning was adopted in Arunasalem v. Ramasamy (17 N.L.R. 156), Walker Sons & Co., Ltd. v. Kandyah (21 N.L.R. 317 at 319, 320) and Hoare & Co. v. Rajaratnam (supra). De Sampayo A.J. in Arunasalam v. Ramasamy (supra) adopting this reasoning held that a payment on account amounts to an acknowledgement of the debt which implies a promise to pay the balance and that the implied promise creates a new obligation.

However, Mosely S.P.J. in Udumanchy v. Meeralevve (43 N.L.R. 59) after considering Arunasalam v. Ramasamy (supra) held that the payment on account made in that case, cannot be regarded as creating a new cause of action but it merely extended the period of prescription. He adopted the reasoning of Lord Sumner in Spencer v. Hemmerde (supra), an authority on which Weeramantry bases his support for the proposal that acknowledgment of a debt creates a new obligation.

In Spencer v. Hemmerde (supra), Lord Sumner made an exhaustive examination of the legal position in England on prescription and acknowledgement, including Philips v. Philips (supra). He went on to hold (at 524-525):

> "I find that the great preponderance of the cases is against regarding the new promise as a new cause of action, and it seems to me that reason also is against it. Surely the real view is, that the promise, which is inferred from the acknowledgement and "continues" or "renews" or "establishes" the original promise laid in the declaration, is one which corresponds with and is not a variance from or in contradiction of that promise…If so, there is no question of any fresh cause of action"

Lord Sumner held (at page 533) that the implication of a promise, which is fixed as a test in Tanner v. Smart (supra) is rather the mode of determining the character of the acknowledgment than the basis in itself of the debtor's revived liability. He concludes (at p. 534) that the new promise revives the old debt, but does not create a new one; it revives it, however, not simpliciter, but subject to any conditions attached to the words, which operates the revival.

In fact, Farwell L.J. in Re Lacey [(1907) 1 Ch. 330 at 345] described acknowledgment as the withdrawal by virtue of the Statute of the abrogation of the remedy which leaves the old debt still recoverable at law. Lightwood in The Time Limit on Actions (Butterworth & Co., 1909, page 209) states:

> "The Limitation Act 1623, and the Civil Procedure Act, 1833, do not extinguish the debt, but only bar the remedy. Hence, though the debt cannot be recovered by action if the debtor pleads the statute, nevertheless it remains an existing debt (Wainford v. Barker (1697), 1 Ld. Raym. 232), and can be made available whenever the creditor has it in his power to set it up without resorting to an action."

In Busch v. Stevens [(1962) 1 All E.R. 412 at 415] Lawton J. held that the statement of Lord Sumner in Spencer v. Hemmerde (supra) was the correct view prior to the Limitation Act 1939. In fact, as far back as 1889, Cotton L.J. in Curwen v. Milburn [(1889) 42 Ch. D. 424 at 434] held that Statute-barred debts are due although payment of them cannot be enforced by action. More recently, in Royal Norwegian Government v. Constant & Constant and Calcutta Marine Engineering Company Ltd [(1960) 2 Lloyds List Law Rep 431 at 442] Lord Diplock held that in English law, subject to a few statutory exceptions, the expiry of the limitation period bars the claimant's remedy, but does not extinguish the claimant's right. He in fact referred to it as elementary law.

Accordingly, I am inclined to accept that, according to English Law, during the relevant period, the limitation period did not extinguish the debt, but only barred the right of action. Upon an acknowledgment of the debt been made by the debtor, to use the colourful words of Lawton J. in Busch v. Stevens (supra. at page 415), the right of action is given a notional birthday and, on that day, like the phoenix of fable, it rises again in renewed youth-and also like the phoenix, it is still itself.

I will now examine the provisions of the Prescription Ordinance to determine what form of extinctive prescription it recognizes.

Sections 5 to 10 of the Prescription Ordinance use the common phrase "no action shall be maintainable". This is a clear indication, in my view, that these sections are not intended to extinguish an obligation. On the contrary, it only prevents an action being maintained on an obligation after the lapse of a specified period. The issue is put beyond doubt by section 11 of the Prescription Ordinance which reads:

> "11. No claim in reconvention or by way of set-off shall be allowed or maintainable in respect of any claim or demand after the right to sue in respect thereof shall be barred by any of the provisions herein before contained."

The words right to sue in respect thereof in this regard indicates the intention of the legislature to preserve the obligation and bar only the remedy. The action is barred but the obligation survives. Accordingly, I hold that the legal effect of sections 5 to 10 of the Prescription Ordinance is only to bar action on the cause of action and not extinguishment of the cause of action itself.

This position has been adopted in Moorthipillai v. Sivakaminathapillai (14 N.L.R. 30 at page 32) where Hutchinson C.J. held:

> "When the time has expired within which an action to recover a debt is maintainable, and the debtor afterwards promises in writing to pay the debt or makes a payment on account of it, the effect of the promise in writing, or of the payment (from which a promise to pay the balance is inferred), is not to revive a dead claim, but to take the case out of the operation of the enactments which prescribe the time within which an action must be brought. That is sufficiently shown by the passage from Pothier quoted by the Commissioner in his first judgment. When the debt is prescribed it is not extinguished*; the bar must be opposed by the debtor; it is not supplied by the Judge; and it may be waived by a renunciation of it by the debtor; and an express promise to pay it (which is now required by the Ordinance to be in writing), or a part payment, is a renunciation of the benefit of the prescription. (Pothier on Obligations, p. 3, ch. 8, art. 1.)"* (Emphasis added)

Moreover, in Brampy Appuhamy v. Gunasekere (50 N.L.R. 253) it was held that the effect of sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the Prescription Ordinance, is merely to limit the time in which an action may be brought and not to extinguish the right. Thus, in Ravanna Mana Eyanna & Co. v. The Commissioner of Income Tax (46 N.L.R. 121) it was held that a debt, although prescribed, can be still regarded as due to the business within the meaning of section 10(1)(b) of the Excess Profits Duty Ordinance. Similarly, in Perera v. Don Manuel (21 N.L.R. 81) it was held that a Proctor's lien may be enforced even though an action might not be brought by reason of section 11 of the Prescription Ordinance.

Further support for this position, if needed, is found in section 46(2)(i) of the Civil Procedure Code which permits the Court to reject a plaint when it appears from the statement in the plaint that the action is barred by any positive rule of law.

Therefore, the question formulated by the Appellant is incorrect and the question we have to consider is if P7 is an acknowledgment of the debt, is the action of the Appellants set out in the Plaint, taken out from the limitation imposed in terms of Section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance.

The learned High Court Judge has correctly concluded that the action was brought in respect of goods sold and delivered which is governed by section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance. Hence the Appellant should have filed this action within one year from the date of the accrual of the cause of action. The learned judge of the High Court correctly concluded that the action should have been instituted no later than January 8, 1999, whereas the action was instituted on June 1, 2001.

However, the P7 acknowledgement is dated August 21, 2000 and the action was filed within one year from that date. Nevertheless, the learned counsel for the Respondent submitted that an acknowledgement of the debt to be effective in terms of section 12 of the Prescription Ordinance must be made before the expiry of the limitation period and not thereafter. Hence, he submitted that the acknowledgment in this matter should have been made on or before January 8, 1999 and not later and as it is not the case, the action is prescribed.

The learned counsel for the Respondent relied on the decisions in Sampath Bank PLC v. Kaluarachchi Sasitha Palitha [S.C. Appeal 196/2011, S.C.M. 09.09.2019] and People's Bank v. Lokuge International Garments Ltd. [(2010 B.L.R. 261) SC (CHC) Appeal 13/2001].

The position articulated by the learned Counsel for the Respondent appears to be the position in the English Limitation Act 1980, for it is provided in section 29(7) that subject to subsection (6), a current period of limitation may be repeatedly extended under this section by further acknowledgments or payments, but a right of action, once barred by this Act, shall not be revived by any subsequent acknowledgment or payment. However, this has no application in Sri Lanka.

In view of my finding that the Prescription Ordinance merely bars the remedy with lapse of time and does not extinguish the debt, there is no rational justification to insist that an acknowledgment must be made before the expiry of the limitation period to be effective. I hold that an acknowledgment of the debt to be effective for the purposes of section 12 of the Prescription Ordinance need not be made before the expiry of the period of limitation.

Before leaving this point, I must state that far from making any pronouncement in support of the contention of the Respondent, J.A.N. De Silva C.J. in People's Bank v. Lokuge International Garments Ltd. (supra) quoted with approval the statement of Weeramantry (The Law of Contracts, Vol. II, page 803) that an acknowledgment even after the full limitation period has run, will take the case out of the statute. That statement is based on Moorthipillai v. Sivakaminathapillai (supra).

Accordingly, I hold that an acknowledgment of the debt made in this matter by P7 is valid and effective to start time running again although it was made after the action on the debt was barred by the provisions of the Prescription Ordinance.

For the foregoing reasons, I hold that P7 is an acknowledgment of the debt, and the action of the Appellants set out in the plaint, is taken out from the limitation of time imposed in terms of Section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance.

Has the Learned Judge erred in holding that the cause of action of the Plaintiff-Appellants is prescribed in law?

The learned High Court Judge concluded that even if P7 is to be regarded as an acknowledgment, the action must to fail as the action was not based on P7. No reasons are given in the judgment as to why the Appellant should have based his action on P7. I can only surmise that this was on the basis that due to lapse of time the original debt was extinguished and the effect of P7 is to create a new obligation which then must form the basis of the action. In fact, the submissions of the learned counsel for the Respondent appear to be in that direction.

The Appellant has in the plaint pleaded both the two invoices, P2 and P4, forming the subject matter of the sale of goods transactions as well as the acknowledgment P7. It appears that P7 was pleaded in order to overcome the application of section 46(2)(i) of the Civil Procedure Code. A strict view of the rules of pleading may lead to the conclusion that the action is based on the invoices and not the acknowledgment as only the two invoices have been attached to the plaint.

Nevertheless, as morefully explained earlier, the lapse of time did not extinguish the original debt. There is no legal bar for the action to be founded on the old debt. The Appellants were correct in basing this action on the two invoices P2 and P4 and not on P7. No doubt P7 has to be pleaded to overcome the limitation period but it cannot certainly be the basis of a fresh cause of action. The legal effect of P7 is to take away the time bar to the action. Of course, if P7 only admitted part of the old debt, the Appellants can only maintain the action for that part and not the total debt. This is because P7 will then remove the bar on maintaining an action only for the amount acknowledged and no more.

For all the foregoing reasons, I set aside the judgment of the learned Judge of the High Court dated 12.12.2006 and enter judgment as prayed for in the plaint.

The answer to all the issues shall remain as in the judgment of the High Court, with the exception of issue no. 14 which is now answered in the affirmative and issue nos. 33 and 34 which are now answered in the negative.

The learned High Court Judge is directed to enter decree accordingly.

The Appellant is entitled to costs in both the High Court and this Court.

Jayantha Jayasuriya, PC, CJ

The Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "appellant") sought special leave to appeal from this court, aggrieved by the judgement of the Court of Appeal where he invoked the writ jurisdiction of that Court and prayed for Writs of Certiorari. The Court of Appeal by its judgment dated 30th July 2015, while refusing the relief prayed, dismissed the appellant's application.

This Court granted special leave to appeal on the following questions of law:

a) Did the Court of Appeal err in holding that the Appeal, against the sentence passed by the Court Martial under section 122 of the Navy Act, to His Excellency the President is an alternative remedy which ousted the writ jurisdiction of Court in respect of the subject matter of Petitioner's application before the said Court?

b) Did the Court of Appeal err in holding that there was no need for the Court Martial to have given reasons for its verdict on the sole basis that the Code of Criminal Procedure Act does not require the jury to give reasons for its verdict nor does the Navy Act require of Court Martial to give reasons for its findings?

c) Did the Court of Appeal err in its failure to consider whether judge advocate's directions did not justify the determination of the Court Martial?

d) Is the sentence imposed on the Petitioner violative of Section 104 of the Navy Act?

e) Can this Court grant the Petitioner any relief in view of Section 122 of the Navy Act read with Section 10 of the Navy Act as the Petitioner's decommissioning has been approved by His Excellency the President?

I have had the advantage of reading the draft judgment of Justice Yasantha Kodagoda PC and I agree with the views expressed by his Lordship on the question of law (a) referred to above and hold that that the Court of Appeal erred by holding that the appeal against the sentence passed by the Court Martial under section 122 of the Navy Act, to the President is an alternative remedy which ousted the writ jurisdiction of Court. However, in my view the decision of the Court of Appeal to refuse issuing writs of certiorari and mandamus should not be interfered with, due to my conclusions on the questions of law (b), (c) and (d) on which Special Leave to Appeal was granted by this Court, as more fully described herein below.

The appellant was a Commissioned Officer of the Sri Lanka Navy – a Captain – at the time material to the incidents relating to these proceedings. On 24th July 2008 the appellant who was serving as Commanding Officer at Port of Colombo had been issued with a transfer order requiring him to take up duties as Naval Officer in Charge of Mullikulam, Silavathura and Vankalai with effect from 03rd August 2008. However, this transfer order had been cancelled and by a subsequent transfer order, dated 21st August 2008, the appellant had been transferred to newly established naval deployments in Vankalai and Nanaddan, in Mannar, effective from 04th September 2008 as Contingent Commander. At this point of time, the administration and logistics support for these two naval deployments had been channelled through one of the closest commissioned bases, namely SLNS Gajaba, as the two newly established navy deployments to which the appellant was attached were not commissioned yet. With this appointment the appellant was placed under the Commander of North Central Naval Area. The abovementioned two newly established naval deployments were placed under the aforesaid Commander, for operational purposes in accordance with the administrative structure of the said area.

On 28th October 2008, around 10.30 pm army camp namely Thalladi army camp, adjacent to the two navy deployments that were under the command of the appellant was subjected to an air attack. At the time of this attack the appellant had been at the commissioned base SLNS Gajaba. At no point did the appellant return to the two navy deployments under his command namely Vankalai and Nanaddan between the commencement of the said attack on the army camp and the time at which the threat of any further attacks ceased.

Following these events, a Navy Board of Inquiry had been appointed and the said board of inquiry had recommended suitable disciplinary action against the appellant. Thereafter, a summary of evidence had been recorded and a Court Martial had been convened as provided for, under the Navy Act. The appellant who was represented by counsel before the Court Martial was found guilty of both charges framed against him, on 13th May 2009. After the findings of the Court Martial on the two charges were pronounced, the counsel for the appellant had pleaded in mitigation and the prosecution had made available the personal file of the appellant and other confidential reports to the Court Martial. Thereafter, the Court Martial had pronounced its sentence after an adjournment of thirty-five minutes. Sentences imposed on the appellant were severe reprimand for the first charge and dismissal without disgrace for the second charge. The appellant on the following day namely 14th May 2009 had made an application for revision of the sentence to the President, in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act. While the decision of the said appeal to the President was pending, the appellant invoked the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal on 25th June 2009. The appellant in the said application prayed for writs of certiorari to quash the report of the board of inquiry, the charge sheet, summary of evidence recommending a court martial and the findings and sentence of the Court Martial.

Two charges on which the appellant was found guilty and sentenced were; first, that the appellant, between the period 15th September 2008 and 10th November 2008 (other than on days that he was on leave or absent for health reasons) stayed away or left the place of deployment namely Vankalai and Nanaddan naval deployments at night without permission of a proper authority and thereby committed an offence under section 60(2) of the Navy Act as amended; second, that in the night of 28th October 2008, the appellant failed to return to his tactical area of command after receiving information on the air attack on Thalladi Army camp while being the Contingent Commander of the two navy deployments – Vankalai and Nanndan, and thereby committed an offence under section 104(1) of the Navy Act, as amended. Evidence of several witnesses had been presented before the Court Martial. On behalf of the prosecution the Area Commander of the North Central Command, the secretary to the area commander, Deputy Area Commander and the Commanding Officer of Vankalai had testified. On behalf of the appellant, the appellant himself, Commanding Officer of SLNS Gajaba, Contingent Commander Mannar, Commanding Officer Naval Deployment Silavathura and Logistics Officer, SLNS Gajaba had testified before the Court Martial.

The Court of Appeal having considered the material presented before it and the submissions of counsel for all the parties had dismissed the application of the appellant where he sought writs of certiorari to quash inter alia findings and sentence of the Court Martial. The Court of Appeal in dismissing the application had held that there is no legal duty on the Court Martial to give reasons for its verdict and that the appellant had sought an alternative remedy, namely that the appellant had submitted an appeal to the President in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act. Furthermore, in refusing to grant relief to the appellant, the Court of Appeal had observed that the appellant holds office at the pleasure of the President in terms of section 10 of the Navy Act and the President had refused the application made by the appellant in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act.

The learned President's Counsel for the appellant submitted that the Court of Appeal erred when it reached the aforementioned decision. One of the main contentions of the learned President's Counsel was that the Court of Appeal erred when it held that there is no legal duty on the Court Martial to give reasons for its verdict. I would first proceed to consider this issue.

'Duty to give reasons'

Question of law (b), on which this Court granted leave, was raised by the appellant in this regard. The learned President's Counsel strenuously argued that the developments that had taken place in relation to rules of natural justice and / or in relation to fairness in administrative and or judicial decision making process as recognised by our courts should be applicable in determining this issue. In this regard much reliance was placed by the learned President's Counsel on the following judgments of this court: Karunadasa v Unique Gem Stones Ltd; and Others [1997] 1 SLR 256, Jayaratne v Fernando & Others [2000] 3 SLR 69 and Bandara and another v

Premachandra [1994] 1 SLR 301. Our attention was also drawn to the Court of Appeal Judgment in Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara v Kolitha Gunathilaka Air Vice Marshal *et. al., CA Writ 333/2011, CA minutes of 01.06.2020.

In Karunadasa (supra) the subject matter for determination before the Supreme Court was a judgment of the Court of Appeal where a Writ of Certiorari was issued quashing a decision of the Commissioner of Labour made under the provisions of Termination of Employment of Workmen (Special Provisions) Act, No. 45 of 1971, as amended, on the basis that the Commissioner's failure to give reasons for his decision amounted to a violation of the rules of Natural Justice. The Supreme Court having examined the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal observed;

> "Senanayake, J., in the Court of Appeal did not attempt to lay down an inflexible general principle that Natural Justice always requires an administrative authority to give reasons, although he did perceive a trend in that direction. It seems to me that his observations - that giving reasons for a decision is one of the fundamentals of good administration, and is implicit in the requirement of a fair hearing - were made, and must be understood, in the context of the position of the Commissioner of Labour under the Termination Act' (at p 262-263)

The Supreme Court having made the observation mentioned above held;

> "To say that Natural Justice entitles a party to a hearing, does not mean merely that his evidence and submissions must be heard and recorded; it necessarily means that he is entitled to a reasoned consideration of the case which he presents. And whether or not the parties are also entitled to be told the reasons for the decision, if they are withheld, once judicial review commences, the decision "may be condemned as arbitrary and unreasonable"; certainly, the Court cannot be asked to presume that they were valid reasons, for that would be to surrender its discretion. The 2nd respondent's failure to produce the 3rd respondent's recommendation thus justified the conclusion that there were no valid reasons, and that Natural Justice had not been observed". (at p 263)

The Supreme Court having reached this conclusion, referred the case back to the Court of Appeal to re-hear the matter, after calling for the record of proceedings and the relevant recommendations based on which the Commissioner of Labour made his decision.

In Jayaratna (supra) the Supreme Court considered an impugned decision of the allocating authority of the railways department to cancel a decision through which one of the government quarters was to be allocated to the petitioner who was a clerk attached to the railways department. The petitioner invoked the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court alleging a violation of Article 12 of the Constitution. The Supreme Court in its judgment considered a series of illegalities and inappropriateness of conduct of relevant officials. Such illegalities and inappropriate conduct included the failure to have proper documentary evidence of ministerial orders by public officers and the absence of any power under the Establishment Code for a Minister to order the allocation or cancellation of government quarters. The Supreme Court in the above decision did not proceed to consider any issue on "failure to give reasons" even though one of the key phrases recorded in the head note of the law report reads "cancellation of an allocation of government quarters without reasons".

Bandara (supra) is an instance where petitioners who invoked the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court on an alleged violations of rights guaranteed under Articles 12(1), 14(1)(c) and 14(1)(d) of the Constitution, challenged the impugned decision to place them on vacation of post. In the examination of relevant Constitutional provisions and the provisions of the Establishment Code, the Court observed that,

> "The power to make rules under Article 55(4) is subject to the provisions of the Constitution, including Article 12; and the Constitution rests on the Rule of Law. Rules made under Article 55(4) must be interpreted so as to avoid inconsistency with Article 12 and the Rule of Law, even if dismissal "without any reason being assigned" might, at other times or in other contexts, have been equated to "dismissal without any reason". I hold that the conditions on which powers have been delegated are contained in Chapter II, Section 11. Sections 11:2 and 11:5 confer an entitlement to confirmation, upon fulfillment of certain conditions; Section 11:2 makes the public officer liable to termination for misconduct and other "defects"; all this is inconsistent with any discretion to authorise dismissal "at pleasure". It is in that context that Section 11:4 must be interpreted.

I am of the view that in the Establishments Code "without assigning any reason" only means no reason need be stated to the officer, but that a reason, which in terms of the Code justifies dismissal, must exist; and when the law requires disclosure of such reason, it will have to be disclosed - and, if not disclosed, legal presumptions will be drawn. I hold that the Cabinet has only delegated a power to dismiss for cause, and according to a procedure prescribed (e.g. Chapter II, Section 11:2:1)." (emphasis added)

Examination of theses judgments reflect that primarily the administrative authorities are bound to take decisions based on reasons and no capricious or arbitrary decisions can be allowed to stand. Therefore, even if the reasons are not disclosed at the time the decision is communicated, disclosure of such reasons at a time of judicial review satisfies this requirement. It is important to note that the Court has imposed such obligation of disclosure in situations "When the law requires disclosure of such reason, ……" as laid down by this court in Bandara (supra). In my view one important factor that has to be taken into account in giving effect to this requirement is the scope of the statutory scheme within which such authorities are exercising their discretion. In Karunadasa (supra) Justice Fernando explicitly observed that the requirement to give reasons should be understood "... in the context of the position of the Commissioner of Labour under the Termination Act".

Justice Fernando with Justice Edussuriya agreeing, in Lanka Multi Moulds (pvt) Limited v Wimalasena, Commissioner of Labour and others [2003] 1 SLR 143 (at 152-153), a case where a decision of the Commissioner of Labour was quashed by the Court of Appeal, examined several decisions including decisions that had expressed a contrary view, and while further elaborating his decision in Karunadasa (supra) observed that:

"Although the Commissioner has a discretion in respect of both limbs of section 6, that is not an unfettered or unreviewable discretion. As the Court of Appeal observed, he must give reasons for his decision. Although in Samalanka Ltd v Weerakoon ([199] 1 SLR 405) , it was held by Kulatunga, J, (with G.P.S. de Silva, CJ. and Ramanathan, J. agreeing) that the Commissioner was not under a duty to give reasons, I took the contrary view in Karunadasa v Unique Gemstones Ltd ([1997] 1 SLR 256), (with Wadugodapitiya, J. and Anandacoomaraswamy, J. agreeing). That decision was considered and followed by Gunasekera J. in Ceylon Printers v Commissioner of Labour ([1998] 2 SLR 29). Since G.P.S.de Silva, CJ. agreed with Gunasekera, J. on that occasion it is clear that he no longer agreed with Samalanka. In Mendis v Perera ([1999]2 SLR 110 at 148) I observed that the audi alteram partem rule does not merely entitle a party to a purely formal opportunity of placing his case before a tribunal, and that natural justice would be devalued if the tribunal does not consider the evidence and the submissions, evaluate it properly and not in haste, and give reasons for its conclusions. However, in Yaseen Omar v Pakistan International Airlines, ([1999] 2 Sri LR 375), Samalanda was followed, apparently without the attention of the Court being drawn to the subsequent decisions to the contrary and the relevant citations.

It is therefore necessary to reiterate what has long been recognized: that the statutory conferment of a right of appeal against the decision of a tribunal has the effect of imposing a duty on that tribunal to give reasons for its decisions (Brook Bond Ceylon Ltd v Tea, Rubber (etc) Workers Union [77 NLR 6] Ratnayake v Fernando [SC 52/86 SCM 20.5.91]). The conferment of a right to seek revision or review necessarily has the same effect. As the decisions cited show, if the citizen is not made aware of the reason for a decision he cannot tell whether it is reviewable, and he will thereby be deprived of one of the protections of the common law - which Article 12(1) now guarantees. Today, therefore, the conjoint effect of the machinery for appeals, revision, and judicial review, and the fundamental rights jurisdiction, is that as a general rule tribunals must give reasons for their decisions".

In Central Bank of Sri Lanka and others v Lankem Tea and Rubber Plantations (PVT) Ltd: [2009] 2 SLR 75 the Supreme Court while determining an appeal from the Court of Appeal where the Court of Appeal quashed a decision of the Controller of Exchange made under the Exchange Control Act, considered the following observation of the Court of Appeal:

"Failure to give reasons therefore amounts to a denial of justice and is itself an error of law. In R v. Mental Health Review Tribunal, ex parte Clatworthy ([1985] 2 All ER 699) it was held that reasons should be sufficiently detailed as to make quite clear to the parties and specially the losing party as to why the tribunal decided as it did, and to avoid the impression that the decision was based upon extraneous consideration rather than the matter raised at the hearing." (at p 101)

Justice Marsoof having considered submissions of all parties in this regard, observed:

"It is important to note that the changes taking place in other jurisdictions have also had their influence on our Courts, and a strong trend of insistence on a statement of reasons is discernible in Sri Lankan judicial decisions. The Sri Lankan authorities were examined recently by the Supreme Court in M. Deepthi Kumara Guneratne and Two Others v Dayananda Dissanayaka and Another [SC (FR) Application No. 56/2008 (S.C. Minutes dated 19th March 2009)] in which the Supreme Court has moved towards recognizing a general duty to give reasons". (at p 105)

Having made this observation Justice Marsoof further proceeded to consider whether there was a duty to give reasons in the matter under consideration and held:

"In view of the fact that Section 52(7) of the Act expressly confers a right of appeal against the decision of the Central Bank to impose a penalty, and even the decision of the Minister on appeal, is reviewable in writ proceedings, I am inclined to follow the reasoning adopted by the Privy Council in Minister of National Revenue v. Wrights Canadian Ropes Ltd. [(1947) AC 109] wherein it was observed that –

"Their Lordships find nothing in the language of the Act or in the general law which would compel the Minister to state his reasons for taking action. . . . But this does not mean that the Minister by keeping silent can defeat the tax payer's appeal. . . The Court is . . .. always entitled to examine the facts which are shown by evidence to have been before the Minister when he made his determination. If those facts are. . . . insufficient in law to support it, the determination cannot stand. . . ."

As observed by Sedley, J., in R v. Higher Education Funding Council [(1994) 1 AER 651]

". . . . . each case will come to rest between two poles, or possibly at one of them: the decision which cries out for reasons, and the decision for which reasons are entirely inapposite. Somewhere between the two poles comes the dividing line separating those cases in which the balance of factors calls for reasons from those where it does not."

I am of the opinion that in the circumstances of this case, the decisions contained in P10 and P14 cry out for reasons, and the failure to give any, render them devoid of any legal validity. I hold that the failure to give reasons rendered the decisions contained in P10 and P14 nugatory, and answer question (f) on which leave has been granted, in the negative and against the Appellant." (at p 105-106)

Jurisprudence of our courts that considered developments in English common law as set out above had therefore recognised, that the "duty to give reasons" by administrative authorities when taking decisions on various matters need to be examined in the context of the given situation. The statutory scheme within which such authorities are empowered to take decisions and the specific circumstances of each case needs to be examined despite such duty is recognised as a "general duty".

It is also pertinent to note that Lord Carnwath in R (CPRE Kent) v Dover DC [2017] UKSC 79, [2018] 2 All ER 121 at 137-138, in examining 'what common law duty there may be on a local planning authority to give reasons for grant of planning permission' observed:

"[51] Public authorities are under no general common law duty to give reasons for their decisions; but it is well-established that fairness may in some circumstances require it, even in a statutory context in which no express duty is imposed (see Doody v Secretary of State for the Home Dept, [1993] 3 All ER 92, [1994]1 AC 531; R v Higher Education Funding Council, Ex p Institute of Dental Surgery [1994] 1 All ER 651 at 671-672, [1994] 1 WLR 242 at 263; De Smith's Judicial Review (7th edn, 2013) para 7-099). Doody concerned the power of the Home Secretary (under the Criminal Justice Act 1967 section 61(1)), in relation to a prisoner under a mandatory life sentence for murder, to fix the minimum period before consideration by the Parole Board for licence, taking account of the "penal" element as recommended by the trial judge. It was held that such a decision was subject to judicial review, and that the prisoner was entitled to be informed of the judge's recommendation and of the reasons for the Home Secretary's decision:

"To mount an effective attack on the decision, given no more material than the facts of the offence and the length of the penal element, the prisoner has virtually no means of ascertaining whether this is an instance where the decision-making process has gone astray. I think it important that there should be an effective means of detecting the kind of error which would entitle the court to intervene, and in practice I regard it as necessary for this purpose that the reasoning of the Home Secretary should be disclosed. If there is any difference between the penal element recommended by the judges and actually imposed by the Home Secretary, this reasoning is bound to include, either explicitly or implicitly, a reason why the Home Secretary has taken a different view …" (See [1993] 3 All ER 92 at 109-110, [1994] 1 AC 531 at 565 per Lord Mustill.)

It is to be noted that a principal justification for imposing the duty was seen as the need to reveal any such error as would entitle the court to intervene, and so make effective the right to challenge the decision by judicial review.

[52]. Similarly, in the planning context, the Court of Appeal has held that a local planning authority generally is under no common law duty to give reasons for the grant of planning permission (R v Aylesbury Vale District Council, Ex p Chaplin (1998) 76 P & CR 207, 211-212 per Pill LJ). Although this general principle was reaffirmed recently in R (on the application of Oakley) v South Cambridgeshire DC [2017] EWCA Civ 71, [2017] 1 WLR 3765, the court held that a duty did arise in the particular circumstances of that case: where the development would have a "significant and lasting impact on the local community", and involved a substantial departure from Green Belt and development plan policies, and where the committee had disagreed with its officers' recommendations. Of the last point, Elias LJ (giving the leading judgment, with which Patten LJ agreed) said (at [61]):

"The significance of that fact is not simply that it will often leave the reasoning obscure. In addition, the fact that the committee is disagreeing with a careful and clear recommendation from a highly experienced officer on a matter of such potential significance to very many people suggests that some explanation is required … the dictates of good administration and the need for transparency are particularly strong here, and they reinforce the justification for imposing the common law duty."

His conclusion was reinforced by reference to the United Kingdom's obligations under the Aarhus Convention (para [62]; see to similar effect my own comments on the relevance of the Convention, in Walton v Scottish Ministers [2012] UKSC 44; [2013] 1 CMLR 858 at [100]). Sales LJ agreed with the result, but expressed concern that the imposition of such duties "might deter otherwise public-spirited volunteers" from council duties, and might also introduce "an unwelcome element of delay into the planning system" (para [76])."

It is also pertinent to observe that in the United Kingdom, the duty to give reasons by non-judicial administrative tribunals had been statutorily mandated by Tribunals and Inquiries Act, of 1958. The same Act recognises limitations such as refusal to give reasons on grounds of national security. Furthermore, the Act had made provision to recognise further restrictions on future occasions after necessary consultations, on grounds such as "reasons are unnecessary" or on impracticability to give such reasons.

In the context of introducing such requirement through the provisions of the Inquiries Act of 1958, it is said:

"In response to the widespread feeling that Act ought to say something about giving reasons for decisions, the Government introduced a new clause in the House of Commons which now stands in the Act as section 12. This requires reasons to be given for decisions both by tribunals and by Ministers after statutory inquiries. The statement of reasons may be either written or oral, and it need be made only if requested." (Case Comment, Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1958, H.W.R. Wade, The Cambridge Law Journal, November, 1958, p.129 at 133).

This statutory requirement had continued in the English legal system and section 10 of the Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1992 provides:

"Reasons to be given for decisions of tribunals and Ministers.

(1)Subject to the provisions of this section and of section 14, where—

(a)any tribunal specified in Schedule 1 gives any decision, or

(b)any Minister notifies any decision taken by him—

(i)after a statutory inquiry has been held by him or on his behalf, or

(ii)in a case in which a person concerned could (whether by objecting or otherwise) have required a statutory inquiry to be so held, it shall be the duty of the tribunal or Minister to furnish a statement, either written or oral, of the reasons for the decision if requested*, on or before the giving or notification of the decision, to state the reasons."*

Schedule I of the said Act makes reference to more than sixty five statutory bodies / tribunals that attend to sixty five different areas such as Agriculture, Banking, Building Societies, Child support maintenance etc. Therefore, jurisprudence under the English legal system needs to be considered in the context of such statutory scheme too. Provisions in such statutory schemes would influence decisions on common law. In my view, when examining the question whether a duty to give reasons on an administrative authority at a given situation exists or not, the primary issue before court is whether the statutory scheme under which such authorities exercise their powers had imposed such a duty or not. If no such statutory duty exists, then the court needs to consider whether the manner in which authorities had exercised their statutory duties had adversely impacted on the legality and reasonableness of the decision and if so to further consider whether the common law imposes such a duty in the context of the statutory scheme within which the authorities have exercised their powers, in the given situation. In my view, examining the desirability of placing such duty to give reasons on the basis that availability of reasons would enhance the acceptability of such decisions falls outside the scope of judicial review when examining the legality and the reasonableness of a decision of an administrative body, in a given situation.

Therefore, I am of the view, in considering the legality and reasonableness of the verdict of the Court Martial in the instant appeal it is imperative to consider the relevant legal provisions applicable to the Court Martial and the manner in which proceedings had been conducted in the given situation and thereafter to consider whether the impugned verdict of the Court Martial should be quashed or not by a writ of certiorari on the basis that no reasons had been given by the members for their verdict. The appellant's application to the Court of Appeal is to quash the verdict of the specific Court Martial and is not a challenge to the legal framework relating to Courts Martial in abstract. Therefore, it is necessary to consider whether the judgement of the Court of Appeal which refused any relief to the appellant should be interfered with or not, in its proper context. I would further elaborate on this aspect when considering the legality of the Court Martial proceedings that are impugned by the appellant.

In the outset it is pertinent to observe that appellant's right to challenge the proceedings of the Court Martial in the Court of Appeal is arising from section 132 of the Navy Act. Section 132(1) of the Navy Act reads:

> "Such of the provisions of Article 140 of the Constitution as relate to the grant and issue of writs of mandamus, certiorari and prohibition shall be deemed to apply in respect of any court martial or any naval officer exercising judicial powers under this Act".

Hence, it is through this deeming provision that the proceedings of a Court Martial constituted under the Navy Act, is subjected to judicial review by the Court of Appeal. It is further pertinent to observe that through this legislative scheme a civilian court has been empowered to examine the proceedings of a tribunal established under the naval law, within the statutory framework that is specifically provided for under the above-mentioned section of the Navy Act.

The 'Manual of Military Law' published by War Office, printed under the authority of His Majesty's stationary office, London, a manual that had been compiled initially in the year 1884, to "assist officers in acquiring information in respect of those branches of law with which they have occasion to deal in the exercise of their military duties", states that "Military law is the law which governs the soldier in peace and in war, at home and abroad. At all times and in all places the conduct of officers and soldiers as such is regulated by military law" ['Manual of Military Law' supra, sixth edition (1914), page 1].

Objects of Military Law is described as,

> "..to maintain discipline among the troops and other persons forming part of or following an army,. To effect this object, acts and omissions which are mere breaches of contract in civil life – e.g, desertion or disobedience to orders – must, if committed by > soldiers, even in time of peace, be made offences, with penalties attached to them; while, on active service, any act or omission which impairs the efficiency of a man in his character of a soldier must be punished with severity" ["Manual of Military Law", supra page 6].

In early periods, in England, military law had existed only in times of actual war. In such times military law had been initiated through Articles of War issued under the prerogative power of the Crown. This position had changed with the enactment of Mutiny Act, in the year 1689. At early stages military law was administered by Court of Chivalry and later through Court or Council of War. Thereafter, such Council of War had transformed to Court Martial. In 1879, Army Discipline and Regulation Act was enacted to consolidate provisions of Mutiny Act and statutory Articles and thereafter two years later in 1881, the Army Act was enacted. Thereafter, Army Act (44 & 45 Vict., c. 58) and Army Annual Act had comprised a part of Military Law of Great Britain.

It is recognised that these Acts ".[.is] part of Statute Law of England, and, with the considerable difference that it is administered by military courts and not by civil judges, is construed in the same manner and carried into effect under the same conditions as to evidence and otherwise, as the ordinary criminal law of England" ["Manual of Military Law" supra page 1]

Trying persons who are subjected to Military Law by Courts Martial had been accepted and recognised over a long period of time, under these legislative schemes. All matters relating to such Courts Martial, including their jurisdiction, composition and procedure were governed by those statutes as well as rules made under them. According to section 52 of the Army Act (44&45 Vict. Ch 58) members of a Court Martial have to subscribe to an oath and confirm that at no stage the opinion or a vote of a fellow member will be disclosed. Furthermore, section 53 of the same act provides that in the event of an equality of votes on the finding, the accused is deemed to be acquitted. In the event of equality of vote on sentence or any other matter, the president has a second or casting vote. Under Rule 44A of Rules of Procedure (1907) findings of the Court Martial are recorded simply as a finding of "guilty" or of "not guilty" or "Not guilty and honourably acquit him of the same". Therefore, from the inception of trials before a Court Martial the practice of finding of guilt or innocence of the accused was on the basis of a "vote" and the members were not obliged to further explain, elaborate or provide reasons for their "vote".

It is also pertinent to note that the role played by the "Judge Advocate" remains one of the main features of Courts Martial. One of the most important duties discharged by the Judge Advocate in the adjudication process in a Court Martial had been the 'summing up' he makes at the end of evidence presented by parties. Rule 103 (E) of the Rules of Procedure (1907) provides that "At the conclusion of the case he will, unless both he and the court considers it unnecessary, sum up the evidence and give his opinion upon the legal bearing of the case before the court proceed to deliberate upon their finding". Therefore, it is a statutory requirement that the Judge Advocate has to sum up the case unless he and the court think a summing up is unnecessary. Furthermore, the Judge Advocate inter alia has a responsibility to address the Court Martial of any irregularities in the proceedings, and any defects in the charge. He also has a duty of taking care that the accused does not suffer any disadvantage in consequence of his position as such or of his ignorance or incapacity. The Judge Advocate has to full fill his duties while maintaining impartiality.

In a nutshell, conveying the opinion of the members of a Court Martial on the guilt or innocence of an accused by way of a vote and the Judge Advocate who maintains impartiality providing advise on legal matters as well as providing a non-binding summing up to the Court Martial had been features that did exist from the inception of the Court Martial process established under the military law, in the British legal system.

The statutory framework relating to military law in the United Kingdom had evolved since its inception and Armed Forces Acts of 2006, 2011 and 2016 are the main statutes in this regard at present.

This Court, in Gunaseela v Udugama *et al 69 NLR 193, when considering the constitutionality of the Court Martial process as provided under Army Act of 1949 as amended, made the following observations on the direct applicability of the provisions in the Army Act (1881) of the United Kingdom in Ceylon until the enactment of Army Act in 1949. The court recognised that "The Army Act, 1881, of the United Kingdom was, like many other British enactments, part of the law of Ceylon long before the Independence of Ceylon." (at p 194).

The Court further observed:

> "For a long period therefore the law of Ceylon provided for the trial by Courts Martial of certain offences committed by "persons subject to military law" of the above and other categories". (supra at p 195)

In Jayanetti v Martinus 71 NLR 49, the Supreme Court examined the legality of Court Martial proceedings conducted under the Navy Act, No 34 of 1950 as amended. The court focused on the summing-up of the Judge Advocate and recognised the important role played by a Judge Advocate in a court martial convened under the Navy Act. In this regard the court observed:

> "Section 39 of the Navy Act prescribes the powers and duties of the Judge-Advocate in court martial proceedings. They are inter alia, to give advice on questions of law or procedure during the proceedings of a court martial, to give advice on any matter before the court, to ensure that the accused does not suffer any disadvantage at his trial, and at the conclusion of the case to sum up the evidence and advise the court upon the law relating to the case.
> The reason why such powers and duties are vested and imposed on the Judge Advocate is almost obvious. A court martial, although it has the power to try and punish offences, which if committed by civilians would be tried by the ordinary courts, is not ordinarily composed of officers with legal knowledge or judicial experience. In fact the court in the present case was composed of two supply officers and one surgeon officer. It is because of this lack of legal or judicial training and experience that the function of advising courts martial is committed by law to the Judge Advocate. Indeed, his functions are comparable to those of a Judge of Assize in cases tried by Jury. Although it is the function of the Jury to decide all questions of fact, the law requires that before the Jury deliberates on the facts, the Judge must sum up to them the evidence. Section 39 (d) imposes a similar requirement in the case of a trial by court martial" (supra at p 49-50)

Section 39 of the Navy Act sets out the Duties of Judge Advocate and subsection (d) of section 39 provides that:

> "At the conclusion of the case he shall, unless both he and the court martial consider it unnecessary, sum up the evidence and advise the court martial upon the law relating to the case before the court martial proceeds to deliberate upon its finding."

The importance of a summing-up of the judge advocate in the context of legality of the entire Court Martial proceedings was described in Jayanetti (supra) in following terms:

> "Had it been necessary for me to decide that the failure of a Judge-Advocate to sum up on evidence and on the law will be a ground for quashing the finding of a court martial only if that failure resulted in a miscarriage of justice, the matters discussed in the two preceding paragraphs of this judgment would compel me to hold that there did result in this case a miscarriage of justice.
> I prefer, however, to rely on the ground that the failure of a Judge Advocate to perform the statutory duty, explicitly imposed by s. 39 (d) of the Navy Act to sum up on evidence before the court deliberates on its finding, is a fatal illegality. I hold that a finding reached without such a summing-up is one reached without jurisdiction, just as would be a verdict of a jury reached at the conclusion of a trial without there having been the charge of the trial Judge which is required by s. 243 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is true that s. 39 (d) of the Navy Act allows the summing-up to be dispensed with, if both the Judge Advocate and the court consider it unnecessary. But the Legislature surely assumed that such a dispensation would be permitted only if the facts of a particular case are unusually simple, or perhaps if both parties consent to the dispensation. The Legislature could not have contemplated that a Judge-Advocate, the very title of whose office denotes its quasi-judicial character, might through caprice or inadvertence deny to an accused person his right to a summing-up on the evidence and on the law" (at p. 51)

The importance of the summing up of a Judge Advocate in Court Martial proceedings as well as the similarity between the roles played by the Judge Advocate in such proceedings and a judge who presides over a jury trial, is aptly demonstrated in the above findings of the court. Whilst the summing up by the judge in a jury trial guides and assist the members of the jury in a jury trial, the summing up of a Judge Advocate in a Court Martial assists and guides members of the Court Martial. The responsibility and the duty to find the guilt or innocence of the accused is placed on the members of the jury at a jury trial in a court of law and similarly, such duty is cast on the members of the Court Martial in proceedings before a Court Martial. There is no statutory duty imposed either on members of a Court Martial or the members of a jury to give reasons for their finding.

It is pertinent to observe that absence of reasons for the verdict of a Court Martial had not impeded civilian courts exercising powers of judicial review over such verdicts, as provided by law. The Court of Appeal in Kumaresan v Pannanwela *et al [1990] 2 SLR 181, considered a summing up of a Judge Advocate of a Court Martial convened under the Air Force Act No 41 of 1949 as amended and quashed the proceedings and the order of the Court Martial by issuing a writ of certiorari. Main reasons for the court to issue the writ were the defects in the summing up of the Judge Advocate. Similarly in Chandra Kumar and Another v Captain Samarawickrema *et al [2002] 2 SLR 153, also the Court of Appeal granted a writ of certiorari to quash the conviction of a Court Martial convened under the Navy Act, due to the fact that the Judge Advocate erred in law in giving a particular direction to the members of the court.

Starting with the statutory framework established in the United Kingdom from the nineteenth century and thereafter through the framework established by three statutes, Army Act (1949), Air Force Act (1949) and Navy Act (1950), regulate the Court Martial proceedings in Sri Lanka. Rules made under the Army Act and Air Force Act had further complemented the statutory framework. As a practice, proceedings of Courts Martial appointed under the Navy Act had continued to take place similar to the proceedings of Courts Martial under the other two statutes, even though no rules had been promulgated relating to proceedings of Courts Martial under the Navy Act. Two main features of the Court Martial proceedings namely the important role played by the Judge Advocate in such proceedings including delivering the summing up by him and the members of court arriving at the verdict by the process of "vote" without giving reasons for such verdict had remained intact, in Courts Martial appointed under all three statutes.

In England, Armed Forces Acts of 2006, 2011 and 2016 had brought in numerous changes to the Court Martial process. These changes had been introduced inter alia to address adverse concerns raised by the European Court of Human Rights. It is also pertinent to note that these statutory developments in relation to military law had been introduced while developments in common law relating to "duty to give reasons" were taking place.

However, it is further pertinent to note that no changes had taken place either statutorily or on the basis of developments in common law in relation to the manner in which the final decision of members of a Court Martial is pronounced, under the English Law. It remains that the decision of the Court Martial to be reached by the vote of the members and there is no legal obligation placed on them to give reasons for their decision or to explain the reasons for their vote. Therefore salient features of Courts Martial in the context of pronouncing their findings on the guilt or innocence of the accused continued static through out the evolution of military law and had not changed despite the developments in the common law and statutory law in relation to administrative bodies in the context of a duty to give reasons for their decisions. Furthermore, the role played by the Judge Advocate also had been preserved to ensure that the Court Martial proceedings would not breach the fair hearing guarantee.

"The Court Martial and The Summary Appeal Court Guidance" Volume 2 at p 10 version 7 (2015) (Issued by Judge Advocate General and The Director of Military Court Service) in relation to "Deliberations on Findings" (chapter 3.17) elaborates that;

"The law permits a board in the Court Martial to reach a finding of guilt or innocence by a simple majority, but it is preferable and desirable for any finding to be unanimous if possible. If there is equality of votes, the court must acquit the defendant. There is no casting vote at this stage. Before the board retires to deliberate on its findings, the judge gives directions on this point and on other matters. Until after a finding of guilt has been announced in open court, no discussions whatsoever of sentencing options or implications, no matter how general or hypothetical, are to take place before or during any trial proceedings or in the absence of the judge."

Contrasting Roles of the Judge Advocate and Board Members is described in "The Court Martial and The Summary Appeal Court Guidance" Volume 1 at p 5 version 7, (2015) – (Issued by Judge Advocate General and The Director of Military Court Service) in the following terms:

"The roles and functions of the judge and the members are entirely different, but taken together they contribute directly to a just outcome of each trial. As such they are complementary and both functions are indispensable. Where there is a plea of Not Guilty in the Court Martial, the members exclusively decide the guilt or otherwise of the defendant, based on the evidence presented to them. The judge takes no part in this decision (except where he decides that there is no case to answer at the close of the prosecution case and directs the board to find the defendant not guilty). The members hear, assess, deliberate on, and (if applicable) arrive at a finding on the facts of the case. During the trial proceedings they are acting in a similar way to a jury, and all members of the board have an equal vote and voice; there is no casting vote at this stage. The President of the Board chairs the discussion and reports the outcome to the court. If there is equality of votes, the court must acquit the defendant" (3.7)

"The judge, in addition to being aware of the evidence before the court, will have seen the trial papers and may have heard legal arguments in the absence of the board. The function of the judge is to ensure the trial is conducted fairly, decide what evidence the members hear and see, and ensure the correct interpretation and application of the law and procedures. The judge's role is exactly the same as the role of the judge presiding over a jury trial in the Crown Court until it comes to the sentencing stages" (3.8)

It is also pertinent to observe that 'trial by jury' or 'jury trials' had been in existence in England and other common law countries for centuries. One static feature in jury trials had been that the duty to find guilt or innocence of an accused remains with the jurors. There had been no change in this unique feature in jury trials that continued despite changes in many other areas under the common law. The 'duty to give reasons' as developed by the common law in relation to decisions of administrative authorities had not been extended to the verdicts of jury trials. Therefore, neither the common law nor the statute law casts an obligation on the jurors to give reasons, for their verdict.

Jury trials in criminal proceedings had been a feature in our legal system also for centuries. Learned President's Counsel for the appellant submitted that, "trial by jury is traceable to the Magna Carta (Vide chapter 39 of the Magna Carta whereby the people extracted the right to be tried by one's equals. Trial by jury is an institution of great historical antiquity and by usage, has acquired the force of law. It is a legacy which the law in Sri Lanka adopted and is a part of the practice of our courts. Under our law the practice of the courts constitutes LAW – cursus curiae est lex curiae as applied in Jeyaraj Fernandopulle's Case 1996 1 SLR 70 at page 83".

At present, proceedings of jury trials are governed by the provisions in the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No 15 of 1979 as amended. Sections 229, 230 and 231 sets out the duties of the Judge in a jury trial and section 232 sets out the duties of the jury. Sections 233, 234, 235 and 236 sets out matters relating to the verdict of the jury.

Duties of the jury as provided under the statute include "to decide which view of the facts is true and then to return the verdict which under such view ought according to the direction of the Judge to be returned, to determine the meaning of all technical terms (other than terms of law) and words used in an unusual sense which it may be necessary to determine whether such words occur in documents or not to decide all questions which according to law are to be deemed questions of fact to decide whether general indefinite expressions do or do not apply to particular cases, unless such expressions refer to legal procedure or unless their meaning is ascertained by law, in either of which cases it is the duty of the Judge to decide their meaning".

The manner in which the verdict should be pronounced as provided under section 234 is firstly the registrar to inquire "Do you find the accused person (naming him) guilty or not guilty of the offence (naming it) with which he is charged?" and the foreman to state the verdict of the jury.

Thereafter section 236 provides to record the verdict in the following manner:

"the Registrar shall make an entry of the verdict on the' indictment and shall then say to the jury the words following or words to the like effect : " Gentlemen of the jury: attend whilst your foreman signs your verdict. The finding of you (or of so many of you as the case may be) is that the prisoner A.B. is guilty" (or "not guilty").

The statutory scheme through which a jury trial is conducted does not require the jury to give reasons for their verdict. In this regard it is also pertinent to observe that no specific statutory provision exits absolving the jury from such duty. Yet, even the trial judge has no right to inquire into the reasons for their verdict, despite a judge is empowered to ask questions from the jury to 'ascertain' what the verdict is, under section 235. It is such practice that had been continuing since the inception of trials by jury in England. Neither the common law nor the statute law had intervened in this practice. It is also pertinent to observe that even an appellate court that considers an appeal against a conviction by a jury has no right to seek for reasons from the jurors to their verdict and absence of reasons is not a ground on which a conviction by a jury could be set aside. Law does not permit drawing an inference that reasons were not pronounced due to the absence of valid reasons for the jury to have arrived at the verdict of guilt. No duty to give reasons for the decision is imposed on a jury despite the fact that a statutory appeal lies against a conviction based on the verdict of a jury. One of the grounds on which the duty to give reasons was developed under the common law is "To mount an effective attack on the decision, given no more material than the facts of the offence and the length of the penal element, the prisoner has virtually no means of ascertaining whether this is an instance where the decision-making process has gone astray. I think it is important that there should be an effective means of detecting the kind of error which would entitle the court to intervene, and in practice I regard it as necessary for this purpose that the reasoning of the Home Secretary should be disclosed" (per Lord Mustill in Doody v Secretary of State for the Home Dept, ([1993] 3 All ER 92 at 109-110, [1994] 1 AC 531 at 565). Nevertheless, the common law principles at no stage imposed a duty on a jury to give reasons for its verdict.

Similarly, neither the common law principles as developed in England, nor the statutory schemes had extended the 'duty to give reasons' to a Court Martial in relation to its verdict. As discussed hereinbefore both jury trials and trials in Courts Martial had been in existence over centuries. Roles of the Judge Advocate and members of Courts Martial vis-à-vis roles of the presiding judge and members of a jury had been recognised, as similar. The Supreme Court in Jayanetti (supra) and "The Court Martial and The Summary Appeal Court Guidance" issued by Judge Advocate General and The Director of Military Court Service (supra) have recognised such similarity. There is no reason for me to deviate from these views even though the statutory provisions governing proceedings of Courts Martial and jury trials are not identical. Existing practices relating to Courts Martial and jury trials and the jurisprudence as discussed hereinbefore reflect, that they are similar in context. Furthermore, in my view the unique nature of the 'Court Martial' in the context of the court structure in the legal system and the responsibility on the Court Martial to act 'judicially' had not altered this position. Even a court, which falls within the traditional structure of courts in a legal system, is bound to act judicially. Yet, the developments in common law principle 'duty to give reasons', had not been extended to the verdict of a jury.

In the backdrop of these legal principles, I will now turn to the impugned Court Martial proceedings. The entire record of proceedings including the charge sheet, evidence, summing up of the Judge Advocate and the verdict is available for perusal by this court and it was available for the Court of Appeal too. A team of counsel, presumably of his choice, had represented the appellant before the Court Martial. At the commencement of the proceedings an objection had been raised in relation to one of the members of the tribunal. The Judge Advocate thereafter had addressed the remaining two members and had explained the grounds for such objection and had invited the two members to reach a decision. Accordingly, the composition of the Court Martial had been changed as they decided in favour of the objection raised on behalf of the appellant. The Judge Advocate had addressed the members on the legal position regarding the admissibility of the summary report on the prosecution case presented by the prosecuting officer. The Judge Advocate at the end of evidence had addressed the members for one hour and forty five minutes. In his address, he had drawn the attention of the members to the relevant legal principles including the burden and standard of proof, the manner in which the prosecution evidence and defence evidence should be considered as well as the different aspects of the testimonies of prosecution and defence witnesses. It is pertinent at this stage to observer, that Learned President's Counsel for the appellant in the course of his submissions before this Court did not impugn the summing up of the Judge Advocate but acknowledged the comprehensiveness and impartiality reflected therein.

Members of the Court Martial had retired for deliberations at the conclusion of the aforementioned summing up of the Judge Advocate and had pronounced its verdict after fifty-five minutes. The appellant was pronounced guilty on both counts. The Court Martial had not deviated from its practice and had not violated any statutory provision in the Navy Act.

All this material including the evidence and the summing up of the Judge Advocate was made available to the appellant as well as the Court of Appeal at the hearing of appellant's application for Writ of Certiorari. Therefore, the absence of reasons from members of Court Martial for their verdict had not adversely impacted the Court of Appeal in the exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 140 of the Constitution read with section 132(1) of the Navy Act.

Therefore, in my view the Court of Appeal did not err when it refused to quash the verdict of the Court Martial on the ground that it failed to give reasons. It is my considered view that, imposing a duty to give reasons on the members of a Court Martial on the basis that such general duty exists under the 'common law principles' brings in a complete change to the military justice system contrary to the statutory scheme and the practice prevalent over centuries.

In reaching my findings on this matter I have also considered two decisions of the Court of Appeal namely, judgment of a Divisional Bench in Fonseka v Lt. General Jagath Jayasuriya *et al, [2011] 2 SLR 372 and the judgment of a single judge in Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara v Kolitha Gunathilaka *et al, CA/Writ/333/2011, CA minutes dated 01.06.2020. In Fonseka (supra) on behalf of the petitioner it was contended that a Court Martial is bound to give reasons as Court Martial had been recognised as a 'court' and also has a duty 'to act judicially'. Having reiterated this submission the Court had not proceed to make a specific finding in favour of this submission but dismissed the application in limine on the basis that the petitioner was guilty of non-disclosure. In Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara (supra), the learned judge held that in the matter under consideration the Court Martial had failed to comply with regulations 98 and 175 of 'The Court Martial (General and District) Regulations which requires "The opinion of every member of the court martial as to the findings shall be given by word of mouth on each charge separately" and every member of court martial "must give his opinion by word of mouth on every matter which the court has to decide, including sentence, notwithstanding that he may have given his opinion in favour of acquittal" and had held that "it is incurable and fatal to the conviction". Thereafter the learned judge had proceeded to hold that "giving of reasons for decision of the court martial has not been excluded expressly or by necessary implication in the Air Force Act or Regulations made thereunder. Hence, the failure to give reasons is fatal to the conviction of murder and punishment of life imprisonment".

However, due to the reasons enumerated hereinbefore, I am not inclined to consider learned judge's view in Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara (supra) favourably. Absence of an appeal by the Honourable Attorney-General to the Supreme Court from the said decision of the Court of Appeal, in my view, is not a factor that can have any influence on my view in this regard. The learned President's Counsel for the appellant submitted that the right to judicial review of the decision of a Court Martial would be rendered an 'empty shell' if the Supreme Court departs from the decision in Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara's case (supra). In this regard it is pertinent to observe that in numerous occasions, the Court of Appeal has quashed Court Martial proceedings by exercising writ jurisdiction vested by the Constitution read with the provisions in the Army, Air force and Navy Acts. Supreme Court had affirmed such decisions, unless in situations where the Court of Appeal had erred.

In Kumaresan v Pannanwela and others [1990] 2 SLR 181 a writ was issued to quash findings of a Court Martial under the Air Force act due to defects in Judge Advocate's summing up and the defects in the charges. In Indrananda De Silva v Lt. Gen. Waidyaratne and others, [1998] 1 SLR 175 a writ was issued to quash conviction entered by a Court Martial under the Army Act due to admission of illegal evidence and insufficiency of evidence. A conviction of a Navy Court Martial had been quashed in Chandra Kumar and another v. Capt. Samarawickrama and others, [2002] 2 SLR 153, due to defects in the summing up of the Judge Advocate and for the reason that the Court Martial erred in admitting certain items of evidence. In Koralagamage v Commander of the Army, [2003] 3 SLR 169, a writ was issued to quash the conviction of an Army Court Martial on the basis that the opportunity to cross examine witnesses was denied to the accused. A conviction of a Court Martial had been quashed on the basis that the offence was prescribed, in Chandrasena v Commander of the Sri Lanka Army and others, [2004] 1 SLR 404. In Jayanetti (supra), failure of the Judge Advocate to perform the statutory duty to sum up the evidence, led to the conviction being quashed.

In Wimalasiri v Daluwatte and others, [2002] 2 SLR 192, court in refusing to issue a writ observed that;

> "when the evidence placed before the Court Martial is considered, it does not appear that, on the evidence available, the decision of the Court is unsupportable or perverse. There is also no serious procedural error resulting in a miscarriage of justice". (at p 196)

In the light of the jurisprudence discussed hereinbefore, I am not inclined to consider favourably, the above-mentioned submission of the Learned President's Counsel, that the failure to follow the decision in Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara (supra) would make writ jurisdiction over a Court Martial an 'empty shell'.

In view of my findings enumerated hereinbefore, I answer question (b), on which this Court had granted Special Leave, in the negative.

Did the Court of Appeal err in its failure to consider whether judge advocate's directions did not justify the determination of the Court Martial?

It is the contention of the learned President's Counsel for the appellant that this question should be considered in the context of 'no evidence' rule. Furthermore, it was submitted that the same issue was in the forefront of the arguments before the Court of Appeal as the appellant argued that the Court Martial ought to have found the appellant not guilty for both counts.

On behalf of the respondents, learned Deputy Solicitor General submitted that the examination of the record of the Court Martial proceedings aptly demonstrate that the "no evidence" rule does not arise in the given situation. It was further contended that sufficient evidence was presented before the Court Martial and the verdict of the Court Martial on either count is neither perverse nor unreasonable despite conflicting evidence existed in relation to the first charge. The learned Deputy Solicitor General contended that the summing up of the Judge Advocate quite correctly had drawn the attention of the members of the Court Martial to the fact that such inconsistencies exist and had addressed comprehensively on the legal position relating to the standard and burden of proof. Furthermore, on behalf of the respondents it is submitted that no inconsistencies exist in the evidence pertaining to the second charge and hence, there is no legal basis to interfere with the verdict in relation to the said charge. On this basis the learned Deputy Solicitor General submitted that no legal basis exists to issue a writ of certiorari to quash the impugned verdict on either of the two charges.

On behalf of the appellant it was submitted that our courts have adopted and applied 'no evidence' rule in Hasseen v Gunasekera and others, CA application 128/86 CA minutes 02.10.1995, Kiriwanthe v Nawarathne [1990] 2 SLR 393 at 409, Nalini Ellagala v Poddalgoda [1999] 1 SLR 46 at 52 and Nicholas v Macan Markar Limited; [1985] 1 SLR 130 at 140-141.

In Nalini Ellegala (supra) the Supreme Court considered whether the Rent Board of Review erred in exercising its appellate jurisdiction in relation to a decision of the Rent Board.

Section 40(4) of the Rent Act provides that "Any Person who is aggrieved by any order made by any Rent Board under this Act may …….. appeal against the Order to the Board of Review: provided however, that no appeal shall lie except upon a matter of law".

In considering this issue, the Supreme Court considered the Court of Appeal decision in Hassen v Gunasekera and Others (supra), and recognised that the Court of Appeal had "dealt with an order of the Board of Review, affirming an order of the Rent Board which had been "arrived at without an adequate evaluation of the evidence and by failing to take into consideration relevant items of evidence which could have influenced the finding" and held the Rent Board as well as the Board of Review had "erred in law by failing to take into account relevant items of evidence in arriving at the finding" and therefore quashed the orders of the Rent Board as well as of the Board of Review".

Furthermore, the Supreme Court in Nalini Ellagala (supra) observed that

> "Wade & Forsyth, Administrative Law, 7th edition at page 312 dealing with the 'no evidence' rule states that 'no evidence' does not mean only a total dearth of evidence. It extends to any case where the evidence, taken as a whole, is not reasonably capable of supporting the finding, or where, in other words, no tribunal could reasonably reach that conclusion on that evidence". It goes on to state at page 316 that "It seems clear that this ground of judicial review ought now to be regarded as established on a general basis", and forecasts that 'no evidence' seems destined to take its place as yet a further branch of the principle of ultra vires, so that Acts giving powers of determination will be taken to imply that the determination must be based on some acceptable evidence. If it is not, it will be treated as 'arbitrary, capricious and obviously unauthorised'."

Applying the principles enumerated hereinbefore, the Supreme Court held that

> "the Rent Board had failed to properly evaluate the evidence and such failure was a question of law upon which the Board of Review was entitled to exercise its powers under section 40 of the Act". (at p52).

Nicholas (supra) is a case where the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal was invoked to quash a decision of the Rent Board of Review. The basis on which the application for the writ of certiorari was made includes that "the decision of the said Board of Review bears on record an error of law, in that the Board of Review has made order without jurisdiction and / or in excess of the jurisdiction and in contravention of the statutory provisions in the law" (at p 134).

In the said matter the court was confronted with the issue, whether the Board of Review having considered the facts including contents of documents produced before the Rent Board had taken a view different to the view taken by the Rent Board, which led to the setting aside of the order of the Rent Board when the Board of Review had the jurisdiction to consider an appeal from the Rent Board solely on matters of law, as provided under section 40 of the Rent Act? In this regard the learned counsel for the petitioner had submitted that the Board of Review could have set aside the findings on questions of fact if there was no evidence before the Rent Board to come to the conclusion it had arrived at, or on the evidence available before the Rent Board, no reasonable person could have come to that conclusion.

The court before embarking on the analysis of relevant legal principles in this regard had quite correctly identified the scope of examination the Court of Appeal has to engage, in exercising its jurisdiction of judicial review in relating to the decision of the Rent Board of Review. The court held;

> "There is a fine distinction between, "appeal" and "judicial review". When hearing an appeal the court is concerned with the merits of the decision in appeal. The question before court is whether the decision subject matter of the appeal is right or wrong. In the case of judicial review the question before the court is whether the decision or order is lawful, that is, according to law. As such in this application for a writ, it is not the function of this court to decide whether the order of the Rent Board is right or wrong, or whether the order of the Rent Board of Review is right or wrong. The function of this court in this instance is to decide whether on the principles applicable to judicial review, the order of the Rent Board of Review should be allowed to stand or should be set aside". (at p 139)

Clearly identifying the parameters within which a court exercising its jurisdiction in an application for "judicial review" should act, the court proceeded to observe that:

> "A close study of the principles set down in these English and Ceylon cases referred to above show that the principles adopted by a superior court in considering a writ against an order of an inferior tribunal or court or an appeal on questions of law from an inferior court or tribunal are almost the same or have come closer. However De Smith Judicial Review of Administrative Action (4th Ed.) - page 129 states as follows:
> "The criteria adopted by the courts for distinguishing between question of law and questions of fact have not been uniform……. Moreover, criteria applied in one branch of the law may be largely irrelevant in another: it may be unwise to, rely upon the fine distinctions drawn in income tax appeals or workmen's compensation appeals as authoritative guidance in appeals from other inferior tribunals or applications for certiorari to quash determinations of the national insurance commissioners or medical appeal tribunals for error of law on the face of the record. (In respect of this opinion) the relevant note 9 to this passage states as follows - Nevertheless, the important decision of the House of Lords in Edwards v. Bairstow (supra) a tax case in which the concept of a question of law was given a broad interpretation, has been influential in other contexts. It has been applied, e.g. in R. v. Medical Appeal Tribunal, ex p. Gilmore (supra) a case of certiorari to quash for patent error of law, and in rating..... and arbitration cases, and in a case involving the scope of the obligation to pay social security contributions (Global Plant Ltd. v. Secretary of State for Social Services (supra) and in a case concerning the registration of common land..... and in unfair dismissal cases). Subject to these qualifications, it is possible to make some meaningful generalisations about the tests applied by the courts to discriminate between law and fact in administrative law. But we must first enter another linguistic maze".'' (supra at p 142-143).

Having examined all the material available, the court observed that:

> "The Rent Board of Review ……. has not shown that there was no evidence for the finding of the Rent Board and that the finding was inconsistent with the evidence" and contradictory of it. In my view what the Rent Board of Review has done is that it has on the same material substituted the finding of` facts' and the opinion of the Rent Board, with its own finding of facts and its opinion. What the Rent Board of Review has done is to 'come to a different conclusion on the facts of the case, from that of the Rent Board and to give that finding a legal decoration or embellishment by reference to three cases" (supra at p 144)

In "Administrative Law" by H.W.R. Wade and C.F. Forsyth (10th Edition at 229-230) sets out 'no evidence" rule in following terms:

"It is one thing to weigh conflicting evidence which might justify a conclusion either way, or to evaluate evidence wrongly – R v Criminal Injuries Compensation Board 1997 SLT 291. It is another thing altogether to make insupportable findings. This is an abuse of power and may cause grave injustice. At this point, therefore, the court is disposed to intervene.

'No evidence does not mean only a total dearth of evidence. It extends to any case where the evidence, taken as a whole, is not reasonably capable of supporting the finding – Allison v General Medical Council [1894] 1 QB 750 at 760, 763; Lee v Showmen's Guild of Great Britain [1952] 2 QB 329 at 345 - ; or where, in other words, no tribunal could reasonably reach that conclusion on that evidence – R v Roberts [1908] 1 KB 407 at 423 - . This 'no evidence' principle clearly has something in common with principle that perverse or unreasonable action is unauthorised and ultra vires. It also has some affinity with the substantial evidence rule of American Law, which requires that findings be supported by substantial evidence recorded as a whole – Administrative Procedure Act (USA 1946, s 10(e); Universal Camera Corporation v National Labour Relations Board 340 US 474 (1951); Schwartz and Wade, Legal Control of Government, 228 - ."

When curses curie and legal literature relating 'no evidence' rule is considered in the context of the factual position relating to the impugned Court Martial proceedings, it is pertinent to note that the prosecution had led evidence of four witnesses and a similar number of witnesses had testified on behalf of the appellant. Furthermore the appellant himself also had testified before the Court Martial.

Two charges that were framed against the appellant had been,

(a) Absence from Vankalai and Nanaddan, which was his "place of deployment" without obtaining permission from an authorised officer, in violation of section 60(2) of the Navy Act.

(b) The failure to return to his place of deployment namely Naval depot at Vankalai, upon becoming aware that the LTTE had bombed Thalladi army camp, and thereby committing an offence punishable under section 104(1) of the Navy Act.

First, I will consider the submission of the learned Deputy Solicitor General, that the 'no evidence rule' cannot be invoked in relation to the second charge, framed against the appellant. In this context it is pertinent to note that the appellant had pleaded not guilty to both charges. However, one of the admissions recorded before the Court Martial is that the appellant was away from Vankalai at the time the air raid was launched on Thalladi Army camp in the night of 28th October 2008. Accordingly, the Judge Advocate had correctly directed that the facts both parties had agreed need not be further proved. Therefore, there is no conflict on the fact that one of the core issues in relation to the second charge, namely that the appellant failed to return to his place of deployment upon becoming aware of the air raid on Thalladi camp stands proved. The appellant's position relating to the second charge is that he took the decision to remain at SLNS Gajaba without proceeding to his Area of Command on the basis that his presence at SLNS Gajaba would be more beneficial than his presence at the camp situated within his Area of Command. However, the prosecution counters this position. Prosecution contends that no member of the Navy who is acting under the command of a senior officer has the authority to deviate from the duties and responsibilities assigned to him until his superior commands to that effect. There is no dispute between the parties that at no stage during the relevant time the appellant either sought or made any attempt to seek permission of his superiors to remain at SLNS Gajaba without proceeding to his area of command, Vankalai. Hence, I am of the view that 'no evidence rule' cannot be invoked in relation to the second charge. The issue is whether there is merit in the defence pleaded by the appellant or not.

The Judge Advocate in his summing up had drawn the attention of the Court Martial to the fact that the appellant on his own volition remained at SLNS Gajaba. Furthermore, he had placed the submissions made by both parties before the members to consider whether the appellant should be held guilty for the second charge. The members were left to decide whether the conduct of the appellant prejudices good order and naval discipline.

Section 104 of the Navy Act reads:

"Every person subject to naval law who, by any act, conduct, disorder, or neglect which does not constitute offence for which special provision is made in any other section of this Act, prejudices good order and naval discipline, shall be guilty of a naval offence and shall be punished with dismissal with disgrace from the Navy or with any less severe punishment in the scale of punishments".

The appellant having admitted that he did not proceed to Vankali after coming to know about the air raid on the nearby army camp, explained various steps he took by remaining at the operations room at SLNS Gajaba, in the absence of its Commander, that night. However, he admitted that he knew that his duty was to report to Vankali no sooner he came to know about the air raid and that he did not receive instructions from any senior officer to remain at SLNS Gajaba without proceeding to his area of command. It is also pertinent to note that the emergency situation that arose with the air raid approximately around 10.30 pm was fully lifted only in the early morning the following day. Judge Advocate, in his address invited the members to consider whether the appellant's failure to report to the pre- determined area of command to which he should report at a time of an emergency prejudices good order and naval discipline as submitted by the prosecution. In this context, he further invited the Court Martial to consider whether any person should be allowed to act arbitrarily. In this regard, the Judge Advocate further directed the Court Martial to consider the appellant's position that he took all possible measures to coordinate with other relevant personnel using the facilities available at SLNS Gajaba.

When all these facts are taken together, I am of the view that there was sufficient evidence before the Court Martial to consider all relevant matters and reach a decision on the second charge. Hence there is no rationale to interfere with the verdict of guilt pronounced by the Court Martial against the appellant on the second charge, on the basis of the 'no evidence rule'.

The learned President's Counsel for the appellant submitted that the second charge is 'ultra vires'. His submission is that when an officer or a sailor commits a misconduct in battle, he is guilty of offence set out in section 54 of the Navy Act and does not become liable to be prosecuted under section 104 of the Act. It is his submission that section 104 could be invoked only relating to general conduct.

However, I observe firstly, that section 104 does not make a distinction between conduct while engaged in action and general conduct. To the contrary, section 54 deals with specific conduct in situations where there is signal of battle or on sight of a ship of an enemy. Furthermore, Section 54 (1) deals with three specific types of conduct that attracts penal consequences. They are, failure to use utmost exertions to bring his ship into action, failure to encourage his inferior officers and men to fight courageously and surrendering his ship to the enemy or withdrawing from fight. If the conduct of any flag officer, captain, commander or commanding officers falls within the ambit of any of the aforementioned circumstances, then such a person who had acted traitorously is liable to be punished with death or with any less severe punishment if such person had acted from cowardice. To the contrary, such person is liable to be punished with dismissal with or without disgrace or any less severe punishment, if had acted from negligence or through other default.

However, section 104 deals with conduct, act, disorder or neglect that does not constitute an offence under any other provision of the Act, including section 54. In the course of the submissions no attempt was made to demonstrate how the alleged conduct of the appellant in the given situation would fall within the ambit of section 54. Furthermore, that the appellant had raised no objection in relation to the second charge framed against him under section 104 of the Act but had pleaded to the charge and had taken part in the proceedings. In my view the second charge framed against the appellant is neither ultra vires nor illegal.

In the context of the first charge framed against the appellant, the learned President's Counsel for the Appellant drew the attention of this Court to the record of proceedings before the Court Martial with a view of demonstrating that this is a fit case to quash the verdict of the Court Martial based on 'no evidence' rule. It was his submission that evidence of several witnesses contradicted the evidence of Area Commander, on the fact that the appellant stayed outside his area of duty – place of deployment – without permission. The learned President's Counsel further submitted that the evidence of those witnesses corroborated the position taken up by the appellant in his testimony before the Court Martial.

The prosecution had led the evidence of the Area Commander, Secretary to the Area Commander, Deputy Area Commander and Commanding Officer of Vankalai. The appellant himself and four other witnesses namely Commanding Officer of SLNS Gajaba, Contingent Commander of Mannar, Commanding Officer of Naval Deployment Silavathura and Logistics Officer of SLNS Gajaba, had testified for the defence.

It is pertinent to note that the main issue to be determined in deciding the appellant's innocence or guilt in relation to the first charge is whether he stayed outside his place of deployment without permission from an authorised officer. There is no dispute that SLNS Gajaba is situated outside the place of deployment relating to the appellant and that the appellant on several occasions spent the night at SLNS Gajaba, including the day on which an air raid was launched on Thalladi army camp situated approximately 6-7 kilometers away from Vankalai. Therefore, the only issue that that had to be decided is whether the appellant had permission to stay at SLNS Gajaba, a place from where it takes about 30-45 minutes to reach Vankalai. There is also no dispute as to who should have granted such permission. It is the Area Commander under whose command the appellant was placed within the command structure and therefore it is no person other than the Area Commander could have granted such permission.

The Area Commander who testified before the Court Martial said that he did not grant permission for the appellant to stay outside his place of deployment but wanted the appellant to examine the area and inform the best location where he should stay when he reported for duty. It was his concern whether the appellant would stay at the same place where the Commanding Officer is located or whether the appellant, tactically would wish to stay at a different location.

This witness had been cross-examined extensively and it was suggested that he granted permission for the appellant to stay at SLNS Gajaba until suitable arrangements are made at Vankalai. Furthermore, it was suggested that the inadequacies in residential facilities for officers at Vankalai was discussed at official meetings and necessary instructions had been given to remedy this situation at the earliest. The witness had said that permission should have been given in writing to stay at facility situated outside the area of command. Furthermore, he said that the appellant would have attended to his initial matters within about two days of reporting to SLNS Gajaba and thereafter would inform his decision as to the best place to stay after examining the area under his command. It was his position that the appellant confirmed that the best place to stay is the place where the Commanding Officer is located – Basthipuram situated within Vankalai.

According to the appellant, he was appointed Contingent Commander of Vankalai and Nanaddan with effect from 04 September 2008. At that stage the Commanding Officer of Vankalai had been overseas and the appellant had communicated with the Commanding Officer at SLNS Gajaba to obtain necessary information to reach there. The appellant had been informed that, arrangements had been made for him to stay at SLNS Gajaba. Accordingly, the appellant had directly proceeded to SLNS Gajaba and reached there around 5.00 pm. The appellant on the following day had reported to the Area Commander who was at Thalaimannar. He had remained at VIP chalet at SLNS Gajaba till 7th of September 2008, the day on which he proceeded to Vankali situated within his area of deployment as Contingent Commander of "Vankalai and Nandaal". The appellant claims that he came to know from the Commanding Officer of Vankalai that permission had been granted for the appellant to stay at SLNS Gajaba until suitable arrangements are made to stay within the area of Vankalai and Nandaal. The Appellant further claims that he decided that the best place for him to stay is Vankali, after inspecting the area. He had accordingly informed the Area Commander and suggested that he would stay at Vankalai when the Commanding Officer is absent but would stay at SLNS Gajaba on the days that Commanding Officer is present at Vankalai. It is appellant's position that the Area Commander granted permission for him to stay at SLNS Gajaba on the days that Commanding Officer is present at Vankalai.

Deputy Area Commander who testified before the Court Martial had said that the appellant at one point told him that the Area Commander granted permission for him to stay at SLNS Gajaba on the nights Commanding Officer is availabe at Vankalai. The witness had said that he would have discussed with the Area Commander and sought permission if the appellant sought permission from him. However, as the appellant sought no permission from him the witness had not taken any steps in this regard any further or to make any inquiries from the Area Commander.

Commanding Officer of Vankalai in his testimony had said that the appellant arrived at Vankalai on the 7th of September. The appellant spent about a week at Vankalai. Therefater, on 14th September he proceeded to SLNS Gajaba after informing the witness that he received instructions from SLNS Gajaba regarding his accommodation. During the initial period the appellant had spent the night at the facility the witness was staying. However, thereafter the appellant had spent the night at SLNS Gajaba on the days the witness was present at Vankalai. This witness had further said that at a meeting held about a week prior to the arrival of the appellant, the Area Commander said that appellant would be provided with accommodation at SLNS Gajaba until suitable arrangements are made at Vankalai.

Commanding Officer of Gajaba in his testimony said that when he received the signal about appellant's arrival he obtained permission to make necessary temporary arrangements for appellant's accommodation at the initial stage as the appellant would directly arrive at SLNS Gajaba, before proceeding to his area of responsibility.

It is also pertinent to note evidence of other witnesses who testified at the Court Martial confirm that discussions took place at several meetings attended by the Area Commander on the inadequacy of residential facilities at Vankalai and the need to expedite the completion of construction work to ensure that such issues are resolved early. Furthermore, on behalf of prosecution as well as on behalf of the appellant, minutes and agenda items of said meetings had been produced as evidence before the Court Martial.

Examination of the oral evidence of the witnesses, including the evidence of the appellant, demonstrate that there had been inconsistencies on the issue whether the appellant had permission from the Area Commander to stay the night at SLNS Gajaba - outside the area of command - on the days the Commanding Officer was present at Vankali. However, there is no inconsistency on the fact that none of the records of the meetings confirm that the Area Commander had granted permission to the appellant to stay at SLNS Gajaba. Furthermore, there is no inconsistency on the fact that at no stage the appellant obtained written permission from the Area Commander, to stay at SLNS Gajaba.

At the conclusion of the testimonies, the Judge Advocate had addressed the members and had extensively dealt with the evidence of all relevant witnesses. He had drawn the attention of the members to the inconsistencies among the evidence of witnesses, and different positions taken up by the prosecution and defence in their submissions. Furthermore, he had given instructions to the members on the standard and burden of proof placed on the prosecution. The Judge Advocate quite correctly had said that the issue whether the appellant had permission to stay at SLNS Gajaba is a question of fact that should be decided by the members. One other pertinent fact that had been placed before the members by the Judge Advocate is the absence of written permission for the appellant to stay at SLNS Gajaba and the issue whether this is a matter where such written permission is required or not.

When the totality of the oral and documentary evidence is considered in the context of the summing up of the Judge Advocate, it is clear that the members had been allowed to discharge their duty by arriving at a decision on the guilt or innocence of the appellant by forming their own view on the core issue, based on the evidence presented.

In my view, inconsistences in the oral evidence when considered together with all documentary evidence, on no reasonable hypothesis the verdict of the Court Martial could be classified as irrational, illegal, arbitrary or perverse. It is also not possible to hold that the evidence presented before the Court Martial, is not reasonably capable of supporting the finding. Therefore, 'no evidence rule' cannot be invoked against the verdict of the Court Martial in relation to its verdict on the first charge too. Furthermore, a court exercising writ jurisdiction has no authority to substitute the findings of facts arrived by the Court Martial with the findings of the court based on its opinion and reach a different conclusion. Therefore, I am of the view that there is no legal basis to interfere with the verdict of the Court Martial.

Is the sentence imposed on the petitioner violative of Section 104 of the Navy Act?

Section 104 of the Act prescribes 'dismissal with disgrace from the Navy or with any less severe punishment in the scale of punishment' as the sentence to be imposed for an offence under said section. Section 120 of the Act sets out the scale of punishments, in the descending order. While the highest punishment as per the said scale is death, dismissal with disgrace from the Navy and dismissal without disgrace remains the third and sixth in the scale of thirteen different types of punishment. For an offence under section 104, dismissal with disgrace remain the highest punishment and dismissal without disgrace remains the fourth highest punishment.

The main contention of the learned President's Counsel for the appellant regarding the sentence is that the sentence of dismissal without disgrace imposed on count 2 fails to pass the 'proportionality test'.

The alleged misconduct of the appellant and surrounding circumstances relating to the second count had already been discussed when considering the legality of the verdict of the Court Martial. Therefore, repetition of such facts is unwarranted and unnecessary at this stage. The Judge Advocate in his directions had explained the nature of the allegation and the respective positions taken up by the appellant and the prosecution. It is also pertinent to observe that the appellant was provided an opportunity to plead in mitigation and the prosecution had presented the appellant's personal file to the Court Martial for consideration. Court martial having considered all such material including the letter of displeasure issued by the Navy Commander at a prior occasion had imposed severe reprimand and dismissal without disgrace as sentence for count 1 and 2, respectively.

Learned Deputy Solicitor General defending the aforesaid sentence imposed by the Court Martial on both counts, submitted that the appellant as a senior officer of the Navy failed to provide leadership to subordinates who were under his command at a time his presence at his area of command remained his core duty. Appellant's failure to be present in his area of command without permission from his superior is a serious breach that caused prejudice to good order and naval discipline. In contrast, the learned President's Counsel for the appellant contended that the sentence of 'dismissal without disgrace' is disproportionate in view of the appellant's good record in the Navy and steps he took while remaining at SLNS Gajaba at the time of emergency.

Court Martial in imposing the sentence on count two was possessed with all this material and has imposed the fourth severe punishment that is prescribed by law. Discipline is a major factor that needs to be preserved and respected in armed forces to ensure that all members would contribute to maintain an effective and efficient defense mechanism. The sentence imposed by the Court Martial on second count is neither disproportionately drastic nor it is altogether excessive and out of proportion to the occasion. Therefore, in my view there is no basis to interfere with the sentence imposed by the Court Martial.

The Court of Appeal despite erred by holding, that the appeal against the sentence passed by the Court Martial under section 122 of the Navy Act, to the President is an alternative remedy which ousted the writ jurisdiction of Court, proceeded to examine rest of the issues and had refused to grant relief to the appellant on merits of the application.

In view of my findings on issues that are discussed hereinbefore, there is no legal basis to grant writs of certiorari and mandamus as pleaded by the appellant. Therefore, the appeal of the appellant against the judgement of the Court of Appeal fails. In view of these findings, examining the remaining issue - whether this Court could grant the petitioner any relief in view of Section 122 of the Navy Act read with Section 10 of the Navy Act as the Petitioner's decommissioning has been approved by His Excellency the President? - is of an academic exercise only. Therefore, I will refrain from examining the said question.

The appeal of the appellant is dismissed. In the circumstances of this case, I refrain from making any order on costs.

Judge of the Supreme Court

Yasantha Kodagoda, PC, J

This judgment relates to an Appeal submitted to this Court against a Judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 30th July 2015.

On 16th January 2017, following a consideration of a Petition of Appeal to this Court dated 9th September 2015 against the afore-stated judgment of the Court of Appeal and submissions made by learned Counsel for the Petitioner and the Respondents, this Court granted Special Leave to Appeal in respect of the following questions of law:

(i) Did the Court of Appeal err in holding that the Appeal against the sentences passed by the Court Marshal under section 122 of the Navy Act to His Excellency the President, is an 'alternative remedy' which ousted the writ jurisdiction of Court in respect of the subject matter of the Petitioner's Application before the said Court?

(ii) Did the Court of Appeal err in holding that there was no need for the Court Marshal to have given reasons for its verdict on the sole basis that the Code of Criminal Procedure Act does not require a jury to give reasons for its verdict, nor does the Navy Act require a Court Marshal to give reasons for its findings?

(iii) Did the Court of Appeal err in its failure to consider whether the Judge Advocate's summing up did not justify the determination of the Court Marshal?

(iv) Are the sentences imposed on the Petitioner violative of section 104 of the Navy Act?

(v) Can this Court grant the Petitioner any relief in view of section 122 of the Navy Act read with section 10 of the Navy Act, as the Petitioner's decommissioning has been approved by His Excellency the President?

[The fifth question of law was raised by learned counsel for the Respondents. The term 'Petitioner' referred to above, is a reference to the 'Appellant' in the present Appeal.]

On 24th July 2020 at the commencement of the argument of this Appeal, learned President's Counsel for the Appellant with the leave of this Court, raised two further grounds of Appeal, which may be couched in the following terms:

(vi) Is the verdict of the Court Martial bad in law, in that, there was no evidence placed before the Court Martial which could be used to substantiate the verdict of 'guilty'?

(vii) Are the sentences imposed by the Court Martial bad in law, in that the said sentences are not in conformity with the principle of proportionality?

Learned Senior State Counsel did not raise serious objection to this Court entertaining and considering those two additional questions of law. In any event, it is trite law that once the Supreme Court grants 'special leave to appeal', it thereafter gains inherent jurisdiction to consider any further pertinent questions of law arising out of the judgment appealed against.

Background

The incident which led to the pronouncement of the impugned finding (verdict) of the Court Martial proceedings referred to in the judgment of the Court of Appeal, occurred in the backdrop of the pendency of terrorism perpetrated by a terrorist organization called the "Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam" (LTTE) and an armed conflict between the LTTE and the Armed Forces of Sri Lanka. The LTTE entertained the goal of establishing a separate sovereign State primarily in the Northern and Eastern Provinces of Sri Lanka to be named "Tamil Eelam". The conduct of the LTTE which was unconstitutional, was associated with the unleashing of terrorist acts, posed a serious threat to national security, caused an interruption of the territorial integrity of the country, prevented the State from exercising its writ of governance in certain parts of the country, and disrupted the exercise of sovereignty by the citizens of the Republic. In response, the Armed Forces of Sri Lanka conducted a series of military operations aimed at suppressing and terminating terrorism. At the time of the incident under reference, "Humanitarian Operation" - the last of a series of military operations was afoot. It ended in May 2009 with the successful termination of LTTE terrorism and its organized presence in Sri Lanka.

As part of its terrorist operations, with the aid of small rudimentary aircrafts, from time to time, the LTTE launched several aerial attacks on different parts of the country, which included Colombo. One such attack launched by the LTTE, took place on the night of 28th October 2008. That was the day on which the Appellant's conduct which became the subject matter of a trial before a Court Marshal established in terms of the Navy Act took place. It is the finding (verdict) of that Court Martial and the orders of sentence which were impugned before the Court of Appeal.

The Appellant

Having joined the Sri Lanka Navy on 28th February 1986 as a trainee Cadet, following continuous service to the nation and having incrementally obtained a series of promotions to higher ranks, on 1st January 2008 the Appellant had been elevated to the rank of Captain. In addition to routine training, the Appellant has obtained a Masters' Degree in Defence Studies Management. During 23 years of service, the Appellant has undergone specialized education and training in several areas. He held several important appointments which included positions which required him to command Sri Lanka Navy vessels, such as long patrol boats, fast attack crafts, a surveillance and logistics vessel, Submarine Chaser "SLN Parakramabahu", and the largest standing craft of the Navy at the time, "SLN Shakthi". He also served as Commanding Officer of several Navy camps and detachments. The Appellant has placed before the Court of Appeal material which reflect that he had contributed in a significant manner towards multiple naval operations against the LTTE, and towards research and development. In recognition of his services to the Sri Lanka Navy and to the motherland, the Appellant has been decorated by the award of several gallantry medals including the "Rana Soora Padakkama" (first awarded in 2001 and re-awarded twice in 2002), "Purna Bhumi Padakkama", the "Riviresa Campaign Service Medal", and had received multiple commendations. It is noteworthy that in his summing up, the Judge Advocate has observed that the Appellant had served the Navy, 'exceptionally'.

The incident

With the progression of the "Humanitarian Operation", the Army had captured certain territorial areas from the control of the LTTE. During the period immediately preceding September 2008, the Army had handed over two such areas, namely Vankalai and Nanaddan (situated in the District of Mannar) to the Navy. As at the time of the incident in issue, the Navy was in the process of establishing its presence in Vankalai and Nanaddan, and constructing logistics associated with the setting up of Navy camps in those areas. As Vankalai and Nanaddan were newly established camps, they had not been commissioned, and for administrative and logistics purposes, attached to SLNS Gajaba, which was at that time, the main Navy camp in Mannar.

On 24th July 2008, at a time when the Appellant was serving as the Commanding Officer of the Navy camp SLNS Rangala situated within the Colombo Port, the Appellant received a transfer order from the Commander of the Sri Lanka Navy, Vice Admiral W.K.J. Karannagoda – the 1st Respondent. He was required with effect from 4th September 2009, to assume duties as the "Contingent Commander – Vankalai and Nanaddan". This appointment came within the overall administrative command of the North Central Naval Area (which is a territorial administrative area demarcated by the Navy), commanded by the Area Commander of the North Central Naval Area, who was at that time, Rear Admiral Tikiri Bandara Illangakoon.

On 4th September 2008, the Appellant proceeded to Mannar and arrived at SLNS Gajaba to assume duties as the Contingent Commander of Vankalai and Nanaddan. He proceeded to Vankalai on the 7th, and stayed there for two weeks. On 5th September, the day after his arrival at SLNS Gajaba, when the Appellant met with the Area Commander, the latter had instructed the Appellant to identify a suitable location in Vankalai where the Contingent Headquarters for Vankalai could be established. Accommodation for the Contingent Commander was to be constructed within the Vankalai Navy camp. The Appellant's position is that the temporary arrangement for him to stay during night-time at SLNS Gajaba was put in place with the knowledge, concurrence, verbal approval and acquiescence of the Area Commander Rear Admiral Illangakoon. This position has been refuted by Rear Admiral Illangakoon.

Following the initial 14 days at Vankalai, the Appellant started staying overnight at the 'VIP Chalet' in SLNS Gajaba, while during day-time, performing his duties in Vankalai and Nanaddan.

The position of the Respondents is that the Appellant had not received any authorization from the Area Commander, to, even as an interim arrangement, stay at SLNS Gajaba during night-time. Thus, the Respondents claim that by staying overnight at SLNS Gajaba, the Appellant had acted contrary to Naval law and thereby committed an offence.

On 28th October 2008, at approximately 10.20 pm, the LTTE launched an aerial attack on the Thalladi Army camp, by dropping two bombs. (Thalladi is also situated in the District of Mannar, North of the town of Mannar, adjacent the A14 road. This had been the main Army camp in Mannar.) The Vankalai Navy detachment was located approximately 7 km from the Thalladi Army camp. In preparedness to respond to possible further attacks by the LTTE, Navy personnel at the Talaimannar, Gajaba and Vankalai camps had assumed 'action station' positions.

When this attack took place, the Appellant had been at the VIP Chalet of SLNS Gajaba, in his temporary accommodation. The Commanding Officer of the Vankalai Navy detachment was at Vankalai. When the 'action stations' siren was sounded, the Appellant rushed out of the VIP Chalet. Outside, he met Supplies Officer Lt. Commander T.N.S. Perera, who was the Acting Commanding Officer of SLNS Gajaba on that day. He informed the Appellant of the attack. Thereafter, the Appellant telephoned the Commanding Officer Vankalai Lt. Commander Rohana Dissanayake and inquired about the situation at Vankalai. The Appellant ascertained what action he had taken up to that point of time, and had informed him that he was about to leave SLNS Gajaba to arrive at Vankalai. Lt. Commander Dissanayake had informed the Appellant that he had taken all necessary steps, sequel to his having heard of the dropping of two bombs. He had added that there was no necessity for the Appellant to come to Vankalai. In the meantime, the Appellant rushed to the Operations Room at SLNS Gajaba. Thereafter, the Appellant had on his own initiative, taken control of the Operations Room of SLNS Gajaba and taken several steps in response to the LTTE attack and to counter any further attacks. His justification for taking over command at the Operations Room of SLNS Gajaba is that Lt. Commander T.N.S. Perera being a 'logistics officer' of the Navy, was inexperienced in handling combat related emergency matters. Thus, it was necessary to step into his shoes and take command of SLNS Gajaba.

The difference of positions between the Appellant and the Area Commander Rear Admiral Illangakoon as to whether or not the latter gave permission to the Appellant to temporarily reside at SLNS Gajaba was the main issue which was at the very epicentre of the trial conducted against the Appellant before the Court Martial. Further, the Respondents claim that notwithstanding all the measures which the Appellant claims to have taken from the Operations Room of SLNS Gajaba, it remains clear that at the time of the LTTE attack, the Appellant who was the Contingent Commander - Vankalai and Nanaddan was not within the 'area of duty' assigned to him (referred to as the 'Tactical Area of Responsibility' - TAOR) namely, Vankalai and Nanaddan, and that during the attack and its immediate aftermath, he did not rush to his TAOR. The position of the Respondents is that, independent of the situation that prevailed at SLNS Gajaba at the time of the attack, the Appellant was duty bound to rush to his TAOR and perform his duties. The Respondents assert that, in the circumstances, the Appellant has acted contrary to Naval law and discipline, and thus committed an offence.

Action against the Appellant

On 17th November 2008, the Appellant was served with a letter calling upon him to provide explanation for "living at SLNS Gajaba which is outside the area of responsibility" ("P7a"). On 18th November 2008, the Appellant responded and provided explanation ("P7b"). Subsequently, a Board of Inquiry comprising of the 6th to 8th Respondents had been constituted by the 1st Respondent to conduct a preliminary investigation into the allegation that the Appellant had 'vacated the tactical area of responsibility without permission'. Consequently, the Board of Inquiry interviewed the Appellant and several other officers. Afterwards, the Board of Inquiry submitted a Report ("R3") to the 1st Respondent together with findings that the Appellant had 'stayed away from his TAOR without prior approval, denying operational leadership to men under his command'. However, the Board noted that the Appellant remaining outside the TAOR had been with the complete knowledge, concurrence, verbal approval and acquiescence of the Area Commander, a fact which such Commander himself had denied. The Board recommended that suitable disciplinary action be taken against the Appellant.

Thereafter, a 'Charge Sheet' containing the afore-stated allegation was served on the Appellant. Commencing on 12th January 2009, the 5th Respondent recorded a 'Summary of Evidence'. Following the recording of the 'Summary of Evidence', the 5th Respondent presented a report to the 1st Respondent, containing a finding that there was sufficient prima facie evidence to substantiate the charges against the Appellant, and recommending that the Appellant be tried before a Court Martial.

In the Court of Appeal, the Appellant sought to impugn the lawfulness of the proceedings of the aforesaid Board of Inquiry and its report, as well as the report which was prepared following the recording of the Summary of Evidence. However, he did not seek to challenge the lawfulness of those proceedings and corresponding findings contained in the said Report in the Supreme Court.

Institution of Court Martial proceedings against the Appellant

According to the Respondents, following a consideration of the Report of the 6th to 8th Respondents and the Report of the 5th Respondent, the 1st Respondent had decided to convene a Court Martial to try the Appellant. Accordingly, on 4th March 2009, a 'charge sheet' signed by the 1st Respondent had been served on the Appellant. The 1st Respondent also constituted a Court Martial comprising of the 2nd Respondent - Rear Admiral M.R.U. Siriwardena (Chairman), 3rd Respondent - Commodore M. Prematileka, and 4th Respondent - Commodore M.A.J. De Costa as members of the Court Martial. Rear Admiral S. Palitha Fernando, PC was appointed by the 1st Respondent to function as the Judge Advocate of the Court Martial.

Charges against the Appellant

During the course of the Court Martial proceedings, the original 'Charge Sheet' issued under the hand of the 1st Respondent was amended with regard to the first charge. Learned President's Counsel for the Appellant made no complaint regarding that amendment introduced to the 'Charge Sheet'. The charges (as amended) levelled against the Appellant were as follows:

(i) That during the days and time period specified in the charge (which included the day on which the LTTE aerial attack took place), excluding certain days on which the Appellant was on leave and including certain days the Commanding Officer of Vankalai was on leave or was otherwise not at the Vankalai detachment, without having obtained the formal approval from a competent authority*, during night time, left or remained out of the place of duty (tactical area of responsibility), namely the Naval detachment at Vankalai and Nanaddan, and thereby committed an offence in terms of section 60(2) of the Navy Act.

(ii) That during the afore-stated time period, being an officer coming within the North Central Naval Area and appointed to function as the Contingent Commander for Vankalai and Nanaddan, on 28th October 2008, during night-time when the Thalladi Army Camp came under a terrorist aerial attack, and having got to know that the enemy aerial attack plan had been activated for the Vankalai and Nanaddan naval areas to counter the said aerial attacks, did not proceed to the tactical area of responsibility and give leadership to men under his command*, and thereby acted in violation of naval discipline and good order, and thus committed an offence in terms of section 104(1) of the Navy Act.* [Emphasis added]

[An examination of the evidence presented before the Court Martial reveals that the main contentious issues between the prosecution and the defence, have been the portions underlined by me in the two counts.]

It is not in dispute that both the institution of Court Martial proceedings and the framing of charges against the Appellant were founded upon the exercise of authority by the 1st Respondent, and per-se not unlawful.

Trial before the Court Martial

Commencing on 2nd May 2009, a trial before the Court Martial constituted for the specific purpose was held. Area Commander, North Central Naval Area - Rear Admiral Tikiri Bandara Illangakoon, Secretary to the Area Commander Lt. Commander - K.W.B.M.P. Wijesundera, Deputy Area Commander Commodore - V.E.C. Jayakody, and the Commanding Officer Vankalai - Lt. Commander Rohana Dissanayake testified for the prosecution. The Appellant himself, Commanding Officer of SLNS Gajaba - Lt. Commander Ranaweera, Contingent Commander Mannar - Commander Baanagoda, Second in Command of the Silawatura Navy camp - Lt. Commander Deegala, and Supplies Officer SLNS Gajaba - Lt. Commander T.N.S. Perera testified on behalf of the defence.

Consideration of the testimonies given by witnesses before the Court Martial and the respective positions of counsel with regard to the evidence

At this point, it would be necessary to refer to the evidence led by the prosecution and the defence before the Court Martial and to the submissions made in that regard by learned Counsel for the Appellant and the Respondents.

Indeed, as has been pointed out by Justice Sisira De Abrew in Lt. Commander Ruwan Pathirana v. Commodore Dharmasiriwardene and Others [2007] 1 Sri L.R. 24, the scope of judicial review in an application for a writ of certiorari in respect of a conviction or sentence pronounced by a Court Martial, is different to and narrower than the scope of judicial scrutiny in a conventional appeal from a conviction and sentence pronounced by a Court of law which has exercised criminal jurisdiction and conducted a trial into the alleged commission of an offence by an accused. Notwithstanding a Court Martial exercising a hybrid of disciplinary and criminal jurisdiction, judicial review in a writ application in respect of the findings of a Court Martial, is exercised for the limited purpose of determining the legality (lawfulness) of the impugned decisions of the Court Martial as opposed to the merits of the decisions. However, as I intend to point out at a subsequent point in this judgment, a consideration of the evidence led before the Court Martial would be necessary, particularly for the purpose of determining the legality of the findings of the Court Martial. Thus, the following consideration of the evidence.

Learned President's Counsel for the Appellant submitted that, to prove the first charge, the prosecution relied purely on the testimony of the Area Commander - Rear Admiral Illangakoon, that he had not given permission to the Appellant to stay at SLNS Gajaba located outside the Appellant's TAOR, permission which he was entitled to give either in writing or orally. He submitted that Rear Admiral Illangakoon's oral evidence was to the effect that he did not give the Appellant permission to stay at SLNS Gajaba. However, this position was contradicted by other witnesses including another witness summoned by the prosecution itself to give evidence.

The position of the Appellant was that the Area Commander had given him permission to stay at SLNS Gajaba until a suitable accommodation facility was constructed at the Vankalai camp. Learned President's Counsel quoted the evidence of Commanding Officer Vankalai - Lt. Commander Dissanayake. His position had been that prior to the arrival of the Appellant in Mannar, at a meeting of Heads of departments held on 28th August, he had brought to the attention of Rear Admiral Illangakoon that there was no suitable accommodation facility at Vankalai for an officer of the rank of the Appellant. In response, Rear Admiral Illangakoon had instructed the Commanding Officer SLNS Gajaba to provide temporary accommodation for the Appellant at SLNS Gajaba. That was to be an interim measure, until a suitable accommodation facility was arranged in Vankalai. When the Appellant arrived in Mannar, Lt. Commander Dissanayake had informed the Appellant of this temporary arrangement. Learned President's Counsel submitted that Commanding Officer SLNS Gajaba - Lt. Commander Ranaweera had in his testimony corroborated this position. Lt. Commander Ranaweera testified that he had received instructions from the Area Commander to permit the Appellant to stay at SLNS Gajaba and had informed the Appellant of that arrangement. It was submitted that when this position was put to Rear Admiral Illangakoon, he had indicated that the Commanding Officer SLNS Gajaba "may have" sought his permission. At the next meeting of the Heads of departments held on 20th October 2008, the same issue had been brought to the attention of the Area Commander and he had issued further instructions to expedite the process of constructing new contingent headquarters and an accommodation facility at the Vankalai camp. Deputy Area Commander Jayakodi's evidence had been that he himself was aware that the Appellant was staying at SLNS Gajaba and that he believed that this fact was within the knowledge of the Area Commander.

The evidence of the Appellant was that, following his having reported for duty in Mannar, he received instructions from the Area Commander himself to identify a suitable location within Vankalai to establish his Contingent Headquarters and quarters. He had received permission (verbally) from the Area Commander to stay at SLNS Gajaba, until proper accommodation arrangements were constructed at Vankalai. Accordingly, he stayed overnight at the 'VIP chalet' at SLNS Gajaba. One day, the Area Commander arrived at SLNS Gajaba and he too stayed at the same chalet, along with him. At a Heads of departments meeting held on 24th September 2008 chaired by the Area Commander, particularly as it was dangerous for the Appellant to travel between SLNS Gajaba and Vankalai, he had raised this issue regarding the construction of his Contingent Headquarters and accommodation facility in Vankalai, and certain decisions had been taken by the Area Commander with the view to expediting the process.

In response, learned Senior State Counsel submitted that the Area Commander - Rear Admiral Illangakoon had given clear and specific evidence that the Appellant did not ask for permission and that he had not given permission to the Appellant to remain outside his TAOR. The Area Commander had not been aware that the Appellant had been staying at SLNS Gajaba during nighttime. Learned Senior State Counsel relied heavily on the admission made by the Appellant during cross-examination, that his TAOR was Vankalai and Nanaddan, and that he stayed at SLNS Gajaba which was outside his TAOR. He had also admitted that he was aware that according to his job functions, he was required to stay within his TAOR. Further, the Appellant had admitted that he did not get 'written permission' from the Area Commander to stay outside his TAOR, at SLNS Gajaba.

Learned President's Counsel for the Appellant submitted that on the night of the 28th October 2008, when the 'action station' siren was raised at SLNS Gajaba, the Appellant who was at the 'VIP chalet', had rushed out. He had been informed by Lt. Commander T.N.S. Perera (who was acting for the Commanding Officer of SLNS Gajaba as the Commanding Officer was on leave), of the LTTE aerial attack. The Appellant had initially decided to rush to Vankalai on his motor cycle. He instructed his personal security officer to get ready to proceed with him to Vankalai. Before leaving to Vankalai, he rushed to the 'operations room' of SLNS Gajaba. He contacted Commanding Officer Vankalai - Lt. Commander Dissanayake, who had informed the Appellant that he had taken all necessary measures to secure the Vankalai camp and that there was no necessity for the Appellant to come there. Given the size of the Vankalai Navy camp, the Appellant thought that the chances of the LTTE dropping a bomb at the Vankalai camp was quite remote. On the other hand, that night, both the Commanding Officer and the Executive Officer of SLNS Gajaba (the first and the second officers in-charge of the camp) had been on leave. The next senior most officer of SLNS Gajaba - Lt. Commander T.N.S. Perera was a 'logistics officer' who had minimal combat experience. In the circumstances, the Appellant had decided that he should remain at SLNS Gajaba, take necessary decisions and provide leadership to its personnel. Learned President's Counsel submitted that the conduct of the Appellant on that occasion was a 'tacit two-way arrangement' based on exigencies of the situation.

Learned President's Counsel emphasized that the Appellant had satisfied himself that under the leadership of Lt. Commander Rohana Dissanayake, the Vankalai camp was in safe hands. Further, he had himself taken all necessary measures to ensure the safety of that camp. Lt. Commander Dissanayake had also explained to the Appellant that it was not necessary for him to rush to Vankalai. In those circumstances, the Appellant had decided that his presence in Vankalai was not essential. He was conscious of the fact that having dropped two bombs on the Thalladi Army camp, on its return journey, the LTTE aircrafts were unlikely to drop another bomb in the same general area of Mannar. Particularly as the Appellant was the third senior most officer in the entire North Central Naval Area, and as he had considerable combat experience, he thought that his primary duty was to provide leadership to SLNS Gajaba and defend that naval base. Counsel submitted that it would have been irresponsible on the part of the Appellant had he left SLNS Gajaba keeping it in the hands of Lt. Commander T.N.S. Perera who did not have necessary military leadership skills and combat experience. Having assumed de-facto command of SLNS Gajaba, the Appellant had taken all necessary measures that were required. In his testimony, the Appellant has explained in detail, the nature of the action he took from the operations room of SLNS Gajaba. He had contacted the Air Force base in Mannar and spoken with the Commanding Officer of the Thalladi Army camp. He had also alerted the officer in-charge of the Rangala naval base and informed him of the approaching LTTE aircrafts. Throughout that night, the Appellant had contacted the Commanding Officer of the Vankalai Navy camp - Lt. Commander Dissanayake, ascertained the situation at that end, and given necessary instructions to him.

Learned President's Counsel also submitted that witnesses for the prosecution had not given evidence regarding an essential ingredient of the second charge, namely, that the conduct of the Appellant on the night of the 28th of October 2008 was 'prejudicial to good order and naval discipline'. Thus, he submitted that, on that ground alone, the 2nd count on the charge sheet should have failed.

With regard to the 2nd count, the submission of the learned Senior State Counsel was that the Appellant had admitted that it would have been possible for him to travel to the Vankalai Navy camp within 10 to 15 minutes, and that he had originally got ready to go there. He had subsequently changed his mind. The Appellant had admitted that it was his duty to have gone to the Vankalai camp. He had also admitted that, on the night of the 28th of October 2008, he had not obtained permission from a senior officer to remain at SLNS Gajaba and function in-charge of its operations room. He had remained at SLNS Gajaba based on his own discretion. Learned Senior State Counsel submitted that the Appellant did not have a valid excuse for staying back at SLNS Gajaba and for not having rushed to his TAOR. He submitted that returning a verdict of 'guilty' in respect of the 2nd count was not only reasonable, it was the only finding the Court Martial could have arrived at.

Summing up of the Judge-Advocate

At the conclusion of the trial, the Judge Advocate summed up the evidence presented by the prosecution and the defence, and addressed the Court Martial on the applicable law. During the hearing of the Writ Application in the Court of Appeal and during the hearing of this Appeal, learned President's Counsel for the Appellant did not impugn the summing up. In fact, learned counsel asserted that the summing up contained several components which were supportive of the Appellant's contention that he was not guilty of committing the two offences contained in the charge sheet. Due to its comprehensive and balanced nature, learned President's Counsel for the Appellant appreciated the summing up. His submissions in that regard were only short of rating the summing up as a truly impartial, comprehensive and a model address.

The Judge Advocate has drawn the attention of the Court Martial to the following salient aspects of the case:

(i) Commanding Officer Vankalai - Lt. Commander Dissanayake who was called to testify for the prosecution had contradicted the testimony of the Area Commander

Rear Admiral Illangakoon, and corroborated the position of the accused. Nevertheless, he had not been treated as an 'adverse witness' by the prosecution.

(ii) Commanding Officer SLNS Gajaba - Lt. Commander Ranaweera who was called to testify for the defence, in his evidence had also contradicted the evidence of the Area Commander and corroborated the position of the accused. Consideration should be given by the Court Martial as to whether a junior officer would contradict the testimony of a senior officer such as that of the Area Commander, unless the latter's evidence was untrue.

(iii) Defence witnesses corroborated the evidence given by the accused.

(iv) The accused should be convicted only if the Court Martial was satisfied that the entirety of the defence evidence should be rejected in its totality.

(v) Should the Court Martial entertain any doubt regarding the testimony of the Area Commander, the benefit of such doubt should be given to the accused and he should be 'acquitted'.

The Judge Advocate has also addressed the Court Martial on the fact that the prosecution does not dispute that on the night of the LTTE attack, while the Appellant was at SLNS Gajaba, he had taken all necessary steps and given suitable instructions. What was in issue was whether in the circumstances that prevailed on the night of the 28th October 2008, the accused not having proceeded to his TAOR amounted to a violation of 'good order and naval discipline'.

Finding (verdict) of the Court Martial and sentencing orders

It is not in dispute that on 13th May 2009, following the conclusion of the proceedings of the Court Martial, it found the Appellant "guilty" of committing both offences in the amended charge sheet (vide "P17a"). It is evident from the proceedings of the Court Martial that prior to the determination of the sentences, the Court Martial had afforded an opportunity to the Appellant to make representations on his behalf in mitigation of the sentences. Learned Counsel who represented the Appellant before the Court Martial had made use of that opportunity and addressed the Court Martial regarding the unblemished record of the Appellant and his having been decorated for his yeoman service to the nation. Following a consideration of that plea in mitigation of the sentences, the Appellant was sentenced by the Court Martial (vide "P17b") in the following manner:

1st Charge – Severe Reprimand

2nd Charge – Dismissal without disgrace from the Navy.

The record of the proceedings also reflects that prior to the conclusion of proceedings of the Court Martial, the learned counsel for the Appellant had notified the tribunal that the Appellant intends to present an Appeal to His Excellency the President in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act. That was for the purpose of seeking a revision of the sentences.

Appeal to the President in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act

On 14th May 2009, acting in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act, the Appellant presented an Appeal to His Excellency the President, seeking a revision of the sentences imposed on him. A copy of that Appeal was produced to the Court of Appeal, marked "P18". In the circumstances, the operation of the sentences was stayed. Nevertheless, the Appellant was directed not to report for work, pending a decision by the President. By his letter dated 28th May 2009, the 1st Respondent forwarded the Appeal to His Excellency the President through the Secretary to the Ministry of Defence. Following a consideration of the Appeal, His Excellency the President turned down the request of the Appellant for a revision of the sentences. By letter dated 14th July 2009, the Secretary to the Ministry of Defence conveyed the decision of the President to the 1st Respondent. In the circumstances, the punishment imposed by the Court Martial was operationalized and executed. Accordingly, with effect from 16th August 2009, the Appellant was discharged from the Navy.

Application filed by the Appellant in the Court of Appeal seeking the issuance of a Writ of Certiorari

By Application dated 25th June 2009, the Appellant petitioned the Court of Appeal impugning the afore-stated finding (verdict) and orders of sentence of the Court Martial. He sought the following reliefs:

(a) A mandate in the nature of a Writ of Certiorari quashing the findings of the Court Martial dated 13th May 2009.

(b) A mandate in the nature of a Writ of Certiorari quashing the sentences imposed by the Court Martial dated 13th May 2009.

Primary positions of the Appellant and the Respondents before the Court of Appeal

The Appellant's position was that since the prosecution had failed to prove the two charges against him beyond reasonable doubt, the Court Martial should have returned a verdict of 'not guilty' and acquitted him. The Appellant also asserted that the findings (verdict and sentences) of the Court Martial did not contain reasons therefor. In the circumstances, it was argued before the Court of Appeal that the findings of the Court Martial were illegal, ultra vires, arbitrary, capricious, and unreasonable.

The Respondents' position was that the proceedings of the Court Martial were lawful and fair, and following a proper consideration of the evidence, the Court Martial had rightly arrived at a finding that the Appellant was 'guilty' of both charges. Thus, their position was that both the conviction and the sentences imposed on the Appellant were lawful and appropriate. The Respondents asserted that a Court Martial is not obliged by law to give reasons for its findings.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal

Following the hearing of the Application, by judgment dated 30th July 2015, the Court of Appeal dismissed the Application of the Appellant.

The judgment of the Court of Appeal contains inter-alia the following findings:

(i) On the day of the LTTE aerial attack, the Petitioner (which is a reference to the Appellant before the Supreme Court) had remained at SLNS Gajaba without proceeding to Vankalai.

(ii) The Code of Criminal Procedure Act does not require a jury to give reasons for its verdict. Similarly, the Navy Act does not require a Court Martial to give reasons for its findings. In G.S.C. Fonseka vs. Lt. General J. Jayasuriya and five others, it has been held that a Court Martial need not give reasons for its finding (verdict).

(iii) By presenting an Appeal to the President in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act, the Petitioner has sought an 'alternative remedy'. Where there is an alternative remedy, a writ of certiorari will not lie.

(iv) The Petitioner's application under section 122 was refused by His Excellency the President. Under section 10 of the Navy Act, the Petitioner holds office at the pleasure of the President. The Petitioner's dismissal had been approved by the President.

In view of the afore-stated findings, the Court of Appeal dismissed the Application. The Appeal to the Supreme Court is against the afore-stated judgment of the Court of Appeal.

Consideration of the questions of law, findings and conclusions

(i) Does the 'appeal' which was submitted by the Appellant to the President amount to an 'alternative remedy' which ousts the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal?

The issue to be determined is whether the Application (what has been referred to as an 'Appeal') presented by the Appellant in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act to His Excellency the President amounts to an 'alternative remedy' which 'ousts the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal' in considering and awarding relief as prayed for by the Petitioner (Appellant) in respect of the Application filed by him seeking writs of certiorari quashing certain decisions including the verdict pronounced, and the sentences imposed by the Court Martial.

"P18" is a copy of the Application dated 14th May 2009, titled "An Application for revision of sentence in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act", presented by the Appellant to His Excellency the President through the Commander of the Sri Lanka Navy. This Application contains inter-alia a narration of the factual sequence which culminated in the pronouncement of the impugned finding (verdict) and the sentences imposed on the Appellant by the Court Martial. Further, it contains the following prayer:

> "Being aggrieved by the aforesaid sentence passed on me, I humbly request Your Excellency to revise the sentence imposed on me by the President and the members of the Court Martial considering the mitigatory circumstances stated above and the following:" [Emphasis added]

In addition to the reiteration of the grounds for mitigation of the sentences advanced before the Court Martial by counsel for the Appellant, four more mitigatory grounds have also been cited by the Appellant. The Appellant has concluded his Application to the President, with the following sentence:

"I humbly request Your Excellency as the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces to consider all this (sic) aforesaid circumstances and revise the sentences imposed on me which will enable me to serve the Sri Lanka Navy and my motherland further." [Emphasis added]

By letter dated 28th May 2009, the 1st Respondent had, through the Secretary to the Ministry of Defence, forwarded this 'Appeal' to His Excellency the President. When forwarding the 'Appeal', the 1st Respondent had attached his observations and the proceedings of the Court Martial. Following a consideration of the Application and the views of the 1st Respondent, His Excellency the President had decided to 'ratify the recommendation made by the Commander of the Navy'. Though inconsequential, it is necessary to note that the 1st Respondent had not made any 'recommendation'. He had expressed the view that the conduct of the Appellant was inexcusable. Be that as it may, in effect, the President had decided not to grant any relief to the Appellant. The decision of the President was conveyed to the 1st Respondent by Additional Secretary to the Ministry of Defence by his letter dated 14th July 2009. Accordingly, the Appellant was informed of the outcome of his Application. In view of the decision of the President, the 1st Respondent had given effect to the sentences imposed on the Appellant, and accordingly, with effect from 16th August 2009, the Appellant had been discharged from the Sri Lanka Navy. The formal announcement that the Appellant has been discharged from the Sri Lanka Navy had been produced before the Court of Appeal. ("R7")

The view expressed by the Court of Appeal (in the impugned judgment), is as follows:

> "Petitioner has sought an alternative remedy under section 122 of the Navy Act; he has made an appeal to the President. Where there is an alternative remedy a writ of certiorari will not lie".

Submissions of Counsel

President's Counsel for the Appellant - Learned President's Counsel critiqued the Court of Appeal's view regarding this matter. He submitted that a verdict and sentence of a naval Court Martial are specifically made amenable to the writ jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal. He cited section 132 of the Navy Act in support of this contention. Learned counsel also submitted that, the principle that when there is an alternate remedy the writ will not lie is not an inflexible rule. Citing Chief Justice Neville Samarakoon's views in Kanagaratna v. Rajasunderam [(1981) 1 Sri L.R. 492], learned President's Counsel submitted that the availability of an alternative remedy does not prevent a court from issuing a writ in cases of excess or absence of jurisdiction. Further, citing the judgment of the Supreme Court in Somasunderam Vanniasingham v. Forbes and Another [(1993) 2 Sri L.R. 362], it was submitted that before a Court refuses to review a decision of an inferior tribunal, it should satisfy itself that the administrative relief provided by a statute, should be a satisfactory substitute to the impugned decision being reviewed by Court.

Senior State Counsel for the Respondents - In response, learned Senior State Counsel, possibly having understood the soundness of the argument presented in this regard by the learned President's Counsel for the Appellant, did not seek to justify the conclusion reached in this regard by the Court of Appeal. In his post-argument written submissions, learned Senior State Counsel submitted that "... the decision of the Court of Appeal on this aspect of an alternate remedy, even if erroneous, ...", indicating his inability to defend this particular pronouncement contained in the judgment of the Court of Appeal. This, truly reflects, as all counsel representing the Honourable Attorney General ought to, the learned Senior State Counsel having taken an objective view regarding this question of law, which is in consonance with the applicable law.

Analysis and the findings

At this stage, it is pertinent to note that by the presentation of the Application ("P18") to His Excellency the President, the Appellant had sought only the mitigation of the sentences imposed on him by the Court Martial, and had not sought the quashing of the finding of guilt (conviction) or any of the decisions which led to the institution of Court Martial proceedings against him.

Section 122 of the Navy Act

Section 122 of the Navy Act reads as follows:

> "The President may annul, suspend, or modify any sentence (including a sentence of death) passed by a court martial or by a naval officer exercising judicial power under this Act, or substitute a punishment inferior in degree for the punishment involved in any such sentence, or remit the whole or any portion of the punishment involved in any such sentence, or remit the whole or any portion of the punishment into which the punishment involved in any such sentence has been commuted; and any sentence so modified shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be valid, and shall be carried into execution, as if it had been originally passed, with such modifications, by such court martial or officer.
> Provided that neither the degree nor the duration of the punishment involved in any sentence shall be increased by any such modification." [Emphasis added]

It is thus seen that the Appellant has acted advisedly in having sought only a revision of the sentences imposed on him, because section 122 of the Navy Act, empowers the President to only consider and alter a sentence imposed by a Court Martial, and does not empower him to quash or vacate the findings of the Court Martial referred to as its 'finding' (verdict).

Section 122 of the Navy Act can be classified as a 'statutory remedy' which enables a person convicted by a Court Martial or by a naval officer who has purportedly exercised judicial power in terms of the Navy Act, to seek 'administrative relief' with regard to the sentence imposed. This statutory remedy enables an aggrieved party to seek a revision or mitigation of the sentence imposed. It does not enable an aggrieved party to seek a review and quashing of the finding of guilt, which in this case was the conviction of the Appellant in respect of the two counts in the charge sheet. In Lt. Commander Ruwan Pathirana v. Commodore Dharmasiriwardene and Others, Justice Sisira De Abrew has held as follows:

> "... In fact, section 122 of the Navy Act deals with revision of sentences imposed by a Court Martial or by a Naval officer exercising judicial power under the Navy Act and it does not deal with quashing of convictions imposed by a Court Martial or by a Naval officer exercising judicial power under the Navy Act. ..."
> [Emphasis added]

Therefore, it is evident that the relief which the Appellant has sought in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act is limited to a review of the sentences imposed on him. As referred to above, the relief sought by the Appellant from the Court of Appeal is much wider, in that he has sought mandates in the nature of Writs of Certiorari to quash not only the sentences imposed on him by the Court Martial, but also the finding (verdict), the decision to institute Court Martial proceedings against him, the report of the Board of Inquiry and report of the recording of the Summary of Evidence.

Writ of certiorari as a discretionary remedy

Particularly since the jurisdiction conferred on the Court of Appeal to issue a mandate in the nature of a writ of certiorari is an extraordinary remedy, it is often submitted on behalf of the decision-maker of the impugned decision that the writ is not available 'as of right' or as a 'matter of course', and is issued only at the discretion of the Court. In Biso Menika v. Cyril de Alwis and Others [(1982) 1 Sri LR 368] Justice Sharvananda as he was then, held as follows:

> "A Writ of Certiorari is issued at the discretion of the Court. It cannot be held to be a Writ of right or one issued as a matter of course. But exercise of this discretion by Court is governed by certain well-accepted principles. The Court is bound to issue a Writ at the instance of a party aggrieved by the order of an inferior tribunal except in cases where he has disentitled himself to the discretionary relief by reason of his own conduct, like submitting to jurisdiction, laches, undue delay or waiver..."

It is also submitted that the Court is vested with discretion to determine whether or not the writ should be issued.

Indeed, the issuance of a mandate in the nature of a writ of certiorari is a discretionary remedy. Thus, Courts are entitled by law to exercise a considerable amount of discretion in determining whether or not a writ should be issued. Notwithstanding the Court determining that the impugned order is in fact unlawful, the Court may in certain situations refrain from issuing the writ to quash the unlawful order, if it deems withholding the issuance of the writ is justifiable and appropriate in the circumstances of the case. Thus, a writ of certiorari is not a remedy that may be claimed by a petitioner as of right. The issuance of the writ is at the instance of the Court exercising discretion.

However, it needs to be highlighted that permitting the issuance of the writ to be finally governed by the exercise of judicial discretion is troublesome, particularly from the perspective of the rule of law. Inappropriate exercise of judicial discretion resulting in the refusal to issue a writ of certiorari in the backdrop of the petitioner having successfully established that the impugned order is unlawful, would undermine the rule of law. Therefore, after the Court is satisfied that the impugned order is unlawful, if the Court is to exercise discretion in deciding as to whether or not the writ should be issued, it must be done with considerable circumspect, judiciously and with great caution.

The exercise of discretion by Court is not unfettered. For the purpose of guiding the exercise of such discretion, the common law has developed certain well-established grounds which are recognized by contemporary Administrative Law and by the cursus curiae of this Court and the Court of Appeal. Nevertheless, once grounds for the issuance of the writ have been satisfied by the party seeking relief, refusal to grant the writ must be founded upon compelling reasons, which would provide justification for allowing an ‘unlawful order’ to remain without being quashed.

However, the situation would be different when there is a statutorily recognized ‘right of appeal’, which would enable the aggrieved party to challenge the legality of the impugned order based on both the law and the facts. In such instances, Court will rightly question as to why the petitioner sought judicial review without exercising the statutorily available right of appeal, and unless there is a satisfactory explanation for not having exercised the right of appeal, the Court will decline to exercise the jurisdiction of judicial review. Nevertheless, if the impugned order is a nullity due to the decision-maker having exercised power in flagrant excess of power conferred on him or due to any other reason which renders the decision void, Court would not hesitate to quash it, notwithstanding the aggrieved party not having exercised the statutorily available right of appeal.

One possible ground that would militate against the issuance of the writ, is the availability of an adequate alternate remedy as opposed to a mere alternate remedy. As explained above, the right to present an Application to His Excellency the President in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act cannot be recognized as an adequate alternate remedy, in that, even if the President wishes, he may only revise the sentence, and would not have any power to quash the conviction pronounced by the Court Martial. Furthermore, in my view, it would not be correct to hold that the existence of even an adequate alternate remedy would 'oust the jurisdiction' of the Court of Appeal. The existence of an adequate alternate remedy and the Application being presented to the Court of Appeal seeking a writ of certiorari without having exhausted such available remedy would only be a ground on which the Court may in the exercise of its discretion refuse to grant relief. Furthermore, after having sought an alternate administrative remedy and having been unsuccessful in securing relief, there is no bar for the aggrieved party to seek judicial relief, provided he can satisfy Court of the existence of grounds for the grant of relief.

Additionally, it is also necessary to be mindful that the Navy Act specifically empowers a person aggrieved by the finding of a Court Martial to seek from the Court of Appeal, inter-alia, a mandate in the nature of a Writ of Certiorari. Section 132(1) of the Navy Act provides as follows:

> "Such provisions of Article 140 of the Constitution as relate to the grant and issue of writs of mandamus, certiorari and prohibition shall be deemed to apply in respect of any court martial or any naval officer exercising judicial powers under the Act."

Thus, it is seen that the Navy Act, while on the one hand providing an administrative remedy to seek a revision of the sentence by applying to His Excellency the President, has afforded another remedy in the nature of judicial relief by conferring the right to invoke the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal to issue a mandate in the nature of inter-alia, a Writ of Certiorari. It is however necessary to point out that, even if section 132(1) of the Navy Act did not confer such a legal right on an aggrieved party to seek judicial relief, the Constitutional provision of Article 140 by itself would entitle an aggrieved party to seek judicial review of the finding (verdict) and sentence pronounced by a Court Martial, because it is a statutory body conferred with legal authority to take decisions which have a bearing on the rights of persons.

Conclusion reached by me in respect of the 1st question of law

Section 122 of the Navy Act does not provide an 'adequate and efficacious alternative remedy' to a person aggrieved by a finding of guilt and the sentence imposed by a Court Martial. Furthermore, the availability of an 'adequate and efficacious alternate remedy' does not by itself 'oust the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal' with regard to an Application seeking a writ of certiorari. It only serves as a ground on which the Court may exercise discretion and consider whether in the circumstances of the case, the writ should be refused, notwithstanding the petitioner having satisfied the Court that the impugned decision is 'unlawful'.

Therefore, I hold that it was not lawful for the Court of Appeal to have held that the Court's jurisdiction had been 'ousted' due to the Petitioner (Appellant) having sought relief from the President in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act. It was incorrect for the Court of Appeal to have held that the Application presented by the Appellant to the President amounted to an 'alternate remedy' and therefore the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal had been 'ousted'. Thus, the first question of law in respect of which special leave to appeal has been granted, is answered in favour of the Appellant.

(ii) Was it erroneous for the Court of Appeal to have held that there was no need in law for the Court Martial to give reasons for its verdict and that the absence of such reasons does not render the verdict void?

Before the Court of Appeal as well as in the Supreme Court, the Appellant challenged the lawfulness of the finding (verdict) of 'guilty' and the orders of sentence pronounced on him, on the footing that the Court Martial was required in terms of the law to give reasons for its finding (verdict), and that the Court Martial had failed to give such reasons. Therefore, it was argued on behalf of the Appellant that the finding of the Court Martial is bad in law and void, and hence should be quashed by a mandate in the nature of a writ of certiorari. On behalf of the Respondents, it was argued that a Court Martial was not obliged by law to reveal reasons for its finding. The Court of Appeal held in favour of the Respondents.

During their submissions before this Court, both the learned President's Counsel for the Appellant and the Senior State Counsel for the Respondents agreed with each other that as evident from the record of the proceedings of the Court Martial, the Court Martial had not given any reasons for finding the Appellant 'guilty' in respect of the two charges contained in the charge sheet.

As regards the sentences, the learned Senior State Counsel pointed out to the proceedings of the Court Martial, where he submitted that 'reasons' for the sentences had been stated. Learned President's Counsel for the Appellant insisted that the proceedings do not reflect reasons for the sentences.

I have carefully considered the proceedings of the Court Martial. The proceedings of 13th May 2009 reflect that the members of the Court Martial have, after finding the Appellant 'guilty' of both counts in the charge sheet, permitted counsel for the prosecution to tender to the Court Martial the 'personal file' of the Appellant and certain 'confidential documents'. The record does not reveal as to whether such documentary material was made available to either the accused or to his counsel for the purpose of examining them and commenting upon them. One would expect such fairness to have been adhered to in proceedings before a Court Martial. Be that as it may, counsel for the accused had addressed the Court Martial in mitigation of the sentences, and subsequently, the Court Martial has recorded the following:

> "The Court has taken into consideration the submissions made on behalf of the accused, for the purpose of mitigating the sentence of the accused. Consideration has also been given to the letter of displeasure issued by the Commander of the Navy regarding the accused. Therefore, the following punishment is imposed: 1st count – Severe reprimand, 2nd count – Dismissal from the Navy without disgrace."

It is thus seen that the Court Martial has only specified the material considered by it when arriving at a decision regarding the punishment to be imposed, and has not given reasons for the imposition of the stipulated punishment.

Thus, this judgment will proceed on the footing that the Court Martial has not given any reasons for both the finding of guilt (verdict) and the orders of punishment imposed on the Appellant.

Both counsel submitted that neither the provisions of the Navy Act nor any other applicable statute impose a statutory obligation on a Court Martial to give reasons for its finding (verdict). Thus, the question to be determined by this Court is, notwithstanding the absence of a statutory requirement to give reasons, whether a Court Martial has a legal duty to give reasons for its finding (verdict) and order of sentence (punishment), and whether the absence of such reasons renders the verdict and the order of sentence pronounced by a Court Martial unlawful and hence void.

Learned counsel for the Appellant and the Respondents agreed with each other that revealing reasons for the verdict and for the order of punishment has never been the practice of Courts Martial in this country. Thus, the absence of reasons for the impugned decisions is not peculiar to the instance being examined in this Appeal.

The relevant portion of the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal regarding this particular question of law, is as follows:

> "The next issue is the Court Martial. The petitioner argued that no reasons were given by the Court Martial for its findings. The Code of Criminal Procedure does not require the jury to give reasons for its verdict, nor does the Navy Act require a Court Martial to give reasons for its findings. In the case of G.S.C. Fonseka v. Lt. Gen. J. Jayasuriya and five others, it was held by three judges of the Court of Appeal that a Court Martial need not give reasons."

Submissions of Counsel

President's Counsel for the Appellant - Citing the judgment of this Court in Karunadasa v. Unique Gem Stones Limited and Others [(1997) 1 Sri L.R. 256], learned President's Counsel for the Appellant submitted that although there is no general duty in English law for statutory authorities to give reasons for their decisions, English judges have recognized exceptions to the rule and imposed such a duty on the basis of 'natural justice' and 'fairness'. It was submitted that this Court has observed in judgments relating to fundamental rights Applications, that Article 12(1) of the Constitution confers a right to know the reasons for a decision, which is a manifestation of the guarantee of the equal protection of the law. He submitted that in the context of the machinery for appeals, revision, judicial review and the enforcement of fundamental rights, giving reasons for decisions is increasingly becoming an important protection of the law. If a party is not told the reasons for a decision that affects his interests, his ability to seek judicial review will be impaired.

While rightfully conceding that the recent judgment of the Court of Appeal in Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara v. Kolitha Gunathilaka, Air Vice Marshal and Others [CA Writ No. 333/2011, CA Minutes of 1st June 2020] is not binding on this Court, learned President's Counsel submitted that the Court of Appeal had in that matter, having gone into this very issue of whether there is a legal obligation cast on a Court Martial to give reasons for its finding and whether the failure to do so would render such verdict void, has held that in terms of the law of Sri Lanka, the duty to give reasons is a mandatory constitutional duty, and consequently, a decision in breach of this requirement was flawed and hence void.

Responding to the 'parallel' drawn by the Court of Appeal in the impugned judgment between a 'trial before a jury' and 'proceedings before a Court Martial', and provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act which regulate such trials in the High Court heard before a Judge of the High Court together with a jury, and such provisions not requiring juries to give reasons for its verdict, learned President's Counsel for the Appellant submitted that a trial before a jury is not comparable with proceedings before a Court Martial. He submitted that the two types of proceedings were distinguishable. Citing the views expressed by Justice Saleem Marsoof in the judgment of the Supreme Court in Fonseka v. Attorney General [(2011) BLR 169], learned President's Counsel submitted that though it has been held that a Court Martial is a 'court', it was not part of the 'regular judicial hierarchy'. He submitted that a Court Martial is a sui generis tribunal, and hence proceedings before a Court Martial cannot be equated to proceedings before a jury. Learned President's Counsel also submitted that though there is a similarity between a High Court Judge and a Judge Advocate, proceedings in the High Court in a trial before a jury is materially different to proceedings before a Court Martial. That is due to the following reasons:

(i) Section 39(a) of the Navy Act limits the role of the Judge Advocate to giving 'advice', and that too with the prior permission of the Court Martial, whereas, in a trial before a jury, the law imposes a mandatory requirement on the presiding High Court judge to sum up the evidence, which function he exercises as of right. Furthermore, jurors are bound to follow directions given by the presiding High Court judge on the law.
(ii) There exists a provision in the Navy Act which enables the delivery of the 'summing up' to be dispensed with, provided agreement in that regard is reached between the Court Martial and the Judge Advocate, whereas, in a trial before a jury, the summing up by the High Court judge cannot be dispensed with.

Learned President's Counsel for the Appellant relied heavily on the pronouncement made by Justice Sarath N. Silva (as he then was) in Kusumawathie and Others v. Aitken Spence & Co. Ltd. and Another [(1996) 2 Sri L.R. 18] that the norm that there is no requirement in law to give reasons for a decision should not be construed as a 'gateway to arbitrary decisions and orders'. If a decision that is challenged is not a speaking order, when Notice is issued by a Court exercising judicial review, reasons to support the decision must be disclosed at least to Court. If a statutory body fails to disclose to Court reasons for its decision, an inference may be drawn that the impugned decision is ultra vires and relief may be granted on that basis. If no reasons are adduced, the Court would presume that in fact, no reasons exist.

Learned President's Counsel in his usual exuberant style of rhetorical advocacy concluded his submissions by stating that if this Court were to depart from the ratio of the judgement of Court of Appeal in Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara v. Kolitha Gunathilaka, Air Vice Marshal and Others, it would render the right to judicial review of decisions of Courts Martial an 'empty shell'.

Senior State Counsel for the Respondents - In response, learned Senior State Counsel for the Respondents prefaced his submissions regarding this question of law, by submitting that the duty to give reasons is not yet 'settled' in Administrative Law. Upholding his customary frankness and the professional standard which is expected particularly from counsel representing the Honourable Attorney General, he conceded that in the contemporary era, there is an increasing trend in academic authority supporting the view that it is desirable to give reasons for administrative decisions. Citing internationally recognized authors such as De Smith, Wade and Craig, learned Counsel submitted that treatises on Administrative Law authored by these academics of high eminence refer to English Courts not yet having recognized the existence of a 'mandatory general legal duty to give reasons'. He submitted that Professor William Wade citing the case of R. v. Home Secretary, ex parte Doody, has advanced the view that, principles of natural justice have not yet embraced into its fold a general rule that reasons should be given for decisions of public authorities. He submitted that in the case of S.N. Mukherjee v. Union of India [AIR (1990) SC 1984], the Supreme Court of India had held that while there is in India a general duty to give reasons, if a statute expressly or by implication indicates that reasons do not have to be given, then it is not mandatory to give reasons. Learned counsel for the Respondents submitted that the Indian Supreme Court had held that the scheme of the Act and the Rules are such, that reasons are not required to be recorded by a Court Martial. He submitted that the Supreme Court of India has specifically held that a Court Martial is not required to give reasons for its findings.

Turning towards Sri Lankan case law, he submitted that in Yaseen Omar v. Pakistan International Airlines Corporation and Others [(1999) 2 Sri L.R. 375], the Supreme Court having examined the applicable law contained in the judgment in Samalanka Ltd. v. Weerakoon, Commissioner of Labour and Others [(1994) 1 Sri L.R. 405] has held that in the absence of a specific statutory requirement, there is no general principle in administrative law that requires the authority making the decision to adduce reasons, provided the decision is made after holding a fair hearing. Learned Senior State Counsel submitted that the Supreme Court had found error in the view that, giving reason is a sine qua non for a fair hearing.

Learned counsel also submitted that the judgment in Karunadasa v. Unique Gemstones Ltd. should not be viewed as authority for the proposition that reasons must necessarily be given for all administrative and quasi-judicial decisions.

Learned Senior State Counsel conceded that the Supreme Court in the determination of Fundamental Rights Applications such as Choolanie v. Peoples Bank and Others [(2008) 2 Sri L.R. 93] and Hapuarachchi and Others v. Commissioner of Elections and Another [(2009) 1 Sri L.R. 1] has observed that the failure to give reasons for a decision may make such decision liable to be struck down for arbitrariness, on the footing that arbitrary decisions are violative of Article 12(1) of the Constitution. His position however is that Article 15(8) of the Constitution provides for the imposition of 'restrictions' on Fundamental Rights as may be prescribed by law, on members of the armed forces and the police, which may be imposed in the interest of the proper discharge of their duties and the maintenance of discipline among them. Learned counsel submitted that the provisions of the Army, Navy and Air Force Acts which require pronouncements of Courts Martial to be arrived at by 'vote' and thus do not require reasons for the decision to be given, would tantamount to a restriction which comes within the purview of Article 15(8).

Citing section 43 of the Navy Act, learned Senior State Counsel submitted that decisions pertaining to the finding (verdict) of the Court Martial and the sentence to be imposed on a person found to be 'guilty' should be decided by 'vote'. Thus, he submitted that in any event, it would not be possible to give reasons for the verdict.

In response to the query from Court as to how a higher court exercising the function of judicially reviewing the findings of a Court Martial may perform that function if reasons are not attached to the finding, learned Senior State Counsel submitted that the higher Court may examine the record which contains the evidence recorded by the Court Martial, submissions of counsel and the summing up of the Judge Advocate, and thereby determine whether the finding is reasonable.

He submitted that it would be the same material an appellate Court exercising appellate jurisdiction in respect of a verdict returned by a jury at a 'jury trial' would have access to.

In view of the foregoing, learned Senior State Counsel submitted that a Court Martial is not required by law to give reasons for its finding.

Views, findings and conclusions

Reasons for a decision

'Reasons for a decision' are the internal cognitive thought processes which result in the decision-maker arriving at his decision. Reasons would reflect the internal step-by-step process which culminates in the final decision. It amounts to the 'logic' which links the 'material considered' with the 'decision' arrived at. In the context of a pronouncement by a Court of Law or a Court Martial, 'reasons' would amount to the (a) determination of relevant facts based on testimony or other material considered by the decision-maker, (b) appreciation and application of the law, and (c) conclusions reached which propelled the decision-maker to arrive at the final decision. Thus, 'reasons for the decision' is nothing additional. It is a mere external announcement of the internal decision-making process.

The issue to be determined is, in instances where the statute which empowered the decision-maker to arrive at a decision and other applicable laws are silent on whether or not reasons for the decision should be announced, and where such written law does not explicitly or impliedly exempt the decision-maker from giving reasons, whether the unwritten law or the common law would impose a legal duty on the decision-maker to disclose reasons for his decision.

Fair Hearing

A 'fair hearing' is a standard of fairness which is sought to be guaranteed by the rules of natural justice. In terms of Article 13(3) of the Constitution, the right to a 'fair trial' is a fundamental right conferred on all accused. For over a century, fundamentals of justice have required that 'no one should be condemned without being given an opportunity of explaining his conduct', and that unless there are compelling reasons for refraining from doing so, 'a decision affecting the legally protected interests of a person should not be arrived at without affording that person an opportunity of being heard in support of the protection of such interests'. In addition to determining whether the purported exercise of power was within the limits of such power, a preponderance of Applications seeking judicial review of decisions arrived at by statutory and public bodies which have purportedly exercised statutorily conferred power, are decided by Courts primarily on a consideration of whether the decision-maker had complied with the rules of natural justice and given a fair hearing to the party that claims to have been affected by the decision arrived at. It can be said that giving a 'fair hearing' is very much a sine qua non for a lawful decision which has the potential of affecting rights of persons. Rules of natural justice have been developed in order to ensure that a fair hearing is afforded and to regulate such hearings. Thus, a Court of law called upon to judicially review a decision arrived at by a statutory body would be anxious to ascertain whether this fundamental requirement has been complied with. While the record of the statutory body and evidence relating to the process of decision-making would generally reflect whether a fair hearing had been afforded, in most instances, it would be the reasons for the decision that would actually enlighten judges performing the function of judicial review, whether the hearing was in fact fair; whether an impartial and adequate hearing had been given; and whether the decision was arrived at objectively. Furthermore, a reasoned decision would give life to the principle that "justice should not only be done, but should also manifestly be seen to be done".

Objective decisions

The decision being objectively arrived at and being reasonable are other necessary conditions to be satisfied for a decision to be lawful. A lawful decision is a decision taken in good-faith upon a diligent and unbiased consideration of all relevant facts, while rejecting irrelevant facts, and having correctly appreciated and applied the applicable law. Such a decision is recognized as an objective decision. A reasonable decision is a decision that is founded upon an objective consideration of legally relevant facts and the correct application of the law to such relevant facts. It is the reasons for the decision that would reflect whether the decision-maker had in fact arrived at the decision in an objective manner, and whether the decision is reasonable. Thus, a decision which has attached to it reasons therefor, attracts accountability and transparency. It enables a proper judicial assessment to be made whether the decision had been arrived at upon a proper and unbiased appreciation of the relevant facts, is founded upon a correct appreciation and application of the law, and is therefore a lawful decision. Further, the availability of reasons for the decision would reveal whether the decision-maker had (a) acted in excess of the law, (b) not afforded a fair hearing, (c) decided in a biased manner, (d) founded his decision upon a consideration of irrelevant facts or an erroneous application of the law, or (e) due to other reasons, the decision is arbitrary, unreasonable, subjective, capricious or aberrant and, hence the decision is unlawful. Thus, a decision to which reasons have not been contemporaneously given by the decision-maker, on the one hand, impairs and hinders proper judicial review and assessment, and on the other hand runs the risk of being classified and quashed as an unlawful decision which suffers from one of the above-mentioned legal defects.

Obligation to give reasons for the decision

No person concerned in justice and in the correctness, fairness, quality and legality of administrative, quasi-judicial and judicial decisions, would suggest that a decision-maker need not have any reasons for his decision. The absence of reasons for decisions, as well as inability on the part of a decision-maker to publicly declare the reasons for his decision could easily be due to the adoption of an unreasonable approach or due to sheer arbitrariness. The panacea for reasonable and lawful decisions would primarily be the adoption of an unbiased, objective and reasoned approach. Thus, reasons for a decision is an absolute necessity.

In this backdrop, the issue to be determined is not whether there should be reasons for a decision, but whether a decision-maker should be required by law to disclose the reasons for his decision, which he ought to, in any event be having with him at the time he arrived at the decision.

Factors for and against the imposition of a legal duty to give reasons

The law and in particular the common law is primarily founded upon the rule of law, public policy and public interest, logical reasoning, fairness, justice and equity. Thus, the question of law whether public authorities who function as decision-makers should be required by law to give reasons for their decisions, should be founded upon the merits of the purposes for which such a duty should be imposed viz. possible consequences arising out of the imposition of such a duty.

The main factors in favour of administrative, quasi-judicial and judicial bodies being required to give reasons for their decisions, can be described in the following manner:

(i) The requirement to give reasons encourages the public authority concerned to give a proper fair hearing to the party whose rights may be affected by the decision it takes, as opposed to merely and perfunctorily going through the notions of a fair hearing.

(ii) The duty to articulate reasons for the decision, is a self-disciplining exercise, which encourages decision-makers to act independently, impartially and neutrally, and adopt in good-faith, a disciplined and focused approach. It encourages conscientious consideration of pertinent issues. It dissuades decisions being arrived at in a biased or an arbitrary manner, and decisions being taken for collateral purposes. Decision-makers are compelled to act diligently and give objective consideration to the relevant material placed before them, while applying the law correctly, and rejecting irrelevant material and considerations. When there is a legal duty to give reasons, there is a reasonable expectation of the decision-making process not going astray. The existence of a legal duty to give reasons, would encourage decision-makers to participate in the hearing and in the decision-making process with a purposive approach, so that Parliament would be able to realize its objectives in having conferred statutory power on the relevant decision-making body.

(iii) The compulsion on reasons for the decision being announced facilitates correct, lawful and higher quality administrative, quasi-judicial and judicial decision-making. Reasons for the decision would reflect the rationale for the decision.

(iv) The duty to give reasons encourages statutory bodies to adopt a reason based, logical and rational approach to decision-making. It facilitates cognitive structuring of the decision-making process founded upon valid reasons. Thus, the final decision is likely to be reasonable as opposed to being unreasonable. As the decision is to be founded upon reasons that have to be declared, it is unlikely that the decision would be arbitrary.

(v) Reasons for the decision provide a justification for the decision. Thereby, the decision becomes more transparent. When a wrong decision has been taken, the decision-maker can be held accountable.

(vi) The imposition of a duty to give reasons is the main protection against a miscarriage of justice.

(vii) A reasoned decision would demonstrate that parties have been properly heard. When reasons for the decision are known by the person affected by such decision and other concerned parties, they would be able to comprehend the decision and appreciate the justification for it. Thus, the decision is likely to become acceptable. Revealing reasons would satisfy the legitimate expectations of the person affected by the decision, to get to know reasons for the decision. Thus, reasons for the decision serve the interests of those affected by the decision and the community at large. In any event, giving reasons for the decision appeals to the normal man's sense of justice. Thus, it enhances public confidence in the particular decision-making process and in individual decisions.

(viii) Existence of reasons for the decision enables and facilitates proper and meaningful exercise of judicial review and makes such review efficacious. The existence of reasons for the decision facilitates detection of errors; particularly if justiciable flaws exist. Thus, giving reasons serves the interests of the Court performing the function of judicial review.

(ix) During judicial review, decisions containing reasons therefor, are less likely to be classified as being arbitrary or unreasonable and therefore unlikely to be quashed on such grounds. When reasons for the decision are not available, a Court performing the function of judicial review may conclude that reasons have not been given, as there were no good reasons to be given. In such situations, it is likely that the impugned decision would be denounced as being arbitrary.

(x) It is when reasons for the decision are known by the Court exercising the function of judicial review, that such Court could conclude whether the impugned decision is reasonable.

These factors serve as virtues of giving reasons, and provide incentives for decision-makers to give reasons for their decisions. These factors are in conformity with general principles of justice, and provide great logical relevance and sufficient justification for the law to confer a duty on statutory authorities to give reasons for their decisions.

The dissenting judgment of Justice Subba Rao in Madya Pradesh Industries Ltd. v. Union of India and Others, Supreme Court of India, [(1966) 1 S.C.R. 466], contains the very essence of the strong arguments in favour of imposing a legal duty on statutory bodies and tribunals to disclose reasons for their decisions, in the following well-articulated sentences:

> "In the context of a welfare State, administrative tribunals have come to stay. Indeed, they are the necessary concomitants of a welfare State. But arbitrariness in their functioning destroys the concept of a welfare State itself. Self-discipline and supervision exclude or at any rate minimize arbitrariness. The least a tribunal can do is to disclose its mind. The compulsion of disclosure guarantees consideration. The condition to give reasons introduces clarity and excludes or at any rate minimizes arbitrariness; it gives satisfaction to the party against whom the order is made; and it also enables an appellate or supervisory court to keep the tribunal within bounds. A reasoned order is a desirable condition of judicial disposal. ... If tribunals can make orders without giving reasons, the said power in the hands of unscrupulous or dishonest officers may turn out to be a potent weapon for abuse of power. But, if reasons for an order are given, it will be an effective restraint on such abuse, as the order, if it discloses extraneous or irrelevant considerations, will be subject to judicial scrutiny and correction. A speaking order will at its best be a reasonable and at its worst be at least a plausible one. The public should not be deprived of this only safeguard."

However, it is necessary to be mindful that there are certain valid reasons as to why purely administrative bodies conferred with statutory power (as opposed to tribunals and judicial bodies), should not be mandated by law to give reasons for their decisions. These factors also cannot be overlooked or trivialized. These factors may be summed up in the following manner:

(i) Having to state reasons would almost always impede efficiency associated with the delivery of the decision, would result in inevitable delays and require enhanced resources. It may in certain circumstances, attract an intolerable burden on administrative bodies and higher costs.

(ii) There can be many situations where statutory and public bodies are required to take into consideration certain material factors that cannot be disclosed to the person who may be affected by the decision and to the public at large. Matters pertaining to (a) national security and the defence of the country, (b) sensitive matters pertaining to international relations and foreign policy, (c) certain trade and commercial interests of the country, and (d) matters pertaining to ongoing criminal investigations, are some examples.

(iii) In situations where value-based judgments have to be arrived at, articulation of reasons may be quite challenging. Decisions based purely on academic assessments is an example where reasons for the decision are virtually inexpressible, though not impossible to state.

(iv) Reasons for the decision that are stated may not necessarily be the true and complete reasons that resulted in the particular decision being arrived at. Reasons that are declared by the decision-maker may be strategy based, as opposed to candor. Thus, the compulsion to give reasons may not necessarily give rise to transparency.

(v) Stating reasons may result in the proliferation of legal challenges.

The afore-stated factors both 'for' and 'against' the imposition of a legal duty to give reasons for decisions attract considerable merit, are significant, and are of high logical relevance. However, in my view, the merits in the factors that support the imposition of a legal duty to give reasons, certainly outweigh the factors that militate against the imposition of such a legal duty. The view that reasons for a decision are not necessary or important, is not appealing to an objective and reasonable mind. However, it must be emphasized that (i) the nature and the precise content of the written law which conferred legal authority to the decision-maker, (ii) nature of the decision, (iii) the impact of the decision on the rights and interests of persons, and (iv) possible consequences that may arise by revealing reasons for the decision, would be critical factors that would determine whether or not the imposition of a legal duty to give reasons was intended by Parliament and is desirable, necessary, appropriate and justifiable. The law in this regard, both statutory and common law, can be recognized and applied in such a manner so as to prevent (a) an insurmountable burden being imposed on decision-makers by the enforcement of a legal duty to give reasons, and (b) adverse consequences flowing. These objectives can be achieved by recognizing exceptions to the rule. Those exceptions would recognize situations where the law does not require reasons for the decision to be declared.

As seen in the views of Lord Denning MR in R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Hosenball [(1977) 3 All ER 452] the existence of the need to protect national and public security may be one such exception that provides justification for the tribunal to refrain from revealing reasons for the decision.

Whether a statutory body should be required by law and therefore would have a duty to give reasons for its decisions would depend on a host of factors, and would have to be determined on a case-by-case basis. Those factors in my view are as follows:

(i) Whether the applicable statutory framework including the law that has empowered the body to take the decision and any other applicable law, has imposed a specific or implied requirement to give reasons for the decision;

(ii) The character of the decision-making body;

(iii) The nature of the decisions it has been empowered to take and possible legal implications arising out of such decision;

(iv) Whether in the attendant circumstances, there can be a guarantee that a fair hearing had been given by the statutory body, unless reasons for the decision are revealed;

(v) Whether judicial review of the decision would be rendered nugatory by the statutory body not having revealed reasons for its decision;

(vi) Whether a higher Court performing judicial review of the impugned decision would not be able to perform such function in the interests of justice, unless reasons for the decision are known;

(vii) Reasons if any, that would provide a valid justification for the refusal or failure on the part of the decision-maker to give reasons for the decision.

Views of respected academicians and reputed authors

At this stage, it would in my opinion be desirable to consider views of several respected academicians and reputed authors contained in treatises, regarding the duty if any, to give reasons.

Professor P.P. Craig in "Administrative Law" (Sweet & Maxwell, 1999, 4th Edition, page 432 - 436) is of the view that there is no general common law duty to give reasons. He however asserts that there are nonetheless, a number of ways in which the common law has in particular instances, imposed such a duty. He has explained that in addition to the written law explicitly imposing a legal duty to give reasons, there are five indirect ways of imposing such a duty. They are as follows:

(i) By contending that the absence of reasons renders any right of appeal or review nugatory, or that it makes the exercise of that right more difficult, and therefore recognizing the existence of a duty to give reasons;

(ii) By labelling the decision reached in the absence of declared reasons as being arbitrary;

(iii) By considering the evidence or the material placed before the decision-maker and determining that in the absence of reasons, the decision arrived at is unreasonable;

(iv) By recognizing the existence of a legitimate expectation founded upon the public body concerned, had in previous instances been disclosing reasons for its decisions, and in the impugned occasion has refrained from giving reasons, thereby depriving the person affected by the decision reasons for the decision which would contravene his legitimate expectation that reasons would be given;

(v) By considering the nature of the decision-maker, the context in which he operates, the impact of the decision, and accordingly determining whether the giving of reasons is required for the attainment of justice.

These five methods could be invoked to require decision-making public authorities to give reasons for their decisions.

Professor Craig concludes in the following manner:

> "The general rule should be that reasons should be given, subject to exceptions where really warranted. The jurisprudence of our courts is coming close to this proposition. It would do much to simplify and clarify matters if the legal rule could be expressed in this way."

De Smith's Judicial Review (2007, 6th Edition, edited by former Chief Justice of England and Wales Lord Woolf, Professor Jeffrey Jowell and Professor Andrew Le Sueur, page 410 - 422) highlights the essence of the matter, by expressing the view that the failure by a public authority to give reasons or even adequate reasons for a decision, may be unlawful in two ways. First, it may be said that such a failure is procedurally flawed and unfair. Secondly, the failure to give reasons may indicate that the decision is irrational. The author points out that as a general proposition, it is still accurate to say that 'the law does not at present recognize a general legal duty to give reasons for an administrative decision'. But, the increasing number of so-called 'exceptional' circumstances in which substantive and procedural fairness now require that reasons be afforded to an affected individual, means that the general proposition is becoming meaningless. Apart from demonstrating the mere fact that a decision-making process is held to be subject to the requirements of fairness, it does not automatically lead to the further conclusion that reasons must be given. However, it is certainly now the case, that a decision-maker subject to the requirements of fairness, should consider carefully whether in the particular circumstances of the case, reasons should be given. Indeed, so rapidly is the case law on the duty to give reasons developing, that it can now be added that fairness or procedural fairness will usually require a decision-maker to give reasons for his decisions. Overall, 'the trend of the law has been towards an increased recognition of the duty to give reasons'. There has been a strong momentum since of late, in favour of greater openness in decision-making. What were once seen as exceptions to the rule which stipulated instances where reasons for the decision were required, are now becoming examples of the norm; while the cases where reasons are not required may be taking on the appearance of exceptions.

The concluding paragraph of this topic in De Smith's Judicial Review is of considerable significance:

> "Since the duty to give reasons may now be seen simply as yet another aspect of the requirements of procedural fairness, it would be wrong to imagine that the duty may be artificially confined to situations in which the decision-maker is acting in a 'judicial' or 'quasi-judicial' capacity. Although in Cunningham, some reliance was placed upon the fact that the Civil Service Appeal Board is a fully 'judicialized' tribunal, and one that is almost unique among tribunals in not falling under a statutory duty to give reasons, subsequent decisions have made it clear that reasons may be required of a body exercising 'quasi-judicial' functions*, such as that of the Home Secretary in relation to the tariff period to be served by life sentence prisoners,* and 'administrative' functions, such as a local authority making decisions regarding an individual's housing application*. Fairness may also require that a body explain why it is rejecting or preferring particular evidence or why it is failing to give effect to a legitimate expectation.* The distinction between judicial, quasi-judicial and administrative functions may be consigned to history in this context, as well as more generally*. As Sedley J. has put it, in rejecting such a submission in the context of the duty to give reasons, in the modern state the decisions of administrative bodies can have a more immediate and profound impact on people's lives than the decisions of courts, and public law has since Ridge v. Baldwin been alive to that fact."* [Emphasis added]

"Administrative Law" by Professor H.W.R. Wade edited by Christopher Forsyth (Oxford, 2014, 11th Edition, page 440) contains the following views:

"... Nevertheless, there is a strong case to be made for the giving of reasons as an essential element of administrative justice. The need for it has been sharply exposed by the expanding law of judicial review, now that so many decisions are liable to be quashed or appealed against on grounds of improper purpose, irrelevant considerations and errors of law of various kinds. Unless the citizen can discover the reasoning behind the decision, he may be unable to tell whether it is reviewable or not, and so he may be deprived of the protection of the law. A right to reasons is therefore an indispensable part of a sound system of judicial review. Natural justice may provide the best rubric for it, since the giving of reasons is required by the ordinary man's sense of justice. It is also a healthy discipline for all who exercise power over others*."* [Emphasis added]

Referring to contemporary trends, Professor Wade has proceeded to observe the following:

"The House of Lords has recognized 'a perceptible trend towards an insistence on greater openness … or transparency in the making of administrative decisions', and consequently has held that where, in the context of the case, it is unfair not to give reasons, they must be given."* [Emphasis added]

Professor Wade has cited several recent judgements where the House of Lords has held that reasons for the decision of the tribunal should have been given: R. v. Home Secretary ex parte Duggan [(1994) 3 All ER 277] and R. v. Home Secretary ex parte Follen [(1996) COD 169] where it has been held that a mandatory life prisoner was entitled to know the reasons why he continued to be classified as a 'category A' prisoner, and hence not entitled to parole, R v. Home Secretary ex parte Murphy [(1997) COD 478] where it had been held that a mandatory life prisoner was entitled to know the reasons why the Parole Board's recommendation that he be transferred to an open prison, was not accepted, and the judgment in R. v. Director of Public Prosecutions ex parte Manning [(2001) QB 330] where notwithstanding a jury before which an Inquest into a custodial death, had ruled that the death was an unlawful killing and the Director of Public Prosecutions had decided not to prosecute the alleged perpetrators of the crime, that the reasons for the decision not to prosecute should be disclosed.

The commentary on this important aspect of public law by Professor Wade concludes with the following words:

> "The time has now surely come for the court to acknowledge that there is a general rule that reasons should be given for decisions, based on the principle of fairness which permeates administrative law, subject only to specific exceptions to be identified as cases arise. Such a rule should not be unduly onerous, since reasons need never be more elaborate than the nature of the case admits, but the presumption should be in favour of giving reasons, rather than, as at present, in favour of withholding them." [Emphasis added]

Dr. Sunil Coorey in Principles of Administrative Law in Sri Lanka (2020, 4th Edition, Volume I, page 576) having surveyed a series of local judgments on this matter, including International Cosmetic Applicators (Pvt.) Ltd. v. Arialatha and Others*, [(1995) 2 Sri L.R. 61]*, Unique Gemstones Ltd. v. W. Karunadasa and Others, [(1995) 2 Sri L.R. 357], Wickremasinghe v. Chandrananda de Silva, Secretary, Ministry of Defence and Others, [(2001) 2 Sri L.R. 333], Benedict and Others v. Monetary Board of the Central Bank of Sri Lanka and Others [(2003) 3 Sri L.R. 68], Hapuarachchi and Others v. Commissioner of Elections and Another*, [(2009) 1 Sri L.R. 1]*, states as follows:

> "... But the tide seems to be turning. The view seems to be again gaining acceptance that natural justice or procedural fairness requires reasons to be given for the decision and be communicated to the parties affected. In a recent judgment which reviewed numerous Sri Lankan and foreign decisions, views of textwriters, and other relevant material, the Supreme Court said that, "an analysis of the attitude of the Courts since the beginning of the 20th century clearly indicates that despite the fact that there is no general duty to give reasons for administrative decisions, the Courts have regarded the issue in question as a matter affecting the concept of procedural fairness. ... Considering the present process in procedural fairness vis-à-vis rights of the people, there is no doubt that a statement of reasons for an administrative decision is a necessary requirement" – Hapuarachchi v. Commissioner of Elections [(2009) 1 Sri L.R. 1]."

Similarly, Dr. Mario Gomez, in 'Emerging Trends in Public Law' (1998), has, following an exhaustive examination of judicial trends in Sri Lanka and elsewhere in the common law world supplemented by recent academic thinking, expressed the following view:

> "In Sri Lanka courts previously required reasons where there was a right of appeal. This position has altered radically over the past three years. Sri Lankan courts are now insisting that public law decision making should be reasoned. Barring one case, judicial decisions over the past three years have developed a right to reasons. The Sri Lankan courts will also ask for reasons at the stage of review and in the absence of reasons may infer a finding of ultra vires or irrationality. Recent cases show that a general duty to provide reasons is likely to emerge as part of the Sri Lankan law in the near future."

In the concluding paragraph, Dr. Gomez emphasizes the importance of giving reasons in the following manner:

> "Reasons enhance the participatory flavour of a decision. There is an inkling of a dialogue involved when a person is told why his or her point of view was not followed.

Reasons for a decision also flow inevitably as a consequence from the right to be heard. If a person has been heard and a decision is taken which adversely affects him or her, then such a person is entitled to be told why the decision was made in that way. Reasons will go some way towards ensuring that public decision making is not ad hoc and arbitrary, but closely thought out and transparent. As Craig observes the 'very essence of arbitrariness is to have one's status redefined by the state without an adequate explanation of its reasons for doing so'. Reasons will ensure higher levels of public accountability and contribute to increasing the integrity of the administrative process. Secrecy, with regard to any decision, raises suspicion and speculation."

Dr. Shivaji Felix, in the article titled 'An Appraisal of the duty to give reasons in Administrative Law', (Bar Association Law Journal, 1997, Volume VII, Part I, page 48) has expressed the following view:

"The duty to give reasons, whether imposed by statute or as a common law requirement, is a fundamental of good administration. It results in decision-makers behaving in a more responsible manner. It is a fetter upon the exercise of arbitrary power and enhances the quality of decision-making. Openness and candour in the process of decision-making is facilitated when reasons are communicated for a decision. The duty to give reasons is an aspect of due process and is an important right that warrants protection… Thus, the recognition of a duty to give reasons is an important right which requires protection. The protection of such a right, augurs well for good administration and the preservation of the rule of law. It is an important fetter upon the exercise of arbitrary power and is a singular recognition of the need for openness and transparency in the process of decision-making."

Position in the English common law

The historical origin in English common law of the 'duty to give reasons' on the part of public and statutory functionaries who have been vested with statutory power to arrive at decisions which have the potential of impacting on the rights of persons, dates back to the latter part of the 20th century. Over the years, the position of the common law seems to have evolved progressively towards the recognition of the existence of such a legal duty.

In the early case of Padfield and Others v. Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and Others [(1968) AC 997], the House of Lords without recognizing that the Minister of Agriculture had a legal duty to give reasons for the impugned decision in that case, highlighted possible consequences arising out of not giving reasons for the decision. It has been held by Lord Hodson that where the circumstances indicate a genuine complaint for which the appropriate remedy is provided, if the Minister in the case in question so directs, he would not escape from the possibility of control by mandamus through adopting a negative attitude without explanation. Lord Upjohn has held that "a decision of the Minister stands on quite a different basis; he is a public officer charged by Parliament with the discharge of a public discretion affecting Her Majesty's subjects; if he does not give any reason for his decision it may be, if circumstances warrant it, that a court may be at liberty to come to the conclusion that he had no good reason for reaching that conclusion and order a prerogative writ to issue accordingly." It is thus seen that the judgment of the House of Lords serves the purpose of providing a compelling encouragement on public functionaries to give reasons for their decisions.

In R. v. Civil Service Appeal Board, ex parte Cunningham*, [(1991) 4 All ER 310],* where Lord Justice Leggatt who considered the lawfulness of a decision arrived at by a tribunal empowered to take appellate level decisions on employment related disciplinary matters in the public sector, observed that the duty to act fairly in the attendant circumstances of that case extended to an obligation being cast on the tribunal to give reasons for its decision. The court observed that, in the circumstances, the failure to give reasons amounted to a breach of procedural fairness. The judgment reflects the view of the court, that the Civil Service Appeal Board is a 'judicialized' tribunal. Another important feature contained in this judgment is the view that, once the court decides to exercise jurisdiction to cause judicial review, the public body whose decision is being reviewed owes a duty towards the Court to disclose reasons for its decision. Justice Donaldson drew a distinction between the legal duty on a public authority to provide an individual with reasons for its decisions and the duty to provide to Court reasons for the authority's impugned decision. Breach of the former duty can lead to the quashing of the decision without more. Failure to follow the latter, he observed, may lead to the Court drawing inferences adverse to the public authority, but it will not necessarily do so.

A further strengthening of this view is seen in the judgment of the House of Lords in Regina v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, Ex parte Doody*, [(1994) 1 AC 531]*, where it was held by Lord Mustill, that while "the law does not at present recognize a general duty to give reasons for an administrative decision", to mount an effective attack on the impugned decision, the person affected by such decision has, in the absence of reasons for the decision, virtually no means of ascertaining whether the decision-making process had gone astray. Giving reasons though not specifically stated in the statute, may in certain circumstances be implied. He has proceeded to opine that he observes in recent judgments, a perceptible trend towards an insistence on greater openness in the making of administrative decisions. In this case, the House of Lords expressed the view that a convicted prisoner serving a term of life imprisonment was entitled to be told by the Home Secretary reasons for his having rejected the advice of the trial judge regarding the minimum duration of the term of imprisonment which the prisoner should serve. Lord Mustill observed that giving reasons may be inconvenient, but giving reasons would not be against public interest.

Shortly after the delivery of that judgment, in Regina v. Higher Education Funding Council, ex parte Institute of Dental Surgery*, [(1994) 1 All ER 651]*, reflecting what I see as a dampening or retardation of the progressive development of the law in this regard, it has been held by Justice Sedley of a Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench, that the imposition of a duty to give reasons may place an undue burden on decision-makers. It would demand an appearance of unanimity where there is diversity of views. It would call for articulation of sometimes inexpressible value judgments and offer an invitation to the captious to comb the reasons for previously unsuspected grounds of challenge. Nevertheless, leaving room for the common law to, in the future, impose a legal duty to give reasons in appropriate instances, Justice Sedley recognized that while there was no general and overall duty cast on administrative bodies to give reasons for their decisions either on general grounds of fairness or simply to enable grounds for judicial review of a decision to be explored, there were two classes of cases where such duty would exist in law. Those two classes are, where, (i) the subject matter is an interest so highly regarded by law, such as for example personal liberty, that fairness requires that reasons, at least for particular decisions be given as of right, and where (ii) the decision appears to be aberrant. In this case, the decision of the Higher Education Council regarding the quantum of the annual research grant to be awarded to the Institute of Dental Surgery, which was founded on an academic assessment of research standards of the Institute, was deemed not to be aberrant as warranting reasons to have been given for the decision of the Council.

In view of the financial and reputational importance of the decision of the Higher Education Council to the Institute of Dental Surgery, proponents have argued, and I am inclined to agree, that if this case was decided today, the Court would not have decided the case in the same manner. It is more than likely that the Court would impose a duty to give reasons, particularly since the Court felt that it was not suitably equipped to decide on the appropriateness of the ranking given by the Council to the Institute. Thus, there is the need for reasons for the decision, enabling Court to determine whether the decision is unreasonable or arbitrary. This view is strengthened by Justice Sedley's own subsequent view expressed in Regina (Wooder) v. Feggetter and Another, [(2003) Q.B. 219], that had the case relating to the Institute of Dental Surgery been decided by him when he was called upon to decide this case (R. v. Feggetter), it would not have necessarily been decided the same way. That is an indication that due to the progressive development of the common law with regard to the duty to give reasons, Courts may now, even with regard to instances of decision-making involving 'academic or other value-based judgments' insist on the decision-maker giving reasons, particularly if the impugned decision attracts implications as regards legally recognized rights or interests of persons.

Regina v. Ministry of Defence, Ex parte Colin James Murray, [(1998) COD 134], is a case quite similar to the case which this Court has been called upon to decide. The Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench had been called upon to judicially review a decision of a Court Martial which had imposed a punishment of 6-month imprisonment, reduction in rank and dismissal from service, on an Army Sergeant. Evidence revealed that the Sergeant was of good character and had served the Army for 20 years. He pleaded 'guilty' to a charge of wounding another non-commissioned officer by biting his nose, and was accordingly convicted. During the sentencing hearing, evidence was led by the prosecution and the defence. The evidence included conflicting expert medical evidence. The position taken up on behalf of the accused Sergeant was that the impugned behaviour was attributable wholly or partially to intoxication arising out of medication (Mefloquine) he had taken to treat malaria. That position was rejected by the Court Martial, which did not give reasons. The convicted and sentenced Sergeant appealed against the sentencing order to the Confirming Officer, who confirmed the sentence. He subsequently sought judicial review. It was observed by Chief Justice Bingham that there was no over-riding general principle that reasons must be given, and that would include decisions pertaining to disciplinary matters. Nevertheless, the Court observed that where the liberty of a person was involved, Courts would have to supply additional procedural standards to ensure fairness. The absence of legislative provisions that reasons should be given, is no firm indicator that reasons need not be given. Where there is no statutory requirement to give reasons, the person arguing that reasons should have been given, must show that the procedure of not giving reasons was unfair. The Court observed that the carrying out of a judicial function by a tribunal, additionally favoured reasons for the decision to be disclosed, particularly as personal liberty was involved. Court also observed that fairness required that reasons should have been given both as to why the Court Martial had reached the conclusion that there was no causal connection between the applicant's actions and Mefloquine which he had taken, and why it decided that a sentence of imprisonment was required rather than some lesser sentence which would not have had the same dire consequences for the Sergeant. However, Court observed that it should not be thought that failure to give reasons would normally result in the quashing of a post-conviction determination of fact and the determination of the sentence. Judicial review was unlikely to succeed, for example, where the reasons were easily discernible albeit not expressed, or where no other conclusion than the one reached was realistically possible. In the circumstances, the sentence imposed by the Court Martial was quashed by the Queen's Bench Division, for non-disclosure of reasons. Following careful consideration, I have concluded that the ratio of this judgment has high persuasive impact on the determination of the instant Appeal.

The position of the English common law on the duty to give reasons during the final years of the last millennium is seen in the observations of Lord Clyde in Marta Stefan v. General Medical Council*, [(1999) 1 WLR 1293]*, wherein he observed that, "there is certainly a strong argument for the view that what were once seen as exceptions to a rule may now be becoming examples of the norm, and the cases where reasons are not required may be taking on the appearance of exceptions".*

In Karen Louise Oakley v. South Cambridgeshire District Council*, [(2017) EWCA Civil 71] decided by the Court of Appeal (Civil Division) of the United Kingdom,* the issue that came up for consideration was whether the Planning Committee of the South Cambridgeshire District Council ought to have given reasons for granting planning permission to the Cambridge City Football Club for the construction of a 3000-seater football stadium, training and parking facilities and a recreational ground in Cambridgeshire. An Application for planning approval had been presented to the Council by the football club. The Council's senior planning officer who processed the Application, presented to the planning committee a report containing her findings, a recommendation that the Application be rejected and permission refused together with reasons therefor. The planning committee of the Council met to consider the Application, and decided not to act per the recommendation of the senior planning officer. It decided in principle to approve the proposed developmental activity. During the consultation phase, a party claiming to be aggrieved by this decision, made representations to the Council urging that planning permission be refused for the project. However, the Council granted planning approval. The party that made such representations, challenged the decision of the Council, on the footing that the planning committee had failed to give reasons for its decision, notwithstanding the existence of a duty to give reasons. According to the applicable statute, reasons were required to be given only in instances where planning approval was refused and when approval was granted subject to conditions. The statute did not specifically require reasons to be given for a decision when granting approval without imposing conditions. Deciding the matter in appeal, Lord Justice Elias observed that the common law would be failing in its duty if it were to deny to parties who have such a close and substantial interest in the decision, the right to know why the impugned decision was taken. That is partly, but by no means only, for the instrumental reason that it might enable them to be satisfied that the decision was lawfully made, and to challenge the decision if they believe that the decision is unlawful. It is also because, as citizens, they have a legitimate interest in knowing how important decisions affecting the quality of their lives have been reached. This is particularly so, where they have made representations in the course of the decision-making process. In a general sense, this may be considered as an aspect of the duty of fairness, which in this context requires that decisions be transparent. The Court observed that where reasons for the decision can be readily inferred, the need may not arise to give reasons. It was not possible in the circumstances of the case to arrive at such an inference, particularly as the committee had deviated from the planning officer's recommendations. In the circumstances of this case, the Court observed that reasons for the decision were opaque. Thus, the Court recognized the duty to give reasons, as a requirement for good administration and transparency, and reinforced the justification for the imposition of a legal duty to give reasons.

In the judgment of the Court of Appeal (Civil Division) of England, in Horada (On behalf of the Shepherd's Bush Market Tenants' Association) and Others v Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government and Others [(2017) 2 All ER 86], Lord Justice Lewison with whom Lord Justice Longmore and then Chief Justice Lord Thomas of Cwmgiedd agreed, held as follows:

> "One of the purposes of requiring a decision-maker to give reasons for his decision is so that those who are affected by the decision may themselves decide whether the decision is susceptible to legal challenge…In short, although it is clear that the Secretary of State disagreed with the inspector's view that the guarantees and safeguards were inadequate he does not explain why he came to that conclusion. I do not consider that requiring a fuller explanation of his reasoning either amounts to requiring reasons for reasons, or that it requires a paragraph by paragraph rebuttal of the inspector's views. But it does require the Secretary of State to explain why he disagreed with the inspector, beyond merely stating his conclusion that he did. The two critical sentences in the decision letter are, in my judgment, little more than 'bald assertions'. The Secretary of State may have had perfectly good reasons for concluding that the guarantees and safeguards were adequate. The problem is that we do not know what they were. In those circumstances I consider that the traders have been substantially prejudiced by a failure to comply with a relevant requirement."

In R (On the application of CPRE Kent) v Dover District Council and another [(2018) 2 All ER 121], Lord Carnwath with all other Lords agreeing, held as follows:

"Public authorities are under no general common law duty to give reasons for their decisions; but it is well-established that fairness may in some circumstances require it, even in a statutory context in which no express duty is imposed. … It is to be noted that a principal justification for imposing the duty was seen as the need to reveal any such error as would entitle the court to intervene, and so make effective the right to challenge the decision by judicial review. … In my view, Oakley was rightly decided, and consistent with the general law as established by the House of Lords in Doody. Although planning law is a creature of statute, the proper interpretation of the statute is underpinned by general principles, properly referred to as derived from the common law. Doody itself involved such an application of the common law principle of 'fairness' in a statutory context, in which the giving of reasons was seen as essential to allow effective supervision by courts. Fairness provided the link between the common law duty to give reasons for an administrative decision, and the right of the individual affected to bring proceedings to challenge the legality of that decision." [Emphasis added]

It appears that Lord Carnwath's views reproduced above, reflect the present position of the English law on the duty to give reasons.

Position of the law in India

The judgment of the Indian Supreme Court in Siemens Engineering & Manufacturing Company of India Limited v. Union of India and Another*, [(1976) Supplementary S.C.R. 489]*, has while highlighting the importance and recognizing the existence of a legal duty on statutory administrative bodies to give reasons for their decisions, introduced a pioneering linkage between the 'duty to give reasons' and a well-established principle in Administrative Law, namely, 'the rules of natural justice'. Justice Bhagwati has expressed the following views:

*"It is now settled law that where an authority makes an order in exercise of a quasi-judicial function it must record its reasons in support of the order it makes. Every quasi-judicial order must be supported by reasons. … If courts of law are to be replaced by administrative authorities and tribunals, as indeed, in some kinds of cases, with the proliferation of Administrative Law, they may have to be so replaced, it is essential that* > administrative authorities and tribunals should accord fair and proper hearing to the persons sought to be affected by their orders and give sufficiently clear and explicit reasons in support of the orders made by them. Then alone administrative authorities and tribunals exercising quasi-judicial function will be able to justify their existence and carry credibility with the people by inspiring confidence in the adjudicatory process. The rule requiring reasons to be given in support of an order is like the principle of audi alteram partem, a basic principle of natural justice which must inform every quasi-judicial process and this rule must be observed in its proper spirit and mere pretense of compliance with it would not satisfy the requirement of law." [Emphasis added]

Learned President's Counsel for the Appellant emphasized the importance of this Court being persuaded to follow the ratio decidendi in the Indian Supreme Court's decision in S.N. Mukherjee v. Union of India*, [(1990) AIR 1984]*, which he said marks a high watermark in India's Administrative Law. This judgment contains the views of India's Supreme Court on whether (a) a confirming authority (exercising authority in terms of the Army Act in respect of a finding and sentence imposed by a Court Martial) is required by law to record reasons for confirming the finding and sentence imposed by a Court Martial, and (b) the Central Government or its competent authority (which is empowered to deal with a post-confirmation petition) is required to record reasons for its order in respect of a petition presented to it. In the process of considering these two issues, the Supreme Court also considered the answer to the fundamental question, as to whether a Court Martial is required to record reasons for the finding (verdict) and sentence imposed.

Having surveyed in detail the position of the law of England, United States of America, Canada, Australia and India, as regards the legal duty to give reasons by administrative bodies, Justice Agrawal has held that "… it must be concluded that except in cases where the requirement has been dispensed with expressly or by necessary implication, an administrative authority exercising judicial or quasi-judicial functions is required to record reasons for its decisions*"*. The judgment contains the view that the requirement that reasons be recorded should govern decisions of administrative authorities exercising quasi-judicial functions, irrespective of whether the decision is subject to appeal, revision or judicial review. However, the Court observed that the reasons for the decision which are to be declared need not be elaborate, as in the case of a Court of law. The nature and the extent of the reasons would depend on the facts and circumstances of the matter. However, it is necessary that the reasons are clear and explicit, so as to indicate that the decision-making body had given due consideration to the points in controversy.

Nevertheless, the Court noted that provisions of India's Army Act and Rules made thereunder negatived the requirement to give reasons for the findings of the Court Martial and the order of sentence, and for that reason alone held that there was no legal duty on a Court Martial established in terms of India's Army Act, to give reasons for its decision. Under these circumstances, India's Supreme Court dismissed the Appeal by the convicted and sentenced Army officer.

However, what is important is that, this judgment, recognizes the general principle that there exists a duty to give reasons for decisions by statutory bodies. That duty can be dispensed with, only when the empowering statute negatives that duty, either explicitly or impliedly.

Views of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal

At this stage, it would be appropriate to consider the views of our Supreme Court and the Court of Appeal, regarding this issue.

In Samalanka Limited v. Weerakoon, Commissioner of Labour and Others, [(1994) 1 Sri L.R. 405], Justice K.M.M.B. Kulatunga has commented on whether the Commissioner of Labour acting in terms of section 2 of the Termination of Employment of Workmen (Special Provisions) Act, No. 45 of 1971, was required to give reasons for his decision to grant permission to an employer (Appellant) to terminate the employment of workmen of the company, subject to terms specified relating to the payment of compensation and gratuity. His Lordship has observed that the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal could not be faulted, in that, while it is desirable to give reasons for a decision, for example where a right of appeal is provided against such decision, in the absence of a statutory requirement, there is no general principle of administrative law that natural justice requires the authority making the decision to adduce reasons, provided that the decision is made after holding a fair inquiry. It appears that in that matter, though reasons for the decision had not been given by the Commissioner, the Supreme Court had, in view of the attendant circumstances of the case, been satisfied that a fair inquiry had been conducted by the Commissioner and that in the circumstances his decision was not arbitrary, and therefore not unlawful.

Therefore, in my view, the judgment of Justice Kulatunga which reflects a generic proposition of the law, that 'reasons for a decision need not be given by the decision-maker', is linked necessarily to the satisfaction by Court that in the circumstances of the case, a fair hearing had been given by the Commissioner and his decision does not appear to be arbitrary.

In Kusumawathie and Others v. Aitken Spence & Company Limited and Another, [(1996) 2 Sri L.R. 18], Justice Sarath N. Silva (as His Lordship was then), has examined this issue in a judgment of the Court of Appeal. In this matter too, whether there exists a legal duty to give reasons has been considered in the backdrop of the powers and functions of the Commissioner of Labour in terms of section 2 of the Termination of Employment of Workmen Act, No. 45 of 1971. The Petitioners had challenged a decision of the Commissioner on the sole ground that the impugned decision violated the principles of natural justice, by the Commissioner having failed to give reasons for his decision. However, it is to be noted that the Commissioner had, through an affidavit that was filed in the Court of Appeal, explained the reasons for his decision. Justice Silva has considered the question of law which was before the Court of Appeal, that being, whether in the absence of a specific statutory requirement to give reasons, the Commissioner was required by law to communicate reasons for his decision along with the decision, and whether doing so is a requirement of the rules of natural justice. His Lordship has observed that neither the common law nor the principles of natural justice require as a general rule, that administrative tribunals or authorities should give reasons for their decisions that are subject to judicial review. His Lordship has also observed the following:

> "Thus, it is seen that the common law of this country has evolved so as to require every tribunal or administrative authority whose decision is subject to a statutory right of appeal to give its reasons for such decision. Reasons have to contain findings on the disputed matters that are relevant to the decision. It is also seen that in the absence of a statutory requirement to give reasons for decision or a statutory appeal from a decision, as aforesaid, there is no requirement of common law or the principles of natural justice, that a tribunal or an administrative authority should give reasons for its decision, even if such decision has been made in the exercise of a statutory discretion and may adversely affect the interests or the legitimate or reasonable expectations of other persons. ... There being no statutory requirement to give reasons and no provision for an appeal from the Commissioner's decision, the only ground of challenge advanced by the Petitioner has to fail.

However, I have to reiterate the observation made by Tambiah, J. ten years ago in the case of Samarasinghe v. De Mel that it is indeed desirable that reasons be given by the Commissioner for a decision or an order made under the Termination of Employment of Workmen (Special Provisions) Act. ...

... The finding in the preceding section of this judgment that there is no requirement in law to give reasons should not be construed as a gate-way to arbitrary decisions and orders. If a decision that is challenged is not a "speaking order", (carrying its reasons on its face), when notice is issued by a Court exercising judicial review, reasons to support it have to be disclosed with notice to the Petitioner." [Emphasis added]

It would thus be seen that Justice Silva has highlighted the legal duty to give reasons for the decision when there is a statutory right of appeal against the impugned decision. His Lordship's view seems to be that where there is no statutory right of appeal, there is no legal obligation to reveal the reasons for the decision simultaneously with the decision. His Lordship does not explain why reasons for a decision should be given when there is a statutory right of appeal and why reasons need not be contemporaneously declared together with the decision, in other instances, where though there is no right of appeal, judicial review may be available to challenge decisions of statutory bodies. The need for reasons for a decision in instances where there is a statutory right of appeal, is because, in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction the court should visit the merits of the decision as well as the lawfulness of the application of the law. Thus, it is necessary to be apprised of and consider reasons for the decision. Similarly, in the exercise of judicial review, the Court has to consider whether there are errors of law embedded in the decision and also whether the decision is reasonable. In the absence of reasons for the decision, how can those matters be gone into? Thus, I must respectfully record disagreement with the limitations His Lordship has imposed regarding the instances where there exists a legal duty to disclose reasons for the decision.

However, it is pertinent to note that His Lordship has insisted on the need to disclose reasons for the decision, if and when, the decision is impugned before a Court. In the matter presently before this Court, the 2nd to 4th Respondents who were members of the Court Martial, have not placed reasons for the impugned finding of guilt before the Court of Appeal. Thus, according to the principle enunciated by Justice Sarath Silva, the impugned finding of the Court Martial is liable to be quashed on that ground alone. In this regard, it is to be noted that learned Senior State Counsel did not offer any explanation as to why reasons for the verdict pronounced by the Court Martial were not placed before the Court of Appeal.

With the view to considering the judgment of the Supreme Court in Karunadasa v. Unique Gem Stones Ltd. and Others, [(1997) 1 Sri L.R. 256], cited by both the learned President's Counsel for the Appellant and learned Senior State Counsel for the Respondents, it is necessary to initially consider the prelude to that case, namely Unique Gemstones Ltd. v. W. Karunadasa and Others, [(1995) 2 Sri L.R. 357]. This matter has also originated from a decision given by the Commissioner of Labour in terms of section 2 of the Termination of Employment of Workmen (Special Provisions) Act, No. 45 of 1971, in the backdrop of the 1st Respondent (employee) having complained to the 2nd Respondent – Commissioner of Labour that the Petitioner (employer) had terminated his services. The employer denied that allegation and counter-claimed that the 1st Respondent vacated services following frequent instances of absenteeism. Following the conduct of an inquiry by the 3rd Respondent - Assistant Commissioner, the 2nd Respondent - Commissioner of Labour determined that the employment of the 1st Respondent had been terminated by the Petitioner and thus directed that the workman be reinstated. He further directed that a specified amount of back wages be paid to the 1st Respondent. The Petitioner asked the Commissioner to provide him reasons for his decision, to which the latter did not respond favourably. Thereafter, the Petitioner moved the Court of Appeal for the issuance of a writ of certiorari to quash the decision of the 2nd Respondent Commissioner, on the footing that the impugned decision was not accompanied with reasons for the decision, and thus it was alleged that the inquiry contravened the principles of natural justice. Even after his decision was challenged in Court, the 2nd Respondent did not tender to the Court of Appeal reasons for his decision. Nor was the record of the inquiry conducted by the Assistant Commissioner or his recommendation to the Commissioner presented to Court. In fact, both of them had not even been represented before the Court of Appeal. In this setting, having examined a series of judgments reflecting both English and Sri Lankan law, Justice H.W. Senanayake while issuing a writ of certiorari quashing the decision of the Commissioner, observed the following:

> "There is a continuing momentum in administrative law towards transparency in decision making. It is my considered view that public officers who wield power on others should give reasons for their decisions. The failure to give reasons is a breach of section 17 of the T.E. Act because it is inconsistent with the principles of natural justice. It is my view the 2nd Respondent's failure to give reasons is a negation of natural justice." [Emphasis added]

Aggrieved by the judgment of the Court of Appeal which resulted in the quashing of the decision of the Commissioner of Labour, the employee (Karunadasa) appealed to the Supreme Court. The ensuing judgment of the Supreme Court is Karunadasa v. Unique Gem Stones Limited and Others. Delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court, Justice Mark Fernando observed as follows:

> "... Article 12(1) of the Constitution now guarantees the equal protection of the law. In the context of the machinery for appeals, revision, judicial review, and the enforcement of the fundamental rights, giving reasons is becoming, increasingly, an important 'protection of the law' (see for instance Bandara v. Premachandra) for if a party is not told the reasons for an adverse decision his ability to seek review will be impaired. ... To say that natural justice entitles a party to a hearing, does not mean merely that his evidence and submissions must be heard and recorded; it necessarily means that he is entitled to a reasoned consideration of the case which he presents. And whether or not > the parties are also entitled to be told the reasons for the decision, if they are withheld, once judicial review commences, the decision 'may be condemned as arbitrary and unreasonable*'; certainly, the Court cannot be asked to presume that they were valid reasons, for that would be to surrender its discretion. The 2nd respondent's failure to produce the 3rd respondent's recommendations thus justified the conclusion that there were no valid reasons, and that natural justice had not been observed. ...* The fact that the 3rd respondent held a fair inquiry and otherwise acted within jurisdiction does not excuse the failure to give reasons. ... While the mere fact that the 3rd respondent held the inquiry does not vitiate the 2nd respondent's order, the 2nd respondent's failure to give reasons is all the more serious because it was not he who held the inquiry. The judgment of the Court of Appeal that natural justice required that reasons be given, must therefore be affirmed*."* [Emphasis added]

It is thus seen that the Supreme Court has in this judgment recognized that the conduct of what appears to be a fair hearing does not absolve the statutory body from the duty to give reasons. Further, the Court has recognized that the duty to give reasons is interwoven with the rules of natural justice. The Supreme Court has observed that the absence of reasons for the decision, renders the decision open to the criticism that it is violative of Article 12(1) of the Constitution. Furthermore, the absence of reasons for the decision would deprive the person affected by the decision of the equal protection of the law.

The next judgment which along with the judgment in the Samalanka Limited case that was heavily relied upon by learned Senior State Counsel was Yaseen Omar v. Pakistan International Airlines Corporation and Others*, [(1999) 2 Sri L.R. 375]*. That matter also related to an inquiry conducted by the Commissioner of Labour in terms of the Termination of Employment of Workmen (Special Provisions) Act, No. 45 of 1971. The Court of Appeal had set aside the impugned decision of the Commissioner of Labour on the ground that giving reasons for the decision is a sine qua non for a fair hearing, and that the Commissioner had not given reasons for the impugned decision. In appeal to the Supreme Court, Justice Dr. Shirani Bandaranayake, as she was then, citing with approval the judgment of Justice Kulatunga in Samalanka Limited v. Weerakoon, Commissioner of Labour and Others has observed that there is no general principle of administrative law that natural justice requires the authority making the decision to adduce reasons, provided the decision is made after holding a fair inquiry. Justice Bandaranayake has also considered the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division in R. v. Higher Education Funding Council, ex parte Institute of Dental Surgery, and cited with approval its ratio decidendi being, 'while there is no general duty to give reasons for a decision, there are classes of cases where there is such a duty, namely (a) situations where the subject matter is an interest so highly regarded by the law, such as for example personal liberty that fairness requires that reasons, at least for particular decisions, be given as of right, and (b) where the decision appears to be aberrant*'*.

Justice Bandaranayake has extensively dealt with the material that had been placed before Court by the Commissioner of Labour including the Report of the relevant Assistant Commissioner of Labour. The only logical conclusion that can be arrived at is that Her Ladyship was satisfied that the Commissioner of Labour had conducted a fair inquiry in compliance with section 17 of the Act, which requires the Commissioner to conduct an inquiry in a manner not inconsistent with the principles of natural justice. By the detailed reference to the material considered by the Commissioner, it is evident that Her Ladyship was convinced of the correctness of the decision the Commissioner had arrived at. It also appears that Her Ladyship was convinced that the decision of the Commissioner could not be invalidated merely due to the absence of reasons, particularly as there was no statutory requirement for the Commissioner to give reasons for his decision. Thus, it would not be possible for me to agree with the submission of learned Senior State Counsel, that Justice Bandaranayake's views serve to propound a 'general principle of administrative law, that in the absence of a statutory requirement, there is no general principle that requires the authority making the decision to adduce reasons, provided the decision is made after holding a fair hearing'. In my view, Justice Bandaranayake by recognizing the principle contained in R. v. Higher Education Funding Council, ex parte Institute of Dental Surgery, has left it open for a Court exercising the function of judicial review to quash a decision of a statutory body to which reasons have not been attached, if the inquiry and the decision come within one of the two situations referred to in that judgment.

In the subsequent case of Lanka Multi Moulds (Pvt) Ltd v Wimalasena, Commissioner of Labour and others, [(2003) 1 Sri L.R. 143], Justice Mark Fernando has reiterated his views regarding the duty to give reasons, in the following manner:

> "Although the Commissioner has a discretion in respect of both limbs of section 6, that is not an unfettered or unreviewable discretion. As the Court of Appeal observed, he must give reasons for his decision. Although in Samalanka Ltd. v Weerakoon, it was held by Kulatunga, J (with G.P.S. de Silva, CJ and Ramanathan, J agreeing), that the Commissioner was not under a duty to give reasons, I took the contrary view in Karunadasa v Unique Gemstones Ltd. (with Wadugodapitiya, J and Anandacoomaraswamy, J agreeing). That decision was considered and followed by Gunasekera, J in Ceylon Printers v Commissioner of Labour. Since G.P.S. Silva, CJ agreed with Gunasekera, J on that occasion it is clear that he no longer agreed with Samalanka. In Mendis v Perera, I observed that the audi alteram partem rule does not merely entitle a party to a purely formal opportunity of placing his case before a tribunal, and that natural justice would be devalued if the tribunal does not consider the evidence and the submissions, evaluate it properly and not in haste, and give reasons for its conclusions. However, in Yaseen Omar v Pakistan International Airlines, Samalanka was followed, apparently without the attention of the Court being drawn to the subsequent decisions to the contrary and relevant citations. …
> It is therefore necessary to reiterate what has been long recognized: that the statutory conferment of a right of appeal against the decision of a tribunal has the effect of imposing a duty on that tribunal to give reasons for its decisions. … The conferment of a right to seek revision or review necessarily has the same effect. As the decisions cited show, if the citizen is not made aware of the reason for a decision he cannot tell whether it is reviewable, and he will thereby be deprived of one of the protections of the common law – which Article 12(1) now guarantees. Today, therefore, the conjoint effect of the machinery for appeals, revision, and judicial review and the fundamental rights jurisdiction, is that as a general rule tribunals must give reasons for their decisions*."*
> [Emphasis added]

Another aspect of this issue arises out of the contemporary view that wholly unreasonable or arbitrary decisions are violative of Article 12(1) of the Constitution. When reasons for a decision are not disclosed, the Court is deprived of the opportunity of considering reasons for the decision, for the purpose of determining whether the decision is reasonable. Particularly when reasons are not revealed even after the decision is impugned before a Court, there is a justification to conclude that, (a) reasons were not revealed as the statutory body had no reasons to be given, or (b) the reasons which the statutory body had taken into account were subjective or otherwise indefensible before a Court of law, and hence would not withstand an objective scrutiny. In these situations, there is every likelihood that the Court would conclude that the decision is either unreasonable, arbitrary or unlawful due to other reasons. Thus, there is a strong argument in favour of the proposition, with which I find myself in agreement, that decisions which are pronounced without reasons being revealed, and no legally tenable excuse being presented to Court for not having revealed reasons, are decisions which are violative of Article 12(1) of the Constitution, and thus unlawful. The situation gets compounded when reasons for the decision are not revealed even to Court, once the decision is impugned.

In this regard, the following views of Dr. Mario Gomez contained in his article titled 'Blending Rights with Writs: Sri Lankan Public Law's New Brew' published in 2006, in Acta Juridica, University of Cape Town's Law Journal, is of particular importance:

> "There are two ways of challenging the discretionary power of public authorities: writs and fundamental rights. In recent years, there has been a cross-fertilization of ideas and concepts between these two areas. In applications for a writ, Sri Lankan courts are beginning to assert that the exercise of discretionary power by the public authority must conform with the requirements of Article 12 (the right to equality and equal protection) as well as with the other traditional grounds of review. At the same time the courts have asserted that the constitutional right to equality and equal protection includes the right to natural justice, to reasons, a recognition of legitimate expectations and the right against arbitrary and unfair treatment. This cross-fertilization of ideas and concepts has considerably enriched Sri Lankan public law." [Emphasis added]

Justice Sripavan as His Lordship was then, in Benedict and others v Monetary Board of the Central Bank of Sri Lanka and others, [(2003) 3 Sri L.R. 68] has held that failure to give adequate reasons amounts to a denial of justice and therefore is itself an error of law. His Lordship held as follows:

> "The reasons must not only be intelligible but should deal with the substantial points which have been raised. The Courts have treated inadequacy of reasons as an error on the face of record so that inadequately reasoned decision could be quashed, even if the duty to give reasons was not mandatory… In the absence of reasons, the person affected may be unable to see whether there has been a justiciable flaw in the decision making process…Giving reasons introduces clarity and minimizes arbitrariness; it gives satisfaction to the party against whom the order is made and also enables the supervisory court to keep any tribunal within bounds. If the reasons are not given, the court can only draw an inference that the first respondent had no rational reason for its decision and has failed to act with procedural fairness towards depositors and creditors."

His Lordship has expressed a similar view in Lankem Tea and Rubber Plantations (Pvt) Ltd. v Central Bank of Sri Lanka and Others*, [(2004) 2 Sri L.R. 133]* wherein His Lordship held as follows:

> "In the absence of reasons, it is impossible to determine whether or not there has been an error of law. Failure to give reasons therefore amounts to a denial of justice and is itself an error of law. In R v Mental Health Review Tribunal, ex parte Clatworthy, it was held that reasons should be sufficiently detailed as to make quite clear to the parties and specially the losing party as to why the tribunal decided as it did and to avoid the impression that the decision was based upon extraneous consideration rather than the matter raised at the hearing."

In Shell Gas Lanka Ltd. v Consumer Affairs Authority and Another*, [(2005) 3 Sri L.R. 262]*, the Petitioner had sought prior approval in writing from the Respondent to revise the retail price of liquid petroleum (gas, for home consumption). That application and a subsequent appeal had been rejected by the Respondent. In this backdrop, the Petitioner contended before the Supreme Court, inter-alia that the Respondent failed to give reasons for his decision (refusal to permit a revision of the price) and therefore, the decision was unreasonable. Justice Sisira de Abrew held that, in His Lordship's view, failure to give reasons can be construed as 'no reasons'. Citing a long line of local and foreign judicial decisions, His Lordship held that natural justice demands that administrative tribunals should give reasons for their decisions. Further, His Lordship was of the view that unreasonable decisions of administrative tribunals could be quashed by the Court of Appeal in the exercise of its writ jurisdiction. Accordingly, a writ of certiorari was issued to quash the decisions of the Respondent and a writ of mandamus was issued to compel the Respondent to determine the Petitioner's application.

That Justice Dr. Shirani Bandaranayake (as she was then) has subsequent to the delivery of the Judgment in Yaseen Omar v. Pakistan International Airlines Corporation and Others reconsidered her view on this matter, is evident when one considers that Her Ladyship has expressed the following views in Choolanie v. People's Bank and Others [(2008) 2 Sri L.R. 93]:

> "On a consideration of our case law in the light of the attitude taken by Courts in other countries, it is quite clear that giving reasons to an administrative decision is an important feature in today's context, which cannot be lightly disregarded. Furthermore, in a situation, where giving reasons have been ignored, such a body would run the risk of having acted arbitrarily in coming to their conclusion. …"

Her Ladyship in Hapuarachchi and Others v. Commissioner of Elections and Another [(2009) 1 Sri L.R. 1] has reiterated her views regarding this important question of law, in the following manner:

> "Accordingly, an analysis of the attitude of the Courts since the beginning of the 20th (sic) century clearly indicates that despite the fact that there is no general duty to give reasons for administrative decisions, the Courts have regarded the issue in question as a matter affecting the concept of procedural fairness. Reasons for an administrative decision are essential to correct any errors and thereby to ensure that a person, who had suffered due to an unfair decision, is treated according to the standard of fairness. In such a situation without a statement from the person, who gave the impugned decision or the order, the decision process would be flawed and the decision would create doubts in the minds of the aggrieved person as well of the others, who would try > to assess the validity of the decision. Considering the present process in procedural fairness vis-à-vis, rights of the people, there is no doubt that a statement of reasons for an administrative decision is a necessary requirement*."* [Emphasis added]

In Central Bank of Sri Lanka and Others v Lankem Tea and Rubber Plantations (Pvt) Ltd [(2009) 2 Sri L.R. 75], a writ of certiorari from the Court of Appeal was sought to quash a penalty imposed on the Petitioner by the Respondents for an alleged contravention of a provision of the Exchange Control Act. The Petitioner alleged that reasons were not given for the imposition of the penalty. The Petitioner also alleged that the President in her capacity as the Minister of Finance had refused to mitigate the penalty and had also refused to give reasons for the refusal. The Court of Appeal issued the writ and quashed the impugned decisions. The Respondents appealed against that judgment to the Supreme Court. Justice Marsoof with whom Chief Justice Sarath N. Silva and Justice Shiranee Tilakawardane agreed, while affirming the judgment of the Court of Appeal and dismissing the Appeal, held as follows:

> "It is important to note that the changes taking place in other jurisdictions have also had their influence on our courts, and a strong trend of insistence on a statement of reasons is discernible in Sri Lankan judicial decisions. The Sri Lankan authorities were examined recently by the Supreme Court in M. Deepthi Kumara Guneratne and Two others v Dayananda Dissanayake and Another SC (FR) Application No. 56/2008 (SC Minutes dated 19th March 2009) in which the Supreme Court has moved towards recognizing a general duty to give reasons. … I am of the opinion that in the circumstances of this case, the decisions contained in P10 and P14 cry out for reasons, and the failure to give any, render them devoid of any legal validity. I hold that the failure to give reasons rendered the decisions contained in P10 and P14 nugatory..."

I wish to also consider the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara v. Kolitha Gunathilaka, Air Vice Martial and Others (CA Writ 333/2011, CA Minutes 1st June 2020) decided by Justice Mahinda Samayawardhena. In this matter, the Petitioner, an aircraftman of the volunteer force of the Sri Lanka Air Force had been found 'guilty' by a General Court Martial for committing murder and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for life.

One out of the three grounds on which the Petitioner sought the quashing of the finding of guilt and the sentence imposed on him, was that reasons were not given for the finding of the General Court Martial. It was common ground that the General Court Martial was obliged to act in terms with the Sri Lanka Air Force Act read together with Court Martial (General and District) Regulations promulgated in terms of the Act, and that neither legislation specifically required the General Court Martial to give reasons for its findings. Justice Samayawardhena has observed the following:

> "... If a country is governed by the rule of law, reasons for decisions must be given, no less when a man is convicted for murder and the death sentence or life imprisonment is passed as the punishment. ... The giving of reasons for decisions is inherent in the justice system of any civilized society. It is embedded in it and inseparable from it. It is a basic requirement of natural justice. Such a fundamental requirement which goes to the root of the matter cannot be taken away by conjecture. ... I would go one step further to say that not only can it not be assumed that a requirement to give reasons is excluded by implication, even if that requirement is excluded in express terms, such (purported) exclusions shall be subject to strict interpretation in order to promote the essence of natural justice. ... In my judgment, giving reasons for a decision of the Court Martial has not been dispensed with expressly or by necessary implication in the Air Force Act or Regulations made thereunder. Hence, failure to give reasons is fatal to the conviction of murder in the instant case... If natural justice does not require giving reasons for decisions, fairness, at least does. ... Failure to give reasons is a denial of justice. ... Failure to give reasons suggests arbitrariness. ... Giving reasons for decisions minimizes abuse of power. ... When shall the decision-maker give reasons? The decision-maker shall give reasons at the time of making the decision, unless there is an agreement to the contrary. Can failure to give reasons be remedied by giving reasons later? The answer shall be in the negative. If reasons have been given but not communicated to the party concerned, the situation is different. ... If the decision is an empty decision devoid of reasons, there is no decision in the eyes of the law. It is a nullity – nullity ab initio; bad – incurably bad. There is no necessity to quash such a purported decision for there is nothing to quash in the first place. Nevertheless, to avoid any confusion and for clarity, the decision can be formally quashed by way of certiorari." [Emphasis added]

I must record my agreement with the views expressed by Justice Mahinda Samayawardhena.

As regards the judgment of Justice Samayawardhena in Abeysinghage Chandana Kumara v. Kolitha Gunathilaka, Air Vice Marshal and Others, we inquired from learned Senior State Counsel as to whether the Attorney General who represented the Respondents in that matter agrees with the views of the Court of Appeal, and learned Senior State Counsel responded in the negative. We then inquired whether the Attorney General had on behalf of the Respondents preferred an Appeal to this Court against the judgment of the Court of Appeal, to which learned Senior State Counsel also responded in the negative. However, he did not venture to explain as to why an Appeal was not presented.

Impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal

I must now turn towards the two reasons cited by the Court of Appeal (contained in the impugned judgment) for its conclusion that a Court Martial is not required by law to give reasons for its findings.

First ground – Reasons need not be given since juries in jury trials in the High Court are not required to give reasons

The first reason identified by the Court of Appeal is that the Code of Criminal Procedure Act does not require a jury to give reasons for its verdict, nor does the Navy Act require a Court Martial to give reasons for its findings. Thus, the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal seems to suggest the following:

(a) Proceedings before a Court Martial is similar, if not identical to jury trials in the High Court. A jury is not required by the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act to give reasons for its verdict. Thus, a Court Martial is also not required by law to give reasons for its decisions.

(b) The Navy Act does not contain a legal requirement for a Court Martial to give reasons for its finding (verdict). Thus, there is no legal duty on a Court Martial to give reasons for its finding.

Court Martial proceedings and jury trials in the High Court

The Code of Criminal Procedure Act recognizes and provides three formats for the conduct of criminal trials by the High Court. They are, (i) trial before a judge of the High Court sitting without a jury, (ii) trial before a judge of the High Court sitting with a jury, (commonly referred to as a 'jury trial'), and (iii) trial by three judges of the High Court, (commonly referred to as a 'trial at bar'). Chapter XVIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, No. 15 of 1979 regulates the conduct of such a 'jury trial'. The basis for the first part of the first reason cited by the Court of Appeal, is that, in several respects a trial before a 'Court Martial' is parallel to a 'jury trial' in the High Court, and as the law (as it stands at present) does not require a jury to give reasons for its verdict, a Court Martial is also not required by law to give reasons for its finding (verdict). As I can see, there are two fallacies in this approach, arising out of the supposed parallel between the two trial forms. First, whether the equation of a 'jury trial' in the High Court to a trial before a Court Martial is a legally tenable proposition. Secondly, whether independently of a determination on whether a jury is required to give reasons for its verdict, the question whether a Court Martial is required by law to give reasons for its finding should be determined.

The attempt at drawing a parallel between a jury trial and a trial before a Court Martial arises out of the external manifestation that a judge of the High Court who presides at a trial in the High Court before a jury performs functions which are performed by the Judge Advocate in a trial before a Court Martial, and that members of the Court Martial are like jurors who decide on facts based upon which they arrive at the finding (verdict). There is indeed a rational basis for this parallel. Thus, I respectfully agree with the proposition of Chief Justice H.N.G. Fernando in Jayanetti v. Martinus and Others*, (71 NLR 49),* that the functions of a Judge Advocate are comparable to that of a Judge of a High Court in a jury trial. However, a thorough consideration of the powers and functions of a judge of the High Court in comparison with those of a Judge Advocate of a Court Martial, reveals that the two positions and their powers and functions are not identical. Learned President's Counsel for the Appellant has pointed towards three critical factors (referred to earlier) with which I find myself in agreement. These factors distinguish the two roles. The distinctions in the two roles arise out of section 39 of the Navy Act, when compared with provisions of sections 239 and 240 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act. What appears to be a distinction of fundamental importance, is that, while a Judge of the High Court is empowered to preside over proceedings in the High Court and give directions to the jury on matters of law which the jury is obliged by law to comply with, as regards questions of law, in terms of the Navy Act, members of a Court Martial are not relegated to perform the subordinate role a jury is required to perform. Members of a Court Martial are not only the decision-makers with regard to questions of fact, they are equally placed with regard to determination of questions of law. The role and functions of the Judge-Advocate in a trial before a Court Martial as provided in section 39 of the Navy Act is 'advisory' in nature, and he is subordinate to the legal standing of members of the Court Martial.

Sections 229 and 230 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, provide that, the judge of the High Court shall (i) when the trial is concluded, charge the jury summing up the evidence and laying down the law by which the jury is to be guided, (ii) decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial, (iii) decide upon the meaning and construction of all documents given in evidence at the trial, (iv) decide upon all matters of fact which may be necessary to prove in order to enable evidence of particular matters to be given, and (v) decide whether any question which arises is for himself or the jury. Further, section 231 provides that the judge may in the course of his summing up, if he thinks proper, express to the jury, his opinion upon any question of fact or upon any question of mixed law and fact relevant to the case at hand. It would thus be seen that, the legal scheme and provisions relating to the powers and functions of a judge of the High Court in a 'jury trial' differ significantly from those relating to a Judge Advocate in a trial before a Court Martial. This in my view creates a significant difference between a jury trial and a trial before a Court Martial.

The other difference stems from the distinction between the High Court before which jury trials take place and Court Martials. As detailed out in a different part of this judgment, due to several significant reasons, a Court Martial cannot be equated to a Court of law. As pointed in that part of this judgment, a Court Martial lacks the features of a Court of law, and is a tribunal (and not a 'court') which has been conferred with inter-alia, judicial powers to impose penal and disciplinary sanctions.

Therefore, I find myself in agreement with the submission made in this regard by learned President's Counsel for the Appellant, that a trial before a jury in the High Court is not identical to a trial before a Court Martial. His submission that in the eyes of the law the two types of trial proceedings are distinguishable, in my view, is well-founded.

In the circumstances, I find myself unable to agree with the reasoning contained in the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal, that, since a jury in a jury trial in the High Court is not required by the Code of Criminal Procedure Act to give reasons for its verdict, a Court Martial too is not required to give reasons for its decisions.

Be that as it may, I would not be surprised, if in view of recent developments in Public Law aimed at ensuring adherence to the rule of law, fairness, reasonableness, transparency and accountability, in the near future the common law would demand that trial juries be also required by law to give reasons for their verdicts. Such a revolutionary change in the 'trial by jury' system would unlock the veil of secrecy surrounding the jury room, which has so far been guarded. That of course is not a matter to be determined in this appeal. However, that is another reason as to why the issue before this Court should not be determined founded upon the prevailing written law relating to jury trials in the High Court being the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, which does not specify that a jury should give reasons for its verdict.

No explicit statutory duty conferred by written law on a Court Martial to give reasons for its findings

Section 43 of the Navy Act provides for the manner of deciding questions before a Court Martial. Section 43 reads as follows:

> "Every question before a court martial shall be decided by the majority vote of the members of the court martial. Where there is an equality of votes of the members of a court martial on the question of the finding in any case, the accused in that case shall be deemed to be acquitted. Where there is an equality of votes of the members of a court martial on the sentence in any case or on any question arising after the commencement of the hearing of any case other than the question of the finding, the president shall have a casting vote."

It is thus seen that the Navy Act does not explicitly impose a statutory legal duty requiring a Court Martial to give reasons for its finding.

This Court inquired from learned Senior State Counsel for the Respondents whether there existed Rules made by the Minister in terms of section 161 of the Navy Act, which contained further legal requirements pertaining to the conduct of Court Martial proceedings and regarding the making of orders, the finding and sentence. Learned counsel responded in the negative.

The written law mainly provides the basic legal framework, and it is the duty of common law judges to fill in the rest with applicable legal principles existing in the domain of the unwritten law. On many occasions, the common law has filled lacuna existing in the written law and has thereby facilitated the enforcement of the law and the administration of justice in a just and fair manner. For example, it is very rarely that a legal mechanism which confers statutory power to a public or statutory functionary specifically provides that such body should adhere to the rules of 'natural justice', grant a 'fair hearing' and decide 'objectively'. Omissions by the legislature have been and continues to be filled by judges, by incorporating doctrines found in the common law into legislative provisions. Thus, merely because a particular legal requirement is not explicitly found in written law, it cannot be hurriedly and safely assumed that such a legal requirement does not exist in law. In this regard, it is important to note that the Navy Act also does not contain any provision of law or feature which negatives the existence of a legal duty on a Court Martial to give reasons for its findings. Furthermore, section 132 of the Navy Act provides that such of the provisions of Article 140 of the Constitution as relate to the grant and issue of writs of mandamus, certiorari, and prohibition shall be deemed to apply in respect of any Court Martial. Thus, it is seen that the legislature in its own wisdom has provided by written law for judicial review of decisions of Courts Martial to be carried out from the perspective of Public Law, which governs the issuance of such writs. That is another reason as to why the legal scheme contained in the Navy Act should be viewed from the perspective of Public and Administrative Law.

A careful examination of the provisions of the Navy Act reveals that there does not exist any legal provision in that Navy Act which negatives the common law duty for a Court Martial to give reasons for its finding and order of sentence. In this regard, it is to be noted that, the Indian Supreme Court refrained from granting any relief to the Petitioner in S.N. Mukherjee v. Union of India, since the court observed that the provisions of the Army Act of India and in particular Rules 62 and 66(1) of the Rules made in terms of the Army Act in the opinion of the Indian Supreme Court, negatived the duty to give reasons for the finding and sentence imposed by a Court Martial. It is on that footing that the Indian Supreme Court having emphatically recognized a common law requirement for statutory bodies to give reasons for their decisions, held that a Court Martial established in terms of India's Army Act is not required to give reasons for its finding and sentence.

Second ground contained in the impugned judgment: Judicial precedent contained in G.S.C. Fonseka v. Lt. Gen. J. Jayasuriya

The second reason which appears to have influenced the Court of Appeal to arrive at the finding that a Court Martial is not required by law to give reasons for its finding, is a pronouncement contained in a judgment of the Court of Appeal decided by three judges of that Court in G.S.C. Fonseka v. Lt. Gen. J. Jayasuriya and five others, [CA Writ 679/2010, CA Minutes of 16th December 2011]. Learned Deputy Solicitor General who appeared in the Court of Appeal for the Respondents had invited the Court of Appeal to treat that judgment (decided by three judges of the Court of Appeal) as judicial precedent to the proposition that a Court Martial is not required by law to give reasons for its finding. That case relates to a onetime Commander of the Sri Lanka Army (the Petitioner) who was found 'guilty' by a Court Martial and sentenced to serve a term of imprisonment. He sought to have the finding and the sentence imposed on him by the Court Martial quashed by a writ of certiorari. In that matter, one out of the several grounds based upon which the Petitioner sought to challenge the lawfulness of the impugned finding of the Court Martial and the sentence imposed on him, was that no reasons were given by the Court Martial for its finding. The Court of Appeal dismissed the application in-limine on the premise that the Petitioner was 'guilty' of non-disclosure and suppression of certain material to the Court of Appeal which in the view of the Court, the Petitioner was obliged to reveal. Therefore, the Court held that the Petitioner was not entitled to the writ of certiorari, as it is a discretionary remedy. On the afore-stated question of law, whether a Court Martial is obliged by law to give reasons for its findings, the Court of Appeal has held as follows:

> "The learned counsel submitted that the Court Martial had been declared a court of law in G.S.C. Fonseka v. Dhammika Kithulegoda and seven others (SC No. 1/2010 CA Writ Application 676/2010 – SC Minutes of 10th January 2011) wherein the Supreme Court has held that the Court Martial should act judicially. Therefore, the Court Martial should give reasons for its decision. However, the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Court Martial is for the purpose of Article 89(d) of the Constitution."

It thus appears that the Court of Appeal in the afore-stated judgment had merely referred to the submission made to it by counsel for the Petitioner, that as a Court Martial is to be recognized as a 'court', it should give reasons for its decision, and has responded to that submission by reiterating the determination of the Supreme Court, that a Court Martial should be considered to be a 'court' only for the purposes Article 89(d) of the Constitution. There is no specific finding by the Court of Appeal, that a Court Martial need not give reasons for its decisions. Nor is there such a finding in the Determination of the Supreme Court. I must observe that the Court of Appeal has given an extremely narrow construction to the Determination of the Supreme Court. It has not considered the broader and critical issue of whether a Court Martial is obliged by the common law to give reasons for its findings. This becomes a critical issue, because the Supreme Court had observed that a Court Martial should act 'judicially'. The judgment of the Court of Appeal in my view does not contain a finding that the common law on the matter does not impose a legal obligation on a Court Martial to give reasons for its findings.

In the Reference referred to above by the Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court in Gardihewa Sarath C. Fonseka v. Dhammika Kithulegoda, Secretary General of Parliament and Others*, [SC Reference No. 1/2010, SC Minutes of 10th January 2011, reported in 2011 BLR 169]*, the question of law which the Supreme Court had to determine was whether the words 'any court' referred to in Article 89(d) of the Constitution refer to the Supreme Court, Court of Appeal and the other Courts of First Instance, to the exclusion of tribunals and institutions or whether the words 'any court' include a Court Martial. Chief Justice J.A.N. De Silva has in response to that question of law, observed that the concept of Courts Martial is valid under the Constitution, and that considering Article 4(c) of the Constitution in relation with Articles 16, 105(2) and 142, a Court Martial is an entity required to function judicially, and exercising judicial power and is recognized as such by the Constitution in terms of the second limb of Article 4(c), has the power to hear and try cases, and impose valid sentences including sentences of death and imprisonment. Chief Justice De Silva with whom three other judges agreed, held that a Court Martial is a "court" for the purposes of Article 89(d) of the Constitution. Justice Saleem Marsoof, in his separate opinion, while agreeing with the conclusion reached by the Chief Justice, expressed the view that the institution of Court Martial, being an emanation of executive power, is not a court, tribunal or institution set up for the administration of justice which protect, vindicate, and enforce the rights of the people as described in Article 105 of the Constitution, and has no place in Chapter XV of the Constitution. However, Justice Marsoof held that a Court Martial is a competent court within the meaning of the phrase in Article 13(4) of the Constitution. The term 'competent court' includes not only a regular court, but even an 'extraordinary court' such as a Court Martial. In the circumstances, Justice Marsoof held that the words 'any court' in Article 89(d) should be construed in a manner so as to include all courts which are created and established or otherwise recognized by the Constitution as being competent to impose punishments envisaged in that Article, including a Court Martial.

For the purpose of determining this Appeal, what is pertinent to note is that both views of the Supreme Court recognize the fact that a Court Martial is a 'court' and is thus required by law to act 'judicially', in the hearing of cases and in the imposition of punishments. This is notwithstanding the unresolved issue whether a Court Martial that is required to function 'judicially' and is empowered with 'judicial power' can be appointed by the Executive, which would in this instance include the President and the Commander of the Sri Lanka Navy. Be that as it may, Article 13(4) of the Constitution provides that, any person charged with the commission of an 'offence' shall be entitled to be heard, in person or by an attorney-at-law, at a 'fair trial' by a competent court. It is thus seen that in addition to the common law requirement that a 'fair hearing' should be given by a statutory authority (which would include a Court Martial) conferred with power to arrive at a decision which has the potential of affecting the rights of a person, there is an additional duty conferred on a Court Martial in view of its standing as a 'Court', to afford a 'fair trial' to the accused. In terms of Article 13(4) of the Constitution, the right to a 'fair trial' is a fundamental right conferred on any person charged with the commission of an offence. Thus, an accused before a Court Martial such as the Appellant, should be able to enjoy the fundamental right to a 'fair trial'. In my view, a 'fair trial' is a process that is a refined and specialized form of a 'fair hearing'. A 'fair trial' is the standard which a court of law is required to adhere to. Thus, in my view, a Court Martial is constitutionally required to adhere to a higher standard of fairness than a normal statutory body which is empowered to take a decision that has a bearing on the rights of a person. It must be observed that a Court Martial is no ordinary statutory body or tribunal. It is required to adhere to the standards of fairness required from a Court of law. That higher standard of fairness is an additional factor which imposes a duty on a Court Martial to give reasons for its finding, as in the case of a Court of law being required to give reasons for its verdict. Such reasons for the verdict form a major portion of the 'judgment' of a Court of law that has exercised criminal jurisdiction.

Thus, I am compelled to point out that the reliance by the Court of Appeal in the impugned judgment on G.S.C. Fonseka v. Lt. Gen. J. Jayasuriya and five others, is not defensible in the eyes of the law.

Courts of law and Courts Martial

Though in the afore-stated Determination of the Supreme Court, a Court Martial has been recognized to be a 'Court of law' for the purposes of Article 89(d) of the Constitution, there are significant differences between a 'Court of law' and a 'Court Martial'. As regards a trial before a Court Martial established in terms of the Navy Act is concerned, the principal differences between the two become significant when consideration is given to the following features pertaining to a Court Martial:

(i) When there is information that an offence recognized by the Navy Act has been committed by a person who is subject to naval law, the Commander of the Navy is empowered to direct the initiation of an investigative process, referred to as the holding of a 'Board of Inquiry' and is empowered to appoint members to that Board. [Regulations 2 and 4, Navy (Board of Inquiry) Regulations, 1975]

(ii) Following the conduct of the investigative process by the Board of Inquiry, the Commander of the Navy may use the information gathered by the Board of Inquiry to determine whether the alleged offender should be subjected to a Court Martial. [Regulation 5, Navy (Board of Inquiry) Regulations] Thus, it can be said that the Commander of the Navy is empowered to decide on the institution of Court Martial proceedings against the alleged offender.

(iii) Thereafter, the Commander of the Navy is empowered to issue a 'charge sheet' against the alleged offender and thereby institute proceedings against the alleged offender. [Document marked "P13" in the Court of Appeal which is the 'charge sheet' issued to the Appellant containing offences alleged to have been committed by him, reveals that.]

(iv) Unlike a Court of law, a Court Martial lacks permanency, in that it is convened on a case-by-case basis. Thus, it may be termed as an 'ad-hoc tribunal' as opposed to a 'standing or permanent court'.

(v) A Court Martial is convened based on an order by the President of the Republic who is also the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces or by an officer not below the rank of Captain authorized in that regard by the President of the Republic. [section 34(1), Navy Act] (Section 34 provides two exceptions to this, wherein due to exigencies of the situation, certain other Navy officers have been empowered to constitute a Court Martial.) Thus, a Court Martial is constituted at the discretion of the President or an officer of the Navy authorized by the President.

(vi) Members of a Court Martial are necessarily officers of the Navy, Army or the Air Force and appointed by the same authority who has ordered the convening of such Court Martial [section 35, Navy Act] or in certain situations by the President of the Court Martial. (The President of a Court Martial is also appointed by the President or other officer who convened the Court Martial.) Thus, the appointment of members of a Court Martial is case specific.

(vii) Neither the President of the Court Martial nor other members of a Court Martial are 'judicial officers'. Their primary function is not to hear cases, they do not receive any judicial training in judicial adjudication of disputes, and are not required to adhere to judicial ethics. Thus, they cannot be categorized as professional judges. It is apt to refer to them as 'military professionals', who are called upon on a case-by-case basis to administer 'military justice'.

(viii) The Judge Advocate who plays a pivotal role in the functioning of a Court Martial, is also appointed by the President of the Republic or by such officer who convened the particular Court Martial. [section 38, Navy Act] Thus, the post of Judge Advocate is also case specific.

(ix) As pointed out above, the Judge Advocate's role in Court Martial proceedings is 'advisory' in nature. [section 39, Navy Act] Even on questions of law, he cannot 'direct' members of the Court Martial regarding the manner in which the relevant question should be determined.

(x) A Court Martial is both a 'disciplinary body' as well as a 'tribunal' vested with jurisdiction and powers akin to a Court of law vested with criminal jurisdiction.

(xi) The President of the Republic is entitled to revise a punishment imposed by a Court Martial. [section 122, Navy Act]

It would thus be seen that the investigation into an offence, institution of criminal proceedings, convening of the Court Martial and its composition, and the appointment of the Judge-Advocate is vested in the Executive branch of the State (primarily the President of the Republic, Commander of the Navy and by officers subordinate to the Commander). It is seen that the entire military justice system provided for in the Navy Act is centered on the Executive. Whereas, the functioning of a Court of law exercising criminal jurisdiction and hearing of cases by such Court happens within a wholly different legal framework, wherein there are structural and efficacious arrangements to guarantee independence and professionalism in the administration of criminal justice. Delivery of criminal justice does not occur at the discretion of the Executive. In view of the afore-stated features pertaining to proceedings of a Court Martial, it is my view that a Court Martial can in no way be recognized as an independent, impartial and neutral judicial tribunal, notwithstanding it being conferred with the exercise of functions which are akin to judicial functions and possessing the power to impose severe penal punishments.

It is necessary to appreciate that senior military officers, unlike civilian judges, would be well-placed to appreciate incidents which occur in a military setting and would be ideally suited to arrive at qualitative value judgments on military matters. However, the competency of members of a Court Martial to appreciate complex questions of law such as satisfaction of ingredients of an offence, and other important matters such as the assessment of credibility and testimonial trustworthiness of witnesses, which are issues that would invariably arise in the course of a trial before a Court Martial, can give rise to well-founded concerns.

Thus, a Court Martial can in my view be categorized as an 'extraordinary judicialized military tribunal possessing a fusion of disciplinary and criminal adjudicatory jurisdiction'. A Court Martial lacks certain fundamental and key features of a Court of law. Whether the system of military justice administered by Courts Martial is in conformity with constitutionally recognized norms pertaining to administration of justice, can be called into question in many respects. Whether in view of the prevailing law relating to the composition and conduct of Court Martial proceedings, an accused before such tribunals can reasonably be expected to enjoy the fundamental right to a fair trial is an important question of law, which may have to be determined in the future. It is not necessary for me to express a view on that matter in this judgment. It is possible that the system of Courts Martial as contained in the Navy Act continues to survive in the contemporary era, purely due to Article 16 of the Constitution, which provides that, all existing written law and unwritten law shall be valid and operative notwithstanding any inconsistency with the fundamental rights guaranteed by Chapter III of the Constitution, and as the Navy Act had been enacted and brought into operation prior to the promulgation of the 1978 Constitution.

In concluding this part of my judgment, I need to touch on one more point. It may be argued that the law and procedure relating to the functioning of Courts Martial in Sri Lanka are similar to that of the United Kingdom, and as Courts Martial in the United Kingdom are not required by either statute or common law to give reasons for their verdicts, in Sri Lanka too, Courts Martials need not give reasons for their verdicts. I would with the greatest respect to those who may wish to advance that proposition, state that I disagree with that view. That is due to the following reasons. The Armed Forces Acts of 2006, 2011, 2016 of the UK, augmented by the Armed Forces Act of 2021 (which are quinquennial Acts of Parliament of the UK) have greatly enhanced the integrity of the military justice system in the United Kingdom. It is now a system of justice integrated into the core system of Administration of Justice of the United Kingdom. So much so, that the Lord Chief Justice of England and Wales now devotes a chapter of his Annual Report to the Service Justice System (as the military justice system is now called). In view of procedural changes introduced to the Court Martial system by the aforementioned laws and the inbuilt safeguards to ensure that the accused has a right to a fair trial, it can now be safely said that the Court Martial proceedings in the United Kingdom are parallel to jury trials conducted by conventional courts (the Crown Court) exercising criminal jurisdiction of that country, and therefore, the necessity of insisting on a Court Martial to give reasons for its decisions is possibly not necessary. Regrettably though, that cannot be said about the military justice system of Sri Lanka. Some of the key features of the contemporary service justice system of the United Kingdom which contrasts itself from Sri Lanka's military justice system are as follows:

(i) Courts Martial in the United Kingdom are standing permanent courts.

(ii) Members of the Court Martial (Board) who invariably are military personnel are not directly appointed by the respective Commander of the relevant armed force. Nor are they appointed by the relevant Commander at his discretion to hear a particular case.

(iii) Judge Advocates (who come under the Judge Advocate General) are members of the independent judiciary, and are appointed on merit by the independent Judicial Appointments Commission. The Judge Advocate General is appointed by His Majesty the King on the recommendation of the Lord Chancellor. They are not appointed on a case by case basis by the respective Commander.

(iv) During the early stages of trial proceedings before a Court Martial, the Judge Advocate gives on record in open court, a specific direction to members of the Court Martial (the 'Board') referred to as the 'morris direction'. This direction is aimed at ensuring that members of the Board understand their duties in respect of the trial. These directions are styled to ensure that members of the Board act in an independent manner and need not be influenced by their chain of command directives from senior military officers.

(v) The proceedings of Court Martial are open to the public unless specifically an order is made for proceedings to be held in camera for certain limited reasons.

(vi) The directions and rulings which the Judge Advocate may give the Board (members of the Court Martial) on questions of law, procedure and practice are binding on the court.

(vii) The summing up by the Judge Advocate cannot be dispensed with.

(viii) At the end of proceedings, if the Judge Advocate is satisfied that the findings announced by members of the Court Martial are acceptable in law, the Judge Advocate and the President of the Board shall sign a record of the findings. If the Judge Advocate is not satisfied, he shall direct the members of the Board to withdraw and reconsider their findings.

(ix) A person convicted and sentenced by a Court Martial may with the leave of Court appeal to the Court Martial Appeal Court against both the conviction and the sentence. The Court Martial Appeal Court comprises of regular judges of the Court of Appeal.

[While some of these features are found in provisions of the 2006, 2011, 2016 and 2021 Acts, others are found in the Armed Forces (Court Martial) Rules 2009 promulgated by the Secretary of State under the Armed Forces Act of 2006.]

It would be seen that these features provide systemic and procedural safeguards to ensure a fair trial to accused and the delivery of justice. These features are also aimed at ensuring the independence of members of the Court Martial, in that, they are protected from possible influences that may otherwise come their way from the military hierarchy. Further, these features guarantee procedural fairness, integrity of the system of service (military) justice. The Judge Advocate as a person and through his role in a Court Martial, is required to perform judicial functions. There exists a guarantee of professionalism and high integrity in the role and functions of the Judge Advocate. These features also confer on Court Martial a parity of status with jury trials conducted in Crown Courts of the United Kingdom. Regrettably though, none of these features are found in the military justice system of Sri Lanka. Therefore, a comparison between the service justice system of the United Kingdom and the military justice system of Sri Lanka, is not possible. In the circumstances, I am inclined to hold that in view of the vast differences between the two systems, it is not logical to conclude that because the statutory and English common law do not require a Court Martial to give reasons for its verdict, the same principle should apply to a Court Martial of Sri Lanka governed by the respective Acts, and hence there is no legal duty to give reasons for the verdict. No comparison can be made between the military justice system of Sri Lanka and the service justice system of the United Kingdom.

From the perspectives of compatibility with norms of justice and public policy, and in conformity with human rights, findings (verdicts) of Courts Martial in Sri Lanka should necessarily be viewed with a degree of circumspect. Under such circumstances, the availability of 'reasons' for the finding of a Court Martial, is perhaps the most important source by which a Court of law exercising the function of judicial review could determine whether an accused who has been convicted of committing an offence had received a fair trial, and whether the finding (verdict) of the Court Martial had been arrived at independently, impartially, neutrally, necessarily in accordance with the merits of the case, founded upon a correct appreciation and application of the law, and is reasonable. In the circumstances, for the purpose of ensuring justice, fairness and transparency, and the protection of fundamental rights, it is necessary that a legal duty be cast on a Court Martial to declare reasons for its findings (verdict). Perhaps, requiring a Court Martial to give reasons for the verdict, is possibly the only effective guarantee of a fair trial to accused who are arraigned before a Court Martial and to ensure that justice is duly administered.

Section 43 of the Navy Act and Article 15(8) of the Constitution

The next issue that requires consideration is whether the legal duty imposed on members of a Court Martial by section 43 of the Navy Act to (following the conclusion of recording evidence, submissions of counsel for the prosecution and the defence and the summing up by the Judge Advocate), cast their vote and thereby indicate their individual finding, tantamount to a restriction imposed in terms of Article 15(8) of the Constitution, which restricts an accused before a Court Martial from receiving reasons for the finding arrived at by the Court Martial. This issue arises out of an indirect admission by learned Senior State Counsel that an accused before a Court Martial would in view of his Fundamental Rights to equality and equal protection of the law recognized by Article 12(1) of the Constitution have the right to know the reasons for the finding of the Court Martial, if not for the provisions of section 43 of the Navy Act. Learned Senior State Counsel submitted that the imposition of a restriction of that nature is permissible in terms of Article 15(8) of the Constitution.

Article 15(8) of the Constitution provides the following restriction on the enjoyment of certain Fundamental Rights recognized by Chapter III of the Constitution.

> "The exercise and operation of the fundamental rights declared and recognized by Articles 12(1), 13 and 14 shall, in their application to the members of the Armed Forces, Police Force and other Forces charged with the maintenance of public order, be subject to such restrictions as may be prescribed by law in the interests of the proper discharge of their duties and the maintenance of discipline among them*."* [Emphasis added]

Dr. Jayampathy Wickramaratne, PC in Fundamental Rights in Sri Lanka (2021, 3rd Edition, p. 159) has stated the following:

> "A Constitution that declares fundamental rights and freedoms lays down permissible restrictions in order to maintain a balance between individual rights and freedoms on the one hand and the interests of the society on the other. While the rights and freedoms represent the claims of the individual, the permissible restrictions represent the claims of society. Yet, as Bhat J stated in Sushila Aggarwal v State (NCT of India), it would be useful to remind oneself that the rights which the citizens cherish deeply are fundamental – it is not the restrictions that are fundamental."

The submission made by learned Senior State Counsel necessitates this Court to consider whether section 43 of the Navy Act imposes a restriction in terms of Article 15(8) of the Constitution, disentitling an accused before a Court Martial from enjoying the right to know reasons for its finding (final decision).

It is seen that section 43 of the Navy Act imposes a requirement that every matter that requires a decision by a Court Martial including its finding (verdict) be determined by a vote. Implicit in the section is the norm that where there is a difference in the number of votes cast in favour and against a particular proposition, the decision of the majority would prevail. The section also provides for the ensuing situation where there is an equality of votes. Section 43 in my view does not directly or indirectly indicate that it serves as a restriction on a Fundamental Right (in this instance the Fundamental Right enshrined in Article 12(1) of the Constitution) in so far as persons to whom the Navy Act applies. This provision of the law does not prohibit the giving of reasons for the finding or provide a legal entitlement on members of a Court Martial to refrain from giving reasons for their finding. Section 43 provides a mechanism that must necessarily be adopted, as a Court Martial comprises of multiple members who are required to arrive at decisions both during and at the end of the trial proceedings. It is seen that, while adhering to the requirement contained in section 43 of the Navy Act, it is possible for members of the Court Martial to first cast their respective votes declaring their individual decision on whether the accused is 'guilty' or not, and thereafter give reasons for their respective finding. Consequently, there is nothing stated in section 43 that would prevent either the unanimous views of the Court Martial or the divergent views of members of the Court Martial from being declared as reasons for the finding. Furthermore, if section 43 is to serve as a permissible restriction coming within the ambit of Article 15(8) of the Constitution, there should be an intimate, real and rational connection with the object of the restriction and what is sought to be protected by Article 15(8), namely 'the interests of the proper discharge of their (members of the Armed Forces) duties and the maintenance of discipline among them'. As to how the disclosure of reasons for the finding of the Court Martial in the instant case would have a detrimental impact on the proper discharge of the functions of members of the Armed Forces and the maintenance of discipline among them, is a matter that beats even my imagination. For these multiple reasons, I conclude that section 43 of the Navy Act does not serve as a constitutionally recognized and permissible restriction on the enjoyment of the right to equality and equal protection of the law, which would entitle the accused before a Court Martial to receive reasons for the finding (verdict).

Reasons for the finding of the Court Martial not revealed to the Court of Appeal Learned Senior State Counsel took pains to attempt justifying the conviction of the Appellant by the Court Martial. Based on his interpretation of the evidence placed before the Court Martial, he advanced reasons, which in his view supported the Appellant having been convicted by the Court Martial. However, the purported reasons were not revealed by the Court Martial to the Appellant at the stage the finding was announced. Nor have reasons for the finding been recorded in the official record of the proceedings of the Court Martial. Furthermore, reasons for the finding were not revealed to the Court of Appeal by the 2nd to 4th Respondents, who were members of the Court Martial.

Further, as quoted by me previously, in Kusumawathie and Others v. Aitken Spence and Company Limited and Another*, [(1996) 2 Sri L.R. 18]*, Justice Sarath N. Silva has held that, if a decision that is challenged is not a 'speaking order' carrying its reasons on its face (as in the finding of the Court Martial), when Notice is issued by a Court exercising judicial review, reasons to support the decision have to be disclosed to Court with notice to the Petitioner.

Learned Senior State Counsel did not explain as to why even the Court of Appeal was not apprised of reasons for the verdict pronounced by the Court Martial. Therefore, in the circumstances of this Appeal, it is not possible to consider whether the conviction of the Appellant by the Court Martial is justifiable or not. Further, the absence of providing reasons for the verdict to the Court of Appeal, is another factor which vitiates the finding of the Court Martial.

Need for reasons for the finding of the Court Martial due to the evidence

Quite independent of the legal duty cast on a Court Martial by the common law to give reasons for its finding (verdict), in this case, the following analysis of the evidence presented by the prosecution and the defence, would also in my opinion warrant reasons for the finding of guilt to have been given. In the circumstances, the absence of reasons would indicate the unreasonableness and arbitrary character of the finding.

1st Count

As regards the 1st count in the charge sheet, which contained an allegation that the Appellant had committed an offence under section 60(2) of the Navy Act, the key ingredient the prosecution was required to prove beyond reasonable doubt was that during the period relevant to that count, the Appellant had, 'without the approval from the competent authority, remained out of his tactical area of responsibility', and that such conduct amounted to 'improperly leaving the place of duty'. That is the applicable prohibition contained in the afore-stated section. It is common ground that for this purpose, the 'competent authority' was the Area Commander of the North Central Naval Area, Rear Admiral Illangakoon. His testimony was that he did not give authorization to the Appellant to stay at SLNS Gajaba at night-time instead of staying at the Vanlakai naval detachment. The position of the Appellant was that the Area Commander had given him authorization, as an interim measure (until suitable accommodation for him was arranged at the Vankalai naval deployment), to remain overnight at SLNS Gajaba. In the circumstances, to find the Appellant 'guilty' of the first count, the Court Martial should have, as pointed out by the Judge-Advocate (a) fully believed and accepted the testimony given by Rear Admiral Illangakoon, and (b) rejected the testimony of the Appellant, Lt. Commander Dissanayake and all the defence witnesses. The question arises on what basis the Court Martial decided to do so, particularly in view of the testimony given by the prosecution's own witness Commanding Officer Vankalai - Lt. Commander Dissanayake, whose evidence in this regard cut-across the testimony of Rear Admiral Illangakoon and fully supported the evidence of the Appellant. The impact of Lt. Commander Dissanayake's evidence must be viewed in the backdrop of the prosecution not having treated him as an 'adverse witness'. Had the prosecution done so, it would have been possible for the prosecution to have discredited him and invited the Court Martial to disbelieve his testimony. Furthermore, it is seen that the testimony given by Lt. Commander Ranaweera also serves to corroborate the evidence of both the Appellant and that of Lt. Commander Dissanayake. In the circumstances, only the Court Martial would have known the reasons based upon which it decided to fully accept the testimony of one prosecution witness - Rear Admiral Illangakoon, while not accepting the testimony of another prosecution witness - Lt. Commander Dissanayake. Furthermore, even if the evidence of Rear Admiral Illangakoon is fully believed while rejecting the testimonies of all other witnesses, the question remains as to the reasons based upon which the Court Martial decided that in the circumstances of this case, the conduct of the Appellant which was impugned by the prosecution, amounted to an offence in terms of section 60(2) of the Navy Act, in that the Appellant's conduct amounted to improperly leaving the place of duty.

2nd Count

As regards the 2nd count in the charge sheet, the key factual ingredient which the prosecution was required to prove beyond reasonable doubt was that on the night of the LTTE aerial attack, the Appellant 'did not proceed to his tactical area of responsibility being Vankalai and Nanaddan', and thereby failed to 'provide leadership to men under his command', an offence in terms of section 104(1) of the Navy Act. That in fact, pursuant to getting to know that the LTTE had launched an aerial attack, the Appellant who was at SLNS Gajaba did not rush to the Vankalai naval detachment, is not denied by the Appellant. His position is that he initially attempted to rush to the Vankalai naval detachment from SLNS Gajaba. However, having ascertained the position that prevailed at Vankalai and Nanaddan from the Commanding Officer Vanlakai - Lt. Commander Dissanayake and having satisfied himself that the situation there was 'under control' and that all necessary measures were in place in Vankalai to counter a possible further LTTE aerial attack, in view of the situation which prevailed at SLNS Gajaba, he took a considered decision not to leave SLNS Gajaba, to take charge of its operations room and to provide leadership to the naval personnel at that camp. This was due to the fact that the acting officer-in-charge of the camp on that occasion - Lt. Commander T.N.S. Perera was not a combat-experienced naval officer and was only a 'logistics officer'. The Appellant thus felt that his presence at SLNS Gajaba was necessary and in the best interests of the Navy and national security. As pointed out by the Judge Advocate, even the prosecution had conceded that the accused had taken all necessary measures and given necessary instructions from SLNS Gajaba. Thus, whether in the circumstances, the conduct of the Appellant amounted to causing 'prejudice to the good order and naval discipline' which is the 'resultant ingredient' of the offence contained in section 104(1) of the Navy Act, is the matter in respect of which the Court Martial had to take a decision on. As the Court Martial decided to find the Appellant 'guilty' of the second count as well, it is evident that it had answered this question in the affirmative. Thus, the ensuing question which looms large, is the basis on which the Court Martial decided to find the Appellant 'guilty' in respect of count 2, given the fact that he had taken a considered decision to remain at SLNS Gajaba, a decision which the prosecution does not necessarily impugn, and his having taken all such measures which he claims were in the best interests of the Navy and national security.

In my view, the afore-stated analysis exemplifies the need for the Court Martial to have given reasons for its finding (verdict). The absence of such reasons gives rise to an irrefutable inference that the finding of the Court Martial is unreasonable and arbitrary or to say the least, begs of justification.

Position of the law pertaining to the duty to give reasons for the finding and the punishment imposed by a Court Martial

Since the dawn of the new millennium and the 21st century, it appears that Courts in the common law world have refrained from holding that 'there is no general rule that statutory bodies have a legal duty to give reasons for their decisions'. Judgments of superior Courts and views of academicians and respected authors which I have considered earlier in this judgment, reflect a general and overall, well founded progressive trend towards the imposition of a legal duty on statutory authorities who are empowered to take decisions which have a bearing on the rights of persons, to give reasons for their decisions. This change in judicial policy which is founded upon the underlying evolving policies of public law, appear to be due to the keenness on the part of Court to ensure objectivity, fairness, reasonableness, transparency and accountability in decision-making by public and statutory bodies, including administrative bodies, tribunals and Courts of law. The overwhelming merits in imposing a legal duty on such bodies to give reasons for their decisions, amply justify this shift in the policy of Public and Administrative Law and in judicial policy.

The imposition of a legal duty to give reasons for decisions, is not only desirable, but necessary. The duty to give reasons arises out of the overarching duty on statutory bodies to give a fair hearing, which is regulated primarily by ensuring compliance with the principles of natural justice. The first two pillars being 'audi alteram partem' and 'nemo judex in causa sua', there is considerable merit in the proposition that the duty to give reasons is the third pillar of the doctrine of natural justice. The imposition of a legal duty to give reasons is the most efficacious way of determining whether a fair hearing had in fact been given in accordance with the principles of natural justice. That is the fundamental basis for holding that, subject to certain justifiable exceptions, there exists a legal duty on statutory bodies to give reasons for their decisions which have a bearing on the rights of persons.

Thus, particularly in view of more recent judgments reflecting the present position of the law in this regard in the common law world, there is a compelling need to reformulate the principle pertaining to the duty to give reasons for decisions, in the following terms:

> Unless specifically precluded or exempted by statutory provision, or the duty to give reasons has been impliedly yet unambiguously negatived, a statutorily created body empowered by law to take a decision which may have a bearing on the rights of a person, is required by law, to, following the applicable procedure provided by law, declare and forthwith record reasons for its decision. Provided however, a statutory body may be excused from the fulfilment of such legal duty, if the duty to disclose reasons for the decision has been dispensed with by the party affected by such decision, or there existed a legally justifiable reason for having in the circumstances of the situation, refrained from giving reasons for the decision. In such event, the grounds for not revealing reasons for the decision shall be declared and recorded along with the decision.

Exceptions to this generic legal duty, in most instances have been specifically laid down in statutes, or is to be necessarily inferred from the nature and the structure of the applicable written law, and the attendant circumstances.

In view of the foregoing detailed consideration of the law, I hold that a Court Martial is required by the common law to give reasons for its decisions, including reasons for the finding of guilt or otherwise of the accused and the punishment imposed.

An accused before a Court Martial, is entitled to the Fundamental Right to the equal protection of the law, as recognized by Article 12(1) of the Constitution, the concomitants of which are equality, rule of law, equal protection of the law including non-discrimination. The right to equality imposes an additional duty on the statutory bodies to give reasons for their decisions. Furthermore, an accused before a Court Martial has in terms of Article 13(4) of the Constitution, the right to a fair trial. The legal duty cast on a Court Martial to afford a fair trial to an accused, imposes a higher threshold for the maintenance of fairness. In this regard, it is important to note that, a consideration of the reasons for the finding (verdict) and the sentence is a significant way of determining whether an accused before a Court Martial had in fact received a fair trial. This is an additional factor which necessitates the imposition of a legal duty on a Court Martial to declare reasons for the finding (verdict). Thus, an accused before a Court Martial has in addition to the public and administrative law entitlement of receiving the reasons for the finding, a Fundamental Right to that effect as well.

The position of the law as regards a Court Martial convened in terms of the Navy Act, may be stated in the following terms:

> A Court Martial convened in terms of the Navy Act is required by law to give reasons for its finding (verdict) and the order of punishment (sentence) it imposes on a convicted accused. Such reasons shall be forthwith announced to the accused and contemporaneously recorded. This legal duty cast on a Court Martial by the common law, may be negatived by explicit or implied statutory provision. However, the Navy Act does not contain any such provision which negatives the common law duty cast on a Court Martial.

In view of the evidence led before the Court Martial in the instant case, the absence of reasons for the finding (verdict) gives rise to the irrefutable inference that the finding of the Court Martial is both unreasonable and arbitrary. That the members of the Court Martial opted not to provide reasons for their finding even to the Court of Appeal, strengthens that inference.

While it is not possible to provide a generic description of the nature, extent and degree of details to be included in the 'reasons for the decision', it would suffice to say that, reasons for a decision are the factors that gave rise to the decision. Reasons being declared should be accurate, sufficient in detail and embedded with clarity, enabling the applicable legal framework, factual basis and rationale for the decision to be understood correctly by a discerning and objective-minded reader.

In the backdrop of the existence of a legal duty to give reasons for the finding (verdict) and for the determination of punishment (sentence), the absence of such reasons renders the finding of guilt and the sentence imposed by the Court Martial to be declared unlawful, and thus void.

Conclusions reached by me in respect of the 2nd question of law

In view of my findings regarding the position of the law with regard to the existence of a legal duty on a Court Martial to give reasons for its finding (verdict) and the orders of punishment (sentence), I hold that it was erroneous for the Court of Appeal to have held that there was no need in law for the Court Martial to have given reasons for its finding (verdict) and that the absence of such reasons does not render the verdict void. Thus, I hold that the finding of guilt pronounced by the Court Martial dated 13th May 2009 and the associated sentences pronounced on the same day, are, due to the absence of reasons therefor, ab initio void.

3rd, 4th, 6th and 7th questions of law

The need to provide answers to the 3rd question of law – "whether the Court of Appeal had erred in its failure to consider whether the Judge Advocate's directions did not justify the determination arrived at by the Court Martial?", 4th question of law – "Whether the sentences imposed by the Court Martial on the Appellant is violative of section 104 of the Navy Act?", 6th question of law – "Whether the verdict of the Court Martial is bad in law, in that there was no evidence placed before the Court Martial which could be used to substantiate the verdict of 'guilty'?", and the 7th question of law – "Whether the sentences imposed by the Court Martial are bad in law, in that the said sentences are not in conformity with the principle of proportionality?", arises in my view for consideration, only if the 2nd question of law was answered in favour of the Respondents. The 3rd, 4th, and 6th questions of law are premised upon the questioning of the legality of the finding (verdict) of the Court Martial, independent of the ground that a legal duty exists on a Court Martial to give reasons for its finding, which the Court Martial had in this instance violated. As I have already held that the non-disclosure of reasons for the findings of the Court Martial renders such findings void on that ground alone, it would not be necessary for me to provide answers to these three questions of law. Further, the 7th question of law which relates to the sentences imposed by the Court Martial, arises for consideration only if I had held that the finding of guilt pronounced by the Court Martial was lawful. As the conviction of the Appellant has been held by me to have been unlawful and therefore void, the need to consider the legality and the appropriateness of the sentences passed on the Appellant does not arise. Therefore, this judgment will not contain my views regarding the afore-stated four questions of law.

(v) Can this Court grant the Petitioner any relief in view of section 122 of the Navy Act read with section 10 of the Navy Act, as the Petitioner's (sic) decommissioning has been approved by His Excellency the President?

As observed previously, on 13th May 2009 the Appellant was found 'guilty' by the Court Martial and on the same day, sentenced. ("P17a" and "P17b") By letter dated 14th May 2009, the Appellant presented an Application to His Excellency the President seeking revision of the sentences imposed on him. That was in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act. ("P18") Consequently, the implementation of the sentences imposed on him by the Court Martial had been stayed, pending a determination of the Application presented by the Appellant to His Excellency the President. ("P19") It appears from documents "R6" and "R8", that His Excellency the President had on a date between 9th June and 14th July 2009, decided not to grant any relief to the Appellant and thereby had ratified the sentences pronounced by the Court Martial, backed by the observations presented by the 1st Respondent. It is the position of the Respondents that, in view of the foregoing, the punishment awarded by the Court Martial was executed on 16th August 2009, by issuing a 'dismissal' signal (announcement). ("R 7") This has resulted in the Appellant's tenure at the Navy coming to an end.

It is to be noted that, having on 14th May 2009 submitted the afore-stated Application to His Excellency the President seeking a revision of the sentences, on 25th June 2009, the Appellant filed an Application in the Court of Appeal invoking the writ jurisdiction of that Court in terms of Article 140 of the Constitution, seeking inter alia mandates in the nature of writs of certiorari quashing the finding (verdict) and the sentences imposed on him by the Court Martial. On 4th August 2009 the Court of Appeal had issued Notice on the Respondents. Following the hearing of the Application, on 30th July 2015, the Court of Appeal pronounced its judgment dismissing the Application, which was impugned in this Appeal.

It is thus seen that the punishment imposed by the Court Martial was executed by promulgating a 'dismissal' signal on 16th August 2009, while proceedings were pending in the Court of Appeal. That 'dismissal' is directly linked to His Excellency the President having decided not to revise the sentences imposed on the Appellant by the Court Martial. It can also be seen that His Excellency's decision arises directly out of the impugned finding of guilt by the Court Martial and the impugned sentences of 'severe reprimand' and 'dismissal without disgrace from the Navy' also imposed by the Court Martial, and for no other reason.

Section 10 of the Navy Act provides that 'every commissioned officer shall hold his appointment during the President's pleasure'. The afore-stated question of law which had been proposed by learned Counsel for the Respondents has been founded upon a particular factual position, namely, that His Excellency the President has, acting in terms of section 10 of the Navy Act, withdrawn the commission of the Appellant resulting in the Appellant being decommissioned. However, no material has been placed either before the Court of Appeal or this Court in support of that factual position. Thus, it is not possible to consider this question of law on the footing that His Excellency the President has exercised discretion in terms of section 10 of the Navy Act and 'withdrawn' the commission of the Appellant. There is evidence of only His Excellency the President having acted in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act.

The view of the Court of Appeal in this regard, is to the following effect:

> "Petitioner's application under section 122 was refused by His Excellency the President. Under section 10 of the Navy Act, he holds office at the pleasure of the President and his dismissal has been approved by His Excellency the President."

It appears that the Court of Appeal had proceeded on the footing that the present status of the Appellant, of being 'dismissed' from the Sri Lanka Navy arises out of His Excellency the President having exercised power in terms of both sections 10 and 122 of the Navy Act. However, there is no material in support of that view. The 'dismissal' of the Appellant from the Sri Lanka Navy can be attributed to two developments. First, the conviction and sentence imposed by the Court Martial in respect of the second count on the charge sheet, viz. that the Appellant being dismissed from the Navy without disgrace, and secondly, His Excellency the President acting in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act and determining not to review that sentence. Thus, it would not be correct to view the present status of the Appellant from the perspective of the President having exercised power in terms of section 10 of the Navy Act.

Be that as it may, assuming for the purpose of determining the afore-stated question of law raised by learned Counsel for the Respondents, that His Excellency the President has made an order in terms of section 10 of the Navy Act, it is necessary to consider what effect the issue of a mandate in the nature of a writ of certiorari quashing the findings of the Court Martial would have on such order made by the President.

Section 10 of the Navy Act by no means empower His Excellency the President to exercise power in the nature of a carte blanche. I recognize that His Excellency the President being the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces and the Head of State of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka, has in terms of section 10 of the Navy Act, been vested with a considerable degree of discretionary authority to determine the tenure of service of commissioned officers of the Sri Lanka Navy. Our Courts would not easily interfere with the exercise of that power by the Head of State. However, the 'pleasure principle' which the learned Senior State Counsel submitted is embedded in section 10 of the Navy Act, has to be viewed from the perspective of doctrines relating to the exercise of Constitutional and statutory powers as recognized by the Constitution itself and by Public Law. 'Unfettered and unreviewable absolute discretion' finds no place in the present era of Constitutionalism and the rule of law on which the sovereignty of the people of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka has been founded. The cursus curiae of this Court, clearly prescribes that the application of the 'pleasure principle' is circumscribed by the Constitution, which includes the Fundamental Rights recognized by the Constitution. Subject to restrictions that may be prescribed by law in terms of Article 15(8) of the Constitution, Article 12 of the Constitution which guarantees equal protection of the law including equality and non-discrimination, would demand that the exercise of power by the President in terms of section 10 of the Navy Act be in accordance with the rule of law, be reasonable, and not be arbitrary. These same principles of law would apply to situations where His Excellency the President has exercised power of revision of sentence in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act.

As explained earlier, when His Excellency the President acting in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act decided not to review the sentences imposed on the Appellant by the Court Martial, he had acted based on material placed before him. Such material included the proceedings of the Court Martial, the finding of guilt, the orders of sentence, and the observations of the 1st Respondent. It is thus evident that the 'basis' which prompted His Excellency to decide not to grant any relief to the Appellant were the afore-stated material, which included the impugned decision of the Court Martial. I have already held that the said decisions of the Court Martial are bad in law, and hence void, ab initio. Nothing flows out of a void decision. Thus, the orders of the Court Martial considered by His Excellency are not cognizable in the eyes of the law. Similarly, there is no foundation recognizable in the eyes of the law for the observations of the 1st Respondent submitted to His Excellency the President, as such observations have also been founded upon primarily the impugned findings of the Court Martial. It is thus seen that in the circumstances of this matter, the material considered by His Excellency the President has no legal validity. Thus, no legal consequences would flow from the afore-stated decision of His Excellency the President not to revise the sentences imposed on the Appellant by the Court Martial.

In view of the foregoing, I hold that the ensuing 'dismissal' of the Appellant from the Sri Lanka Navy has no effect in law.

Would the issuance of the writ be futile?

The common law recognizes multiple grounds on which the refusal to issue the writ would be justified under certain circumstances. Futility in issuing the writ is one such ground. Court will not issue the writ in favour of a petitioner, if it is evident that the issuance of the writ would be futile, as the writ issued by Court would remain only as an order of Court, and would not yield any relief to the party who sought the writ. Dr. Sunil Coorey in Principles of Administrative Law in Sri Lanka (4th Edition, Volume 2, page 1172) has lucidly captured this principle in the following manner:

> "Certiorari will not be issued to quash a particular exercise of power if it be futile to do so because it is no more operational or it has had its effect*. However,* if there be any practical benefit (in the form of a clarification of the legal position) for the future, either to the Petitioner or to the public at large, by quashing an exercise of power which is no more operational or has had its effect, certiorari will nevertheless issue to quash such exercise of power." [Emphasis added]

As pointed out by learned Senior State Counsel for the Respondents, in Siddeek v. Jacolyn Seneviratne and three others*, [(1984) 1 Sri L.R. 83],* it has been held that Court will not issue a writ of certiorari where the end result will be futility, frustration, injustice and illegality.

In this matter, as to whether the issuance of a writ of certiorari would be futile, has to be considered in view of (a) the Appellant having been 'dismissed' from the Sri Lanka Navy, and (b) the Appellant having by now passed the age of retirement. (By Motion dated 19th February 2020, Attorney-at-Law for the Appellant has notified this Court that the Appellant would be reaching his retirement age on 17th August 2020.)

In this regard, it is important to note that if the consequences arising out of an impugned order is continuing to flow, it would not be futile to quash the impugned order. The issuance of the writ would thereby terminate the continuation of the flow of consequences which are detrimental to the interests of the person affected by the impugned order.

Indeed, it would now be too late to reverse the direct impact which has arisen out of the finding (verdict) and the sentences pronounced by the Court Martial, as consequent to the said orders, the sentences have been executed and the Appellant has been dismissed from the Navy. His situation has got compounded as he has by now passed the retirement age. However, the quashing of the finding of the Court Martial and the related orders of punishment would not be completely futile and hence this Court will not be acting in vain, as the issuance of writ quashing the finding of guilt and the orders of sentence pronounced by the Court Martial would serve the interests of the Appellant, as, (i) it would erase the blemish ensuing from the said orders of the Court Martial, and would accordingly restore the image and professional reputation of the Appellant, and (ii) it would entitle him to terminal and other benefits which in terms of the applicable laws and regulations, the Appellant would have been entitled to receive, had he not been convicted and sentenced by a Court Martial and dismissed from the Sri Lanka Navy. It is also possible that during the time period commencing from the date of the finding (verdict) and sentences pronounced by the Court Martial and the date of retirement, he would have become entitled to a promotion in rank, which he was deprived of, due to his dismissal from the Navy. Thus, quashing of the impugned finding (verdict) and sentences imposed by the Court Martial may entitle him to be considered for such a promotion with retrospective effect. Thus, it is my view that the issuance of a mandate in the nature of a writ of certiorari would not in the circumstances of this case, be futile, and will not be a useless formality.

Conclusion reached by me in respect of the 5th question of law

As stated above, there is no evidence before this Court that His Excellency the President has exercised power in terms of section 10 of the Navy Act. In view of the foregoing analysis, I hold that, notwithstanding His Excellency the President having exercised power in terms of section 122 of the Navy Act and the Appellant having been dismissed from the Sri Lanka Navy, this Court can grant relief to the Appellant. In the circumstances of this case, the grant of a mandate in the nature of a writ of certiorari will not be futile.

Conclusion

In view of the answers to the 1st, 2nd and 5th questions of law, I am of the view that this Appeal should be allowed and the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 30th July 2015 should be set-aside.

In view of the foregoing, I hold that mandates in the nature of writs of certiorari quashing the findings of guilt imposed by the Court Martial dated 13th May 2009 and the associated sentencing orders imposed on the Appellant should be issued by this Court.

Thus, it is my view that the incumbent Commander of the Sri Lanka Navy should be directed by this Court to cause the erasure of the afore-stated decisions of the Court Martial which in my opinion should be quashed, and to treat the Appellant in a manner as if he had not been convicted and sentenced by the Court Martial. In the circumstances, it is my view that it should be deemed that the Appellant was never dismissed from the Sri Lanka Navy. Therefore, it is my further view that the Appellant should be entitled to terminal benefits or other employment-related emoluments, he should have been entitled to receive had he not been convicted by the Court Martial and dismissed by the Sri Lanka Navy.

I wish to record my deep appreciation to both learned President's Counsel for the Appellant and the learned Senior State Counsel for the Respondents, for their submissions and invaluable assistance to Court, which significantly contributed towards the formulation of this minority judgment.

Introduction

The 2nd plaintiff is one of the two directors of the 1st plaintiff company. The other director of the company is the wife of the 2nd plaintiff. Upon the request of the directors of the company, the defendant bank granted a loan to the 1st plaintiff company. The 2nd plaintiff mortgaged his land as security for the loan. The company defaulted on payment as agreed, and the bank took steps in terms of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990, as amended (hereinafter sometimes "the Act"), to recover the dues by selling the mortgaged property by public auction (parate execution). Very close to the date of the auction, the 1st and 2nd plaintiffs rushed to the Commercial High Court and obtained an enjoining order preventing the bank from holding the auction on the ground that this Act is inapplicable to mortgages executed by persons who are not borrowers. The plaintiffs' position was that the loan was obtained by the 1st plaintiff company and the 2nd plaintiff who mortgaged the property as security to obtain the loan is a third party. The plaintiffs relied on the majority judgment of the Five Judge Bench of this Court (with one Judge dissenting) in Ramachandran v. Hatton National Bank [2006] 1 Sri LR 393 (hereinafter sometimes "Ramachandran") which held that the right of parate execution in terms of Act No. 4 of 1990 is not available to banks when the mortgagor is not the borrower. In short, the Act is inapplicable to what is conveniently called "third-party mortgages". However, the Commercial High Court subsequently refused to issue an interim injunction preventing future auctions. This appeal by the 1st and 2nd plaintiffs (hereinafter "the appellant") with leave obtained is from the refusal of the interim injunction.

Two years after the judgment in Ramachandran, in Hatton National Bank v. Jayawardane [2007] 1 Sri LR 181 (hereinafter sometimes "Jayawardane"), a Three Judge Bench of this Court restricted the applicability of the majority decision in Ramachandran. In Jayawardane, it was held inter alia that when the directors of the company are the mortgagors, they cannot be treated as third-party mortgagors since they have directly benefited from the financial facility made available to the company.

Thereafter, later decisions such as Nelka Rupasinghe v. National Development Bank [2014] 1 Sri LR 68 and DFCC Bank v. Mudith Perera [2014] 1 Sri LR 128 favoured the majority judgment of Ramachandran (without reservation); and decisions such as Yasodha Holdings (Pvt) Ltd v. People's Bank (CA/WRIT/1268/1998, CA Minutes of 29.02.2008-Divisional Bench), Seylan Bank Limited v. Padmanathan (CA/REV/702/2006, CA Minutes of 16.02.2010), Yasasiri Kasthuriarachchi v. People's Bank (SC/APPEAL/127/2014, SC Minutes of 02.06.2021) and Commercial Bank of Ceylon PLC v. Nawa Rajarata Appliances (Pvt) Ltd (SC APPEAL/44/2016, SC Minutes of 05.10.2022) favoured the view taken in Jayawardane.

I might add that in view of the doctrine of stare decisis there was no occasion for a Three Judge Bench to overrule the majority decision in Ramachandran, and the only option available to a Three Judge Bench was to concur with Jayawardane as a measure to mitigate the full effect of Ramachandran.

It is common ground that the law is unsettled on this important question of law. It is to answer this question, i.e. whether the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990 is applicable not only to mortgages executed by borrowers but also to mortgages executed by third parties who are not borrowers, that this Bench of Seven Judges was constituted by His Lordship the Chief Justice.

The original case was filed in the Commercial High Court against DFCC Bank PLC. After leave was granted to the appellant on two questions of law, eight licensed commercial banks and two state banks intervened: the licensed commercial banks are Hatton National Bank PLC, Seylan Bank PLC, Cargills Bank Limited, National Development Bank PLC, Union Bank of Colombo PLC, Nations Trust Bank PLC, Commercial Bank of Ceylon PLC and Pan Asia Banking Corporation; the two state banks are People's Bank and Bank of Ceylon.

The two questions of law raised on behalf of the appellant are as follows:

(1) Did the Commercial High Court err in law by determining that the 2nd plaintiff is a borrower within the meaning of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990?

(2) Is the ratio in the case of Hatton National Bank v. Jayawardane [2007] 1 Sri LR 181 that the director of a corporate entity who mortgages his property for a loan obtained by the corporate entity is a borrower, correct within the meaning of the aforesaid Act?

The question of law raised on behalf of the licensed commercial banks reads as follows:

> (3) Has the Board of Directors (within the meaning of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990) the power to, by resolution to be recorded in writing, authorize a person specified in the resolution to sell by public auction any property mortgaged to the Bank (whether by the borrower or any other person) as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made in order to recover the whole of such unpaid portion of such loan together with the money and costs recoverable under section 13 of the said Act?

The two state banks raised the following question of law:

> (4) Is any property (movable or immovable) mortgaged to the Bank of Ceylon or People's Bank as security for any loan as the case may be, in respect of which default has been made within the meaning of the Bank of Ceylon Ordinance, No. 53 of 1938, as amended, and the People's Bank Act, No. 29 of 1961, liable to be auctioned in terms of the respective Acts?

The appeal was strenuously fought on both sides with weighty grounds. Mr. Rohan Sahabandu, P.C. for the appellant vehemently argued that the majority judgment in Ramachandran is correct and the judgment in Jayawardane is wrong. Conversely, Dr. Romesh De Silva, P.C. who is the lead counsel for the banks vigorously contended that the majority judgment in Ramachandran is wrong and hence the consideration of Jayawardane does not arise as it only introduced an exception to the rule laid down in Ramachandran that third-party mortgages are not subject to parate execution. I accept that if this Court answers the question of law formulated on behalf of the licensed commercial banks in the affirmative, the appeal virtually comes to an end and the consideration of Jayawardane will not arise.

The purpose of the Act

The Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990, is not an Act passed by Parliament in isolation. It is one of a series of Acts passed by Parliament in 1990 aimed at revitalising the country's economy by facilitating speedy recovery of debts. The package of Acts passed by Parliament in 1990 is:

(1) Debt Recovery (Special Provisions) Act, No. 2 of 1990
(2) Mortgage (Amendment) Act, No. 3 of 1990
(3) Registration of Documents (Amendment) Act, No. 5 of 1990
(4) Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act, No. 6 of 1990
(5) Motor Traffic (Amendment) Act, No. 8 of 1990
(6) Agrarian Services (Amendment) Act, No. 9 of 1990
(7) Consumer Credit (Amendment) Act, No. 7 of 1990
(8) National Development Bank of Sri Lanka (Amendment) Act, No. 10 of 1990
(9) Public Servants (Liabilities) (Amendment) Act, No. 11 of 1990
(10) Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, No. 12 of 1990
(11) Trust Receipts (Amendment) Act, No. 13 of 1990
(12) Inland Trust Receipts Act, No. 14 of 1990
(13) Credit Information Bureau of Sri Lanka Act, No. 18 of 1990
(14) Inland Revenue (Amendment) Act, No. 22 of 1990
(15) Excise (Amendment) Act, No. 37 of 1990
(16) Banking (Amendment) Act, No. 39 of 1990
(17) Excise (Special Provisions) (Amendment) Act, No. 40 of 1990
(18) Inland Revenue (Amendment) Act, No. 42 of 1990
(19) Turnover Tax (Amendment) Act, No. 43 of 1990
(20) Specified Certificate of Deposits (Tax and Other Concessions) Act, No. 45 of 1990 and
(21) Industrial Promotion Act, No. 46 of 1990.

Thirteen Bills were presented to Parliament on 23.01.1990. This included the Debt Recovery (Special Provisions) Bill, the Mortgage (Amendment) Bill and the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Bill. Acts from No. 2 of 1990 to No. 14 of 1990 were all certified on 06.03.1990. Although at first glance, the Acts listed under (3)-(6), (9), and (10) above may seem out of place, a contextual reading reveals that the intention of the legislature was to include them as part of a comprehensive package aimed at fostering the economic development of the country.

A stable financial system is crucial for ensuring robust economic development in any country. A stable financial system helps facilitate efficient allocation of resources, access to credit, management of risks, and overall economic growth. It provides the necessary foundation for businesses and individuals to access funding for investments and economic activities. Within the framework of the Sri Lankan financial system, banks, as guardians of public funds, assume a pivotal function. Ensuring stability in the financial system necessitates the establishment of a secure and strong payment and repayment system.

J.C. Sutherland, Statutes and Statutory Construction, Vol. 2, 3rd edition (1943), states at page 502: "Relevant conditions existing when the statute was adopted must be given due regard in the construction of statutes."

The legislative intent behind the introduction of Act No. 4 of 1990 to rejuvenate the country's economy through the facilitation of expeditious debt recovery is clearly evident from the Hansards. Parliamentary debates are intricately linked to the mischief rule of interpretation (which I will address briefly later), as these official parliamentary proceedings assist in identifying the underlying mischief Parliament aimed to remedy through the statute.

Can Hansards be used to interpret statutes? There was reluctance on the part of English judges to consider proceedings in Parliament for the purpose of interpretation of statutes, but the seminal decision of the House of Lords in Pepper v. Hart [1993] 1 All ER 42 changed the thinking of English judges. Pepper lays down three conditions for inclusion of Hansard: (a) that the legislative provision must be ambiguous, obscure or lead to absurdity; (b) that the relevant statement is of a Minister or other promoter of the Bill; and (c) that the statement made in Parliament is clear and unequivocal. Similar reluctance was shown by judges in Sri Lanka until the decision of Chief Justice Samarakoon in J.B. Textiles Industries Ltd. v. Minister of Finance and Planning [1981] 1 Sri LR 156. In Shiyam v. OIC Narcotics Bureau [2006] 2 Sri LR 156, a Full Bench of the Supreme Court held that Hansards could be made use of to ascertain the intention of the legislature and to interpret a statute which is ambiguous, obscure or leading to an absurdity. The question before the Full Bench in Shiyam's case required the interpretation of section 3(1) of the Bail Act and for this purpose the Court used the Hansards. Justice Bandaranayake (as Her Ladyship then was) stated at pages 164-165:

> Learned Deputy Solicitor General for the respondents contended that the parliamentary proceedings could be used by the Court to ascertain the intention of the legislature.
> Until the landmark decision in Pepper v. Hart [1993] 1 All ER 42 the rule followed by the English judges had been that parliamentary debates reported in Hansard could not be referred to in order to facilitate the interpretation of a statute. However, by the decision in Pepper v. Hart (supra), a new practice came into being relaxing the exclusionary rule and permitting reference to parliamentary material. Referring to this new approach, Lord Griffiths in Pepper v. Hart (supra) stated that, "The Courts now adopt a purposive approach which seeks to give effect to the true purpose of legislation and are prepared to look at much extraneous material that bears upon the background against which the legislation was enacted."
> In Sri Lanka, the Courts were reluctant to consider the proceedings in the Parliament for the purpose of interpretation. However, the attitude of our Courts took a new turn tilting towards a purposive approach in J.B. Textiles Industries Ltd. v. Minister of Finance and Planning [1981] 1 Sri LR 156 where Samarakoon, C.J., expressed the view that, "Hansards are admissible to prove the course of proceedings in the legislature."

Since the decision in J.B. Textile Industries Ltd., (supra), our Courts had acted with approval the acceptability in perusing the Hansard for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the Parliament. Manawadu v. Attorney General [1987] 2 Sri LR 30. In fact in De Silva and Others v. Jeyaraj Fernandopulle and Others [1996] 1 Sri LR 22 Mark Fernando, J. adopted the observations of Samarakoon, C.J. in J.B. Textiles Industries Ltd., case (supra) which stated as follows: "The Hansard is the official publication of Parliament. It is published to keep the public informed of what takes place in Parliament. It is neither sacrosanct nor untouchable."

It is therefore apparent that the Court which now adopts a purposive approach, could refer to the Hansard for the purpose of ascertaining the intention and the true purpose of the legislature in order to interpret the legislation which is ambiguous, obscure or leading to an absurdity.

The speech made by the then Hon. Minister of Justice, Prof. G.L. Peiris at the introduction of the Bail Act, would thus be important in the interpretation of section 3(1) of the Bail Act.

It is now settled law that Parliamentary debates reported in Hansard can be made use of to interpret statutes.

Whilst presenting this package of bills to Parliament, the then Prime Minister inter alia explained the history and the purpose of those Bills (Parliamentary Debates (Hansard) Official Report, dated 23.01.1996, Vol. 62, columns 864-867):

Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting to the House a set of Bills designed to improve the debt recovery environment in the country. These Bills will result in substantial changes in the laws and procedures governing the recovery of debts by banks and other financial institutions.

Banking institutions in Sri Lanka have for many years been making representations to the Ministry of Finance regarding the long delays which are experienced in the recovery of bank debts which are in default. In many cases the legal proceedings for debt recovery drag on for periods of six to eight years. The banks state that the long delays and the high cost of recovery of bank debts is one of the causes for the high interest rates which are being charged by banks from borrowers. It is very desirable that interest rates should be reduced to the lowest possible level in order to encourage investment and development in the country. I hope that the implementation of the new legislation will help in achieving these objectives.

Equally important is the need to maintain the financial viability of banks and other lending institutions. The high level of defaults by persons who have borrowed from the banking system, particularly by those who have borrowed large sums of money from the State banks, threatens the financial stability of the banks. If this situation is allowed to continue there is a danger that some of our banks may eventually collapse, with disastrous consequences for the hundreds of thousands of small depositors who have placed their money in these banks. The experience we have had recently with a number of finance companies is a grim warning of what could happen. I am not suggesting that these finance companies collapsed solely because of the difficulties which they encountered in recovering their overdue loans. There were many other causes such as mismanagement, and in some cases fraud. But the difficulty and delay encountered in attempting to recover loans in default was certainly one of the contributory factors for the collapse of these finance companies. We do not want the same fate to overtake our banks.

The laws which I am presenting today have been drafted after careful and detailed study and consideration extending over a period of five years. In 1985 the then Minister of Justice appointed a high level committee to examine and report on matters relating to debt recovery in Sri Lanka. The committee was headed by a former Supreme Court Judge, Mr. D. Wimalaratne, while Mr. H.L. de Silva, a former Chairman of the Bar Association, and Mr. N.U. Jayawardene, a former Governor of the Central Bank, were members of the committee. The committee submitted a valuable report in October 1985 with detailed recommendations and draft legislation for the improvement of the laws and procedures relating to debt recovery.

The Wimalaratne Report ran into considerable opposition from some sections of the legal profession. As a result, its recommendations, which would have greatly improved the debt recovery environment in the country, were not implemented at that time.

A committee was appointed in March 1988 jointly by the then Minister of Finance and the then Minister of Justice to examine the matter further and propose amendments which would assist in expediting debt recovery. The committee was chaired by Dr. A.R.B. Amarasinghe, at that time Secretary to the Ministry of Justice and now a Judge of the Supreme Court, and it included representatives of the Central Bank, the Sri Lanka Banks Association and the Bar Association of Sri Lanka. The committee made recommendations for some changes in the law relating to debt recovery. The laws proposed by the Amarasinghe Committee were more restricted in scope and effect than those which had been previously proposed by the Wimalaratne Committee.

The subject was also examined by Prof. Ross Cranston, Professor of Banking Law in the University of London, who was engaged as a consultant by the Ministry of Finance to report on the improvement of Sri Lanka's debt recovery laws and procedures. Prof. Cranston submitted a valuable report on this subject. Like the Wimalaratne Committee, Prof. Cranston recommended changes in the law which were more far reaching than those which had been proposed by the Amarasinghe Committee.

All these reports were carefully considered by the Ministry of Finance and the Central Bank. Based on the recommendations of the Ministry and the Central Bank, the Cabinet agreed on a large number of changes in the laws and procedures relating to debt recovery. The changes in the laws are embodied in a package of 13 Bills, namely:

1. the Debt Recovery (Special Provisions) Bill;
2. the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Bill;
3. the Mortgage (Amendment) Bill;
4. the Registration of Documents (Amendment) Bill;
5. the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Bill;
6. the Consumer Credit (Amendment) Bill;
7. the Motor Traffic (Amendment) Bill;
8. the Agrarian Services (Amendment) Bill;
9. the National Development Bank of Sri Lanka (Amendment) Bill;
10. the Public Servants (Liabilities) (Amendment) Bill;
11. the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Bill;
12. the Trust Receipts (Amendment) Bill; and
13. the Inland Trust Receipts Bill.

The majority of these Bills are based on the recommendations of the Wimalaratne Committee, though these recommendations have in some cases been modified by the Cabinet. The last two Bills relating to Trust Receipts are based on the recommendations of the Amarasinghe Committee.

All these Bills have been discussed in detail by a five-man Bench of the Supreme Court to ensure that they do not violate any of the provisions of the Constitution. The Supreme Court has suggested a few amendments to the Bills. These amendments will all be incorporated in the Bills in the form of Committee Stage amendments. These amendments are being tabled now in this House.

Since the 13 Bills contain a large number of detailed provisions, I felt it would be best if I tabled a statement explaining the provisions of each Bill. This has already been done. I will not therefore take up the time of the House in explaining all the provisions contained in these Bills. I would like, however, to refer to the provisions of two of the most important Bills.

The Debt Recovery (Special Provisions) Bill provides a special procedure for the recovery of loans by lending institutions. In terms of this Bill, a lending institution can file a plaint in court setting out particulars of the loan in default. The court will then enter a decree nisi against the debtor. The decree nisi will be sent by registered post to the debtor or, where the debtor is an employee, it will be served through the employer. The debtor can then file an affidavit in court stating that there is an issue or a question which has to be tried by the court. If the defendant fails to show sufficient cause, the court will convert the decree nisi into a decree absolute. Thereafter it is not necessary for the lending institution to go to court again for a writ of execution. The decree absolute itself will be deemed to be a writ of execution issued to the Fiscal. The new procedure will be available to all banks and finance companies in the country.

Another important change is introduced in the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Bill. Under this Bill the right of parate execution which has already been granted to the State banks will be extended to all banks in the country, but not to the finance companies. The right of parate execution enables a lending institution to sell the property mortgaged to it by a debtor who is in default without seeking the intervention of a court of law. Modern banking laws in other countries, in developed countries like the United Kingdom as well as developing countries like Singapore, allow the right of parate execution to banking institutions. The right of parate execution will cover all property mortgaged to a bank whether movable or immovable...

Joining the debate, the then Minister of Industry and the Leader of the House (who is the incumbent President of the Republic) quoted verbatim the following part of the Supreme Court Special Determination No. 1 of 1990 on the Debt Recovery (Special Provisions) Bill (Parliamentary Debates (Hansard) Official Report, dated 26.01.1996, Vol. 62, columns 1354-1355):

It needs to be emphasised that legal provisions for the expeditious recovery of debts-not before they fall due, but after default by the borrowers-by banking and financial institutions are not burdens or punitive measures imposed on borrowers. Expeditious debt recovery is, in the long-term, beneficial to borrowers in general for at least two reasons. Firstly, expeditious repayment or recovery of debts enhances the ability of lending institutions to lend to other borrowers. Secondly, the Law's delays in respect of debt recovery, howsoever and by whomsoever caused, tend to make lending institutions much more cautious and slower in lending: by refusing some applications, by requiring higher security from some borrowers, and by insisting on more stringent terms as to interest from other borrowers. Expeditious debt recovery will thus tend to make credit available more readily and on easier terms, and will maximise the flow of money into the economy. Undoubtedly, there is a legitimate national interest in expediting the recovery of debts by lending institutions engaged in the business of providing credit, and thereby stimulating the national economy and national development. The objections to the constitutionality of the Bill must be considered in that context.

The same Minister explained the objectives of these debt recovery laws in this manner (columns 1355-1356):

The prevailing situation in the country necessarily warrants the state to provide the required legal provision for banks to lend more finance for production ventures without limiting their efforts to much safer areas of trade and business. They stick to trade and business because recovery is easier and would not go into other areas because recovery is more difficult. Their investment in productive ventures creates more employment opportunities. That is what we are trying to aim at. If we expect the banks to invest borrower' funds on high-risk bearing new ventures the legal framework should be such that with the least financial expense and without long delays funds advanced could be recovered. We are talking of money not being given. If it is a high risk > they should be able to recover the money. And from whom? From those who default not from a person who has been running a business for a long time as default. Banks always try to put a business on its feet first. One policy today is not to go in for liquidation of every venture. What can be put back on its feet is restructured. But they have to go against those habitual defaulters who think it is much easier today to default and go to court and hang on to the money. This is how other countries developed in Asia. Let us not be blind to reality. If there are more safeguards needed let the law operate for some time and we will think of it. But by opposing it you are not helping the country. You are not speaking on behalf of the persons who have deposited money. The middle class of the country are the ones who have deposited the money.

The legislative history is a relevant factor to interpret provisions of a statute. In the case of SZTAL v. Minister for Immigration and Border Protection [2017] HCA 34 at para 14, Kiefel C.J. states:

> The starting point for the ascertainment of the meaning of a statutory provision is the text of the statute whilst, at the same time, regard is had to its context and purpose. Context should be regarded at this first stage and not at some later stage and it should be regarded in its widest sense. This is not to deny the importance of the natural and ordinary meaning of a word, namely how it is ordinarily understood in discourse, to the process of construction. Considerations of context and purpose simply recognise that, understood in its statutory, historical or other context, some other meaning of a word may be suggested, and so too, if its ordinary meaning is not consistent with the statutory purpose, that meaning must be rejected.

Let me also add that the new trend in the UK on how best to interpret a statute seems to be a shift from 'the intention of the legislature' to 'the purpose of the legislation'.

In the House of Lords case of R v. Secretary of State for Health ex parte Quintavalle (on behalf of Pro-Life Alliance) [2003] UKHL 138, Lord Bingham states:

> The basic task of the court is to ascertain and give effect to the true meaning of what Parliament has said in the enactment to be construed. But that is not to say that attention should be confined and a literal interpretation given to the particular provisions which give rise to difficulty. Such an approach not only encourages immense prolixity in drafting, since the draftsman will feel obliged to provide expressly for every contingency which may possibly arise. It may also (under the banner of loyalty to the will of Parliament) lead to the frustration of that will, because undue concentration on the minutiae of the enactment may lead the court to neglect the purpose which Parliament intended to achieve when it enacted the statute. Every statute other than a pure consolidating statute is, after all, enacted to make some change, or address some problem, or remove some blemish, or effect some improvement in the national life. The court's task, within the permissible bounds of interpretation, is to give effect to Parliament's purpose. So the controversial provisions should be read in the context of the statute as a whole, and the statute as a whole should be read in the historical context of the situation which led to its enactment.

According to the Parliamentary debates quoted above, it is evident that Parliament fervently desired to assist the banking sector by facilitating speedy recovery of loans, and it did not intend to limit the expedited process only to cases where the debtor had mortgaged the property.

The character of the mortgagor was not a concern. If the payment is defaulted, the mortgaged property could be sold to recover the money.

In addition to the Parliamentary proceedings, the short and long titles of Act No. 4 of 1990 itself make it clear that this is a special Act enacted for the recovery of loans granted by banks to promote the economic development of Sri Lanka. With the risk of repetition, the title of the Act is "Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990", and the long title is "An Act to provide for the recovery of loans granted by Banks for the economic development of Sri Lanka; and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto." Long title is an important part of the Act and can be used as an aid to the construction of the Act. (Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 12th edition, page 4)

Apart from the long title, the Act does not contain any reference to support the argument that only loans granted by banks for economic development can be recovered under the provisions of this Act. The recovery of loans granted by banks will contribute to the economic development of Sri Lanka; when money circulates, the economy will prosper.

The question arises as to why this special Act was introduced when the Mortgage Act, No. 6 of 1949, as amended, was already there (and still is) for the purpose of recovering loans granted by banks. The legislature recognised that while the ultimate outcome remained consistent (the sale of the mortgaged property for the recovery of loans), the duration required to conclude a hypothecary action filed under the Mortgage Act was unreasonably protracted. As a result, the lending portfolios of banks, their solvency, financial performance and other factors were significantly compromised, directly impacting the country's economic development. The classic example would be that after the Supreme Court decision in Ramachandran on 15.04.2005, the bank filed a hypothecary action in the Commercial High Court on 22.06.2006 to recover the money by judicial sale of the mortgaged property and this case still remains pending in Courts even after a span of more than 17 years.

Scheme of the Act: operative sections

Understanding the scheme of the Act is important in interpreting its various provisions and discerning the legislative intent behind its enactment.

The operative provisions of a statute are of great significance; they constitute the enacting part of a statute. Halsbury's Laws of England: Statutes and Legislative Process, Vol. 96 (5th edition, 2012), para 664 states:

> The operative components of an Act are obviously by far most important, for they carry the legislative message directly. All other elements serve as commentaries on the operative components, of greater or less utility depending on their precise function.

The operative sections of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990 are sections 3, 4 and 5. In other words, they are the principal or substantive sections of the Act. These substantive sections do not make a distinction between a borrower and a mortgagor; both the borrower who mortgages his property as security for the loan and a third party who mortgages his property as security for the loan obtained by the borrower are subject to the same treatment. In either situation, should the loan be defaulted, the mortgaged property is liable to be sold by public auction to recover the dues to the bank.

Let me quote the operative sections of the Act:

> 3. Whenever default is made in the payment of any sum due on any loan*, whether on account of principal or of interest or of both, default shall be deemed to have been made in respect of the whole of the unpaid portion of the loan and the interest due thereon up to date; and the Board may in its discretion, take action as specified either in section 5 or in section 4;*
>
> Provided, however, that where the Board has in any case taken action, or commenced to take action, in accordance with section 5, nothing shall be deemed to prevent the Board at any time from subsequently taking action in that case by resolution under section 4 if the Board deems it advisable or necessary to do so.
> 4. Subject to the provisions of section 7 the Board may by resolution to be recorded in writing authorize any person specified in the resolution to sell by public auction any property mortgaged to the bank as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made in order to recover the whole of the unpaid portion of such loan, and the interest due thereon up to the date of the sale, together with the moneys and costs recoverable under section 13.

5(1). Subject to the provisions of section 7 the Board may by resolution to be recorded in writing authorize any person specified in the resolution to enter upon any immovable property mortgaged to the bank as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made or where the terms of any loan agreement are contravened in respect of such property to take possession of, and to manage and maintain such property, and to exercise the same powers in the control and management of such property as might have been exercised by the mortgagor if he had not made default, or contravened the terms of such agreement.

5(2). Whenever any sum of money due on any loan granted for any agricultural or industrial undertaking on the security of any plant, machinery or other movable property to the bank is in default or where the terms of any loan agreement are contravened in respect of such property, the Board may authorize any person specified in writing to enter and take possession of such agricultural or industrial undertaking in which such plant, machinery or other movable property is situate, and exercise the same power in the control and management of such undertaking as might have been exercised if such property had been pledged or mortgaged.

It is clear that section 4 of the Act, which serves as the central provision, empowers the board of directors of the bank to pass a resolution authorising any person "to sell by public auction any property mortgaged to the bank as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made" irrespective of whether the property was mortgaged by the borrower or a third party. The focus in sections 3-5 is on the mortgaged property and the mortgagor; who mortgages the property is immaterial.

The argument of learned President's Counsel for the appellant relying on the Divisional Bench decision of the Court of Appeal in Yasodha Holdings (Pvt) Ltd v. People's Bank (supra) that "any property mortgaged to the bank" in section 4 of the Act would mean "any one of the properties mortgaged to the bank by the borrower" is in my view unacceptable as a general rule. That interpretation is correct on the unique facts of that case. In the Yasodha case, the petitioner obtained several loans by mortgaging several properties. One of his arguments was that the Nuwara Eliya property could not be subjected to parate execution because it was not included in the offer letter for that specific loan that was defaulted. It is in that context the Court held that "the bank is empowered to sell any immovable or movable property mortgaged to the bank as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made. The security need not be in relation to a particular loan in respect of which default has been made." The facts of that case are totally different from the instant case. A principle laid down in a judgment shall be understood in the context of the peculiar facts and circumstances of that particular case.

I accept that in sections 7 and 13-17, the term used is "borrower", not "mortgagor". I also accept that a statute must be understood holistically, not piecemeal. But the important point to bear in mind is that sections 7 and 13-17 are procedural sections. In other words, they are subsidiary or subordinate sections of the Act. These procedural sections are there to facilitate the operative sections, which are sections 3-5 of the Act.

In the case of Institute of Patent Agents v. Lockwood [1894] AC 347, Lord Herschell L.C. observes at 360:

> Well, there is a conflict sometimes between two sections to be found in the same Act. You have to try and reconcile them as best as you may. If you cannot, you have to determine which is the leading provision and which the subordinate provision, and which must give way to the other.

In the case of Project Blue Sky Inc. v. Australian Broadcasting Authority [1998] HCA 28, McHugh, Gummow, Kirby and Hayne JJ (Chief Justice Brennan wrote a separate judgment) state at para 70:

> A legislative instrument must be construed on the prima facie basis that its provisions are intended to give effect to harmonious goals. Where conflict appears to arise from the language of particular provisions, the conflict must be alleviated, so far as possible, by adjusting the meaning of the competing provisions to achieve that result which will best give effect to the purpose and language of those provisions while maintaining the unity of all the statutory provisions. Reconciling conflicting provisions will often require the court to determine which is the leading provision and which the subordinate provision, and which must give way to the other. Only by determining the hierarchy of the provisions will it be possible in many cases to give each provision the meaning which best gives effect to its purpose and language while maintaining the unity of the statutory scheme.

As seen from the recent decisions such as Monash University v. EBT [2022] VSC 651 at para 84 and ENT19 v. Minister for Home Affairs [2023] HCA 18 at para 87, the above dicta of Lord Herschell L.C. in Institute of Patent Agents v. Lockwood are consistently followed as good law.

In Saiyad Mohammad Bakar El-Edroos v. Abdulhabib Hasan Arab and Others 1998 4 SCC 343, on comparison between two Acts, one dealing with substantive law and the other with procedural law, Justice Misra states:

> A procedural law is always subservient to the substantive law. Nothing can be given by a procedural law what is not sought to be given by a substantive law and nothing can be taken away by the procedural law what is given by the substantive law.

Substantive sections of a statute aim at the ends which the legislature seeks to achieve while procedural sections aim at the means by which those ends can be achieved. Procedural sections should not diminish what substantive sections provide, nor should they grant what substantive sections do not provide. They should align or harmonise with substantive sections. In order to achieve this, procedural sections should be interpreted liberally to facilitate the enforcement of the substantive sections. I must say with the utmost respect to Their Lordships that the majority decision in Ramachandran does not appear to have appreciated this important point.

The canons of statutory interpretation

When the wording of a statute is clear, there is no need for interpretation; the words speak for themselves. The Court cannot introduce new words or disregard existing words to give a different interpretation to the statute which the Court would think meets the ends of justice. The words, phrases and sentences must be construed in their ordinary, natural and grammatical meaning. This is known as the literal rule. The literal rule serves to prevent not only the undue expansion of narrow language but also the undue limitation of wide language. (Maxwell, pages 28-32; N.S. Bindra Interpretation of Statutes, 13th edition, pages 328-336)

In Miller v. Salomons (1853) 7 Ex. 475, Pollock C.B., states at 560:

> If the meaning of the language used by the legislature be plain and clear, we have nothing to do but to obey it–to administer it as we find it, and I think, to take a different course is to abandon the office of Judge, and to assume the province of legislation.

Learned President's Counsel for the appellant contends that "Ramachandran case did not add words to the statute or read words into it, which are not there". The ordinary interpretation of "any property mortgaged to the bank as security for any loan" found in the principal section of the Act (section 4) inherently encompasses property mortgaged to the bank by anybody – either the borrower or a third party. However, in Ramachandran this was restricted to the property mortgaged to the bank only by the borrower.

A literal and mechanical interpretation is not the sole interpretation that Courts are bound to give to the words of a statute. The golden rule permits the Court to depart from the plain and ordinary meaning of the words, if the Court thinks with good reasons that such meaning is inconsistent with the clear intention of the legislature or leads to absurdity or repugnancy. This rule respects the purposive interpretation of statutes: that sections of a statute shall be read contextually, not superficially or mechanically, keeping in mind the purpose, object, tenor or policy of the enactment. (Maxwell, pages 43-46, Bindra, pages 337-346)

In Becke v. Smith (1836) 2 M & W 191, Parke B., states at 195:

> It is a very useful rule, in the construction of a statute, to adhere to the ordinary meaning of the words used, and to the grammatical construction, unless that is at variance with the intention of the legislature, to be collected from the statute itself, or leads to any manifest absurdity or repugnance, in which case the language may be varied or modified, so as to avoid such inconvenience, but no further.

In Warburton v. Loveland (1929) 1 H & BIR 623, Justice Burton observes at 648:

> I apprehend it is a rule in the construction of statutes, that, in the first instance, the grammatical sense of the words is to be adhered to. If that is contrary to, or inconsistent with any expressed intention, or declared purpose of the statute, or if it would involve any absurdity, repugnance, or inconsistency, the grammatical sense must then be modified, extended, or abridged so far as to avoid such inconvenience, but no further.

In Nokes v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries Ltd [1940] AC 1014 at 1022, Viscount Simon L.C. states:

> Judges are not called upon to apply their opinions of sound policy so as to modify the plain meaning of statutory words, but where, in construing general words the meaning of which is not entirely plain there are adequate reasons for > doubting whether the legislature could have been intending so wide an interpretation as would disregard fundamental principles, then we may be justified in adopting a narrower construction. At the same time, if the choice is between two interpretations, the narrower of which would fail to achieve the manifest purpose of the legislation, we should avoid a construction which would reduce the legislation to futility and should rather accept the bolder construction based on the view that Parliament would legislate only for the purpose of bringing about an effective result.

When the words in a statute are capable of having two or more constructions, the well-established rule laid down in the Heydon's case (1584) 3 Co. Rep. 7a, also known as the mischief rule, has been applied by Courts. This rule, which promotes purposive interpretation, requires the Court to ascertain what the law was before the making of the Act, what the mischief or defect in the previous law was, and how Parliament intended to address it. The Court must then determine how to rectify the mischief and further the remedy by imbuing the provisions with greater strength and vitality, all in order to give effect to the true intent of the makers of the Act.

In Heydon's case it was resolved by the Barons of the Exchequer at p.7b:

> [T]he sure and true interpretation of all statutes in general (be they penal or beneficial, restrictive or enlarging of the common law) four things are to be discerned and considered:- (1st). What was the common law before the making of the Act. (2nd). What was the mischief and defect for which the common law did not provide. (3rd). what remedy the Parliament hath resolved and appointed to cure the disease of the commonwealth. And, (4th). The true reason of the remedy; and then the office of all the Judges is always to make such construction as shall suppress the mischief, and advance the remedy, and to suppress subtle inventions and evasions for continuance of the mischief, and pro privato commodo, and to add force and life to the cure and remedy, according to the true intent of the makers of the Act, pro bono publico.

When the literal rule is applied to Act No. 4 of 1990, the operative sections favour the bank whilst the procedural sections favour the third-party mortgagor; it is evident that these two cannot coexist. Then the Court can legitimately look beyond the literal rule to discern the true legislative intent and seek reconciliation.

Harmonious construction is employed to resolve apparent inconsistencies or contradictions within the same law. Harmonious construction in law rests on the principle that every statute is enacted with a distinct purpose and intention, and therefore, it should be interpreted as a cohesive whole.

In Sultana Begum v. Prem Chand Jain AIR 1997 SC 1006, it was held:

> [T]he rule of interpretation requires that while interpreting two inconsistent, or, obviously repugnant provisions of an Act, the courts should make an effort to so interpret the provisions as to harmonise them so that the purpose of the Act may be given effect to and both the provisions may be allowed to operate without rendering either of them otiose.

In ENT19 v. Minister for Home Affairs (supra), Gordon, Edelman, Steward and Gleeson JJ. state at para 87:

> The context of the words, consideration of the consequences of adopting a provision's literal meaning, the purpose of the statute and principles of construction may lead a court to adopt a construction that departs from the literal meaning of the words of a provision. One such principle is that legislation must be construed on the prima facie basis that its provisions are intended to give effect to harmonious goals. As expressed by Gageler J in SAS Trustee Corporation v Miles (2018) 265 CLR 137 at 157, "statutory text must be considered from the outset in context and attribution of meaning to the text in context must be guided so far as possible by statutory purpose on the understanding that a legislature ordinarily intends to pursue its purposes by coherent means". Where conflict appears to arise in construing an Act, "the conflict must be alleviated, so far as possible, by adjusting the meaning of the > competing provisions to achieve that result which will best give effect to the purpose and language of those provisions while maintaining the unity of all the statutory provisions", and this "will often require the court to determine which is the leading provision and which the subordinate provision, and which must give way to the other". [Project Blue Sky (1998) 194 CLR 355 at 382, quoting Institute of Patent Agents v. Lockwood [1894] AC 347 at 360.] Ultimately, the task in applying the accepted principles of statutory construction is to discern what Parliament is to be taken to have intended.

In Rajavarothiam Sampanthan and Others v. The Attorney General and Others (SC/FR/351-356, 358-361/2018, SC Minutes of 13.12.2018) at 61 it was held:

> The next principle of interpretation which should be mentioned is that, where there is more than one provision in a statute which deal with the same subject and differing constructions of the provisions are advanced, the Court must seek to interpret and apply the several provisions harmoniously and read the statute as a whole. That rule of harmonious interpretation crystallises the good sense that all the provisions of a statute must be taken into account and be made to work together and cohesively enable the statute to achieve its purpose.

In the application of harmonious construction, both the golden rule and the mischief rule serve as valuable tools.

According to the golden rule, if the application of the literal rule leads to inconsistency within the statute, the Court can give an interpretation to achieve the manifest intention of the legislature. I have already stated that the manifest intention of the legislature is to facilitate the speedy recovery of loans granted by banks for the economic development of the country by parate execution.

In accordance with the mischief (Heydon) rule, the legislature had identified the shortcomings of the conventional legal recovery procedure and its adverse effect on the economic development of the country. An assortment of legislation was introduced to remedy this situation and Act No. 4 of 1990 is part of it. How can the Court assist in suppressing the mischief and advancing the remedy to achieve the legislative intent?

Although the substantive sections 3-5 do not make a distinction between the borrower and mortgagor, the procedural or subordinate sections 7 and 13-17 use the term "borrower". On this basis, learned President's Counsel for the appellant argues that the Act is applicable only to the borrower who is also the mortgagor but not to a mortgagor who is not the borrower. I must reiterate that the subordinate sections cannot override the substantive sections although the contrary might be possible.

Maxwell at page 199, citing Lord Reid's statement in the House of Lords case of Luke v. Inland Revenue Commissioners [1963] AC 557 at 577 states:

> Where to apply words literally would "defeat the obvious intention of the legislation and produce a wholly unreasonable result" we must "do some violence to the words" and so achieve that obvious intention and produce a rational construction.

Subordinate sections of the Act

Let me now examine the procedural or subordinate sections of the Act individually to assess the validity of the argument of learned President's Counsel for the appellant.

Section 7 reads as follows:

> 7(1). Save as otherwise provided in subsection (2) the provisions of section 4 shall apply in the case of any default notwithstanding that the borrower may have died or that any right, title or interest whatsoever in the property mortgaged to the bank as security for the loan may have passed by the voluntary conveyance or operation of law to any other person.

> (2) Where a borrower is dead and probate of his will or letters of administration to his estate have not been issued to any person, the District Court of Colombo or the District Court of the district in which the property mortgaged to the bank by the borrower is situate, may upon application made in that behalf by a bank and after service of notice of the application on such persons, if any, as the court may order, and if satisfied that the grant of probate or the issue of letters of administration is likely to be unduly delayed, appoint a person to represent the estate of the borrower for the purposes of this section; and the provisions of section 4 shall not apply in the case of any default made by such borrower unless and until a person is appointed under this subsection to represent the estate of such borrower.

According to section 7, the provisions of section 4 (whereby the bank can pass a resolution to sell the mortgaged property) shall not apply in the case of default made by a borrower who is dead, until a person is appointed to represent the estate of such borrower.

If the Court is to give literal interpretation to this section, only the mortgagor who is also the borrower is governed by this section but not the mortgagor who is not the borrower. In that eventuality, the property of the deceased mortgagor who is not the borrower can be sold by parate execution notwithstanding that a person has not been appointed to represent the estate of such mortgagor.

Such a literal construction causes injustice to a mortgagor who is not the borrower. Will the legislature enact statutes to oppress a group of people similarly circumstanced in that manner?

Should the Court in such circumstances, as argued by learned President's Counsel for the appellant, interpret that section to mean that the property of a mortgagor who is not the borrower cannot be sold by parate execution? Or should the Court find a solution that aligns with the intention of the legislature and the purpose of the legislation? Canons of construction of statutes suggest that the Court must adopt the latter, not the former.

The argument of the learned President's Counsel for the appellant that the use of the term "borrower" instead of "mortgagor" suggests that only the property mortgaged by the borrower is liable to parate execution is unacceptable as such construction restricts the ambit of the substantive sections of the Act. Such an interpretation will do violence to the symmetry of this special law.

An intention to produce an unreasonable result should not be attributed to a statute when an alternative interpretation is possible. The Court can give a liberal construction to a section to avert injustice. In this instance, the Court can extend the meaning of the term "borrower" not only to the borrower who is also the mortgagor but also to the mortgagor who is not the borrower. To put it differently, the term "borrower" must be interpreted to include the mortgagor who has provided security for the loan obtained by the borrower. This construction can be adopted in respect of all other sections (i.e. sections 13-17) where the term "borrower" appears. Such interpretation is in consonance with the policy, object and spirit of the Act.

> 13. In addition to the amount due on any loan, the Board may recover from the borrower, or any person acting on his behalf –
>
> (a) all moneys expended by a bank, in accordance with the covenants contained in the mortgage bond executed by the person to whom the loan was granted, in the payment of premia and other charges in respect of any policy of insurance effected on the property mortgaged to such bank, and in the payment of all other costs and charges authorized to be incurred by the bank, under the covenants contained in such mortgage bond and executed by the borrower;
>
> (b) the costs of advertising the sale and of selling of the mortgaged property:

> Provided that the costs incurred under paragraph (b) shall not exceed such percentage of the loan as may be prescribed.

Section 13 empowers the bank to recover the expenses and costs incurred by the bank in conducting the sale from the borrower in accordance with the covenants contained in the mortgage bond executed by the borrower. The literal interpretation of this section suggests that the bank can recover expenses as contained in the mortgage bond if the mortgage bond was executed by the borrower, not by a third party.

When the operative section of the Act empowers the bank to sell any property mortgaged to the bank (regardless of who mortgages the property), can this subordinate provision of the Act nullify the full effect of the operative section of the Act? The purposive interpretation of this section is when the mortgage is executed by a third party, the term "borrower" should mean both the individual who borrows money by mortgaging the property and the third party who mortgages the property on behalf of that individual. That is the way to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy. A construction that is excessively literal should be avoided when it results in an absurdity, especially if a more flexible interpretation would better serve the practical implementation of the Act.

> The court can look behind the letter of the law in order to determine the true purpose and effect of an enactment when the language of the statute, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction, leads to a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, or some inconvenience, or absurdity, hardship or injustice, presumably not intended. In such cases, a construction modifying the meaning of the words and even the structure of a sentence is permissible, and in order to avoid absurdity or incongruity, even grammatical and ordinary sense of the words can in certain circumstances be avoided.

Section 14 reads as follows:

> If the mortgaged property is sold, the bank shall, after deducting from the proceeds of the sale the amount due on the mortgage and the moneys and costs recoverable under section 13, pay the balance remaining, if any, either to the borrower or any person legally entitled to accept the payment due to the borrower or where the Board is in doubt as to whom the money should be paid into the District Court of the district in which the mortgage property is situate.

I do not think that even the literal interpretation of section 14 presents an anomaly. There is no compulsion in section 14 for the bank to give excess money to the borrower and not to any other person. If the borrower is not the mortgagor, the excess money can be deposited with the Court for the Court to release it to the correct person. Section 14 will not "bring about a preposterous result" as remarked at page 405 in the Ramachandran case.

However, once the aforementioned liberal interpretation of the term "borrower" is adopted, the question of depositing such excess money in Court does not arise.

As Maxwell points out at page 47, citing Canada Sugar Refining Co. Ltd. v. R [1898] AC 735, a statute shall be read as a whole and "every clause of a statute is to be construed with reference to the context and other clauses of the Act, so as, as far as possible, to make a consistent enactment of the whole statute."

Lord Hodge, in the UK Supreme Court's recent case, namely R (on the application of O) v. Secretary of State for the Home Department [2022] UKSC 3, declares:

> The courts in conducting statutory interpretation are "seeking the meaning of the words which Parliament used": Black-Clawson International Ltd v Papierwerke Waldhof-Aschaffenburg AG [1975] AC 591, 613 per Lord Reid of Drem. More recently, Lord Nicholls of Birkenhead stated:
> "Statutory interpretation is an exercise which requires the court to identify the meaning borne by the words in question in the particular context."

> (R v Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, Ex p Spath Holme Ltd [2001] AC 349, 396). Words and passages in a statute derive their meaning from their context. A phrase or passage must be read in the context of the section as a whole and in the wider context of a relevant group of sections. Other provisions in a statute and the statute as a whole may provide the relevant context. They are the words which Parliament has chosen to enact as an expression of the purpose of the legislation and are therefore the primary source by which meaning is ascertained. There is an important constitutional reason for having regard primarily to the statutory context as Lord Nicholls explained in Spath Holme, 397:
>
> "Citizens, with the assistance of their advisers, are intended to be able to understand parliamentary enactments, so that they can regulate their conduct accordingly. They should be able to rely upon what they read in an Act of Parliament."

Section 15(1) reads as follows:

> If the mortgaged property is sold, the Board shall issue a certificate of sale and thereupon all the right, title, and interest of the borrower to, and in, the property shall vest in the purchaser; and thereafter it shall not be competent for any person claiming through or under any disposition whatsoever of the right, title or interest of the borrower to, and in, the property made or registered subsequent to the date of the mortgage of the property to the bank, in any court to move or invalidate the sale for any cause whatsoever, or to maintain any right, title or interest to, or in, the property as against the purchaser.

Learned President's Counsel for the appellant states that this is an important section that cuts across the banks' argument because when the property is sold (whether or not the mortgagor is the borrower), it is the right, title and interest of the borrower in the property that is transferred to the purchaser. He argues that the only inference that can be drawn from this is that parate execution applies exclusively to the property of the borrower. I regret my inability to agree.

What this section says is that "if the mortgaged property is sold, the Board shall issue a certificate of sale and thereupon all the right, title, and interest of the borrower to, and in, the property shall vest in the purchaser". What is sold is "the mortgaged property", not "the borrower's property". If the borrower is the owner of the mortgaged property, the purchaser will acquire the borrower's right, title, and interest in the property. However, if the borrower is not the owner of the mortgaged property, the purchaser does not and cannot acquire the right, title, and interest of the borrower in the property since the borrower has no such right, title and interest in the property. Upon the issuance of the certificate of sale, the right, title and interest of the owner of the mortgaged property will pass to the purchaser. This section does not say that upon the mortgaged property being sold and the certificate of sale being issued, only the right, title and interest of the borrower are transferred to the purchaser.

Sometimes the letter of the law needs to yield to the spirit of the law. If the term "borrower" in this section is given a strict literal interpretation, it leads to a preposterous outcome. If I may repeat what Viscount Simon L.C. stated in Nokes v. Doncaster Amalgamated Collieries Ltd (supra) at 1022, "if the choice is between two interpretations, the narrower of which would fail to achieve the manifest purpose of the legislation, we would avoid a construction which would reduce the legislation to futility and should rather accept the bolder construction based on the view that Parliament would legislate only for the purpose of bringing about an effective result."

Chief Justice Goddard in Barns v. Jarvis [1953] 1 All ER 1061 at 1063 states "One has to apply a certain amount of common sense in construing statutes and to bear in mind the object of the Act".

If the extended meaning to the term "borrower" is given (encompassing both the borrower who mortgaged the property and the third party who mortgaged the property), this anomaly can be averted.

Section 16(3)-(5) is to the following effect:

> 16(3). Where any immovable property sold in pursuance of the preceding provisions of this Act in the occupancy of the borrower or some person on his behalf or of some person claiming under a title created by the borrower subsequently to the mortgage of the property to the bank the District Court shall order delivery to be made by putting the purchaser or any person whom he may appoint to receive possession on his behalf, in possession of the property.
>
> (4). Where any immovable property sold in pursuance of the preceding provisions of this Act is in the occupancy of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same, the District Court shall order delivery to be made by affixing a notice that the sale has taken place, in the Sinhala, Tamil and English languages, in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of tom-tom or any other customary mode or in such manner as the court may direct, at some convenient place, that the interest of the borrower has been transferred to the purchaser. The cost of such proclamation shall be fixed by the court and shall in every case be prepaid by the purchaser.
> (5). Every order under subsection (3) or subsection (4) shall be deemed, as the case may be, to be an order for delivery of possession made under section 287 or section 288 of the Civil procedure Code, and may be enforced in like manner as an order so made, the borrower and the purchaser being deemed, for the purpose of the application of any provisions of that Code, to be the judgment-debtor and judgment-creditor, respectively.

If the term "borrower" is given a narrow meaning, although any immovable property mortgaged to the bank can be sold under the principal sections of the Act, delivery of possession can be given to the purchaser only if the borrower is the mortgagor but not when the mortgagor is not the borrower. That interpretation will result in absurdity and will allow the mischief to perpetuate.

Chief Justice Beaumont, in Emperor v. Somadhai Govindbhai (1938) 40 BOMLR 1082 remarked:

> I protest against the suggestion that a Judge, construing an Act of Parliament, is a mere automaton whose only duty is to give out what he considers to be the primary meaning of the language used. A Judge must always consider the effect of any construction which he is asked to put on an Act of Parliament, and if he comes to the conclusion that a particular construction leads to a result which he considers irrational or unfair, he is entitled, and indeed bound, to assume that the Legislature did not intend such a construction to be adopted, and to try to find some more rational meaning to which the words are sensible.

> Where possible, a construction should be adopted which will facilitate the smooth working of the scheme of legislation established by the Act, which will avoid producing or prolonging artificiality in the law, and which will not produce anomalous results.

To avert the anomaly, the term "borrower" shall include the mortgagor who is not the borrower. Such a liberal interpretation can easily be accommodated within the scope and purpose of the Act.

Bindra states at page 351:

> In a liberal construction of the statute, its meaning can be extended to matters which come within the spirit or reason of the law or within the evil which the law seeks to suppress or correct, although, of course, the statute can under no circumstances be given a meaning inconsistent with, or contrary to the language used by the legislators. Consequently, any matter reasonably within > the statute's meaning, may be included within the statute's scope, unless the language necessarily excludes it.

Section 17 reads as follows:

> Where the property sold has been purchased on behalf of the bank, the Board may at any time before it resells that property, cancel the sale by an endorsement to that effect on a certified copy of the certificate of sale, upon the borrower or any person on his behalf paying the amount due in respect of the loan for which the property was sold (including the cost of seizure and sale) and interest on the aggregate sum at a rate not exceeding the prescribed rate per annum. Such an endorsement shall, upon registration in the office of the Registrar of Lands, revest the said property in the borrower as though the sale under this Act has never been made.

According to the literal construction of this section, the endorsement of cancellation on the certificate of sale shall revest the mortgaged property in the borrower as if the sale had never taken place. For the property to be revested, the borrower must have been the owner in the first place. Any argument that such an endorsement shall vest the property in the borrower whether or not he was the owner is untenable. If the sale is deemed not to have taken place, the property will revert to the original owner, who could be either the borrower or a third party. If the term "borrower" is given a liberal meaning to include the mortgagor who is not the borrower, no other explanation is necessary.

> Where the literal meaning of the words used in a statutory provision would manifestly defeat its object by making a part of it meaningless and ineffective, it is legitimate and even necessary to adopt the rule of liberal construction so as to give meaning to all parts of the provision and to make the whole of it effective and operative.

In sections 2, 8 and 9, the use of the term "borrower" shall be understood as the borrower who is also the mortgagor and the mortgagor who is not the borrower. Both of them should register their addresses with the bank for receiving notices, including but not limited to notices of resolution and sale. I must state that although a mortgagor who is not the borrower may not be required to register his address according to the literal meaning of the section, the experience demonstrates that the bank sends all notices to both the borrower and the mortgagor and if the borrower is an incorporated body, to all the directors because what the bank wants is to recover the money, not the mortgaged property. This is what has happened in the instant case as well.

In terms of section 19, if the bank purchases the property at the sale, the bank shall not hold the property for a longer period than it is necessary to enable the bank to resell the property to recover its dues. In terms of section 14, the excess money shall be returned.

> Every statute must be construed ex visceribus actus, that is, within the four corners of the Act. When the court is called upon to construe the term of any provision found in a statute, the court should not confine its attention only to the particular provision which falls for consideration. The court should also consider other parts of the statute which throw light on the intention of the legislature and serve to show that the particular provision ought not to be construed as if it stood alone and part from the rest of the statute.

Dictionary meanings of "borrower" and "mortgagor"

Dictionaries cannot be taken as authoritative pronouncements of the meanings of words used in statutes. However, the Courts, in the interpretation of statutes, may consult standard authors and make reference to dictionaries, including law dictionaries. (R v. Peters [1886] 16 QBD 636) The dictionary meanings of "borrower" and "mortgagor" suggest that there might be instances where these terms could be used interchangeably, particularly in contexts related to loans and mortgages.

Black's Law Dictionary (11th edition), page 1214 defines "mortgagor" as "Someone who mortgages property; the mortgage-debtor, or borrower".

Law Dictionary, P.H. Collin (Universal Book Stall, New Delhi), page 178 "mortgagor" is defined as "person who borrows money, giving a property as security".

A Dictionary of Law (5th edition, edited by Elizabeth A. Martin, Oxford University Press), page 320 states: "Mortgage – an interest in property created as a form of security for a loan or payment of a debt and terminated on payment of the loan or debt. The borrower, who offers the security, is the mortgagor; the lender, who provides the money, is the mortgagee."

In K.J. Aiyar's Judicial Dictionary (11th edition, The Law Book Co (P) Ltd, Allahabad), page 773, the term "mortgage" is defined as follows:

> A mortgage is the transfer of an interest in specific immovable property for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability. The transferor is called a mortgagor, the transferee, a mortgagee, the principal money and interest of which payment is secured for the time being are called the mortgage money; and the instrument, if any, by which the transfer is effected is called a mortgage deed. Simple mortgage – Where without delivering possession of the mortgaged property, the mortgagor binds himself personally to pay the mortgage money, and agrees expressly and impliedly, that in the event of his failing to pay according to his contract, the mortgagee shall have a right to cause the mortgage property to be sold and the proceeds of the sale to be applied, so far as may be necessary, in payment of the mortgage money, the transaction is called a simple mortgage and mortgagee a simple mortgagee.

Judicial remedy for imprecise legislative language

The purpose of the Act and the mischief the legislature intended to remedy are clear. Having regard to the intent, scope and object of the Act, it is quite apparent that the draftsman failed to use precise language in the Act. Had the attention of Parliament been drawn to this inadvertent oversight before the Bill was passed into law, I am certain that the term "borrower" in the Act would have been substituted with the term "mortgagor" to prevent any ambiguity. This simple change could have averted any confusion.

As a general principle the Court cannot assume a mistake in an Act of Parliament; the legislature is presumed not to have made mistakes. Changing the language of a statute is a serious step, but there is no blanket prohibition. Canons of statutory interpretation allow such action when there are compelling reasons to do so.

In the House of Lords case of Vickers, Sons & Maxim Ltd v. Evans [1910] AC 444 at 445, Lord Loreburn L.C. states that Court cannot "read words into an Act of Parliament unless clear reason for it is to be found within the four corners of the Act itself."

In regard to substitution of words in a statute, Maxwell states at page 231:

> Sometimes, where the sense of the statute demands it or where there has been an obvious mistake in drafting, a court will be prepared to substitute another word or phrase for that which actually appears in the text of the Act.

If the draftsman or the legislature has failed to use apt words, the Court can intervene. Inadvertent mistakes on the part of the draftsman should not defeat the purpose of the Act. Maxwell further explains at page 228:

> Where the language of a statute, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction, leads to a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, or to some inconvenience or absurdity which can hardly have been intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the > words and even the structure of the sentence. This may be done by departing from the rules of grammar, by giving an unusual meaning to particular words, or by rejecting them altogether, on the ground that the legislature could not possibly have intended what its words signify, and that the modifications made are mere corrections of careless language and really give the true meaning. Where the main object and intention of a statute are clear, it must not be reduced to a nullity by the draftsman's unskillfulness or ignorance of the law, except in a case of necessity, or the absolute intractability of the language used. Lord Reid [in Cramas Properties Ltd v. Connaught Fur Trimmings Ltd [1965] 1 WLR 892 at 899] has said that he prefers to see a mistake on the part of the draftsman in doing his revision rather than a deliberate attempt to introduce an irrational rule: "the canons of construction are not so rigid as to prevent a realistic solution."

Quoting a part of this excerpt from Maxwell, in The King v. Vasey [1905] 2 KB 748, Lord Alverstone C.J. substituted new words into the statute to fulfil the manifest object of the legislature. Said His Lordship at page 751:

> Applying those principles to the present case, we have to see whether the amending section requires modification, on the ground that if it is to be taken literally it will be reduced to a nullity. It seems to me that the object of the section is perfectly plain, and no one can doubt that the intention of the Legislature was to prevent the destruction of fish in salmon rivers by putting lime or other noxious substances into the water. The draftsman must, however, have forgotten exactly how the section of the Malicious Injuries to Property Act, 1861, which deals with the matter runs. I have no doubt that he meant to provide that for the purpose of this Act the expression "salmon river" should be substituted for the description of waters enumerated in the earlier Act. If, therefore, the exact phraseology of the section of the amending Act is disregarded, and the words "or in any salmon river" are inserted in the earlier section after the words "in any > such pond or water", that makes sense, and carries out the manifest object of the amendment.

Similar sentiments were echoed in The King v. Ettridge [1909] 2 KB 24.

Bindra states at page 365-366:

> When a language of the statute is plain and unambiguous it would not be open to the courts to adopt a hypothetical construction on the ground that such a construction is more consistent with the alleged object and policy of the Act. But where such a plain reading leads to anomalies, injustices and absurdities, the court may look into the purpose for which the statute was enacted and try to interpret it so as to adhere to the purpose of the statute. If words are to be added by the court in order to repair an omission in the Act, it should be possible to state with certainty that these words would have been inserted by the draftsman and approved by the legislature had their attention been drawn to the omission before the Bill had passed into law.

> Whenever a statute comes up for consideration it must be remembered that it is not within human powers to foresee the manifold sets of facts which may arise, and, even if it were, it is not possible to provide for them in terms free from all ambiguity. The English language is not an instrument of mathematical precision. Our literature would be much the poorer if it were. This is where the draftsmen of Acts of Parliament have often been unfairly criticised. A judge, believing himself to be fettered by the supposed rule that he must look to the language and nothing else, laments that the draftsmen have not provided for this or that, or have been guilty of some or other ambiguity. It would certainly save the judges trouble if Acts of Parliament were drafted with divine prescience and perfect clarity. In the absence of it, when a defect appears a Judge cannot simply fold his hands and blame the draftsman. He must set to > work on the constructive task of finding the intention of Parliament, and he must do this not only from the language of the statute, but also from a consideration of the social conditions which gave rise to it and of the mischief which it was passed to remedy, and then he must supplement the written word so as to give "force and life" to the intention of the legislature. That was clearly laid down (3 Co. Rep. 7b) by the resolution of the judges [Sir Roger Manwood, C.B., and the other barons of the Exchequer] in Heydon's case (1584) 3 Co. Rep. 7a), and it is the safest guide to-day. Good practical advice on the subject was given about the same time by Plowden in his note (2 Plowd. 465) to Eyston v. Studd (1574) 2 Plowd. 463. Put into homely metaphor it is this: A Judge should ask himself the question how if the makers of the Act had themselves come across this ruck in the texture of it, they would have strengthened it out? He must then do as they would have done. A Judge must not alter the material of which the Act is woven, but he can and should iron out the creases.

In the Supreme Court case of Balasunderam v. The Chairman, Janatha Estate Development Board [1997] 1 Sri LR 83, while interpreting sections of the Government Quarters (Recovery of Possession) Act, No. 8 of 1981, as amended, Justice Kulatunga stated at page 88:

> In interpreting the Act, I have adopted the principle that words are to be construed in accordance with the intention as expressed, having regard to the object or policy of the legislation, which in the instant case is to facilitate the speedy recovery of Government quarters.

I need only to repeat the same, with the substitution of the words "loans by banks" for the words "Government quarters".

Ramachandran v. Hatton National Bank

The central focus of this appeal hinged on the majority decision in Ramachandran v. Hatton National Bank.

The ratio decidendi of the majority decision in Ramachandran (at page 405) is that "the provisions of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990 will not apply in respect of a mortgage given by a guarantor or any person other than a borrower to whom a loan has been granted by a Bank for the economic development of Sri Lanka."

The gravamen of submissions made on behalf of the banks led by Dr. Romesh De Silva, P.C. is that the majority in Ramachandran took extraneous matters into consideration before they addressed the core issue. As a result, it was strenuously submitted that the majority considered the core issue with "prejudice and bias against parate execution". He strongly argued that Ramachandran has been wrongly decided and should be overruled by this Fuller Bench. Learned President's Counsel for the other intervenient banks associated themselves with the submissions of Dr. De Silva, P.C.

Ramachandran was decided on 15.04.2005. It is the submission of learned President's Counsel that, as seen from the judgment, the majority in Ramachandran did not give due consideration to any of the previous decisions on the matter before they arrived at the aforementioned conclusion. He highlights that in Nalin Enterprises (Pvt) Limited v. Sampath Bank Limited (HC (Civil) 199/2000(1) decided on 27.04.2001) the Commercial High Court held that under the Act No. 4 of 1990 parate execution is permissible in respect of any property mortgaged to the bank whether it be of the borrower or any other party, and the term "borrower" in the Act must be interpreted to include the mortgagor who had provided security for the loan obtained by the borrower. The Supreme Court in Nalin Enterprises (Pvt) Limited v. Sampath Bank Limited (SC/LA/14/2001, SC Minutes dated 23.07.2001) refused leave to appeal against this order by a bench presided over by His Lordship the Chief Justice who presided over the Bench in Ramachandran. The same conclusion was arrived at in the Commercial High Court case of Sathasivam v. Hatton National Bank (HC(Civil)174/2000(1) decided on 04.12.2002) and the Supreme Court in Sathasivam v. Hatton National Bank (SC/CHC/44/2002, SC Minutes of 30.01.2003) refused leave to appeal against this order by a Bench presided over by Justice M.D.H. Fernando. In Bank of Ceylon v. Dharmasena (CALA/329/2000, CA Minutes of 07.10.2002) and in Weerakoon v. Bank of Ceylon (CA/970/2002, CA Minutes of 31.05.2002) by Benches presided over by Justice Amaratunga and Justice Thilakawardane, respectively, the Court took the same view. In Ukwatte v. D.F.C.C. Bank [2004] 1 Sri LR 164, Justice Sripavan (as His Lordship then was) also held that the terms "any property" and "for any loan" in section 4 of the Act, No. 4 of 1990 are not limited to the property of the borrower.

Although Mr. Rohan Sahabandu, P.C. for the appellant states that Ukwatte's case was considered in Ramachandran, there is no such indication in the majority judgment. It was the submission of Dr. De Silva, P.C. that until the majority decision in Ramachandran, all Courts that considered the matter did not confine parate execution solely to property mortgaged by the borrower. In reply, Mr. Sahabandu, P.C. did not draw the attention of this Court to any case decided prior to Ramachandran where the Court has given a restrictive interpretation to section 4 of the Act.

Dr. De Silva, P.C. stresses that the extensive discussion in the majority judgment on the historical and conceptual aspects of parate execution, including its origins in Roman Law, Roman-Dutch Law, and English Law, tends to portray parate execution as a negative concept. He contends that the discussion is purely academic and was not relevant to the matter at hand. The Supreme Court was tasked with deciding the statutory law introduced by Act No. 4 of 1990, rather than determining which law is applicable to the recovery of debts by banks. He further submits that the majority's view that common law, not English law, applies in parate execution proceedings is incorrect.

The cause of action allegedly accrued to the plaintiff in parate execution cases arises out of a banking transaction and not of a mortgage transaction. The mortgage is part of the banking transaction. In the instance case, the 1st plaintiff is the borrower and the 2nd plaintiff is the mortgagor. The bank resorts to parate execution of the mortgaged property to recover the loan. In terms of section 3 of the Civil Law Ordinance, No. 5 of 1854, as amended, the law applicable in respect to banks and banking is the English law unless other provision is made applicable by statute law. (De Costa v. Bank of Ceylon (1969) 72 NLR 457) Roman-Dutch law is considered as the common law of Sri Lanka because it is the residuary law filling in the gaps only when the statute laws and special laws are silent. The transaction in question is governed by the English law, not by the Roman Dutch law.

Let me explain this in lucid language. When a person goes to a bank to obtain a loan, the bank asks for security. That security can be provided by the borrower himself or he can plead with another to give security on his behalf. The main transaction is the loan transaction between the bank and the borrower, not the security, which is incidental. The incidental transaction cannot be brought to the fore to thwart or undermine the main transaction. It is beside the point who provides the security. The covenants of the Mortgage Bonds remain the same for both the borrower and the third party. If another individual obliges the borrower's request and mortgages his property as security for the loan, and hands over his original title deeds to the bank, and if the borrower defaults on the loan payment, the bank should be able to recover the money by selling the mortgaged property. In practical terms, the guarantor or the mortgagor would be the debtor to the bank where the loan is in default. That is the purpose of providing security. If the mortgaged property is sold to recover the dues to the bank, the mortgagor must deal with the borrower, not with the bank. This is what happens in modern day banking, involving performance guarantees, advance payment bonds, letters of credit, credit card transactions etc. Once the demand is made, money is paid without informing the guarantor.

More specifically, learned President's Counsel for the banks, in unison, strenuously submitted that the dicta made on the constitutionality of the provisions of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act are clearly unwarranted when a Divisional Bench of the same Supreme Court in Special Determination No. 3 of 1990 (which was taken up with No. 2 of 1990) had unanimously decided that none of the provisions of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Bill were inconsistent with the Constitution. They particularly point out that the gravamen of the majority reasoning that the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act transfers judicial powers from Courts to the board of directors of the bank was fully considered and rejected by the Five Judge Bench of the Supreme Court in the said Special Determination. There is great force in this argument.

The majority in Ramachandran started interpretation of the provisions of the Act at page 401 in the following manner:

> The Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990, the ambit of the provisions of which, is the substantial question on which leave has been granted, is undoubtedly a special provision, as its very title indicates and is a departure from the established law and procedure. The nature and extent of such departure will be examined in respect of each of its applicable provisions in the light of the preceding analysis of the established law and procedure.

In Ramachandran, the Supreme Court started investigation into the constitutionality of the Act at page 396 in the following manner:

> In a system based on the Rule of Law, these salutary requirements [the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in regard to the execution of a money decree] cannot be considered as being time consuming, frivolous or unnecessary. The process of execution and sale is thus firmly within the ambit of judicial power, to ensure the orderly transfer of the right to property recognized and safeguarded by law and for the adjudication of all claims and interests that arise therefrom. One could imagine the mayhem that would ensue, if a landlord, creditor or owner is empowered to secure his rights by way of execution without recourse to a Court. Whatever be the economic benefit that may derive from it, such a process would be unthinkable. I have to make this observation, as the perspective from which any departure from or erosion of, the carefully established procedures that constitute the bedrock of the Rule > of Law and the exercise of judicial power, should be examined, considered and decided upon.

After referring inter alia to Articles 3, 4, 12(1), 105(1) of the Constitution, rules of natural justice etc. the Court repeated this at page 401:

> These are basic concepts but they have to be restated as the perspective from which any departure from the established law and procedure should be examined and decided upon.

I cannot but agree with Dr. De Silva, P.C. when he emphasises that there was no need to reexamine, reconsider and decide on, what had already been decided by a Five Judge Bench of the Supreme Court. The underlying reasoning of the majority view was based on Their Lordships' belief that Act No. 4 of 1990 ought not to have been made into law in the first place as it had been enacted in breach of the rights enshrined under Articles 3, 4, 12(1) and 105(1) of the Constitution. As seen from pages 401-404 of the Ramachandran judgment, it is on this basis Their Lordships were disinclined to consider the principal sections of the Act (sections 3-5) in line with the intended meaning of the legislature.

According to the analysis found on those pages, even if the borrower is the mortgagor, the bank cannot subject the mortgaged property to parate execution without judicial process. However, later in the judgment at page 405 Their Lordships take the view that there "may be some justification" for parate execution against the borrower "on the basis that the person to whom the loan is granted being the borrower, has a continuing transaction with the Bank and should know the amounts paid by him or are in default."

This approach, Dr. De Silva, P.C. submits, goes against the constitutional framework of our Constitution. In our Constitution, there is no provision for reviewing a decision made (under Article 123) in a Special Determination regarding the constitutionality of a Bill by a subsequent Bench. Nor does the Constitution provide for the review of the constitutionality of an Act. In terms of Article 80(3) of the Constitution, "Where a Bill becomes law upon the certificate of the President or the Speaker, as the case may be being endorsed thereon, no court or tribunal shall inquire into, pronounce upon or in any manner call in question, the validity of such Act on any ground whatsoever." Article 16(1) which falls under Chapter III on fundamental rights of the Constitution further states "All existing written law and unwritten law shall be valid and operative notwithstanding any inconsistency with the preceding provisions of this Chapter." This has in fact been acknowledged by Their Lordships at page 404 of the Ramachandran judgment.

There is no need to highlight that this is a special Act and is a departure from the established law and procedure because it is expressly stated in the Act itself. Where there are provisions in a special Act which are inconsistent with the general law and procedure, the general law and procedure must yield to the provisions of the special Act. Non-judicial sales do not take place for the first time after the enactment of this Act. As the Supreme Court in the first Special Determination No. 3 of 1990 states the right of parate execution has been exercising by the state banks and some state institutions for a very long time. The Divisional Bench in their first Special Determination lists out names of those banks and institutions:

(a) The State Mortgage Bank established by the Ceylon State Mortgage Bank Ordinance, No. 16 of 1931
(b) The Agricultural and Industrial Credit Corporation established by Ordinance No. 19 of 1943
(c) The State Mortgage and Investment Bank established by State Mortgage and Investment Bank Law, No. 13 of 1975 (which repealed the Ceylon State Mortgage Bank Ordinance and the Agricultural and the Industrial Credit Corporation Ordinance)
(d) The Ceylon Savings Bank established by Ordinance No. 12 of 1959
(e) The National Savings Bank established by Act No. 30 of 1971 (which repealed the Ceylon Savings Bank)
(f) The People's Bank established by the People's Bank Act, No. 29 of 1961

(g) The Bank of Ceylon established by the Bank of Ceylon Ordinance, No. 53 of 1938

(h) The National Development Bank established by Act No. 2 of 1979

(i) The Regional Rural Development Bank established by Act No. 15 of 1985

(j) The Commissioner of National Housing appointed under the National Housing Act, No. 37 of 1954

(k) The National Housing Development Authority established by Act No. 17 of 1979

(l) The Tourist Development Act, No. 14 of 1968 extended the right of parate execution to all "approved credit agencies" in respect of loans granted by them on the security of land alienated by the Ceylon Tourist Board

Second Special Determination in 2003

Learned President's Counsel for the appellant submits that the proposed amendment to the principal Act No. 4 of 1990 in the year 2003 was to include the property mortgaged by a person other than the borrower within the ambit of the Act, but the Supreme Court by Special Determination No. 22 of 2003 dated 26.08.2003 struck this down as unconstitutional and the banks are now trying to achieve indirectly what they could not achieve directly. Learned President's Counsel for the appellant indirectly invites this Court to consider this second Special Determination in 2003 to address the current issue before this Bench. Can this be done?

As seen from the dissenting judgment of Her Ladyship in Ramachandran, the 1st question of law on which leave to appeal was granted in Ramachandran was:

> Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the determination made by the Supreme Court in the S.C. (SD) No. 22/2003 on the constitutionality of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) (Amendment) Bill that a Bank is not entitled to sell by way of parate execution a property mortgaged to the Bank by a person other than the borrower, is not binding on the Court of Appeal in interpreting the provisions of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990?

This appears to be on a finding made in the Ukwatte's case (supra). However, the majority judgment in Ramachandran did not address this issue but this was addressed in the dissenting judgment. In point of fact, the majority judgment does not make any reference to either the first Special Determination in 1990 or the second Special Determination in 2003. The second Special Determination was in respect of a Bill to amend the principal Act No. 4 of 1990 and not the principal Act itself. The second Special Determination cannot be considered as an interpretation of the principal Act No. 4 of 1990. What this Court in the instant appeal has been called upon to decide is the principal Act. Hence, the second Special Determination cannot be taken into consideration for the purpose of deciding this appeal.

Conclusion

The Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990, as amended, applies to any property mortgaged to the bank as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made irrespective of whether the mortgagor is the borrower or a third party.

The Bank of Ceylon Ordinance, No. 53 of 1938, as amended, and the People's Bank Act, No. 29 of 1961, as amended, apply to any property mortgaged to the said banks as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made regardless of whether the mortgagor is the borrower or a third party.

Accordingly, the majority judgment of Ramachandran v. Hatton National Bank [2006] 1 Sri LR 393 is overruled.

The 1st question of law raised by the appellant is answered in the negative and the 2nd question of law raised by the appellant is answered as "Does not arise".

The 3rd question of law raised on behalf of the licensed commercial banks and the 4th question of law raised on behalf of the two state banks are answered in the affirmative.

The order of the Commercial High Court refusing the application for interim injunction is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed.

In view of the importance of the question of law raised in this appeal, let the parties bear their own costs.

As agreed, the parties in the connected case No. SC/APPEAL/30/2021 will abide by this judgment.

A banking institution lends money to A (the borrower of a loan) but takes as security for the loan an immoveable property belonging to B (a third-party mortgagor). The long vexed question of whether the bank (the lender) can put up for auction the third-party mortgagor B's property without the intervention of Courts (parate execution) was settled in the seminal case of Chelliah Ramachandran and Manohary Ramachandran v. Hatton National Bank; V. Anandasiva and 12 Others v. Hatton National Bank; C. Ukwatte and Another v. DFCC Bank and Another; M.D.Karunawathie and 5 Others v. DFCC Bank and Another (sub nom Ramachandran and Another (SC Appeal No 5/2004) and Anandasiva and Another (SC Appeal No 9/2004) v. Hatton National Bank[1]) - a judicial precedent of 4 judges that is being impugned by several banks before this 7 judge bench as having been wrongly decided, whereas the Petitioners assert that this case has correctly laid down the legal position as to parate execution of immovable property in the country. In other words, as held by Ramachandran and Another (SC Appeal No 5/2004) and Anandasiva and Another (SC Appeal No 9/2004) v. Hatton National Bank[2] (henceforth sometimes referred to as the Chelliah Ramachandran case), both Petitioners in this case (SC Appeal 11/2021) as well as those in SC Appeal 30/2021 contend that no property mortgaged to the bank by a person who is not the borrower of the loan, can be sold at an auction.

In the same breath the Petitioners argue that the exception created to the Chelliah Ramachandran case in the decision of Hatton National Bank Ltd v. Samathapala Jayawardane, Ariyawathie Jayawardane and Rienzi Nalin Jayawardane *(*hereinafter sometimes referred to as Jayawardane case*)* (sub nom Hatton National Bank Ltd v. Jayawardane and Others)[3] is incorrect in fact and law, whilst the banks before us contend that Jayawardane case represents the correct view of the law concerning mortgages executed by a director of a corporate borrower.

In a nutshell, as the law stands today in the wake of these two decisions, two propositions of law stand out as plain as a pikestaff.

1) In terms of the majority decision of Chelliah Ramachandran, a lending institution cannot sell by auction the mortgaged property of a person unless he is also the borrower of the loan.

2) But in the case of a corporate borrower, HNB v. Jayawardane and Others establishes that parate execution of third-party mortgages is permitted, where the so-called third-party mortgagor is a director of the borrower company, who fully owned and controlled the corporate borrower to the extent of being its alter ego.

Both these propositions come up for a re-appraisal before this bench of 7 judges and If I may paraphrase the words of the English Court of Appeal in R (Association of British Civilian Internees (Far East Region) v Secretary of State for Defence[4] to describe the pith and substance of the arguments of all leading President's Counsel for the banks, the time has come to perform the burial rites of Chelliah Ramachandran, whilst the President's Counsel, who in a lone battle against the array of President's Counsel espoused the cause of the Petitioners, has strenuously contended that it is HNB Ltd v. Jayawardane and Others (the Jayawardane case) which must suffer extinction.

It cannot be gainsaid that when the majority of 4 judges (S.N.Silva, C.J, Jayasinghe, J, Udalagama, J and Dissanayake, J with Shirani Bandaranayake, J dissenting), out of the 5 judges who heard the eponymous case of Ramachandran and Another and Anandasiva and Another v. Hatton National Bank, decided on 15 April 2005 that it is the borrower's property that could be auctioned and not the property of the so-called third-party mortgagor, their pronouncement wrought a paradigmatic shift in the contours of mortgage financing by licensed banking institutions.

The correctness or otherwise of the decision of the 4 judges is the quintessential issue before this bench of 7 judges and whilst the banks challenge the correctness of the majority decision, it goes without saying that the banks have asserted impliedly, if not so in so many words, that the dissentient judgment of Shirani Bandaranayake, J (as Her Ladyship then was) must be preferred in that the mortgagee banks can exercise parate executie not only in respect of the immovable property of the borrower but also that of a third-party mortgagor. Allied to the argument of the Respondent banks and Intervenient banks in the two cases before us, is the correctness or otherwise of the decision of Jayasinghe J in Hatton National Bank Ltd v. Jayawardane and Others - namely when it comes to the borrowing of a corporate customer, the corporate veil must be lifted and the property of the mortgagor-director could be sold. Whilst the banks contended that directors who constitute shareholders in a company cannot hide behind the corporate entity as was correctly articulated in the case of Hatton National Bank Ltd v. Jayawardane and Others, the Petitioners have questioned the very basis of the reasoning of Jayasinghe, J in the above case. The veil lifting that the Supreme Court embarked upon in the case of Hatton National Bank Ltd v. Jayawardane and Others cannot be supported having regard to the legal indicia that authorize veil piercing in corporate law - an argument that the learned President's Counsel for the Petitioners Mr. Rohan Sahabandu vigorously put forward. In a nutshell it is the contention of the learned President's Counsel that veil lifting was not warranted at all on the facts and circumstances of the case of Hatton National Bank Ltd v. Jayawardane and Others.

Thus, the instant case engages before us a statutory interpretation of parate law or a re-appraisal of these two seminal cases as far as the provisions of Recovery of Loans (Special Provisions) Act, No.4 of 1990 (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Act, No.4 of 1990) are concerned. In this process a scrutiny of case law that have dealt with parate execution so far would also be made.

All that I have adumbrated by way of the above introduction flows from the facts immanent in the two cases before us and questions of law that have been formulated thereon.

As such it is apposite to look at the questions of law that come up for consideration. Initially on 8 February 2022, leave was granted by this Court on the following questions of law

i. "Did the High Court - (Commercial) err in Law by determining that the 2nd Plaintiff is a borrower within the meaning of the Recovery of Loans (Special Provisions) Act, No.04 of 1990?
ii. Is the ratio in the case of HNB Ltd v. Jayawardane and Others ([2007] 1 Sri.LR 181), that the director of a corporate entity who mortgages his property for a loan obtained by that corporate entity is a borrower, correct within the meaning of the Act, No.04 of 1990?"

Subsequently, this Court, by its order dated 14th September 2022, added two other questions of law which go as follows.

1) "Does the Board of Directors within the meaning of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No.4 of 1990 as amended, have the power, by resolution to be recorded in writing, to authorize a person specified in the resolution to sell by public auction any property mortgaged to the Bank [whether by the Borrower or any other person] as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made, in order to recover the whole of such unpaid portion of such loan together with the money and costs recoverable under Section 13 of the said Act?
2) Is any property [immovable or movable] mortgaged to the Bank of Ceylon or the People's Bank as security for any loan as the case may be, in respect of which default has been made within the meaning of the Bank of Ceylon Ordinance, No.53 of 1938 as amended and the People's Bank Act, No.29 of 1961, liable to be auctioned in terms of the respective Acts referred to?".

Thus, all these four questions constitute the parameters within which the arguments on behalf of the Petitioners and the banks, both Respondent and Intervenient, took place. Whichever way one looks at it, the sum and substance of the questions of law before us would boil down to two quintessential issues.

1) Whether parate execution of 3rd party mortgages are permitted under Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No.4 of 1990 as amended.

If this Court arrives at the view that it is permissible, then the corollary would follow that the legal precedent Ramachandran and Another (SC Appeal No 5/2004) and Anandasiva and Another (SC Appeal No 9/2004) v. Hatton National Bank[5] (the Chelliah Ramachandran case) has been wrongly decided.

2) The 2nd question that repays attention is whether veil lifting was properly and legally resorted to in HNB Ltd v. Jayawardane and Others (the Jayawardane case), given the tenor of that decision that when a director of a corporate entity has mortgaged his immovable property as security for the loan of the company, the mortgaged property remains open to parate execution.

Before one proceeds to assay and appraise the above two kernel issues in the cases before us, a succinct reference to the factual template in the two cases before us becomes necessary.

Factual Matrix.

In both the appeals before us (SC Appeal 11/2021 and SC Appeal 30/2021), the loans had been advanced to the Petitioner Companies by their respective creditor banks. In the case of SC Appeal 11/2021, the bank that seeks the aid of the provisions of the Act, No.4 of 1990 for parate execution is DFCC Bank, whereas in SC Appeal 30/2021, the mortgagee banking institution is Sampath Bank PLC. Though only SC Appeal No. 11/2021 was taken up for argument, there was agreement that one judgment will apply to both cases since the questions of law arising on the material facts in each case are identical. Thus, there is commonality on the material facts in the cases. The mortgagee banks seek to sell by parate execution the immovable properties mortgaged to them by the directors of the Petitioner Companies to whom the dispersal of loans took place. Hence the argument on behalf of the Petitioners placed heavy reliance on the majority judgment of Chelliah Ramachandran which entails that the immovable properties mortgaged to the lending institutions by persons other than borrowers constitute third-party mortgages and thus are outside the reach of parate executie powers of the banks.

According to the Petitioners, as the Jayawardane case was wrongly decided, a veil piercing of the corporate borrower in the cases before us cannot take place so as to reach the properties of the directors. So much for the commonality on the material facts.

It must be stated at the outset that as acknowledged by all Counsel across the divide, a revisitation of Chelliah Ramachandran and Jayawardane cases certainly calls for a holistic and harmonious interpretation of the salient provisions of the Recovery of Loans (Special Provisions) Act, No.4 of 1990 to which I will repair, but not before I have looked at the pros and cons of the arguments regarding the aforesaid decisions and how Roman Dutch Law position on parate execution was eroded and repudiated by later legislative changes in this country.

Such a foray into the common law on parate executie which existed before legislative changes in 1990 would become necessary as the all-important provisions of the Act, No.4 of 1990 namely sections 2, 3, 4, 5 and 15 containing expressions such as any property mortgaged, borrower and mortgagor give rise to a decision on their interpretation in view of the rival arguments that have been made before us for such an interpretive process.

The Petitioners have advanced the argument that the above operative sections read together or separately impose restrictions on the banks to sell the property of a third-party mortgagor, whereas the banks have contended that for the purpose of recovery of the unpaid portion of loan facilities given to borrowers, the provisions of the Act, No.4 of 1990 do not distinguish between mortgages given by the actual borrower and a mortgage given by a third-party. If one looks at the operative sections of the Act, No.4 of 1990, one is struck by the profuse use of the word borrower in the sections and it is undeniably one of the reasons that led to the majority judges in Chelliah Ramachandran narrowing the scope of the expression "any property mortgaged" to mean only the property of the actual borrower.

Section 15 (1) - a narrow or broad interpretation?

I must also place in context one of the crucial sections of the Act, No.4 of 1990 namely Section 15, which the banks contended as requiring a broad interpretation. Section 15 (1) of the Act, No.4 of 1990, which refers to a post parate situation after the sale of the mortgaged property has taken place, is as follows:

> If the mortgaged property is sold, the Board shall issue a certificate of sale and thereupon all the right, title, and interest of the borrower to*, and in, the property shall vest in the purchaser; and thereafter it shall not be competent for any person claiming through or under any disposition whatsoever of the right,* title or interest of the borrower to, and in, the property made or registered subsequent to the date of the mortgage of the property to the bank, in any Court to move or invalidate the sale for any cause whatsoever, or to maintain any right title or interest to, or in, the property as against the purchaser.

Whilst Dr. Romesh de Silva, President's Counsel for Hatton National Bank -the 1st intervenient Respondent in SC/Appeal/11/2021 contended that the word borrower in Section 15 (1) must necessarily include a third-party mortgagor and, other learned Counsel for the banks chorused in unison with him for such an interpretation, Mr. Rohan Sahabandu, President's Counsel for the Petitioners invited this Court to accept as correct the interpretation placed by the majority in Chelliah Ramachandran that it is the actual borrower's property that could be sold by auction at a parate execution. The use of the word borrower in sections 7 (1), (2), 8, 9 (a), 13, 14, 15 (1), 16 (3), 16 (4) and 16 (6) connotes uniformity in that it refers only to the actual borrower and cannot embed within it a third-party mortgagor- so argued Mr. Rohan Sahabandu PC. The word borrower must be given its literal meaning and not any extended meaning - so ran the argument of the learned President's Counsel in the case.

Same word, same statute, different meanings?

These contrary arguments also raise the all too important question - should a particular word, when used in a statute, must have the same meaning or given the context in which the legislation was enacted, can it bear a different meaning?

Whilst Mr. Rohan Sahabandu argued that the word borrower in the Act, No.4 of 1990 has one and the same meaning throughout the parate executie statute, Dr. Romesh de Silva invited the attention of the Court to the rule of statutory interpretation which looks back to the mischief that the Act, No.4 of 1990 sought to cure and in light of that curative exercise by the legislature to facilitate easy and speedy recovery of bank loans obviating the clogs and backlogs on recovery in Courts, the sum and substance of the argument for the banks therefore was that the word borrower should be given the extended meaning to include a third-party mortgagor.

Any property mortgaged to the bank

It was the contention of Mr. Sahabandu, PC that the phrase "…. any loan on the mortgage of property…." in section 2 (1) (a) of the Act, No.4 of 1990 must necessarily connote the property of the person to whom the loan is given, because the use of the expression "the right, title or interest of the borrower to, and in, the property shall vest in the purchaser" in section 15 (1) makes it patently clear that it is the property of the actual borrower that could be sold.

A harmonious construction, according to Mr. Sahabandu PC, of the sections in the Act must necessarily lead to this interpretation. On the other hand, Dr. Romesh de Silva, PC argued otherwise. He strenuously contended that a literal construction of the word borrower and its linkage to any property of the actual borrower will result in absurdity and lead to the frustration of the purpose which the Act, No.4 of 1990 sought to achieve and in order to advance the remedy of speedy and effective recovery of non-performing loans, the word borrower must be given an expansive meaning to include a third-party mortgagor. So, the crux of the argument of the learned President's Counsel insisted on a repudiation of the literal rule of construction in respect of the word borrower, which profusely pervades the provisions of the Act, No 4 of 1990.

Thus, the cardinal issue in the case before us boils down to this nitty-gritty. How should the harmonization of the provisions in the Act, No. 4 of 1990 be achieved? Is it by placing a restrictive interpretation on the word borrower as was done in Chelliah Ramachandran or expanding it to include a third-party mortgagor who is another person other than the actual borrower? After all, one of the elementary rules of statutory interpretation is that, when there is a doubt about their meaning, the words of statutes are to be understood in the sense in which they best harmonize with the object of the enactment.

In light of all these arguments it falls to this Court to ascertain the meaning of the relevant words bearing in mind the fact that "some general words are capable of more than one meaning depending on whether the word is interpreted narrowly or broadly"[6]. Let me state at the very outset that whether one interprets a word narrowly or broadly depends on context. I will return to this after having discussed the two rules of statutory interpretation that prominently figured in the submissions of the learned President's Counsel.

Common Law approaches to statutory interpretation.

It cannot be denied that the approach adopted by the Sri Lankan Courts to statutory interpretation is based on the common law approaches to interpreting legislation. The so-called rules of statutory interpretation aim at ascertaining the intention of Parliament because oftentimes the framers do not set forth the precise methodology of how judges could fill the interpretive void. While the ordinary meaning of the word is a matter of fact, its legal meaning is, self-evidently, a matter of law.

When Courts are interpreting legislation, it is necessary to attribute a legal meaning to the words as used in the particular legislation under consideration. In doing so, Courts often profess to be giving effect to the intention of Parliament. As Donaldson J. remarked in Corocraft Ltd v. Pan American Airways Inc [7]

> The duty of the Courts is to ascertain and give effect to the will of Parliament as expressed in its enactments. In the performance of this duty the judges do not act as computers into which are fed the statutes and the rules for the construction of statutes and from whom issue forth the mathematically correct answer. The interpretation of statutes is a craft as much as a science and the judges, as craftsmen, select and apply the appropriate rules as the tools of their trade. They are not legislators, but finishers, refiners and polishers of legislation which comes to them in a state requiring varying degrees of further processing.

Thus, the process of interpretation is not a mechanical one and there will inevitably be uncertainty as to the way in which a Court in any given case will attribute a meaning to the words used in the legislation. In this instance, a definition of the word borrower is not provided in the Act, to which this Court will have had regard, but even where that is the case it will still be necessary for this Court to give a meaning to the words used in the definition.

As I pointed out elsewhere, the words used in legislation may have one or more meanings. If the Court is of the view that the words, in the context of the Act, can have only one meaning, then it will give effect to that meaning and this will become the legal meaning of those words for the purposes of the particular statutory provision in question. This is unless the Court feels that this is clearly contrary to what the Court perceives to be the intention of Parliament in enacting those words. However, it is more likely that, because language is inherently imprecise and equivocal, even words which might be thought to have an obvious meaning can in fact have a number of different meanings. In such circumstances, in order to give a legal meaning to the words, the Court will be obliged to decide which meaning to adopt.

The Court may seek to resolve the ambiguity of meaning in a number of ways. How it is resolved depends to a large extent on, to use the words of Donaldson J above, which "tools of the trade" judges opt to select and apply. It is generally accepted that these "tools" include, inter alia, a number of so-called "rules," although these are not rules in the strict sense, as indicated by Lord Reid, in Maunsell v. Olins [8]

> …….rules of construction…. are not rules in the ordinary sense of having some binding force. They are our servants not our masters. They are aids to construction……. Not infrequently, one "rule" points in one direction, and another in a different direction. In each case they must look at all relevant circumstances and decide as a matter of judgment what weight to attach to any particular "rule."

The "rules" of interpretation.

[8] (1975) A.C. 373, 382.

I hasten to reiterate that, whichever rule(s) may be applied, the basic task will always be to give a meaning to the particular words used in the statute in question. Each rule is simply a means by which that may be achieved. They may be used singly or in combination. I will add further that judges are not bound to follow one (or indeed any) of them and do not have to announce in any way which "rule" they have used. It is perhaps better, then, to think of them as approaches to interpretation or as a framework for discussion, rather than as traditional rules or canons. Let me briefly refer to them and thereafter invoke other aids to construction which I think should be called in in order to resolve the issue before us namely should the word borrower in the Act, No.4 of 1990 bring within its scope the Petitioners who have provided the mortgage securities to the banks in question?

It has to be recalled that whilst Mr. Rohan Sahabandu relied on the literal rule on behalf of the Petitioners, Dr. Romesh de Silva for the intervenient bank advanced the mischief rule as the approach that should help ascertain the meaning of the word borrower and consequently the phrase any property mortgaged to the banks.

Suffice it to set out in brief the bare essentials of the rules that surfaced in the arguments of the learned Counsel before us, though it would appear academic. All such attempts prove to be nothing but the goal of ascribing the suggested meanings to the words borrower and the property mortgaged.

The Literal rule.

The literal rule provides that words must be given their plain, ordinary and literal meaning. The crux of the argument of Mr. Rohan Sahabandu PC was an invocation of the literal rule to the effect that the plain, ordinary and literal meaning of the word borrower would mean no one other than the actual borrower.

The rationale behind the use of the literal rule is that if the words of the statute are clear they must be applied as they represent the intention of Parliament as expressed in the words used. This is so even if the outcome is harsh or undesirable.

This was made clear in the Sussex Peerage Case[9] ; Cutter v. Eagle Star Insurance Co Ltd[10][1997] 1 WLR 1082, CA; Whiteley v. Chappell[11]. For Sri Lankan cases which have alluded to literal rule - see J. A. P. Zebedee Fernando & Co. v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue[12] ; Cinemas Ltd v. Ceylon Theatres Ltd[13]; S. Gunasekera v. A. Ratnavale[14]; Ladamuttu Pillai v. The Attorney-General[15]; Nadarajan Chettiar v. Tennekoon[16]; R. A. De Mel et al. v. Haniffa[17]; The Queen v. Mahatun[18]; Tissera v. Tissera[19]; Babappu v. Don Andris[20] ; Pathumma v. Sinna Lebbe[21]; Hameed v. Anamalay[22]; Kiri Banda v. Booth[23] ; Pieris v. Pieris[24]; The Attorney-General v. Perera[25]; Hamid v. Special Officer [26].

The Golden rule.

The golden rule provides that words must be given their plain, ordinary and literal meaning as far as possible but only to the extent that they do not produce absurdity (narrow approach) or an affront to public policy (wide approach). For Sri Lankan cases which make reference to the golden rule see Sriyani v. Iddamalgoda, Officer in charge, Police Station, Payagala and Others[27]; Forbes & Walker Tea Brokers v. Maligaspe and Others[28] ; Tennekoon v. Somawathie Perera alias Tennekoon[29];

The rationale behind the golden rule is that it mitigates some of the potential harshness arising from use of the literal rule. This was referred to in Grey v. Pearson[36].

The Mischief rule

The mischief rule (or the rule in Heydon's Case[37]) involves an examination of the former law in an attempt to deduce Parliament's intention (‘mischief’ here means 'wrong' or 'harm'). There are four points to consider:

1. What was the common law before the making of the Act?

2. What was the mischief and defect for which the common law did not provide?

3. What was the remedy proposed by Parliament to rectify the situation?

4. What was the true reason for that remedy?

The rule was restated in Jones v. Wrotham Park Settled Estates [38] in terms of three conditions:

1. It must be possible to determine precisely the mischief that the Act was intended to remedy.

2. It must be apparent that Parliament had failed to deal with the mischief.

3. It must be possible to state the additional words that would have been inserted had the omission been drawn to Parliament's attention.

Mischief Rule[39] and Purposive Approach[40]

It is pertinent to point out that the mischief rule that dates back to the 16th century has since given rise to a modern development namely the purposive approach which requires the Court to interpret any statute or part of it in light of the purpose for which it was enacted. Here it behooves the judge to decide what the purpose of the Act was, and then ensure that its provisions are construed in a way which gives effect to that construction.

Lord Griffiths described this approach quite vividly in the leading English case of Pepper v. Hart[41] where the learned Justice stated thus:

> "The days have long passed when the Courts adopted a strict constructionist view of interpretation which required them to adopt the literal meaning of the language. The Courts must adopt a purposive approach which seeks to give effect to the true purpose of legislation."

Thus, it is clear that, in Lord Griffiths' view it is necessary to give effect to the true purpose of legislation. Referring to the purposive approach and its applicability, Professor Crabbe has stressed on the fact that it is important to consider the context of the section that is to be interpreted without limiting it to its ordinary meaning.[42] In Professor Crabbe's words:

> "The Purposive Approach thus takes account not only of the words of the Act according to their ordinary meaning, but also the context. 'Context' here does not mean simply linguistic context; the subject matter, scope, purpose and (to some extent) background of the Act are also taken into consideration....
>
> The language used by Lord Griffiths in Pepper v. Hart is clear and cogent: to give effect to the true purpose of the legislation. He did not say to give effect to the intention of Parliament (emphasis added)."

The Importance of Context

This approach, requiring regard to be had to the context, finds acceptance in other jurisdictions. As noted in the Australian High Court case of CIC Insurance Ltd v. Bankstown Football Club Ltd[43], by Brennan CJ, Dawson, Toohey and Gummow JJ at 408:

> "The modern approach to statutory interpretation (a) insists that the context be considered in the first instance, not merely at some later stage when ambiguity might be thought to arise, and (b) uses "context" in its widest sense".

A throwback at context in its widest sense throws open before a judge a plethora of intrinsic and extrinsic aids to unravel the meanings that have to be attributed to words and these aids emerge from several sources such as pre-parliamentary materials, Reports of Commissions and Hansards or even from other indications of purpose afforded by information relating to legal, social, economic and other aspects of society of which a judge is able to take judicial notice. In consequence, Courts, in considering the legislative purpose as a means of establishing what meaning Parliament intended words to have, have not restricted themselves to a consideration of mischiefs to be remedied but have looked to the general legislative purpose. In looking to general legislative purpose as well as mischiefs, Courts would be adopting a "purposive approach" when determining what meaning Parliament intended the words to have. In this interpretive process, context assumes importance and this bids us to look at the common law (i.e the legal position) before the Act, No.4 of 1990, and the mischief that the statute was intended to remedy.

Let me in those circumstances hark back to a historical excursus - the common law position on parate execution and how impediments that contributed to long and protracted proceedings in recovering back non-performing loans were sought to be overcome by a gradual attenuation of parate laws finally resulting in the Act, No.4 of 1990.

The Common Law on Parate Execution prior to 1990.

Immovables can be mortgaged under Roman-Dutch law, but the mortgagee does not obtain a right of ownership, only the right to recover payment of the debt secured by the mortgage through legal action.[44] Extra-judicial sale - known as parate execution - was forbidden in Roman-Dutch law. After 1871 it was possible to mortgage movables in Sri Lanka in only two ways - by delivery (pledge) or by registered bill of sale (which, however, did not validate the mortgage or give priority to the registrant).[45] As with the mortgage of immovables, the mortgagee of movables does not have a right of sale under Roman-Dutch law but has to obtain a judgment of the Court upon the mortgage-debt and then take out a writ of execution against the property. Walter Pereira, K.C states the matter of parate execution authoritatively in relation to both movables and immovables:[46]

> The effect of a mortgage is not that the creditor may retain the mortgaged property for himself or sell it on his own authority. It may not even stipulate by contract for the right of forfeiture of the ownership in default of payment, but he must after obtaining judgment allow the sale to take place according to legal process, and thus recover what is due to himself [Grot. 2.48.41). The position is stated by Van der Linden thus -where the debt secured by pledge or mortgage becomes due, the creditor is not at liberty to sell the pledge or thing mortgaged without a decree of the Court or a judgment to this effect…{V.d.L.1.12.5[47]}

However, in Roman law a first mortgagee ultimately acquired a power of sale which could not be excluded by express agreement.[48] Moreover, the tendency of judicial decisions in South Africa has been able to recognize the validity of an agreement for the extra-judicial sale of movables. In Osry v. Hirsch, Loubser & Co. Ltd[49] an agreement for the sale of movables by means of parate execution was held to be valid. It was a case of pledge. The Court also held that it was open to the debtor in such a case to seek the protection of the Court if he could show that, in carrying out the agreement and effecting the sale, the creditor had acted in a manner which prejudiced his rights. The case has been followed in other South African cases.[50]

The result of these decisions is that parate execution whereby a mortgagee can sell the security without the prior intervention of a Court is looked upon with disfavour by the Roman-Dutch law of Sri Lanka. Professor Robert Warden (R.W) Lee in his locus classicus An Introduction to Roman-Dutch Law cites the case of Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank v. Krishnapillai[51] to drive home the position that "parate executie is not allowed by the law of Ceylon"[52].

In that case, a businessman had pledged his shares in a Company as security for an overdraft. As was customary he had also given the bank a blank transfer of the shares together with a written authorization for the bank, if required, to sell the shares. Subsequently, the borrower became bankrupt without settling the overdraft and the bank moved to sell the shares (given as security) without a Court order.

The Supreme Court held that the bank was not entitled to do so. The Court took the view that the law relating to property (shares) and the mortgage of property was governed in Sri Lanka by its common law, namely, the Roman-Dutch law and not by English law. Although English law applied to "banks and banking", the loaning of money was "not an ordinary business of banking" and therefore merely because the mortgagee-creditor in this case was a bank, it did not automatically mean that Roman-Dutch law was displaced by English law. Under Roman-Dutch law, a creditor could not sell any security pledged to it without permission of a Court of law and if the bank in this case wished to sell the shares it must get the Court's approval. According to the judgment, the right of a pledgee to sell his security without recourse to a Court of law was a matter of Roman-Dutch law. Further Mitchell v. Fernando[53] held that the Roman-Dutch law of mortgage applied to a mortgage of shares in a company. This was despite the fact that (i) the Civil Law Ordinance required that matters relating to joint stock companies be decided according to English, not Roman-Dutch, law; and (ii) shares were things unknown to the Roman-Dutch law. The Court categorized the issue as one of mortgage, not one with respect to joint stock companies, and applied the Roman-Dutch law.

By the time the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank case was decided, the South African Roman-Dutch law had moved to a legal position where parate execution would only be available in the case of movables and, on one reading of the authorities, only in the case of pledge.[54] The above decision in the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation case rang alarm bells to the banking community at that time. The Sub-Committee on Commercial Legislation in Sri Lanka (Sessional Paper No.10 of 1939 paragraph 18) referred to this case and recommended legislation to protect banks from this Roman-Dutch law rule. Accordingly, the Mortgage Act was amended in 1949 whereby 'approved credit agencies' were permitted by statute to realize movable property (for example, shares, life insurance policies and book debts) without getting a Court order.[55]

Legal Changes in 1990.

It is pertinent to observe at this stage that from 1990 onward licensed commercial banks in Sri Lanka were vested with parate powers over both immovable and movable securities as the special legislation, the Act No. 4 of 1990 that enables them to recover such securities speedily and without litigation was enacted. Along with it was enacted a slew of statutes among which the Debt Recovery (Special Provisions) Act, No.2 of 1990 is also pivotal in debt recovery. The two statutes, Act No.2 of 1990 and Act No.4 of 1990 which are categorized as special debt recovery legislation were the end products of a report issued in 1985 by a Debt Recovery Committee (DRC)[56], chaired by Justice D. Wimalaratne. The legislation was not enacted until 1990 because of very strong opposition from the Sri Lanka Bar Association which argued that the proposed legislation was "discriminatory, draconian in their nature and harsh and superfluous". All opposition notwithstanding, both statutes became law in 1990.[57]

On the other hand it must be mentioned that the Mortgage Act[58] "continues to give full effect to the conception of a mortgage as understood in Roman-Dutch law".[59] Thus, the Mortgage Act assumes that parate execution is not possible in the case of a mortgage of land, and so provides in detail for how hypothecary actions are to be conducted and their effect.[60] As I said before, the Act does permit an approved credit agency, which is a mortgagee of shares, debentures, stock, life insurance policies and corporeal movables deposited with the agency, to realize them without resort to the Courts.[61] A mortgagor can sue for any loss or damage suffered as a result of an agency not duly exercising its powers or not following the correct procedures.[62] Section 85, which deals with corporeal movables, requires that the corporeal movable be "actually in the possession and custody of the agency".

How the Roman-Dutch law against parate execution was departed from.

Generally, as we have seen, the law in Sri Lanka had set itself against parate execution until the Roman-Dutch Law rule against parate execution was mitigated by the Mortgage (Amendment) Act in 1949 and the enactment of the Act No.4 of 1990. Over the years, however, a number of state or state related institutions have been given the right of parate execution by specific enactments. Until the introduction of the debt recovery package in 1990, the right of parate execution (i.e. the right of a creditor to sell the mortgaged property without recourse to Court) had been restricted to the two state commercial banks, i.e., the Bank of Ceylon and the People's Bank, and the other state lending institutions such as the State Mortgage and Investment Bank, the National Development Bank, the National Savings Bank and also the Development Finance Corporation of Ceylon. However, with the enactment of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act No. 4 of 1990, all licensed commercial banks were given the power of parate execution.

The Bank of Ceylon Ordinance as amended.

The power in the Bank of Ceylon Ordinance is illustrative. The bank is empowered to grant loans, advances or other accommodation on the security of a mortgage of any movable or immovable property. When default occurs, the board of directors of the bank may authorize a person to take possession of any immovable property or seize any movable property mortgaged to the bank and to manage and maintain such property as might have been done by the mortgagor if he had not made default.[63] Moreover, S. 19 provides that the Board of Directors may resolve to authorize a specified person to sell by public auction any movable or immovable property mortgaged to the bank as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made in order to recover the whole of the unpaid portion of such loan, and the interest due up to the date of the sale, together with the monies and costs recoverable under S. 18. If the mortgaged property is sold, all right, title and interest of the borrower vests in the purchaser.[64]

I am making this allusion to the Bank of Ceylon Ordinance as its aforementioned provisions are identically mirrored in the Act, No.4 of 1990.

Before I move on to the 1990 constitutional challenge to the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Bill in the Supreme Court, this account of the historical survey leading up to the 1990 legal changes, will not be complete without recalling some other Committees that followed the Debt Recovery Committee (DRC) headed by Justice D. Wimalaratne. All this exercise, I repeat, is for the purpose of situating the Act, No 4. of 1990 in its context, because as I pointed out before, the context of the text in its widest sense becomes imperative in the interpretation of the words in the aforesaid parate legislation.[65]

Between 1986 - 1990 the government appointed the following other Committees to consider the recommendations of the DRC namely,

(a) A Committee of officials of the Central Bank and legal officers of the state banks.

(b) A Committee of officials of the Ministry of Justice and Ministry of Finance.

(c) A Committee of officials of the Ministries of Justice and Finance, the Bar Association and the Sri Lanka Banks' Association.

The World Bank and the Asian Development Bank also submitted their views supporting the recommendations of the Debt Recovery Committee. At their request Mr. Ross Cranston the then Professor of Banking Law of the University of London who later ended up as a Solicitor General of England and an MP also reviewed the DRC recommendations and substantially agreed with them. Finally, in early 1990, despite the continued objections of the Sri Lanka Bar Association, the recommendations of the Debt Recovery Committee (subject to some minor amendments) were accepted and enacted as one package in the following legislation.

It is not irrelevant to point out that the so-called disfavour that Roman-Dutch law showed parate execution of immovables was fast sliding into oblivion and the Supreme Court put a nail into the coffin when it proceeded to endorse the constitutional validity of debt recovery legislation package.[66]

S.C. Special Determination No 3/90.

In the hearing into the validity of the Bill which finally became Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No.4 of 1990, it was strenuously argued by H.W. Jayewardene Q.C on behalf of the Bar Association that an exercise of parate powers on the part of Board of Directors of a bank amounted to a dilution of judicial power and a transfer of a part thereof to a non-judicial body of individuals. But the Court pointed out that if there was such a dilution, it had already taken place so many years ago when State Institutions had been bestowed with powers of parate execution in several statutes.

The Court pointed out that the Bank of Ceylon Ordinance No. 53 of 1938, as amended by Act No.10 of 1974, Peoples Bank (Amendment) Act No. 32 of 1986, National Savings Bank Act No.30 of 1971 and a host of other statutes have conferred parate powers on their respective Boards of Directors and in the end the determination concluded that there was no dilution or interference with judicial power. The Court observed as follows-

> "Had there been provision in the bills, the necessary effect of which was to exclude recourse to the Courts, notwithstanding the history of parate execution,

> both legislative and as constrained in judicial decisions, we would have entertained no doubt as to whether the Bills were inconsistent with Article 4(c) so as to be deemed to have been determined to be inconsistent with that Article, in terms of Article 123(3), in which event they could only have been passed by the special majority required under para (2) of Article 84.

The Supreme Court further determined-

> "We hold that the Bills, properly interpreted, do not exclude the right of recourse to the Courts, and there is therefore no ousting of or interference with judicial power."

Thus, the tenor of this passage is to the effect that conferment of parate execution powers on a bank is not a dilution of judicial power, in infringement of Article 4 (c) of the Constitution. That the bank does not exercise judicial power is put beyond doubt by the next pronouncement in the determination.

> "In 72 NLR 25, a provision that every person concerned in exporting goods (contrary to restriction) shall, at the election of the Collector of Customs, forfeit either treble the value of the goods or a penalty of Rs. 1,000/- was held not to be an adjudication, and the only determination having the legal effect of an adjudication was that which a Court would later make, in an action brought by the collector for recovery. Even certiorari was refused, for the reason (as stated by the Privy Council in 73 NLR 289 affirming that decision) that this was a preliminary decision which did not bind the party. In the present case, the bank's action affects rights (although not binding) and certiorari lies."

Though the two well-known tests, Holmes test and the historical test of Roscoe Pound were urged before the Supreme Court for the proposition that banks sought to be vested with parate execution powers could be in effect exercising judicial power, this contention did not weigh in with the final determination of Court. In fact, the determination of the Supreme Court on this issue comports with the definition of judicial power articulated by Griffith CJ in the Australian case of Huddart Parker v. Moorehead:[67]

> "The words "judicial power" as used in S.71 of the Constitution mean the power which every sovereign authority must of necessity have to decide controversies between its subjects, or between itself and its subjects, whether the rights relate to life, liberty or property. The exercise of this power does not begin until some tribunal which has power to give a binding and authoritative decision (whether subject to appeal or not) is called upon to take action."[68]

Three elements are present in the definition of judicial power given by Griffith CJ; (i) a controversy; (ii) the controversy is about rights; (iii) a binding and authoritative determination. The SC determination 03/90 speaks of a non-binding decision by banks which is susceptible to judicial review and the learned Deputy Solicitor General who assisted Court at the time of hearing had argued that there could be interposition of Courts in case of a board resolution. No doubt banks conferred with parate powers take action on the basis of a unilateral decision that there has been a default but the banks concerned do not conclusively determine legal rights and liabilities. According to the SC determination, the decision of the board of directors is not made final or conclusive and there is no attempt to exclude recourse to Courts.

Whilst the determination of H.A.G. de Silva J, G.R.T.D. Bandaranayake J, M.D.H. Fernando J, R.N.M. Dheeraratne J, and S.B. Goonewardena J, concluded in the pre-enactment review to the effect that parate executie does not allow the creditor to be the judge in his own cause, Sarath N. Silva CJ (with Jayasinghe J, Udalagama J, and Dissanayake J agreeing) chose to hold in the later Chelliah Ramachandran case that the provisions in the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act No. 4 of 1990 contravene the basic safeguards of natural justice "nemo judex in causa sua".[69] It is problematic that the very argument of "nemo judex in causa sua" that was disposed of by a 5 bench Special Determination in 1990 should again be revisited by a numerically lower composition of judges in Chelliah Ramachandran case.

Having regard to the fact that the Supreme Court held in the Special Determination No.3 of 90 that none of the provisions of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Bill was inconsistent with the Constitution or any provisions thereof, His Lordship S.N. Silva CJ, was quick to point out in the Chelliah Ramachandran case "Be that as it may, under our Constitution the law is valid and we could only interpret its provisions." Thus, the majority of judges in the Chelliah Ramachandran case must be taken to have been mindful that the pre-enactment determination of five judges in SC Determination No 3/90 was binding on the question of whether there was in esse an exercise of judicial power or erosion thereof as Article 80(3) of the Constitution effectively prohibits post-enactment review in its peremptory declaration. As such the invocation of erosion of judicial power argument has no place in the overall consideration of the question whether the extrajudicial sale of properties mortgaged by third-parties could amount to an interference with judicial power.

It is worth recalling what the Supreme Court said in upholding, in the main, the constitutionality of one of a number of bills introduced to facilitate debt recovery:[70]

> Expeditious debt recovery is, in the long term, beneficial to borrowers in general for at least two reasons. Firstly, expeditious repayment or recovery of debts enhances the ability of lending institutions to lend to other borrowers. Secondly, the Law's delays in respect of debt recovery, howsoever and by whomsoever caused, tend to make lending institutions much more cautious and slower in lending; by refusing some applications, by requiring higher security from some borrowers, and by insisting on more stringent terms as to interest from other borrowers. Expeditious debt recovery will thus tend to make credit available more readily and on easier terms, and will maximise the flow of money into the economy. Undoubtedly, there is a > legitimate national interest in expediting the recovery of debts by lending institutions engaged in the business of providing credit, and thereby stimulating the national economy and national development.

The aim of the legislation, as the Supreme Court noted, is to facilitate economic development, although it is fair to add that lenders both from within and outside the country had been pressing for legal changes for some time.

This is what the Debt Recovery Committee (DRC) had also recommended as far back as 1985 to the effect that parate execution in relation to corporeal movables be extended to other institutions.[71]

Despite opposition from the Bar Association[72] and the Central Bank committee[73], the Debt Recovery Committee (DRC) adhered to its views in a supplementary report, "because movables in the custody of a borrower, secured by a mortgage, provides in the main the basic security for working capital of a trade or business. The right of parate execution in this instance will contribute to easy and enlarged availability, and reduced cost, of credit against such security."[74] It was the strong objections by the Bar Association to the suggested changes that put on hold the implementation of Justice Wimalaratne Committee recommendations of 1985.

The struggle for parate execution of immovables was a long time coming even before 1985. A recall of this long history is illustrative of how law can be thought to lag behind what is thought to be economically desirable. In 1934, the Ceylon Banking Commission reported its recommendations.[75] It had been established to report on existing conditions of banking and credit, and to consider feasible steps in respect of the provision of banking and credit facilities for agriculture, industry and trade. In the course of its Report, it made several suggestions as to reform of the law to increase the availability of credit by removing what were perceived to be legal handicaps.[76]..

> Banks and commercial bodies have emphatically complained to us that the commercial laws of Ceylon do not help the creditor ... [The banks) rightly urged that, if the law helped the debtors against the legitimate rights of the creditor, no one should blame the latter if he became too cautious. We come to the conclusion that the legal machinery of the Island is very defective from the point of view of credit and lending, and that it should be overhauled if banking is to do its legitimate business.

Specifically, the Banking Commission recommended changes in the law of security. The Commission suggested that the law relating to the mortgage of immovable property should be made to conform to Indian law.[77] Consequently, a mortgagee would in some cases have been able to realize his security by sale, enter into possession or appoint a receiver, all without recourse to a Court.[78] Generally, in relation to the mortgage of movables, it recommended a simpler scheme, together "with power to the lender to sell off the security in the event of the borrower failing to repay, after giving him due notice.''[79] Significantly, the Commission concluded its discussion of legal reforms by identifying the unsuitability of the Roman-Dutch law to modern commercial and credit activities. "This is the main reason why the mercantile legislation in Ceylon is in its infancy and out of date …… Modernization of the legal system of Ceylon is a necessity for the smooth running of its commercial and banking machineries."[80] The recommendations of the Banking Commission were endorsed in part by the Sub-Committee on Commercial Legislation.[81]

Thus, the Banking Commission and the Sub-Committee on Commercial Legislation were trend setting and despite the correctional course that the Banking Commission and the Sub Committee on Commercial Legislation suggested, there were snags and snarls on the way.

It is fair to interpose here once again that I am indulging in this survey of the long history of suggested reforms as they provide the context in the widest sense for the final interpretation of the words borrower and any property mortgaged in the Act, No.4 of 1990. I entertain little doubt that having regard to the progressive rejection in this country of the so called dislike shown by Roman-Dutch law towards parate execution, there has to be a liberal interpretation of the word borrower in the Act, No.4 of 1990 and not a stultification of its purpose and history by strict, literal interpretations of statutes. I will expand on this presently but not before alluding to a restrictive view that the Mortgage Commission took of parate execution.

Mortgage Commission rejecting parate execution

The Banking Commission had recommended that the defects in the law which it had identified should be examined in depth by a special Commission. This was the origin of the Mortgage Commission, appointed in November 1943. The Second Interim Report of the Commission[82] led to the Mortgage Act. In essence the Report and the Act rejected the approach of the Banking Commission: Instead, both cling to the Roman-Dutch principles of mortgage. The Report begins by rejecting the recommendations of the Banking Commission in relation to the mortgage of land. The reasons given can be gathered under four broad heads:

It would be a "perilous adventure" to superimpose one part of a foreign system of law (i.e., the English law of mortgage) upon the different system of land law in Sri Lanka; the evidence about delay in enforcing mortgages, and its adverse effects on the confidence of investors, was thin; the English rule, that a mortgagee should be able to sell the property on default without intervention of the Court, would lead to breaches of the peace:[83] and there was a need to protect borrowers. None of these reasons is overwhelmingly persuasive, except possibly the last Although it hardly featured in the Report, the nature of lending in Sri Lanka, and its consequences, in the first part of the 20th century had burnt itself into the collective consciousness of many and clearly influenced the Commission. The story, in brief, is that in colonial times the British banks would not lend to Sri Lankans, except the very wealthy or very influential. To borrow money, Sri Lankan businessmen and agriculturalists had to turn to foreign money-lenders - Afghans and the South Indian Nattukottai Chettiars. This meant that in the economic Crossette Thambyah as the other Commissioner (later Solicitor- General); and H. N. G. Fernando as secretary (later Chief Justice). The Commission was to report generally on the law of mortgage; to make recommendations for law reform "with a view to removing defects and supplying deficiencies in the laws which limit the availability in Ceylon of adequate facilities for agricultural, industrial and commercial purposes"; and, significantly, to report on the nature of protection for "the ancestral and other lands of agriculturalists, and to preserve a sufficient portion thereof for the maintenance of themselves and their families."

depression of the 1930s, many Sri Lankan landowners were thus in the hands of foreign money-lenders to whom they had mortgaged their lands.[84]

> The world-wide depression hit Ceylon as well . . . The banks having suspended all credit to the Chettiars after [abuses and collapses in the nineteen twenties] further tightened their lending policies. The Chettiars on their part, unable to obtain facilities from the banks, demanded the repayment of their loans from their Ceylonese borrowers. When they found that the Ceylonese were unable to pay, the Chettiars put their promissory notes in suit and foreclosed on their mortgages. The period between 1930- 1936 saw a spate of litigation initiated by the Chettiars against their Ceylonese borrowers who had defaulted in payment. One has only to scan the pages of the Ceylon Law Reports of that period to see the number of law- suits filed by the Chettiars against their debtors. Many a Ceylonese landowner lent his property to the Chettiars and many a Ceylonese debtor ended up in the Insolvency Court at the instance of his Chettiar creditor.[85]

The Land Redemption Ordinance[86] resulted from the political pressure exerted by dispossessed landowners. It was to enable the Government to acquire land sold during the depression to pay off debts. The land was then to be restored to its original owners on the payment of its value in installments. For our purposes, however, the most important result was that, as previously mentioned, the Mortgage Act 1949 did not change fundamentally the Roman-Dutch law on parate execution.

It was so many years thereafter, as I pointed out earlier, that the DRC headed by Justice D. Wimalaratne recommended in 1985 that what was hitherto enjoyed by approved credit agencies in relation to movables must be extended to other institutions.[87] I have already traced the trajectory of the DRC recommendations to its final culmination in the 1990 Debt Recovery Legislation package. Though there was opposition, by the late 1980s, the view that the law of credit and security needed reform was shared widely by Government officials, bankers and also by some members of the legal fraternity.[88] In fact it was in December 1989 that the reform proposals carried the day when the Sri Lankan cabinet approved a series of bills to be introduced to the Parliament. In announcing the legislation, the Ministry of Finance noted that the present laws were "outdated and not in line with legislation governing bank loans in force in other progressive countries.[89]

Fourteen Bills were enacted by the Sri Lankan Parliament in early 1990. The Prime Minister noted the economic rationale behind the legislation.

> The banks state that the long delays and the high cost of recovery of bank debts are one of the causes for the high interest rates which are being charged by banks from borrowers. It is very desirable that interest rates should be reduced to the lowest possible level in order to encourage investment and development in the country[90].

So in a nutshell whilst the Banking Commission (1934), Debt Recovery Committee (1985) and the Sub Committee on Commercial Legislation all recommended parate powers to banking institutions, the Mortgage Commission (1943) and the Mortgage Act (1949) was disinclined to countenance parate execution. But the enactment of the Recovery of Loans (Special Provisions) Act, No.4 of 1990 brought about the displacement of Roman-Dutch law on parate execution. It heralded a paradigmatic shift in the law of credit and security of this country. With the introduction of the Recovery of Loans (Special Provisions) Act, No.4 of 1990 parate executie powers were extended to other licensed commercial banks (LCBs) within the meaning of the Banking Act, No. 30 of 1988 and the banks established for special purposes under an Act of Parliament such as National Savings Bank (NSB), Development of Finance Corporation of Ceylon (DFCC) and Housing Development and Finance Corporation (HDFC).

Divergent Views on parate execution between 1990 and 2003

What followed the legislative reforms in 1990 is worth recounting. The prodigious litigation that was brought about due to extra judicial sales by banks after the enactment of the Act, No. 4 of 1990 surfaced to the fore the issue of third-party mortgages. It was not infrequent that the mortgagee banks proceeded to pass resolutions to sell by auction properties mortgaged to them by third-parties who were not the actual borrowers of the non-performing loans. It became par for the course that whilst some of such auction sales passed muster, others did not qualify under the Act on the ground that it was only the property of the actual borrower that could be auctioned.[91]

As could be seen, the majority of the differing views came from the original Courts and it has to be noted that the Commercial High Court refused to accept the plaintiff's argument in Jewarlarts Garments Ltd and Another v. The Hatton National Bank[92] that the bank had no right to auction the property of a third-party. The same Court articulated a similar view in Nalin Enterprises Private Limited v. Sampath Bank.[93] In this case the Plaintiff-the corporate borrower argued that the Act No.4 of 1990 envisaged that the property mortgaged should necessarily be the property belonging to the borrower. Therefore, the defendant bank is not entitled to resolve to sell the property of the 2nd Plaintiff (the third-party mortgagor who was a director of the company) in terms of the Act, No.4 of 1990. The Commercial High Court Judge Mr. Wimalachandra HCJ (as he then was) refused to accept the argument of the corporate borrower Nalin Enterprises Pvt. Ltd. and decided that the word borrower must be interpreted so as to include a third-party mortgagor.

[92] CHC (Civil) 77/2000/1 Order dated 26th April 2001. The Commercial High Court held that since section 4 of the Act No. 4 of 1990 does not differentiate mortgages of a third-party from a mortgage by an actual borrower, there is no prohibition to adopt a resolution to auction the property of a third-party. But there is no attempt in the judgment as to how the sections in the Act could be harmonized.

[93] CHC (Civil) 1999/2000/1 Order 27th April 2001.

Even Gamini Amaratunga J in Bank of Ceylon v. Yasapala Arambegedera and Others[94] took the view that third-party mortgages remain liable for recovery of unpaid loans through parate execution.

In this tangle of decisions proliferating in the wilderness of single instances, as Tennyson called them in his Aylmer's Field, the law was left in a state of ambiguity and uncertainty.

The 2003 Amendment Bill to the Act, No.4 of 1990 was an attempt to clear all snags in interpretation but it failed to pass muster in its constitutional validity. But the manifestation of Parliamentary intention in the 2003 Amendment Bill to permit parate execution of third-party mortgages cannot be lost sight of.

2003 Amendment Bill

It was in the context of all ambiguity surrounding the position of third-party mortgages that the Parliament attempted to put at rest the controversy by coming forth in 2003 with an amending Bill entitled Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) (Amendment) to amend the parent Act, No.4 of 1990.

The objective of the Amendment was basically as follows:

(i) To prevent the borrower, mortgagor or any claimant from making an application to Court to invalidate a resolution of the Bank's Board authorizing the sale of the property. This clause will also enable banks to exercise parate execution rights in respect of syndicated loans.

(ii) To identify the borrower more clearly in order to avoid any doubt.

(iii) To extend the scope given to banks to exercise the right of parate execution in respect of a mortgage of property, to include a third-party mortgage.

(iv) To enable all "licensed specialized banks" and finance companies supervised by the Central Bank to exercise "parate execution" similar to licensed commercial banks.

SC Determination (SD) No. 22/2003[95]

The constitutionality of the Amendment Bill to Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act was considered by Sarath N. Silva CJ, P.Edussuriya J, Hector Yapa J, J.A.N.de.Silva J and T.B.Weerasuriya J, on 26.08.2003 and the Court determined that the Bill could only be passed by the special majority required under the provisions of Article 84 (2) of the Constitution. It has to be noted that it was almost three years later when the Supreme Court next considered the question of parate execution of third-party mortgages in Chelliah Ramachandran case. One can certainly find the echoes of reasoning in the 2003 determination resonating in the Chelliah Ramachandran decision. In S.C (SD) No. 22/2003 which considered the constitutionality of the Amendment Bill, the argument premised on the Rule of Law was once again raised and the Court held that it would be inconsistent with the Rule of Law and the requirements of our constitution as to administration of justice to invest in any person the power to decide in respect of his rights as against another, and further to empower that person who so decides to enforce his unilateral decision by the sale of property of such other person. It has to be observed that this very argument had been rejected outright by the previous S.C Determination 03 of 1990 and if it was not against the Rule of Law to vest in the board of directors a power to exercise parate execution in respect of direct mortgages, one fails to understand why it would be against the Rule of Law to invest the self-same board of directors with identical powers in respect of third-party mortgages.

[95] Kusumin Kirthy Kumari v The Attorney General - Decisions of the Supreme Court on Parliamentary Bills (1991-2003) Volume VII 425.

Another reason that the 2003 determination gives for declaring the bill inconsistent with the Constitution is that the Roman-Dutch law being our common law, has looked upon the process of parate execution with extreme disfavor. In fact, this reasoning pervades the spirit of the majority judgment in Chelliah Ramachandran of 15 April 2005.

The long peddling of this so-called opprobrium of Roman-Dutch law for parate execution ad nauseum all the way through 2003 to 2005 reduces it to absurdity-reductio ad absurdum, as there has been a gradual attenuation or whittling down of the Roman-Dutch law rule on mortgage of immovables but this inarticulate major premise of glaring repudiation of the Roman-Dutch law position reduces the effect of the 2003 Statutory Determination and the Chelliah Ramachandran decision that followed it.

As we saw in its historical conspectus, there was a statutory departure from Roman-Dutch law in 1990 and our legislature had moved away from the common law position many moons ago when it enacted an ubiquity of statutes vesting parate powers with several state institutions. Therefore, the precedential value of the Chelliah Ramachandran case is greatly reduced in light of the fact it uses the same argument that had been rejected in Special Determination 03 of 1990 to bolster its own articulation. In the process both the 2003 determination and the Chelliah Ramachandran decision of 2005 which builds on it blissfully ignore the effect of statutory departures from the Roman-Dutch position. This would in turn reduce the soundness and logic of their ratios.

Undoubtedly our common law roots are Roman-Dutch, and splendid they are. But continuous development has come through adaptation to modern conditions, through case law, through statutes, and through the adoption of certain principles and features of English law such as the law on Banks and Banking. The original sources of Roman-Dutch Law are important, but extensive preoccupation with them is like trying to return an oak tree to its acorn. It is looking ever backwards. One is reminded of the biblical episode of Lot's wife. Lot's wife looked back and turned into a pillar of salt. Our national jurisprudence must move forward, casting away its swaddling clothes.

Parate execution has come to stay in this country and the question is whether there has to be a distinction between mortgages provided by actual borrowers and those by third-party mortgagors.

A fact that the 2003 Amendment Bill brings out, though it did not enter the statute book, is worthy of recognition for purposes of statutory interpretation. The fact that the 2003 Amendment Bill sought to declare parate execution of third-party mortgages legal and valid unmistakably manifests the intention of Parliament that its inelegant drafting in 1990 that resulted in the word borrower being read literally was not its intended purpose. The fact that the Parliament always had both actual borrowers and third-party mortgagors in one class was as clear as clear can be, when it sought to clarify its intention in the Amendment Bill of 2003. The Parliament was seeking to unravel the ambiguity and it clearly spoke its mind in the Amendment Bill but the Amendment proved abortive in the end as a result of a declaration of constitutional invalidity.

Having pinpointed that the weight of the 2003 determination rests on slender threads, let me examine whether the 2005 Chelliah Ramachandran case can hold water on its own merit.

Chelliah Ramachandran Case[96]

Factual Template.

The Supreme Court heard two amalgamated appeals which raised identical issues. The appellants Chelliah Ramachandran and Manohary Ramachandran (husband and wife) had executed a mortgage of their immoveable property at 49, Collingwood Place, Colombo in favour of Hatton National Bank (HNB) at the request of the 4th

[96] See Footnote 1 supra

Respondent to the appeal, one Nadarajah Ganarajah. The reason for such an execution of the mortgage was a prior transaction in which the said Nadarajah Ganarajah had advanced money to Chelliah Ramachandran. Though the loan from HNB was for Nadarajah Ganarajah, the mortgage bond which secured the loan was from the husband and wife who had covenanted along with the debtor Ganarajah to repay the loan on demand and thus there was a joint and several obligation owed to the bank in the mortgage bond. When the repayment of the loan was in default, the bank noticed both the husband and wife- Chelliah Ramachandran and Manohary Ramachandran. In his response to the bank, Chelliah Ramachandran admitted that he had been paying the monthly dues regularly to the bank though Nadarajah Ganarajah defaulted.

The appellants sought writs of certiorari from the Court of Appeal to quash the resolutions of the Respondent Bank, HNB to sell by parate execution the property of the appellants (the third-parties) which was mortgaged to secure the loans as securities. The Court of Appeal refused interim relief sought by the appellants. It is in this backdrop that the all-important question of law surfaced in the Supreme Court-namely Can Hatton National Bank Ltd proceed to sell by parate execution the immovable property of a mortgagor who had not himself borrowed money from the bank?

Whilst the majority of 4 judges gave a restrictive interpretation of the term borrower and declared invalid parate execution of third-party mortgages, the minority judgement adopted a liberal and broad interpretation of the word borrower to encompass within it a third-party mortgagor as well. Both judgements teem with their own reasoning the pros and cons of which could now be assayed.

Majority Judgment

It is important to distill the legal reasoning on which the majority in the Supreme Court arrived at its decision. S.N. Silva CJ in Chelliah Ramachandran sought to identify the category of persons against whom parate execution was intended to be made available by the Act as follows at page 404 of his judgment: -

> "The submissions of Counsel for the Petitioner [in Ramachandran's case], is that the class of persons is clearly identified in the provisions of the Act commencing from Section 2 itself. Section 2(1)(a) requires 'every person to whom any loan is granted by a Bank on the mortgage of property' to register with the Bank the address to which a notice to him may be sent. I am inclined to agree with this submission since a Resolution of the Board to sell by Public Auction, as empowered by Section 4, has to be dispatched to this address in terms of Section 8. Similarly, the notice of sale in terms of Section 9 should be dispatched to that address.
> There is a clear link in the provisions between the taking of a loan and the mortgage. The law will apply where a mortgage is given by the person to whom the loan is granted. In Sections 7, 14, 15, 16 and 17 this person is identified as the 'borrower'. The borrower is none other than the person to whom a loan is granted and who is required in terms of Section 2 to register his address with the Bank. In terms of Section 14 where the mortgaged property is sold and an amount in excess of what is due to the Bank is recovered, such amount has to be paid by the Bank to the borrower. This clearly established that it is only the property mortgaged by a borrower that could be sold by a Bank to recover a loan granted to him. If the provisions are extended by a process of interpretation to cover a mortgage given by a guarantor, Section 14 will bring about a preposterous result in which the guarantor's property is sold and the excess recovered is paid by the Bank to the borrower. It is when confronted with their unanswerable contention that the Counsel for the Banks submitted that the term borrower should be interpreted to include any debtor and that where a loan is in default the guarantor would be a debtor. The words 'borrower', 'guarantor' and 'debtor' have specific significance attaching to them in legal proceedings. These distinctions cannot be removed and the application of the special provisions law extended to encompass guarantors in view of the serious implications of its provisions as revealed in the preceding analysis." (Emphasis added).

Comments on the Majority Judgment

One can see that the majority judgment in Chelliah Ramachandran is dismissive of the argument that where a loan is in default the guarantor would be a debtor. The majority in Chelliah Ramachandran also states that the words "borrower", "guarantor" and "debtor" have specific meanings implying that they are distinct and separate and these distinctions can never be removed. It would appear that the legal position is to the contrary. Let me first set forth the argument based on joint and several liability of security providers along with principal borrowers, which the majority view in Chelliah Ramachandran case made short shrift of.

Joint and Several Liability of Principal Borrowers and Mortgagors

As in Chelliah Ramchandran, the mortgage bonds in the two cases before us impose joint and several liabilities on the directors for the borrowing of the respective Companies. In other words, both the principal debtors-the Companies in question and Director mortgagors have undertaken joint and several liability for the loans.

Black's Law Dictionary defines a joint and several bond as a bond in which the principal and interest are guaranteed by two or more obligors.[97] In a joint and several mortgage bond, two or more persons declare themselves jointly and severally liable for the debt of the principal borrower. A guarantor or a mortgagor, who has mortgaged his property to secure the repayment of the loan, stands on the same footing as a borrower. In such a situation the mortgagor has accepted the same liability as the borrower and when the default occurs, the mortgagor stands on the same footing as the borrower vis a vis the obligee (the bank).

[97] 11th Edition edited by Bryan Garner at pp 222; 1002.

When one examines the mortgage bond bearing No 6291 in SC/Appeal/11/2021, the phraseology is symptomatic of the joint and several covenant undertaken by both the Company (Sunpac Engineers Pvt Ltd) and the mortgagor, Ranath Jayaweera alias Sanath Jayaweera. The joint and several liability of the company and the mortgagor is expressed in no uncertain terms in the following tenor.

> NOW KNOW YE AND THESE PRESENTS WITNESS that the Company and the Mortgagor do hereby covenant and agree with and bind and oblige themselves jointly and severally to the Bank that the Company and/or the Mortgagor shall and will on demand well and truly pay or cause to be paid at Colombo aforesaid to the Bank in lawful currency of Sri Lanka…

This shows that the mortgagor Ranath Jayaweera incurs the same obligations as Sunpac Engineers (Pvt Ltd)-the principal borrower. Clause 10 of the mortgage bond makes it patently clear about the rights of the bank when it stipulates:

> The Company and the mortgagor empower and require the bank in the event of exercising the parate execution rights conferred on it under the recovery of loans by banks (special provisions Act, No.4 of 1990) to appropriate the proceeds in such a way as to recognize the claim of the bank and effect payment giving effect to the provisions of these presents and the Company shall not interpose any objections thereto.

The mortgage bond in question thus imputes obligations to both the borrower Sunpac Engineers (Pvt Ltd) and the mortgagor Ranath Jayaweera qua borrowers, as they have clearly covenanted and obliged themselves to the bank that they would be jointly and severally liable to repay the loan on demand. There is no necessity for the principal borrower Sunpac Engineers (Pvt Ltd) to be proceeded against first, before DFCC bank PLC could turn to Ranath Jayaweera alias Sanath Jayaweera – the mortgagor. But the majority judgment in Chelliah Ramachandran is quite oblivious to this aspect of coalescence of the borrower and mortgagor when default of payment has occurred and the majority in Chelliah Ramachandran clearly misdirected themselves when they proceeded to hold that the words debtor, guarantor and mortgagor have fixed and distinct meanings which cannot be removed.

As the mortgage bond stands, it is a solidary obligation with both parties covenanting to repay the bank on demand. Both also covenant that the DFCC bank PLC could have recourse to the provisions of Act, No.4 of 1990 to sell by auction the mortgaged property belonging to the mortgagor Ranath Jayaweera. The mortgage bond is identical in terms and conditions to the mortgage bond as was confronted with by Court in Chelliah Ramachandran. In such circumstances, it is open to the mortgagee bank to proceed against the property of the third-party mortgagor first, as there is a joint and several liability.

This makes it clear that Ranath Jayaweera and Sunpac Engineers (Pvt Ltd) stand in the character of borrowers in the same breath; so one cannot ascribe distinct and different meanings to the words borrower and mortgagor as both tend to coalesce into one category as far as the liability to the bank is concerned. As the borrower defaults in the payment due to the bank, the liability of the mortgagor kicks in and is co-extensive with that of the principal borrower. Therefore, the majority in Chelliah Ramachandran fell into an error when they pronounced that the words such as debtor and guarantor bore distinct and fixed meanings. En passant, the definition of a mortgagor in Black's Law Dictionary as a mortgage-debtor or borrower has to be understood as a reference to a mortgage provider as a borrower in its extended meaning.[98]

I am also fortified in my reasoning by some comparative legislative developments across the Palk Strait. The Securitisation and Reconstruction of Financial Assets and Enforcement of Security Interest Act, 2002 (the SARFAESI Act) defines the term borrower to mean a person who fulfills two criteria viz (1) who has been granted financial assistance by any bank or financial institution, (2) who has given any guarantee or created any mortgage or pledge as a security for financial assistance granted by any bank or financial institution…[99]. The Indian Supreme Court has affirmed this position in Union Bank of India v. Rajat Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. & ORS.[100]

I hasten to point out that the liability for the third-party's property to be sold extra judicially arises by the third-party himself being considered as a borrower under the Act and it must be kept in mind that this statutory liability is independent of the contractual liability arising under the joint and several covenant in mortgage bond. Joint and several liability only supplements the statutory liability arising under the Act by virtue of the interpretation of the word to include a third party.

The word borrower includes a mortgagor.

From the foregoing it is indisputable without a scintilla of doubt that the word borrower takes in its sweep even a person who has given guarantee or created any mortgage or pledge as a security for the financial assistance granted by any bank or financial institution. The security interest means right, title or interest of any kind whatsoever upon property, created in favor of any secured creditor and includes any mortgage, charge and hypothecation. Therefore, a person who has created any mortgage or pledge as security for financial accommodation granted by any lending institution as defined or empowered in parate execution statutes is a borrower within the meaning of the word borrower in provisions such as section 15 (1) of the Act, No.4 of 1990 and this conclusion is inescapable having regard to the text, context and the resultant interpretation.

Text, Context and Interpretation.

All that I have undertaken above is to examine the text of the Act, No.4 of 1990 in relation to its context in its widest sense and utilize it to interpret the text.

[99] Section 2(f) of the SARFAESI Act; also see footnote 78 supra.

As I said before, context in the 'widest sense' includes the legislative history of an Act, extrinsic materials, and 'any other circumstance that could rationally assist understanding of meaning': Commissioner of State Revenue EHL Burgess Properties Pty Ltd[101]

In Reg. v. Schildkamp[102] Lord Upjohn said at p.22G

> "But, my Lords, this, in my opinion, is the wrong approach to the construction of an Act of Parliament. The task of the Court is to ascertain the intention of Parliament; you cannot look at a section, still less a subsection, in isolation, to ascertain that intention; you must look at all the admissible surrounding circumstances before starting to construe the Act. The principle was stated by Lord Simonds in Attorney-General v. Prince Ernest Augustus of Hanover [1957] A.C. 436, 461:
> 'For words, and particularly general words, cannot be read in isolation: their colour and content are derived from their context. So it is that I conceive it to be my right and duty to examine every word of a statute in its context, and I use 'context' in its widest sense, which I have already indicated as including not only other enacting provisions of the same statute, but its preamble, the existing state of the law, other statutes in pari materia, and the mischief which I can, by those other legitimate means, discern the statute was intended to remedy.'

Viscount Simonds does not specifically mention Law Commission Reports (the Law Commissions had not then been established). Nor does he mention white papers or other documents, but the material to which he referred included external material. So, what Viscount Simonds says about obtaining 'the colour and content' of a statute from its context must apply to pre-legislative material and other external aids that are available before us.

Based on the above, it is realistic to conclude that the word borrower in the Act bears different meanings in that it includes not only the person to whom the financial accommodation was granted but also the person who provides security for such financial accommodation. It makes no difference whether the person who provides the security is the actual borrower or a third-party.

The word borrower, having regard to legislative history behind parate executie in this country, statutory departures from Roman-Dutch law, purpose of the special law and even joint and several liability covenant in the mortgage instruments, has to be interpreted to extend to a mortgagor, inclusive of a third-party mortgagor. The context in the widest sense would also include the fact that the Parliament did not choose to leave the law as it stood, since the abortive Amendment Act of 2003 was sought to be enacted on the assumption that the impugned decision of Chelliah Ramachandran did not represent the law or parliamentary intention.

It is therefore irreconcilable to logic and common sense to contend that the Act, No.4 of 1990 makes a distinction between an actual borrower who provides a mortgage and a third-party who provides security on behalf of the actual borrower. Many a judicial decision have extended the meaning of words, from its normal and literal sense to their legal meaning or else the provisions in the Act would become useless and infructuous if a different treatment has to be given when the actual borrowers and mortgagors are different persons.

As rightly pointed by Lord Scarman, it would be perilous to assume that an English word of ordinary usage is to express only one particular meaning – see Infabrics Ltd v. Jaytex Ltd.[103] Therefore it cannot be argued that the particular word borrower has been used uniformly in different parts of the statute and when Section 2 (1) of the Act, No.4 of 1990 uses the words ''the mortgage of property'', it would connote not only the property of the person to whom the loan is granted but also the property of a third-party who volunteers to provide security for the loan.

Furthermore, when Section15 (1) of the Act, No.4 of 1990 states that "all the right, title, and interest of the borrower to, and in, the property shall vest in the purchaser…'', the word borrower in the subsection would include the third-party who has provided the security for the financial assistance.

Before I part with this judgement, two questions repay consideration. What does one make of the cases such as Jayawardane[104] and DFCC v. Muditha Perera and Others?[105] How does this Court deal with the precedent of Chelliah Ramachandran, now that it has been held to be incorrectly decided?

Since I have concluded that the property of a third-party mortgagor becomes liable for parate execution, it follows that the legal precedent of Chelliah Ramachandran has been wrongly decided. In the same breath a re-appraisal of the Jayawardane case would be otiose as the property mortgaged by a director for the loan of the company would anyway be available for parate execution because of its character as a third-party mortgage. Laconically, on the strength of the repudiation of Chelliah Ramachandran by this Court, lending institutions would no longer require the aid of the Jayawardane case. An immovable property mortgaged by a director would now become available for parate execution merely on the basis that it is a third-party mortgage that qualifies for exposure to parate execution. However, it has to be recalled that there were arguments for and against the correctness or otherwise of the Jayawardane decision and whilst the Petitioners contended that the Jayawardane case was wrongly decided, the Respondent banks invited this Court to hold the

[105] SC Appeal 15/10 decided on 25th March 2014

Jayawardane case as having laid down the law correctly, in the event this Court proceeded to depart from the Chelliah Ramachandran case.

Indeed there has been a question of law No (ii) that was raised on 8th February 2022 on the ratio of the Jayawardane case and in the circumstances, in order to complete the narrative, it behoves the Court to proceed to consider both HNB v Jayawardane and DFCC v Muditha Perera (supra).

HNB v. Jayawardane and DFCC v. Muditha Perera and Others (SC).

Hard on the heels of Chelliah Ramachandran followed the case of Hatton National Bank Ltd., v. Jayawardane and Others.[106] In this case the HNB granted a loan to a company (Nalin Enterprises Pvt) of which Jayawardane and others were directors. The directors hypothecated properties belonging to them to secure the loan. As the company defaulted in the payment of the loan the bank adopted a resolution in terms of Act No. 4 of 1990 to sell the property of Jayawardane and others. After some abortive litigation, the property was indeed sold at an auction and purchased by the bank. Jayawardane and Others instituted an action in the Commercial High Court and sought an order that the resolution was a nullity and the auction should be declared null and void on the ground of laesio enormis.

When the mater went up in appeal to the Supreme Court, the question of applicability of Chelliah Ramachandran's case came up. Jayawardane and Others argued that they were third-parties whose properties could not have been sold. In other words, applying the ratio in Chelliah Ramachandran's case the directors argued that it was only the property of the company that could have been sold and not theirs. In effect the argument of the directors was that their hypothecation would not authorize HNB to have exercised parate executie, because the mortgage came from third-parties (the Directors of the Company).

Jayasinghe J, (with Thilakawardane J, and Marsoof J, agreeing) lifted the corporate veil and held that the directors cannot hide behind the veil of incorporation of the company. The reasoning given by Jayasinghe J, for lifting the corporate veil was:

> "It is quite obvious that the 1st and 2nd Respondents being Directors of the Company benefited from the facilities made available to the said Company by the Petitioner Bank and to that extent they cannot claim that the mortgages which secured the said facilities fall within the category of "third-party mortgages" as contemplated in the majority judgments of the Court in Ramachandran v. Hatton National Bank."

This reasoning is indefensible in corporate law and logic. In company law corporate veil can be lifted only on some limited grounds namely (a) if the directors were utilizing the company as a vehicle of fraud or (b) it was necessary to interpret a document or statute or (c) the directors be construed to be agents in regard to the lending transaction. In this case no such exception existed. The judgment does not refer to the recognized grounds of lifting the corporate veil in extenso. How the directors benefited from the loan given to the company is not discernible as there is no evidence of fraudulent benefit to the directors though Nalin Enterprises Ltd was a closely knit, private company. What evidence was there before Court to conclude that the directors directly benefited from the loan facilities is not readily available upon a perusal of the judgment. What if the money lent to the company was used to purchase property for the company itself? Could it be concluded that the loan was exhausted and busted up by the directors, without that money having been used for the benefit of the company? Merely because the company is unable to pay the debt, can it be concluded that that failure to pay a debt would amount to fraud on the part of the directors? What if the company did not make enough profits to satisfy its liability?

There are no answers to these questions. Except for the bare assertion that the directors benefitted out of the loan, the Jayawardane case does not proffer proof of such a benefit. There must be irrefragable evidence to prove fraud and the Jayawardane judgment does not substantiate any allegations of fraud against the directors. Therefore, there was no warrant for lifting the corporate veil on the facts of the case and the ratio in Jayawardane case cannot be taken to mean that if a loan is granted by a bank to a company and the directors mortgage their property to secure that loan, the mortgaged property could be reached for parate execution, but without any grounds for lifting the corporate veil.

The fact that the directors mortgaged their property for the loan of the company does not ipso facto give the bank a carte blanche to sell by an auction the properties of directors. In order to lift the corporate veil, there must be grounds for that exercise and the English cases have trawled out only a limited number of such grounds such as fraud.[107]

It cannot be denied that the Jayawardane case became an emollient and a panacea for the banks as it created an apparent exception to the ratio in Chelliah Ramachandran case. But its ratio cannot be applied uniformly to all directors who mortgage their properties for the loans of their companies. Moreover, the precedential value of the Jayawardane case is weakened by its inherent absence of logic and scant attention paid to recognized grounds of exception to the doctrine of separate corporate personality which was encapsulated in the seminal case of Saloman v. A. Saloman and Co. Ltd.[108]

In my judgment there was no warrant for lifting the corporate veil on the facts and the correctness of this decision is open to serious objection.

Let me now turn to the case of DFCC v. Muditha Perera.[109]

DFCC v. Muditha Perera and Others.

[107] See Adams v. Cape Industries Plc (1990) Ch 433 and a subsequent discussion of the principles in Prest v. Petrodel Resources Ltd (2013) AC 415.
[109] See footnote 104 supra.

Saleem Marsoof J, who was a member of the Divisional Bench in HNB v. Jayawardane chose correctly in the later case of DFCC v. Muditha Perera and Others not to follow the case of HNB v. Jayawardane. As Baron Bramwell said about a point of law in 1872 "[t]he matter does not appear to me now as it appears to have appeared to me then.",[110] Saleem Marsoof J had just such a damascene conversion in Muditha Perera's case. Saleem Marsoof J chose to follow Chelliah Ramachandran in Muditha Perera and as a result, the property mortgaged by Muditha Perera to DFCC bank escaped foreclosure on the ground that it was a third- party mortgage.

Now that Chelliah Ramachandran has been held by this Court to have perpetuated an incorrect view of parate execution as regards third-party mortgages, this Court proceeds to hold that Chelliah Ramachandran would no longer be followed. I would not saddle this judgment with a slew of cases that have focused on parate execution since the decisions of Chelliah Ramachandran, Jayawardane and Muditha Perera.

Whichever way they were decided, they all constitute res judicata between the parties in those cases and the holding of this case before us would not bind the parties on the rights and liabilities had they been already determined in those cases.[111]

Answering the Questions of Law.

Having dwelt at length on an issue which required a comprehensive treatment, I now proceed to answer the questions of law in the following tenor.

Question No (i)- No

[110] Baron George W. W. Bramwell, Justice on the Court of the Exchequer, Andrews v. Styrap, 26 L. T. 706 (1872).

[111] See the CA decision of Wimalachandra J on the effect of Chelliah Ramachandran in a case which had proceeded beyond auction sale Jayawardane v. Sampath Bank (2005) 2 Sri.LR 34; see also` Chitrasiri J in Seylan Bank Limited v. Sivanu Padmandan and 3 Others (CA Revision Application) No 702/2006 (CA minutes of 16.02.2010.

Question No (ii)- To the extent that veil lifting in HNB Ltd v. Jayawardane and Others was not warranted on the facts and circumstances in the case, the ratio in the case is incorrect and in view of the holding in this case now, any director who mortgages his property would be a borrower within the meaning of Act, No.4 of 1990.

Question No (1) -Yes

Question No (2) -Yes

Should Chelliah Ramachandran be overruled?

In view of the answers to the questions of law, another question arises before one would part with this judgment. As I said before, the Divisional Court of this 7-judge bench finds that the 4 judge-bench decision of Chelliah Ramachandran is irreconcilable and it is undoubtedly within the competence of a numerically superior Supreme Court to overrule a decision of any Court containing a fewer number of judges-see Bandahamy v. Senanayake.[112]

The doctrine of judicial precedent or binding precedent is one of the most fundamental aspects of any legal system. Precedent is based on the maxim, stare decisis et non quieta movere, literally to stand by previous decisions and not to disturb settled matters; to adhere to precedents and not to depart from established principles. In common law systems a large part of the law is made of decided cases, i.e. judge made law or case law. These decisions carry the authority of law upon pronouncement and must necessarily bind later judges to ensure certainty, uniformity and finis litium (an end to litigation). The doctrine is important to give the system a sense of certainty and balance and to make it acceptable to the public.

But there are circumstances that destroy the binding force of a precedent and one such factor which is often cited as an exception to stare decisis is when it can be inferred that the deciding Court merely assumed the correctness of the propositions of law it was laying down. For instance, the assertion that the Roman-Dutch law in this country had viewed parate execution with abomination had merely been assumed to be correct with nary any attention being paid to the long line of statutory departures from this so-called loathing. The underlying covenant of joint and several liability inherent in the mortgage instrument of Chelliah Ramachandran just passed muster without its significance being brought to bear upon the right of a lending institution to proceed to parate execution when the third-party knowingly and without any trace of undue influence or duress had assumed the consequences of an extra judicial sale. A decision is said to be sub silentio when a particular point of law involved in the decision is not perceived by the Court or present to its mind. So Chelliah Ramachandran is one such precedent sub silentio and in such a backdrop the case cannot be an authority on the unperceived rules of law that have been allowed to pass sub silentio.

I am fortified in expressing the opinion that it is not desirable that the most authoritative Court in a country be bound by its own decisions. A comparative look across passport control discloses the practice of overruling discordant dissents in several jurisdictions.

Practice Statement of the House of Lords in 1966.

The House of Lords in a dramatic fashion recognized this. The Lord Chancellor, Lord Gardiner, on July 26th, 1966 announced in the House of Lords that in future the House of Lords would not regard itself as absolutely bound by its own decisions. This was quite contrary to an antiquated rule that the House had set down for itself that the House of Lords was bound by its past decisions-see London Tramways v. London County Council.[113]

However, in the period that followed the *London Tramway*s decision it was felt that the effect of the decision was to constrain the development of the common law and that rather than ensuring predictability and certainty in the law, the effect was rather the opposite.

As a result, in 1966, all of the judges in the House of Lords joined together to issue a Practice Statement (a statement by the Court of a procedure that it intends to introduce) providing that in future the House would no longer regard itself as bound by its own earlier decisions. The statement was carefully worded to communicate that this new power to depart from decisions would be used sparingly to avoid creating uncertainty in the law.

The Practice Statement (Judicial Precedent) [1966] 3 All ER 77

The Practice Statement set out why the House of Lords was going to change its practice and how it thought it would exercise the new freedom to depart from earlier decisions of its own. It said:

> Their Lordships recognise... that too rigid adherence to precedent may lead to injustice in a particular case and also unduly restrict the proper development of the law. They propose therefore to modify their present practice and, while treating former decisions ... as normally binding, to depart from a previous decision when it appears right to do so.

Together with the Practice Statement, the House of Lords published a press release which gave more explanation about the new practice. The key points that emerged from the Practice Statement and press release were that:

- The Court would only rarely depart from an earlier decision
- The Court would be most likely to use the new freedom in situations where there had been significant social change so that a precedent was outdated or inappropriate to modern social conditions, values and practices
- The Court would be likely to depart from an earlier decision if there was a need to keep English common law in step with law of other jurisdictions

- There was a special need for certainty in criminal law and as a result the Court would be very reluctant to depart from an earlier decision in a criminal case.

Horizontal precedent in the UK Supreme Court

Soon after the UK Supreme Court was established in 2009, Lord Hope gave a judgment in Austin v. Southwark London Borough Council[114] in which he made it clear that the prior jurisprudence of the House of Lords had been transferred to the UK Supreme Court and that the UKSC would therefore not regard itself as bound by earlier decisions.

> The Supreme Court has not thought it necessary to re-issue the Practice Statement as a fresh statement of practice in the Court's own name. This is because it has as much effect in this Court as it did before the Appellate Committee in the House of Lords. It was part of the established jurisprudence relating to the conduct of appeals in the House of Lords which was transferred to this Court by section 40 of the Constitutional Reform Act 2005. So the question which we must consider is not whether the Court has power to depart from the previous decisions of the House of Lords which have been referred to, but whether in the circumstances of this case it would be right for it to do so.

R v. Shivpuri[115] was a criminal appeal in which the House of Lords overturned one of its own decisions - Anderton v. Ryan[116] that had only been decided one year earlier. This was the first time that the House of Lords overturned its own decision in a criminal case and it was regarded as a spectacular decision when Lord Bridge (a member of the erroneous majority in Anderton) acknowledged the error and said:

[114] (2010) UKSC 28; (2010) 4 All ER 16
[115] (1986) 2 All ER 334.
[116] (1985) 2 All ER 355.

> "the Practice Statement is an effective abandonment of our pretension to infallibility*. If a serious error, embodied in a decision of this House has distorted the law, the sooner it is corrected the better*".

There are a host of civil cases where one finds the House of Lords overrule previous decisions-see British Railways Board v. Herrington[117]: Murphy v. Brentwood District Council[118]; Austin v. Mayor and Burgesses of the London Borough of Southwark[119]; Knouer v. Ministry of Justice.[120]

Across the Palk Strait, one is reminded of Justice Khanna who was given the respect accorded to a hero everywhere he went because of his dissent in the famous Additional District Magistrate (ADM) Jabalpur v. Shivkant Shukla[121]. The majority judgment in this case was expressly overruled by a nine-judge bench of the Supreme Court of India in Justice K.S.Puttaswamy (retd) v. Union of India[122] and the minority judgment of Justice Khanna was restored.

Stare decisis is neither an "inexorable command"[123] nor "a mechanical formula of adherence to the latest decision",[124] it is a "principle of policy",[125] especially in constitutional cases. If it were an inflexible command, old cases would have continued and would never have been overruled. When considering whether to re-examine a prior decision which seems incorrect, the court must balance the importance of having legal issues decided against the importance of having them decided right. As Jackson, J, explained, this requires a "sober appraisal of the

The great purpose of all this is a constitutional ideal-the rule of law and thus, Ramachandran and another (SC Appeal No 5/2004) and Anandasiva and another (SC Appeal No 9 of 2004) v. Hatton National Bank[127] is accordingly overruled and the appeal is dismissed.

S. THURAIRAJA, PC, J.

I have had the advantage of reading the judgements of my learned brothers Nawaz, J. and Samayawardhena, J. in draft. I am in respectful agreement with both the said judgements, as I see no contradiction in principle between the opinions expressed therein. However, my conscience compels me to make some observations of my own, without prejudice to the opinions so propounded by my learned brothers.

Suppose an old man or woman who mortgages the roof over their head and the only property in their names so that a grandchild may have higher education, only to be neglected later on. Suppose an illiterate or a nescient who signs a mortgage bond—some of which are incomprehensible to even the learned men—as a third-party mortgagor, with the most benevolent of intentions, only to be defrauded. What comes of such classes of third-party mortgagors, if parate execution were to be effected against them. To this extent, this Court's historical reluctance to vest in the board of directors such power to exercise parate execution in respect of third-party mortgages resonates with me.

Despite the shortcomings of the judgements in Ramachandran v. Hatton National Bank[128] and Hatton National Bank v. Jayawardena,[129] which Nawaz, J. has appraised in great detail, it cannot be gainsaid that said dicta have made a clear delineation and afforded protection to the aforesaid classes of third-party mortgagors who could otherwise be greatly prejudiced. Though common law, too, seeks to protect such persons, I cannot help but see such protection as inadequate.

Be that as it may, I cannot close my mind to sound legal reasoning, like which my learned brothers have set out, merely based on moral sentiment. The foregoing discussion has established, with irrefutably sound logic, why third-party mortgagors must be read within the meaning of borrower and I am therefore inclined to agree with the same.

Nonetheless, I invite the relevant authorities to take due cognizance of the concerns I have raised in formulating their policies, so that this decision, which to me appears utilitarian, may not perpetrate undesirable results.

E.A.G.R Amarasekara, J.

I had the opportunity of reading the judgments written by learned brothers Honourable Justice Nawaz and Honourable Justice Samayawardhena in its draft form. I am in respectful agreement with the final conclusion they have reached that, when a loan is granted by a bank on a mortgaged property, irrespective of the fact whether the loan was released in the name of the mortgagor or not, mortgage property is subject to parate execution in terms of the Act No 4 of 1990 and other similar provision found in other relevant Acts, on which the State Banks which were represented before us rely.

I observe that my brother Judge Honorable Samayawardhena J. and Honourable Nawaz J. have answered the questions of Law No. 1, 3, and 4 in the same manner, namely question No. 1 in the Negative and No. 3 and 4 in the affirmative, for which I also agree. Honourable Samayawardhena J. has considered the 2nd question of law as one that does not arise. Honourable Nawaz J. has answered the 2nd question of law with certain comments. In my view, irrespective of reasons given by the Honourable judges who decided the Hatton National Bank V Jayawardane (2007) 1 Sri L R 181, due to the conclusions reached in this case, any property mortgaged to a bank to obtain a loan subject to the provisions of the relevant act is subject to parate execution. Thus, the 2nd question of law has to be answered stating that any director of a corporate entity who mortgage his property for a loan obtained by the corporate entity is a borrower within the meaning of Act No.4 of 1990.

I prefer to add few observations in the matter at hand with regard to the nature of obligations created by a Mortgage. Philip S James in his book 'Introduction to English Law', 12th Edition, by Butterworths, at page 464 explains the origin of Mortgage as follows;

"There are two principal forms of security, 'personal' security and 'real' security. Personal security usually requires a person who will stand surety for the debt. Real security requires some form of property; the borrower may, for instances, secure the loan by giving the lender a possession of his watch. If he is lucky, however, the borrower may own land; in this case he will be able to secure the debt upon the land. The best way of securing a debt upon land is by way of mortgage. 'Mortgage' is a strange word. It is said to derive from the ancient practice by which the borrower conveyed the land to the lender with a proviso for reconveyance should the loan be paid by a certain date; if the loan is not paid on that date the land become dead pledge ('mortgage') forever to the borrower, for it became the property of the lender. The word survives, although mortgages are no longer created in that way."

Even though the mortgages are created in many ways, it appears that in conventional mortgages, original flavour of lending and borrowing still remains with most of the transactions, especially that are found in transactions similar to matter at hand. Wille in his work "Mortgage and Pledge in South Affrica" at page 1 states that "In its comprehensive sense, mortgage is defined as a right over the property of another which serves to secure an obligation". At page 8, in describing the nature of the obligation he states as follows;

"The principal obligation may be of any kind of nature, whether civil, pretorian, natural, or honorary (Marcianus, Dig, 20, 1, 5: Pothierad Pand, 20, 1 note 7). Thus, the obligation may arise from such causes as the lending of money, a dowry, a purchase, a sale, a letting, a hiring, a mandate (ibid, ibid) a suretyship (Ulpian, Dig., 13,7,9, 1), an eviction from sold property (Voet 20, 1, 20), or a judgment (Kadrinka V Lorentz 1914 T P D 32). Maasdorp (Vol. II, p 234) sums up the matter by saying that the original obligation may be any obligation whatsoever, which, in case of non-fulfilment, is capable of being converted into money value by claim of a compensation but as a general rule it is a money debt"

Halsbury's Laws of England, 5th Edition, Vol. 77 at para 101, page 63 gives the meaning of a mortgage.

"A mortgage is a disposition of property as security for a debt. It may be effected by a demise or sub demise of land, by a transfer of a chattel, by an assignment of a chose or thing in action, by a charge on any interest in real or personal property or by an agreement to create a charge for securing money or money's worth, the security being redeemable on repayment or discharge of the debt or other obligation. Generally, whenever a disposition of an estate or interest is originally intended as a security for money, whether this intention appears from the deed itself or form any other instrument or from oral evidence, it is considered as mortgage and redeemable."

If above definitions and descriptions are taken together, it appears mortgagor is bound to pay the money value as a debtor at the end to get his interest in the property. His standing is similar to that of a borrower. This may be the reason for many dictionary meanings identify the mortgagor as a borrower. Counsel for the 1st Intervenient Petitioner has quoted some of them as follows;

Black's Law Dictionary 10th edition

Mortgagor- Someone to whom mortgages property; the mortgage-debtor.

Collins Law Dictionary

Mortgagor- person who borrows money, giving a property as security.

A Dictionary of Law Edited by Jonathan Law, 8th Edition

Mortgage- An interest in property created as a form of security for a loan or payment of debt and terminated on payment of the loan or debt. The borrower, who offers the security, is the mortgagor, the lender, who provides the money, is the mortgagee.

In a banking transaction providing financial facilities such as loans, the bank lends while the other side borrows. If there is a mortgage bond involved, in essence, mortgagor is also a borrower. He may borrow for himself or someone else. If he borrows for someone else, it does not make his standing different. In modern transaction, main credit card holder may get a supplementary card for one of his family members. Merely because he does not get the financial benefits of the supplementary card, he cannot say that he is not the borrower.

In my view, it is inherent in a mortgage bond that the mortgagor stands akin to a borrower even though the financial facility is taken in the name of someone else and in such a situation, he is not a mere guarantor.

In the above backdrop, I wish to look at the some of the provisions of Act No. 4 of 1990. When section 3,4 and 5 of the said Act are read together, the Act authorizes either sale by public auction and or taking of possession of any property mortgaged in the manner prescribed by the Act whenever any sum is due on the relevant mortgage after passing a resolution and taking steps in accordance with the Act. These sections do not limit the auction or possession to the property mortgaged by the person in whose name the money is lent. To give such meaning a court has to add words to qualify the meaning of the word 'any property' found in said operative sections of the Act.

Section 14 provides for the payment of any excess money after the sale. The section starts with the words "If the mortgaged property is sold". The mortgaged property referred to there cannot be anything other than what is referred to in the aforesaid operative provisions, namely section 3, 4 and 5. This section is there to direct the distribution of the balance money after the sale and it is not meant to decide what should be sold in action or taken in to possession. The main focus in that section is the distribution of excess money. It relates only to what should be done after the sale. Thus, the words in it cannot be used to decide what should be sold and taken into possession under a resolution passed by the board. Since, the said section directs to give the excess money to the borrower or to persons who can claim under the borrower, in Ramachandran V H. N. B. (2006) 1 Sri L R 393, the majority of the bench considered it as an absurdity when the borrower is not the mortgagor. It must be noted that to mortgage one must have title, right or some interest in the property that can be mortgaged to secure the loan or money value of the transaction. As I explained in conventional mortgages the mortgagor stands similar to a debtor or borrower. In my view, the borrower in the said section means none other than the mortgagor who defaulted irrespective of the fact whether he receives the loan in his name or not.

In the Ramachandran case, it appears that it was the view of the majority that allowing parate execution of the property would deprive the mortgagor access to our courts to get his matter adjudicated through courts. It is true in a normal mortgage action the Bank should have commenced litigation by filing the action. It must be noted that the default is generally proved using records of the banks which are considered as prima facie proof which may be hardly challenged only by cross examination. Now the position has changed and the Banks have given the authority to pass a resolution using such prima facie evidence but still I do not see any hindrance to access to justice and challenge such resolution prior to the entering of certificate of sale. The difference would be that it is now the alleged defaulter or the mortgagor who has to initiate proceedings.

The learned judges who heard the said Ramachandran case and the said Jayawardena case mentioned above would have contributed their best to solve the issues presented before them as per the submissions available before them. They may not have foreseen the other issues that may arise with such interpretations in future. Present interpretation, that exist after the said Ramachandran case has given an opportunity to many defaulters to annul the intention of the legislature expressed by bringing these legislations. For example, a defaulter who may get his name registered in CRIB, and unable to get further loans, may transfer his property to one of his family members name and get further loans through one of his colleagues while getting his family member to sign the mortgage. The said colleague does not take interest in paying as it is not his property at stake and the family member can take up the position that it is third party mortgage. The original defaulter may further file an action stating that he did not mean to transfer the title but it was a trust.

The number of cases on similar issues that have been filed in our courts to annul the resolutions on similar grounds may give an indication that the interpretation given in the Ramachandran case now serves the defaulters defeating the intention of the legislature expressed through passing the the Act No.4 of 1990 and similar laws, which may not have been foreseen by the learned Judges who decided Ramachandran case. This seems to be one of the reasons that the House of Lords, to some extent deviate from applying horizontal application of the Stare Decisis principle as there should be a balance between the need to develop law with the passage of time and its consistency. Thus, with all due respect to the judges who decided Ramachandran case and Jayawardena case, I approve the departure from those decisions.

K. Kumudini Wickremasinghe, J

I have perused the draft judgments of both my learned brothers Hon. Justice A.H.M.D. Nawaz and Hon. Justice Mahinda Samayawardhena. Although different approaches have been used in the analysis, I am agreeable to the final outcome of both draft judgements.

The questions of law on which leave has been granted in this case are as follows:

1. Did the CHC err in law in determining that the 2nd Plaintiff is a borrower within the meaning of the Recovery of Loans by Bank Special Provisions Act.

2. Is the Ratio in the case HNB v Jayawardhena [2007] 1 S L R that the director of a corporate entity who mortgages his property for a loan obtained by that corporate entity is a borrower within the meaning of the Act.

3. Has the Board of Directors have the power to by resolution to sell by public auction any property mortgaged to the bank as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made in order to recover the whole of such unpaid portion of such loan together with the money and costs recoverable under Section 13 of the said Act.

4. Does any property mortgaged to the bank of Ceylon or the Peoples bank as security for any loan as the case may be, in respect of which default has been made within the meaning of Bank of Ceylon Ordinance No. 53 of 1938 as amended and the Peoples bank Act no 29 of 1961 liable to be auctioned in terms of the respective acts referred to

When considering the analysis of both draft judgments, I believe that Ramachandran and Others v Hatton National Bank [2006] 1 Sri L.R. 393 is considered as an important jurisprudence in our country and that the salient principles set out by such a case must be given its due recognition in law and this court must take cognisance of the importance of this judgment in order to avert injustice in the future by overruling the same and the matter must be addressed in a diplomatic manner.

The highlight of the decision of Ramachandran and Others v Hatton National Bank [2006] 1 Sri L.R. 393 is that "the provision of the Recovery of Loans (Special Provisions) Act No 4 of 1990 will not apply in respect of a mortgage given by a guarantor or any person other than a borrower to whom a loan has been granted by a Bank or the economic development of Sri Lanka"

Considering the facts of this appeal I am in full agreement with my Learned brothers that the interpretation that needs to be given Recovery of Loans (Special Provisions) Act No 4 of 1990 by this court is that the Act applies to any property mortgaged to the bank as security for any loan in respect of which default has been made irrespective of whether the mortgagor is the borrower or a third party and not the ratio as of the above mentioned case.

However, we must keep in mind that prior to the decision of Ramachandran and Others v Hatton National Bank [2006] 1 Sri L.R. 393, where the majority decision gave a restrictive interpretation of the term borrower and declared invalid parate execution of the third party mortgages, innocent third party borrowers had no protection against parate executions under the Recovery of Loans (Special Provisions) Act No 4 of 1990 and we must ensure that innocent third party borrowers can still avail this avenue of justice in future.

In order to ensure that justice is done by this court I believe that we only need to analyse the relevant legal provisions, address the essential points, the lacunas and shortcomings of the abovementioned judgement, as it is better to articulate our arguments legally and limit it to so.

I have had the advantage of reading the observations made by Hon. Justice E.A.G.R. Amarasekara and I agree with his observation that "the 2nd question of law has to be answered stating that any director of a corporate entity who mortgaged his property for a loan obtained by the corporate entity is a borrower within the meaning of Act No.4 of 1990." Since the 1st question of law is answered in the positive it is only logical that the 2nd question of law, namely that the director of a corporate entity who mortgages his property for a loan obtained by that corporate entity is a borrower within the meaning of the Act is also answered in the positive. The Ratio in the case of HNB v Jayawardhena [2007] 1 S L R is that the veil of incorporation can be lifted in certain instances, excerpts of the case are set out below;

"To pierce the corporate veil is an expression that I would reserve for treating the rights or liabilities or activities of a company as the rights or liabilities or activities of its shareholders. To lift the corporate veil or look behind it, on the other hand, should mean to have regard to the shareholding in a company for some legal purpose.

As far as this case is concerned, it is quite obvious that the 1st and 2nd respondents, being directors of Nalin Enterprises Pvt. Ltd. benefited from the facilities made available to the said company by the petitioner bank, and to that extent they cannot claim the mortgages which secured the said facilities fall within the category of " third party mortgages" as contemplated in the majority judgments of this court in Ramachandra v. Hatton National Bank. The 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs are integrated to Nalin Enterprises Ltd. and when Nalin Enterprises sought to obtain facilities from the petitioner bank, the borrowers are in fact the said Nalin Enterprises and 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs. It would be an exercise totally illogical to seek to differentiate the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs as 3rd party mortgages within the meaning of Ramachandra v. Hatton National Bank.."

Considering the analysis by Hon. Justice A.H.M.D. Nawaz and the observations by Hon. Justice E.A.G.R. Amarasekara, our conclusion should be that even in instances where the directors of a company are the third party mortgagors they will not be able to seek redress under the case of Ramachandran and Others v Hatton National Bank [2006] 1 Sri L.R. 393 as the impact of our judgement is that any third party borrower is liable for parate execution under the provisions of the Act, regardless of him being a director of the company or not and as such the veil of incorporation is automatically lifted.

Based on both draft judgements, I am of the view that Hon. Justice A.H.M.D. Nawaz has made a rather thorough analysis of the law and addressed all 4 questions of law on which leave has been granted comprehensively, whilst Hon. Justice Samayawardhena has considered that the 2nd question of law and concluded that it does not arise. I believe that the 2nd question of law should be addressed in order avoid confusion, owing to which I am more inclined to agree with the draft of Hon. Justice A.H.M.D. Nawaz, subject to the above mentioned observations.

Factual matrix

The Appellant was a captain in the Sri Lanka Army attached to the 5th Sri Lanka National Guard at the time material to this appeal. Some members of the 12th Gajaba Regiment of the Sri Lanka Army were reportedly involved in the illegal activity of removing a large quantity of gold from a safe in the Puthukudirppu area in the Northern Province during humanitarian operations in March 2009. The Appellant was indirectly implicated in this act. He is alleged to have been given some gold in recognition of his knowledge of the illegal transportation of the said gold on a subsequent occasion. The Appellant totally denies this.

A Court of Inquiry comprising the 3rd-5th Respondents as members had been appointed to inquire into this matter and report. They found eight Army personnel including the Appellant involved in this illegal activity.

At last, the Court of Inquiry recommended that a complaint be made to the Special Investigation Bureau of the Criminal Investigation Department of the Sri Lanka Police to conduct a formal investigation into this matter and to produce suspects in Court to deal with them under the normal law.

Thereafter, the 2nd Respondent, the Commander of the Army, upon the evidence led before the Court of Inquiry, made the order dated 13.08.2012 that the Appellant (along with others involved in the act) be decommissioned and disciplinary action be taken.

The Appellant filed an application in the Court of Appeal dated 01.10.2013 naming the Chief of Defence Staff, the Commander of the Army, and the three members of the Court of Inquiry as the 1st to 5th Respondents respectively, seeking to quash the aforesaid determination of the Commander of the Army dated 13.08.2012 marked P3 by a writ of certiorari.

The Respondents filed a statement of objections dated 20.07.2015 stating inter alia that the Commander of the Army sent his opinion and recommendation dated 18.10.2013 for the withdrawal of the commission to the secretary of the Ministry of Defence to be communicated to the President (R14); the commission of the Appellant was withdrawn by the President by letter dated 28.11.2013 (R15); in terms of section 9(1) of the Army Act, No. 17 of 1949, as amended, the officers shall be appointed by commissions under the hand of the President; in terms of section 10 of the Army Act, every officer shall hold his appointment during the President's pleasure; in view of R15, the application to quash P3 is futile; and the President has immunity under Article 35(1) of the Constitution. On this basis, they sought dismissal of the Appellant's application.

After hearing, the Court of Appeal dismissed the application of the Appellant with costs.

The main basis of the judgment of the Court of Appeal is that "although the 1st Respondent has in P3 dated 13.08.2012 directed that the commission of the Petitioner be withdrawn, no further action has been taken thereon. Hence the question of quashing P3 by way of a writ of certiorari does not arise." As I will demonstrate below, this finding of the Court of Appeal is erroneous.

Thereafter the Court of Appeal stresses the "pleasure principle" embodied in section 10 of the Army Act and concludes that in view of R15 since the President has approved the withdrawal of the commission of the Appellant, an order to quash P3 by a writ of certiorari is futile.

This Court granted leave to appeal against the Judgment of the Court of Appeal on the following questions of law:

(a) Did the Court of Appeal fall into substantial error by failing to consider that the decision contained in P3 could not have been made on the basis of the findings of the Court of Inquiry?
(b) Did the Court of Appeal err by failing to appreciate that the withdrawal of the commission of the Appellant stems from the decision contained in P3?
(c) Did the Court of Appeal fail to appreciate that the determination R15 made by the President does not preclude the grant of relief prayed for by the Appellant?
(d) Did the Court of Appeal err in the application of the pleasure principle inasmuch as the withdrawal of the commission had been effected for cause in pursuance of the findings of the Court of Inquiry?

The scope of the Court of Inquiry

The Army Courts of Inquiry Regulations of 1952 made by the subject Minister in terms of section 155 of the Army Act are found in Chapter 357 in the Subsidiary Legislation of Ceylon 1956.

Regulation 2 thereof reads as follows:

> A court of inquiry means an assembly of officers, or, of one or more officers together with one or more warrant or non-commissioned officers, directed to collect and record evidence and, if so required, to report or make a declaration with regard to any matter or thing which may be referred to them for inquiry under these regulations.

Regulation 16 states:

> Every court of inquiry shall record the evidence given before it, and at the end of the proceedings it shall record its findings in respect of the matter or matters into which it was assembled to inquire as required by the convening authority.

In terms of Regulation 15, there is no necessity to require the officer under investigation to be present when proceedings are in progress and also to allow the witnesses to be cross-examined unless such inquiry affects the character or reputation of the officer. Regulation 15(1) reads as follows:

> Whenever an inquiry affects the character or the military reputation of an officer or soldier, the officer or soldier concerned shall be afforded the opportunity of being present throughout the inquiry. He shall also be allowed to make a statement, to adduce evidence on his behalf and to cross-examine any witnesses whose evidence is likely to affect his character or his military reputation.

One cannot deny that this inquiry relates to the character and reputation of the Appellant. Learned President's Counsel for the Appellant submits that, out of the seven witnesses who testified before the Court of Inquiry, three witnesses testified implicating the Appellant but the Appellant was allowed to cross-examine only one witness and it was also confined to only three questions.

There is no dispute that a Court of Inquiry is nothing but a fact-finding inquiry. It is part of the investigation process. There is no accused tried on a charge sheet before a Court of Inquiry. Hence a person cannot be found guilty and punished either by the Court of Inquiry or upon the recommendations or findings of the Court of Inquiry by another. Vide Boniface Perera v. Lt. General Sarath Fonseka and Others [2009] BLR 44 at 46, Lokuhennadige v. Lt. General Sarath Fonseka and Others [2010] 2 Sri LR 85 at 93-94, Colonel Fernando v. Lt. General Fonseka and Others [2010] 2 Sri LR 101, Lt. Harischandra v. Commander of the Army and Others [2012] 1 Sri LR 416.

The true nature of the proceedings before the Court of Inquiry is discernible when one reads the recommendation made by the Court of Inquiry at the end of the proceedings. After identifying the officers who have been involved in the illegal activity based on the evidence presented before it, the final recommendation of the Court of Inquiry reads as follows:

> සමස්ථයක් වශයෙන් මෙම මුපළ සඳහා ඉදිරිපත් වී ඇති සියලුම සාක්ෂි අනුශංගික ලේඛන සහ වක්‍රකාර සාක්ෂි සියල්ල අධ්‍යනය කිරීමේදී මෙම වංචාව දැනට හඳුනාගෙන ඇති ප්‍රමාණයට වඩා බෙහෙවින් බරපතල විය හැකි බවත්, මෙම වංචාවෙන් රජයට හෝ ජාතියට අහිමි වී ඇති ස්වර්ණාභරණ, මුදල් හෝ දේපල අතුරින් මෙතෙක් කිසිවක් සොයා ගැනීමට නොහැකි වී ඇති බවද, යන කරුණු සැලකිල්ලට ගෙන මෙම වංචාව සබැඳිව විදිමත් පරීක්ෂණයක් සිදුකර වුදිතයින් අධිකරණය වෙත ඉදිරිපත් කිරීම සඳහා මෙම වංචාවට අදාළ කරුණු අපරාධ විමර්ශන දෙපාර්තමේන්තුවේ විශේෂ විමර්ෂණ ඒකකය වෙත පැමිණිල්ලක් ලෙස ඉදිරිපත් කිරීම වඩාත් සුදුසු බවට මණ්ඩලය වැඩිදුරටත් නිර්දේශ කරයි.

This conclusion of the Court of Inquiry itself indicates that no regular and complete investigation was conducted by them.

The decision of the Commander of the Army is ultra vires

Upon receipt of the recommendation, what did the Commander of the Army do? He ordered (not recommended or opined) inter alia that the commission of the Appellant be withdrawn and disciplinary action be taken. I must stress that this he did purely on the evidence led and the findings made by the Court of Inquiry and not on any other basis.

He cannot take such a decision on the evidence led and the findings made by a fact-finding mission. This decision is ultra vires because the decision maker did not have legal authority to make the decision.

The Army Commander's letter to the Secretary to the Ministry of Defence

What did the Commander of the Army write to the secretary of the Ministry of Defence to be communicated to the President by R14? The relevant part of the letter (paragraphs 2 and 3) reads as follows:

2. This Officer was found guilty of fraudulently acquiring gold jewellery belonging to internally displaced persons at Puthukkudiyiruppu area while serving in 5 Sri Lanka National Guard. A Court of Inquiry had been appointed to inquire into the said incident and as per the findings of the Court of Inquiry dated 13 August 2012 it is recommended that the Officer's Commission be withdrawn.

3. Considering the above facts, I am of the opinion that further employment of this Officer in service would not be in the best interest of the Army. Therefore, as the Commander of the Army, I am compelled to seek the direction of His Excellency the President regarding the further employment of this Officer in service in terms of the Army Discipline Regulations 1950.

It is a misrepresentation of facts to state that the Appellant was found guilty of fraudulently acquiring gold jewellery belonging to internally displaced persons at Puthukudirppu area while serving in the 5th Sri Lanka National Guard. He was never found guilty of such an offence. He could not have been found guilty without charges being framed against him.

The President's decision is predicated on the Commander's letter

It is based on this letter that the President decided to withdraw the commission of the Appellant. The relevant portion of the letter sent by the secretary of the Ministry of Defence to the Commander of the Army marked R15 reads as follows:

This has reference to your letter of even No. dated 18.10.2013.
His Excellency the President has approved the withdrawal of commission of the following officer from the Sri Lanka Army Volunteer Force with effect from 22.07.2010.

As stated on the face of the document, the President's decision was entirely predicated upon the contents of the letter of the Commander of the Army marked R14 quoted above. It was not an independent decision of the President but purely an approval of the decision made by the Commander of the Army. For all intents and purposes, the withdrawal of commission was done by the Commander of the Army and the President merely approved it.

The Pleasure Principle has no applicability

I agree with learned President's Counsel for the Appellant that the Court of Appeal was not correct when it applied the pleasure principle to the facts of this case. Although section 10 of the Army Act states that every officer shall hold his appointment during the President's pleasure, it is crystal clear that the President did not exercise his discretion on that basis.

Regulation 2 of the Army Discipline Regulations and the discretion of the Commander Learned Deputy Solicitor General in drawing attention to Regulation 2 of the Army Discipline Regulations of 1950 (Chapter 356) found in the Subsidiary Legislation of Ceylon 1956 which states that "The Commander of the Army shall be vested with general responsibility for discipline in the army", contends that the Commander was well within his powers when he made the recommendation to the President regarding the service of the Appellant and withdrawal of his commission. In this regard, the learned Deputy Solicitor General strongly relies on the judgment of this Court in Major K.D.S. Weerasinghe v. Colonel G.K.B. Dissanayake and Others (SC/FR/444/2009, SC Minutes of 31.10.2017), which was cited by the Court of Appeal in the impugned judgment. Learned President's Counsel for the Appellant strenuously submits that the said judgment of this Court is clearly distinguishable as the petitioner in that case unlike in the instant case had pleaded guilty to all charges he faced in the summary trial. I am inclined to agree with the learned President's Counsel.

It is also important to note that the above-mentioned case was not a writ application but a fundamental rights application whereby an officer of the Army complained of violation of his fundamental rights guaranteed under Articles 12(1) and 13(3) of the Constitution on the discharge of the said officer from service by the Commander of the Army after a Court of Inquiry. Malalgoda J. (with the agreement of Wanasundera J. and Aluwihare J.) held:

> Regulation 2 of the Army Disciplinary Regulations 1950 provides that "the Commander of the Army shall be vested with the general responsibility for discipline in the Army" and in the case in hand the Commander acting under the above provision had sought a direction from His Excellency the President regarding the further retention of Petitioner. As revealed before us, the above conduct of the Commander of the Army when seeking a directive from His Excellency the President was an independent act and was done for the best interest of the Army in order to maintain the discipline of the Army.

It is on that basis Malalgoda J. held that there was no violation of Articles 12(1) and 13(3) of the Constitution.

However, in the instant case, as I have already stated, the decision P3 was made on findings of the Court of Inquiry, not in the proper invocation of Regulation 2 of the Army Disciplinary Regulations. The direction sought from the President by R14 was not an independent act of the Commander but intrinsically interconnected with the findings of the Court of Inquiry.

For completeness, let me also add that although Regulation 2 of the Army Discipline Regulations of 1950 states that the Commander of the Army shall be vested with general responsibility for discipline in the army, there is no unfettered, untrammeled and unbridged discretion in the modern administrative law. Our system of government is founded on the rule of law, and unfettered discretion cannot exist where the rule of law reigns. Discretion is subject to judicial review.

In Premachandra v. Major Montague Jayawickrema and Another [1994] 2 Sri LR 90 at 105, G.P.S. De Silva C.J. held:

> There are no absolute or unfettered discretions in public law; discretions are conferred on public functionaries in trust for the public, to be used for the public good, and the propriety of the exercise of such discretions is to be judged by reference to the purposes for which they were so entrusted.

In the case of Munasinghe v. Vandergert [2008] 2 Sri LR 233 at 232, Bandaranayake J. (later C.J.) observes:

> Considering the present day administrative functions, there is no doubt that it is necessary to confer authority on administrative officers to be used at their discretion. Nevertheless, such discretionary authority cannot be absolute or unfettered as such would be arbitrary and discriminatory, which would negate the equal protection guaranteed in terms of Article 12(1) of the Constitution.

Further in Rajavarothiam Sampanthan and Others v. Attorney General and Others (SC/FR/351-356, 358-361/2018, SC Minutes of 13.12.2018), H.N.J. Perera C.J. held at 67:

> A related principle is that our Law does not recognize that any public authority, whether they be the President or an officer of the State or an organ of the State, has unfettered or absolute discretion or power.

Lord Wrenbury in the celebrated House of Lords decision in Roberts v. Hopwood [1925] AC 578 at 613 articulated this in the following manner:

> A person in whom is vested a discretion must exercise his discretion upon reasonable grounds. A discretion does not empower a man to do what he likes merely because he is minded to do so – he must in the exercise of his discretion do not what he likes but what he ought. In other words, he must, by the use of his reason, ascertain and follow the course which reason directs. He must act reasonably.

Lord Denning, M.R. in Breen v. Amalgamated Engineering Union [197I] 2 Q.B. 175 at 190 stressed the importance of the public authority exercising discretion being focused on considerations only relevant to the matter at hand without being strayed into irrelevant considerations. Exercising discretion in good faith alone is not sufficient. Discretion must be exercised according to law.

> The discretion of a statutory body is never unfettered. It is a discretion which has to be exercised according to law. That means at least this: the statutory body must be guided by relevant consideration and not by irrelevant. If its decision is influenced by extraneous considerations which it ought not to have taken into account, then the decision cannot stand. No matter that the statutory body may have acted in good faith; nevertheless, the decision will be set aside. That is established by Padfield v. Minister of > Agriculture, Fisheries and Food [1968] A.C. 997 which is a landmark in modern administration law.

Professor Paul Craig, in Administrative Law (4th Edition, 1999) at page 507 explains how the Courts can shape the proper exercise of discretion by public bodies.

> First, the courts can impose controls on the way in which the discretion is exercised, with the objective of ensuring that there has been no failure to exercise the discretion. Limitations on delegation, and on the extent to which an authority can proceed through policies or rules, are the two main controls of this type. Secondly, constraints can be placed upon an administrative authority in order to ensure that there has been no misuse of power. The judiciary can impose substantive limits on the power of an administrative body on the ground that it is thereby ensuring that the body does not act illegally, outside the remit of its power. Thirdly, the court can develop principles to make sure that administrative authority does not misuse its power by acting irrationally, thereby placing substantive limits on the power of that authority.

Is the President's decision a stumbling block to grant relief to the Appellant?

The main argument of learned Deputy Solicitor General is that, in view of the President's decision contained in R15, the Appellant's application must be dismissed on futility because even if P3 and R14 are declared null and void, R15 will survive. I am unable to agree with this argument on several reasons.

What is the relief sought by the Appellant from the Court of Appeal? The Appellant sought only to quash P3 by a writ of certiorari. Even if R14 and R15 survive, there is no impediment for the Court to quash P3 by way of a writ certiorari.

In Flying Officer Ratnayake v. Commander of Air Force and Others [2008] 2 Sri LR 162, after a Court of Inquiry, the Commander of the Air Force recommended that the commission of the petitioner who was an officer of the Air Force be withdrawn, and the President approved it. The petitioner filed an application in the Court of Appeal seeking to quash the recommendation by certiorari and to compel the respondents by mandamus to hold a Court Martial in respect of the charges levelled against him. De Abrew J. with the agreement of Sripavan J. (later C.J.) quashed the recommendation by certiorari since a recommendation to withdraw the commission of the petitioner could not have been made upon findings of a Court of Inquiry but declined to issue mandamus.

Rights of the parties shall be determined at the commencement of the action

Firstly, it is well settled law that rights of the parties shall be determined at the time of the institution of the action. The Appellant filed the application in the Court of Appeal on 01.10.2013 seeking to quash the decision of the Commander of the Army contained in P3. Subsequent to the filing of this application, the Commander of the Army wrote R14 to the secretary of the Ministry of Defence on 18.10.2013. Based on R14, the decision contained in R15 dated 28.11.2013 was taken by the President. R14 and R15 came into being after the Appellant had filed the application in the Court of Appeal.

Decision as a deterrence

Secondly, if a decision of a public authority is plainly ultra vires, even if quashing it would not give any relief to the suiter, but would only be an academic exercise, the Court would not act in vain by formally quashing the said decision by certiorari as it would inter alia impress upon the other bodies who discharge functions of public nature that the same fate will befall on them if they also behave in the same manner. It will act as a deterrence.

Clive Lewis in Judicial Remedies in Public Law (2nd Edition, London Sweet & Maxwell, 2000) at page 342 states:

> Even if there is no point in granting remedies such as certiorari, so far as the particular applicant is concerned, there may still be a need to clarify the law or give guidance for decision-makers in the future. A court may grant a declaration setting out the true legal position, or may give judgment clarifying the law but without making a formal declaration.

In the case of Sundarkaran v. Bharathi [1989] 1 Sri LR 46, the petitioner-Appellant filed an application seeking certiorari and mandamus after being denied a liquor license for the year 1987. However, by the time the matter reached the Supreme Court, it had become purely academic since the year 1987 had already passed. Nonetheless, whilst allowing the appeal, Amarasinghe J. took the view that "The court will not be acting in vain in quashing the determination not to issue the licence for 1987 because the right of the petitioner to be fully and fairly heard in future applications is being recognised." Similar conclusion was reached by Sripavan J. (later C.J.) in Nimalasiri v. Divisional Secretary, Galewela [2003] 3 Sri LR 85.

Are recommendations amenable to writ jurisdiction?

Learned Deputy Solicitor General further submits that R14 contains a recommendation and not a decision, and recommendations are not amenable to writ jurisdiction. The Court of Appeal has also held that "In any event, R14 is only a recommendation which is not subject to a writ of certiorari." As I have already stated the decision in R15 is based on the misleading recommendation contained in R14.

In Flying Officer Ratnayake v. Commander of Air Force and Others (supra), De Abrew J. with the agreement of Sripavan J. (later C.J.) quashed the recommendation of the Commander of the Air Force to the President by a writ of certiorari.

In Captain Nawarathna v. Major General Sarath Fonseka and Others [2009] 1 Sri LR 190 at 202, Ratnayake J. (with S.N. Silva C.J. and Tilakawardane J. agreeing) upheld the decision of the Court of Appeal to issue writs of certiorari to quash the recommendations:

> I note that the Court of Appeal had decided to grant partial relief by issuing writ of certiorari to set aside the recommendation made by the 1st Respondent to withdraw the commission and discharge the Petitioner from the army and a writ of certiorari to quash the recommendation to dismiss the Petitioner, which decisions will stand.

The frontiers of the administrative law have expanded over the years. Hence even recommendations of public authorities can be subject to writ jurisdiction provided they make serious inroads into the rights of the people.

In Sri Lanka Telecom Ltd. v. Human Rights Commission of Sri Lanka [2020] 1 Sri LR 212, the Supreme Court held that recommendations of the Human Rights Commission attract writ jurisdiction. In the course of the Judgment, De Abrew J. at page 220 declared:

> If a recommendation of a public body affects the right of an individual, Superior Courts, in the exercise of their writ jurisdiction, have the power to quash such a recommendation by issuing a writ of certiorari.

In furtherance of this positive development in law, it was held in David Raja v. Minister of Fisheries and Aquatic Resources Development and Others [2020] 1 Sri LR 310 at 314 that:

if a recommendation of a public body protects the rights of an individual, the superior Courts, in the exercise of writ jurisdiction, have the power to compel the enforcement of such a recommendation by issuing a writ of mandamus, if the Court is satisfied that the recommendation is made on compelling grounds.

Conclusion

I answer the questions of law on which leave to appeal was granted in the affirmative and set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 25.03.2019. The decision of the Commander of the Army contained in P3 dated 13.08.2012 is quashed by a writ of certiorari. The petitioner is entitled to costs of this Court and the Court of Appeal.

This is an appeal against the Judgment of the Provincial High Court of Ampara Case No. HC/AMP/APP/437/2016.

The Accused-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Appellant) was convicted and sentenced in the Magistrates Court of Dehiattakandiya in Case No. 1780 for driving a bus bearing No. EP NA - 6856 in a rash or negligent manner, and causing the death of a person which is an offence punishable under Section 298 of the Penal Code, and four other counts under the Motor Traffic Act, which stated that the Appellant;

1. failed to avoid an accident, an offence punishable under Section 149(1) read with Sections 214(1)(a) and 224 of the Motor Traffic Act
2. driving the said bus negligently or without reasonable consideration for other persons using the highway, an offence punishable under Section 151(3) read with Section 214(1)(a) and 217(2) of the Motor Traffic Act

3. driving the said motor vehicle in a manner as to cause obstruction to other traffic, an offence punishable under Section 148(1) read with Section 214(1)(a) and 224 of the Motor Traffic Act, and
4. driving the said motor vehicle on a highway recklessly or in a dangerous manner or at a dangerous speed, an offence punishable under Section 151(2) read with Section 217(1) of the Motor Traffic Act.

At the conclusion of the trial the learned Magistrate by Judgment dated 08/03/2016 convicted and sentenced the Appellant on all five counts. Prior to the sentencing, the learned Magistrate observed that the Appellant had no previous convictions.

The sentence imposed on the Appellant is found in journal entry dated 23/03/2016. The learned Magistrate has dealt with each of the five counts as charged in the following manner;

Count 1 - 12 months Rigorous Imprisonment suspended for 12 months and Rs. 1500/- fine in default 06 months imprisonment.

Count 2 - fine of Rs. 3000/- in default 01 month imprisonment.

Count 3 - fine of Rs. 15000/-in default 06 months imprisonment.

Count 4 - fine of Rs. 3000/- in default 01 month imprisonment.

Count 5 - fine of Rs. 15000/- in default 06 months imprisonment.

Thereafter the Court having considered the mitigatory circumstances pleaded on behalf of the Appellant, proceeded to cancel his driving licence. The Appellant was also ordered to pay compensation in a sum of Rs. 100,000/-.

Being aggrieved by the said conviction and sentence the Appellant by Petition of Appeal dated 06/04/2016 appealed to the Provincial High Court of Ampara (the Appellate Court). The Appellate Court by Judgment dated 26/10/2017 dismissed the Appeal subject to a variation of the fine imposed on count 2 and 4. The Appellant sought Special Leave to Appeal from this Court and was granted leave on the following questions of law.

1. Whether the prosecution has established a charge under Section 298 beyond reasonable doubt.
2. In the circumstances of this case, is the custodial sentence imposed is excessive.
3. Has the learned High Court Judge erred in law by cancelling the driving licence.

When this matter was taken up for argument, the learned Counsel for the Appellant submitted that he would not contest the conviction entered against the Appellant by Judgment dated 08/03/2016, but would confine this application only to the sentence dealing with the cancellation of the Appellant's driving licence. It was also brought to the notice of Court and as borne out by the case record, the prison sentence imposed on count 01 by the impugned Judgement dated 08/03/2016, had been suspended by the learned Magistrate. In the aforesaid circumstances, the only question of law before this Court is to investigate into the validity of the sentence dealing with the cancellation of the driving licence.

The position of the learned Senior State Counsel is that in terms of Section 136(1)(a) of the Motor Traffic Act, the learned Magistrate was acting within the law when the cancellation of the driving licence was imposed. The learned Counsel for the State relies on Section 136(1)(a) of the said Act to substantiate her claim.

Section 136(1)(a) of the Motor Traffic Act which deals with the suspension or cancellation of driving licences, reads as follows;

(1) Subject to the provisions of Subsection (2), any court before which a person is convicted of any offence under this Act, or of any offence under any other written law committed in connection with the driving of a motor vehicle, may in addition to any other punishment which it may lawfully impose for that offence-

(a) if the person convicted is the holder of a driving licence issued or deemed to be issued under this Act, suspend the licence for a specified period not exceeding two years, or cancel the licence; or

(b) if the person convicted is not the holder of a driving licence declare him to be disqualified for obtaining a driving licence for a specified period.

It is noted that the learned Magistrate when cancelling the driving licence has not referred to an offence to which such cancellation would apply, but has merely cancelled the licence, as observed in Journal Entry dated 23/03/2016.

Although the Senior State Counsel in her written submissions dated 03/07/2018 stated that, the learned Magistrate was acting within the law as defined in Section 136(1)(a) when enforcing the cancellation of the driving licence, such cancellation does not relate to any of the offences brought against the Appellant.

In terms of Subsection (2) and (3) of Section 136, a prior conviction endorsement of an offence which relates to Section 151 of the Motor Traffic Act, Section 298 of the Penal Code or correspond to the provisions of such offence/ offences is a prerequisite for a suspension or a cancellation of a driving licence to take effect.

Section 136 subsection (2) and (3) reads as follows;

(2) Where the driving licence of any person convicted of the offence of contravening any of the provisions of Subsections (1) and (2) of Section 151, or of any offence in connection with the driving of a motor vehicle punishable under Section 272 or Section 328 of the Penal Code, contains at the time of such conviction endorsements, made after the 1st day of January, 1941, under the Motor Car Ordinance, No. 45 of 1938, or made under this Act in respect of not less than two and not more than four previous convictions of any of those offences or of the offence of contravening any of the provisions of any such enactment corresponding to the provisions of Subsections (1) and (2) of Section 151, the court shall either cancel the licence or suspend the licence for a stated period, which shall be not less than six months nor more than two years; and where the licence contains at the time of such conviction endorsements so made in respect of five previous convictions of any of the offences aforesaid, the Court shall cancel the licence.

(3) Where the driving licence of any person convicted of any offence in connection with the driving of a motor vehicle punishable under Section 298 or Section 329 of the Penal Code contains at the time of such conviction endorsements, made after the 1st day of January, 1941, under the Motor Car Ordinance, No. 45 of 1938, or made under this Act, in respect of two previous convictions of any of those offences, the Court shall cancel the licence.

(Emphasis is mine)

Section 136 Subsection (2), deals with the suspension or cancellation of a driving licence of any person convicted of the offence of contravening any of the provisions of Subsections (1) and (2) of Section 151 of the Motor Traffic Act or of any offences in connection with the driving of a motor vehicle punishable under Section 272 or Section 328 of the Penal Code. When previous convictions of an offence contravening any of the said provisions, which are not less than two and not more than four, the Court is mandated to either cancel the licence or suspend the licence for a stated period, which shall not be less than six months nor more than two years, and at the time of such conviction where the licence contain endorsements so made in respect of five previous convictions of any of the offences aforesaid, the Court shall cancel the licence.

Subsection (3) of the said Act deals with the driving licence of any person convicted of any offence in connection with the driving a motor vehicle punishable under Section 298 or Section 329 of the Penal Code. An endorsement of such conviction, in two previous convictions of any of the said offences, the Court is mandated to cancel the licence.

Accordingly, in terms of Section 136 Subsection (2) and (3) of the said Act, in addition to any other punishment which the court may lawfully impose, the Court may impose a suspension or a cancellation of a driving licence taking into consideration, the number of previous convictions of any of the offences of contravening the provisions of Subsections (1) and (2) of Section 151 or the offence of contravening any of the provisions of any such enactment corresponding to the provisions of those sections and also of a person convicted of any offence in connection with the driving of a motor vehicle punishable under Section 298 or Section 329 of the Penal Code.

Therefore, in the instant case a cancellation of the driving licence cannot be enforced under Section 151(2) of the Motor Traffic Act or Section 298 of the Penal Code as the Appellant has no prior conviction endorsements as defined in Subsection (2) or (3) of Section 136.

The sentences imposed by Court upon conviction for the aforesaid offences committed by the Appellant is lawful. However, prior to the said cancellation, the Court was aware that the Appellant had no previous conviction endorsements. Therefore, a cancellation of the diving licence in addition to the sentences imposed as charged, is not according to law. Furthermore, the learned Magistrate when imposing the cancellation of the driving licence gave no reasons justifying the said cancellation nor made any reference to the effect that the cancellation was in addition to the sentence imposed to a particular offence to which the said cancellation related to. In the circumstances, it is abundantly clear that the learned Magistrate was not acting within the law when imposing a cancellation of the driving licence of the Appellant.

In view of this position, the third ground on which leave was granted by this Court has to be answered in the affirmative. As mentioned earlier in this Judgment the Court was not called upon to answer the questions of law No. 1 and 2. In any event for the reasons stated earlier, the second ground on which leave was granted would not arise.

Accordingly, the Order dated 23/03/2016, cancelling the driving licence of the Appellant is set aside. The Registrar of the Magistrates Court of Dehiattakandiya is directed to inform the Commissioner of Motor Traffic of the order setting aside the cancellation of the Appellant's driving licence. The Appellant may apply to the Commissioner of Motor Traffic for a new driving licence in accordance with the provisions of the Motor Traffic Act.

Subject to the said variation in sentence, the Judgment dated 26/10/2017 of the Provincial High Court of Ampara, Case No. HC/AMP/APP/437/16 is affirmed.

Appeal partly allowed. No costs ordered.

S. THURAIRAJA, PC, J.

The Accused-Appellant-Appellant preferred this appeal against the judgment of the Court of dated 17th February 2017 and the special leave was granted on 13th February 2020 on the questions of law set out in paragraphs 12(i), 12(iv) and 12(vii) of the Petition dated 29th March 2017. On the argument day, the Counsel for the Appellant and learned Additional Solicitor General submitted that they would confine their submissions to questions of law no. (i) and (vii) of paragraph 12 of the Petition stated as follows.

> 12(i) Did the learned Trial Judge err in law by failure to consider that the items of circumstantial evidence placed before him were not sufficient to prove the prosecution's case against the appellant beyond reasonable doubt?

12 (vii) Did their Lordships of the Court of Appeal err in law in holding that the Trial Judge was correct in disbelieving and rejecting the dock statement in the light of the prosecution evidence?

I find it pertinent to set out the material facts of the case prior to addressing the question of law before us.

The Accused-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "Appellant") to the present appeal, Jayasinghe Mudiyanselage Roshan Bandaranayake, was indicted before the High Court of Nuwara Eliya (hereinafter referred to as the "High Court") by the Honourable Attorney General on the charge of committing the murder of Wakwella Liyana Arachchige Neela Malani Wakwella on or about 27th February 2005 an offence punishable under Section 296 of the Penal Code.

The said Appellant opted to be tried before the High Court without a jury. After the conclusion of the prosecution case, the Appellant chose to make a dock statement and closed his case. The learned High Court Judge convicted the Appellant on the indictment and sentenced him to death. Being dissatisfied with the said conviction and sentence, the Appellant had preferred an appeal to the Court of Appeal and raised the following grounds of appeal.

(i) The items of circumstantial evidence are not sufficient to prove the prosecution's case against the Appellant beyond reasonable doubt.

(ii) The rejection of dock statement is wrongful and the learned High Court Judge has failed to correctly apply principles governing the evaluation of a dock statement.

After the conclusion of the arguments, the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal delivered the judgment on 17th February 2017, dismissing the Appeal and affirming the conviction and sentence of the learned High Court Judge. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Court of Appeal, the Appellant had preferred the present appeal before the Supreme Court.

As per the submitted facts of the case, the deceased Neela Malani Wakwella was the legally married wife of the Appellant, and according to the evidence of the mother of the Appellant, Kumarihamy (PW2), who was called as a prosecution witness at the High Court trial, the deceased and the Appellant lived in a house in close proximity to the house of Kumarihamy. The Police had commenced the investigation into the sudden death of the deceased Neela Malani Wakwella as a case of suicide by strangulation, but later, her husband (the Appellant) was arrested as the suspect for committing murder of the said deceased.

The entirety of the prosecution's case is based on circumstantial evidence placed before the High Court; therefore, it is important to conduct a proper evaluation of the said circumstantial evidence in order to address the first question of law submitted in this present case. During the trial before the High Court, the prosecution had relied on the evidence of the witnesses namely Godella Waththa Arachchilage Ranjith Dharmasiri (PW 1), Jayasinghe Mudiyanselage Kumarihamy (PW 2), Weerasinghe Mudiyanselage Podi Appuhamy (PW 6), Doctor Ashoka Bandara Senevirathne Consultant Judicial Medical Officer Kandy (PW 16), Retired Inspector of Police Marabedde Rathnayake Tiyunis Gunathilake (PW 9) and Widyarathne Ganithayalage Wasantha Kumari Premaratne (PW 8).

According to the evidence of Kumarihamy (PW 2), who is the mother of the Appellant, the deceased was living alone with the Appellant, on the day the incident occurred. As narrated by PW 2, at around 8.30 pm on the day of the incident, the Appellant had visited her on his way to the paddy field to borrow a torch from her. She further testified that upon hearing the cries of the Appellant around 11.30 pm following his return from the paddy field, she had hastily made her way to the Appellant's house to inquire. At this juncture, PW1 had seen a piece of wire hooked onto the beam of the house and another piece of wire that encircled the deceased's neck. She further testified that she held the deceased by her legs, and when she attempted to bring her down, the wire from which the deceased was hanging was broken. During this time, the Appellant was outside the house crying for help from the neighbours.

According to the evidence of witness Dharmasiri (PW 1- the Grama Seva Niladhari), he had gone to the house of the deceased on the day in question around midnight on information received from a neighbour. PW 1 found the Appellant seated on a mat outside the house, and discovered the deceased collapsed near a chair, with one of her legs still propped on the said chair. He also observed a piece of wire tied to the roof. He was informed that the deceased had committed suicide by hanging herself. He then had taken steps to the Police about the death by telephone.

The above descriptions of the scene were confirmed by the evidence of the Inspector of Police Gunathilake, who was attached to Walapane Police Station. According to his evidence, the information with regard to the suicide of Wakwella Liyana Arachchige Neela Malani Wakwella was received by the police station around 2.40 A.M. from the Grama Niladhari Dharmasiri, and he had gone to the scene of crime around 3.10 A.M. with a team of police officers consisting of PC 40442, PC 15890, RPC 37718 and the Inquirer into Sudden Deaths (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "ISP") of the area. Whilst confirming the position of the dead body with the Grama Niladhari, this witness had further observed a piece of wire near the body of the deceased in addition to the wire hanging from the roof. This witness had further observed a wallet with several letters kept on a cabinet closer to the body. Since the witness had observed some significance with the said wallet, he had inspected it and found 27 well-packed love letters written by one Kumari to the Appellant, Roshan Bandaranayake. He had taken the said letters into his custody, and the said letters were identified at the trial before the High Court. According to the witness, the wallet was empty save for the letters.

Even though he had arrived at the scene with the ISP, he felt suspicious of the nature of the wires and the letters found inside the wallet. Thereby, he requested the inquirer to refer the matter to a Magisterial Inquiry.

The prosecution had relied on the evidence of Wasantha Kumari Premarathne (PW 8) to explain the 27 love letters found in close proximity to the dead body of the deceased. According to the evidence of Wasantha Kumari, she had an affair with the Appellant, Roshan Bandaranayake, in or about 2003 and admitted to writing letters to him. PW 8 had identified the letters produced before the court by the prosecution. However, according to this witness, she was unaware of the fact that the Appellant was a married person when she engaged in the affair. When the wife of the accused (the deceased in this case) visited her along with her mother to confront the witness, on her father's advice PW 8 worshipped the deceased to apologise and express her regret, promising to end the affair with the Appellant. According to the witness, since then, she has never written or maintained any relationship with the Appellant, and the letters she received from the Appellant were burnt by her.

As it was submitted, the most important evidence of the prosecution was the evidence of the Consultant Judicial Medical Officer A.B. Seneviratne (PW 16), who held the post-mortem inquiry of the deceased Neela Malani Wakwella. At the post-mortem, Dr. Senevirathne stated that a total of 21 wounds were discovered on the body of the deceased, and there were multiple abrasions on both sides of the neck of the deceased. The Judicial Medical Officer (hereinafter referred to as 'the JMO'), in giving evidence at the trial, confirmed that the death was caused by manual strangulation.

In his evidence, the JMO categorically rejected the contention that this death was a suicide.

ප්‍ර: මෙය එල්ලීමෙන් සිදුකර ගනු ලැබූ සිය දිවි නසා ගැනීමක් ලෙස ඔබට සාක්ෂි හමු උනා ද?

උ: නැත.

ප්‍ර: ඔබතුමාගේ ඒ මතයට පදනම් වූ හේතුවක් තිබෙනවාද?

ප්‍ර: ඒ මොකක්ද?

උ: මා ඉහතින් සඳහන් කළ ආකාරයට ඇයගේ ගෙලෙහි සීරීම් තුවාල දක්නට ලැබුණා. ඉදිරිපස සිට පැත්තට වන්නට. ගෙලෙහි වම් පැත්තට වන්නට සීරීම් තුවාල වැඩි ප%මාණයක් දක්නට ලැබුණා. එමෙන්ම මෙම සීරීම් තුවාල විශාල ප%මාණයේ සීරීම් තුවාල නෙමෙයි. 1 වන තුවාලය සෙන්ටි මීටර් 3.52 යි. අනෙක් හැම එකක්ම කුඩා සීරීම් තුවාල. සමහර ඒවා සිරස් අතට සහ සිරසට ආනතව පිහිටා තිබුණා. එමෙන්ම එම සීරීම් තුවාල වලට පිටින් ඇති මාංශ පේශි කැපීමක් දක්නට ලැබුණා. උගුරු දණ්ඩේ හග්නයක් දක්නට ලැබුනා. එවැනි සීරීම් තුවාල ගෙල වැළලා ගෙන මිය යන අයගේ දක්නට ලැබෙන්නේ නැහැ.

During cross-examination, the JMO stated that,

ප්‍ර: මම නැවත වරක් යෝජනා කරනවා. ඇයම ගෙල වැළලා ගෙන මෙම මරණය සිදු වුණේ කියලා?

Further, the JMO specifically rejected all suggestions to the effect that the wounds discovered on deceased's body were self-inflicted as a result of sudden change of mind subsequent to the deceased's decision to hang herself. In cross-examination, ප්‍ර: මේ සීරීම් තුවාල ගෙල ලා ගන්න කොට ඇති වෙන්නේ නැද්ද දගලන අවස්ථාවේදි ඇය විසින්ම මේ සීරීම් තුවාල කර ගන්න හැකියාවක් නැද්ද ගෙල ලා ගෙන මැරෙන්න හදන අවස්ථාවක්.

ප්‍ර: එල්ලිලා පහතට ඇදෙන අවස්ථාවක සීරීම් තුවාල ඇති වීමට හැකියාවක් නැද්ද?

උ: මේ ආකාරයට ඇති වෙන්නේ නැහැ.

Further, he specifically rejected all the suggestions to the effect that the wounds discovered on the body were caused due to falling as a result of the breaking of wires.

ප්‍ර: එම තැනැත්තිය, මිය ගිය තැනැත්තිය බිමට වැටුණා නම් වෛද්‍යතුමා කියන සීරීම් තුවාල ඇති විය හැකියි නේද ?

ප්‍ර: උඩකින් බිමට වැටෙන කොට මේ දණහිසට තුවාල සිදු වන්නේ නැද්ද?

උ: විය හැකියි, නමුත් මා නිරීක්ෂණය කළේ මියගිය අයෙකුගේ සිරුරේ තියෙන තුවාල නෙමෙයි. අංක 10 වශයෙන් මම පැහැදිලිව ලකුණක් කළා.

ප්‍ර: මෙය මියගිය තැනැත්තිය උඩක සිට බිමට වැටීමෙන් සිදු විය හැකිද?

උ: පුද්ගලයෙක් ඉහල තැනක සිට පහලට වැටුනාම සීරීම් තුවාල ඇති වෙන්න පුළුවන්. ඊට වැඩිය තැලීම් තුවාල වැඩියි. වැළ මිට, වළලුක දණහිසේ තුවාලවල එවැනි තැලීම් දක්නට ලැබුණේ නැහැ. කලවයේ පමණක් තැලීම් තුවාල මා සඳහන් කරලා තියෙනවා. එය හරස් අතට පිහිටා තිබූ තැලීම් තුවාලයක්.

Moreover, the JMO, giving evidence at the trial, refuted the contention that one of the marks found across the neck of the deceased was a mark caused while the deceased was alive.

ප්‍ර: ඔබතුමා සඳහන් කළා අංක 10 තුවාලය සම්බන්ධයෙන්?

උ: බෙල්ල ප%දේශයේ පිහිටලා තිබුණ ලකුණක් වශයෙන් නිරීක්ෂණය කලේ.

ප්‍ර: එය කවර ආකාරයෙන් ඇති විය හැකි තුවාලයක්ද?

උ: මෙය බෙල්ල මැද හරස් අතට පිහිටලා තිබුණා. නමුත් මෙහි එලෙස ජීවත්ව ඉන්න කෙනෙකුට ගෙල තොණ්ඩුවකින් සිර කිරීමේදී ඇති වන අභ්‍යන්තර තැළුම් තුවාල දක්නට ලැබුණේ නැහැ. ඒ නිසා මට මෙම ලකුණ ජීවත්ව ඉන්න අවස්ථාවේදී මෙම තැනැත්තිය ජීවත්ව සිටින අවස්ථාවක යෙදූ බලයක් හේතු කොට ගෙන ඇති වූ ලකුණක් ලෙස සඳහන් කරන්න බැහැ.

Further, the JMO confirmed the possibility of the above-mentioned mark being caused by the wire found at the place of the incident and marked as a production in Court. Therefore, it is submitted that the wound no.10 found on the body (15cm horizontal mark across the front middle of the neck) of the deceased supports the proposition that the Appellant attempted to hang the body using the wire subsequent to the commission of murder in order to stage it as a case of suicide. In addition, the JMO giving evidence confirmed that there was evidence of a struggle, evidence of the deceased's mouth being covered shut, and evidence of a blow to the head.

උ: මැය කෙසඟ සිරුරක් තිබුණු තැනැත්තියක්. එවැනි තැනැත්තියක් ඒ තරම් ප්‍රතිරෝධය පෑමේ බලය අඩුයි. එනමුත් ඇය දගලා ඇති බවට ලකුණු යොදා තිබෙනවා. 11 සිට 21 දක්වා ඇති තුවාළ පිහිටලා තිබුණේ ඉහළ බාහුවේ සහ පහළ බාහුවේ නෙරා ඇති වැල මිට, දණහිස, වළලු කර ආශ්‍රිතව. එවැනි අවස්ථාවක ඇය යම්කිසි ආකාරයෙන් දැගලීමක් කර ඇති බවක් පැහැදිලිව පේනවා. එමෙන්ම අංක 2 සහ 3 තුවාල මුඛය ආශ්‍රිතව ඇති තැල්මක්. එය මුඛය වැසීමට පාවිච්චි කලා. ඊට අමතරව අංක 1 තුවාලය හිසට යම්කිසි විදිහකින් පහරක් වැදුණු තුවාලයක්.

I am of the view that in the light of the above evidence by the JMO, the contention raised by the Appellant to the effect that the death was a case of suicide becomes negatory. Further, the contention submitted by the Appellant to the effect that the wounds were the result of a fall or an attempt to reverse the decision to commit suicide also becomes nugatory on the above evidence. Furthermore, considering the number of wounds on the body of the deceased and their nature as explained by the JMO, together with the evidence that shows the effect of a struggle, the deceased's mouth being covered, and a blow to the deceased's head, the irresistible inference one can draw is that this is a clear case of murder. As it was submitted in the evidence of the JMO, the 15 cm mark found on the front-middle portion of the neck of the deceased, which, in his opinion, is a mark created by an act subsequent to the death of the victim or a post-mortem injury, supports the contention that the Appellant attempted to stage an act of suicide after committing the murder.

In this case, as per page 349 of the appeal brief, it is very clearly indicated in the post-mortem report that the signs of hypostasis were visible on the posterior part of the body. However, according to the evidence of PW1, upon her arrival, the body position was face down on the floor.

උ: පුටුව උඩ කකුලක් තිබුණා. මුහුණ වැහෙන පරිදි වැටී තිබුණා.

As per the evidence of PW1, if the body was face down on the floor, it is impossible to have evidence of hypostasis (post mortem lividity- is the result of sedimenting of the blood in a cadaver due to gravity. It commences as soon as the circulation ceases. This appears and apparent after 30-60 minutes after death) on the posterior part of the body. Therefore, it is very clear from this evidence that the body was shifted after the death occurred. It is also clear that the body was lying somewhere else face up for a considerable period of time before it was shifted to the position in which it was found.

As it was discussed above, the prosecution heavily relied on the circumstantial evidence in establishing the prosecution's case, which can be summarized as follows. In Sigera vs Attorney General (2011 1 SLR page 201) the Court held that,

> "In order to base a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the evidence must be consistent with the guilt of the accused and inconsistent with any other reasonable hypotheses of his innocence. In order to justify an inference of guilt from the circumstantial evidence the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypotheses than that of his guilt. (Vide. King Vs Abeywickrama, King Vs Appuhamy, as held in Podisingho Vs King, that in the case of circumstantial evidence it is the duty of the trial judge to tell the jury that such evidence must be totally inconsistent with the innocence of the accused and must only be consistent with his guilt. In Don Sunny Vs Attorney General, it was held that proved items of circumstantial evidence when taken together must irresistibly point towards the only inference that the accused committed the offence and that if an inference can be drawn which is consistent with the innocence of the accused the accused cannot be convicted."

In this case, based on the evidence of the JMO, the following was established: the cause of death was due to manual strangulation and not suicide; the external injuries found on the body were compatible with injuries inflicted when resisting manual strangulation; there were no internal injuries found corresponding to the mark found on the neck; and that it was a post-mortem injury. Even though the scene of the crime was arranged to display that the deceased had a fall after she hanged herself, the injuries on her body were not compatible with a fall but instead with resistance to manual strangulation, and the scene of the crime did not match a version of events where the deceased fell after hanging herself due to the fact that her leg was still propped on a chair. According to the evidence of Kumarihamy (the mother of the Appellant) only the Appellant and the deceased lived in their house. The 27 letters inside the wallet found in close proximity to the body of the deceased were undisturbed and well-packed when recovered by the Police. The recovered letters referred to an affair between the Appellant and witness Kumari, which, according to PW 8, ended two years ago, and consequently, there is no purpose for the appearance of these letters on the scene of a crime unless the person who placed them at the scene of crime wanted to introduce them in order to mislead the investigation.

For the reasons set out above, we see no merit in the first ground of appeal raised by the learned Counsel for the Appellant.

As the final ground of appeal, it was argued by the learned Counsel for the Appellant that the rejection of the dock statement is wrongful and the learned High Court Judge has failed to correctly apply principles governing the evaluation of a dock statement. As discussed above, the Appellant, when explained his rights at the conclusion of the prosecution case, opted to make a dock statement. In his dock statement, the Appellant took up the position that when he returned home from the paddy field at around 11.30 P.M., he found the deceased collapsed near a small chair. He speaks of making an attempt to lift her and, at that time, observed a rope around her neck. At that stage, having been frightened, he called for his mother. No other evidence was placed on behalf of the Appellant before the High Court, and the defence's case was limited to the dock statement.

It is appropriate at this stage to consider the approach adopted by the learned High Court Judge in light of Supreme Court's decisions. In Queen V. Kularatne 71 NLR 529 at page 531, it was held that: -

> "When an unsworn statement is made by the accused from the dock, the jurors must be informed that such statement must be looked upon as evidence, subject however to the infirmity that the accused had deliberately refrained from giving sworn testimony. But the jury must also be directed that

(a) if they believe the unsworn statement it must be acted upon,

(b) if it raises a reasonable doubt in their minds about the case for the prosecution, the defence must succeed, and

(c) that it should not be used against another accused.''

As observed by me, the learned High Court Judge was mindful of the medical evidence led at the trial and appropriately gave due consideration to the dock statement in his judgment (at pages 14-17) before rejecting it. In view of the above, it is abundantly clear that the learned High Court Judge had adopted the correct approach in evaluating the dock statement. Therefore, I see no merit in this argument.

Further, same and identical questions of law were raised in his appeal by the Appellant before the Court of Appeal too. The learned Judges of the Court of Appeal dismissed the Appellant's appeal on 17th February 2017. I perused the judgment of the Court of Appeal and I am of the view that the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal comprehensively analysed both grounds of appeal, submissions made by the parties and had come to a correct conclusion by dismissing the Appellant's appeal.

Decision

After careful consideration of the submissions made, facts and circumstances of the instant case as discussed above, there is no basis to interfere with the decision of the learned High Court Judge of Nuwara Eliya and the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal. I hereby dismiss this Appeal, by answering the first and second questions of law negatively. I affirm the conviction and the sentence given by the learned High Court Judge of Nuwara Eliya dated 02nd November 2010 and the judgment of the learned of the Court of Appeal dated 17th February 2017.

Appeal Dismissed.

ARGUED ON: 08.07.2021

DECIDED ON: 13.09. 2023

Aluwihare, PC., J

1) The 2nd Accused -Appellant -Petitioner Appellant [hereinafter referred to as the 2nd Accused] was charged before the magistrate's court of Mahawa for having manufactured and distributed to the 1st Accused -Respondent-Respondent [herein after the 1st Accused] a bottle of 'Coca-Cola' containing impurities and/or foreign matter, in violation of Section 2(1)(b) read with Section2(1)(a) of the Food Act No.26 of 1980 as amended, an offence punishable under Section 18(1)(a) read with Section 14(1)(a) of the said Act.
2) The 2nd accused was found guilty by the learned magistrate after trial and accordingly a fine of Rs.10,000/-was imposed with a default sentence of 6 months imprisonment.
3) Aggrieved by the conviction and the sentence, an appeal was lodged before the High Court and the learned High Court Judge delivered judgement affirming the conviction and the sentence and dismissed the appeal.
4) The 2nd Accused sought special leave to appeal from this court against the judgement of the High Court and special leave was granted on the following question of law;

   "Has the learned High Court Judge erred in failing to consider that the Mahawa Magistrate's Court is not vested with the jurisdiction to hear and determine the case against the 2nd accused appellant-petitioner?"

Factual Background

5) On 01.03.2009, Public Health Inspector [of Nan-Neriya] detected a [sealed] bottle of Coca-Cola, a product of the 2nd Accused establishment, containing impurities and/or foreign matter. After attending to the preliminary investigations, the bottle of Coca -Cola was forwarded to the Government Analyst. The Analyst, upon analyzing the contents, had detected foreign matter, which has been referred to as 'කලු පැහැති ලප සහිත සුදු පැහැති අවලම්බිත ආගන්තුක ද්‍රව්‍යය' suspended impurities in the liquid and had expressed the opinion that the contents were not fit for human consumption. It should be noted that what led to the detection was the information provided by a person in charge of running a canteen who had observed that the bottle, which had been supplied to her by the distributor of Coca-Cola in the area, had some foreign matter in it.

6) After the investigations, both the distributor of Coca-Cola [the 1st accused] and the producer [the 2nd Accused] were charged before the magistrate's court. The 1st accused pleaded guilty, whereas the 2nd accused contested the charge.

7) The only legal issue that came up for consideration before us was whether the Magistrate's Court of Mahawa had jurisdiction to hear and determine the charge against the 1st Accused.

8) The learned President's Counsel argued that the charge against the 2nd Accused was, for manufacturing a bottle of Coca-Cola that contained impurities. It was pointed out that the manufacturing of the bottle of Coca-Cola concerned, took place at Biyagama Thekkawatte, which is not within the local limits of the magistrate's Court of Mahawa. The State did not dispute this contention; thus, it was common ground that Biyagama, Thekkawatte, was not within the local limits of the Mahawa Magistrate's court.

9) It was the contention on behalf of the 2nd Accused that the evidence led at the trial had clearly established that the seal of bottle of Coca-Cola was intact and the evidence showed that it had not been opened. Thus, it was argued that no consequences of the offending act alleged, flowed to the local jurisdiction of the Mahawa Magistrate's Court. It was further contended by the learned President's Counsel that Section 129 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act No. 15 of 1979 as amended [hereinafter the 'CPC'] would have applied if the bottle of Coca-Cola was opened and consumed, as one could argue that the consequences of the act of manufacturing had ensued or flowed to the 'act of consuming' thereby, by operation of law, jurisdiction to try the offence would have vested with both; the magistrate's court within the local limits of which the act of manufacturing took place and also with the magistrate's court within whose jurisdiction such consequence has ensued .

This can be easily gleaned from the illustration (a) to Section 129 of the CPC;

A is wounded within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Magistrate's court of X and dies within those of the Magistrate's Court of Z; the offence of culpable Homicide of A may be inquired into by the Magistrate's Court of either X or Z. [emphasis added]

The contention of the learned President's Counsel, in my view, is correct and Section 128 of the CPC requires the offence to be inquired into and tried by the court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed. The learned State Counsel also did not dispute this position. The learned President's Counsel in his submission relied on Section 9(a) and Section 128(a) of the CPC and argued that a Magistrate's Court shall only try offences committed wholly or in part within its local limits.

10) The principal issue before this court, however, is whether the lack of jurisdiction on the Mahawa Magistrate's Court to try the offence, as argued by the learned President's Counsel, is 'patent' or 'latent'. In determining the issue, it would be necessary to consider the submission made by the learned President's Counsel regarding the territorial jurisdiction of a Magistrate's Court, in the backdrop of the applicable provisions of the CPC in conjunction with the jurisprudence.

11) The contention of the learned State Counsel was that, ordinarily the offence with which the 2nd accused was charged, is one that is triable by a magistrate and as such there was no lack of patent jurisdiction, and the issue of latent jurisdiction must be decided by the application of the legal principles and the relevant statutory provisions.

12) The contention of the learned President's Counsel, on the other hand, was that the Mahawa Magistrate's Court lacked patent jurisdiction. The learned President's Counsel also relied on an observation made by the Supreme Court in the case of King vs. Perera 19 N.L.R.310. The Court observed [at pg. 312]

"Another objection was taken to the ruling of the District Judge, namely, that the accused, having pleaded in the District Court, could not afterwards take objection to the jurisdiction in consequence of the provisions of section 73 of the Courts Ordinance. I think that this contention is not sound in the present case. The Criminal Procedure Code by section 12 provides that no District Court shall take cognizance of any offence, unless the accused person has been committed for trial by a Police Court duly empowered in that behalf, or unless the case has been transferred to it from some other Court for trial by order of the Supreme Court".

(13) King vs. Perera [Supra] was a case where the District Court tried the accused on a committal by the Police Court, and the issue was if the committal was not made by a competent Police Court, whether the District Court could have assumed jurisdiction. In view of the specific wording in Section 12 of the then Criminal Procedure Code, the Supreme Court held that for the District Court to assume jurisdiction, the committal must be from a 'Police Court duly empowered to commit' an accused. I am of the view that the observation of their Lordships in the case of Perera [supra] has no application to the instant case for the reason that none of the provisions considered by the Supreme Court in that case would be applicable to the instant case before us, but statutory provisions altogether different to that of Section 12 of the earlier CPC, which provisions I have referred to later, in this judgement.

14) Quoting an observation made by his Lordship Justice Drieberg in King vs. Ludowyke 36 NLR 397 at p. 398, the learned President's Counsel sought to establish that the learned Magistrate of Mahawa lacked the territorial jurisdiction to hear this case. An extract, however, of the quoted judgment at p. 398 must be highlighted.

"Every offence must ordinarily be tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed… A departure from this rule should only be permitted in exceptional circumstances."

Therefore, it necessarily must be understood from his Lordship Justice Drieberg's observation that exception may be permitted, that he too, was aware of the fact that even if the original court lacked territorial jurisdiction, such defect is not fatal in all instances.

The learned President's Counsel also referred to the observation made by Justice Middleton in the case of Halliday v. Kandasamy 14 N.L.R 493;

Per Middleton J.-" This application of section 423 must by no means be considered to obviate the requirements of the law that criminal proceedings should be originally instituted in the Court having proper and competent local jurisdiction."

(15) In the case of Halliday [supra] the court, while affirming the conviction, held that the Police Court of Nuwara Eliya had no jurisdiction to try the case. The conviction was affirmed as the accused was not prejudiced in his defence.

(16) In the case before us, neither party had disputed the fact that the Magistrate's court is vested with the jurisdiction to try the impugned offence, nor was the issue of jurisdiction raised in the course of the proceedings before the magistrate.

(17) Therefore, the question which warrants determination is: If an accused is tried for an offence before a forum which is vested with 'forum jurisdiction' to try such an offence but if such offence had taken place outside the local limits of that forum, would the judgement be a nullity?

(18) It is trite law that an objection to the jurisdiction of a court must be raised by a party at the earliest possible opportunity. It would be pertinent at this point to consider the applicable provisions of the law.

(19) Section 39 of the Judicature Act states that; -

"Whenever any defendant or accused party shall have pleaded in any action, proceeding or matter brought in any Court of First Instance neither party shall afterwards be entitled to object to the jurisdiction of such court but such court shall be taken and held to have jurisdiction over such, proceeding or matter;

Provided that where it shall appear in the course of the proceedings that the action, proceeding or matter was brought in a court having no jurisdiction intentionally and with previous knowledge of the want of jurisdiction of such court, the judge shall be entitled at his discretion to refuse to proceed further with the same, and to declare the proceedings null and void."

(20) Section 39 of the Judicature Act must be examined in the light of patent and latent want of jurisdiction. In his monumental work, The Law of Evidence, [Volume 1, 2nd Edition, 2012, Pages 131 & 132] E.R.S.R. Coomaraswamy, relating to Section 39 of the Judicature Act states as follows;

"Can a party by admitting expressly or by implication the jurisdiction of a court confer Jurisdiction on the court where none exists? Spence Bower and Turner say that not even plainest and most express contract or consent of a party to litigation can confer jurisdiction on any person not already vested with it by the law of the land, or add to the jurisdiction lawfully exercised by any judicial tribunal, and the same results cannot be achieved by conduct or acquiescence by the parties. These cases are described as cases of a total or patent want of Jurisdiction.

On the other hand, where nothing more is involved than a mere irregularity of procedure or for example, non-compliance with statutory conditions precedent to the validity of a step in the litigation, of such a character that if one of the parties be allowed to waive the defect, or to be estopped by conduct from setting it up, no new Jurisdiction is thereby impliedly created and no existing jurisdiction extended beyond its existing boundaries, the estoppel will be maintained and the court will have jurisdiction. These are cases of partial or latent want of jurisdiction…. In Sri Lanka also, this distinction between a patent want of jurisdiction and a latent want of jurisdiction has been drawn.

…. It is submitted that the disability laid down by section 39 can only be availed of in case of partial or latent want of jurisdiction and not of a total or patent want of jurisdiction, though the section appears to be absolute in its terms." [Emphasis added].

(21) It was held in the case of Don Tilakaratne vs. Indra Priyadarshanie Mandawala (2011) 2 SLR 260-

"…even on restrictive interpretation of section 39 of the Judicature Act, the petitioner is estopped in law from challenging the jurisdiction of the Magistrate Court as the petitioner has conceded the jurisdiction of the Court and his failure to object at the earliest possible opportunity implies a waiver of any objections to jurisdiction."

(22) These observations indicate that Section 39 of the Judicature Act refers only to instances where there is a latent want of jurisdiction, which can be cured by the waiver, acquiescence, or inaction of the parties.

(23) A similar opinion was expressed in the case of Navaratnasingham vs. Arumugam (1980) 2 Sri. L.R.1- and the court observed; "where a matter is within the plenary jurisdiction of the Court if no objection is taken, the court will then have jurisdiction to proceed on with the matter and make a valid order."

(24) Our courts have drawn a distinction between patent want of jurisdiction and latent want of jurisdiction.

(25) In P. Beatrice Perera vs. The Commissioner of National Housing 77 NLR 361 at page 366, the distinction between patent and latent want of jurisdiction was discussed as follows,

"…. Lack of competency may arise in one of two ways. A court may lack jurisdiction over the cause or the matter or over the parties; it may also lack competence because of failure to comply with such procedural requirements as are necessary for the exercise of power by the court. Both are jurisdictional defects; The first mentioned of these is commonly known in the law as 'patent' or 'total' want of jurisdiction or a defectus jurisdictionis and the second a 'latent' or 'contingent' want of jurisdiction or defectus triationis. Both classes of jurisdictional defect result in judgments or orders which are void. But an important difference must also be noted. In that class of case where the want of jurisdiction is patent, no waiver of objection or acquiescence can cure the want of jurisdiction; the reason for this being that to permit the parties by their conduct to confer jurisdiction on a tribunal which has none would be to admit a power in the parties to litigation to create new jurisdictions or to extend a jurisdiction beyond its existing limits, both of which are within the exclusive privilege of the legislature; the proceedings in cases within this category are non coram judice and the want of jurisdiction is incurable. In other class of case, where the want of jurisdiction is contingent only, the judgment or order of the Court will be void only against the party on whom it operates but acquiescence, waiver or inaction on the part of such person may estop him from making or attempting to establish by evidence, any averment to the effect that the Court was lacking in contingent jurisdiction…"

(26) This means that if a court labours under a patent want of jurisdiction, any objection to the assumption of such jurisdiction can be raised before a higher court (either in Appeal or Revision), even if the party raising that objection has failed to do so in the first instance. (Kandy Omnibus Co Ltd vs. T.W. Roberts (1954) 56 NLR 293)

(27) However, "Where a latent lack of jurisdiction exists, a party must raise these procedural defects at the earliest opportunity as acquiescence, waiver or inaction on the part of the party will estop that party from raising the objections in later proceedings." – Koraburuwane Hetitiarachchige Siri Bandula vs Koraburuwane Hetitiarachchige Kithsiri Mahinatha and others. CA (PHC)152/2013 at page 7.

28) The territorial Jurisdiction of the Magistrate's Court is referred to in Section 128 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which stipulates;

(1) Every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried by a court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed.

(2) Any Magistrate's Court within the local limits of the jurisdiction of which an accused may be or be found shall have jurisdiction respectively in all cases of offences otherwise within their respective jurisdictions which have been committed on the territorial waters of Sri Lanka.

(3) An offence committed on the territorial waters of Sri Lanka to which subsection (2) is not applicable or an offence committed on the high seas, or on board any ship or upon any aircraft may be tried or inquired into by the Magistrate's Court of Colombo if it otherwise has jurisdiction or on indictment by High Court.

29) It is settled law that the lack of territorial jurisdiction of a court is a latent lack of jurisdiction. In the case of Colombo Apothecaries Ltd. and Others vs Commissioner of Labour (1998) 3 SLR 320, it was held that "The lack of territorial jurisdiction of court is a latent lack of jurisdiction curable by waiver or conduct of the party seeking to attack the order of court on lack of jurisdiction."

30) Spencer Bower on the Law Relating to Estoppel by Representation – 1966, 2nd Edition, page 308, states;

"So too when a party litigant , being in a position to object to that the matter in difference is outside the local, pecuniary or other limits of jurisdiction of the tribunal to which his adversary has resorted, deliberately elects to waive the objection , and to proceed to the end as if no such objection existed , in the expectation of obtaining a decision in his favour, he cannot be allowed, when this expectation is not realized, to set up that the tribunal had no jurisdiction over the cause or parties."

31) On the other hand, for an accused to succeed in appeal, the illegality or the irregularity relied upon must be of a nature which meets the threshold laid down in the proviso to Article 138 (1) of the Constitution, which states; that no judgment, decree or order of any court shall be reversed or varied on account of any error, defect or irregularity, which has not prejudiced the substantial rights of the parties or occasioned a failure of justice. In Sunil Jayarathna vs. Attorney General (2011) 2 Sri LR 91, the Supreme Court, in applying the proviso to Article 138 (1) of the Constitution observed that;

"Unless there is some grave miscarriage of justice it would not be appropriate to interfere with the judgment of the trial judge who enters judgment after careful consideration of the first-hand evidence put before her to which the Judges of the Appellate Court would not have the ability to witness."

32) This principle, particularly in relation to territorial jurisdiction, is reflected in Section 434 of the Criminal Procedure Code which reads ;

"Any judgment of any criminal court shall not be set aside merely on the ground that the inquiry, trial, or other proceedings in the course of which it was passed took place in the wrong local area unless it appears that such error occasioned a failure of justice."

33) If a Magistrate is empowered by law to try an offence but the Court lacks territorial jurisdiction to entertain the action, then it amounts to latent lack of jurisdiction as it is a procedural error. In such an instance it is then open for the accused to raise an objection at the earliest possible opportunity. If he fails to do so, the court will assume jurisdiction. The accused cannot succeed by raising an objection with respect to territorial jurisdiction on appeal, unless it is satisfied that the thresholds laid down either in Article 138 (1) proviso to the constitution [prejudiced the substantial rights of the parties or occasioned a failure of justice] or Section 434 of the CPC [error occasioned a failure of justice] are met.

34) It does not seem not possible to tie up the want of territorial jurisdiction with a court's failure to administer justice. It is difficult to make a convincing argument that there has been a miscarriage of justice because the action was instituted in a Magistrate's Court in the local limits of which the offence was NOT committed. As observed in Sunil Jayarathna vs. Attorney General [supra], a trial judge makes a decision after careful consideration of the first-hand evidence put before him. This is even more evident in the case of a Magistrate who plays an active role in a criminal trial to ascertain the truth.

35) Therefore, an argument brought up at a later stage of the action or even on appeal that a Magistrate's Court did not have the territorial jurisdiction to entertain the action cannot lead to the setting aside of a judgment delivered after careful deliberation by a Magistrate empowered by law to try that particular offence. The failure to comply with procedural law and the institution of an action in a court empowered by law to adjudicate the issue although it does not have territorial jurisdiction to entertain it, amounts only to latent lack of jurisdiction. If no objection is raised, as in the case before us, at the earliest possible opportunity, then it is deemed to have been waived and the court will assume jurisdiction.

For the reasons set out above, I answer the question of law in the negative and accordingly the appeal is dismissed.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (Respondent) is a company that manufactures and provides packaging material used to package edibles. The Defendant-Appellant-Appellant (Appellant) is a company that manufactures, packages and distributes certain food products.

Towards the end of 2006, the Appellant requested quotes from suppliers for the provision of packaging materials. Following the Respondent's submission and after discussion, the parties entered into a contract, which is admittedly unwritten. In terms of this contract, the Respondent was to supply packaging materials on 45 days' credit. As a result, the Respondent provided the Appellant with packaging materials between March 2007 and October 2007 which were used by the Appellant to pack certain food they manufactured.

On 4.11.2008 the Respondent instituted the above styled action in the District Court of Mawanella against the Appellant for the recovery of the sum of Rs.2, 100,103.30 due to the packing material supplied.

The Appellant denied that any sum is due to the Respondent and made a claim in reconvention for damages suffered due to the packing material being defective and not suitable for the purpose of packing food.

The learned District Judge entered judgment as prayed for in the plaint and dismissed the cross-claim. On appeal, the judgment was affirmed by the High Court (Civil Appeal) of Sabaragamuwa Province holden in Kegalle (High Court).

This Court granted leave on the following questions of law:

Question of Law No. 1:

> "13 (a)That the said Court has misdirected itself on the facts and erred on the law in concluding that the prescriptive period of 3 years in section 7 of the Prescription Ordinance for breach of an unwritten contract applied, whereas the Respondent's action was for monies due on goods sold and delivered by the Respondent to the Appellant to which the prescriptive period of one year in section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance applied.

Question of Law No. 2:

> "In view of the document marked "V3" is the plaintiff's claim in any event not prescribed in view of the provisions of section 12 of the Prescription Ordinance."

Question of Law No. 1

The Learned District Judge held that the action is not prescribed as this matter is governed by section 7 of the Prescription Ordinance No. 22 of 1871 (Prescription Ordinance). He went on the basis that the action was based on an unwritten contract. Moreover, he held that even if the issue is governed by section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance, the action was not prescribed as it was filed within a year of receiving a letter dated 28.02.2008 (V3) which he concluded as amounting to an acknowledgement of the debt by the Appellant.

The High Court applied the reasoning in Assen Cutty v. Brooke Bond Ltd. (36 N.L.R. 169) and held that the issue of prescription is governed by section 7 of the Prescription Ordinance. It declined to follow the reasoning in Dharmaratne v. Fernando (56 N.L.R. 498) and Ceylon Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Diesel and Motor Engineering Co. Ltd [79 (II) N.L.R. 5] as urged by the Appellant.

In Assen Cutty v. Brooke Bond Ltd. (supra. 179) Court concluded that as between section 8 (present section 7) dealing with unwritten contracts and section 9 (present section 8) dealing with goods sold and delivered, the latter section is the particular enactment and so "operative" while the former section is the general enactment and so "must be taken to affect only the other parts of the statute to which it may properly apply". It was held that section 9 (present section 8) the particular enactment, operates in the case of contracts for and in respect of goods sold "for which an action lies owing to the fact of delivery" while section 8 (present section 7) operates in the case of unwritten contracts for or in respect of goods sold for which an action lies otherwise than owing to the fact of delivery. Accordingly, it was held that the claim in reconvention in that case was a claim for damages for breach of warranty of goods delivered upon an unwritten contract of sale and not an action "for or in respect of goods sold and delivered" within the meaning of section 9 (present section 8) and is not barred until after the lapse of three years in terms of section 8 (present section 7) after the cause of action shall have arisen.

It is observed that the learned Judge of the High Court had relied on the decision in Assen Cutty v. Brooke Bond Ltd (supra), to hold that the claim in the present action does not fall within section 8. However, I am of the view that he did so on the wrong premise. This case arose out of three tea sales and purchase contracts in which the plaintiff was selling and delivering certain quantities of tea to the defendant. The plaintiff's claim was related to contracts for tea sold and delivered to the defendants and the defendant's claim in reconvention was for a sum of money the defendants paid to the plaintiff, for tea sold and delivered to them on the ground that the tea supplied were found to be of a lower quality. This was held to be a breach of warranty and it was this claim of the defendant for breach of warranty of the sale of goods contract that was held to not fall within the ambit of section 8.

On the contrary, the learned counsel for the Appellant submitted that the ratio of Dharmaratne v. Fernando (supra) and Ceylon Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Diesel and Motor Engineering Co. Ltd (supra) must govern the issue of prescription in the matter before us. It was submitted that based on the principle of statutory interpretation; generalia specialibus non derogant - general provisions do not derogate from special provisions, section 7 which is the general section must give away to section 8 which is the special provision applicable to transactions where goods are sold and delivered under an unwritten contract.

> "No action shall be maintainable for the recovery of any movable property, rent, or mesne profit, or for any money lent without written security, or for any money paid or expended by the plaintiff on account of the defendant, or for money received by defendant for the use of the plaintiff, or for money due upon an account stated, or upon any unwritten promise, contract, bargain, or agreement, unless such action shall be-commenced within three years from the time after the cause of action shall have arisen"

This section clearly provides that actions in respect of "any unwritten promise, contract, bargain, or agreement" are prescribed only after three years from the time when the cause of action shall have arisen. In the instant case the fact that there was an unwritten contract between the parties in relation to supply of packaging materials by the Respondent to the Appellant is not disputed. If it is to be considered that this is an action in respect of the said unwritten contract, then the action would have been prescribed only after a period of three years from the time the money claimed for became due on the Respondents.

However, we have to take into consideration section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance, which reads as follows:-

> "No action shall be maintainable for or in respect of any goods sold and delivered, or for any shop bill or book debt, or for work and labour done, or for the wages of artisans, labourers, or servants, unless the same shall be brought within one year after the debt shall have become due."

This section clearly sets out that if the action is for or in respect of inter alia "goods sold and delivered" the action will be prescribed after a lapse of one year from the time the cause of action arose.

Where a given cause of action appears to fall within the scope of more than one provision of a statute, our Courts have consistently held that specific provision must be operative while the general provision must be taken to affect only other parts of the Statute to which it may properly apply [Campbell & Co. v. Wijesekere (1920) 21 N.L.R. 431; Ceylon Insurance Company Ltd., v. Diesel and Motor Engineering Company Ltd. (supra); Brown & Co., Ltd v. G. S. Fernando (1986) 2 Sri.L.R. 177].

The question as to whether it is section 7 or section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance that may be considered as the specific section out of the two has been considered by Court on many an occasion.

In Walker, Sons & Co. Ltd. v. Kandyah (1919) 21 N.L.R. 317 where the plaintiff, a motor firm, sued the defendant to recover a certain sum of money for repairs done to the defendant's motor car and for materials supplied in connection with that work. It was submitted on behalf of the defendant that that this was an action for work and labour done and goods sold and delivered which comes under section 9 (now section 8) of the Prescription Ordinance while it was pleaded on behalf of the Plaintiff that the action was based on an unwritten contract between the parties. De Sampayo J. (At p. 319) held:

> "If the correspondence does not constitute a written contract, it must be conceded that there was an unwritten contract. But then comes section 9, which appears to provide specially for actions on certain classes of unwritten contracts, and I think that actions for work and labour done and goods sold and delivered, though these are unwritten contracts, come within section 9."

Similarly, Garvin, J. in the case Assen Cutty v. Brooke Bond Ltd (supra. 190) held:

> "The actions for goods sold and delivered contemplated by section 9 in so far as they are not based on written contracts are embraced by the general words of section 8 "or upon any unwritten promise, contract, bargain or agreement". But if we read these two sections, as I think we must, so as to give a distinct interpretation to each of these sections we are driven to the conclusion that the object of the legislature was to exclude from section 8 the actions for which special provision is made by section 9."

In Dharmaratne v. Fernando (supra) the action was based on an unwritten promise to pay the balance purchase price for goods sold and delivered. It was held that in regard to the issue of prescription, the action was governed by section 8 and not section 7 of the Prescription Ordinance.

In Ceylon Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Diesel and Motor Engineering Co. Ltd. (supra) the Supreme Court made a comprehensive review of its decisions and concluded that in the case of written promises or contracts, section 6 being the particular enactment must in keeping with the rules of interpretation prevail over section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance which is the general section. It was further held that in the case of unwritten contracts, section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance would be the particular enactment to which the general section 7 must give way.

These authorities establish that section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance is the specific provision which will be operative where the cause of action of the case falls within the scope of both sections 7 and 8. An action "for or in respect of any goods sold and delivered" will be prescribed by a period of one year even if it is based on an unwritten contract between the parties to the action in relation to such "goods sold and delivered".

I am of the view that this is indeed the correct legal analysis of the interface between sections 7 and 8 of the Prescription Ordinance. A sale of goods transaction can be based on either a written or unwritten contract. A claim for the price of goods sold and delivered under a written contract is governed by section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance. If a claim for the price of goods sold and delivered under an unwritten contract is held to be governed by section 7 of the Prescription Ordinance, the words "goods sold and delivered" in section 8 become redundant. In interpreting any section of an Act, the Court cannot make any part of the Act superfluous. Accordingly, I hold that a claim for the price of goods sold and delivered on an unwritten contract, falls within section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance.

It must now be ascertained whether the claim in the instant action is based on the "goods sold and delivered" as contemplated by section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance. In the case of Markar v. Hassen (2 N.L.R. 218) it was held that the term "goods" in section 9 (now 8) of the Prescription Ordinance means "movable property,". Therefore, the packaging material supplied by the Respondent to the Appellant meets the definition of the term "goods" as defined in section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance. Further, in Assen *Cutty v. Brook Bond Ltd (supra. 190) Garvin, S.P.J. held that, "an action for goods sold and delivered" under section 8 should be considered as meaning actions for the recovery of the price or value of goods sold and delivered.

In the instant case, the action was instituted to recover monies due to the Respondent from the Appellant, on a goods sold and delivered transaction, and hence the issue of prescription is governed by section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance. Hence, I answer question of law No. 1 in the affirmative.

The debt becomes due on the date on which the price was payable for the goods sold and delivered. Both the lower courts did not make any finding as to the date on which the cause of action arose.

The document marked P4 indicates that the amount claimed is payable on goods sold and delivered on six invoices. The goods were sold and delivered on the basis of a 45-day credit. These 6 invoices are dated from 14.05.2007, 14.05.2007, 15.06.2007, 30.06.2007, 30.06.2007, 30.07.2007, 31.07.2007, 07.08.2007 and 31.10.2007. The total amount due on the six invoices as claimed in the plaint is Rs. 2,100,103.30. This action was filed on 4.11.2008. Consequently, the action on all invoices, with the exception of the last invoice dated 31.10.2007, since goods were sold and delivered on the basis of a 45-day credit, for Rs. 190,874.10 was prescribed by the time this action was filed. Therefore, the action of the Respondent for a sum of Rs. 1,909,229.20 (2,100,103.30-190,874.10) is prescribed unless there is an acknowledgement within the meaning of section 12 of the Prescription Ordinance which reads as follows:

> "In any forms of action referred to in sections 5,6,7,8,10 and 11 of this Ordinance, no acknowledgment or promise by words only shall be deemed evidence of a new or continuing contract, whereby to take the case out of the operation of the enactments contained in the said sections, or any of them, or to deprive any party of the benefit thereof, unless such acknowledgment shall be made or contained by or in some writing to be signed by the party chargeable ..."

The effect of this section is that if there is an acknowledgment or promise made or contained in writing signed by the party chargeable, it shall be deemed evidence of a new or continuing contract and it would take the case out of the operation of the foregoing provisions of the Ordinance.

Hence the Court must determine whether the Appellant has made any acknowledgement of the debt which takes the action outside the operation of section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance.

In determining Question of Law No. 2, we must address two separate and distinct issues, namely:

(i) Is document marked V3 an acknowledgement within the meaning of section 12 of the Prescription Ordinance (Acknowledgment)?

(ii) If so, has this action being filed within the relevant period (Relevant Period)?

Acknowledgment

In examining whether this letter is an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 12 of the Prescription Ordinance, I will, where appropriate, refer to English decisions as section 12 of Prescription Ordinance has been copied verbatim from Lord Tenterden's Act (Statute of Frauds Amendment Act, 1928) [Weeramantry, The Law of Contracts, Vol. II, 803].

In Hoare & Co. v. Rajaratnam (34 NLR 219 at 223) Drieberg J. cited with approval the dicta by Bankes, L.J. in Fettes v. Robertson [(1921) 37 T.L.R. 581] that it is important "never to lose sight of the fact that what a plaintiff has to prove is a promise express or implied, to pay the debt, made within six years before action, and that any consideration of an acknowledgment is merely for the purpose of seeing whether the acknowledgment is expressed in such language that an unqualified promise to pay can be implied from it."

The letter V3 forms part of the correspondence commencing with letters dated 17.09.2007 (P3) and 06.02.2008 (P4) sent by the Respondent. By P4, the Respondent specifically claimed an amount of Rs. 2,100,103.30 for goods sold and delivered. The Appellant in V3 does not contest that it received the goods at issue. Nor does it claim that the price of the said merchandise sold and received has been paid. Rather, the Appellant argues that the goods are defective and therefore it suffered damages that must be deducted from the amount claimed by the Respondent.

In Rodrigo v. Jinasena & Co. (32 N.L.R. 322 at 324) Maartensz A.J. cited with approval the decision of In Re River Steamer Company, Mitchell's Claim [(1870-1871) 6 L.R.Ch. 822] for the proposition that an acknowledgment coupled with an assertion that the debtor has a set off sufficient to countervail the debt is not sufficient to take the claim out of the Statute of Limitations. Nevertheless, an attentive reading of this decision shows that the Court found that no promise of payment could result from it because the set-off claimed left the debtor no debt to the other party.

The present case is distinguishable from the facts and circumstances of In Re River Steamer Company, Mitchell's Claim (supra). There is no doubt that letter V3 claims a sum of damages higher than the amount claimed by the Respondent as the price due on the goods sold and delivered. Nevertheless, the writer of V3 ends the letter with the words "Once this is one We can come to A very cordial and understanding settlement of setting The dues with a generous gesture for the defective materials amount on your part"(emphasis added). Having waded through the grammatical and spelling mistakes in V3, the plain import of this statement to me is that upon an inspection of the alleged defective material supplied by the Respondent is done, the Appellant is willing to come to an understanding for the settlement of the dues with a generous gesture on the part of the Respondent for the defective materials. This is an acknowledgment that the sum that may actually be due to it as damages for defective goods is less than the sum claimed by the Respondent as the amount due for the goods supplied. Therein lies the acknowledgment of the debt on the part of the Appellant.

In Perera v. Wickremaratne (43 NLR 141 at 142) Soertsz J. held:

> "'I wish to settle' is not merely an acknowledgment of the debt from which a promise to pay can be inferred but it is an acknowledgment with an express declaration of a desire to pay. It has frequently been laid down that when there is an acknowledgment of a debt without any words to prevent the possibility of an implication of a promise to pay it, a promise to pay is inferred. Much more, then, must such a promise be inferred when the acknowledgment is coupled with an expression of desire to pay." (emphasis added)

Moreover, the Appellant cross-claimed for the damages allegedly due in respect of defective goods. However, the learned trial judge concluded that the Appellant had failed to establish that the goods were defective. Hence, the claim by the Appellant for damages was not in any event proved.

It is important to acknowledge that the letter V3 makes no reference to the amount owed to the Respondent by the Appellant. Whether an acknowledgment of a debt must clearly identify the amount due arose for consideration in Dungate v. Dungate [(1965) 1 WLR 1477 at 1487] where Diplock LJ said that "an acknowledgment under this Act need not identify the amount of the debt and may acknowledge a general indebtedness, provided that the amount of the debt can be ascertained by extraneous evidence".

The amount payable by the Appellant to the Respondent is set out in letter P4. As noted earlier, the Appellant did not deny that the Respondent had supplied these products. Nor did it claim to have paid the price of the said merchandise. Moreover, the trial judge concluded that this amount is in fact payable by the Appellant for the goods sold and delivered by the Respondent. Therefore, there is extraneous evidence that establishes the amount of the debt.

In this context, the question arises as to whether an acknowledgment of the debt within the meaning of section 12 of the Prescription Ordinance must be done before the action is prescribed. In Albert and Others v. Sivakumar [S.C. (CHC) Appeal 04/2007; S.C.M. 23.01.2023] I held that the legal effect of sections 5 to 10 of the Prescription Ordinance is only to bar action on the cause of action and not extinguishment of the cause of action itself and as such there is no rational justification to insist that to be effective, an acknowledgment must be made before the expiry of the limitation period.

Therefore, the date on which the cause of action accrued in favour of the Respondent is irrelevant in determining whether a valid acknowledgement was made. A valid acknowledgment may be made even after the action is prescribed by any provision of the Prescription Ordinance.

For the foregoing reasons, I hold that the letter V3 amounts to an acknowledgment of the debt and interrupts the operation of prescription which must therefore start afresh.

Relevant Period

We must determine whether the action was commenced within the applicable period from the date of the acknowledgement in document V3. The issue is which is the applicable provision in the Prescription Ordinance which determines the time within which this action should have been filed from the date of the valid acknowledgment. Is the relevant time to be determined by applying the time frame for the original cause of action or is it to be determined by considering the acknowledgment to be a contract within the meaning of section 6 of the Prescription Ordinance?

In Albert and Others v. Sivakumar (supra) I further held that upon an acknowledgment of the debt was made by the debtor, to use the colourful words of Lawton J. in Busch v. Stevens [(1962) 1 All E.R. 412 at 415], the right of action is given a notional birthday and, on that day, like the phoenix of fable, it rises again in renewed youth-and also like the phoenix, it is still itself.

Hence, in the present case, the original cause of action, namely failure to pay the price payable on goods sold and delivered survives and as such the action should have been filed within one year from the date of acknowledgment in terms of section 8 of the Prescription Ordinance. Any other interpretation works to the detriment of the debtor and in favour of the creditor by giving him 6 years' time from the date of acknowledgment to file action when he should do so within one year in terms of the original cause of action.

The date of acknowledgment in terms of document marked V3 is 28.02.2008, and the action was filed on 04.11.2008. Accordingly, I hold that this action was filed within one year from the date of acknowledgement and is not time barred. Hence, question no. 2 is answered in the affirmative.

For the foregoing reasons, the appeal is dismissed with costs. The Appellant shall pay the costs of the Respondent in the two lower courts.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

K. KUMUDINI WICKREMASINGHE, J.

The application for special leave to appeal was preferred by the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Appellant) against the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 10.05.2014 affirming the convictions and the sentences imposed against the 1st and 2nd Accused Appellants and dismissing their Appeal. Aggrieved by which the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant appealed to the Supreme Court.

Accordingly, this Court by order dated 22.02.2021 granted Special leave to appeal on the following questions of law:

1. That the Hon. High Court and the Hon. Judges of the Court of Appeal failed to take into consideration and properly evaluate the items of evidence led on behalf of the parties at the trial.
2. This being a case based on circumstantial evidence, the Hon. High Court Judge and the Hon. Judges of the court of appeal failed to properly consider and correctly apply the relevant principles applicable to such a case in order to arrive at a decision in the said case.
3. The Hon. High Court Judge and the Hon. Judges of the Court of Appeal failed to evaluate the evidence led against each accused in this case, separately, in arriving at a decision against each such accused.

Two Accused namely, Poththegodage Anula Chandralatha who was the 1st Accused (1st Accused Appellant Respondent) and Andawalage Nimal Sarath Kumara who was the 2nd Accused (2nd Accused Appellant Appellant) were indicted in the High Court of Kegalle under section 296 of the Penal Code read with section 32 of the Penal Code, for committing murder of one Ajith Kithsiri Ruwan Kumara. Both Accused, upon the charge in the indictment being read over and explained to them, pleaded not guilty to the said charge. Both Accused opted to try the case without a jury and the trial commenced on 25.11.2013. The prosecution called 7 witnesses and closed its case after marking P1 to P6 as productions. When the defense was called both Accused gave dock statements denying the charge. After the conclusion of the trial, the Learned High Court Judge convicted both the Accused for committing murder as per the indictment and imposed the death sentence as required under section 296 of the Penal Code.

The facts of the case briefly are as follows,

As per the evidence given by Prosecution Witness Thilakarathna (PW1), on the date in question the witness had visited the house of the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent around 6:30 pm to consume illicit alcohol (Kasippu). The witness stated that he had seen the deceased who was the husband of the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent lying on a partially built wall in close proximity to the house of the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent. The witness claimed that when he inquired about the condition of the deceased, the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent replied asking him to mind his own business. The witness stated that the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant was present a few feet away from the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent at that time and that both of them had asked the witness not to leave the premises. The witness stated that at around 9:00 or 9:30 pm he saw the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant carrying the body of the deceased, closely followed by the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent. When questioned during the Examination in chief on what the witness had observed when the body of the deceased was carried by the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant, the witness stated he had observed that the deceased's neck had been displaced and stated that "බල්ලෙල පැත්තකට වනේන තිබුණෙ". After which the two accused had proceeded to dispose of the body of the deceased into the toilet pit located at the premises of the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent. When the witness was questioned on the events that he had witnessed the witness stated in response that "මට හිතුනා බාසුන්නැහෙ මැරිලා තමයි කියා". Thereafter, the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant had placed timber planks and laid fertiliser bags on top of the pit in order to cover the pit.

According to the evidence of the Investigative Officer J R Seneviratne (PW9) the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent had made a complaint to the Police that her husband had disappeared. The formal investigation into the incident commenced on 03.05.1999. The Investigating Officer claimed that on information received by informants and persons who visited the town, the property of the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent was searched. On the search of the property the officer made observations of a toilet pit, which was situated within the said property. The officer stated that he commenced investigations regarding a toilet pit in the compound of the house where the deceased had lived with the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent, after a statement had been recorded from the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent. Following which, the body of the victim was discovered. A section 27 statement of the Evidence Ordinance has been led in evidence by the Prosecution which stated that "පුදුමයාගෙ මළ සිරුර දමා ඇති වැසිකිලි වල මට පෙන්වීමට පුළුවන්". The officer further stated that witness PW1 was arrested on suspicion but he was not named as an accused.

Dr. Prassana Bandara Dissanayake (PW7), the Judicial Medical Officer gave evidence with regard to the post-mortem examination of the body of the deceased, conducted by him. He observed that there were 10 injuries on the body of the deceased. The first injury was a stab injury which in his opinion was caused by an axle and that was fatal. He stated that the 3rd and 4th injuries could have been caused as a result of falling. He stated that there were serious injuries on the head that may have been caused by a blunt weapon like a stone.

According to the evidence of the S. I. Thilakaratne Nissanka (PW14), a stone had been recovered in terms of a section 27 statement of the Evidence Ordinance made by the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant., stating that "ගල මට පෙන්නන්න පුළුවන්". However, the recovered stone has not been produced in evidence at the trial.

The Deceased and the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent's daughter K.V. Tharusha Chathurika Kithsiri (PW2) gave evidence. She stated that on the 16.04.1999 morning, she had asked her mother, the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent about the whereabouts of her father (the deceased) to which her mother had replied stating that he had gone for work. The witness stated that she did not observe anything along the footpath; however, she saw her mother removing some earth with red colour powder. The witness stated that she inquired from her mother what the red colour powder was and she stated that her father had left after having a row with her and hitting her with bricks.

Having considered at length the evidence of witness PW1, the evidence of the daughter witness PW2 and the evidence provided by the Police officers investigating the incident, the Learned High Court Judge decided against both the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant. Considering the conduct of the two Accused, the method thereof have adopted in disposing the body, to their conduct soon after, amount to the one and only conclusion that can be arrived by court is that both of them have committed the murder of the deceased.

Being aggrieved by the judgement of the High Court, the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant had appealed to the Court of Appeal complaining inter alia that the Learned High Court Judge misdirected herself when admitting the evidence under section 27 of the Evidence Ordinance, the evaluation of the evidence given by PW1 is bad in law, the Learned High Court Judge misdirected herself by anticipating a reasonable explanation from the said Appellant when the prosecution had failed to establish a prima facie case against the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent, the Learned High Court Judge failed to evaluate the medical evidence against the sole eye witness testimony and the Learned High Court Judge has not properly considered and evaluated the evidence against the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant.

The Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal upon perusal of the evidence concluded that on the 1st ground of appeal that the evidence under section 27 of the Evidence Ordinance is unsafe to act upon. The Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal thereafter considered the 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th grounds of appeal together as it was all in relation to the credibility of evidence given by witness (PW1). The Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal observed that the Learned High Court Judge had placed a heavy reliance on the evidence provided by PW1 to hold the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant guilty. PW1 was initially a suspect in this case however, no evidence was provided on the circumstances that led to his arrest. The Learned Counsel for the Appellants questioned the belatedness of the statements given to the police by PW1. The Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal observed that not a single question had been put forth towards the witness for the belatedness of making the said statement. The witness, however, in his evidence had offered an explanation as to why he could not make a statement to the Police soon after the incident had taken place, as the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant had repeatedly threatened him and asked him to refrain from giving any information about the incident. Further, PW1 had seen both the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant at the crime scene at or about the time the crime was committed, he observed that the dead body was held by the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant who was closely followed by the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and dumped into the toilet pit. PW1 has stood by this position in both the examination in chief and cross-examination and the Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal observed that there was no motive on part of PW1 to implicate the Appellants in this crime.

The Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal upon evaluation of the evidence concluded that there was no inconsistency in the lack of credibility with regard to the evidence given by PW1 and that the Learned High Court Judge was correct in accepting the said evidence. The Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal upheld the conviction and sentence of the Learned High Court Judge, dismissing the appeal.

Being aggrieved by the decision of the Court of Appeal, the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant by Petition dated 17.06.2019 sought Special Leave to Appeal from this Court. Accordingly, this Court granted Special Leave to Appeal from the aforementioned judgement of the Court of Appeal.

The Learned Counsel for the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant submitted that there were no eyewitnesses to this case and it was purely based on the circumstantial evidence. The witness PW1 had been arrested by the police as a suspect, however later on named as a witness of the prosecution. 4 contradictions had been marked on behalf of the Appellant during the cross-examination of the witness of PW1 but the Learned Trial Judge has failed to properly evaluate those contradictions. The Learned Counsel further submitted that even though evidence has been led by the Prosecution that several productions were recovered on the statement of the appellant, but failed to mark the said production in the course of the trial. No Government Analysis Reports were marked. Only a section 27 statement under the Evidence Ordinance has been marked in evidence against the Appellant without even the productions being produced.

The Learned Counsel for the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant submitted that the only evidence available against the appellant is that he assisted in the disposal of the body and that a stone on which there is said to have been a few strands of hair had been recovered on a Section 27 statement however the stone or strands of hair had not been produced in court and there was no expert evidence placed before the court that the said strands recovered by the Police. The Learned Counsel for the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant further submitted that the daughter of the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent, witness PW2 (K. V. Tharusha Chathurika Kithsiri) commenced giving evidence on 25.11.2013, at the conclusion of the proceedings she had been released on Rs.10,000/- bail and that this amounts to pressure/fear being put on the witness.

I will now proceed to address the first question of law namely that "The Learned High Court Judge and the Hon. Judges of the Court of Appeal failed to take into consideration and properly evaluate the items of evidence led on behalf of the parties at the trial"

In order to address and answer the first question of law I must first evaluate the evidence led at the trial. The evidence led included the testimony of the PW1 Thilakarathna and PW2 Chathurika Kithsiri, the testimony of the investigating Police Officers and the testimony of the JMO who conducted the Post Mortem Examination. The Learned High Court Judge had placed heavy reliance on the testimony of PW1 and PW2. PW1 in his testimony stated the manner in which the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant along with the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent had disposed of the body of the deceased by putting the body into the toilet pit situated on the property of the 1st Accused Appellant Appellant. Based on the testimony of the investigating Police Officer (PW9), who stated that, the search of the property which led to the discovery of the body of the deceased in the toilet pit was initiated based on information that he received from informants. The testimony of evidence provided by the Police Officer (PW14) investigating the offense stated that following a statement made to him by the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant that a stone had been discovered with strands similar to human hair seen on that stone. It is important to note however that this stone has not been produced to the court for the purposes of examination nor has any expert evidence been led on the ground that the strands of hair alleged to be caught on the stone came from the body of the deceased or of the fact if the hair on the stone was even human hair.

Based on the evidence of the Judicial Medical Officer (PW7) who conducted the post-mortem inquiry there were 10 injuries on the body, the 1st injury was most likely caused as a result of a stabbing and was fatal. He explained that there were other injuries that could have been caused either by a blunt object or as a result of falling. The Judicial Medical Officer further stated that there were serious injuries caused to the head of the deceased, he stated that it is difficult to adduce the extent of the injuries without conducting an examination of the brain however he testified that these injuries were grave injuries caused to the head most likely by a blunt object.

The Police Officer who investigated the incident (PW9) stated in his evidence that the investigation commenced on 03.05.1999 after 3 complaints were made to him by the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent regarding the disappearance of her husband. PW9 in his testimony stated that based on information received by informants he became suspicious of the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and decided to search her property. After which he observed a toilet pit covered with wooden planks and fertiliser bags stacked on top of it situated within the property belonging to the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent. The witness stated he became suspicious upon such observation and recorded a statement from the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and based on her statement, the body of the deceased was recovered. However, the Honourable Justices of the Court of Appeal correctly observed that, the part of the statement that led to the discovery of the body is dated 05.04.1999 marked එ 1, which is almost one month prior to the date the investigation had been initiated as stated by PW9 in his testimony before court. The testimony of PW9 reflects the correct date of discovery of the body which he stated to be 03.05.1999. The true copy of the extract of the Information Book of Ruwanwella Police is dated 05.04.1999 which could be a typing error. However, I agree with the reasoning of the Learned Justices of the Court of Appeal for not acting upon the section 27 statement of the Evidence Ordinance (This could have been clarified by the Learned High Court Judge during the trial stage).

Thus, the main evidence that remains is the evidence led against the two Accused are the statements made by the Witnesses PW1 and PW2. Justice Jayasuriya in Sumansena V Attorney General [1999] 3 Sri L.R. at 137 observed that "In our law of evidence the salutary principle is enunciated that evidence must not be counted but weighed and the evidence of a single solitary witness if cogent and impressive could be acted upon by a court of law. Section 134 of the Evidence Ordinance sets out that no particular number of witnesses shall, in any case, be required for the proof of any fact". Their Lordships in the above judgement are of the view that a person may be convicted even on the evidence of one witness.

In the case of the Attorney General V. Sandanam Pitchi Mary Theresa [2011] 2 Sri LR 292 Supreme Court held; "*Credibility is a question of fact and not law. Appellate Judges have repeatedly stressed the importance of Trial Judges' observation of the demeanor of witnesses in deciding questions of fact. Demeanor represents the Trial Judges' opportunity to observe the witness and his deportmen*t." The Learned High Court Judge in her judgement states that she is convinced of the truthful nature of the witness's testimony of PW1, by observing the demeanor of and deportment of the witness despite being subjected to a long and protracted cross-examination.

In the case of Kotuwila Kankanamalage Premalal Leonard Perera v Attorney General [SC/Appeal/220/2014] decided on 09.11.2018 at page 05 the Supreme Court observed that "It is evident that a Magistrate will only act on the evidence of a witness if the witness is a credible witness and the credibility is tested mainly on the demeanor or deportment of a witness after applying several tests such as probability/ improbability, spontaneity, belatedness, consistency/ inconsistency, and/or interestedness/ disinterestedness/". It is apparent that the Learned High Court Judge and the Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal have carefully analysed, evaluated, and weighed the evidence that was led in the trial and was convinced that the testimonies of these two witnesses in Court were cogent and truthful in nature.

I am of the view that the prosecution has established a strong case with incriminating and cogent evidence against the Accused Appellants. Under these circumstances the evidence of the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant (the dock statement denying any and all involvement in the incident) had failed to create any reasonable doubt in the prosecution case.

Now I will proceed to address the second question of law namely that "This being a case based on circumstantial evidence, the Learned High Court Judge and the Hon. Judges of the Court of Appeal failed to properly consider and correctly apply the relevant principles applicable to such a case in order to arrive at a decision in the said case".

The rule regarding circumstantial evidence and its effect, has been stated by Chief Justice Shaw in the American Case of Commonwealth v Webster [1850] 5 Cush. 295, 59 Mass. 295 the following words which have been referred to in Seetin v The Queen [1965] 68 NLR 316 at 322. "Where probable proof is brought of a statement of facts tending to criminate the accused, the absence of evidence tending to a contrary conclusion is to be considered though not alone entitled to much weight, because the burden of proof lies on the accuser to make out the whole case by substantive evidence. But when pretty stringent proof of circumstances is produced tending to support the charge, and it is apparent that the accused is so situated that he could offer evidence of all the facts and circumstances as they exist, and show, if such was the truth, that the suspicious circumstances can be accounted for consistently with his innocence and he fails to offer such proof, the natural conclusion is that the proof, if produced, instead of rebutting, would tend to sustain the charge"

This view has been reiterated in the case of King vs. Abeywickrama [1943] 44 NLR 254 where it was held that "In order to base a conviction on circumstantial evidence the Jury must be satisfied that the evidence was consistent with the guilt of the accused and inconsistent with any reasonable hypothesis of his innocence".

Based on the evaluation of the evidence, the prosecution case hinges entirely on the testimony of Thilkaratne (PW1) in which he stated that he witnessed the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant followed by the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent dispose of the body of the deceased into the toilet pit.

In the case of Bhojraj v Sita Ram [1935] AIR, 193 PC 60 at 62 Lord Roche set out the real test for accepting and rejecting a testimony of a witness based on testimonial trustworthiness stating that "How consistent is the story with itself (consistency per se). How does it stand the test of cross-examination? (Stability under cross-examination) How far it fits in with the rest of the evidence and the circumstances of the case (inconsistency inter se)." It is important to note that PW1 has maintained the same position in his testimony throughout the trial.

In order to convict an Accused person on the basis of circumstantial evidence it is the duty of the court to be satisfied that the facts proved are consistent with the guilt of the accused and that the facts proved exclude every other possibility other than the guilt of the accused. In the case of Gunawardena v the Republic [1981] 2 SLR 315 CA it was held that "Each piece of circumstantial evidence is not a link in a chain for if one link breaks the chain would fail. Circumstantial evidence is more like a rope composed of several cords. One strand of rope may be insufficient to sustain the weight but three stranded together may be quite sufficient."

In the case of Hanumant vs State of M.P [1952] AIR SC 343; 1953 Cri LJ 129 have laid down the following conditions which must be fulfilled before a case against an accused based on circumstantial evidence can be said to be fully established;

"(i) The circumstances from which the conclusion of guilt is to be drawn should be fully established. The circumstances concerned must or should and not may be established;

(ii) The facts so established should be consistent only with the hypothesis of the guilt of the accused, that is to say, that should not be explainable on any other hypothesis except that the accused is guilty;

(iii) The circumstances should be conclusive;

(iv) They should exclude every possible hypothesis except the one to be proved.

(v) There must be a chain of evidence so complete as not to leave any reasonable ground for the conclusion consistent with the innocence of the accused and must show that in all human probability the act must have been done by the accused."

I am of the view that these conditions are fulfilled in the present case which is solely dependent on circumstantial evidence. The Prosecution has proved its case according to the aforesaid measurements which are used on a case based on circumstantial evidence. When considering the cumulative effect of the evidence led in the present case, such as; the witness PW1's testimony of how the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant and the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent had disposed of the body of the deceased which indicates that the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant played a participatory role, PW2 witnessed her mother removing some earth with some red powder-like substance from the footpath and the testimony of the PW14 where he discovered a stone with human-like hair attached to it are all strands of evidence when considered together are sufficient to ascertain guilt on part of the both the Accused as all of these actions amount to the concealment of the crime that they are accused of committing.

Now I will proceed to answer the third question of law, namely that "The Learned High Court Judge and the Hon. Judges of the Court of Appeal failed to evaluate the evidence led against each accused in this case, separately, in arriving at a decision against each such accused."

In terms of evidence led against each accused, the evidence that is most significant is the testimony of Thilakarathna PW1. The evidence given by PW2 the 1st Accused Appellant Respondents daughter corroborates certain aspects of the testimony provided by Thilakarathna. Further based on the statement provided by the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant to the investigating Police Officer (PW14) a stone had been discovered with hair similar to human hair attached to it, however, no expert evidence regarding this stone uncovered by such statement had been led in the trial. Therefore, the relevancy of its contents cannot be given any evidentiary value.

Thus, as reiterated above the main evidence against each accused is the testimony of the two witnesses PW1 and PW2. It can be contended however that the testimony provided by PW2 does not imply guilt on part of the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant as she claimed that she only saw her mother (the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent) clearing what looked like a red earth-like substance from the pathway approaching the house. Therefore the main evidence inferring the involvement of the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant of crime is the testimony of PW1.

It is important to note that even though witness PW1 had been arrested on suspicion he had never been charged with the commission of the offence and hence was never on the footing of an accomplice. This position has been reiterated in the testimony of the investigating Police Officer (PW9). Therefore the testimony of witness PW1 does not fall within the footing of section 133 of the Evidence Ordinance of Sri Lanka.

It has been raised by the Learned Counsel for the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant that the witness PW1 was first arrested as a suspect but later named as a witness for the prosecution and that 4 contradictions have been marked in the testimony of the witness during the cross-examination on the witness and that the learned Trial Judge had failed to properly evaluate those contradictions. The Learned High Court Judge in her Judgement states that the accused was arrested as an accomplice and upon receiving a pardon has become a witness for the state. This contradicts the evidence provided by the Ruwanwella OIC Jayalath Ralalage Senivartane (PW9) in which he stated that the witness was arrested on suspicion but never named as an accused.

With regard to the contradictions marked in the testimony of the witness PW1, the Learned High Court Judge in her judgement stated that when a witness is giving evidence about an occurrence that took place in the year 1999 in 2013 there will be discrepancies as a witness is not expected to have a photographic memory. Even though there were contradictions and lacunas in the testimony of witness PW1 those contradictions are not material because his stance remained unchanged throughout the cross-examination process. Therefore, the Learned Judge of the High Court was of the opinion that there was no reasonable doubt raised on testimony provided by the witness. I am in agreement with the stance of the Learned High Court Judge.

In C.D. Fields Law Relating to Witnesses 2nd Edition, on page 208 the Author observes as follows "There is nothing in law to justify the proposition that evidence of a witness, who happens to be cognizant of a crime, or who made no attempt to prevent it, or who did not disclose its commission, should only be relied on to the same extent as an accomplice. The real question in such a case was the degree of credit to be attached to the testimony of such a witness and that depends on all the facts and circumstances of the particular case".

In the case of Karunartne v Attorney General [2005] 2 Sri L R. 236, Justice Jagath Balapatabendi observed that "Where evidence is generally reliable, much importance should not be attached to the minor discrepancies and technical errors". Such as the contradictions that were drawn from PW1 testimony which can be expected when a long period of time has elapsed since the incident and giving evidence in court.

It was also raised that the statement from the witness was belated. When questioned as to his delay in reporting to the Police the witness stated that he was repeatedly threatened by the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant to remain quiet and not to disclose what he saw to anyone. He has given a reasonable explanation for making a belated statement. In the case of Gamage Prabhath Janaka Nayana Priyantha Perera v Attorney General [CA/107/2012] decided on 27.05.2016 at page 6, Justice A.H.M.D Nawaz of the Court of Appeal observed that "Why the witness did not reveal a dastardly act or otherwise is a fact for him or her to explain and in fact if the explanation is plausible and credible the Court must act on the testimony albeit belated. If the explanation offered for the delayed statement is plausible and acceptable and the Court accepts the same as plausible, there is no reason to interfere with the conclusion made by the trial court for accepting the belated testimony".

The witness avowed that he had no relationship with the deceased. The witness claimed that he was acquainted with the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent as he would visit her premises to consume Kasippu. The witness claimed he was acquainted with the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant whom he had met a few times at the house of the Accused Appellant Respondent when he called over to consume illicit alcohol (Kasippu). The Investigating Police Officer (PW9) avowed that the witness PW1 was never arrested on suspicion and was never named as an accomplice. In the absence of ill will towards the Accused Appellants or affection with the deceased the nature of the witness's statement albeit belated, I find that the reason given by the witness for belatedness plausible and acceptable.

The 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant in his defence at the trial made a dock statement saying "නිලකරත්න කිව්වේ අමුලික බොරුවක්. මම නිර්දෝෂියි". In the case of Rex v Cochrane and Others [1814] Gurney's Report 479, the court held that "No person accused of a crime is bound to offer any explanation of his conduct or of circumstances of suspicion which attach to him; but, nevertheless if he refuses to do so where a strong prima facie case has been made out, and when it is in his own power to offer evidence, if such exists, in explanation of such suspicious circumstances which would show them to be fallacious and explicable consistently with his innocence, it is a reasonable and justifiable conclusion that he refrains from doing so only from the conviction that the evidence so suppressed or not adduced would operate adversely to his interest."

In Krishantha de Silva v The Attorney-General [2003] 1 Sri LR 162, it was held that"…a prima facie case was made against the accused. It is noted that even though the accused made a statement from the dock he was silent as to what happened after the deceased was placed on the bed. I am of the view that the statement of the accused that he did not know anything about the incident cannot be accepted. An accused person is entitled to remain silent but when the prosecution has established strong and incriminating evidence against him he is required to offer an explanation of the highly incriminating circumstances established against him. "Accordingly, the court tends to apply Ellenborough dictum in such situations.

In The King v Wickremasinghe [1941] 42 NLR 313, it was held that "in the absence of an explanation, the court was entitled to form the opinion that the accused was directly responsible". There is a strong and prima facie case against the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant in the present case. Nevertheless, the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant has failed to adduce any evidence or to call any witnesses to prove his innocence. The only evidence adduced by the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant is the dock statement claiming his innocence however, not provided any explanation nor evidence thereafter.

Thus, in my opinion, the evidence available against the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant is strong and incriminating; incompatible and inconsistent with the innocence of the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant and consistent with his guilt. There is consistent and cogent evidence against the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant. The Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal stated that there is no reason to doubt the evidence of PW1 as there is no inconsistency nor lack of credibility regarding the evidence. The cumulative effect of all the circumstantial evidence led at the trial is the guilt of the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant. Therefore, it is evident that the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant voluntarily participated in the disposal of the dead body of the deceased and played a participatory role as it is most unlikely for an innocent person to partake in the disposal of a dead body to which he has no connection whatsoever. Accordingly, the only conclusion that could be arrived at on such evidence is that the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant is guilty of the offence charged.

Therefore, considering all of the above factors in this appeal of the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant, I am of the view that the Learned High Court Judge and the Honourable Judges of the Court of Appeal had arrived at a correct conclusion that the prosecution had proved the case against the 1st Accused Appellant Respondent and the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant beyond a reasonable doubt.

Accordingly, I answer the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd questions of law on which special leave to appeal has been granted in the negative. For these reasons, the Judgment of the Court of Appeal and that of the High Court of Kegalle are affirmed. The Appeal of the 2nd Accused Appellant Appellant is hereby dismissed.

Facts of the case

This appeal is in respect of the judgment of the Provincial High Court of the Southern Province dated 24th of July, 2017 (exercising civil appellate jurisdiction) (hereinafter referred to as the "High Court"), where it was held that after the final decree is entered in a partition action, a person who had derived a contingent interest to the corpus of a partition action is entitled in law to execute a writ to obtain possession of his entitlement under the Partition Law, No.21 of 1977, as amended, (hereinafter referred to as the "Partition Law"), notwithstanding the fact that he is not a party to the original partition action.

The plaintiff instituted a partition action in the District Court of Hambantota (hereinafter referred to as the "District Court") to partition the land described in the schedule to the plaint. Thereafter, in terms of the provisions of the Partition Law, a commission was issued by the District Court. Accordingly, a preliminary survey was carried out by a Surveyor and the commission was returned with the Preliminary Plan and the Surveyor's report to the court.

Thereafter, the case proceeded to trial without a contest. At the conclusion of the trial, the learned District Judge delivered the judgment and held that the plaintiff and the 2nd to 5th defendants were entitled to 1/5th share of the corpus to the partition action. Later, an interlocutory decree was entered. Therefore, a commission was issued by the District Court for the preparation of the final plan dividing the corpus of the partition action into lots according to the entitlement of shares of the said parties. The Surveyor had returned the commission to court with the 'Final Plan No.1805' dated 5th of April, 1995 and the surveyor's report dated 23rd of April, 1995.

Pending the final decree of the partition action, the 3rd defendant-respondent-petitioner-appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "appellant"), executed the Deed of Gift No. 358 dated 26th of February, 2006, and gifted her contingent rights to the corpus to the petitioner-respondent-respondent (hereinafter referred to as the "respondent"), "subject to the final decree of the partition action".

However, after a lapse of more than four years, the said deed of gift was unilaterally revoked by the appellant by executing the Deed of Declaration No.2882 dated 27th of December, 2010. Thereafter, once again the appellant had gifted her contingent rights to the 5th defendant, by executing the Deed of Gift No. 2911 dated 25th of January, 2011, "subject to the final decree of the partition action".

Further, the final decree of the partition action was entered by court on the 10th of October, 2011. By the said final decree, lots 3 and 8 were allotted to the appellant. Therefore, by way of another Deed of Gift, the appellant once again gifted the same lots (3 and 8) to the 5th defendant.

However, after the final decree was entered by court, the respondent in the instant appeal made an application to the said District Court to obtain delivery of possession of the said lots 3 and 8, based on the said Deed of Gift No.358 dated 26th of February, 2006 making the appellant a party to the said application. Moreover, the respondent made the said application in the original partition action notwithstanding the fact that he was not a party to the original partition action.

In the said application, the respondent pleaded that the appellant gifted him her rights to the corpus "subject to the final decree of the partition action". Accordingly, the respondent stated that following the entering of the final decree in the partition action, he was entitled to the possession of lots 3 and 8 in terms of the Partition Law.

Subsequently, the appellant in the instant appeal had filed objections to the said application, stating inter alia, that the respondent acted with gross ingratitude towards the appellant which compelled the appellant to revoke the said deed of gift by executing the Deed of Declaration No.2882 dated 27th of December, 2010.

After an inquiry, the learned District Judge held that the said Deed of Gift No. 358 dated 26th of February, 2006 was a valid deed as it was executed as an irrevocable deed of gift which could only be revoked after proving gross ingratitude in a competent court. In the aforementioned circumstances, the learned District Judge allowed the said application of the respondent and issued a writ of possession to obtain the vacant possession of lots 3 and 8.

Thereafter, the Deputy Fiscal executed the said writ on the 16th of January, 2013 and reported to court that at the time he visited the property, lot 3 was vacant and lot 8 was occupied by one Rahubadda Kankanamge Amarasiri Premalal. However, said Premalal vacated the premises and therefore he placed the respondent in possession of lots 3 and 8.

Being aggrieved by the said order of the learned District Judge, the appellant preferred a revision application to the Civil Appellate High Court praying for an order, inter alia, to dismiss the said application of the respondent filed in the District Court to obtain delivery of possession of lots 3 and 8 on the basis that the respondent was not entitled to make an application to obtain possession of the said lots under the Partition Law as he was not a party to the original partition action.

After the hearing of the appeal, the learned High Court Judge held, inter alia, that the Partition Law does not prevent the respondent from making an application to obtain possession of the contingent interests to lots allotted to a party in the Partition action.

Being aggrieved by the aforementioned Order, the appellant sought leave to appeal against the said judgment of the High Court. After hearing both parties, this court granted leave to appeal on the following questions of law:

> "(i) Did their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court fail to consider that the respondent who was not a party in the partition action had no right to take over possession in terms of Section 52 of the Act by making an application against the 3rd defendant [appellant] who is the allottee of Lots 3 and 8 as it is clearly stated in the said section that only a party who had been declared to any land could make an application for delivery of possession?
>
> (ii) Did their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court also seriously misdirect themselves when they came to a conclusion that the Respondent has stepped into the shoes of the 3rd defendant [appellant] and her contingent interest of the property by operation of law and therefore she has no right to agitate against the application of the respondent and the objection to his application for delivery of possession is a mere technicality as Section 52 has not expressly prohibited the respondent from invoking the provisions of Section 52 of the Partition Law when it is settled law that failure to follow the mandatory provisions of Partition Law is fundamental vice".

At that time, the learned counsel for the respondent suggested the following question of law:

> "(iii) Is a party who becomes entitled to a contingent interest able to execute a writ in terms of Section 52(1) of the Partition Law?"

It is pertinent to note that this court did not grant leave to appeal on the question of law pleaded by the appellant pertaining to the revocation of the Deed of Gift No.358 dated 26th of February 2006 whereby the appellant gifted her rights to the corpus of the partition action to the respondent. Thus, the effect of the purported revocation of the said deed will not be considered in this judgment. Further, only the submissions relating to the aforementioned Questions of Law are considered in this judgment.

Submissions of the appellant

The learned President's Counsel for the appellant submitted that the purpose of section 52(1) of the Partition Law is to hand over the possession of a lot allotted to "a party to the partition action", ejecting any person in occupation of the lot other than a tenant or a tenant cultivator. Hence, the respondent cannot make an application under the said section or under any other section of the said Law to obtain possession of the land or partition of it as he was not a party to the partition action.

Further, the learned President's Counsel for the appellant submitted that the respondent was not entitled to make an application under section 52A of the Partition Law for restoration of possession as he was not dispossessed from the said lots.

Submissions of the respondent

The learned counsel for the respondent submitted that even though the respondent was not a party to the original partition action, he was entitled to make an application to obtain possession of the said lots as the respondent "stepped into the shoes of the appellant", upon the execution of the Deed of Gift No. 358 dated 26th of February, 2006.

It was further submitted that the District Court is conferred with the jurisdiction to make orders to give effect to every order or decree made or entered in a Partition action including the delivery of possession under section 53 of the Partition Act. Further, the words "any person entitled thereto" allows not only a party to the partition action but also "any person" who has derived any contingent interest to an allotment given by a final decree to make an application to obtain possession of his rights. In this regard, the attention of court was drawn to the words "any person entitled thereto" in the said section and submitted that the legislature has intentionally used those words instead of the words "a party to the action".

It was further contended that section 53 stipulates the substantive law conferring jurisdiction on the trial judge, whereas section 52 stipulates the procedural law in which an application to obtain possession is to be made to court.

It was also submitted that the District Court has the power to make such orders as it considers necessary to prevent injustice in respect of issues arising from the procedure.

Hence, in order to prevent further delays, the legislature has imposed a ban on the alienation, leasing and hypothecation of the corpus or part of it in a Partition action to prevent taking steps to add/substitute new parties.

In Subaseris v Prolis 16 NLR 393 at 394 Woodrenton, ACJ held;

> "The final decree did in fact allot to Dineshamy the divided share which he had previously transferred to the plaintiff. The decision in this case depends on the question whether that transfer, made as it was before the final decree in the partition action, is void in consequence of the provisions of section 17 Ordinance No. 10 of 1863. The learned Commissioner of Requests has answered this question in the affirmative, and has dismissed the plaintiff's action with costs. In my opinion it should have been answered in the negative, and the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. It must be remembered that section 17 of the Partition Ordinance imposes a fetter on the free alienation of property, and the Courts ought to see that fetter is not made more comprehensive than the language and the intention of the section require. The section itself prohibits only, in terms, the alienation of undivided shares or interests in property which is the subject of partition proceedings while these proceedings are still pending, and the clear object of the enactment was to prevent the trial of partition actions from being delayed by the intervention of fresh parties whose interest had been created since the proceedings began."

Therefore, it was submitted that the application made to the District Court by the respondent should not be dismissed as the substantive law allows to make such an application to court to obtain delivery of possession of a lot allotted in a partition decree.

The issues that need to be considered in the instant appeal

In view of the above submissions made by the parties, the two issues that need to be considered in the instant appeal are;

(a) Can a party gift his co-owned rights subject to the final decree of the partition action?

(b) Was the respondent entitled in law to make an application under the Partition Law for the delivery of possession of his contingent interest after the District Court entered the final decree in the partition action?

Can a party to a Partition action alienate, lease or hypothecate his co-owned share or interest in the Corpus subject to the final decree?

Partition cases take a long time to conclude because of the several mandatory procedural steps that are required to be taken in such actions and the large number of persons that are required to be made parties to the case. Hence the legislature has included the following provisions in the Partition Law to minimise the delay in concluding Partition cases.

Section 66 of the Partition Law states:

> "(1) After a partition action is duly registered as a lis pendens under the Registration of Documents Ordinance no voluntary alienation, lease or hypothecation of any undivided share or interest of or in the land to which the action relates shall be made or effected until the final determination of the action by dismissal thereof, or by the entry of a decree of partition under section 36 or by the entry of a certificate of sale.
>
> (2) Any voluntary alienation, lease or hypothecation made or effected in contravention of the provisions of subsection (1) of this section shall be void:
>
> (3) Any assignment, after the institution of a partition action, of a lease or hypothecation effected prior to the registration of such partition action as a lis pendens shall not be affected by the provisions of subsections (1) and (2) of this section."

Thus, in terms of section 66 (2), any voluntary alienation, lease or hypothecation of the Corpus is void. Where an instrument is executed pending partition proceedings in respect of an interest to which the grantor may ultimately become entitled upon the final decree in a partition action, a question arises as to whether such a transfer should be construed as an actual alienation, lease or hypothecation of the rights or in a conditional transfer subject to a future entitlement from a final decree. In this regard, the allotment of shares in the final decree is a condition precedent to pass the actual alienation, lease or hypothecation.

A careful analysis of section 66 shows that there is no legal impediment to alienate, lease or hypothecate a contingent interest in a corpus which is the subject matter of the partition action "subject to the final decree". Further, whether the instrument that alienates the property specifically refers to "subject to the final decree of the partition action" or not, that does not prevent a contingent interest from passing to a recipient upon entering the final decree in a partition action.

Thus, no rights of ownership, lease or hypothecation pass to the grantee, upon the acquisition of such interest in the land until, and unless the grantor acquires a right under the final decree from the partition action.

A similar position was taken in the case of Sithi Fareeda v Mohamed Noor, SC/Appeal 134/2013, S.C. Minutes 28th October, 2014, where it was held;

> "I am of the view that it is settled law for many decades that in spite of the provisions included in the Partition Ordinance firstly by Section 17 and thereafter in the Partition Law by Section 66, any party to a law suit of partitioning a co-owned land is able to gift, sell, or hypothecate his entitlement to the share of the land which would be allocated to him at the end of the case".

Further, in M.W.A.P. Jayathilake v P.G. Somadasa 70 NLR 25 referring to section 67 of the repealed Partition Act No. 16 of 1951, which is the corresponding provision of section 66 of the Partition Law, it was held:

> "Section 67 has not altered the position which prevailed under the former Partition Ordinance that the prohibition against the alienation or hypothecation of an undivided share or interest pending partition does not prevent the changing or disposing of the interest to be ultimately to be allotted to a party in the pending action."

A similar view was explained in Karunaratne v Perera 67 NLR 529, where it was held that where, pending a partition action, a co-owner gifts to certain persons the shares to which he will be declared entitled in the action, the interests which are allotted in that action to the donor pass automatically to the donees when the final decree is entered. It is not necessary that the interest which the done obtained on the deed of gift should be expressly conserved to them in the final decree even though they intervened in the action.

Further in Silie Fernando v Silmon Fernando 64 NLR 404, the transferor pending the action, transferred the interests to which he would become entitled in the final decree. Thereafter, he died before the final decree was entered in the Partition Action. Thus, the rights of transferee were decided in the said case and the court held,

"Whatever will be allotted him by the final decree, the lot is in severalty finally allotted to the transferor or those representing him (if he has died before the entry of the final decree) will automatically pass and vest in the transferee without any further conveyance by the transferor or his representatives."

In Nazeer v Hassian 48 NLR 282, it was held that, where pending a partition action, some of the co-owners covenant to convey absolutely all the shares, right title and interest which will accrue to them under and by virtue of the final decree in the partition action, the other contracting party obtains an immediate interest in the property, but the title can only accrue upon the entering of the final decree.

In case of Sirinatha vs. Sirisena and other (1998) 3 SLR 19 it was held;

"In Sirisoma v. Saranelis Appuhamy (51 NLR 337), Gratiaen, J. interpreting section 17 of the Partition Ordinance held that it prohibits the alienation or hypothecation of undivided interests presently vested in the owners of a land which is the subject of partition proceedings. There is no statutory prohibition against a person's common law right to alienate or hypothecate, by anticipation, interests which he can only acquire upon the conclusion of the proceedings. That right is in no way affected by the pendency of an action for partition under the provisions of the Ordinance.

The submission that the transfer by the 2nd defendant of the rights to which he may become entitled to in the partition action, is obnoxious to the provisions of section 66 of the Partition Law cannot therefore succeed. Section 66 of the Partition Law prohibits only the alienation or hypothecation of undivided interests presently vested in the owners of a land which is the subject of pending partition proceedings. There was no bar preventing the 2nd defendant from transferring the interests which he would acquire upon the conclusion of the partition action."

Automatic transfer of rights to a transferee after the final decree is entered in a partition action.

A similar view was held in Sirisoma v Sarnelis Appuhamy 51 NLR 337, if a co-owner sells or donates an undivided interest in a land, a share will be allotted to the vendor or donor by a final decree in a partition action, will automatically pass and vest in the vendee or donee under the transfer deed or interest in question, without any further conveyance, either by the vendor or donor or by his heirs or representatives;

"Whether each question which I have discussed be examined by reference to the trend of past decisions of this Court or on the assumption that it may legitimately be considered as res integra, I think that the following propositions should now be accepted as settled law: -

(1) Section 17 of the Partition Ordinance does not prohibit the alienation or hypothecation, pending partition proceedings, of an interest to which a co-owner may ultimately become entitled by virtue of the decree in the pending action;

(2) Where an instrument is executed, pending partition proceedings, in respect of an interest to which the grantor may ultimately become entitled upon the decree, the question whether it should be construed as an actual alienation or hypothecation, of such contingent interest or merely as an agreement to alienate or hypothecate such interest (if and when acquired) must be decided in accordance with the ordinary rules governing the interpretation of written instruments;

(3) If such an instrument is in effect only an agreement to alienate or hypothecate a future interest, if and when acquired, no rights of ownership or hypothecary rights (as the case may be) pass to the grantee upon the acquisition of that interest by the grantor unless and until the agreement has been duly implemented ; if, without implementing this agreement, the grantor conveys to a third party the rights which he has acquired under the decree, the competing claims of that third party and of the original grantee must be determined with reference to other legal principles such as the application of Section 93 of the Trusts Ordinance ;

(4) If the instrument is in effect a present alienation or hypothecation of a contingent interest, the rights of ownership (or the hypothecary rights) vest in the grantee automatically upon the acquisition of that interest by the grantor; and no further instrument of conveyance or mortgage requires to be executed for the purpose; the execution of "a deed of further assurance" confirming the result which has already taken place may in certain cases be desirable but it is not essential in such a case;

(5) The provisions of section 9 of the Partition Ordinance do not invalidate a transaction whereby an interest (which is not presently vested in the grantor and which could only become vested in him, if at all, upon the passing of a final decree for partition) is intended to pass to the grantee upon its acquisition.

Any earlier decisions of this Court which express or appear to express opinions in conflict with the general propositions enumerated above should now be regarded as over-ruled to that extent. Owners of land, and the practitioners who are called upon to advise them, should not be left in a state of continual doubt as to the scope of the restrictions which the Partition Ordinance imposes upon the alienation and hypothecation of interests in land. As Dr. C. K. Allen points out, it would be disastrous to the public interest if "the vaunted ' certainty ' of our system of precedents has too much in common with the kind of 'certainty ' which is to be found on the race-course and the dog-track."

[emphasis added]

In B. Sillie Fernando v W. Silman Fernando 64 NLR 404, it was held that, where prior to the entering of the interlocutory decree in a partition action, a party transfers by sale or donation whatever will be allotted to him by the final decree, the lot in severalty finally allotted to the transferor or those representing him (if he has died before entering the final decree) will automatically pass and vest in the transferee, without any further conveyance by the transferor or his representatives.

Further, it was held:

> "In this action, which is a partition action, the 2nd defendant claims certain soil shares, certain plantations and a thatched house. Prior to the entering of the interlocutory decree, the 2nd defendant, by the deed marked Z1, donated to his natural children born to his mistress the 41st defendant-appellant, the soil, plantations and thatched house, which would be allotted to him ultimately by the final decree.

Is the respondent entitled to make an application under the Partition Law to obtain possession of his entitlement after the final decree is entered

In the instant appeal, the respondent had made an application to the District Court under the Partition Law to obtain possession of lots 3 and 8 allotted to the appellant by the final decree of the partition action.

Section 52 of the Partition Law sets out the procedure for a party to a partition action to obtain possession of the land or any portion of the land after the final decree is entered in a partition action.

Section 52(1) of the Partition Law states as follows:

> "(1) Every party to a partition action who has been declared to be entitled to any land by any final decree entered under this Law and every person who has purchased any land at any sale held under this Law and in whose favour a certificate of sale in respect of the land so purchased has been entered by the court, shall be entitled to obtain from the court, in the same action, on application made by motion in that behalf, an order for the delivery to him of possession of the land:

Provided that where such party is liable to pay any amount as owelty or as compensation for improvements, he shall not be entitled to obtain such order until that amount is paid.

(2) (a) Where the applicant for delivery of possession seeks to evict any person in occupation of a land or a house standing on the land as a tenant for a period not exceeding one month who is liable to be evicted by the applicant, such application shall be made by petition to which such person in occupation shall be made respondent, setting out the material facts entitling the applicant to such order.

(b) After hearing the respondent, if the court shall determine that the respondent having entered into occupation prior to the date of such final decree or certificate of sale, is entitled to continue in occupation of the said house as tenant under the applicant as landlord, the court shall dismiss the application: otherwise it shall grant the application and direct that an order for delivery of possession of the said house and land to the applicant do issue."

However, section 53(1) of the Partition Law states as follows:

"(1) A court exercising jurisdiction in a partition action shall have full power to give effect to every order or decree made or entered in the action (including the power to order delivery of possession of any land or portion of land to any person entitled thereto) and to punish as for contempt of court any person who-

(a) disobeys any such order, or

(b) obstructs or resists any person acting under the authority of the court or exercising any power conferred on him by this Law, or

(c) damages, destroys or removes, during the pendency of the action, any boundary mark which under section 31, has been made or set up on the land to which the action relates."

[emphasis added]

The appellant's position is that the respondent was not entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of the District Court to obtain possession of the land as he was not a "party to the partition action".

However, a careful consideration of sections 53(1) and 52(1) show that both sections have conferred power on the District Court to make order for the delivery of any land or share of a land. Hence, both the said sections should be considered together for the purpose of interpreting section 53(1) of the said Law. Moreover, it is pertinent to note that the said section 53(1) specifically stipulates that the court has power to "order delivery of possession of any land or portion of land to any person entitled thereto*",* as opposed to a 'party to the partition action'.

In view of the different words used in the abovementioned sections 52(1) and 53(1), it is necessary to consider whether only a 'party to the original partition action' could make an application to obtain possession of the lot allocated to a party in a partition action or whether any person who has acquired a contingent right to any of the allotments from a final decree could make such an application to court.

According to the rules of interpretation, the provisions in an Act shall be interpreted in harmony with other provisions in the Act to achieve the object of the Act.

A similar view was held by Sripavan, J (as he then was), in Herath v Morgan Engineering (Pvt) Ltd., (2013) 1 SLR 222 at 229:

> "Whether it is the Constitution or the Act, the Courts must adopt a construction that will ensure the smooth and harmonious working of the Constitution or the Act as the case may be, considering the cause which induced the legislature in enacting it."

The purpose of enacting the Partition Law was to establish a special procedure to partition a land held in co-ownership, providing a simple and easy remedy for obtaining possession of the land, rather than resorting to the cumbersome general procedure set out in the Civil Procedure Code. It is trite law that the Partition Law of Sri Lanka stands above compiling both substantive and procedural law relating to the area.

Further, section 53(1) of the Partition Law has conferred power on the District Court to give effect to every order or decree made or entered in a Partition action. Moreover, the words "including the power to order delivery of possession of any land or portion of a land to any person entitled thereto" shows that any person who is entitled to have the benefit from an order or a decree made or entered in a partition action can make an application for the delivery of possession of any land or portion of a land if he has got an entitlement to the land or portion of it consequent to a Partition decree.

However, neither section 53(1) nor any other section in the Partition Law set out the procedure to obtain possession of an entitlement to a land or portion of a land by "a person" who has gotten an entitlement from a partition decree.

Thus, I am of the opinion that any person who gets the contingent right to a property subject to the final decree steps into the room and in place of a party to the Partition action and therefore, such a person can invoke section 53(1) to obtain possession of rights that his predecessor got from a final decree of a partition action.

Further, as the said section does not stipulate the procedure to obtain possession of the land or the portion of which "the person" got rights from a final decree, he can make an application under section 52(1) to obtain possession of the entitlement he got from the final decree.

Conclusion

In the foregoing circumstances, the two questions of law raised by the appellant should be answered as follows:

(1) Did their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court fail to consider that the respondent who was not a party in the partition action had no right to take over possession in terms of section 52 of the Act by making an application against the appellant who is the allottee of Lots 3 and 8 as it is clearly stated in the said section that only a party who had been declared to any land could make an application for delivery of possession?

NO

(2) Did their Lordships of the Civil Appellate High Court also seriously misdirect themselves when they came to a conclusion that the respondent has stepped into the shoes of the appellant and her contingent interest of the property by operation of law and therefore she has no right to agitate against the application of the respondent and the objection to his application for delivery of possession is a mere technicality as section 52 has not expressly prohibited the respondent from invoking the provisions of section 52 of the Partition Law when it is settled law that failure to follow the mandatory provisions of Partition Law is fundamental vice?

NO

Further, the question of law suggested by the respondent should be answered as follows:

(3) Is a party who becomes entitled to a contingent interest able to execute a writ in terms of section 52(1) of the Partition Law?

YES

Therefore, the order of the learned High Court Judge dated 24th of July, 2017 is affirmed. The appellant's appeal is dismissed without cost.

The plaintiff filed this action in the District Court of Matara to partition the land known as "Excluded portion of Punchipathagewatta bearing assessment number 11" described in the second paragraph of the plaint between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant. The 2nd and 3rd defendants, two siblings, have been made parties to the action as they dispute the plaintiff's rights to the land. After trial, the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action on the basis that the 3rd defendant has prescribed to the land. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal affirmed the judgment of the District Court and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff has filed this appeal against the judgment of the High Court. This Court granted leave to appeal against the judgment of the High Court on the following questions of law as formulated by learned counsel for the plaintiff:

a) Did the Honourable Judges of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals of the Southern Province (Holden in Matara) err in not considering an all important item of evidence, the complaint marked IV2 and the existence of the Western boundary shown in Plan No. 1318A marked X, which nullifies the finding of the Learned trial Judge as to the possession of the subject matter of this action as part of the adjoining land pertaining to lot A of land called Punchipathagewatta?
b) Did the Honourable Judges of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals of the Southern Province (Holden in Matara) err in holding that the learned District Judge is correct in holding that the 3rd Defendant has prescribed to the subject matter of this action by being in possession of the subject matter of this action as part of the adjoining land pertaining to lot A of land called Punchipathagewatta?
c) Did the Honourable Judges of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals of the Southern Province (Holden in Matara) err in not considering that once the paper title to the subject matter of this action is proved to be with the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant the burden of proving the prescriptive right to the subject matter of this action as a distinct and separate land within the meaning of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance is with the 3rd Defendant which the 3rd Defendant has failed to do even on the finding of the Learned trial Judge as to the possession of the subject matter of this action?

There is no corpus dispute in this case but the District Court has confined the corpus to lot 1 in the preliminary plan marked X. Learned counsel for the plaintiff does not contest this finding. There had been a dispute on the pedigree but the District Court has resolved it in favour of the plaintiff. However the District Court has dismissed the plaintiff's action on the basis that the 3rd defendant possessed the corpus (i.e. lot 1 in plan X) together with lots 3 and 4 in the same plan as part of "lot A of Punchipathagewatta bearing assessment number 11" which lies adjoining the land to be partitioned. It is common ground that "lot A of Punchipathagewatta bearing assessment number 11" is possessed by the contesting defendants or their people, not by the plaintiff or the 1st defendant.

The plaintiff describes the disputed land as a burial ground but admits in evidence that no one has been buried there in her lifetime. She was 46 years old at the time of giving evidence. She has not witnessed any burials there although she says her deceased father had told her that some of her forefathers were buried there. There are no tombs. There is nothing to look after or possess. It is a bare land. The plaintiff in her evidence says when her father, the original plaintiff, was alive, he used to clean the land. The District Court has not believed this evidence. If what the plaintiff says in relation to possession is correct, they could have at least put up a fence separating that portion from "lot A of Punchipathagewatta bearing assessment number 11". This has not been done.

According to the complaint made by the original plaintiff to the Gramasewa Officer marked 1V2, which the plaintiff strongly relies on (vide the first question of law reproduced above), the 2nd defendant is in possession of the land on the northern boundary of the disputed land and the 2nd defendant put up a fence joining the disputed portion of the land to her land on or around 24.05.1989. That is the complaint. The plaintiff does not ask the Gramasewa Officer to hold an inquiry into his complaint. He did not make a police complaint either. After this alleged incident, he filed this partition action on 18.08.1989. If the original plaintiff had been in possession of the disputed portion of the land for a long time and if the 2nd defendant forcibly evicted him by erecting a fence around that portion and joining that portion to her land, a reasonable person in my view would have acted differently. Be that as it may, if what the plaintiff says in 1V2 is correct, until such time, the disputed portion did not have a fence separating it from "lot A of Punchipathagewatta bearing assessment number 11". This supports the assertion of the 2nd and 3rd defendants, which was accepted by the District Court, that they possessed the disputed portion of the land as part of "lot A of Punchipathagewatta bearing assessment number 11" as one allotment. According to the preliminary plan, there is no fence on the northern boundary of the land although the other three boundaries have fences. There is a "foundation" on the northern boundary. This seems to be a construction by the 2nd and 3rd defendants.

Neither the plaintiff nor her father has ever paid assessment rates to the Municipal Council in relation to the corpus but the 3rd defendant and her father have. Learned counsel for the plaintiff contends that although the 3rd defendant may have paid rates on assessment number 11, the land for the partition of which the action was filed is not assessment number 11. This is contrary to the evidence of the plaintiff. She has accepted in evidence that assessment number 11 is the land in dispute. It is in that context that the District Court has made the finding that the 3rd defendant and her father have paid taxes on assessment number 11 including the disputed portion. Learned counsel also contends that rates are not levied on burial grounds. Although the plaintiff identifies this as a burial ground, it is no longer used for that purpose.

Learned counsel for the plaintiff, either in the written submissions or oral submissions, does not give any acceptable cogent reason for this Court to reverse the judgment of the District Court. The judgment of the District Court is a well-considered one. On the facts and circumstances of this case, the finding of the District Court which was affirmed by the High Court that, on a balance of probability, the 3rd defendant has acquired prescriptive title to lots 1, 3 and 4 in plan X, is justifiable. I answer the questions of law upon which leave has been granted against the plaintiff and dismiss the appeal but without costs.

Samayawardhena, J.

This is a partition action. At the time of the trial, in addition to the plaintiff, there were eight defendants. The only contesting defendant was the 4th defendant. The others were sailing with the plaintiff. Those defendants (except the 4th) did not raise issues, cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses or lead evidence. After trial, the District Judge of Kandy entered judgment as prayed for by the plaintiff allotting undivided shares to all the parties. Being dissatisfied with the judgment, the 4th defendant appealed to the High Court of Civil Appeal of Kandy. At the argument before the High Court, counsel for the plaintiff-respondent moved that the appeal be dismissed in limine since the other defendants had not been made parties and hence there was no properly constituted appeal.

The High Court upheld this preliminary objection and dismissed the appeal. This appeal by the 4th respondent is against the judgment of the High Court.

In terms of section 755(1)(c) and (d), and section 758(1)(b) and (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, the notice of appeal and the petition of appeal shall contain inter alia the names and addresses of the parties to the action and the names of the appellants and the respondents. The failure to name the 1st-3rd and 5th-8th defendants as parties to the appeal violates these sections.

In Talayaratne v. Talayaratne (1957) 61 NLR 112 the Supreme Court held "The Civil Procedure Code does not require a party appellant to name as respondent to an appeal every party to the proceedings in the lower Court. A party against whom no order is sought by the appellant need not be named as a respondent."

It was held in Ibrahim v. Beebee (1916) 19 NLR 289 at 293 that for the proper constitution of an appeal, all parties to an action who may be prejudicially affected by the result of the appeal should be made parties.

This means, not all the parties, but all the necessary parties shall be made parties to the appeal. Necessary parties to the appeal are the parties who will be prejudicially or adversely affected by the result of the appeal.

The Civil Procedure Code provides for the rectification of such defects in appropriate cases.

Section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code reads as follows:

> In the case of any mistake, omission or defect on the part of any appellant in complying with the provisions of the foregoing sections (other than a provision specifying the period within which any act or thing is to be done), the Court of Appeal may, if it should be of opinion that the respondent has not been materially prejudiced, grant relief on such terms as it may deem just.

In terms of this section, any mistake, omission or defect on the part of any appellant in complying with the provisions of chapter 58, which deals with appeals, may be remedied if it has not caused material prejudice to the respondent. As noted in cases such as Martin v. Suduhamy [1991] 2 Sri LR 279 and Keerthisiri v. Weerasena [1997] 1 Sri LR 70, what is contemplated in section 759(2) is not mere prejudice but material prejudice.

In the Supreme Court case of Nanayakkara v. Warnakulasuriya [1993] 2 Sri LR 289 at 290, Kulatunga J. stated:

> The power of the Court to grant relief under section 759(2) of the Code is wide and discretionary and is subject to such terms as the Court may deem just. Relief may be granted even if no excuse for non-compliance is forthcoming. However, relief cannot be granted if the Court is of the opinion that the respondent has been materially prejudiced in which event the appeal has to be dismissed.

Drawing the attention of the Court to section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code, learned President's Counsel for the 4th defendant-appellant contends that the failure to name the 1st-3rd and 5th-8th defendants as parties to this appeal caused no material prejudice to those defendants, as they did not actively participate in the trial because they were sailing with the plaintiff. I am unable to agree with this submission for the reason that, after trial, the District Judge in his judgment allotted undivided shares to all the defendants, and in the event the 4th defendant's appeal was allowed, those defendants would have been materially prejudiced as the 4th defendant seeks dismissal of the plaintiff's action. Undoubtedly, those defendants are necessary parties to the appeal.

In my view, section 759(2) is inapplicable to cater to a situation such as the present one where the issue is failure to name necessary parties as respondents. A careful reading of section 759(2) reveals that it caters to a situation where the Court can grant relief to an appellant despite mistake, omission or defect "if it should be of opinion that the respondent has not been materially prejudiced". When a necessary party has not been made a respondent, this section has no applicability.

I am aware that relief has been granted for failure to make necessary parties as parties to the appeal under section 759(2) on the basis that no material prejudice has been caused by such failure. This seems to me not to be correct. The question is not whether prejudice has been caused to the named respondents by not naming necessary parties as respondents, which, to my mind, is meaningless. If that interpretation is given, the appellant can name only parties who support him as respondents and say no prejudice has been caused to them by the failure to name other parties as respondents.

Apart from naming the correct parties as respondents, there are several other requirements to be fulfilled for the constitution of a proper appeal. Vide, for instance, sections 755(1)(a), (b) and (e), 756, 758(a), (d) to (f). Section 759(2) refers to those requirements.

In a situation such as in the instant appeal, the applicable section is section 770 of the Civil Procedure Code, which reads as follows:

> If, at the hearing of the appeal, the respondent is not present and the court is not satisfied upon the material in the record or upon other evidence that the notice of appeal was duly served upon him or his registered attorney as hereinbefore provided, or if it appears to the court at such hearing that any person who was a party to the action in the court against whose decree the appeal is made, but who has not been made a party to the appeal, the court may issue the requisite notice of appeal for service.

If at the hearing of the appeal, it is brought to the notice of Court or the Court ex mero motu realises that a necessary party has not been named as a respondent to the appeal or, having made a respondent, notice has not been served on him, the Court need not dismiss the appeal in limine on the ground that the appeal is not properly constituted. The Court has the discretion to rectify such defects under section 770.

The invocation of section 770 is not a right of the appellant but is at the discretion of the Court, which the Court shall exercise judicially and not arbitrarily or capriciously.

I am conscious of the fact that it was the view of the Supreme Court especially in the past that failure to make necessary parties respondents to the appeal was a fatal irregularity which could not be cured by the application of section 770 – vide Seelananda Thero v. Rajapakse (1938) 39 NLR 361.

Nevertheless, the Full Bench decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Ibrahim v. Beebee (1916) 19 NLR 289 considered the application of section 770 somewhat favourably in instances where necessary parties are not made parties. The Full Bench held that where an appeal has not been properly constituted by the necessary parties being made respondents, the appeal should be dismissed "unless the defect is not one of an obvious character which could not reasonably have been foreseen and avoided." The discretion was considerably limited by this qualification. In the circumstances of that case, however, the Full Bench was inclined to act under section 770 to cure the defect where necessary parties were not made parties to the appeal.

More often than not, Ibrahim v. Beebee was followed in later cases, not to grant but to deny relief under section 770.

In Suwarishamy v. Thelenis (1952) 54 NLR 282 the 1st plaintiff respondent took up the objection that the appeal was not properly constituted in that the 3rd plaintiff, who is a necessary party, had not been made a respondent. The appellant accepted that the 3rd plaintiff was a necessary party but moved to act under section 770.

Following Ibrahim v. Beebee, the Supreme Court was not inclined to grant relief under section 770. Gunasekara J. stated: "In the present case, which is an action for partition of land, the order that is appealed from was made upon an intervention by the appellants, who claimed to have succeeded to certain interests that at one time belonged to one Eliashamy. The learned District Judge after inquiry held that Eliashamy's interests have now devolved on the 1st plaintiff and the 3rd plaintiff. In these circumstances it is not possible to say that it was not obvious that the 3rd plaintiff was a necessary party or that the defect was not one that could not reasonably have been foreseen and avoided." Accordingly, the appeal was dismissed in limine.

In cases such as Gunasekera v. Perera (1971) 74 NLR 163, Wijeratne v. Wijeratne (1971) 74 NLR 193, H.N.G. Fernando C.J. followed Ibrahim v. Beebee to refuse relief under section 770.

The oft-quoted judgment of the Court of Appeal in Wimalasiri v. Premasiri [2003] 3 Sri LR 330, which held "default of citing a person not living as the respondent in the notice of appeal and the petition of appeal which resulted from the negligence of the defendant-appellant and the registered Attorney-at-Law would render notice and the petition of appeal void ab initio. The defect being incurable the defendant-appellants cannot seek relief under section 759(2)" cannot be treated as good law in view of the Supreme Court judgment in Nanayakkara v. Warnakulasuriya [1993] 2 Sri LR 289 at 293, where Kulatunga J. held "In an application for relief under section 759(2), the rule that the negligence of the Attorney-at-Law is the negligence of the client does not apply as in the cases of default curable under Sections 86(2), 87(3) and 771. Such negligence may be relevant but it does not fetter the discretion of the Court to grant relief where it is just and fair to do so." In any event, in Wimalasiri v. Premasiri the Court of Appeal did not consider the applicability of section 770 at all.

In Kiri Mudiyanse v. Bandara Menika (1972) 76 NLR 371, the Supreme Court did not find favour with the restrictive approach adopted by the Full Bench of the Supreme Court in Ibrahim v. Beebee in interpreting section 770. In Kiri Mudiyanse, the plaintiff-respondent relying on Ibrahim v. Beebee raised a preliminary objection that the appeal was not properly constituted as some of the defendants who had been granted shares in the judgment had not been made party respondents to the appeal and that only the plaintiff-respondent had been made a party respondent. Pathirana J. with the agreement of Rajaratnam J. at pages 375-377 stated:

> With all due respects to the decisions that have been followed regarding the principles on which the discretion had been exercised in respect of section 770, while admitting that there may be much to be said for the principles enunciated in these cases, I am of opinion that the Court cannot be fettered in exercising a discretionary power which is given so widely by section 770 by being bound to exercise the discretion only in conformity with the principles laid down in those cases.
> To emphasise my point that the principle laid down in Ibrahim v. Beebee is not the sole criterion for exercising the discretion under section 770, I would refer to the case of Dias v. Arnolis (1913) 17

NLR 200 which is a full bench decision. …. The case of Dias v. Arnolis had not laid down the principle which formed the decision in Ibrahim v. Beebee, namely, that the power of dismissal should be exercised unless the defect is not one of an obvious character which could not have been reasonably foreseen and avoided. On the other hand, the question whether or not the respondent ought to be added in a particular case is a question for decision of the judge who hears the appeal was laid down in the full bench case. Much the same flexible language was used by Shaw J. in Ibrahim v. Beebee when he stated as the second reason for the exercise of the discretion, namely, unless some good cause is given for non-joinder.

With all respects to the decisions which followed Ibrahim v. Beebee and while we are conscious of the commendation attached to it that it had been consistently followed, I would rather on the facts and circumstances in this case prefer to follow the principles laid down in the full bench case of Dias v. Arnolis and also the second reason given by Shaw J. in Ibrahim v. Beebee by stating that the exercise of the discretion is a matter for the decision of the judge who hears the appeal in the particular case and also that it should be exercised when some good reason or cause is given for the non-joinder. The discretion which is an unfettered one must, of course, be exercised judicially and not arbitrarily and capriciously.

Rajaratnam J. added at page 378:

Section 770 of the Civil Procedure Code has survived intact all the authorities referred to above to give us still an unfettered discretion to adjourn the hearing of the appeal to a future date and to direct that the 1st to the 3rd and 6th to the 8th defendants be made respondents and the requisite notices of appeal be issued to the Fiscal for service. We have done so in the interests of a just hearing > of the appeal while being most respectfully mindful of the guiding principles laid down by this Court. The plain meaning of this section, however, shines with a clear and constant simplicity in the midst of all the wise observations made round it during the last half of a century.

In my view, Kiri Mudiyanse v. Bandara Menika was the watershed in the progressive development of the law in respect of defective appeals. The current trend of authority in the Supreme Court endorses this approach. Accordingly, mistakes, omissions, defects or lapses such as the failure to make necessary parties as respondents, naming deceased parties (without substitution) in the caption, naming parties incorrectly in the caption, failure to give notice to all named parties etc. are curable defects under sections 759(2) and 770 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Whilst appreciating that the discretion of the Court shall not be circumscribed by self-imposed fetters, I must add that the Court shall not however allow defects or lapses to be cured on the application of either section 759(2) or 770 as a matter of course or as a matter of routine unless the appellant gives a good reason to the satisfaction of the Court for such defect or lapse, as otherwise the express provisions of the Civil Procedure Code under chapter 58, which lay down the procedure for the proper constitution of an appeal, will be rendered nugatory.

In the Supreme Court case of Jayasekera v. Lakmini [2010] 1 Sri LR 41 both the notice of appeal and the petition of appeal were not in conformity with the provisions of sections 755(1) and 758(1) of the Civil Procedure Code. On the preliminary objection taken for non-joinder of necessary parties, Ekanayake J. (with Asoka de Silva C.J. and Marsoof J. agreeing) held that those lapses can be rectified in terms of section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code since it has not caused material prejudice to the other parties. Ekanayake J. further held that section 770 of the Civil Procedure Code can also be made use of by the appellate Court when granting such relief to a defaulting appellant. When it was pointed out by counsel for the respondent that no such application invoking the provisions of section 759 had been made for the appellate Court to grant such relief, the Supreme Court went so far as to say at page 51 "it is undoubtedly incumbent upon the court to utilize the statutory provisions and grant the relief embodied therein if it appears to court that it is just and fair to do so."

In the Supreme Court case of Wilson v. Kusumawathi [2015] BLR 49 Sisira de Abrew J. with the concurrence of Marsoof J. and Sarath de Abrew J. took the same view.

In Premaratna v. Sunil Pathirana (SC/APPEAL/49/2012, SC Minutes of 27.03.2015), when a preliminary objection to the maintainability of the appeal was raised inter alia on the ground that a deceased party had been named as a respondent, Wanasundara J. with Aluwihare J. and Abeyratne J. agreeing stated:

> The parties to the action in the District Court are the parties to the action in the appellate court, in this instance the High Court of Civil Appeals. The petition of appeal had not contained in the caption, the names of the substituted parties. I feel that, the mere fact that only the name of the dead person was mentioned in the caption, cannot be held against the party seeking relief from Court. It is a lapse on the part of the petitioner's Attorney-at-Law. The litigant who has come before Court for relief should not be deprived of his right to seek relief due to a lapse on the part of the lawyers preparing and filing the papers. In the case in hand, the dead person had been substituted promptly in the District Court and named as 1A and 1B defendants. It is only a lapse of not writing down the caption properly. I am of the view that this is a matter which should have > been corrected by the High Court Judges as provided for in section 759(1) and (2). It is not an incorrigible defect, good enough for rejecting the petition of appeal.

In a similar case where a deceased party was named as a respondent, Dep J. (later C.J.) in Heenmenike v. Mangalika (SC/APPEAL/41/2012, SC Minutes of 01.04.2016) held:

> I hold that failure to comply with section 755(1) by not citing the 2nd substituted plaintiff as a respondent in the notice of appeal and in the petition of appeal is a curable defect under sections 759(2) and section 770 of the Civil Procedure Code. I set aside the judgment in the High Court (Civil Appeal), Kegalle in case No. 639/2009. I direct the learned judges of the High Court (Civil Appeal) Kegalle to delete the name of the deceased 2nd plaintiff-respondent and add the 2nd substituted-plaintiff as the 2nd substituted-plaintiff-respondent and proceed to hear the appeal on merits and deliver judgment according to law.

However, it may be mentioned that if the appeal has been filed out of time, it cannot be cured by invocation of section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code because relief can be granted under that section for non-compliance with the provisions relating to the appellate procedure "other than a provision specifying the period within which any act or thing is to be done" as stated in the section itself. The time limits within which steps are to be taken, such as filing the notice of appeal and petition of appeal, are mandatory and imperative.

In the Supreme Court case of Raninkumar v. Union Assurance Limited [2003] 2 Sri LR 92 at 96, Edussuriya J. held "no relief whatsoever can be granted where there is any mistake, omission or defect in complying with a provision specifying the period within which any act or thing is to be done, even if the respondent is not materially prejudiced."

Mark Fernando J. in The Ceylon Brewery Ltd v. Jax Fernando [2001] 1 Sri LR 270 emphasised "It is settled law that provisions which go to jurisdiction must be strictly complied with."

After section 759(2) was amended by the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act, No. 79 of 1988, the judgment of the Supreme Court in Vithana v. Weerasinghe [1981] 1 Sri LR 52 (and the judgments that followed it), which held that the provisions of section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code are wide enough to accommodate appeals filed out of time provided good cause is shown, cannot be regarded as binding. Let me quote the legislative history.

Prior to the Administration of Justice Law, No. 44 of 1973, the corresponding section to the present section 759(2) of the Civil Procedure Code was section 756(3), which read as follows:

> In the case of any mistake, omission or defect on the part of any appellant in complying with the provisions of this section, the Supreme Court, if it should be of opinion that the respondent has not been materially prejudiced, may grant relief on such terms as it may deem just.

Section 353(2) of the Administration of Justice Law, No. 44 of 1973, read as follows:

> Subject to the provisions of section 330, the Supreme Court shall not exercise the powers vested in such court by this Law to reject or dismiss an appeal on the ground only of any error, omission or default on the part of the appellant in complying with the provisions > of this Law, unless material prejudice has been caused thereby to the respondent to such appeal.

Section 759 was amended by the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Law, No. 20 of 1977, by introducing the following as section 759(2):

> In the case of any mistake, omission or defect on the part of any appellant in complying with the provisions of the foregoing sections, the Supreme Court may, if it should be of opinion that the respondent has not been materially prejudiced, grant relief on such terms as it may deem just.

Section 759(2) was repealed and the following section was substituted by the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act, No. 79 of 1988:

> In the case of any mistake, omission or defect on the part of any appellant in complying with the provisions of the foregoing sections, (other than a provision specifying the period within which any act or thing is to be done) the Court of Appeal may, if it should be of opinion that the respondent has not been materially prejudiced, grant relief on such terms as it may deem just.

In the instant case, the 4th defendant-appellant has named only the plaintiff as the respondent in the notice of appeal as well as in the petition of appeal. However I find that a copy of the notice of appeal has been sent to the registered attorney of the said defendants by registered post although those defendants were not named as respondents in the notice of appeal. The original registered postal article receipt has been tendered to the District Court with the notice of appeal.

As I stated at the outset, as against the plaintiff's case, the only contesting defendant at the trial was the 4th defendant-appellant. The other defendants did not raise issues, cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses, or lead any evidence. The 4th defendant-appellant made the plaintiff the only respondent in the notice of appeal and the petition of appeal.

On the facts and circumstances of this case, I take the view that the High Court ought to have exercised its discretion in terms of section 770 in favour of the 4th defendant-appellant and rectified the error in the interest of justice.

The questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted by this Court and the answers to them are as follows:

> Q. Have the learned Judges of the High Court erred in law by failing to appreciate and consider that in the circumstances aforesaid, no material prejudice has been caused to the 1, 2(A), 3(A) and 5 to 8th defendants by not naming them as respondents in the notice of appeal and the petition of appeal?
>
>
> Q. Have the learned Judges of the High Court erred in law by failing to appreciate and consider that in the circumstances of this case, failure to name the defendants as respondents is a curable defect under and in terms of Section 759(2) Civil Procedure Code and the High Court of Civil Appeal has the power to grant such relief?
>
> A. It is a curable defect but not under section 759(2).
>
> Q. Have the learned Judges of the High Court erred in law by failing to appreciate and consider that under and in terms of Section 770 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court can issue the requisite notice of appeal for service on a person who was a party to the action in the court against whose decree the appeal is made but also who has not been made a party to the appeal?

A. Yes.

I set aside the judgment of the High Court and allow the appeal but without costs. The 4th defendant will amend the caption of the petition of appeal and take steps to serve notice on the 1st-3rd and the 5th-8th defendant-respondents. The High Court will hear the appeal on the merits.

Argued on: 17.10.2022

P Padman Surasena J

The instant matter was instituted before the Court of Appeal by the Petitioner-Respondent by petition dated 5th November 2021. That is a matter filed under Article 105(3) of the Constitution against persons named as Respondents in the Court of Appeal (they will be hereinafter referred to as the Respondents in the Court of Appeal) claiming that the Respondents in the Court of Appeal have defied and blatantly flouted an order of the Administrative Appeal's Tribunal (AAT) thus praying inter alia a determination that the Respondents in the Court of Appeal are guilty of acting in contempt of the Administrative Appeals Tribunal and an order to punish the Respondents in the Court of Appeal for being in contempt of the AAT's order due to their alleged failure to give effect to and/or comply with the said order.

When the matter was taken up before the Court of Appeal, the Respondents in the Court of Appeal raised several preliminary objections urging the application to be dismissed in limine. Subsequently the Court of Appeal had heard the learned counsel for all the parties, and then, by order dated 04th April 2022 has overruled the said preliminary objections and has fixed the matter for support.

On the same day, the learned President's Counsel appearing for the 2nd, 4th-7th , 9th and 10th Respondents in the Court of Appeal and the Additional Solicitor General appearing for the 11th and 12th Respondent in the Court of Appeal had sought to make an application under Rule 22 (1) (ii) of the Supreme Court Rules seeking Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court against the said order of the Court of Appeal.

Accordingly, on 7th April 2022 the learned judges of the Court of Appeal had granted Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court under Rule 22 of the Supreme Court Rules. This is despite the learned counsel who appeared for the Petitioner at that time itself bringing to the notice of the Court of Appeal of the fact that the order dated 04th April 2022, against which the Court of Appeal was to consider granting Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court is not a final order. It is on record that the learned counsel who appeared for the Petitioner at that time itself had brought to the notice of Court and relied on The Maharaja Organization Limited vs. Viacom International Inc and Another[1] and Chettiar vs. Chettiar[2] in support of that argument. The Court of Appeal having recorded this submission, had nevertheless proceeded to grant Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court against its own order dated 04th April 2022 on the following questions of law holding that 'the order made has flavor of finality'.

[2] [2011] 2 SLR 70.

01. Did the Court of Appeal, by its order dated 4th April 2022, in the guise or application, in fact, interpreted the Constitution, thereby exceeding its jurisdiction, and encroached into the sole and exclusive jurisdiction vested on the Supreme Court by Article 125 of the Constitution, to interpret the Constitution, and thereby erred in law?

02. Did the Court of Appeal, by its order dated 4th April 2022, misconstrue the scope of the Contempt of Court jurisdiction vested on the Court of Appeal by the provisions contained in the Constitution, and thereby erred in law?

03. Did the Court of Appeal, by its order dated 4th April 2022, misconstrue the provisions pertaining to Contempt of Court jurisdiction by holding that provisions contained in Article 105(2) not relevant, and thereby erred in law?

04. Did the Court of Appeal, by its order dated 4th April 2022, misconstrue the Administrative Appeals Tribunal as a "tribunal" referred to in Article 105(1)(c) of the Constitution, and thereby erred in law?

05. Did the Court of Appeal, in its order dated 4th April 2022, ignore the fact that the Supreme Court has not interpreted the Administrative Appeals Tribunal to fall within scope of Article 105 of the Constitution, and thereby erred in law?

06. Did the Court of Appeal, in its order dated 4' April 2022, in arriving at its decision, fail/neglect/ignore to consider the submissions of the Respondents pertaining to the placement of Article 59 of the Constitution, within the Constitution, and thereby erred in law?

07. Did the Court of Appeal, in its order dated 4th April 2022, took irrelevant matters into consideration, in arriving at its decision, and thereby erred in law?

As there were two applications before the Court of Appeal for Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court, one from the learned President's Counsel appearing for the 2nd, 4th-7th , 9th and 10th Respondents in the Court of Appeal and the other from the Additional Solicitor General appearing for the 11th and 12th Respondents in the Court of Appeal seeking Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court, two numbers i.e., S C. Appeal No. 29A/2022 and S C. Appeal No. 29/2022 have been assigned by the Registry. The learned counsel for all parties concur that this Court can amalgamate both these matters as the issue to be decided is the same and therefore both matters can be heard together and that it would suffice for this Court to pronounce one judgment in respect of both appeals.

When the matter was taken up for argument before this Court, the learned President's Counsel for the Petitioner-Respondent raised a preliminary objection to the maintainability of this appeal on the basis that there is no lawful appeal before this Court. He relied on Article 128 of the Constitution to show that the Court of Appeal could not have lawfully granted Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court in this instance.

Article 127 of the Constitution of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka is as follows.

> "127 (1) The Supreme Court shall, subject to the Constitution, be the final Court of civil and criminal appellate jurisdiction for and within the Republic of Sri Lanka for the correction of all errors in fact or in law which shall be committed by the Court of Appeal or any Court of First Instance, tribunal or other institution and the judgements and orders of the Supreme Court shall in all cases be final and conclusive in all such matters.
> (2) The Supreme Court shall, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, have sole and exclusive cognizance by way of appeal from any order, judgement, decree, or sentence made by the Court of Appeal, where any appeal lies in law to the Supreme Court and it may affirm, reverse or vary any such order, judgement, decree or sentence of the Court of Appeal and may issue such directions to any Court of First Instance or order a new trial or further hearing in any proceedings as the justice of the case may require and may also call for and admit fresh or additional evidence if the interests of justice so demands and may in such event, direct that such evidence be recorded by the Court of Appeal or any Court of First Instance."

Article 127 (2) sets out what this Court can do in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction and therefore the said Article comes into operation only when it considers an appeal lawfully filed before it.

Article 127 (1) has specifically subjected itself to the other provisions of the Constitution. This is clear from the wording "The Supreme Court shall, subject to the Constitution,..", found in that Article.

Thus, Article 127 (1) must be read with Article 128 of the Constitution. This is because Article 128 is another provision in the Constitution which has specified several channels through which any appeal can reach this Court. Article 128 of the Constitution as it was then as follows.[3]

> "128 (1) An appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from any final order, judgement, decree or sentence of the Court of Appeal in any matter or proceedings, whether civil or criminal, which involves a substantial question of law, if the Court of Appeal grants leave to appeal to the Supreme Court ex mero motu or at the instance of any aggrieved party to such matter or proceedings;
> (2) The Supreme Court may, in its discretion, grant special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from any final or interlocutory order, judgement, decree, or sentence made by the Court of Appeal in any matter or proceedings, whether civil or criminal, where the Court of Appeal has refused to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court, or where in the opinion of the Supreme Court, the case or matter is fit for review by the Supreme Court:
>
> Provided that the Supreme Court shall grant leave to appeal in every matter or proceedings in which it is satisfied that the question to be decided is of public or general importance.
>
> (3) Any appeal from an order or judgement of the Court of Appeal, made or given in the exercise of its jurisdiction under Article 139, 140, 141, 142 or 143 to which the President, a Minister, a Deputy Minister or a public officer in his official capacity is a party, shall be heard and determined within two months of the date of filing thereof.
> (4) An appeal shall lie directly to the Supreme Court on any matter and in the manner specifically provided for by any other law passed by Parliament."

[3] A new sub paragraph was added as Article 128 (5) by the Twentieth Amendment to the Constitution which was certified on 29th October 2020.

In the instance at hand, it is the Court of Appeal which has granted leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. The Court of Appeal has been conferred with jurisdiction to make orders granting leave to appeal to the Supreme Court only under Article 128 (1) of the Constitution and no other.

Article 128 (2) of the Constitution has also conferred jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to grant Special Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court. Closer comparison of Article 128 (1) with Article 128 (2) of the Constitution clearly reveals that the jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution on the Court of Appeal to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court is a restricted jurisdiction than that conferred on the Supreme Court to grant Special Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court. This is manifest from the sections themselves. Article 128 (1) has only conferred Court of Appeal with jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court only from any final order of the Court of Appeal whereas Article 128 (2) has conferred on the Supreme Court much wider jurisdiction to grant Special Leave to Appeal both from any final or interlocutory order of the Court of Appeal. The fact that Article 128 (2) has included 'from any final or interlocutory order' and the fact that Article 128 (1) has included only 'any final order' and had dropped 'or interlocutory order' is significant. This means that the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court only in respect of any final order it has made as per Article 128 (2). This also means that the Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from any interlocutory order it has made. It is only the Supreme Court which has jurisdiction to grant Special Leave to Appeal from any interlocutory order made by the Court of Appeal.

The next question I must decide is whether the order dated 04th April 2022 pronounced by the Court of Appeal is a final or interlocutory order.

the said question was considered by this Court by a bench comprising of 5 judges in the case of Chettiar vs. Chettiar.[4] In that case Dr. Shirani A. Bandaranayake, J. observed the following.

> Therefore to ascertain the nature of the decision made by a civil Court as to whether it is final or not, in keeping with the provisions of section 754(5) of the [4] [2011] 2 SLR 70.

Civil Procedure Code, it would be necessary to follow the test defined by Lord Esher MR in Standard Discount Co. v La Grange (supra) and as stated in Salaman v Warner (supra) which reads as follows:

"The question must depend on what would be the result of the decision of the Divisional Court, assuming it to be given in favour of either of the parties. If their decision, whichever way it is given, will, if it stands, finally dispose of the matter in dispute, I think that for the purposes of these rules it is final. On the other hand, if their decision, if given in one way, will finally dispose of the matter in dispute, but, if given in the other, will allow the action to go on, then I think it is not final, but interlocutory."

The question was again re visited by a bench constituting 7 judges of this Court in Priyanthi Senanayake vs. Chamika Jayantha[5] where Priyasath Dep PC J observed the following and arrived at the same conclusion as that of Chettiar vs. Chettiar.[6] Observations of the Priyasath Dep PC J are as follows.

According to this interpretation section, appeals could be filed in respect of judgments or orders which are final judgements. In respect of other orders which are not final and considered as interlocutory orders leave to appeal applications have to be filed. In view of this definition it appears that judgements fall into two categories.

Similarly, orders also fall into two categories.

(A) Judgements which are final judgements

(B) Judgements which are not final

(C) Orders which are final judgements

(D) Orders which are interlocutory orders

Therefore appeal could be filed in respect of judgements or orders which are final. In respect of other orders leave has to be first obtained. Therefore it appears that finality of the judgement or order that matters and not the name given as judgement or order.

[5] [2017] BLR 74.

[6] [2011] 2 SLR 70.

In order to decide whether a order is a final judgment or not. It is my considered view that the proper approach is the approach adopted by lord Esher in Salaman vs Warner (Supra) which was cited with approval by Lord Denning in Salter Rex vs Gosh (supra). It stated:

> "If their decision, whichever way it is given, will if it stands finally dispose of the matter in dispute, I think that for the purposes of these rules it is final. On the other hand, if their decision, if given in one way, will finally dispose of the matter in dispute, but, if given in the other, will allow the action to go on, then I think it is not final, but interlocutory."

As has already been mentioned above, the learned counsel who appeared for the Petitioner in the Court of Appeal, in addition to the case of and Chettiar vs. Chettiar,[7] also brought to the attention of the Court of Appeal in resisting the application for Leave to Appeal by the Court of Appeal, the case of Maharaja Organization Limited Vs. Viacom International Inc and Another.[8]

In that case (Maharaja Organization Limited case), His Lordship Samayawardhena J having considered two previous approaches used by our Courts namely the Order Approach and the Application Approach to ascertain the nature of orders given by a court to decide whether an appeal or a leave to appeal lies in a given situation, stated as follows.

> "The order approach contemplates only the nature of the order. When taken in isolation, if the order finally disposes of the matter and the parties' rights in litigation without leaving the suit alive, the order is final and a direct/final appeal is the proper remedy against such order.
> The application approach contemplates only the nature of the application made to Court, not the order delivered per se. In accordance with this approach, if the order given in one way will finally dispose of the matter in litigation, but if given in the other way will allow the action to continue, the order is not final but interlocutory, in which event, leave to appeal is the proper remedy. In other words, according to the application approach, if the order, whichever way it is given, will, if it stands, finally determine the matter in litigation, the order is final. "

Thus, having regard to the nature of the order the Court of Appeal has made in relation to the application made before it requesting it to grant Leave to Appeal in the instant case, shows clearly that the Court of Appeal had failed to appreciate the contents of the judgment in Maharaja Organization Limited case.

Turning to the instant case, the decision dated 4th April 2022 given by the Court of Appeal was merely a decision on the preliminary objections raised by the Respondents. While upholding the objections would have finally dispose the matter in litigation, overruling the objections would have allowed the action to continue. Thus, applying the above test it is clear that the order dated 4th April 2022 given by the Court of Appeal in the instant case is not final but an interlocutory order.

I have already mentioned above that the Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from any interlocutory order it has made and it is only the Supreme Court which has jurisdiction to grant Special Leave to Appeal from any interlocutory order made by the Court of Appeal.

In Martin Vs Wijewardena.[9] Jameel J (with Ranasinghe CJ and Amerasinghe J agreeing) stated that the right of appeal is a statutory right and must be expressly created and granted by statute. This Court has not granted Special Leave to Appeal from the impugned order (Appellants in the instant case have not applied to this Court for Special Leave to Appeal). The Court of Appeal has acted without any jurisdiction when it had granted Leave to Appeal to the Supreme Court from any interlocutory order. The Court of Appeal in the instant case has exercised a non-existent power. Such exercise of power has no force or avail in law. In the case of Jeyaraj Fernandopulle Vs. Premachandra De Silva and Others,[10] Amerasinghe J stated that "the Supreme Court is a creature of statute and its powers are statutory." Thus, this Court has no power/ jurisdiction to entertain the purported appeals in the instant case.

[10] [1996] 1 SLR 70.

For the above reasons, I have no hesitation in upholding the preliminary objection to the maintainability of this appeal raised by the learned President's Counsel for the Petitioner-Respondent. I hold that there is no lawful appeal before this Court to enable this Court to exercise its jurisdiction conferred on it by Article 127 (2) of the Constitution. These 'appeals' should therefore stand rejected.

E.A.G.R Amarasekara, J.

The Plaintiff Respondent Appellant (herein after sometimes referred to as Plaintiff) instituted partition action no. P14028 in the District Court of Kandy for the partition of the land shown as Lot 1 in plan no.3356P made by Mr. S.C.K.R. Misso, licensed surveyor. The aforesaid plan was made for the purpose of a previous partition action no. P3908 instituted in the same District Court. It is common ground that even though the said Lot 1 was initially surveyed as part of the corpus of the said partition case no. P3908, it was later excluded from the corpus that was partitioned in the said case. As per the amended plaint dated 18.01.2002, the Plaintiff and first to fifth Defendant Respondent Respondents (herein after referred to as first to fifth Defendants) were given one sixth each from the corpus sought to be partitioned in the matter at hand. The said first to fifth Defendants had no contest with the Plaintiff. However, the fifth Defendant claimed a right of way over the land sought to be partitioned in the present action, which right of way was depicted from X to Y on the preliminary plan no.2213 made by B.P. Rupasinghe L.S marked X at the trial. Sixth Defendant Appellant Respondent (herein after referred to as Sixth Defendant.) sought a dismissal of the action while claiming title to the entire land sought to be partitioned in the matter at hand.

The learned District Judge after trial decided to partition the corpus of the present partition action as prayed for in the plaint. Being aggrieved by the said decision, Sixth Defendant appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy and the learned High Court Judges set aside the judgement of the learned District Judge and dismissed the action of the Plaintiff while refusing to grant a declaration of title in favor of the Sixth Defendant to the corpus. Being aggrieved by the said decision of the Civil Appellate High Court, the Plaintiff filed a leave to appeal application before this court and this court granted leave on the questions of law set out in paragraph 48 (a) (b) (c) and (d) of the petition dated 4.8.2012. The said questions of law will be referred to in the latter part of this judgement.

As per the amended plaint, among other things the Plaintiff has averred;

a. That the name of the land sought to be partitioned is “Kekiriwel lande watta” and “Gamagedara walawwe watta” – vide paragraph 1 of the amended plaint. (It must be observed here that irrespective of the name used to describe the land, as per averments 6 to 11 of the amended plaint, it is clear that the land sought to be partitioned is the land described in the schedule (b) of the plaint as lot 1 of plan no.3356P of Mr. Misso L.S. which is filed of record in the previous partition action no.3908)

b. That the land described in schedule (a) of the amended plaint was the subject matter of the previous partition action no. P3908 and lot 1 of the said plan no.3356P was excluded from the corpus of the said partition action and lots A, B, C of the same plan were given to Jayatilake Banda Karalliadde, Tikiri Banda Karalliadde and Abeyratna Banda Karalliadde respectively by the final decree of the said partition action – vide paragraph 2 to 6 of the amended plaint.

c. That the aforesaid Jayatilake Banda Karalliadde possessed the said lot 1 excluded in that action after the said final decree for 10 years without any interruptions or disturbance and became entitled to said lot 1 by prescription due to his adverse possession – vide paragraph 7 of the amended plaint. (However, it is not revealed against whose title the said adverse possession took place)

d. That said Jayatilake Banda Karalliadde died and the Plaintiff and the 1st to 5th Defendants inherited the said lot 1 which is the corpus of this action – vide paragraph 8 of the amended plaint.

e. That the Plaintiff and the 1st to 5th Defendants adversely possessed this land without any interruptions or disturbances for more than 10 years. – vide paragraph 9 of the amended plaint. (Here also the plaintiff has not disclosed against whose title they possessed the land adversely.)

f. That the 6th to 9th Defendants without any title or entitlement started various activities and was getting ready to put up a building – vide paragraph 12 of the amended plaint. (Here the Plaintiff's position seems to be that sixth to nineth Defendants do not have any right to the property in issue and are intruders against their title which they have acquired as aforesaid. Thus, it is clear that Plaintiff was not presenting a case to indicate that he and the other purported co-owners had an adverse possession against the true ownership of or paper title of 6th to 9th Defendants but they entered into the property owned by them from the time of their predecessor, their father.)

Even though it is clear that the land sought to be partitioned is Lot 1 of plan no. 3356P made for the previous partition action, in schedule (b) of the amended plaint, the Plaintiff has named it as "Kekiriwel lande watta" and "Gamagedara walawwe watta". The trial at the District Court has commenced on 10.06.2003 and no admission has been recorded to indicate that the land sought to be partitioned bears the name as stated in the schedule (b) to the plaint. In fact, dispute based as to the name of the land has been raised by the point of contest no.14 recorded on the said date. After recording the said point of contest no.14, the learned District Judge has recorded that there is a dispute as to the name of the land – vide page 291 of the brief. As per the stance of the 6th Defendant in his amended statement of claim, the name of the land sought to be partitioned is "Gamawalawwe watte". It must be noted that the land partitioned in the previous partition action no. P3908 bears the same name given in the plaint, namely "Kekiriwel lande watta" and "Gamagedara Walawwe watta" – vide schedule (a) of the amended plaint and the final partition decree found at page 996 of the brief. As per the boundaries given in the schedule (a) to the plaint there is no other land with the same name described as a boundary. Even as per the plan no.3356P made in the said partition case no. P3908 the corpus partitioned in that case consists of lot A, B and C of the said plan and lot 1 of the said plan which is the corpus of this case is the Lot excluded from the corpus. According to the said plan, corpus of the present case is adjoining to the partitioned corpus of the previous case. When one says that a portion of land is excluded from corpus of a partition action, the first impression that comes to one's mind is that the excluded portion does not belong to the land sought to be partitioned. If so, the question arises whether the Plaintiff correctly named the land sought to be partitioned in the present case as it bears the same name as one partitioned in the previous case. If the land sought to be partitioned is not properly named in the present case, then the registration of Lis pendens, steps relating to public notice of institution of partition action as pre-trial steps may become defective. On the other hand, there are certain circumstances an excluded portion from a corpus of a partition action may bear the same name of the partitioned portion as explained below.

1. If the excluded portion is a different land bearing the same name. (However as explained before no adjoining land was described using the same name – vide schedule (a) of the amended plaint and description of the main land in the final decree of the case no. P3908 marked as P2.)

2. If the exclusion is done due to the fact someone has acquired title to that portion of the same land by prescription. (No such evidence has been placed before the District Court.)

3. The parties to the action agree to exclude a portion from the corpus in favour of someone. (No such evidence has been placed before the District Court)

However, there is no such evidence available in the present action that the exclusion of Lot 1 of Misso's plan no. 3356P was due to the reasons mentioned above. If they were the reasons for the land sought to be partitioned in this case to bear the name of the land partitioned in the previous case, such person or people who owned or in whose favour those portions were excluded or their descendants etc. should have been made parties to this partition action to claim prescriptive title against them. No such party or parties have been revealed in the amended plaint or through evidence. No evidence has been placed before court to show that the said exclusion of lot one was done in favor of the predecessor in title of the Plaintiff and the purported co-owners, namely their father. If it was excluded in their father's favour, they would have naturally pleaded that and tendered the necessary evidence such as Judgment and interlocutory decree etc. For some reason, the judgment and interlocutory decree which should reveal the reason for exclusion of Lot 1 of plan no.3356P of Misso L.S. were not tendered in evidence. Even though the learned District Judge in answering the point of contest no.14 in the negative has refused to accept the name given to the corpus of this action by the Sixth Defendant, it is not sufficient. First the learned District Judge must satisfy himself that the land sought to be partitioned in the present action had been correctly named. No doubt it is the lot 1 of plan no.3908P. However, if it is not correctly named, it might have affected the proper registration of Lis pendens and pre-trial publication of notice and naming the correct parties. It appears that the learned District Judge whose duty was to investigate title has not given his thoughts to the above facts observed by this court in relation to the identification of the purported corpus sought to be partitioned in this case by its name.

The fifth Defendant who stands with the Plaintiff to get the purported corpus partitioned, in her oral evidence has twice stated that there is no specific name to the corpus. The learned District Judge has failed to appreciate that one of the old deeds, which is older than the final decree of the previous partition action, namely deed no.1525 in the chain of title of the sixth Defendant contains a land named "Gama Walawwe Watta" as described by the sixth Defendant in his statement of claim and the deeds written after that on the strength of the title gained through that deed also have described the land dealt by those deeds as Lot 1 of plan 3365P of case no. P3908. Thus, there were material to think that the exclusion was done in the previous partition action since Lot 1 was a different land as described by the 6th Defendant. In my view mere attempts to show certain errors of the learned High Court Judges through the questions of law raised will not suffice if the Plaintiff Appellant fails to satisfy this court that the substantial rights were affected by the dismissal of their case by the High Court. The Plaintiff's substantial rights are affected by the dismissal made in the High Court only if the District Judge had come to the correct finding to partition the corpus.

However, for the reasons discussed below in this judgement, I am of the view that the learned High Court Judges were correct in coming to their conclusion to allow the appeal before them and to dismiss the plaint as the learned District Judge erred in deciding to partition the purported corpus of this action.

It must be stated here that the Roman Dutch law of acquisitive prescription ceased to be in force after Regulation no.13 of 1882 and that the Prescription Ordinance is the sole law governing the acquisition of rights by virtue of adverse possession. The common law of acquisitive prescription is no longer in force except as regard the crown. [See W.Perera v C. Ranatunge (1964) 66 N L R 337 at 339, also see Dabare v Martelis Appu 5 N L R 210, Terunnanse v Menike 1 N L R 200 at 202, Fernando v Wijesooriya et al 48 N L R 320 at 325, I.L.M. Cadija Umma and Another v S. Don Manis Appu and Others 40 N L R 392 at 395].

Since it is the Prescription Ordinance that governs the acquisitive prescription in relation to immovable property, it is worthwhile to quote section 3 of the said ordinance here.

"3. Proof of undisturbed and uninterrupted possession by a defendant in any action, or by those under whom he claims, of lands or immovable property, by a title adverse to or independent of that of the claimant or plaintiff in such action (that is to say, a possession unaccompanied by payment of rent or produce, or performance of service or duty, or by any other act by the possessor, from which an acknowledgement of a right existing in another person would fairly and naturally be inferred) for ten years previous to the bringing of such action, shall entitle the defendant to a decree in his favour with costs. And in like manner, when any plaintiff shall bring his action, or any third party shall intervene in any action for the purpose of being quieted in his possession of lands or other immovable property, or to prevent encroachment or usurpation thereof, or to establish his claim in any other manner to such land or other property, proof of such undisturbed and uninterrupted possession as herein before explained, by such plaintiff or intervenient, or by those under whom he claims, shall entitle such plaintiff or intervenient to a decree in his favour with costs:

provided that the said period of ten years shall only begin to run against the parties claiming estates in remainder or reversion from the time when the parties so claiming acquired a right of possession to the property in dispute."

As per the above section, it is through an action filed in court one gets a decree in his favour based on prescriptive title. Aforesaid section contemplates three categories of people who can get a decree based on prescription in their favour namely;

1. Defendant can claim prescriptive title by proof of undisturbed and uninterrupted possession for 10 years by a title adverse or independent of that of the claimant or plaintiff.

2. Like manner a plaintiff can bring an action for the purpose of being quieted in his possession of immovable property, or to prevent encroachment or usurpation or to establish his claim in any other manner to such property by proof of possession as mentioned above and can pray for a decree in his favour.

3. An intervenient party to an action also by proof of possession as mentioned above can pray for decree in his favour.

Thus, it is clear that it is a party to an action, whether it be a plaintiff, defendant or an intervenient, who can ask for a decree based on prescriptive title. The said section 3 does not provide for a party to get a decree from court in favour of a person who is not a party before the court to say that the said person has got prescriptive title to the subject matter of the action. By this I do not intend to say that one in possession cannot tack on to his predecessor's possession. In fact, one may. {See Terunnanse V Menike 1 N L R 200 at 201, Wijesundera and Others V Constantine Dasa and Another (1987) 2 Sri L R 66, Kirihamy Muhandirama V Dingiri Appu 6 N L R 197}. However, the plaintiff, the Defendant or the intervenient, as the case may be, must pray for a decree on prescriptive title in their favour. The Plaintif and others standing with him in this action pray for a declaration or a finding that their father even prior to the alleged intrusion by the 6th Defendant acquired title by prescription without revealing adverse to whose title it was acquired.

It is the position of the Plaintiff that their father acquired title by prescription and he and the 1st to 5th Defendants became co-owners on his demise by inheritance. In fact, points of contest number one and two have been raised at the beginning of the trial on this basis. The learned High Court Judges have come to the conclusion that as per the aforesaid section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance and section 2 of the Partition Act, the court cannot decree that the predecessor in title of the Plaintiff and the 1st to 5th Defendants, who is not a party to the action, acquired title by prescription. Even in Punchi Rala v Andris Appuhami (1886) 3 SCR 149, it was held that it is not competent for a party to set up a third person's title under section 3 of the Prescription ordinance. It is stated in the judgment that the Prescription Ordinance contemplates possession by a party getting judgment, a plaintiff, a defendant or intervenient, - his own possession or that of his predecessors in title and it is to be a judgment declaratory of the right of property in a party to the action. [In this regard also see K. D. Edwin Peeris v Kirilamaya 71 NLR 52, Terunnanse v Menike 1 NLR 200, Timothy David v Ibrahim 13 NLR 318, Kirihamy Muhandirama v Dingiri Appu 6 NLR 197, Raman Chetty et al., v Mohideen 18 NLR 478]. As per the stance taken by the Plaintiff and his siblings, only if they can get a decree in favour of their father who is dead and gone and not a party to the action, they become co-owners. Otherwise, evidence shows that some of them live far away from the purported corpus. Unless they can prove co-ownership, they cannot say one who possess represents the possession of the other co-owners. Anyway, it appears that the 6th Defendant was there in possession as confirmed by a 66 application.

It appears that one of the grounds for the Learned High Court judges to allow the appeal and dismiss the partition action was that the predecessor in title to the Plaintiff and his siblings, namely their father was not a party to the action which debars a court in terms of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance from decreeing that he acquired prescriptive title which in turn debars a declaration that the Plaintiff and his siblings are co-owners.

As a decree on prescriptive title can only be given in favor of a party to the action, in my view the aforesaid conclusion of the learned High Court Judges is correct. It must be noted that no direct question of law has been proposed through the petition or thus, allowed by this court with regard to the said conclusion of the learned High Court Judges. Therefore, in a way the said conclusion remains unchallenged. For completeness, I quote the relevant portions of the High Court judgement below which refer to aforesaid section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance and section 2 of the Partition Act respectively.

(Referring to section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance)

"The above provisions confer a right on the possessor who has been in undisturbed and uninterrupted possession of a land to bring an action for the purpose of being quieted in possession or for a defendant who is sued in ejectment to take up the defense that he has acquired title to the land in dispute by prescriptive possession but these provisions do not permit a person who is in possession of land to bring an action for partition on the basis that his predecessor in title had acquired title to the land by prescription. "

(Referring to section 2 of the Partition Act)

"In view of the provision of the section 2 above a person must be a co-owner of land to be partitioned to bring an action for partition. A person who is not a co-owner cannot bring an action for partition. The plaintiff cannot expect for the court to decide whether a so called predecessor in title had acquired title for the corpus by prescription and then proceed to investigate the title of the parties to the action. The plaintiff came to court on the basis that his father acquired title by prescription and that he and first to fifth defendants inherited from the father. The court in a partition action cannot declare that the predecessor in title of the plaintiff and first to fifth defendants acquired title by prescription specially when the person sough to be declared so entitled is now deceased."

In short, the learned High Court Judges have tried to point out that in terms of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance a Court cannot decree a person who is not before court has acquired title by prescription. As per the stance taken by the Plaintiff, the Plaintiff and the parties stand with him cannot proceed ahead without getting such a declaration or decree.

Even though the Plaintiff's and the 1st to 5th Defendants' position is that their father acquired the prescriptive title and they inherited the property as co-owners at the demise of their father, the paragraph 9 of the amended plaint as well as the point of contest number 3 raised at the trial focus on whether the Plaintiff and the 1st to 5th Defendants acquired prescriptive title along with their predecessor in title. Thus, it is necessary to see whether they have proved their prescriptive title to the corpus as co-owners. It is already stated above if the court cannot hold that their father acquired prescriptive title, it cannot hold that they are co-owners through inheritance as per their stance.

It must be reiterated that the position of the Plaintiff was that the father of the Plaintiff and the 1st to 5th Defendants entered into the lot 1 of plan no.3356P after it was excluded from the corpus of the partition case no. P3908 and acquired prescriptive title to it and Plaintiff and his siblings got their right through inheritance. Since the 6th and 9th Defendants without any title acted in violation of their rights, they want to get the land partitioned. Thus, the case was not presented to say that the Plaintiff and his siblings along with the possession of their predecessor adversely possessed it against the title of the 6th to 9th Defendants and they acquired prescriptive title against the 6th to 9th Defendants. It is presumed that if a person enters into a possession in one capacity, he continues to possess it in the same capacity unless he changes the nature of the possession by an overt act. Adverse possession means a possession incompatible with the title of the true owner or the title holder. (See Fernando v Wijesooriya et al., 48 NLR 320). To acquire ownership or dominion of a property, the adverse possession must be against the true ownership of the property in a manner denying the said ownership. Thus, if one claims prescriptive title to gain ownership of a property, he must reveal against whose ownership the adverse possession was exercised. In I. De Silva V Commissioner General of Inland Revenue 80 N L R 292, it was held that, "The Principle of law is well established that a person who bases his title in adverse possession must show by clear and unequivocal evidence that his possession was hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of his title to the property claimed. In order to constitute adverse possession, the possession must be in denial of the title of the true owner. The acts of the person in possession should be irreconcilable with the rights of the true owner; the person in possession must claim to be so as of right as against the true owner. Where there is no hostility to or denial of the title of the true owner, there can be no adverse possession. In deciding whether the alleged acts of the person constitute adverse possession, regard must be had to the animus of the person doing those acts."

No evidence was led to show who was the true owner of lot 1 of plan no. 3365P at the time of purported entry to possess it by the Plaintiff's father. The interlocutory judgement of the previous partition action has not been tendered for the court to see why the said lot 1 was excluded or in whose favor it was excluded. If it was excluded in favor of the Plaintiff's father the Plaintiff or the people who want to partition the corpus would have marked it to support their case. Non -production of the said judgment of the previous partition case which should contain the reasons for exclusion of said Lot 1 should have been considered as a factor that prompts a court to presume that the production of said evidence would have been not favourable to the Plaintiff's stance. For example, the reason could have been that it was a different land as described by the old deeds of the 6th Defendant's chain of title as mentioned above. However, the stance taken in the plaint was that the Plaintiff's father acquired prescriptive title even prior to the alleged infringing acts of the 6th to 9th Defendants but without revealing against whose title he acquired prescriptive title.

If this is a case to evict the 6th to 9th Defendants based on their alleged infringing acts for the purpose of being quieted in his possession by the Plaintiff, it would have been a different scenario altogether. In that situation the Plaintiff has to prove his adverse, uninterrupted and undisturbed possession for ten years against the 6th to 9th Defendants against any title they claim. In my view, section 3 of the Prescription ordinance contemplates such situation. A claim of prescription by a party against another party in an action filed in court and not a situation of claiming prescriptive title against whole world. However, for some reason, the Plaintiff has chosen to file a Partition action which is an action in Rem and claim prescriptive title accrued to their father prior to his death which is also prior to the alleged infringing acts of the 6th to 9th Defendants. The Plaintiff has taken the arduous task of proving title against whole world without revealing against whose title their father acquired prescriptive title. In my view one cannot prove prescriptive title without revealing against whom he claims prescriptive title and without giving that person an opportunity to respond. Furthermore, as per section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance itself, the time does not start to run against parties claiming rights in remainder or reversion and section 13 of the same ordinance has created certain limitations to claims on prescription based on certain disabilities. Thus, indicating the person against whom the prescriptive claim is made in evidence is essential for a court to decide on prescriptive title. When the Plaintiff and his siblings take up a position that their father acquired prescriptive title even prior to the alleged infringing acts by the 6th to 9th Defendants, it is questionable and unascertainable against whose true ownership he acquired prescriptive title.

The learned High Court Judges have referred to Sirajudeen and Two Others v Abbas (1994) 2 SLR 365 in their judgement where it was held that when a party invokes provision of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance in order to defeat the ownership of an adverse claimant to an immovable property, the burden of proof rests squarely and fairly on him[1] to establish a starting point of his or her acquisition of prescriptive rights and a facile story of walking into an abandoned premises after the Japanese air raid constituted materials far too slender to found a claim based on prescriptive title. Similarly in the matter at hand, the burden of proof rests on the Plaintiff and the Parties who rely on the same stance to prove prescriptive title. Even here, the position taken is that father of the plaintiff commenced possession of the land after the exclusion of lot 1 of plan no.3356P in the previous partition act. The basis for such commencement of purported possession and against who's right it was commenced or the animus (intention) of their father have not been revealed through evidence. By referring to the said decision in Sirajudeen and Two Others V Abbas, the learned High Court Judges have attempted to point out that the commencement of adverse possession was not proved. Basically, the reasons given by the High Court Judges while referring to the section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance and section 2 of the Partition Act and the commencement of purported possession was to indicate that the partition action filed by the Plaintiff is misconceived in law and even the purported possession of the Plaintiff and 1st to 5th Defendants and their father cannot be conceded as a possession containing sufficient materials to prove prescriptive title. If their father's possession was not proved as an adverse possession, the Plaintiff and her siblings, if they have any possession, also continue in the same capacity as no overt act to change the nature of possession was revealed. It must be noted that the said part of the judgment of the High Court is not directly and clearly challenged through the questions of law suggested by the petition and accepted by this court when granting leave. The said reasoning is sufficient to dismiss the partition action filed by the Plaintiff

Because of the above reasons, it appears that the learned High Court Judges have not gone into analyze the evidence led by the Plaintiff in detail. Even if it is considered for the sake of argument that a proper action has been filed, the reasons given below will show that the learned District judge erred in evaluating evidence led at the trial to get the land partitioned.

If one wants to establish prescriptive title, he has to prove his adverse possession to an identified land or to an identified portion of a land and that possession must satisfy requirements contemplated in the prescription ordinance. As explained above, there is no reference to any overt act and they continue in possession, if they had any, in the same capacity as their father. The lack of evidence to show that their father's possession was adverse to a true owner is sufficient to dismiss any claim of prescription by the Plaintiff and his siblings. Even to consider it as an adverse possession to the 6th Defendant, since the position of the Plaintiff is that the 6th Defendant came to the land after the demise of their father, the parties relying on prescriptive title along with Plaintiff must show facts that indicate an adverse possession against the predecessors in title of the 6th Defendant by the father of the Plaintiff. As said before, no basis for commencement of possession was revealed and no evidence as to any act by the Plaintiff's father or even by the Plaintiff and his siblings that rejects the title of the predecessors in title of the 6th Defendant has been revealed through evidence. Thus, it can be presumed, that if they had any possession, they continued the possession of their father which was not proved as an adverse possession.

On the other hand, the plaint states that the 6th Defendant has no right or title to the land sought to be partitioned and the name of the corpus used by the 6th Defendant also is challenged, indicating that the paper title claimed by the 6th Defendant is not relevant to the corpus. If so, it is questionable against whose title the Plaintiff and her siblings claim adverse possession.

Pahalawatte Gedara Sumanawati, Edwin Jayasuriya, Ekanayaka Mudiyanselage Ran Banda, Batagolle gedara Simon, who gave evidence for the Plaintiff, had worked or had been employed by the Plaintiff's father or one of his offspring. Even though they speak of plucking pepper or coconut, having a threshing floor, cow shed, place to tether the elephants, parking of vehicles etc., they do not identify the corpus referring to the boundaries or to the plan. The preliminary plan no 2213 has not identified any place where a threshing floor or garage or cow shed or a place where elephants were tethered in the past. Further it is evinced from the said plan that certain portions shown by the Plaintiff for the survey do not belong to the corpus (For example Lots 4 to7) and Lot 2 has been identified through superimposition. Thus, the evidence of the aforesaid witnesses with regard to the possession cannot be ascertained with certainty whether it relates to the whole land identified as the corpus or only to certain areas shown by the Plaintiff as the corpus. Some of them have indicated that they do not have knowledge of the corpus. Therefore, their evidence alone is not sufficient to say that the evidence given by them with regard to the possession refers to the corpus as identified by the preliminary plan. Even if it is considered that they were giving evidence regarding the possession of the corpus, no material was revealed through them with regard to the nature of the possession that the father of the Plaintiff had over the corpus to decide whether it was adverse or whether it was permissive possession. Since the Plaintiff and the 1st to 5th Defendants rely on the possession of their father and the continuation of the same possession without referring any overt act to change the nature of the possession, it has to be presumed that if the Plaintiff's father had possession, the nature of that possession remains the same. As indicated above nothing has been revealed by the aforesaid witnesses with regard to proof of an adverse possession.

Evidence of Bernard P. Rupasinghe L.S called by the plaintiff relates to the survey of the corpus and the preparation of the plan done by him. He is not a person who has knowledge of prescriptive possession of the Plaintiff and 1st to 5th Defendants or their predecessor.

Edirisinghe Mudiyanselage Rana Raja Banda and Karunanayake Mudiyansalage Tissa Kotinkaduwa are court officers who gave evidence regarding the previous partition case and 66 application respectively. They too cannot have knowledge of prescriptive possession relating to the corpus. Through these witnesses, nothing has been revealed to indicate that lot 1 of MR.

Misso L.S plan was excluded for the benefit of the Plaintiff's father. However, it was said in evidence that the disputed land in the 66 application was given to the 6th Defendant on the basis that the 6th Defendant was in possession at the date of filing of that application.

Ananda Lekam is a relative of the parties who had come to the Walawwa on several occasions and stayed there even. Wallawwa is not within the corpus. He has given evidence with regard to the access road he used to visit Wallawwa. He has also stated about some cultivation of crops around said road but do not indicate whose cultivation was that. However, he too does not state facts sufficient to decide that the possession of Plaintiff and 1st to 5th Defendants and their predecessor was adverse to the title of the true owner who is unknown or to the 6th to 9th Defendants.

5th Defendant Swarna Karalliadde and the Plaintiff have given evidence to indicate that the threshing floor, cow shed, garage and the place where the elephants were tethered were within the lot 1 of the plan no, 3356P excluded from the previous partition action. However certain areas shown by the Plaintiff to the commissioner does not fall within the corpus identified by the commissioner in making the preliminary plan no.2213 and Lot 2 was identified as part of the corpus through superimposition. It is observed that the Plaintiff and the parties who wanted to partition the corpus based on prescriptive rights have not taken any steps to indicate that those places referred to by the witnesses to prove their possession were within the corpus as identified through the preliminary survey by showing those places to the court commissioner. If the 5th Defendant and the Plaintiff rely on those facts relating to the existence of a garage threshing floor, cow shed etc. in the past, they could have shown those areas where they were to the court commissioner during the survey. Even if it is presumed that they were within the area identified as the corpus by the preliminary survey, it itself does not prove that the possession was adverse. It has to be presumed that the nature of the possession of their father continued. As said before there is no material to established that their father's possession was adverse. It is necessary to prove the possession of their father was adverse to the true owner of the corpus when he entered into the said corpus sought to be partitioned. However, when the 5th Defendant gave evidence in 2003, she was 42 years old. Thus, she was born in 1961 and when the Plaintiff gave evidence, she was 58 years of age in 2005 indicating that she was born in 1947. Final partition plan and final decree of the previous partition action were made in 1953 and 1954 respectively. Thus the 5th Defendant was born after the final decree and the Plaintiff appeared to be a child of very mild age when the said final decree of the previous partition action was entered. If, as per their stance, their father entered into the excluded lot 1 after the said partition decree of the previous partition action, 5th Defendant cannot have any personal knowledge or the Plaintiff cannot have well informed knowledge with regard to the animus (intention) of their father when he commenced his possession or whether he entered with permission of someone else or whether it was adverse to someone else's title.

5th Defendant as well as the Plaintiff through their evidence tried to convince court that their father took the crops from the land sought to be partitioned and cultivated it and thereafter, they possessed it. But as per the report of the preliminary plan marked X1, no one has preferred a claim to the plantation found within the portion identified as the corpus. The Plaintiff's position is that the 6th to 9th Defendants entered the land only in 1995. If so, it is questionable why the Plaintiff and his siblings did not claim the old plantation within the corpus during the preliminary survey. During the evidence called on behalf of the 6th Defendant, several documents have been marked subject to proof but such objections were not reiterated at the close of the 6th Defendant's case. Thus, those documents can be considered as evidence. The plan No.1457 made by Mawalagedara L.S marked 6V27 and its report marked 6V28 have been so tendered in evidence. As per the said report 6th Defendant as well as Plaintiff have shown the boundaries to prepare the said plan. As per Item No. vii in 6V28 there seems to be some difference between the boundaries shown by them, but it is clear lot 2 of the said plan marked 6V27 belongs to the corpus as per their own showing of the boundaries of the excluded portion of the previous partition action for the preparation of the said plan. However, as per the report marked 6V28 it was only the 6th Defendant who has claimed plantation within said lot 2 and no cross claim before the surveyor has been made by the Plaintiff or any other party who rely on the Plaintiff's pedigree. If their father was in possession and they acquired prescriptive title, it is questionable why the Plaintiff or her siblings did not claim the plantation in lot 2 in the said plan and allowed the 6th Defendant to claim some old plantation in the area shown by her as the corpus without any cross claim. This too questions the nature of possession of the Plaintiff and his predecessors as well as their story presented to court.

Dr. Laxman Karalliadde, one of the predecessors in title of the 6th Defendant, and one time power of attorney holder of Dr. Laxman Karalliadde, Ranjith Abeyratne have given evidence with regard to the land claimed by the 6th Defendant. They explained how the land was given to various people including plaintiff's relatives to be looked after on behalf of Dr. Laxman Karalliadde as he was abroad. Through those witnesses, 6th Defendant has marked several communications (see 6v3, 6v11, 6v12,6v13, etc.). Those communications indicate that some of the Plaintiff's siblings who have been given shares in the Plaintiff's pedigree has communicated with Dr. Laxman Karalliadde in a manner admitting his title to the land. It must be noted one of these communications contain a sketch of the land and some refers to the path leading to Wallawwa which show on balance of probability that communications were done in relation to the land in dispute.

The Plaintiff in her amended plaint has concealed the fact that there was a testamentary case after the death of her father. The list of properties in the said testamentary case has been marked during the evidence and the corpus which is two roods in extent cannot be found in the said list. The 5th Defendant has tried to indicate that a one-acre land included in the said list is the corpus of this case. Most probably the one-acre land included in the list could be the one-acre and nine perches land the Plaintiff's father got through the previous partition action. On the other hand, the fifth Defendant who twice said that there is no specific name to the land sough to be partitioned in this action cannot say the one-acre land listed as Gamagedara Watta alias Kekiri welland alias Wallawwe watta in the said list of properties is the corpus of this action. If this corpus was considered as the Plaintiff' father's land at the time of his demise, it would have been naturally included in the said list. Even the third Defendant who stands with the Plaintiff in his statement of claim has claimed a right of way over the corpus. Servitude is a right over someone else's property. If he is a co-owner of the property, he has a right to every grain of sand in the property. Other co-owner's possession becomes his possession too. If one enjoys or uses the property, one has to presume that it is based on his legal right. Therefore, by claiming a servitude he admits the property belongs to someone else on which he does not have title. Not only that the Order in the 66-application matter, marked 6v2 also indicate that Swarna Karalliadde's (5th Defendant in the present action) claim before that court was for a right of way over the disputed land. These indicate that some of the siblings who are indicated as co-owners in the Plaintiff's pedigree have acted in a manner accepting that they are not the owner but they have a servitude over the corpus of someone else. Along with what is revealed through the aforesaid communications, there were material to show this claim was over the property that belonged to Dr. Lakshman Karalliadde. When some of the purported co-owners acted in a manner admitting the title was with someone else or Dr. Karalliadde, one of the predecessors in title of the 6th Defendant, how can a court rely on a stance that they as co-owners acquired prescriptive title to the corpus.

Furthermore, this court has to consider whether the so-called long possession generates a presumption that ouster has taken place and the possession is adverse. However, the 3rd Defendant's claim for a servitude, 5th Defendant's position before the primary court as revealed by the order of the primary court, the communications between Plaintiff's siblings and Dr. Karalliadde, claims made by the 6th Defendant without cross claim to the plantation, and Plaintiff or her siblings making no claims to the old plantation during the preliminary survey deter the court making such a presumption in favour of the Plaintiff and her siblings.

The above observations made by this court indicate, the learned District judge erred in evaluating the evidential materials before him.

However, it must be noted that the appeal of the 6th Defendant was allowed not because the learned High Court Judges accepted the claim made by the 6th Defendant to the whole area identified as the corpus. In fact, the learned High Court Judges did not grant the relief prayed by the 6th Defendant for a declaration that he is entitled to the entire corpus identified as the subject matter. The learned High Court Judges allowed the appeal and dismissed the partition action due to the reasons mentioned below;

1. Because it was found that the partition action filed by the Plaintiff and claim based on the prescriptive title of the predecessor in title who was not a party to the action is misconceived in law.

2. Even if it is considered that the action is not misconceived in law, the Plaintiff and the parties who wants to partition the corpus failed in proving prescriptive title in terms of section 3 of the prescription ordinance.

As mentioned before, the reason mentioned in item no.1 above has not been properly challenged through suggesting an appropriate question of law in the Petition. However, the reason mentioned in the item no.1 above is in accordance with the law as explained above.

Following are the only questions of law suggested by the Petition and accordingly allowed by this court.

a) Have the Hon. High Court Judges erred in Law by failing to consider the fact that the 6th Defendant Appellant Respondent in the said District Court case as well as in the said appeal has attempted to claim rights in relation to the subject matter of the said case no. P14028 by using a devolution of title of a completely different land which even the boundaries and extents differs in comparing the corpus of the said partition action?
b) Have the Hon. High Court Judges misdirected themselves in evaluating and considering the evidence led at the trial on behalf of the Petitioner as well as evidence led on behalf of the 6th Defendant Appellant Respondent in arriving the brief conclusion?
c) Have the Hon. High Court Judges completely misdirected themselves and also erred in law by dismissing the said appeal by taking certain extraneous matters which has no bearing on the main issue of identification of the property in arriving at their said judgment?
d) Have the Hon. High Court Judges erred in law by overturning the said well-considered judgment of the learned Trial Judge for the mere reason that the Petitioners at the stage of the appeal had attempted to produce new evidence without proper permission by the Court without considering the well-considered judgment of the Trial Judge which is based on the evidence led at the trial by the parties?

They are answered as follows;

a) They have not granted relief as per the claim made by the 6th Defendant, but allowed the appeal since the action was misconceived and even if considered as a proper action, the prescriptive title claimed by the Plaintiff and her siblings was not proved in terms of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. Hence the question is answered in the negative.
b) They did not involve in analyzing the evidence led at the trial in detail since the reasons given by them were sufficient to allow the appeal and dismiss the partition action. As explained above even a detailed analysis would have proved that there was no material to show that the possession was adverse to establish a claim on prescriptive title as contended by the plaintiff and her siblings. Thus, this question also has to be answered in the negative.

c) The appeal was not dismissed but it was allowed by the learned High Court Judges. Thus, the question of law was not properly formulated. Even if it is considered an error and if one replaces the words 'by dismissing the said appeal' with the words 'by allowing the said appeal', as per the reasons given above, the appeal was not decided on the issue of identification of the corpus but on valid reasons explained in the Judgment of the High Court. This question also has to be answered in the negative.

d) The learned High Court Judges correctly refused to accept new evidence tendered without permission and that attempt to produce new evidence was not the reason to overturn the District Court Judgment. Thus, the question of law is answered in the negative.

Therefore, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Samayawardhena, J.

According to the amended plaint, the plaintiff filed action in the District Court against the two defendants seeking declarations/orders that the 1st and/or the 2nd defendant are holding the property in trust for the plaintiff; and/or the 1st and/or the 2nd defendant are holding the property as security obtained for a loan in a sum of Rs. 500,000 (from the Dedigama Group); to retransfer the property in the name of the plaintiff; Deed No. 1096 marked P3 is a fraudulent Deed; and Deed No. 1387 marked P4 is a nullity. The defendants filed answer seeking dismissal of the plaintiff's action.

The case for the plaintiff is that she borrowed a sum of Rs. 500,000 from the Dedigama Group in May 1996 and the property in suit and another property were mortgaged as security for the loan. After payment of the money borrowed in August 1996, the Deed in relation to the other property (Deed No. 17) was returned to her but not the Deed in relation to the property in suit (Deed No. 252 marked P1 whereby the plaintiff became the owner). The plaintiff has made a complaint to the police in this regard which has been marked P2.

The plaintiff in her evidence says that, after the discussion with Ranjan Dedigama and Podi Nilame of the Dedigama Group, she was taken to a notary's office and therein her signatures were obtained to blank papers after being told that the transaction was a mortgage and not a sale. This has happened before the money was lent to the plaintiff.

According to Deed No. 1096 marked P3 (the impugned Deed), the land in suit has purportedly been transferred by the plaintiff to the 1st defendant on 18.09.1997 for a sum of Rs. 150,000. The plaintiff categorically denies this. The 1st defendant was a female employee of the Dedigama Group at that time. According to the plaintiff, she has never spoken to her at any time let alone sold the land to the 1st defendant. Thereafter the 1st defendant has transferred this land to the 2nd defendant by Deed No. 1387 marked P4. The 2nd defendant at that time was a superintendent of police.

After trial, the learned District Judge, particularly by answering issues No. 2 and 12, had come to the findings that (a) the Deed of Transfer P3 had been executed in favour of the 1st defendant who was an employee of the Dedigama Group when the land was in fact mortgaged to the Dedigama Group as security to a loan (b) there were no dealings by the 1st defendant with the plaintiff prior to the execution of the purported Deed of Transfer P3, and P3 was not a Deed executed on valuable consideration. I read the evidence led at the trial before the District Court and I am fully convinced that the said findings are correct.

However the learned District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's action primarily on the basis that the plaintiff made a fundamental mistake by tendering an amended plaint by removing the names of Ranjan Dadigama, his employee Podi Nilame and Notary Walisundara as parties to the case.

Being dissatisfied with the judgment of the District Court, only the plaintiff preferred an appeal to the High Court of Civil Appeal. The defendants did not appeal against the said adverse findings of the District Court. The High Court set aside the judgment of the District Court and directed the District Court to enter the judgment for the plaintiff. I take the view that the conclusion of the High Court is correct.

The 2nd defendant came before this Court against the judgment of the High Court. This Court has granted leave to appeal on several questions (Paragraphs (b) to (f) of the petition). The first question is whether the High Court misdirected itself in failing to consider that the plaintiff had failed to prove that Deed P3 was a forged Deed or executed on misrepresentation. As I have already stated, this is the finding of the District Judge, against which there was no appeal. The High Court only fortified or rather affirmed that finding. This question shall be answered in the negative. The third question is whether the High Court misdirected itself by placing the burden on payment of consideration on the defendants. The finding of the learned District Judge is that consideration on Deed P3 was not paid by the 1st defendant to the plaintiff. There was no appeal against this finding. The High Court merely affirmed it. The finding of the learned District Judge is correct.

I accept that the High Court further says that consideration on Deed P4 was also not paid by the 2nd defendant to the 1st defendant. I think that finding is unwarranted. Even the 1st defendant does not say so. The learned District Judge does not say that Deed P4 is a forgery. I set aside that finding of the High Court and affirm the finding of the District Court on Deed P4. However, whether or not Deed P4 is a forgery is immaterial. If Deed P3 is a forgery, Deed P4 executed based on P3 is a nullity. The 2nd defendant-appellant may seek relief against the 1st defendant, if so advised.

In view of the above findings, there is no necessity to answer the other questions raised by the 2nd defendant-appellant.

I dismiss the appeal but without costs.

JUDGEMENT

Aluwihare PC. J.,

(1) This matter relates to a partition action. The parcel of land in question, described in the second schedule to the Plaint, is a divided portion of a larger land called Bogahakumburehena. The corpus is depicted as Lot No. 1 in Plan No. 86/87B, prepared by S.M.K.B. Mawalagedara, Licensed Surveyor, for the previous partition action bearing No. P/7799 (P15), which lot was left unallotted in the Final Decree of that action, [i.e P/7799]. The said Lot 1 is shown as Lots 1 and 2 in the Preliminary Plan No. EL/ 529 dated 5th July 1994, which was prepared for the instant case (P16).

(2) The learned District Judge delivered judgement and made order to partition the corpus as prayed for by the Plaintiff.

(3) Aggrieved by the said judgement the 6A, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 12th Defendant-Appellant-Respondents who also claimed title to the corpus (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Defendants") preferred an appeal before the Civil Appellate High Court of the Central Province., the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court delivering the judgment, set aside the judgement of the District Court and directed that decree be entered as prayed for by the Appellants, namely the 6A, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 12th Defendant-Appellant-Respondents before this court.

(4) Aggrieved by the said judgment the Plaintiff Respondent-Petitioner-Appellant [Herein after referred to as the Plaintiff] moved by way of leave to appeal to the and this Court granted leave to appeal on the questions of law set out in sub- paragraphs (d) to (i) of Paragraph 17 of the Petition dated 21st November 2011;

The questions of law are as follows;

(d) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err with regard to the flow of title of the Plaintiff-Respondent?

(e) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err by being misdirected in respect of the documents 10V4 and 10V6- P20, 21, 22?

(f) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err by being misdirected to consider that the 6A, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 12 Defendants failed to raise a specific issue in respect of P20, P21 and P22?

(g) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err by failing to consider the evidence which are in the Petitioner's favour?

(h)Did the High Court err by holding that any title passed by virtue of fiscal conveyance 10V6 (deed 24349) dated 17th September 1968 when the transferor had no title at that time as the transference had sold his entitlement by deed No. 6810 dated 27th June 1958?

(i) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err by misdirecting itself as to the identification of the corpus while both parties have admitted in respect of the identification of the corpus?

(5) After considering the appeal, the learned judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals had arrived at the following conclusions which are material to determine the issues before us,

(a) The plaintiff or the 1st to 4th Defendants have failed to establish any interest to the unallotted portion [lots 1 plan No. 86/87B]

(b) That the title of Siyathu to the corpus had been seized, on the strength of the judgement in case No. L 6625 and sold by the fiscal conveyance.

The claim of the Plaintiff [Appellant]

(6) There had been no dispute as to the identity of the corpus. Both parties admitted that the land described in the 1st schedule to the Plaint, namely Bogahakumburehena in extent of two amunams of paddy sowing, was owned by one Talagollegedara Appu. By Deed No. 10198 dated 2nd June 1909 (P7), he gifted his rights to said land to his six children in equal shares. The six children were; (1) Punchirala, (2) Mudalihamy, (3) Kirihamy, (4) Siyathu, (5) Ukku Menika and (6) Punchi Menika. However, both, Mudalihamy(2) and Ukku Menika(5) had died intestate and issueless and each of the surviving four children[i.e.. (1), (3), (4) and (6)] became entitled to an undivided 1/4th share of the land. [For ease of reference, the number assigned to each of Thalagollegedera Appu's children referred to above, is carried throughout this judgement]

(7) It is also common ground that the undivided 1/4th share of Punchirala (1), after his death, devolved on his child the 5th Defendant [Aloysius] and that Kirihamy (3) by Deed No. 10510 dated 21st August 1967 conveyed half of his undivided 1/4th share to the 5thDefendant [Alloysious], who thus, became entitled to an undivided 3/8th share of Bogahakumburehena.

(8) According to the Plaintiff, the abovementioned Kirihamy (3) sold and transferred the balance half of his undivided 1/4th share (1/8th) by Deed No. 9606 dated 30th May 1919 (P18) to one Kiri Ethana and she in turn, by Deed No. 29848 (P19) transferred the said share to the Siyathu(4), who thus became entitled to an undivided 3/8th share of Bogahakumburehena. It appears that there is no dispute that at one point in time Siyathu accrued title to 3/8th of the corpus.

(9) To place it in context; it is reiterated that the present partition action was to partition the land depicted as Lot No. 1 in Plan No. 86/87B which was kept unallotted in the earlier Partition action[P7799] and this lot represents the 3/8 share of Siyathu(4), the devolution which both the Plaintiff on one hand and the 6A-10th and the 12th Defendants on the other, are disputing.

(10) On the perusal of the proceedings of the action P/7799(vide page 455 of the Brief), it appears that Lot No.1 was left unallotted on the basis that the Fiscal Conveyance [10V6] had not been tendered in evidence. Hence the share of Siyathu and Kiri Ethana from whom Siyathu had accrued further rights to Bogahakumburehena, was left unallotted.

The Respective positions of the Plaintiff and the 6A-10th & the 12 Defendants

(11) The Plaintiff avers that Siyathu (4), in 1958, by Deed No. 6810 (P20) sold and transferred his undivided 3/8th share to one W.M.B.K.G. Ranatunga, who, in 1966, by Deed No. 6180 (P21) sold the said 3/8th share to the Plaintiff's father, Punchi Appuhamy.

(12) It is the Plaintiff's contention that, on the death of Punchi Appuhamy, his rights to the corpus, devolved on his children, that is, the Plaintiff and the 2nd to 4th Defendants, subject to the life interest of the 1st Defendant, Koin Menike (the widow of Punchi Appuhamy).

(13) It is further averred that Punchi Menika's (6) rights to Bogahakumburehena (an undivided 1/4th share) devolved on her child Tikiri Menika who by Deed No. 1301 dated 7th May 1969, sold and transferred the same to the Punchi Appuhamy, the Plaintiff's father . Punchi Appuhamy had transferred the said ¼th share, to his wife, the 1st Defendant, by Deed No. 5973 in 1973 and thus the 1st Defendant had rights to an undivided 1/4th share of Bogahakumburehena.

The claim of the 6A-10th and 12th Defendant- Respondents

(14) The 6A to the 10th and 12th Defendants also claimed title to the corpus from Siyathu(4). In their Statement of Claim, it is averred that, the 5th Defendant Alloysious [Punchirala's (1) son] who was a minor, through Kirihamy (3), as his next friend, instituted action bearing No.6625/L, against Siyathu (4), for a declaration of title to an undivided 1/4th share of three lands originally owned by Talagollegedara Appu, namely, Bogahakumburegedera watta, Bogahakumburehena and Kosgahayatatennehena.

(15) The District Court entered judgment and decree in favour of the 5th Defendant Aloysius (10D4), and Siyathu was ordered to pay costs. It is stated that since Siyathu(4) failed to pay costs a writ of execution was issued and his interests in the 3 aforementioned lands were seized and auctioned in order to recover the costs. At the auction held by the Fiscal in execution of the writ, the rights, title and interest of Siyathu(4) in all 3 lands were sold and purchased by Kirihamy(3) in 1967. The sale was confirmed by the District Court on 9th January 1968 (vide page 492 of the Appeal Brief) and the Fiscal's Conveyance No. 24349 (marked 10V6- at page 490 of the Appeal Brief) was executed in favour of Kirihamy (6).

(16) It is thus contended that Kirihamy (3) purchased Siyathu's rights to Bogahakumburehena (an undivided 3/8th share), and upon Kirihamy's death, his interests devolved on his heirs, that is the 6th -10th Defendants and the 12th Defendant, and that each of them were entitled to Siyathu's share from Lot No. 1 in Bogahakumburehena.

The points of contention

(17) The learned President's Counsel on behalf of the Plaintiff contended that at the time the Fiscal sale took place on 27th November 1967, and the Fiscal Conveyance [10V6] was executed on 9th January 1968, Siyathu had no title to Bogahakumburehena as by then, by Deed No. 6810 dated 27th June 1958, Siyathu had already sold his 3/8th share in the said land to W.M.B.K.G. Ranatunga. It was argued, therefore, that Kirihamy (3) did not acquire any title to the said land by the Fiscal sale and as such the claim of the competing Defendants should fail.

(18) The main contention, on the other hand, of the learned Counsel for the 6A-10th and 12th Defendants was that the title deeds relied on by the Plaintiff, namely Deeds No. 6810 (P20), 6180 (P21) and 6197 (P22), all refer to a land called Egodawatte of about 3 pelas and 1 amunam in extent whereas, the corpus that was subject to partition; Lot No.1 in Plan 86/87B, is a divided portion of Bogahakumburahena, and not Egodawatte.

(19) It is argued, therefore, that, Siyathu's interests in Bogahakumburahena had devolved on the 6A-10th and 12th Defendants under and by virtue of the Fiscal's Conveyance marked 10V6, while Siyathu's interests in Egodawatte had devolved on the Plaintiff and the 1st to 4th Respondents under and by virtue of Deeds P20 and P21. Hence, it is submitted that neither the Plaintiff nor the 1st to 4th Respondents have any title to the said Lot No.1 of Bogahakumuburahena.

(20) The learned Counsel on behalf of the competing Defendants also highlighted the fact that in the execution of the writ against Siyathu for non-payment of costs in Case No. L/6625, Punchi Appuhamy [from whom the Plaintiff and the 1st to 4th Defendants derive their title], made claims to the properties seized and at the proceedings at the Claims Inquiry (at page 512 of the Appeal Brief), it is recorded that Punchi Appuhamy did not claim any interests in the lands seized, i.e., Bogahakumbure Watta, Bogahakumburehena, and Kosgahayatatennehena. It is stated that he only claimed a land called Egodawatte which was not seized. Mr Walgampaya who appeared for Punchi Appuhamy had informed court that the claim made, as a prohibitory notice had been posted on Egodawatta. Concluding the proceedings, the District Court made the following order, "The judgement creditor will be entitled to sell the judgement debtor's interest in the lands called Bogahakumburegedera Watta, Bogahakumburehena and Kosgahayatatennahena, but not any portion of the land called Egodawatte belonging to the Claimants". The Plaintiff, however, contends that Egodawatte is but another name for Bogahakumburehena.

(21) This case, therefore, revolves around a solitary question; that is, whether the rights of Siyathu(4) with respect to Bogahakumburehena devolved on

Punchi Appuhamy on Deeds Nos. 6810 (P20) and 6180 (P21) or whether those rights were seized in the execution of the Decree in Case No. L/6625 and were sold to Kirihamy.

(22) Although this court granted leave to appeal on six questions of law, the thrust of the argument on behalf of the Plaintiff-Appellant, was on two issues;

(1) That the High Court erred in holding that Kirihamy, [the predecessor in title of the 5th Defendant] obtained Siyathu's share by fiscal conveyance, when in fact, Siyathu did not have title to the land at the time the fiscal conveyance was executed.

(2) That the High Court erred in holding that the Plaintiff's title deeds do not relate to the corpus but to a different land called "Egodawatte".

The (1) above, is the question of law referred to in sub-paragraph (h) of Paragraph17 of the Petition on which leave to appeal had been granted, whereas (2) above touches the question of law referred to in sub-paragraph (e) of 17.

The Questions of Law

(23) In view of the submission aforesaid, I wish to deal with the questions of law raised on behalf of the Plaintiff- Appellant referred to in the preceding paragraph.

(24) The main thrust of the argument of the learned President's Counsel was that, the 5th Defendant Alloysious instituted action against Siyathu(4) and others claiming undivided 1/4th of Bogahakumburahena upon death of his father Punchirala(1) and when Siayathu defaulted payment of costs ordered by court, fiscal conveyance was executed in 1968 over Siyathu's rights in three lands inclusive of Bogahakumburahena and it was Kirihamy (3) who purchased those rights. However, it was pointed out that, prior to the fiscal conveyance, in 1958 by deed no.6810[P20], Siyathu(4) had sold his 3/8th share to W.M.B. Ranathunga and as such Kirihamy(3) did not get any title to the said lands. It was thus argued that the High Court erred and misdirected itself by not considering this aspect.

(25) Perusal of the schedule to the deed No. 6810[P20], it appears what has been sold by Siyathu(4) to Ranathunga is a land called "Ëgodawatte" and the schedule further states " Egodawatte forms part and parcel of all three contiguous lands called- (1) Boghakumburegedarawatte, (2) Gederagawakumbura and (3) Egodawatte Registered in E 365/212" . It is to be noted that the name Bogahakumburehena is nowhere mentioned in this deed. Yet, the, learned President's Counsel argued that the boundaries describing the land Siyathu sold by Deed 6810[P20] and the land described in the 2nd schedule to the plaint [that was sought to be partitioned] in the instant case are identical and as such both refer to one and the same land.

(26) This court considered the contention of the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff and in that regard the following observations are made;

(a) The 1st Schedule to the Plaint in the present case describes the larger land [presumably which was the subject matter in the Partition action P/7799] as "Bogahakuburahena" in extent of 2 Amunams of paddy sowing.

(b) Even in the case L/6625 filed on behalf of the 5th Defendant Alloysious way back in 1961, the land is described as Bogahakumburahena, a land in extent of 2 Amunams of paddy sowing.

(c) The schedule of Deed No. 6810 on which the Plaintiff relied to support his claim, however, describes the land as "Egodawatte", in extent of one Amunam of paddy sowing.

(d) Partition action P/7799 was instituted in 1970 [P23] and Deed no. 6810 was executed in 1958. As such if Siyathu sold his rights of Bogahakuburahena to Ranathunga by the said deed, it necessarily would have been an undivided portion of Bogahakuburahena. If that was the case the boundaries referred to in the schedule of the deed 6810 must tally with the boundaries of Bogahakumburahena depicted in plan No.86/87. In Deed no.6810, the Eastern boundary is stated as, the lands of Mudunkothgedera Sundera, Kirihamy and the ditch and fence of Tikiri Menika, whereas the Eastern boundary according to the Plan No.86/87 are the lands of 'Dingirala and Bajjurala'. Western boundary of the land according to Deed No.6810 is Pangollewatthe of C.P.H Dharmaratne whereas according the Plan No.86/87, it is 'Heenhami's land' and land of Alice Dharmarathne.

(e) Interestingly, the southern boundary of the land referred to in Deed No. 6810 is depicted as 'Ima of Bogahakuburegedera-gawa-kumbura' of the vendor Siyathu, which is an indication, in my view, that Siyathu owned other property or properties in that name.

(f) It is also to be noted that in Deed no 6810 executed by Siyathu, he does not say as to how he became entitled to property called Egodawatte. As far as the land Bogahakumburahena was concerned, he become a co-owner along with his siblings by virtue of Deed No. 10198 dated 2nd June 1909 (P7), when his father gifted his rights to said land to his six children in equal shares.

(g) The most crucial evidence, as far as I see it, comes from the claim inquiry in case No. L.6625 dated 11th July 1967.[Pg 512 of the appeal brief]. The Claimant W.M. Punchi Appuhamy the Plaintiff's father, who was present before court stated that he does not claim any interest in the lands called -Bogahakuburegederawatte

-Bogahakuburehena and

- Kosgahayatathennehena referred to as lands seized. He claimed a land called Egodawatte and his Attorney informed court that 'Egodawatte is a different land.

(27) Considering the above this court cannot fault the findings by the learned judges of the High of Civil Appeals in arriving at the findings that the Plaintiff's title deeds do not relate to the corpus, but to a land called "Egodawatte".

(28) In the circumstances referred to above, I answer the two issues referred to in paragraph 22 above [question of law (h) and (f)] in the negative.

(29) Accordingly I hold that; the rights of Siyathu(4) with respect to Bogahakumburehena did not devolve on Punchi Appuhamy on Deeds Nos. 6810 (P20) and 6180 (P21) and I hold further that the rights of Siyathu were seized in the execution of the Decree in Case No. L/6625 and were sold to Kirihamy.

(30) Furthermore, the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals were correct in arriving at the conclusion that the plaintiff or the 1st to 4th Defendants have failed to establish any interest to the unallotted portion, i.e., lots 1 of plan No. 86/87B.

(31) I do not see any merit in the questions of law referred to in sub-paragraphs (d) (f) (g) and (i) of Paragraph 17 of the petition and the said questions are also answered in the negative.

Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed, subject to costs

JUDGEMENT

Aluwihare PC. J.,

(1) This matter relates to a partition action. The parcel of land in question, described in the second schedule to the Plaint, is a divided portion of a larger land called Bogahakumburehena. The corpus is depicted as Lot No. 1 in Plan No. 86/87B, prepared by S.M.K.B. Mawalagedara, Licensed Surveyor, for the previous partition action bearing No. P/7799 (P15), which lot was left unallotted in the Final Decree of that action, [i.e P/7799]. The said Lot 1 is shown as Lots 1 and 2 in the Preliminary Plan No. EL/ 529 dated 5th July 1994, which was prepared for the instant case (P16).

(2) The learned District Judge delivered judgement and made order to partition the corpus as prayed for by the Plaintiff.

(3) Aggrieved by the said judgement the 6A, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 12th Defendant-Appellant-Respondents who also claimed title to the corpus (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Defendants") preferred an appeal before the Civil Appellate High Court of the Central Province., the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court delivering the judgment, set aside the judgement of the District Court and directed that decree be entered as prayed for by the Appellants, namely the 6A, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 12th Defendant-Appellant-Respondents before this court.

(4) Aggrieved by the said judgment the Plaintiff Respondent-Petitioner-Appellant [Herein after referred to as the Plaintiff] moved by way of leave to appeal to the and this Court granted leave to appeal on the questions of law set out in sub- paragraphs (d) to (i) of Paragraph 17 of the Petition dated 21st November 2011;

The questions of law are as follows;

(d) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err with regard to the flow of title of the Plaintiff-Respondent?

(e) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err by being misdirected in respect of the documents 10V4 and 10V6- P20, 21, 22?

(f) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err by being misdirected to consider that the 6A, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 12 Defendants failed to raise a specific issue in respect of P20, P21 and P22?

(g) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err by failing to consider the evidence which are in the Petitioner's favour?

(h)Did the High Court err by holding that any title passed by virtue of fiscal conveyance 10V6 (deed 24349) dated 17th September 1968 when the transferor had no title at that time as the transference had sold his entitlement by deed No. 6810 dated 27th June 1958?

(i) Did the High Court of Civil Appeals err by misdirecting itself as to the identification of the corpus while both parties have admitted in respect of the identification of the corpus?

(5) After considering the appeal, the learned judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals had arrived at the following conclusions which are material to determine the issues before us,

(a) The plaintiff or the 1st to 4th Defendants have failed to establish any interest to the unallotted portion [lots 1 plan No. 86/87B]

(b) That the title of Siyathu to the corpus had been seized, on the strength of the judgement in case No. L 6625 and sold by the fiscal conveyance.

The claim of the Plaintiff [Appellant]

(6) There had been no dispute as to the identity of the corpus. Both parties admitted that the land described in the 1st schedule to the Plaint, namely Bogahakumburehena in extent of two amunams of paddy sowing, was owned by one Talagollegedara Appu. By Deed No. 10198 dated 2nd June 1909 (P7), he gifted his rights to said land to his six children in equal shares. The six children were; (1) Punchirala, (2) Mudalihamy, (3) Kirihamy, (4) Siyathu, (5) Ukku Menika and (6) Punchi Menika. However, both, Mudalihamy(2) and Ukku Menika(5) had died intestate and issueless and each of the surviving four children[i.e.. (1), (3), (4) and (6)] became entitled to an undivided 1/4th share of the land. [For ease of reference, the number assigned to each of Thalagollegedera Appu's children referred to above, is carried throughout this judgement]

(7) It is also common ground that the undivided 1/4th share of Punchirala (1), after his death, devolved on his child the 5th Defendant [Aloysius] and that Kirihamy (3) by Deed No. 10510 dated 21st August 1967 conveyed half of his undivided 1/4th share to the 5thDefendant [Alloysious], who thus, became entitled to an undivided 3/8th share of Bogahakumburehena.

(8) According to the Plaintiff, the abovementioned Kirihamy (3) sold and transferred the balance half of his undivided 1/4th share (1/8th) by Deed No. 9606 dated 30th May 1919 (P18) to one Kiri Ethana and she in turn, by Deed No. 29848 (P19) transferred the said share to the Siyathu(4), who thus became entitled to an undivided 3/8th share of Bogahakumburehena. It appears that there is no dispute that at one point in time Siyathu accrued title to 3/8th of the corpus.

(9) To place it in context; it is reiterated that the present partition action was to partition the land depicted as Lot No. 1 in Plan No. 86/87B which was kept unallotted in the earlier Partition action[P7799] and this lot represents the 3/8 share of Siyathu(4), the devolution which both the Plaintiff on one hand and the 6A-10th and the 12th Defendants on the other, are disputing.

(10) On the perusal of the proceedings of the action P/7799(vide page 455 of the Brief), it appears that Lot No.1 was left unallotted on the basis that the Fiscal Conveyance [10V6] had not been tendered in evidence. Hence the share of Siyathu and Kiri Ethana from whom Siyathu had accrued further rights to Bogahakumburehena, was left unallotted.

The Respective positions of the Plaintiff and the 6A-10th & the 12 Defendants

(11) The Plaintiff avers that Siyathu (4), in 1958, by Deed No. 6810 (P20) sold and transferred his undivided 3/8th share to one W.M.B.K.G. Ranatunga, who, in 1966, by Deed No. 6180 (P21) sold the said 3/8th share to the Plaintiff's father, Punchi Appuhamy.

(12) It is the Plaintiff's contention that, on the death of Punchi Appuhamy, his rights to the corpus, devolved on his children, that is, the Plaintiff and the 2nd to 4th Defendants, subject to the life interest of the 1st Defendant, Koin Menike (the widow of Punchi Appuhamy).

(13) It is further averred that Punchi Menika's (6) rights to Bogahakumburehena (an undivided 1/4th share) devolved on her child Tikiri Menika who by Deed No. 1301 dated 7th May 1969, sold and transferred the same to the Punchi Appuhamy, the Plaintiff's father . Punchi Appuhamy had transferred the said ¼th share, to his wife, the 1st Defendant, by Deed No. 5973 in 1973 and thus the 1st Defendant had rights to an undivided 1/4th share of Bogahakumburehena.

The claim of the 6A-10th and 12th Defendant- Respondents

(14) The 6A to the 10th and 12th Defendants also claimed title to the corpus from Siyathu(4). In their Statement of Claim, it is averred that, the 5th Defendant Alloysious [Punchirala's (1) son] who was a minor, through Kirihamy (3), as his next friend, instituted action bearing No.6625/L, against Siyathu (4), for a declaration of title to an undivided 1/4th share of three lands originally owned by Talagollegedara Appu, namely, Bogahakumburegedera watta, Bogahakumburehena and Kosgahayatatennehena.

(15) The District Court entered judgment and decree in favour of the 5th Defendant Aloysius (10D4), and Siyathu was ordered to pay costs. It is stated that since Siyathu(4) failed to pay costs a writ of execution was issued and his interests in the 3 aforementioned lands were seized and auctioned in order to recover the costs. At the auction held by the Fiscal in execution of the writ, the rights, title and interest of Siyathu(4) in all 3 lands were sold and purchased by Kirihamy(3) in 1967. The sale was confirmed by the District Court on 9th January 1968 (vide page 492 of the Appeal Brief) and the Fiscal's Conveyance No. 24349 (marked 10V6- at page 490 of the Appeal Brief) was executed in favour of Kirihamy (6).

(16) It is thus contended that Kirihamy (3) purchased Siyathu's rights to Bogahakumburehena (an undivided 3/8th share), and upon Kirihamy's death, his interests devolved on his heirs, that is the 6th -10th Defendants and the 12th Defendant, and that each of them were entitled to Siyathu's share from Lot No. 1 in Bogahakumburehena.

The points of contention

(17) The learned President's Counsel on behalf of the Plaintiff contended that at the time the Fiscal sale took place on 27th November 1967, and the Fiscal Conveyance [10V6] was executed on 9th January 1968, Siyathu had no title to Bogahakumburehena as by then, by Deed No. 6810 dated 27th June 1958, Siyathu had already sold his 3/8th share in the said land to W.M.B.K.G. Ranatunga. It was argued, therefore, that Kirihamy (3) did not acquire any title to the said land by the Fiscal sale and as such the claim of the competing Defendants should fail.

(18) The main contention, on the other hand, of the learned Counsel for the 6A-10th and 12th Defendants was that the title deeds relied on by the Plaintiff, namely Deeds No. 6810 (P20), 6180 (P21) and 6197 (P22), all refer to a land called Egodawatte of about 3 pelas and 1 amunam in extent whereas, the corpus that was subject to partition; Lot No.1 in Plan 86/87B, is a divided portion of Bogahakumburahena, and not Egodawatte.

(19) It is argued, therefore, that, Siyathu's interests in Bogahakumburahena had devolved on the 6A-10th and 12th Defendants under and by virtue of the Fiscal's Conveyance marked 10V6, while Siyathu's interests in Egodawatte had devolved on the Plaintiff and the 1st to 4th Respondents under and by virtue of Deeds P20 and P21. Hence, it is submitted that neither the Plaintiff nor the 1st to 4th Respondents have any title to the said Lot No.1 of Bogahakumuburahena.

(20) The learned Counsel on behalf of the competing Defendants also highlighted the fact that in the execution of the writ against Siyathu for non-payment of costs in Case No. L/6625, Punchi Appuhamy [from whom the Plaintiff and the 1st to 4th Defendants derive their title], made claims to the properties seized and at the proceedings at the Claims Inquiry (at page 512 of the Appeal Brief), it is recorded that Punchi Appuhamy did not claim any interests in the lands seized, i.e., Bogahakumbure Watta, Bogahakumburehena, and Kosgahayatatennehena. It is stated that he only claimed a land called Egodawatte which was not seized. Mr Walgampaya who appeared for Punchi Appuhamy had informed court that the claim made, as a prohibitory notice had been posted on Egodawatta. Concluding the proceedings, the District Court made the following order, "The judgement creditor will be entitled to sell the judgement debtor's interest in the lands called Bogahakumburegedera Watta, Bogahakumburehena and Kosgahayatatennahena, but not any portion of the land called Egodawatte belonging to the Claimants". The Plaintiff, however, contends that Egodawatte is but another name for Bogahakumburehena.

(21) This case, therefore, revolves around a solitary question; that is, whether the rights of Siyathu(4) with respect to Bogahakumburehena devolved on

Punchi Appuhamy on Deeds Nos. 6810 (P20) and 6180 (P21) or whether those rights were seized in the execution of the Decree in Case No. L/6625 and were sold to Kirihamy.

(22) Although this court granted leave to appeal on six questions of law, the thrust of the argument on behalf of the Plaintiff-Appellant, was on two issues;

(1) That the High Court erred in holding that Kirihamy, [the predecessor in title of the 5th Defendant] obtained Siyathu's share by fiscal conveyance, when in fact, Siyathu did not have title to the land at the time the fiscal conveyance was executed.

(2) That the High Court erred in holding that the Plaintiff's title deeds do not relate to the corpus but to a different land called "Egodawatte".

The (1) above, is the question of law referred to in sub-paragraph (h) of Paragraph17 of the Petition on which leave to appeal had been granted, whereas (2) above touches the question of law referred to in sub-paragraph (e) of 17.

The Questions of Law

(23) In view of the submission aforesaid, I wish to deal with the questions of law raised on behalf of the Plaintiff- Appellant referred to in the preceding paragraph.

(24) The main thrust of the argument of the learned President's Counsel was that, the 5th Defendant Alloysious instituted action against Siyathu(4) and others claiming undivided 1/4th of Bogahakumburahena upon death of his father Punchirala(1) and when Siayathu defaulted payment of costs ordered by court, fiscal conveyance was executed in 1968 over Siyathu's rights in three lands inclusive of Bogahakumburahena and it was Kirihamy (3) who purchased those rights. However, it was pointed out that, prior to the fiscal conveyance, in 1958 by deed no.6810[P20], Siyathu(4) had sold his 3/8th share to W.M.B. Ranathunga and as such Kirihamy(3) did not get any title to the said lands. It was thus argued that the High Court erred and misdirected itself by not considering this aspect.

(25) Perusal of the schedule to the deed No. 6810[P20], it appears what has been sold by Siyathu(4) to Ranathunga is a land called "Ëgodawatte" and the schedule further states " Egodawatte forms part and parcel of all three contiguous lands called- (1) Boghakumburegedarawatte, (2) Gederagawakumbura and (3) Egodawatte Registered in E 365/212" . It is to be noted that the name Bogahakumburehena is nowhere mentioned in this deed. Yet, the, learned President's Counsel argued that the boundaries describing the land Siyathu sold by Deed 6810[P20] and the land described in the 2nd schedule to the plaint [that was sought to be partitioned] in the instant case are identical and as such both refer to one and the same land.

(26) This court considered the contention of the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff and in that regard the following observations are made;

(a) The 1st Schedule to the Plaint in the present case describes the larger land [presumably which was the subject matter in the Partition action P/7799] as "Bogahakuburahena" in extent of 2 Amunams of paddy sowing.

(b) Even in the case L/6625 filed on behalf of the 5th Defendant Alloysious way back in 1961, the land is described as Bogahakumburahena, a land in extent of 2 Amunams of paddy sowing.

(c) The schedule of Deed No. 6810 on which the Plaintiff relied to support his claim, however, describes the land as "Egodawatte", in extent of one Amunam of paddy sowing.

(d) Partition action P/7799 was instituted in 1970 [P23] and Deed no. 6810 was executed in 1958. As such if Siyathu sold his rights of Bogahakuburahena to Ranathunga by the said deed, it necessarily would have been an undivided portion of Bogahakuburahena. If that was the case the boundaries referred to in the schedule of the deed 6810 must tally with the boundaries of Bogahakumburahena depicted in plan No.86/87. In Deed no.6810, the Eastern boundary is stated as, the lands of Mudunkothgedera Sundera, Kirihamy and the ditch and fence of Tikiri Menika, whereas the Eastern boundary according to the Plan No.86/87 are the lands of 'Dingirala and Bajjurala'. Western boundary of the land according to Deed No.6810 is Pangollewatthe of C.P.H Dharmaratne whereas according the Plan No.86/87, it is 'Heenhami's land' and land of Alice Dharmarathne.

(e) Interestingly, the southern boundary of the land referred to in Deed No. 6810 is depicted as 'Ima of Bogahakuburegedera-gawa-kumbura' of the vendor Siyathu, which is an indication, in my view, that Siyathu owned other property or properties in that name.

(f) It is also to be noted that in Deed no 6810 executed by Siyathu, he does not say as to how he became entitled to property called Egodawatte. As far as the land Bogahakumburahena was concerned, he become a co-owner along with his siblings by virtue of Deed No. 10198 dated 2nd June 1909 (P7), when his father gifted his rights to said land to his six children in equal shares.

(g) The most crucial evidence, as far as I see it, comes from the claim inquiry in case No. L.6625 dated 11th July 1967.[Pg 512 of the appeal brief]. The Claimant W.M. Punchi Appuhamy the Plaintiff's father, who was present before court stated that he does not claim any interest in the lands called -Bogahakuburegederawatte

-Bogahakuburehena and

- Kosgahayatathennehena referred to as

lands seized. He claimed a land called Egodawatte and his Attorney informed court that 'Egodawatte is a different land.

(27) Considering the above this court cannot fault the findings by the learned judges of the High of Civil Appeals in arriving at the findings that the Plaintiff's title deeds do not relate to the corpus, but to a land called "Egodawatte".

(28) In the circumstances referred to above, I answer the two issues referred to in paragraph 22 above [question of law (h) and (f)] in the negative.

(29) Accordingly I hold that; the rights of Siyathu(4) with respect to Bogahakumburehena did not devolve on Punchi Appuhamy on Deeds Nos. 6810 (P20) and 6180 (P21) and I hold further that the rights of Siyathu were seized in the execution of the Decree in Case No. L/6625 and were sold to Kirihamy.

(30) Furthermore, the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals were correct in arriving at the conclusion that the plaintiff or the 1st to 4th Defendants have failed to establish any interest to the unallotted portion, i.e., lots 1 of plan No. 86/87B.

(31) I do not see any merit in the questions of law referred to in sub-paragraphs (d) (f) (g) and (i) of Paragraph 17 of the petition and the said questions are also answered in the negative.

Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed, subject to costs

Judgement

Aluwihare PC J.,

This is an appeal against the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court of Galle. The original action filed by the original Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff) in the District Court of Galle for the partition of a land called 'Hamade Delgahawatta". By the Plaint, 8 Defendants were made parties to the action and the Plaintiff sought to partition the aforesaid land according to the share allocation described in paragraph 10 of the Plaint.

By preliminary plan No.198 dated 31st March 1991 made by Bandula Silva Licensed Surveyor (marked as 'X') a land of 2 Acres, 1 Rood and 26.25 Perches was identified as the corpus which consists of two lots namely Lot A and Lot B.

The 1st/8A and 2nd Defendant-Appellant-Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the relevant Defendants) by their statement of objections disputed the corpus identified in the preliminary plan. They took up the position that a land called Delgahawatta Addara Owita was included in the corpus identified by the aforementioned preliminary plan and sought the exclusion of that purported land from the corpus.

The surveyor, by having plan No.1490 [referred to in the statement of claim of the relevant Defendants], superimposed on the preliminary plan No.198, which was marked and produced as 'Y 1'. In the superimposed plan he had identified 3 lots namely A1, A2 and B. Of those lots, the relevant Defendants claimed A1 was the corpus, and prayed that the land sought to be partitioned by this action be identified as Lot A1 of the superimposed plan 'Y1', and for a declaration that they were the owners of the said Lor A1.

The Plaintiff's position was that none of the Surveyors had used earlier plans to demarcate boundaries but surveyed the land according to the metes and bounds as shown by the respective parties.

Thereafter the trial proceeded on 2 main contesting points,

1. the corpus and its extent and

2. the pedigree of title

The Plaintiff giving evidence claimed title as described in the schedule to the plaint and sought to partition the land among the co-owners as described therein.

The relevant Defendants while disputing the identification of the corpus took up the position that out of the entirety of Lot A1 in the plan marked 'Y1' their predecessor in title namely Bantis (the original 8th Defendant) has acquired prescriptive title to a 42/ 48th share which was almost the entirety of the corpus.

The District Court by its judgment dated 2nd April 2009, admitted the title and pedigree disclosed by the Plaintiff and further identified the corpus to be partitioned as Lot A1 in the Plan marked 'Y1' which is 1 Acre, 2 Roods and 13.75 Perches in extent. Upon analysing the evidence placed, the learned District Judge held the entitlement of parties as follows;

Plaintiff- 24/360, the 1st Defendant-55/360, the 2nd Defendant 55/360, the 3rd to the 6th Defendant 24/360 each, the 7th and 8th Defendants 65/360 each. All parties were allotted shares and it appears that the share allotted to the Plaintiff was the smallest, in terms of extent.

Aggrieved by the aforesaid judgment, the relevant Defendants preferred an appeal to the Civil Appellate High Court of the Southern Province Holden in Galle.

The relevant Defendants did not dispute the findings of the District Court with respect to the identification of the corpus, however they challenged the findings relating to the pedigree and in particular the findings with regard to prescriptive title.

The Civil Appellate High Court delivered its judgment inter alia granting prescriptive title of the entirety of the corpus (Lot A1 in Plan marked Y1) to the relevant Defendants. It is of relevance to note that the learned High Court Judges have reproduced the entirety of the written submission filled on behalf of the relevant Defendants in their judgement and had overturned the findings of the learned District Court Judge. The judgement of the High Court commences on page 04 and runs into page 22. The entire judgement is nothing but a reproduction of the written submission of the Defendants, save for the last paragraph which says, "for the foregoing reasons we set aside the answers by the learned District Judge to issues 24 to 29 by holding that 8A/1 and 2nd Defendant-Appellants have in fact prescribed to Lot A1 in Y1." This Court takes serious note of this conduct, which cannot be condoned under any circumstances and this Court is strongly of the view that judges should not resort to such conduct.

It appears to me that the learned High Court Judges have failed in their duty to consider the respective cases of both the Plaintiff and the relevant Defendants. However, the only issue that this Court has to consider is whether the said Defendants have prescribed to the corpus of A1.

Aggrieved by the said judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court the Plaintiff appealed to this Court seeking relief. The Plaintiff however did not wish to challenge the decisions of the District Court and High Court with regard to the identification of the corpus.

On 09.03.2018 Leave to Appeal was granted on questions of law referred to in sub paragraphs (iii), (iv) and (v) in paragraph 17 of the petition dated 23.11.2016, which are as follows;

(iii) Whether their Lordship the High Court Judges of Civil Appeal had misdirected themselves by deciding the said Bantis acquired prescriptive title to the subject matter as against the rest of the co-owners?

(iv) Whether their Lordship the High Court Judges of Civil Appeal had erred in law by failing to appreciate the fact that the 1,2, and 8A respondents have not placed any cogent evidence to establish act of ouster which enables the said Bantis to claim prescriptive title against the fellow co-owners?

(v) Whether their Lordship the High Court Judges of Civil Appeal had failed to appreciate the fact that in the absence of evidence to establish act of ouster the co-owner cannot seek prescriptive title against the other co-owners merely relying on exclusive possession?

At the outset the Counsel for the relevant Defendants submitted that the High Court had correctly found that the Plaintiff had not proved title to the corpus and as such no question of co-ownership arises. The observation made by the High Court was that based on the evidence before it, the relevant Defendants have proved title independent of the Plaintiff. It is argued that since there is no question of law raised with regard to the finding that the Plaintiff was not a co-owner, the other questions of law cannot arise.

However, on the perusal of the questions of law for which leave had been granted, it cannot be denied that the appeal is based on the assumption that the parties are co-owners and that the Plaintiff has impliedly contested the finding that the relevant Defendants have proved title independent to the Plaintiff.

In fact, the parties have based their submissions on the issue of whether they, co-owners of the land sought to be partitioned and whether the 8th Respondent, Bantis, acquired prescriptive title to the subject matter as against the rest of the co-owners. Therefore, the contesting point made on behalf of the relevant Defendants regarding the futility of the questions of law raised in this appeal cannot stand.

Co-ownership

The relevant Defendants submit that in order for a question of prescription against co-owners to arise, it must be established that the Plaintiff is a co-owner. It is argued that the Counsel for the Plaintiff did not point to any evidence that the Plaintiff is a co-owner of the corpus while the relevant Defendants have proved title independently of the Plaintiff on the basis of a deed from the year 1894 which is the oldest source deed provided in evidence.

The relevant Defendants have based their title to the corpus on Deed No. 12571 dated 13th March 1894 (marked 1V1) and seven other deeds (1V2-1V8) which convey the rights acquired by '1V1'.

The 1st /8A Defendant stated in evidence that the original owner of the corpus one Mathes alias Jando transferred an undivided 1/8th share of the corpus to one Sinnachcho. On Sinnachcho's death her rights devolved on her five children, Juanis, Carolina, Jamis, Ranso and Babunhamy. All five children by individual deeds sold their shares to Lankapurage Rosinahami, the 8A Defendant who was added as a party on the death of her spouse the 8th Defendant and is the mother of the present appeal's 1st /8A and 2nd Defendants [present Appellants].

Accordingly, Juanis and Carolina by Deed No. 13114 dated 2nd July 1974 (marked 1V2), Jamis by Deed No. 3053 dated 13th November 1974 (1V3) and Ranso by Deed No. 3004 dated 19th July 1974 (1V4), transferred their shares to the 8A Defendant. Babunhamy transferred her share to her sibling Jamis by Deed No. 6528 dated 31st May 1952 (1V5) which the said Jamis transferred to the 8A Defendant [Rosinahamy] by Deed No. 8780 dated 19th August 1958 (1V6).

In the statement of claim, it is mentioned that Rosinahamy, the 8A Defendant gifted her rights to the corpus to her two children the 1st/8A Defendant Albert by Deed No. 22170 dated 4th May 1985 (1V8), and the 2nd Defendant Chitralatha by Deed No. 22171 dated 4th May 1985 (2V1). It is submitted that they have accordingly proved title under Deed No. 12571 independently from the Plaintiff.

The primary deed on which the Plaintiff has based her claim to the corpus is deed No. 12572. According to the pedigree disclosed by the Plantiff an undivided 1/3 share of the corpus was transferred by the said original owner Mathes by Deed No. 12572 dated 13th March 1894 to one Saudiris who had conveyed the same share by Deed No. 15144 dated 22nd January 1940 (marked as P2) to one Ransohamy, the Plaintiff's mother. The rights of Ransohamy had on her death devolved on her six children, namely, the Plaintiff, the 3rd to 5th Defendants, Karunawathie and Sisilawathie. The rights of Karunawathie devolved on her siblings, while the rights of Sisilawathie had on her death passed onto her husband the 6th Defendant.

The Plaintiff in lieu of deed No. 12572 produced 'P1', a Letter issued by the Land Registry stating that the deed has perished. The document marked 'P1' does not contain any description of what the deed contained and all evidence led as to its contents were from the Plaintiff herself.

Thus, the relevant Defendants assert that there is no valid primary or secondary evidence led with regard to this deed and the extent transferred to the Plaintiff's predecessors. In order to substantiate this argument, the relevant Defendants have highlighted the admission made by the Plaintiff when being cross-examined that she did not know the contents of the deed nor the extent of rights transferred from the original owner Mathes to her predecessor Saudiris (vide page 160-161 of the Brief) as well as the Plaintiff's observation that the size of the land in deed No. 12752 was larger than the size of the land in deed No. 15144 and deed No. 12751.

On this basis the relevant Defendants take up the position that the Plaintiff has not sufficiently proved that she has title over the corpus and therefore has no basis to claim co-ownership.

The Plaintiff asserts the fact that the parties to the action are co-owners of the property sought to be partitioned by indicating that during cross-examination the 1st/8A Defendant specifically admitted the title of the Plaintiff to the corpus as set out in the pedigree (vide page 261 of the Brief). Furthermore, the Plaintiff notes that in the relevant Defendants statement of claim dated 31st January 1997, they claim rights under another individual, one Theberis and admit the fact that Theberis too had undivided rights to the corpus, which indicates that even the portion of land to which they claim prescriptive title is undivided. Therefore, on behalf of the Plaintiff it is argued that the relevant Defendants have conceded the co-owned rights of the parties to the land sought to be partitioned.

In this instance it is noteworthy that when being cross-examined, 1st/ 8A Defendants did admit to the fact that he is a co-owner to the corpus (vide page 255 of the Brief). The 1st/8A Defendants also admitted that Saudiris received rights under deed No. 12571 and that the Plaintiff received rights devolving from the original owner Mathes (at page 262 of the Brief).

The 1st /8A Defendants also accepted that by deed No. 15144 Saudiris transferred rights to Ransohamy which then devolved on her six children including the Plaintiff. The argument made in that instance was that the Plaintiff was not entitled to the land as those rights were never exercised by the Plaintiff nor her predecessor Ransohamy (at page 264 of the Brief). Furthermore the 1st /8A and 2nd Defendants had in their statement of claim dated 31st January 1997 in paragraph 23 stated that the two deeds Nos. 12572 and 15144 referred to above on which the Plaintiff's mother had acquired rights had never been acted upon. As such the relevant Defendants have not denied the two deeds and only state that they had not been acted upon.

Despite the fact that deed No. 12571 was not produced as evidence due to its unavailability, deed No. 15144 (marked 'P2') by which Saudiris conveys his rights to the corpus, to the Plaintiff's mother Rensohamy, describes deed No. 12571. The validity of deed No. 15144 which is a legally executed document cannot be denied. Therefore, the devolution of title as set out by the Plaintiff cannot be disregarded and the inference that can be drawn is that Saudiris had gifted the undivided rights he received with respect to the corpus, under deed No. 12751 to Rensohamy by way of deed No. 15144.

Prescriptive title

The Plaintiff's pedigree is based on three deeds, deeds No. 12571, 12572, 12573 all dated 13th March 1894.

According to the Plaintiff, the original owner also conveyed an undivided 13/24 share of the corpus to one Theberis by Deed No. 12573 dated 13th March 1894. This deed has not been produced and instead a letter issued by the Land Registry indicating that it has been decayed was submitted as evidence (marked 7V1).

As per the Plaintiff's pedigree, Theberis had then by Deed No. 13705 dated 24th February 1919 (7V2) sold a 15/48 share to Lankapurage Juanis who then conveyed this share to Hikkaduwage Ijo under Deed No. 10328 dated 4th July 1919 (7V3). The said Ijo was married to Theberis and together they had an undivided 13/24 share. They had 6 children, the 7th Defendant Francina, the 8th Defendant Bantis, Siyadoris, Sampy, Aminona, and Danister and on their deaths their rights devolved on their six heirs. The shares of Sampy, Aminona, and Danister who died unmarried and issueless devolved on Siyadoris and the 7th and 8th Defendants. Siyadoris by Deed No. 12881 dated 13th November 1972 (1V7) conveyed his share to the 8A Defendant Lankapurage Rosinahami.

The relevant Defendants in their statement of claim assert that although Theberis and Ijo had a 26/48 share (13/24 in the Plaint), they possessed a 42/48 share of the corpus and acquired prescriptive title to it. They further assert that on the death of Theberis and Ijo their rights were only enjoyed by one of their children, the 8th Defendant Bantis and that Bantis had prior to the institution of this action enjoyed undisturbed, uninterrupted and adverse possession of that undivided 42/48 share for more than 10 years thus acquiring prescriptive title. Accordingly on the death of the 8th Defendant it is argued that this share should devolve on his heirs, his widow Rosinahami (8A Defendant), and his children the 1st/ 8A Defendant and 2nd Defendant.

The relevant Defendants in their statement of claim assert that although Theberis and Ijo had a 26/48 share (13/24 in the Plaint), they possessed a 42/48 share of the corpus and acquired prescriptive title to it. They further assert that on the death of Thebris and Ijo their rights were only enjoyed by one of their children, the 8th Defendant Bantis and that Bantis had prior to the institution of this action enjoyed undisturbed, uninterrupted, and adverse possession of that undivided 42/48 share for more than 10 years thus acquiring prescriptive title. Accordingly on the death of the 8th Defendant it is argued that this share should devolve on his heirs, his widow Rosinahami (8A Defendant), and his children the 1st/8A Defendant and 2nd Defendant.

Based on the rights acquired under Sinnachcho and Theberis the relevant Defendants have claimed that the 1st/8A Defendant and 2nd Defendant are each entitled to a 3/48 share of the corpus while the 8A Defendant (now deceased) is entitled to a 42/48 share of the corpus (vide paragraph 21 of the statement of claim marked 'P5').

In light of this claim, the three questions of law above, namely (1) whether the Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal had misdirected themselves by deciding the said Bantis acquired prescriptive title to the subject matter, (2) had failed to appreciate that in the absence of evidence to establish act of ouster the co-owner cannot seek prescriptive title against the other co-owners merely relying on exclusive possession, and (3) that the 1, 2, and 8A Defendants have not placed any cogent evidence to establish act of ouster which enables the said Bantis to claim prescriptive title against the fellow co-owners, can be addressed in toto.

It is the Plaintiff's contention that the relevant Defendants have only established possession of the property and have failed to establish any overt act of ouster and have therefore failed to prove that Bantis (8th Defendant) acquired prescriptive title to a 42/48 share of the corpus. It is further submitted that the High Court has failed to establish an act of ouster and has solely decided the matter based on the purported exclusive possession claimed by the relevant Defendants.

The relevant Defendants' position is that this is clearly a case in which the counter-presumption of ouster applies and that based on the evidence placed before court they have sufficiently proved that they have prescriptive rights over the corpus.

The fundamental principle recognized by our law is that the possession of one co-owner is the possession of the other co-owners as well. In light of this principle, it is pertinent to touch upon the law of prescription in relation to co-owners.

Our Prescription Ordinance is said to constitute a complete code on the subject of prescription. As per Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, No. 22 of 1871 as amended, in order to establish prescriptive title, there must be, "Proof of the undisturbed and uninterrupted possession by a defendant in any action, or by those under whom he claims, of lands or immovable property, by a title adverse to or independent of that of the claimant or plaintiff in such action…"

According to the leading case of Corea v. Appuhamy (1911) 15 NLR 65, in which Their Lordships of the Privy Council discussed the principles relating to prescription among co-owners;

"It is settled law that a co-owner's possession is in law the possession of all other co-owners. It is not possible for him to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of an ouster or something equivalent to ouster could bring about that result."

This means that a co-owner cannot prescribe against other co-owners unless he has actually ousted them or has by some overt act intimated to them that he is no longer possessing on their behalf but is possessing adversely to them. Thus, the co-owner claiming prescriptive possession must prove that there has been an act of ouster prior to the running of prescription.

In light of this section, the question that arises with respect to exclusive possession of the common property by one co-owner for a long period of time is whether such possession was 'adverse' and if so at what point it became so.

In Tillekeratne v. Bastian (1918) 21 NLR 12 at p. 18, Bertram C.J. examining the real effect of the decision in Corea v. Appuhamy (supra) upon the interpretation of the word "adverse" in Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance with reference to cases of co-ownership, observed that the word must be interpreted in light of 3 principles of law;

"(i) Every co-owner having a right to possess and enjoy the whole property and every part of it, the possession of one co-owner in that capacity is in law the possession of all.

(ii) Where the circumstances are such that a man's possession may be referable either to an unlawful act or to a lawful title, he is presumed to possess by virtue of the lawful title.

(iii) A person who has entered into possession of land in one capacity is presumed to continue to possess it in the same capacity."

In the context of co-owners, this means that generally a co-owner cannot establish prescriptive title against other co-owners. Thus, whenever a co-owner whose possession of the common property was not at its inception adverse, later claims that it has become adverse, the onus is on him to prove it. He must not only prove an intention on his part to possess adversely, but a manifestation of that intention to the other co-owners against whom he sets up his possession. Therefore, he must prove an "overt unequivocal act" of ouster.

However, in Tillekeratne v. Bastian (supra) at p. 20 it was also observed that if these presumptions of law are accepted without qualification it could lead to a conclusion that is artificial and contrary to common sense;

"If it is found that one co-owner and his predecessors in interest have been in possession of the whole property for a period as far back as reasonable memory reaches; that he and they have done nothing to recognize the claims of the other co- owners; that he and they have taken the whole produce of the property for themselves; and that these co-owners have never done anything to assert a claim to any share of the produce, it is artificial in the highest degree to say that person and his predecessors in interest must be presumed to be possessing all this time in the capacity of co-owners, and that they can never be regarded as having possessed adversely, simply because no definite positive act can be pointed to as originating or demonstrating the adverse possession." (Emphasis added)

In cases where principles of law would lead to such an artificial result the law has developed a counter- presumption, that is to say a "presumption of ouster". In Tillekeratne v. Bastian (supra) Bertram C.J. succinctly stated the principle as follows;

"it is a question of fact, wherever long-continued exclusive possession by one co-owner is proved to have existed, whether it is not just and reasonable in all the circumstances of the case that the parties should be treated as though it had been proved that that separate and exclusive possession had become adverse at some date more than ten years before action brought."

Further the Court held at p. 23

"it is open to the Court, from lapse of time in conjunction with the circumstances of the case, to presume that a possession originally that of a co-owner has since become adverse."

In Angela Fernando v. Devadeepthi Fernando and Others, (2006) 2 Sri L.R 188 Weerasuriya J., observed that;

"Ouster does not necessarily involve the actual application of force. The presumption of ouster is drawn in certain circumstances when exclusive possession has been so long continued that it is not reasonable to call upon the party who relies on it to adduce evidence that at a specific point of time in the distant past there was in fact a denial of the rights of the other co-owners."

Thus, the presumption of ouster is an exception to the general rule which can be invoked when there are special circumstances in addition to the fact of undisturbed and uninterrupted possession for the requisite period of 10 years.

In support of the contention that the presumption of ouster would apply to present case, the following reasons were expounded on behalf of the relevant Defendants;

1) Long and continuous possession;

The relevant Defendants submit that the 8th Defendant, his parents and his family, have been in possession of the land for a long period of time and that there is no evidence of anyone else having ever possessed the land (vide page 212 of the Brief).

The 1st / 8A Defendant giving evidence stated that his family took up residence on the land sought to be partitioned in 1947. However, he stated that he was residing in Ja-ela during the time of the trial and that his daughter was residing on the land. He further stated that his mother Rosinahami, the 8A Defendant had resided on the land from 1947 until her death in 2002.

The Plaintiff giving evidence on 25th March 2002 admitted that she moved to the area in which the land is situated 40 years ago but gave no evidence of having made any claims to the land at that time. The Plaintiff also admitted that the corpus was the ancestral property of the 8th Defendant and that apart the family of the 8th Defendant no one else resided on the land (at page 154 of the Brief). In fact, the Plaintiff led no evidence to show that her ancestors possessed the land.

The Plaintiff denying the exclusive possession of the corpus by the 1st /8A and 2nd Defendants and their predecessors, claimed that her predecessors in title namely Rensohami and Saudiris exercised their rights to the land and that Rensohami had plucked fruits from the land. She further claimed that they were not allowed to enter the land after the action was filed.

Furthermore, the relevant Defendants state that the paddy field and owita portion depicted as Lot A2 and B in Plan Y1 were excluded from the corpus by both the District Court and High Court on the ground that they had been exclusively possessed by the 1st/8A and 2nd Defendant and their predecessors in title, consequently acquiring prescriptive title thereto. It is argued that from a logical perspective those who cultivated the paddy and owita portion would have naturally first resided on the highland and then begun such cultivation.

With respect to Lots A2 and B in Plan Y1 called "Rathmehera Delgahawatte Owita saha Kumbura" the 1st/8A Defendant claimed that his father the 8th Defendant cultivated the land with paddy and vegetables and was in possession of it till his death at the age of 90 in 1992. The 1st /8A Defendant also claimed that on his father's death, he came into possession of that portion of land and after having left the area to take up residence in Katunayake, he came to inspect that portion at least once a month. It is argued that the paddy and owita portion was a necessary adjunct of the highland portion and the fact that they were excluded from the corpus further established the fact that unless the 1st/8A and 2nd Defendants and their predecessors exclusively possessed the highland as their ancestral property they could not have acquired prescriptive title to the paddy and owita portion (Lots A2 and B of Plan Y1). Thus, the relevant Defendants argue that their long, continuous possession of the corpus has been established.

2) No claim to the improvements and plantations;

Apart from the relevant Defendants, neither the Plaintiff nor the other Defendants had any claim to the improvements and plantations on the corpus.

According to the Surveyor's Reports marked X1 and Y3, Lot A1 consists of a house marked No.01, a kitchen marked No. 02, a latrine marked No.3, and two wells marked No. 4 and No. 5 which were all exclusively claimed by the 1st/8A Defendant without any dispute.

The Plaintiff had only claimed that the plantations which are older the 75 years and that too was not for herself but as belonging the soil. The relevant Defendants argue that the inference that can be drawn from the fact that the Plaintiff makes no claim with respect to the plantations which are less than 75 years is that neither she nor her predecessors in title have been in possession of the corpus for that long.

The District Court categorically rejected the Plaintiff's claim to the plantations and held that all the improvements and plantations on the corpus A1 belonged to the 1st/8A and 8th Defendants based on the evidence that they were located on the land (A1) which the 8th Defendant and his family possessed, resided on and cultivated for an extended duration of time. It is also noteworthy that this finding was not appealed against by the Plaintiff or the other Defendants to the High Court. Thus, having made no claims to any cultivation on the land for least 75 years, it is argued that it is hugely artificial for the Plaintiff to claim that the relevant Defendants had been in possession of the land in the capacity of co-owners.

3) Payment of assessment rates

The relevant Defendants have proved with documentary evidence that the 1st/8A and 8th Defendants have paid assessment rates over the property since 1961 (at page 217-220 of Brief) (1v9-1v41 at pages 411-447). The Galle Municipal Council has charged municipal council rates in respect of the premises of No. 65 (old)/No. 63 (new) Pagngnaloka Mawatha, Welipitmodara, Ginthota. Thus, the relevant Defendants argue that the Municipal council had recognized that the 1st /8A Defendant and his father the 8th Defendant were in exclusive occupation of the highland portion on which their ancestral house stood and the entire premises was assigned a number with reference to the road that ran on the South-Eastern boundary of the corpus. It is submitted that it would be highly artificial to hold that these relevant Defendants alone have paid assessment rates to the Municipal Council for such a long period of time while possessing the land in the capacity of co-owners.

As was reiterated earlier, the settled law is that the possession of one co-owner is in law the possession of the other co-owners. Therefore, the question that arises in this case is whether from the uninterrupted sole possession of the 8th Defendant and his predecessors in title, extending over a number of years and the conduct of the other co-owners in not asserting any right to possess, a presumption of ouster by the 8th Defendant and his predecessors can be invoked and the commencement of adverse possession by them can be presumed.

Whether the presumption of ouster is to be drawn or not would depend on the circumstances of the case. It was held in Abdul Majeed v. Ummu Zaneera 61 NLR 361 at page 381,

"that proof of such additional circumstances has been regarded in our courts as a sine qua non where a co-owner sought to invoke the presumption of ouster."

On the perusal of the evidence submitted on behalf of the relevant Defendants it appears that their claim is fundamentally based on the assertion that they as well as their predecessors in title were the only individuals who had undisturbed, uninterrupted possession of the property and that too since the execution of the source deeds by the original owner Mathes alias Jando in 1894.

The High Court based its finding that the relevant Defendants had acquired prescriptive title to the corpus on the same arguments made on behalf of the relevant Defendants in this appeal. While holding that the Plaintiff had failed to establish title to the corpus and was therefore not a co-owner, the Court observed that in any event the 1st/8A, 2nd and 8th Defendants had acquired prescriptive title to the corpus on the basis that they had sole, exclusive possession of the corpus, they owned all the plantations and improvements on the corpus, they had paid the assessment rates and also due to the inference that they could only have acquired prescriptive title to Lots A2 and B if and only if their forefathers had exclusively possessed Lot A1 prior to that.

Whether these circumstances are of a compelling character to support a finding as to ouster must be weighed against the arguments made on behalf of the Plaintiff.

It is the contention of the Plaintiff that the relevant Defendants conceded the co-ownership of the property. It is argued that the rights of Theberis and Ijo, the parents of the 8th Defendant did not devolve on the 8th Defendant alone but also on his 5 siblings namely, Francina the 7th Defendant, Siyadoris, Sampy, Aminona and Danister. According to the Appellant, Sampy, Aminona and Danister's rights devolved on their deaths to Siyadoris, Francina (7th Defendant) and Bantis (8th Defendant).

In order to bring into question, the claim that the rights of Theberis and Ijo devolved only on the 8th Defendant, the Plaintiff makes reference to Deed No. 12881 (1V7) and Deed No. 22170 dated 4th May 1985 (1V8). In the deed marked 1V8, a deed of gift Rosinahamy executed in favour 1st Defendant Aluthgamage Albert, it is stated that she was transferring rights she had received from Siyadoris under deed No. 12881 (1V7) which the 1st/8A Defendant admitted to during cross-examination (at page 249).

Furthermore the 1st /8A Defendant admitted that his mother Rosinahami received rights under the deed marked '1V7' from a child of Theberis (pages 252-253 of the Brief) and when asked whether that meant Theberis' rights went to his children the 1st /8A Defendant stated that these children never possessed the land, that they had a claim but asked for money and that those rights were purchased by Rosinahami.

The Plaintiff has made reference to this chain of devolution in order to claim that the 7th Defendant thus had rights to the corpus and to prove that the 8th Defendant was not the sole recipient of the share of Theberis and Ijo. However, the relevant Defendants argue that this submission holds no weight as the 7th Defendant has not disputed against the Judgment of the High Court and had not made any claim to any of the improvements or plantations on the corpus.

The Plaintiff also argue that as evidenced by Deeds marked '1V2' dated 2nd July 1974 and '1V8' dated 4th May 1984, which is a century after 1894, the relevant Defendants have acted conceding the co-ownership of the parties.

Based on the evidence submitted to court, there can be no doubt that the 8th Defendant and his family had been in exclusive possession of Lot A1 in Plan Y1. As stated by the Plaintiff, she had never resided on the land but had resided in an area close to the land. The inference that can be drawn from this admission is that she must have been aware of the fact that the relevant Defendants were residing on the corpus, had constructed buildings and cultivated the land. It was even claimed by the Plaintiff that the highland was the ancestral land of the 8th Defendant. Such an admission would weigh heavily in favour of the assertion that the relevant Defendants were possessing the land as if they were the sole owners of it. Furthermore, on perusal of the caption to the plaint it appears that the Sri Pagngnaloka Mawatha Welipitmodara, Ginthota address has only been assigned to the 1st, 2nd and 8 and 8A Defendants and every other Defendant and the Plaintiff have not used this address.

In Mailvaganam v. Kandaiya (1915) 1 C.W.R. 175 de Samapayo J stated;

"There is no physical disturbance of possession necessary. It is sufficient if one co-owner has, to the knowledge of the others, taken the land for himself and begun to possess it as his own exclusively. This sole possession is often attributable to an express or tacit division of family property among co-owners, and the adverse character of exclusive possession may be inferred from circumstances."

The claim made by the relevant Defendants is that their predecessor the 8th Defendant had acquired prescriptive title to an undivided 42/48 share of the corpus. Theberis and Ijo had been entitled to a 26/48 undivided share of the property but according to the relevant Defendants they had been in possession of a 42/48 share of it which the 1st /8A Defendant failed to provide a proper explanation for.

Although long continued possession can be established it is necessary to take into consideration the circumstances that are quite distinct from the mere duration of possession which would warrant the application of the presumption of ouster. Evidence indicates that Lot A1 with its improvements and plantations was maintained as the place of residence of the 8th Defendant and his family. However, it is difficult to identify specific facts from which one could legitimately infer a change in the nature of the possessor's intention with regard to the holding of the land as in order to establish prescriptive title, the circumstances must indicate that separate and exclusive possession had become adverse at some date more than ten years before the bringing of the action.

The fact that the plantations on the corpus were held to be exclusively owned by the relevant Defendants does not substantiate the assertion that they were not in possession of the corpus as co-owners. Our authorities show that where a plantation has been made by a co-owner on the common land with the express or implied consent of the other co-owners, the co-owner making the plantation is entitled to possess the whole of the plantation until the rights of the parties are finally determined in a partition action (Arnolis Singho v. Mary Nona (1946) 47 NLR 564, Peeris v. Appuhamy (1947) 48 NLR 344). There is no evidence indicating an objection on the part of the other co-owners to the cultivation of the common property and in fact during the survey of the land it was noted that the Plaintiff's claim that several plantations belonged to the soil was not on the basis that they were made without their consent but on the ground that they were made by their predecessors. Furthermore, it is settled law that a co-owner who makes a plantation is entitled exclusively to the fruits of it. This was observed in the case of Podi Sinno v. Alwis (1926) 28 NLR 401 where it was held that,

"It is the invariable custom of the country for every co-owner who effects improvements in the way of permanent plantations on a common land alone to possess such plantation and the fruits of such plantations."

Therefore, taking into consideration the general rights of co-owners to cultivate a co-owned land it is difficult to draw an inference that the relevant Defendants' ownership of the plantations is necessarily an attribute of the sole ownership of the corpus. Furthermore, the payment of assessment rates by a co-owner in possession is not an act unexpected of a co-owner and cannot be considered as a factor that would prove adverse possession.

Therefore, based on the evidence adduced by the relevant Defendants it cannot be said that there is proof of circumstances from which a reasonable inference could be drawn that such possession had become adverse at some date ten years before the action was brought and would justify the Court in presuming an ouster. Thus, the questions of law can be answered in the affirmative.

Conclusion

In view of the aforementioned reasons, I answer the questions of law as follows;

(iii) Whether their Lordship the High Court Judges of Civil Appeal had misdirected themselves by deciding the said Bantis acquired prescriptive title to the subject matter as against the rest of the co-owners?

Yes

(iv) Whether their Lordship the High Court Judges of Civil Appeal had erred in law by failing to appreciate the fact that the 1,2, and 8A respondents have not placed any cogent evidence to establish act of ouster which enables the said Bantis to claim prescriptive title against the fellow co-owners?

Yes

(v) Whether their Lordship the High Court Judges of Civil Appeal had failed to appreciate the fact that in the absence of evidence to establish act of ouster the co-owner cannot seek prescriptive title against the other co-owners merely relying on exclusive possession?

Yes

Accordingly, the judgement of the High Court of Civil Appeals dated 13.10.2016 is hereby set-aside and the judgement of the District Court dated 2nd April 2009 is affirmed

Introduction

The plaintiff (Bank of Ceylon) filed this action in the District Court of Badulla seeking declaration of title to, ejectment of the defendant from, the land described in the second schedule to the plaint, and damages. The defendant filed answer seeking dismissal of the plaintiff's action. After trial, the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal of Badulla affirmed the judgment of the District Court. Hence this appeal by the plaintiff.

This Court granted leave to appeal against the judgment of the High Court on three questions suggested by the plaintiff (1st to 3rd below) and one suggested by the defendant (4th below). They read as follows:

(1) Did the High Court make a fundamental error in construing the nature of the action in view of the fact that the defendant not having claimed adverse title against the plaintiff?
(2) Did the High Court err with regard to standard of proof in an action for declaration of title when the defendant does not set up adverse title as against the plaintiff?
(3) Did the High Court err in the assessment of the title deed P1 produced at the trial?
(4) Can the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action prove title by mere production of his title deed without predecessor's title being proved as in this action?

There is no issue regarding the identification of the land/premises in suit. No such issue was ever raised in the District Court. Therefore this Court cannot be misled by making submissions on the identification of the land.

The simple case for the plaintiff is that the plaintiff is the owner of the land by deed of transfer marked P1 at the trial and the defendant is in unlawful occupation of the land. He is a trespasser. The deed P1 was not marked subject to proof. The plaintiff did not think it necessary to prove the devolution of title, and rightly so. This is not a partition case to prove the pedigree. The defendant never claimed ownership of the property by deed or by prescription or any other mode. His position was that he occupied the premises in suit as an employee of Browns & Co. on payment of rent and Brown & Co. was closed down on 22.11.1994 and from that day he is not an employee of that company. He further admits that he is in unlawful occupation of the premises since 22.12.1994. He has been paid compensation for the termination of his employment by his former employer and thereafter that amount has been enhanced by the Labour Tribunal. It is clear that he thinks the compensation awarded was inadequate. This is the evidence of the defendant in that regard:

(pages 71-72 of the appeal brief)

In my view, this should end the matter. But unfortunately, the District Court thought that the plaintiff did not prove his title in the manner a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action ought to have proved. What is this standard of proof the District Court expected from the plaintiff and on what basis? The District Court states that the mere production of the title deed of the plaintiff is not sufficient but the plaintiff shall prove his predecessors' title as well. In other words, the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action shall prove the chain of title as in a partition case. In elaborating the basis for this very high standard, citing Pathirana v. Jayasundera (1955) 58 NLR 169, the District Judge states that, since a rei vindicatio action is filed against the whole world, the plaintiff shall prove title to the property strictly. This is what the District Judge states: "පතිරණ එදිරිව ජයසුන්දර නඩුවේ (58 නව නීති වාර්තා 169) එච්.එන්.ජී ප්‍රනාන්දු විනිසුරුතුමා දැන්වූයේ රේවින්ඩිකාටියෝ නඩුවක පැමිණිල්ල හිමිකම සම්බන්ධ තදබල ලෙස ඔප්පු කළ යුතු බවයි. එමෙන්ම එම නඩුවේදී ග්‍රේෂන් විනිසුරුතුමා දැන්වූයේ රේවින්ඩිකාටියෝ නඩුවක් ලෝකයටම එරෙහිව නිසා හිමිකම් තදබල ලෙස ඔප්පු කළ යුතු බවයි". In reference to the defendant's evidence quoted above, citing Wanigaratne v. Juwanis Appuhamy (1962) 65 NLR 167, the District Judge states that, in a rei vindicatio action, the defendant's evidence can never be used to support the plaintiff's case. The High Court affirmed these findings unhesitatingly. I must state that those findings are misconceived in law. In summary, the correct position is as follows:

(a) A rei vindicatio action is not an action filed against the whole world. In modern law, rei vindicatio action is an action in personam and not an action in rem in the popular sense.

(b) In a rei vindicatio action, the plaintiff needs only to prove his case on a balance of probabilities, and no higher degree of proof is required.
(c) If there is no challenge, in a rei vindicatio action, the mere production of the title deed is sufficient to prove title to the property.
(d) The Court can consider the defendant's evidence in a rei vindicatio action.

Let me elaborate on these matters in greater detail.

Burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action

The burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is overwhelmingly shrouded in misconceptions and misconstructions.

In order to succeed in a rei vindicatio action, first and foremost, the plaintiff shall prove his ownership to the property. If he fails to prove it, his action shall fail. This principle is based on the Latin maxim "onus probandi incumbit ei qui agit", which means, the burden of proof lies with the person who brings the action. Section 101 of the Evidence Ordinance is also to a similar effect.

Macdonell C.J. in De Silva v. Goonetilleke (1960) 32 NLR 217 at 219 stated:

> There is abundant authority that a party claiming a declaration of title must have title himself. "To bring the action rei vindicatio plaintiff must have ownership actually vested in him". (1 Nathan p. 362, s. 593.) ... The authorities unite in holding that plaintiff must show title to the corpus in dispute and that if he cannot, the action will not lie.

In Pathirana v. Jayasundera (1955) 58 NLR 169 at 172, Gratiaen J. declared:

> "The plaintiff's ownership of the thing is of the very essence of the action." Maasdorp's Institutes (7th Ed.) Vol. 2, 96.

In Mansil v. Devaya [1985] 2 Sri LR 46, G.P.S. De Silva J. (later C.J.) stated at 51:

> In a rei vindicatio action, on the other hand, ownership is of the essence of the action; the action is founded on ownership.

In Latheef v. Mansoor [2010] 2 Sri LR 333 at 352, Marsoof J. held:

> An important feature of the actio rei vindicatio is that it has to necessarily fail if the plaintiff cannot clearly establish his title.

Having said the above, it needs to be emphasised that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action has no heavier burden to discharge than a plaintiff in any other civil action. The standard of proof in a rei vindicatio action is on a balance of probabilities.

Professor George Wille, in his monumental work Wille's Principles of South African Law, 9th Edition (2007), states at page 539:

> To succeed with the rei vindicatio, the owner must prove on a balance of probabilities, first, his or her ownership in the property. If a movable is sought to be recovered, the owner must rebut the presumption that the possessor of the movable is the owner thereof. In the case of immovables, it is sufficient as a rule to show that title in the land is registered in his or her name. Secondly, the property must exist, be clearly identifiable and must not have been destroyed or consumed. Money, in the form of coins and banknotes, is not easily identifiable and thus not easily vindicable. Thirdly, the > defendant must be in possession or detention of the thing at the moment the action is instituted. The rationale is to ensure that the defendant is in a position to comply with an order for restoration.

In Preethi Anura v. William Silva (SC/APPEAL/116/2014, SC Minutes of 05.06.2017), the plaintiff filed a rei vindicatio action against the defendant seeking a declaration of title to the land in suit and the ejectment of the defendant therefrom. The District Court held with the plaintiff but the High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court on the basis that the plaintiff failed to prove title of the land. The plaintiff's title commenced with a statutory determination made under section 19 of the Land Reform Law in favour of his grandmother, who had bequeathed the land by way of a last will to the plaintiff, with the land being later conveyed to the plaintiff by way of an executor's conveyance. No documentary evidence was tendered to establish that the last will was proved in Court and admitted to probate in order to validate the said executor's conveyance. The District Court was satisfied that the said factors were proved by oral evidence but the High Court found the same insufficient to discharge the burden that rests upon a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action, which the High Court considered to be very heavy. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the High Court and restored the judgment of the District Court, taking the view that the plaintiff had proved title to the land despite the purported shortcomings. In the course of the judgment, Dep C.J. (with De Abrew J. and Jayawardena J. agreeing) remarked:

> In a rei vindicatio action, the plaintiff has to establish the title to the land. Plaintiff need not establish the title with mathematical precision nor to prove the case beyond reasonable doubt as in a criminal case. The plaintiff's task is to establish the case on a balance of probability. In a partition case the situation is different as > it is an action in rem and the trial judge is required to carefully examine the title and the devolution of title. This case being a rei vindicatio action this court has to consider whether the plaintiff discharged the burden on balance of probability.

What is the degree of proof expected when the standard of proof is on a balance of probabilities? This is better understood when proof on a balance of probabilities is compared with proof on beyond a reasonable doubt.

On proof beyond a reasonable doubt, in Miller v. Minister of Pensions [1947] 2 All ER 372, Lord Denning declared at 373:

> Proof beyond reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond the shadow of doubt. The law would fail to protect the community if it admitted fanciful possibilities to deflect the course of justice. If the evidence is so strong against a man as to leave only a remote possibility in his favour which can be dismissed with the sentence "of course it is possible, but not in the least probable," the case is proved beyond reasonable doubt, but nothing short of that will suffice.

In relation to proof on a balance of probabilities, it was stated at 374:

> That degree is well settled. It must carry a reasonable degree of probability, but not so high as is required in a criminal case. If the evidence is such that the tribunal can say: "We think it more probable than not," the burden is discharged, but, if the probabilities are equal, it is not.

In consideration of the degree of proof in a rei vindicatio action, we invariably refer to the seminal judgment of Pathirana v. Jayasundara (1955) 58 NLR 169. In that case the plaintiff sued the defendant on the basis that the defendant was an overholding lessee. The defendant admitted the bare execution of the lease but stated that the lessors were unable to give him possession of the land. He averred that the land was sold to him by its lawful owner (not one of the lessors) and that by adverse possession from that date he had acquired title by prescription. The plaintiff then sought to amend the plaint by claiming a declaration of title and ejectment on the footing that his rights of ownership had been violated. The Supreme Court held:

> A lessor of property who institutes action on the basis of a cause of action arising from a breach by the defendant of his contractual obligation as lessee is not entitled to amend his plaint subsequently so as to alter the nature of the proceeding to an action rei vindicatio if such a course would prevent or prejudice the setting up by the defendant of a plea of prescriptive title.

In the course of the judgment the Court distinguished an action for declaration of title (based on the contractual relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant) from an action rei vindicatio proper. In general terms, in both actions, a declaration of title is sought – in the former, as a matter of course, without strict proof of title, but in the latter, as a peremptory requirement, with strict proof of title. H.N.G. Fernando J. (later C.J.) at page 171 explained the distinction between the two in this way:

> There is however the further point that the plaintiff in his prayer sought not only ejectment but also a declaration of title, a prayer for which latter relief is probably unusual in an action against an overholding tenant. I have no doubt that it is open to a lessor in an action for ejectment to ask for a declaration of title, but the question of difficulty arises is whether the action thereby becomes a rei vindicatio for which strict proof of the plaintiff's title would be > required, or else is merely one for a declaration (without strict proof) of a title which the tenant by law precluded from denying. If the essential element of a rei vindicatio is that the right of ownership must be strictly proved, it is difficult to accept the proposition that an action in which the plaintiff can automatically obtain a declaration of title through the operation of a rule in estoppel should be regarded as a vindicatory action. The fact that the person in possession of property originally held as lessee would not preclude the lessor-owner from choosing to proceed against him by a rei vindicatio. But this choice can I think be properly exercised only by clearly setting out the claim of title and sounding in delict.

The term "strict proof of the plaintiff's title" used here does not mean that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action shall prove title beyond a reasonable doubt or a very high degree of proof. The term "strict proof of the plaintiff's title" was used here to distinguish the standard of proof between a declaration of title action based on a contractual relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant such as lessor and lessee, and a rei vindicatio action proper based on ownership of the property. In a rei vindicatio action, if the plaintiff proves on a balance of probabilities that he is the owner, he must succeed.

Professor G.L. Peiris, in his treatise Law of Property in Sri Lanka, Vol I, makes it clear at page 304:

> It must be emphasized, however, that the observations in these cases to the effect that the plaintiff's title must be strictly proved in a rei vindicatio, cannot be accepted as containing the implication that a standard of exceptional stringency applies in this context. An extremely exacting standard is insisted upon in certain categories of action such as partition actions. … It is clear that a standard characterized by this degree of severity does not apply to the proof of a plaintiff's title in a rei vindicatory action.

(Justice) Dr. H.W. Tambiah opines in "Survey of Laws Controlling Ownership of Lands in Sri Lanka", Vol 2, International Property Investment Journal 217 at pages 243-244:

In a vindicatory action, the plaintiff must prove that he is the owner of the property which is in the possession of the defendant. See de Silva v. Gunathilleke, 32 N.L.R. 217 (1931); Abeykoon Hamine v. Appuhamy, 52 N.L.R. 49 (1951); Muthusamy v. Seneviratne, 31 C.L.W. 91 (1946). Once title is established, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that by adverse possession for a period of 10 years he has acquired prescriptive title. Siyaneris v. Udenis de Silva, 52 N.L.R. 289 (1951). In rei vindicatory action once the plaintiff proves he was in possession but then he was evicted by the defendant, the burden of proving title will shift to the defendant. In Kathiramathamby v. Arumugam 38 C.L.W. 27 (1948) it was held that if the plaintiff alleges that he was forcibly ousted by the defendant the burden of proving ouster remains with the complainant. As a practical matter, the burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is not burdensome. The plaintiff must prove only that he is the probable owner of the property.

The view of Dr. Tambiah "As a practical matter, the burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is not burdensome. The plaintiff must prove only that he is the probable owner of the property" shall be understood in the context of his view expressed at the outset that "In a vindicatory action, the plaintiff must prove that he is the owner of the property which is in the possession of the defendant."

The recent South African case of Huawei Technologies South Africa (Pty) Limited v. Redefine Properties Limited and Another [2018] ZAGPJHC 403 decided on 29.05.2018 reveals that the burden of proof of a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action is not unusually onerous. In this case it was held that what the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action needs to prove is that he is the owner of the property (which the Court stated could be done by producing his title deed) and that the defendant is holding or in possession of the property. Once this is done, the onus shifts to the defendant to establish a right to continue to hold against the owner. Cele J. declared:

> The rei vindicatio is the common law real action for the protection of ownership. C.P. Smith, Eviction and Rental Claims: A Practical Guide at p. 1-2; Graham v. Ridley 1931 TPD 476; Chetty v Naidoo 1974 (3) SA 13 (A). It is inherent in the nature of ownership that possession of the res should normally be with the owner and it follows that no other person may withhold it from the owner unless he or she is vested with some right enforceable against the owner. The owner, in instituting a rei vindicatio, need do no more than allege and prove that he is the owner and that the defendant is holding or in possession of the res. The onus is on the Defendant to allege and establish a right to continue to hold against the owner. Chetty v. Naidoo (supra) at 20 A–E. A court does not have an equitable discretion to refuse an order for ejectment on the grounds of equity and fairness. Belmont House v. Gore NNO 2011 (6) SA 173 (WCC) at para [15]. In the case of eviction based on an owner's rei vindicatio, the owner has only to prove his ownership which can be done by producing his title deed indicating that the property is registered in his name. Goudini Chrome (Pty) Ltd v. MCC Contracts (Pty) Ltd [1999] ZASCA 208; 1993 (1) SA 77 (A) at 82 A–C.

The requirement of proof of chain of title which is the norm in a partition action is not applicable in a rei vindicatio action. If there is no challenge to the title deed of the plaintiff on specific grounds, the plaintiff can prove his ownership to the property by producing his title deed.

This view was expressed by Professor Wille (op. cit. at page 539) when he stated that "In the case of immovables, it is sufficient as a rule to show that title in the land is registered in his or her name."

When the standard of proof is on a balance of probabilities, the Court is entitled to consider whose version – the plaintiff's or the defendant's – is more probable.

Banda v. Soyza [1998] 1 Sri LR 255 is a rei vindicatio action filed by a trustee of a temple seeking a declaration of title, the ejectment of the defendant and damages. The Court of Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court and the plaintiff's action was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to establish title to the subject matter of the action or even to identify the land in suit. But the Supreme Court set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal and restored the judgment of the District Court on the basis that there was "sufficient evidence led on behalf of the plaintiff to prove the title and the identity of the lots in dispute." G.P.S. de Silva C.J. laid down at page 259 the criterion to be adopted in a rei vindicatio action in respect of the standard of proof in the following manner:

> In a case such as this, the true question that a court has to consider on the question of title is, who has the superior title? The answer has to be reached upon a consideration of the totality of the evidence led in the case.

Dr. H.W. Tambiah (op. cit. at p. 244) refers to proof of superior title by the defendant as a defence to a rei vindicatio action.

> In a vindicatory action, the defendant has numerous defenses, which include: denial of the plaintiff's title; establishment of his own title, in the sense of establishing a title superior to that of the plaintiff; prescription; a plea of res judicata; right of tenure under the plaintiff – for example usufruct, pledge or lease of land; the right to retain possession subject to an indemnity from the plaintiff under peculiar conditions; a plea of exception rei venditae et traditae; and, ius tertii.

The Full Bench of the Supreme Court in Jinawathie v. Emalin Perera [1986] 2 Sri LR 121 adverted to superior title and sufficient title and held that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action shall prove that he has title to the disputed property and that such title is superior to the title, if any, put forward by the defendant, or that he has sufficient title which he can vindicate against the defendant.

The plaintiff in Jinawathie's case filed a rei vindicatio action against the defendants relying upon a statutory determination made under section 19 of the Land Reform Law, No. 1 of 1972. The defendants sought the dismissal of the plaintiff's action on the basis that the alleged statutory determination did not convey any title on the plaintiff and that in the absence of the plaintiff demonstrating dominium over the land, the plaintiff's action shall fail. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeal held with the plaintiff and the Supreme Court affirmed it. Ranasinghe J. (later C.J.) with the agreement of Sharvananda C.J., Wanasundera J., Atukorale J., and Tambiah J., whilst emphasising that in a rei vindicatio action proper, the plaintiff's ownership of the land is of the very essence of the action, expressed the view of the Supreme Court in the following terms at page 142:

> This principle was re-affirmed once again by Gratiaen J. in the case of Palisena v. Perera (1954) 56 NLR 407 where the plaintiff came into court to vindicate his title based upon a permit issued under the provisions of the Land Development Ordinance (Chap. 320). In giving judgment for the plaintiff, Gratiaen, J. said: "a permit-holder who has complied with the conditions of his permit enjoys, during the period for which the permit is valid, a sufficient title which he can vindicate against a trespasser in civil proceedings. The fact that the alleged trespasser had prevented him from entering upon the land does not afford a defence to the action."

In a vindicatory action the plaintiff must himself have title to the property in dispute: the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that he has title to the disputed property, and that such title is superior to the title, if any, put forward by the defendant in occupation. The plaintiff can and must succeed only on the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of the defence.

On a consideration of the foregoing principles – relating to the legal concept of ownership, and to an action rei vindicatio – it seems to me that the plaintiff-respondent did, at the time of the institution of these proceedings, have, by virtue of P6 [statutory determination], "sufficient" title which she could have vindicated against the defendants-appellants in proceedings such as these.

In the Supreme Court case of Khan v. Jayman [1994] 2 Sri LR 233 the plaintiff sued the defendant for ejectment from the premises in suit and damages on the basis that the defendant was in forcible occupation of the premises after the termination of the leave and licence given to the defendant. The defendant claimed tenancy. The District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action on the basis that the plaintiff failed to establish that the defendant was a licensee and the Court of Appeal affirmed it. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff shall succeed since the defendant failed to establish a "better title" to the property after the plaintiff established his title and the defendant in his evidence admitted the plaintiff's title. Kulatunga J. with the agreement of G.P.S. De Silva C.J. and Wadugodapitiya J. stated at page 235:

> The plaintiff did not pray for a declaration of title or raise an issue on ownership, presumably because no challenge to his ownership was anticipated. Indeed the defendant's answer did not deny the plaintiff's title. At the trial, the plaintiff established his title and the defendant in his evidence admitted the plaintiff's title to the premises in suit. This action is, therefore, a vindicatory action i.e. an action founded on ownership. Maasdorp's Institutes of South African Law Vol. II Eighth Edition page 70 commenting on the right of an owner to recover possession of his property states –
>
> "The plaintiff's ownership in the thing is the very essence of such an action and will have to be both alleged and proved …"
>
> He also states –
>
> "The ownership of a thing consists in the exclusive rights of possession … and in the absence of any agreement or other legal restriction to the contrary, it entitles the owner to claim possession from anyone who cannot set up a better title to it and warn him off the property, and eject him from it".

The argument of the defendant that he was prejudiced in his defence as the plaintiff did not sue the defendant as the owner of the premises was rejected by the Supreme Court. Kulatunga J. stated at 239:

> Learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent also submitted that in view of the fact that this was not a case of the plaintiff suing as owner simpliciter and in the absence of an issue on ownership, the defendant would not have known the case he had to meet and was prejudiced in his defence. I cannot agree. As stated early in this > judgment, the plaintiff pleaded his ownership and clearly set out his case, including the fact that the defendant was in occupation of a room of the premises in suit by leave and licence. The defendant too set out his case in unambiguous terms viz. that he was a protected tenant from 1971. In the end, the plaintiff proved his case whilst the defendant failed to establish a better title to the property. As such, the question of prejudice does not arise.

When the paper title to the property is admitted or proved to be in the plaintiff, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove on what right he is in possession of the property.

In Siyaneris v. Udenis de Silva (1951) 52 NLR 289 the Privy Council held:

> In an action for declaration of title to property, where the legal title is in the plaintiff but the property is in the possession of the defendant, the burden of proof is on the defendant.

In Theivandran v. Ramanathan Chettiar [1986] 2 Sri LR 219 at 222, Sharvananda C.J. stated:

> In a vindicatory action the claimant need merely prove two facts; namely, that he is the owner of the thing and that the thing to which he is entitled to possession by virtue of his ownership is in the possession of the defendant. Basing his claim on his ownership, which entitles him to possession, he may sue for the ejectment of any person in possession of it without his consent. Hence when the legal title to the premises is admitted or proved to be in the plaintiff, the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that he is in lawful possession.

This was quoted with approval by G.P.S. de Silva C.J. in Beebi Johara v. Warusavithana [1998] 3 Sri LR 227 at 229 and reiterated in Candappa nee Bastian v. Ponnambalam Pillai [1993] 1 Sri LR 184 at 187. Vide also Wijetunge v. Thangarajah [1999] 1 Sri LR 53, Gunasekera v. Latiff [1999] 1 Sri LR 365 at 370, Jayasekera v. Bishop of Kandy [2002] 2 Sri LR 406 and Loku Menika v. Gunasekara [1997] 2 Sri LR 281 at 282-283.

Maasdorp's Institutes of South African Law (Vol II, 8th Edition (1960), p. 27) states the rights of an owner are "comprised under three heads, namely, (1) the right of possession and the right to recover possession; (2) the right of use and enjoyment; and (3) the right of disposition". He goes on to say that "these three factors are all essential to the idea of ownership but need not all be present in an equal degree at one and the same time".

As stated in K.J. Aiyar's Judicial Dictionary, 11th Edition (1995), page 833, it is not possible to give a comprehensive definition to the rights of ownership. Traditionally, those rights include:

> Jus utendi – the right to use of the thing
> Jus possidendi – the right to possess a thing
> Jus abutendi – the right to consume or destroy a thing
> Jus despondendi vei transferendi – the right to dispose of a thing or to transfer it as by sale, gift, exchange etc.
> Jus sibi habendi – the right to hold a thing for oneself
> Jus alteri non habendi or Jus prohibendi – the right to exclude others from its use

These rights unmistakably point to the conclusion that a person having paper title to the property need not necessarily possess it in order for him to protect his ownership intact. The right to possession is an essential attribute of ownership. Either he can possess it or leave it as it is. That is his choice. He will not lose title to the property if he does not possess it. Conversely, he has the right to exclude others from its use.

In general, in a rei vindicatio action the plaintiff's case is based on his paper title whereas the defendant's case is based on prescriptive title. Prescriptive title necessarily commences and continues with violence, hostility, force and illegality. Court should not in my view encourage such illegal conduct. Court must resist converting illegality into legality unless there are cogent and compelling reasons to do so. As stated by Udalagama J. in the Supreme Court case of Kiriamma v. Podibanda [2005] BLR 9 at 11 "considerable circumspection is necessary to recognize the prescriptive title as undoubtedly it deprives the ownership of the party having paper title. It is in fact said that title by prescription is an illegality made legal due to the other party not taking action."

Evidence of the defendant in a rei vindicatio action

Whilst emphasising that (a) the initial burden in a rei vindicatio action is on the plaintiff to prove ownership of the property in suit and (b) the burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is proof on a balance of probabilities, if the plaintiff in such an action has "sufficient title" or "superior title" or "better title" than that of the defendant, the plaintiff shall succeed. No rule of thumb can be laid down on what circumstances the Court shall hold that the plaintiff has discharged his burden. Whether or not the plaintiff proved his title shall be decided upon a consideration of the totality of the evidence led in the case.

In this process, the defendant's evidence need not be treated as illegal, inadmissible or forbidden. The oft-quoted dicta of Herat J. in Wanigaratne v. Juwanis Appuhamy (1962) 65 NLR 167 that "The defendant in a rei vindicatio action need not prove anything, still less, his own title. The plaintiff cannot ask for a declaration of title in his favour merely on the strength that the defendant's title is poor or not established. The plaintiff must prove and establish his title." shall not be misinterpreted to equate a defendant in a rei vindicatio action with an accused in a criminal case where inter alia his confession made to a police officer is inadmissible and he can remain silent until the prosecution proves its case beyond reasonable doubt.

I must add that even in a criminal case, if a strong prima facie case has been made out against the accused by the prosecution, the accused owes an explanation, if it is within the power of him to offer such explanation. This is in consonance with the dictum of Lord Elenborough in Rex v. Cochrane (Garney's Reports 479) which is commonly known as Elenborough dictum. In reference to this dictum, Dep J. (later C.J.) in Ranasinghe v. O.I.C. Police Station, Warakapola (SC/APPEAL/39/2011, SC Minutes of 02.04.2014) states:

> This dictum could be applied in cases where there is a strong prima facie case made out against the accused and if he refrains from explaining suspicious circumstances attach to him when it is in his own power to offer evidence. In such a situation an adverse inference can be drawn against him.

The dicta of Herat J. in Wanigaratne v. Juwanis Appuhamy (supra) is eminently relevant to the facts of that particular case but has no universal application to all rei vindicatio actions. Since it is a one-page brief judgment, the facts are not very clear. However, as I understand, the plaintiffs in that case had filed a rei vindicatio action against the defendant on the basis that the defendant was a trespasser notwithstanding that he (the defendant) had been in occupation of some portions of the land for some considerable period of time. From the following sentence found in the judgment, "In this case, the plaintiffs produced a recent deed in their favour and further stated in evidence that they could not take possession of the shares purchased by them because they were resisted by the 1st defendant", it is clear that the plaintiffs, if at all, had only undivided rights in the land. It is also clear from the judgment that whether or not the defendant also had undivided rights was not clear to Court. It is in that context Herat J. states "The learned District Judge, in his judgment expatiates on the weakness of the defence case; but unfortunately has failed to examine what title, if any, has been established by the plaintiffs. No evidence of title has been established by the plaintiffs in our opinion."

It may be noted that in Wanigaratne's case, the finding of the Supreme Court is that "No evidence of title has been established by the plaintiffs". The facts are totally different in the instant case. In the instant case, the plaintiff has established title to the land in suit by deed P1, which title was never challenged by the defendant; nor did the defendant ever make a claim for title to the land. He is admittedly in unlawful occupation.

As this Court held in Wasantha v. Premaratne (SC/APPEAL/176/2014, SC Minutes of 17.05.2021), the Court can in a rei vindicatio action consider the evidence of the defendant in arriving at the correct conclusion:

> Notwithstanding that in a rei vindicatio action the burden is on the plaintiff to prove title to the land no matter how fragile the case of the defendant is, the Court is not debarred from taking into consideration the evidence of the defendant in deciding whether or not the plaintiff has proved his title. Not only is the Court not debarred from doing so, it is in fact the duty of the Court to give due regard to the defendant's case, for otherwise there is no purpose in a rei vindicatio action in allowing the defendant to lead evidence when all he seeks is for the dismissal of the plaintiff's action.

This Court took the same view in Ashar v. Kareem (SC/APPEAL/171/2019, SC Minutes of 22.05.2023).

The finding of the District Judge that in a rei vindicatio action the Court cannot rely on the defendant's evidence to decide whether the plaintiff has proved his case is unacceptable.

Actio rei vindicatio* and action *in rem

In Pathirana v. Jayasundara (1955) 58 NLR 169 at 173 Gratiaen J. states:

> A decree for a declaration of title may, of course, be obtained by way of additional relief either in a rei vindicatio action proper (which is in truth an action in rem) or in a lessor's action against his overholding tenant (which is an action in personam). But in the former case, the declaration is based on proof of ownership in the latter, on proof of the contractual relationship which forbids a denial that the lessor is the true owner.

The learned District Judge inter alia relying on the above observation of Gratiaen J. states that an action rei vindicatio is an action filed against the entire world (action in rem) and therefore the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action must prove title to the land very strictly.

The phrase "in rem" requires an explanation rather than a definition. The Latin term "in rem" derives from the word "res", which means "a thing or an object" whether movable or immovable. Actions in rem were originally used as a means of protecting title to movables, especially slaves, because land was not at first the object of private ownership – Buckland and McNair, Roman Law and Common Law Comparison (Cambridge University Press, 1936) p. 6. Also, in rem jurisdiction is invoked in maritime cases where a party could bring an action in rem against a ship instead of the owner of the ship. It is the ship that suffers the consequences. The owner suffers the consequences if it is an action in personam.

Maasdorp's Institutes of South African Law, Vol II, 8th Edition (1960), p.70 states "The form of action for the recovery of ownership was under the Roman law called vindicatio rei, which was an action in rem, that is, aimed at the recovery of the thing which is in the possession of another, whether such possession was rightfully or wrongfully acquired, together with all its accretions and fruits, and compensation in damages for any loss sustained by the owner through having been deprived of it."

Black's Law Dictionary, 11th edition, defines the term "in rem" as "Latin 'against a thing' – Involving or determining the status of a thing, and therefore the rights of persons generally with respect to that thing." It defines the term "in personam" as "Latin 'against a person' – Involving or determining the personal rights and obligations of the parties. (Of a legal action) brought against a person rather than property."

The following passage of Dr. H. W. Tambiah (op. cit. p. 242) explains why rei vindicatio is an action in rem.

> The primary remedy granted to an owner against the person who disputes his ownership is rei vindicatio. This Roman-Dutch Law remedy has been adopted by the courts in Sri Lanka. Since the owner, as dominus, has a right of possession, occupation and use of the land, this action is in the nature of an action in rem. See Vulcan Rubber Ltd. v. South African Railways and Harbours, 3 S.A. 285 (1958); Hissaias v. Lehman, 4 S.A. 715 (1958). In this type of action, the owner of land whose title is disputed and who has been unlawfully ejected, may bring an action for a declaration of title and ejectment. If the owner has not been ejected but his title is disputed he is entitled to bring a declaratory action to dismiss any disputes to his title. Where an owner is unlawfully ejected he may bring an action for declaration of title for mesne profits, damages and ejectment.

In the case of Allis Appu v. Endris Hamy (1894) 3 SCR 87, Withers J. categorised rei vindicatio both as an action in rem and action in personam:

> Certain actions of an analogous nature apart, the action rei vindicatio is allowed to the owner and to him alone. Lesion to the right of property is of the very essence of the action and in that respect constitutes it an action in rem. Lesion to the personal right of the true proprietor properly constitutes a claim to compensation for the produce of which he has been deprived by the possessor and in that respect constitutes it an action in personam.

In classical Roman Law although actio rei vindicatio is classified as an action in rem as opposed to an action in personam, the term "action in rem" shall not be understood in the popular sense that we conceive in contemporary society. An action in rem means an action against a thing whereas an action in personam means an action against a person. A partition action is considered an action in rem in that the judgment in a partition action has a binding effect on all persons having interests in the property whether or not joined as parties to the action. It transcends the characteristic of an inter partes action and assumes the characteristic of an action in rem resulting in title good against the world. The scheme of the Partition Law is designed to serve that purpose. But the entire world is not bound by the judgment in a rei vindicatio action. The judgment in a rei vindicatio action binds only the parties to the action and their privies. In modern-day legal jargon, rei vindicatio is not an action in rem but an action in personam.

The fact that rei vindicatio is not an action in rem in the popular sense is reflected in the dicta of Dep C.J. in Preethi Anura v. William Silva (supra) where in reference to the standard of proof in a rei vindicatio action it was stated "The plaintiff's task is to establish the case on a balance of probability. In a partition case the situation is different as it is an action in rem and the trial judge is required to carefully examine the title and the devolution of title."

In Sithy Makeena v. Kuraisha [2006] 2 Sri LR 341 at 344, Imam J. with Sriskandarajah J. in agreement stated "It is well-settled law that only the parties to a rei vindicatio action are bound by the decision in such a case, as a rei vindicatio action is an action in personam and not an action in rem."

In the Supreme Court case of Mojith Kumara v. Ariyaratne (SC/APPEAL/123/2015, SC Minutes of 29.03.2016), the plaintiff filed action seeking declaration of title to the land in suit, ejectment of the defendants therefrom and damages. It was a rei vindicatio action proper. The defendants sought dismissal of the plaintiff's action. The plaintiff relied on a decree entered in his favour in a previous rei vindicatio action filed against a different party, but in respect of the same land. The District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action on the basis that the defendants before Court were not parties to the previous action and therefore they are not bound by that judgment. On appeal, the High Court set aside the judgment of the District Court and held that the plaintiff can claim ownership to the land on the strength of the previous decree apparently on the basis that rei vindicatio is an action in rem. The Supreme Court held that the previous action is an action in personam and not an action in rem and therefore third parties are not bound by that judgment. Chitrasiri J. with the agreement of Aluwihare J. and De Abrew J. held:

> A decree in a case in which a declaration of title is sought binds only the parties in that action. Such a proposition is not applicable when it comes to a decree in rem which binds the whole world. Effects and consequences of actions in rem and actions in personam are quite different. Action in rem is a proceeding that determines the rights over a particular property that would become conclusive against the entire world such as the decisions in courts exercising admiralty jurisdictions and the decisions in partition actions under the partition law of this country. Procedure stipulated in Partition Law contains provisions enabling interested parties to come before courts and to join as parties to the action even though the plaintiff fails to make them as parties to it. Therefore there is a rationale to treat the decrees in partition cases as decrees in rem.

Actions in personam are a type of legal proceedings which can affect the personal rights and interests of the property claimed by the parties to the action. Such actions include an action for breach of contract, the commission of a tort or delict or the possession of property. Where an action in personam is successful, the judgment may be enforced only against the defendant's assets that include real and personal or movable and immovable properties. Therefore, a decree in a rei vindicatio action is considered as a decree that would bind only the parties to the action. In the circumstances, it is clear that the plaintiff cannot rely on the decree in 503/L to establish rights to the property in question as against the defendants in this case are concerned.

Conclusion

I answer the questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted in the affirmative. The judgments of the District Court and the High Court of Civil Appeal are set aside. The defendant never challenged the evidence of the plaintiff on damages. I direct the District Judge to enter judgment as prayed for in the prayer to the plaint. The plaintiff is entitled to costs in all three Courts.

Introduction

The plaintiff (Bank of Ceylon) filed this action in the District Court of Badulla seeking declaration of title to, ejectment of the defendant from, the land described in the second schedule to the plaint, and damages. The defendant filed answer seeking dismissal of the plaintiff's action. After trial, the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal of Badulla affirmed the judgment of the District Court. Hence this appeal by the plaintiff.

This Court granted leave to appeal against the judgment of the High Court on three questions suggested by the plaintiff (1st to 3rd below) and one suggested by the defendant (4th below). They read as follows:

(1) Did the High Court make a fundamental error in construing the nature of the action in view of the fact that the defendant not having claimed adverse title against the plaintiff?

(2) Did the High Court err with regard to standard of proof in an action for declaration of title when the defendant does not set up adverse title as against the plaintiff?
(3) Did the High Court err in the assessment of the title deed P1 produced at the trial?
(4) Can the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action prove title by mere production of his title deed without predecessor's title being proved as in this action?

There is no issue regarding the identification of the land/premises in suit. No such issue was ever raised in the District Court. Therefore this Court cannot be misled by making submissions on the identification of the land.

The simple case for the plaintiff is that the plaintiff is the owner of the land by deed of transfer marked P1 at the trial and the defendant is in unlawful occupation of the land. He is a trespasser. The deed P1 was not marked subject to proof. The plaintiff did not think it necessary to prove the devolution of title, and rightly so. This is not a partition case to prove the pedigree. The defendant never claimed ownership of the property by deed or by prescription or any other mode. His position was that he occupied the premises in suit as an employee of Browns & Co. on payment of rent and Brown & Co. was closed down on 22.11.1994 and from that day he is not an employee of that company. He further admits that he is in unlawful occupation of the premises since 22.12.1994. He has been paid compensation for the termination of his employment by his former employer and thereafter that amount has been enhanced by the Labour Tribunal. It is clear that he thinks the compensation awarded was inadequate. This is the evidence of the defendant in that regard:

(pages 59-60 of the appeal brief)

In my view, this should end the matter. But unfortunately, the District Court thought that the plaintiff did not prove his title in the manner a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action ought to have proved. What is this standard of proof the District Court expected from the plaintiff and on what basis? The District Court states that the mere production of the title deed of the plaintiff is not sufficient but the plaintiff shall prove his predecessors' title as well. In other words, the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action shall prove the chain of title as in a partition case. In elaborating the basis for this very high standard, citing Pathirana v. Jayasundera (1955) 58 NLR 169, the District Judge states that, since a rei vindicatio action is filed against the whole world, the plaintiff shall prove title to the property strictly. This is what the District Judge states: "පතිරණ එදිරිව ජයසුන්දර නඩුවේ (58 නව නීති වාර්තා 169) එච්.එන්.ජී ප්‍රනාන්දු විනිසුරුතුමා දැන්වූයේ රේවින්ඩිකාටියෝ නඩුවක පැමිණිල්ල හිමිකම සම්බන්ධ තදබල ලෙස ඔප්පු කළ යුතු බවයි.

එමෙන්ම එම නඩුවේදී ග්‍රේෂන් විනිසුරුතුමා දැන්වූයේ රේවින්ඩිකාටියෝ නඩුවක් ලෝකයටම එරෙහිව නිසා හිමිකම් තදබල ලෙස ඔප්පු කළ යුතු බවයි". In reference to the defendant's evidence quoted above, citing Wanigaratne v. Juwanis Appuhamy (1962) 65 NLR 167, the District Judge states that, in a rei vindicatio action, the defendant's evidence can never be used to support the plaintiff's case. The High Court affirmed these findings unhesitatingly. I must state that those findings are misconceived in law. In summary, the correct position is as follows:

(a) A rei vindicatio action is not an action filed against the whole world. In modern law, rei vindicatio action is an action in personam and not an action in rem in the popular sense.
(b) In a rei vindicatio action, the plaintiff needs only to prove his case on a balance of probabilities, and no higher degree of proof is required.
(c) If there is no challenge, in a rei vindicatio action, the mere production of the title deed is sufficient to prove title to the property.
(d) The Court can consider the defendant's evidence in a rei vindicatio action.

Let me elaborate on these matters in greater detail.

Burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action

The burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is overwhelmingly shrouded in misconceptions and misconstructions.

In order to succeed in a rei vindicatio action, first and foremost, the plaintiff shall prove his ownership to the property. If he fails to prove it, his action shall fail. This principle is based on the Latin maxim "onus probandi incumbit ei qui agit", which means, the burden of proof lies with the person who brings the action. Section 101 of the Evidence Ordinance is also to a similar effect.

Macdonell C.J. in De Silva v. Goonetilleke (1960) 32 NLR 217 at 219 stated:

> There is abundant authority that a party claiming a declaration of title must have title himself. "To bring the action rei vindicatio plaintiff must have ownership actually vested in him". (1 Nathan p. 362, s. 593.) ... The authorities unite in holding that plaintiff must show title to the corpus in dispute and that if he cannot, the action will not lie.

In Pathirana v. Jayasundera (1955) 58 NLR 169 at 172, Gratiaen J. declared:

> "The plaintiff's ownership of the thing is of the very essence of the action." Maasdorp's Institutes (7th Ed.) Vol. 2, 96.

In Mansil v. Devaya [1985] 2 Sri LR 46, G.P.S. De Silva J. (later C.J.) stated at 51:

> In a rei vindicatio action, on the other hand, ownership is of the essence of the action; the action is founded on ownership.

In Latheef v. Mansoor [2010] 2 Sri LR 333 at 352, Marsoof J. held:

> An important feature of the actio rei vindicatio is that it has to necessarily fail if the plaintiff cannot clearly establish his title.

Having said the above, it needs to be emphasised that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action has no heavier burden to discharge than a plaintiff in any other civil action. The standard of proof in a rei vindicatio action is on a balance of probabilities.

Professor George Wille, in his monumental work Wille's Principles of South African Law, 9th Edition (2007), states at page 539:

> To succeed with the rei vindicatio, the owner must prove on a balance of probabilities, first, his or her ownership in the property. If a movable is sought to be recovered, the owner must rebut the presumption that the possessor of the movable is the owner thereof. In the case of immovables, it is sufficient as a rule to show that title in the land is registered in his or her name. Secondly, the property must exist, be clearly identifiable and must not have been destroyed or consumed. Money, in the form of coins and banknotes, is not easily identifiable and thus not easily vindicable. Thirdly, the defendant must be in possession or detention of the thing at the moment the action is instituted. The rationale is to ensure that the defendant is in a position to comply with an order for restoration.

In Preethi Anura v. William Silva (SC/APPEAL/116/2014, SC Minutes of 05.06.2017), the plaintiff filed a rei vindicatio action against the defendant seeking a declaration of title to the land in suit and the ejectment of the defendant therefrom. The District Court held with the plaintiff but the High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court on the basis that the plaintiff failed to prove title of the land. The plaintiff's title commenced with a statutory determination made under section 19 of the Land Reform Law in favour of his grandmother, who had bequeathed the land by way of a last will to the plaintiff, with the land being later conveyed to the plaintiff by way of an executor's conveyance. No documentary evidence was tendered to establish that the last will was proved in Court and admitted to probate in order to validate the said executor's conveyance. The District Court was satisfied that the said factors were proved by oral evidence but the High Court found the same insufficient to discharge the burden that rests upon a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action, which the High Court considered to be very heavy. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the High Court and restored the judgment of the District Court, taking the view that the plaintiff had proved title to the land despite the purported shortcomings. In the course of the judgment, Dep C.J. (with De Abrew J. and Jayawardena J. agreeing) remarked:

> In a rei vindicatio action, the plaintiff has to establish the title to the land. Plaintiff need not establish the title with mathematical precision nor to prove the case beyond reasonable doubt as in a criminal case. The plaintiff's task is to establish the case on a balance of probability. In a partition case the situation is different as it is an action in rem and the trial judge is required to carefully examine the title and the devolution of title. This case being a rei vindicatio action this court has to consider whether the plaintiff discharged the burden on balance of probability.

What is the degree of proof expected when the standard of proof is on a balance of probabilities? This is better understood when proof on a balance of probabilities is compared with proof on beyond a reasonable doubt.

On proof beyond a reasonable doubt, in Miller v. Minister of Pensions [1947] 2 All ER 372, Lord Denning declared at 373:

> Proof beyond reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond the shadow of doubt. The law would fail to protect the community if it admitted fanciful possibilities to deflect the course of justice. If the evidence is so strong against a man as to leave only a remote possibility in his favour which can be dismissed with the sentence "of course it is possible, but not in the least probable," the case is > proved beyond reasonable doubt, but nothing short of that will suffice.

In relation to proof on a balance of probabilities, it was stated at 374:

> That degree is well settled. It must carry a reasonable degree of probability, but not so high as is required in a criminal case. If the evidence is such that the tribunal can say: "We think it more probable than not," the burden is discharged, but, if the probabilities are equal, it is not.

In consideration of the degree of proof in a rei vindicatio action, we invariably refer to the seminal judgment of Pathirana v. Jayasundara (1955) 58 NLR 169. In that case the plaintiff sued the defendant on the basis that the defendant was an overholding lessee. The defendant admitted the bare execution of the lease but stated that the lessors were unable to give him possession of the land. He averred that the land was sold to him by its lawful owner (not one of the lessors) and that by adverse possession from that date he had acquired title by prescription. The plaintiff then sought to amend the plaint by claiming a declaration of title and ejectment on the footing that his rights of ownership had been violated. The Supreme Court held:

> A lessor of property who institutes action on the basis of a cause of action arising from a breach by the defendant of his contractual obligation as lessee is not entitled to amend his plaint subsequently so as to alter the nature of the proceeding to an action rei vindicatio if such a course would prevent or prejudice the setting up by the defendant of a plea of prescriptive title.

In the course of the judgment the Court distinguished an action for declaration of title (based on the contractual relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant) from an action rei vindicatio proper. In general terms, in both actions, a declaration of title is sought – in the former, as a matter of course, without strict proof of title, but in the latter, as a peremptory requirement, with strict proof of title. H.N.G. Fernando J. (later C.J.) at page 171 explained the distinction between the two in this way:

> There is however the further point that the plaintiff in his prayer sought not only ejectment but also a declaration of title, a prayer for which latter relief is probably unusual in an action against an overholding tenant. I have no doubt that it is open to a lessor in an action for ejectment to ask for a declaration of title, but the question of difficulty arises is whether the action thereby becomes a rei vindicatio for which strict proof of the plaintiff's title would be required, or else is merely one for a declaration (without strict proof) of a title which the tenant by law precluded from denying. If the essential element of a rei vindicatio is that the right of ownership must be strictly proved, it is difficult to accept the proposition that an action in which the plaintiff can automatically obtain a declaration of title through the operation of a rule in estoppel should be regarded as a vindicatory action. The fact that the person in possession of property originally held as lessee would not preclude the lessor-owner from choosing to proceed against him by a rei vindicatio. But this choice can I think be properly exercised only by clearly setting out the claim of title and sounding in delict.

The term "strict proof of the plaintiff's title" used here does not mean that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action shall prove title beyond a reasonable doubt or a very high degree of proof. The term "strict proof of the plaintiff's title" was used here to distinguish the standard of proof between a declaration of title action based on a contractual relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant such as lessor and lessee, and a rei vindicatio action proper based on ownership of the property. In a rei vindicatio action, if the plaintiff proves on a balance of probabilities that he is the owner, he must succeed.

Professor G.L. Peiris, in his treatise Law of Property in Sri Lanka, Vol I, makes it clear at page 304:

> It must be emphasized, however, that the observations in these cases to the effect that the plaintiff's title must be strictly proved in a rei vindicatio, cannot be accepted as containing the implication that a standard of exceptional stringency applies in this context. An extremely exacting standard is insisted upon in certain categories of action such as partition actions. … It is clear that a standard characterized by this degree of severity does not apply to the proof of a plaintiff's title in a rei vindicatory action.

(Justice) Dr. H.W. Tambiah opines in "Survey of Laws Controlling Ownership of Lands in Sri Lanka", Vol 2, International Property Investment Journal 217 at pages 243-244:

> In a vindicatory action, the plaintiff must prove that he is the owner of the property which is in the possession of the defendant. See de Silva v. Gunathilleke, 32 N.L.R. 217 (1931); Abeykoon Hamine v. Appuhamy, 52 N.L.R. 49 (1951); Muthusamy v. Seneviratne, 31 C.L.W. 91 (1946). Once title is established, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that by adverse possession for a period of 10 years he has acquired prescriptive title. Siyaneris v. Udenis de Silva, 52 N.L.R. 289 (1951). In rei vindicatory action once the plaintiff proves he was in possession but then he was evicted by the defendant, the burden of proving title will shift to the defendant. In Kathiramathamby v. Arumugam 38 C.L.W. 27 (1948) it was held that if the plaintiff alleges that he was forcibly ousted by the > defendant the burden of proving ouster remains with the complainant. As a practical matter, the burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is not burdensome. The plaintiff must prove only that he is the probable owner of the property.

The view of Dr. Tambiah "As a practical matter, the burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is not burdensome. The plaintiff must prove only that he is the probable owner of the property" shall be understood in the context of his view expressed at the outset that "In a vindicatory action, the plaintiff must prove that he is the owner of the property which is in the possession of the defendant."

The recent South African case of Huawei Technologies South Africa (Pty) Limited v. Redefine Properties Limited and Another [2018] ZAGPJHC 403 decided on 29.05.2018 reveals that the burden of proof of a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action is not unusually onerous. In this case it was held that what the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action needs to prove is that he is the owner of the property (which the Court stated could be done by producing his title deed) and that the defendant is holding or in possession of the property. Once this is done, the onus shifts to the defendant to establish a right to continue to hold against the owner. Cele J. declared:

> The rei vindicatio is the common law real action for the protection of ownership. C.P. Smith, Eviction and Rental Claims: A Practical Guide at p. 1-2; Graham v. Ridley 1931 TPD 476; Chetty v Naidoo 1974 (3) SA 13 (A). It is inherent in the nature of ownership that possession of the res should normally be with the owner and it follows that no other person may withhold it from the owner unless he or she is vested with some right enforceable against the owner. The owner, in instituting a rei vindicatio, need do no more than allege and prove that he is the owner and that the defendant is holding or in > possession of the res. The onus is on the Defendant to allege and establish a right to continue to hold against the owner. Chetty v. Naidoo (supra) at 20 A–E. A court does not have an equitable discretion to refuse an order for ejectment on the grounds of equity and fairness. Belmont House v. Gore NNO 2011 (6) SA 173 (WCC) at para [15]. In the case of eviction based on an owner's rei vindicatio, the owner has only to prove his ownership which can be done by producing his title deed indicating that the property is registered in his name. Goudini Chrome (Pty) Ltd v. MCC Contracts (Pty) Ltd [1999] ZASCA 208; 1993 (1) SA 77 (A) at 82 A–C.

The requirement of proof of chain of title which is the norm in a partition action is not applicable in a rei vindicatio action. If there is no challenge to the title deed of the plaintiff on specific grounds, the plaintiff can prove his ownership to the property by producing his title deed.

This view was expressed by Professor Wille (op. cit. at page 539) when he stated that "In the case of immovables, it is sufficient as a rule to show that title in the land is registered in his or her name."

When the standard of proof is on a balance of probabilities, the Court is entitled to consider whose version – the plaintiff's or the defendant's – is more probable.

Banda v. Soyza [1998] 1 Sri LR 255 is a rei vindicatio action filed by a trustee of a temple seeking a declaration of title, the ejectment of the defendant and damages. The Court of Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court and the plaintiff's action was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to establish title to the subject matter of the action or even to identify the land in suit. But the Supreme Court set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal and restored the judgment of the District Court on the basis that there was "sufficient evidence led on behalf of the plaintiff to prove the title and the identity of the lots in dispute." G.P.S. de Silva C.J. laid down at page 259 the criterion to be adopted in a rei vindicatio action in respect of the standard of proof in the following manner:

> In a case such as this, the true question that a court has to consider on the question of title is, who has the superior title? The answer has to be reached upon a consideration of the totality of the evidence led in the case.

Dr. H.W. Tambiah (op. cit. at p. 244) refers to proof of superior title by the defendant as a defence to a rei vindicatio action.

> In a vindicatory action, the defendant has numerous defenses, which include: denial of the plaintiff's title; establishment of his own title, in the sense of establishing a title superior to that of the plaintiff; prescription; a plea of res judicata; right of tenure under the plaintiff – for example usufruct, pledge or lease of land; the right to retain possession subject to an indemnity from the plaintiff under peculiar conditions; a plea of exception rei venditae et traditae; and, ius tertii.

The Full Bench of the Supreme Court in Jinawathie v. Emalin Perera [1986] 2 Sri LR 121 adverted to superior title and sufficient title and held that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action shall prove that he has title to the disputed property and that such title is superior to the title, if any, put forward by the defendant, or that he has sufficient title which he can vindicate against the defendant.

The plaintiff in Jinawathie's case filed a rei vindicatio action against the defendants relying upon a statutory determination made under section 19 of the Land Reform Law, No. 1 of 1972. The defendants sought the dismissal of the plaintiff's action on the basis that the alleged statutory determination did not convey any title on the plaintiff and that in the absence of the plaintiff demonstrating dominium over the land, the plaintiff's action shall fail. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeal held with the plaintiff and the Supreme Court affirmed it. Ranasinghe J. (later C.J.) with the agreement of Sharvananda C.J., Wanasundera J., Atukorale J., and Tambiah J., whilst emphasising that in a rei vindicatio action proper, the plaintiff's ownership of the land is of the very essence of the action, expressed the view of the Supreme Court in the following terms at page 142:

> This principle was re-affirmed once again by Gratiaen J. in the case of Palisena v. Perera (1954) 56 NLR 407 where the plaintiff came into court to vindicate his title based upon a permit issued under the provisions of the Land Development Ordinance (Chap. 320). In giving judgment for the plaintiff, Gratiaen, J. said: "a permit-holder who has complied with the conditions of his permit enjoys, during the period for which the permit is valid, a sufficient title which he can vindicate against a trespasser in civil proceedings. The fact that the alleged trespasser had prevented him from entering upon the land does not afford a defence to the action."
>
> In a vindicatory action the plaintiff must himself have title to the property in dispute: the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that he has title to the disputed property, and that such title is superior to the title, if any, put forward by the defendant in occupation. The plaintiff can and must succeed only on the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of the defence.
> On a consideration of the foregoing principles – relating to the legal concept of ownership, and to an action rei vindicatio – it seems to me that the plaintiff-respondent did, at the time of the institution of these proceedings, have, by virtue of P6 [statutory determination], "sufficient" title which she could have vindicated against the defendants-appellants in proceedings such as these.

In the Supreme Court case of Khan v. Jayman [1994] 2 Sri LR 233 the plaintiff sued the defendant for ejectment from the premises in suit and damages on the basis that the defendant was in forcible occupation of the premises after the termination of the leave and licence given to the defendant. The defendant claimed tenancy. The District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action on the basis that the plaintiff failed to establish that the defendant was a licensee and the Court of Appeal affirmed it. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff shall succeed since the defendant failed to establish a "better title" to the property after the plaintiff established his title and the defendant in his evidence admitted the plaintiff's title. Kulatunga J. with the agreement of G.P.S. De Silva C.J. and Wadugodapitiya J. stated at page 235:

> The plaintiff did not pray for a declaration of title or raise an issue on ownership, presumably because no challenge to his ownership was anticipated. Indeed the defendant's answer did not deny the plaintiff's title. At the trial, the plaintiff established his title and the defendant in his evidence admitted the plaintiff's title to the premises in suit. This action is, therefore, a vindicatory action i.e. an action founded on ownership. Maasdorp's Institutes of South African Law Vol. II Eighth Edition page 70 commenting on the right of an owner to recover possession of his property states –
>
> "The plaintiff's ownership in the thing is the very essence of such an action and will have to be both alleged and proved …"
>
> He also states –
>
> "The ownership of a thing consists in the exclusive rights of possession … and in the absence of any agreement or other legal restriction to the contrary, it entitles the owner to claim possession

from anyone who cannot set up a better title to it and warn him off the property, and eject him from it".

The argument of the defendant that he was prejudiced in his defence as the plaintiff did not sue the defendant as the owner of the premises was rejected by the Supreme Court. Kulatunga J. stated at 239:

Learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent also submitted that in view of the fact that this was not a case of the plaintiff suing as owner simpliciter and in the absence of an issue on ownership, the defendant would not have known the case he had to meet and was prejudiced in his defence. I cannot agree. As stated early in this judgment, the plaintiff pleaded his ownership and clearly set out his case, including the fact that the defendant was in occupation of a room of the premises in suit by leave and licence. The defendant too set out his case in unambiguous terms viz. that he was a protected tenant from 1971. In the end, the plaintiff proved his case whilst the defendant failed to establish a better title to the property. As such, the question of prejudice does not arise.

When the paper title to the property is admitted or proved to be in the plaintiff, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove on what right he is in possession of the property.

In Siyaneris v. Udenis de Silva (1951) 52 NLR 289 the Privy Council held:

In an action for declaration of title to property, where the legal title is in the plaintiff but the property is in the possession of the defendant, the burden of proof is on the defendant.

In Theivandran v. Ramanathan Chettiar [1986] 2 Sri LR 219 at 222, Sharvananda C.J. stated:

> In a vindicatory action the claimant need merely prove two facts; namely, that he is the owner of the thing and that the thing to which he is entitled to possession by virtue of his ownership is in the possession of the defendant. Basing his claim on his ownership, which entitles him to possession, he may sue for the ejectment of any person in possession of it without his consent. Hence when the legal title to the premises is admitted or proved to be in the plaintiff, the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that he is in lawful possession.

This was quoted with approval by G.P.S. de Silva C.J. in Beebi Johara v. Warusavithana [1998] 3 Sri LR 227 at 229 and reiterated in Candappa nee Bastian v. Ponnambalam Pillai [1993] 1 Sri LR 184 at 187. Vide also Wijetunge v. Thangarajah [1999] 1 Sri LR 53, Gunasekera v. Latiff [1999] 1 Sri LR 365 at 370, Jayasekera v. Bishop of Kandy [2002] 2 Sri LR 406 and Loku Menika v. Gunasekara [1997] 2 Sri LR 281 at 282-283.

Maasdorp's Institutes of South African Law (Vol II, 8th Edition (1960), p. 27) states the rights of an owner are "comprised under three heads, namely, (1) the right of possession and the right to recover possession; (2) the right of use and enjoyment; and (3) the right of disposition". He goes on to say that "these three factors are all essential to the idea of ownership but need not all be present in an equal degree at one and the same time".

As stated in K.J. Aiyar's Judicial Dictionary, 11th Edition (1995), page 833, it is not possible to give a comprehensive definition to the rights of ownership. Traditionally, those rights include:

> Jus utendi – the right to use of the thing
> Jus possidendi – the right to possess a thing
> Jus abutendi – the right to consume or destroy a thing

Jus despondendi vei transferendi – the right to dispose of a thing or to transfer it as by sale, gift, exchange etc.
Jus sibi habendi – the right to hold a thing for oneself
Jus alteri non habendi or Jus prohibendi – the right to exclude others from its use

These rights unmistakably point to the conclusion that a person having paper title to the property need not necessarily possess it in order for him to protect his ownership intact. The right to possession is an essential attribute of ownership. Either he can possess it or leave it as it is. That is his choice. He will not lose title to the property if he does not possess it. Conversely, he has the right to exclude others from its use.

In general, in a rei vindicatio action the plaintiff's case is based on his paper title whereas the defendant's case is based on prescriptive title. Prescriptive title necessarily commences and continues with violence, hostility, force and illegality. Court should not in my view encourage such illegal conduct. Court must resist converting illegality into legality unless there are cogent and compelling reasons to do so. As stated by Udalagama J. in the Supreme Court case of Kiriamma v. Podibanda [2005] BLR 9 at 11 "considerable circumspection is necessary to recognize the prescriptive title as undoubtedly it deprives the ownership of the party having paper title. It is in fact said that title by prescription is an illegality made legal due to the other party not taking action."

Evidence of the defendant in a rei vindicatio action

Whilst emphasising that (a) the initial burden in a rei vindicatio action is on the plaintiff to prove ownership of the property in suit and (b) the burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is proof on a balance of probabilities, if the plaintiff in such an action has "sufficient title" or "superior title" or "better title" than that of the defendant, the plaintiff shall succeed. No rule of thumb can be laid down on what circumstances the Court shall hold that the plaintiff has discharged his burden. Whether or not the plaintiff proved his title shall be decided upon a consideration of the totality of the evidence led in the case.

In this process, the defendant's evidence need not be treated as illegal, inadmissible or forbidden. The oft-quoted dicta of Herat J. in Wanigaratne v. Juwanis Appuhamy (1962) 65 NLR 167 that "The defendant in a rei vindicatio action need not prove anything, still less, his own title. The plaintiff cannot ask for a declaration of title in his favour merely on the strength that the defendant's title is poor or not established. The plaintiff must prove and establish his title." shall not be misinterpreted to equate a defendant in a rei vindicatio action with an accused in a criminal case where inter alia his confession made to a police officer is inadmissible and he can remain silent until the prosecution proves its case beyond reasonable doubt.

I must add that even in a criminal case, if a strong prima facie case has been made out against the accused by the prosecution, the accused owes an explanation, if it is within the power of him to offer such explanation. This is in consonance with the dictum of Lord Elenborough in Rex v. Cochrane (Garney's Reports 479) which is commonly known as Elenborough dictum. In reference to this dictum, Dep J. (later C.J.) in Ranasinghe v. O.I.C. Police Station, Warakapola (SC/APPEAL/39/2011, SC Minutes of 02.04.2014) states:

> This dictum could be applied in cases where there is a strong prima facie case made out against the accused and if he refrains from explaining suspicious circumstances attach to him when it is in his own power to offer evidence. In such a situation an adverse inference can be drawn against him.

The dicta of Herat J. in Wanigaratne v. Juwanis Appuhamy (supra) is eminently relevant to the facts of that particular case but has no universal application to all rei vindicatio actions. Since it is a one-page brief judgment, the facts are not very clear. However, as I understand, the plaintiffs in that case had filed a rei vindicatio action against the defendant on the basis that the defendant was a trespasser notwithstanding that he (the defendant) had been in occupation of some portions of the land for some considerable period of time. From the following sentence found in the judgment, "In this case, the plaintiffs produced a recent deed in their favour and further stated in evidence that they could not take possession of the shares purchased by them because they were resisted by the 1st defendant", it is clear that the plaintiffs, if at all, had only undivided rights in the land. It is also clear from the judgment that whether or not the defendant also had undivided rights was not clear to Court. It is in that context Herat J. states "The learned District Judge, in his judgment expatiates on the weakness of the defence case; but unfortunately has failed to examine what title, if any, has been established by the plaintiffs. No evidence of title has been established by the plaintiffs in our opinion."

It may be noted that in Wanigaratne's case, the finding of the Supreme Court is that "No evidence of title has been established by the plaintiffs". The facts are totally different in the instant case. In the instant case, the plaintiff has established title to the land in suit by deed P1, which title was never challenged by the defendant; nor did the defendant ever make a claim for title to the land. He is admittedly in unlawful occupation.

As this Court held in Wasantha v. Premaratne (SC/APPEAL/176/2014, SC Minutes of 17.05.2021), the Court can in a rei vindicatio action consider the evidence of the defendant in arriving at the correct conclusion:

> Notwithstanding that in a rei vindicatio action the burden is on the plaintiff to prove title to the land no matter how fragile the case of the defendant is, the Court is not debarred from taking into consideration the evidence of the defendant in deciding whether or not the plaintiff has proved his title. Not only is the Court not debarred from doing so, it is in fact the duty of the Court to give due regard to the defendant's case, for otherwise there is no purpose in a rei vindicatio action in allowing the defendant to lead evidence when all he seeks is for the dismissal of the plaintiff's action.

This Court took the same view in Ashar v. Kareem (SC/APPEAL/171/2019, SC Minutes of 22.05.2023).

The finding of the District Judge that in a rei vindicatio action the Court cannot rely on the defendant's evidence to decide whether the plaintiff has proved his case is unacceptable.

Actio rei vindicatio* and action *in rem

In Pathirana v. Jayasundara (1955) 58 NLR 169 at 173 Gratiaen J. states:

> A decree for a declaration of title may, of course, be obtained by way of additional relief either in a rei vindicatio action proper (which is in truth an action in rem) or in a lessor's action against his overholding tenant (which is an action in personam). But in the former case, the declaration is based on proof of ownership in the latter, on proof of the contractual relationship which forbids a denial that the lessor is the true owner.

The learned District Judge inter alia relying on the above observation of Gratiaen J. states that an action rei vindicatio is an action filed against the entire world (action in rem) and therefore the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action must prove title to the land very strictly.

The phrase "in rem" requires an explanation rather than a definition. The Latin term "in rem" derives from the word "res", which means "a thing or an object" whether movable or immovable. Actions in rem were originally used as a means of protecting title to movables, especially slaves, because land was not at first the object of private ownership – Buckland and McNair, Roman Law and Common Law Comparison (Cambridge University Press, 1936) p. 6. Also, in rem jurisdiction is invoked in maritime cases where a party could bring an action in rem against a ship instead of the owner of the ship. It is the ship that suffers the consequences. The owner suffers the consequences if it is an action in personam.

Maasdorp's Institutes of South African Law, Vol II, 8th Edition (1960), p.70 states "The form of action for the recovery of ownership was under the Roman law called vindicatio rei, which was an action in rem, that is, aimed at the recovery of the thing which is in the possession of another, whether such possession was rightfully or wrongfully acquired, together with all its accretions and fruits, and compensation in damages for any loss sustained by the owner through having been deprived of it."

Black's Law Dictionary, 11th edition, defines the term "in rem" as "Latin 'against a thing' – Involving or determining the status of a thing, and therefore the rights of persons generally with respect to that thing." It defines the term "in personam" as "Latin 'against a person' – Involving or determining the personal rights and obligations of the parties. (Of a legal action) brought against a person rather than property."

The following passage of Dr. H. W. Tambiah (op. cit. p. 242) explains why rei vindicatio is an action in rem.

> The primary remedy granted to an owner against the person who disputes his ownership is rei vindicatio. This Roman-Dutch Law > remedy has been adopted by the courts in Sri Lanka. Since the owner, as dominus, has a right of possession, occupation and use of the land, this action is in the nature of an action in rem. See Vulcan Rubber Ltd. v. South African Railways and Harbours, 3 S.A. 285 (1958); Hissaias v. Lehman, 4 S.A. 715 (1958). In this type of action, the owner of land whose title is disputed and who has been unlawfully ejected, may bring an action for a declaration of title and ejectment. If the owner has not been ejected but his title is disputed he is entitled to bring a declaratory action to dismiss any disputes to his title. Where an owner is unlawfully ejected he may bring an action for declaration of title for mesne profits, damages and ejectment.

In the case of Allis Appu v. Endris Hamy (1894) 3 SCR 87, Withers J. categorised rei vindicatio both as an action in rem and action in personam:

> Certain actions of an analogous nature apart, the action rei vindicatio is allowed to the owner and to him alone. Lesion to the right of property is of the very essence of the action and in that respect constitutes it an action in rem. Lesion to the personal right of the true proprietor properly constitutes a claim to compensation for the produce of which he has been deprived by the possessor and in that respect constitutes it an action in personam.

In classical Roman Law although actio rei vindicatio is classified as an action in rem as opposed to an action in personam, the term "action in rem" shall not be understood in the popular sense that we conceive in contemporary society. An action in rem means an action against a thing whereas an action in personam means an action against a person. A partition action is considered an action in rem in that the judgment in a partition action has a binding effect on all persons having interests in the property whether or not joined as parties to the action. It transcends the characteristic of an inter partes action and assumes the characteristic of an action in rem resulting in title good against the world. The scheme of the Partition Law is designed to serve that purpose. But the entire world is not bound by the judgment in a rei vindicatio action. The judgment in a rei vindicatio action binds only the parties to the action and their privies. In modern-day legal jargon, rei vindicatio is not an action in rem but an action in personam.

The fact that rei vindicatio is not an action in rem in the popular sense is reflected in the dicta of Dep C.J. in Preethi Anura v. William Silva (supra) where in reference to the standard of proof in a rei vindicatio action it was stated "The plaintiff's task is to establish the case on a balance of probability. In a partition case the situation is different as it is an action in rem and the trial judge is required to carefully examine the title and the devolution of title."

In Sithy Makeena v. Kuraisha [2006] 2 Sri LR 341 at 344, Imam J. with Sriskandarajah J. in agreement stated "It is well-settled law that only the parties to a rei vindicatio action are bound by the decision in such a case, as a rei vindicatio action is an action in personam and not an action in rem."

In the Supreme Court case of Mojith Kumara v. Ariyaratne (SC/APPEAL/123/2015, SC Minutes of 29.03.2016), the plaintiff filed action seeking declaration of title to the land in suit, ejectment of the defendants therefrom and damages. It was a rei vindicatio action proper. The defendants sought dismissal of the plaintiff's action. The plaintiff relied on a decree entered in his favour in a previous rei vindicatio action filed against a different party, but in respect of the same land. The District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action on the basis that the defendants before Court were not parties to the previous action and therefore they are not bound by that judgment. On appeal, the High Court set aside the judgment of the District Court and held that the plaintiff can claim ownership to the land on the strength of the previous decree apparently on the basis that rei vindicatio is an action in rem. The Supreme Court held that the previous action is an action in personam and not an action in rem and therefore third parties are not bound by that judgment. Chitrasiri J. with the agreement of Aluwihare J. and De Abrew J. held:

> A decree in a case in which a declaration of title is sought binds only the parties in that action. Such a proposition is not applicable when it comes to a decree in rem which binds the whole world. Effects and consequences of actions in rem and actions in personam are quite different. Action in rem is a proceeding that determines the rights over a particular property that would become conclusive against the entire world such as the decisions in courts exercising admiralty jurisdictions and the decisions in partition actions under the partition law of this country. Procedure stipulated in Partition Law contains provisions enabling interested parties to come before courts and to join as parties to the action even though the plaintiff fails to make them as parties to it. Therefore there is a rationale to treat the decrees in partition cases as decrees in rem.
>
> Actions in personam are a type of legal proceedings which can affect the personal rights and interests of the property claimed by the parties to the action. Such actions include an action for breach of contract, the commission of a tort or delict or the possession of property. Where an action in personam is successful, the judgment may be enforced only against the defendant's assets that include real and personal or movable and immovable properties. Therefore, a decree in a rei vindicatio action is considered as a decree that would bind only the parties to the action. In the circumstances, it is clear that the plaintiff cannot rely on the decree in 503/L to establish rights to the property in question as against the defendants in this case are concerned.

Conclusion

I answer the questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted in the affirmative. The judgments of the District Court and the High Court of Civil Appeal are set aside. The defendant never challenged the evidence of the plaintiff on damages. I direct the District Judge to enter judgment as prayed for in the prayer to the plaint. The plaintiff is entitled to costs in all three Courts.

The deed No. 2943 is a deed of transfer where the transferor is the plaintiff and the transferee is the defendant. The plaintiff filed this action against the defendant seeking a declaration that the defendant is holding the property described in the deed in trust for the plaintiff. The plaintiff also sought a declaration that the deed is a nullity on the ground of laesio enormis – vide paragraph 13 of the plaint. The defendant filed answer seeking only dismissal of the plaintiff's action. After trial, the District Court entered judgment for the plaintiff granting both reliefs. On appeal, this was affirmed by the High Court. This appeal by the defendant is against the judgment of the High Court. Although notices were served on the plaintiff when he was alive and, after his death, on the substituted plaintiff, they did not come before this Court to contest the defendant's appeal.

It is admitted that a partition case was filed in the District Court of Mount Lavinia (Case No. 54/94/P) in respect of the larger land including the subject matter of this action around the time of the institution of this case in the District Court. The defendant in his post argument written submissions states "on the plaintiff's evidence and on a balance of probability, it is clear that the said deed No. 2943 (P1) has been executed before the said partition case was registered a lis pendens." The plaintiff is said to be the 14th defendant in the partition action and the defendant is not a party to that action. It is not clear what happened in the partition case.

The plaintiff's evidence that this deed was executed only to be valid until he paid money (Rs. 125,000) for the development of the land by the defendant and that he did not want to part with the property is hard to believe. The defendant says he was not involved in developing this land or constructing a road across the land. The defendant says he withdrew the purchase price stated on the deed (Rs. 200,000) from the bank on the date the deed was executed (vide V6) and paid the same at the notary's office to the brother of the plaintiff who accompanied the plaintiff. In the attestation of the deed, the notary says that money was not paid before him. In any event, failure to pay consideration does not make the deed invalid although it might give rise to a different cause of action to recover the money (Jayawardena v. Amarasekera (1912) 15 NLR 280, Nona Kumara v. Abdul Cader (1946) 47 NLR 457, Pingamage v. Pingamage [2005] 2 Sri LR 370).

In the Kaduwela Magistrate's Court Case No. 21946 (vide V2 and V3) filed regarding the same transaction, the plaintiff did not take up the position that the deed is subject to a trust. In the Magistrate's Court case the plaintiff has promised to transfer the portion of land sold to the defendant by V6 after entering the final decree in the partition case. In my view, the plaintiff did not prove that the deed was subject to a trust.

As seen from the prayer to the plaint, the plaintiff filed this action claiming on the one hand that the deed is valid but subject to a trust in his favour and on the other hand that the deed is invalid on the ground of laesio enormis. These are not pleaded as alternative reliefs. The District Court granted both. These two reliefs cannot co-exist.

The plaintiff cannot succeed in this action. The plaintiff's action in the District Court shall stand dismissed.

The questions of law on which leave was granted and the answers thereto are as follows:

1. Have the learned judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law in failing to appreciate that the plaint of the plaintiff as presently constituted is not maintainable in law?
   Yes.
2. Have the learned judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals erred in law in holding that the defendant is holding the property in suit subject to a constructive trust in favour of the plaintiff and at the same time ordering a rescission of the sale of the said property to the defendant by the plaintiff?
   Yes.
3. In any event have the learned trial judge and the judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals erred in considering that the evidence placed before Court warrants a finding that the property in suit is held by the defendant subject to a constructive trust in favour of the plaintiff?
   Yes.
4. Have the learned trial judge and the learned judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals erred in law in failing to appreciate that on the evidence before Court, there are no grounds to order a rescission of the sale of the said property in suit to the defendant by the plaintiff?
   Yes.

I set aside the judgments of the District Court and the High Court and allow the appeal. No costs.

The above appeals were taken up for hearing as the parties informed court that the questions of law where Leave to Appeal were granted by this court are identical. Hence, both parties agreed to consolidate and take up the two appeals and to have one judgment in respect of both appeals.

Facts of the case

These two appeals were filed to set aside the two Orders of the learned High Court Judge dated 2nd of December, 2012 which refused to enforce an arbitral award made against the respondents-respondents (hereinafter referred to as the "respondents").

The 1st and 2nd respondents had entered into a Master Finance Lease Agreement bearing Agreement No. ML 06175 dated 27th of September, 2006 with the petitioner-appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "appellant-company"), who has been engaged in lease financing business to obtain lease finances to purchase equipment/vehicles from time to time. In terms of the said agreement, each vehicle obtained on a lease was added to it by a separate schedule made to the said agreement.

The 3rd and 4th respondents were the guarantors to the said Master Finance Lease Agreement and furnished an indemnity to secure the lease finance facilities given on the said agreement.

The said Master Finance Lease Agreement provided for the parties to enter into addenda to the said agreement when and where a vehicle is taken on a lease finance basis by the respondents. Such addenda were considered as part and parcel of the said Master Finance Lease Agreement.

Further, Clause 19 of the said agreement stated that, if the 1st and 2nd respondents fail to comply with the terms and conditions of the said agreement, the appellant-company may, inter alia, request the respondents to make all the payments due under the Master Finance Lease Agreement. Furthermore, if the said respondents fail to make payments, the appellant-company may terminate the said agreement.

Moreover, Article 36 of the said Master Finance Lease Agreement stated that in the event of a dispute arising from any default or non-observance of the terms and conditions contained in the said agreement by the 1st and 2nd respondents, including the default and/or delay in paying lease rentals, such disputes shall be submitted to arbitration.

The said the Master Finance Lease Agreement defined the term 'equipment schedule' as follows;

> "The term of each equipment schedule hereto is subject to any and all conditions and provisions set forth herein as may from time to time be amended. Each equipment schedule be substantially in the form annex hereto and made part hereof shall incorporate therein all the terms and conditions as Lessor and Lessee have agree upon such equipment schedule is enforceable according to the terms and conditions therein. In the event of a conflict between the provisions of this Master Lease Agreement and any equipment schedule hereto the provisions of equipment schedule shall prevail with respect to that equipment."
>
> [emphasis added]

Further, Clause 36 of the Master Finance Lease Agreement contained an arbitration agreement. It reads as follows;

"Article 36: Arbitration Clause

In the event of any default or non-observance by the Lessee of the terms and conditions contained in this Master Finance Lease Agreement including the default and/or delay in paying lease rentals or in any other case and in the event of any dispute, difference or question or matter which may from time to time and any time hereinafter arise or occur between Lessor and Lessee of their respective representatives or permitted assigns touching or concerning or arising out of, and in relation to or in respect of this Master Finance Lease Agreement or any provision matter or thing contained herein or the subject matter thereof, or the operation interpretation or construction hereof or of any clause hereof or as to the rights duties or liabilities of either party hereunder or in connection with the premises or their respective representatives or permitted assigns including all questions that may arise after the termination or cancellation of this lease, such disputes, differences or question or matter may, notwithstanding the remedies available under this Master Finance Lease Agreement or in law, be submitted for Arbitration by a sole Arbitrator to be appointed by the parties if such appointment is not practicable two arbitrators one to be appointed by the Lessor and the other by the Lessee and an additional Arbitrator to be appointed by the two Arbitrators and if either party refuses to appoint an arbitrator, by the sole arbitrator appointed by the other party."

[emphasis added]

After the parties entered into the said Master Finance Lease Agreement, at the request of the 1st and 2nd respondents, the appellant-company had purchased a Renault Prime Mover bearing registration No. 48–0044 described in the schedule (L 060263) to the Master Finance Lease Agreement for the purpose of leasing the same to the 1st and 2nd respondents.

Thereafter, on the following day, another lease finance facility was obtained by the 1st and 2nd respondents for the Tantri 40-foot trailer bearing chassis No. T–27737–06 under the said Master Finance Lease Agreement. In the second instance, the parties had executed an addendum to the said Master Finance Lease Agreement (L060273).

However, the respondents had failed and/or neglected to pay the monthly installments set out in the said Master Lease Financing Agreement in respect of both the equipment referred to in the schedules to the Master Finance Lease Agreement. Hence, the appellant-company had sent several Letters of Demand to the respondents, requesting them to pay the arrears.

As the respondents did not pay the arrears set out in the said Master Finance Lease Agreement, the disputes that arose from the non-payment of installments were referred to two separate arbitrations in terms of Article 36 of the said agreement by the appellant.

Both references to arbitration were taken up separately for arbitration, and the 1st respondent had participated in both of the said arbitrations and had moved for time to settle the claims. Accordingly, the arbitrator had granted time for the 1st respondent to reach a settlement. However, as the parties could not reach a settlement in both arbitrations, both arbitrations had proceeded and the appellants had filed evidence by way of two separate affidavits in both arbitral proceedings in support of their claims against the respondents. Thereafter, the learned Arbitrator made two separate awards in favour of the appellant-company on the 15th of February, 2011. Further, the said arbitral awards had been delivered to the respondents in terms of the Arbitration Act No. 11 of 1995 (hereinafter referred to as the "Arbitration Act").

Subsequently, the appellant-company had filed two separate applications in the High Court against the respondents for the enforcement of the said arbitral awards. In both the said applications the appellant had filed copies of the Master Finance Lease Agreement entered between the appellant and the 1st and 2nd respondents, schedules No. L 0602273 and L 060263 to the said agreement (filed separately in the relevant application), Guarantee and Indemnity for the Master Lease Agreement bearing contract No. ML 060175, Letters of Demands sent to the respondents, Notices of arbitration sent to the respondents, Notice sent by the Arbitration Centre to the respondents along with the registered Article, arbitral proceedings of 22nd of November 2010 and 14th of December, 2010, the arbitral awards dated 15th of February, 2011, and the proof of posting of the arbitral awards to the respondents. All the aforementioned documents were certified by the claimant company and an Attorney-at-Law prior to them filing in court.

Thereafter, the 1st, 2nd and 3rd respondents have filed an Answer supported by an Affidavit to the said applications objecting to the enforcement of the arbitral awards.

Further, both the said applications for the enforcement of arbitral awards were taken up together for inquiry, and the parties had made oral submissions. Thereafter, they had tendered their respective written submissions. In the submissions, the respondents, inter alia, submitted that the applications for enforcement of arbitral awards should not be allowed as it was not possible to have two arbitrations in respect of one arbitration agreement, and thus the arbitral awards made in the said arbitrations were against the public interest. Furthermore, the appellant-company had not filed a certified copy of the entire agreement between the parties along with the application for enforcement of the arbitral award. It is pertinent to note that both parties referred to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in support of their respective cases and requested the court to apply the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code in considering their cases.

Judgment of the High Court

Thereafter, the learned High Court Judge delivered one Order in respect of both the applications on the 2nd of December, 2013 refusing to enforce the arbitral awards on the basis that a copy of the arbitration agreement had not been filed in court by the appellant-company in terms of section 31(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act and two arbitrations had been held with respect to one agreement.

Questions of Law

Being aggrieved by the said Order of the learned High Court Judge, the appellant-company sought leave to appeal from this court, and this court granted leave to appeal on the following question of law:

> "Has the learned High Court Judge erred in his order dated 02.12.2013 in holding that the Petitioner was obliged to file a complete contract under section 31(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act No. 11 of 1995 in enforcement proceeding."

Further, the respondents raised the following the question of law;

> "whether the Petitioner has filed an original or a duly certified copy of the arbitration agreement."

The issues that need to be considered in the instant appeal are whether the appellant-company was required to file;

(a) the entire Master Finance Lease Agreement with schedules; or
(b) only the original arbitration agreement, or
(c) a certified copy of the arbitration agreement under section 31(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act No. 11 of 1995 along with the applications for enforcement of the arbitral awards.

Enforcement and setting aside of Arbitral Awards

Section 2 of the Arbitration Act states that all arbitral proceedings that commenced in Sri Lanka after the appointed date are governed by the said Act.

Arbitral proceedings commence by a party giving notice of arbitration to the other party to the arbitration agreement and referring the alleged dispute to arbitration. Thereafter, one or more Arbitrators are appointed by the parties to the arbitration agreement depending on the arbitration clause. Upon the arbitral tribunal being constituted, the arbitration proceedings will commence by giving notice to the parties to the arbitration agreement. Further, the arbitration proceedings are concluded the Arbitrator/s should deliver the arbitral award in writing and signed by the Arbitrator/s of the arbitral tribunal. Further, a copy of the said award should be served on the parties. Furthermore, an arbitral award is final and binding on the parties subject to applications that may be made under sections 31 and 32 of the Arbitration Act.

In terms of section 31(1) of the Arbitration Act, a party to an arbitration agreement pursuant to which an arbitral award is made may, within one year after the expiry of fourteen days of the making of the award, apply to the High Court for the enforcement of the award.

Section 31(2) of the Arbitration Act states;

> "An application to enforce the award shall be accompanied by –
> (a) The original of the award or a duly certified copy of such award; and > (b) the original arbitration agreement under which the award purports to have been made or a duly certified copy of such agreement*."*

Accordingly, in terms of section 31(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act, when filing an application to enforce an arbitral award, the party seeking to enforce the arbitral award is required to file the original arbitration agreement or a duly certified copy of such agreement on which the arbitral award was made along with the said application.

Furthermore, section 32 of the Arbitration Act sets out the procedure for making an application to the High Court for setting aside an arbitral award. In that, it states such an application may be made within sixty days of the receipt of the award. Further, the said section sets out the grounds on which an award can be set aside.

Moreover, where applications for the enforcement of an arbitral award and also to set aside an arbitral award are filed in the High Court, section 35 of the Arbitration Act requires to consolidate such applications and to be taken up together for inquiry. The said section was considered in Trinco Maritime (PVT) Limited v Ceylinco Insurance Co. Limited [2010] 1 SLR 163, where it was held that the law contemplates consolidation of applications made to set aside and to enforce the award.

In this regard, it is important to note that it is mandatory to comply with the time frame stipulated in sections 31 and 32 of the Arbitration Act. A similar view was expressed in Airport and Aviation Services (Sri Lanka) Ltd. v Buildmart Lanka (Pvt) Ltd [2010] 1 SLR 292, where it was held;

> "…… It is therefore quite clear that even on a plain reading of the section an application for the purpose of setting aside an arbitral award by the High Court must be made within a time period of sixty days and the said period is taken into account from the receipt of the award by the party making such application to the High Court…"

Further, a similar view was expressed in Lanka Orix Leasing Company Limited v Weeratunga Arachchige Piyasad, SC/Appeal/113/2014 (SC Minutes 5th of April, 2019).

However, prior to allowing an application for enforcement of an arbitral award, the court is required to satisfy that there is no cause to refuse the recognition and enforcement of the award, and the application is in conformity with the mandatory requirements set out in section 31(2) of the said Act. Further, a party who has been made a respondent to such an application is not precluded from drawing the attention of the court, if the petitioner has not complied with the mandatory requirements stipulated in the said section notwithstanding the fact that such a party has not filed an application to set aside the award in terms of section 32 of the said Act. In such instances, the court is required to take such matters into consideration when deciding the application for enforcement.

Has the appellant-company complied with section 31(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act?

In the instant appeal, the appellant-company has filed a copy of the arbitration agreement certified by an Attorney-at-Law on which notices of arbitration were given to the respondents along with the applications for the enforcement of the arbitral awards under consideration.

As stated above, appellant-company filed certified copies of the said Master Finance Lease Agreement and the relevant schedules (separately in each application), which contained the 'arbitration agreement' on which the dispute between the parties were referred to arbitration and the arbitral tribunal was established along with both the applications for enforcement of the awards. Particularly, Clause 36 of the aforesaid agreement contained the arbitration agreement where all the parties agreed to refer any disputes arising or concerning the said agreement settled by arbitration.

However, the learned High Court Judge had refused to allow the enforcement of both the arbitral awards on the basis that the entire agreement entered between the parties was not filed in court in terms of section 31(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act No. 11 of 1995 and two arbitrations cannot be held in respect of one arbitration Clause.

Section 31(2) of the Arbitration Act states*;*

> "An application to enforce the award shall be accompanied by –
>
> (a) the original of the award or a duly certified copy of such award; and
> (b) the original arbitration agreement under which the award purports to have been or a duly certified copy of such agreement.
>
> For the purposes of this subsection a copy of an award or of the arbitration agreement shall be deemed to have been duly certified if –
>
> (i) it purports to have been certified by the arbitral tribunal or, by a member of that tribunal, and it has not been shown to the Court that it was not in fact so certified; or > (ii) it has been otherwise certified to the satisfaction of the court."
> [emphasis added]

It is pertinent to note that section 31(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act does not require a party to file the complete contract/agreement in which the arbitration Clause is included in an application for enforcement of an arbitral award. On the contrary, the said section only requires the petitioner to file either the original arbitration agreement or a duly certified copy of such agreement.

Section 3(1) of the Arbitration Act states:

> "An arbitration agreement may be in the form of an arbitration clause in a contract or in the form of a separate agreement."
>
> [emphasis added]

Further, section 3(2) of the said Act states that an arbitration agreement should be in writing. In terms of the section 3(2), it shall be deemed to be in writing if it is contained in a document signed by the parties or in exchange of letters, telexes, telegrams or other means of telecommunication which provide a record of the agreement.

Furthermore, section 12 of the Arbitration Act states;

> "An arbitration agreement which forms part of another agreement shall be deemed to constitute a separate agreement when ruling upon the validity of that arbitration agreement for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the arbitral tribunal."

Hence, an arbitration Clause in an agreement or a contract is recognised as a separate contract, distinct and independent from the main contract. In the circumstances, section 31(2) of the Arbitration Act only requires to file either the original arbitration agreement or a duly certified copy of the arbitration agreement entered between the parties.

It is pertinent to note that in the matters under reference the parties did not enter into separate agreements/contracts for the purpose of obtaining the two lease financing facilities to purchase the prime mover and the trailer under reference. As stated above, there was one Master Finance Lease Agreement and two schedules to the said agreement which are part and parcel of the said agreement. Further, as stated above, the arbitration Clause was included in said Master Finance Lease Agreement and it was applicable to the entire agreement which include the said schedules to the agreement.

It is pertinent to note that, there can be circumstances where it is not possible to file the original arbitration agreement in court, including instances where there are multiple applications for enforcement of arbitral awards. Thus, the Arbitration Act has made provisions to cater to such instances by including a provision to file 'a duly certified copy' of the arbitration agreement with applications for the enforcement of arbitral awards. The phrase 'a duly certified copy' requires the court to satisfy itself that a copy of the original arbitration agreement has been filed in court. In the case of Kristley (Pvt) Limited v The State Timber Corporation [2002] 1 SLR 228 the copies of the awards tendered with the claimant's application certified by an Attorney-at-Law were held as "duly certified copies within the meaning of section 31(2)(ii) of the Arbitration Act. It was further held that even in a case where the copy of the award filed with the application is not a duly certified copy, the application for enforcement may not be summarily rejected without giving an opportunity to tender duly certified copy as the word "accompany" in section 31(2) has been included in the said section purposively and thus, it should be interpreted widely. In that judgment, Fernando, J held at pages 239 and 240;

> "The learned High Court Judge failed to give full effect to clause (ii) of section 31 (2). That clause unambiguously provides for a mode of certification additional to that prescribed by clause (i). But, for that clause certification by the Registrar of the Arbitration Centre would not have been acceptable. Clause (ii) requires the High Court in each case, having regard to the facts of the case, to decide whether the document is certified to its satisfaction. The learned Judge erred in laying down a general rule – founded on a virtual presumption of dishonesty – which totally excludes certification by an Attorney-at-Law regardless of the circumstances. The position might have been different if the application for enforcement had been rejected promptly on presentation, for then there might well have been insufficient reason to be satisfied that the copy was indeed a true copy: and that would have caused no injustice, as the claimant could have filed a fresh application. But, I incline to the view that even at that stage the application should not have been summarily rejected. The claimant should have been given an opportunity to tender duly certified copies interpreting "accompany" in section 31 (2) purposively and widely (as in Sri Lanka General Workers' Union v Samaranayake and Nagappa Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income Tax.) Undoubtedly, section 31 (2) is mandatory, but not to the extent that one opportunity, and one opportunity only, will be allowed for compliance. In the present case, however, the order was not made immediately, but only after the lapse of the period of one year and fourteen days allowed for an application for enforcement. By that time, the learned Judge had consolidated the proceedings: hence he could not have ignored the certified copies filed in the STC's application, which admittedly, were identical in all material respects to the copies tendered with the claimant's application. He had also to consider (even if he was not bound by it) the admission in the STC's statement of objections that those copies were "duly certified", as well as the fact that, by them, the claimant had also tendered copies certified in terms of clause (i). it was on all that material that the learned Judge had to decide whether the copies had been certified to his satisfaction. In deciding that issue, he was perfectly correct in noting that the Court had to ensure that it 'gave judgment according to the award" (cf section 31 (6)) : the object of section 31 (2) was to ensure that the High Court did have true copies of the award. It was not reasonable, on the facts of this case, to conclude that the copies initially filed were anything but true copies of the originals. There was not even the faintest suspicion or suggestion that they were inaccurate."

Furthermore, a careful consideration of section 12 of the said Act shows that the sole purpose of the requirement to file the arbitration agreement along with an enforcement agreement is to ascertain whether the arbitral tribunal had the jurisdiction to make the award sought to be conferred by the High Court.

Therefore, I am of the view that the learned High Court Judge erred in his Orders dated 2nd of December, 2013 when he held that the appellant-company is required to file the complete contract that contained the arbitration agreement in terms of section 31(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act when filing an application to enforce the arbitral award. Further, the learned High Court Judge erred in law and fact when he did not act on the certified copy of the arbitration agreement filed along with the application for enforcement by the appellant.

Is it possible to refer several disputes to arbitration based on one arbitration agreement?

Section 50 of the said Act defines the term "arbitration agreement" as follows;

> "Arbitration Agreement" means an agreement by the parties to submit to arbitration all or certain disputes which have arisen or which may arise between them in respect of a defined legal relationship whether contractual or not."

A careful consideration of the said section shows that unlike civil actions filed in the District Court, the Arbitration Act provides a simple and flexible procedure to resolve disputes between the parties that are subject to the said Act. It is pertinent to note that the phrase "all or certain disputes which have arisen or which may arise between them" allows the parties to refer all or some of the disputes between them to arbitration. Further, the phrase "which have arisen or which may arise between them*"* allows the parties to refer disputes when and where they arise.

Thus, the appellant-company was entitled in law to refer the disputes arising from or concerning the arbitration Clause in the said Master Lease Financing Agreement jointly or separately to arbitration to resolve the disputes between the parties. In view of the above, I am of the view that the learned High Court Judge erred in law by holding that it is not possible to have multiple arbitrations based on one arbitration agreement.

Does the Arbitration Act No. 11 of 1995 allow to file an answer in enforcement of arbitral awards?

It is noteworthy to mention that in the instant appeals, the 1st, 2nd and 3rd respondents have filed an answer supported by an affidavit objecting to the enforcement of both arbitral awards. However, there is no provision in the Arbitration Act to file an answer in an application for enforcement of an arbitral award. As stated above, only objections can be filed by a respondent in such an application.

Conclusion

In the circumstances, I am of the view that the following questions of law should be answered as follows;

Has the learned High Court Judge erred in his order dated 02.12.2013 in holding that the Petitioner was obliged to file a complete contract under section 31(2)(b) of the Arbitration Act No. 11 of 1995 in enforcement proceeding.

Yes

Whether the Petitioner has filed an original or a duly certified copy of the arbitration agreement.

Yes, the appellant has filed a duly certified copy of the arbitration agreement.

Therefore, both appeals are allowed. I set aside the Orders of the learned High Court Judge dated 2nd of December, 2012 and grant the reliefs prayed for in the petitions No. SC/Appeal/42/2015 and No. SC/Appeal/46/2015 filed in the High Court.

Further, I direct the learned High Court Judge to enter decree in terms of section 31(6) of the Arbitration Act.

The Registrar is directed to send this judgment to the relevant High Court to act in terms of the law.

I order no costs.

JUDGEMENT

Aluwihare PC, J.,

1. The Plaintiff-Petitioner-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 'Plaintiff') filed action in the District Court of Badulla seeking a declaration of title to the subject matter of the action and to eject the now deceased, original defendant and all those holding under him. The Substituted Defendant-Respondent-Petitioner-Appellants (hereinafter referred to as the 'Appellants') state that the now deceased original Defendant (the husband and father of the present 1st and 2nd Appellants respectively) filed answer seeking the dismissal of the action. After the trial, by judgment dated 22nd May 2001, the Learned District Judge of Badulla dismissed the action of the Plaintiff.

2. Aggrieved by the said judgment the Plaintiff appealed to the High Court of Civil Appeals (Uva Province), and having considered the appeal the Learned Judges of the High Court by its judgment dated 11.03.2010, held that the Learned District Judge had misdirected himself in his findings. Accordingly, the High Court set aside the findings of the Learned District Judge and answered the issues in favour of the Plaintiff.

3. The judgment of the High Court was pronounced on 11th March 2010 in open court and the journal entry of that date states as follows;

   "Respondent and his registered Attorney present in court. Appellant and his registered Attorney absent and unrepresented.

   Appellant not present. No appearance. Defendant-Respondent present. Mr. Ratwatte AAL for the Respondent. Judgment pronounced in open court."

   From the foregoing, it appears that it was the Plaintiff and his Attorney who were not present and not the Defendant. The record bears out that the learned Attorney-at-Law for the Defendant had informed the court that he might consider appealing against the judgment. It transpired, however, that the Defendant had passed away about 2 months prior to the date on which the judgment of the High Court was delivered and this fact was not disclosed to the court, although the Attorney-at-Law along with another who was representing the Defendant were in court on the day the judgment was delivered.

4. The present Appellants (heirs of the deceased Defendant) state that when the appeal was taken up for the delivery of the judgment, there was no intimation to the Court, of the death of the original Defendant and the Uva Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal delivered its judgment (marked 'C') on 11th March 2010.

5. The Appellants state that immediately upon coming to know of the delivery of the said judgment, the 1D Appellant, the son of the deceased original Defendant, had by way of a motion dated 20th April 2010 (marked 'D') brought to the notice of the Uva Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal that the said judgment has been delivered after the death of the original Defendant and moved that he be substituted in the room of the deceased Defendant. The Plaintiff states that the 1D

Appellant did not seek a re-hearing of the case or a re-pronouncement of the judgment but simply sought to have himself substituted in the room of the deceased Defendant.

6. When the motion referred to was supported before the Uva Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal, the court directed the 1D Appellant to submit written submissions. Thereafter, by order dated 11th May 2010 the High Court refused the 1D Appellant's application on the ground that according to the journal entry dated 11th March 2010, the deceased original Defendant or someone on his behalf was present and that the Registered Attorney-at-Law has represented and taken notice on behalf of the Deceased Defendant.

7. Thereafter, an application was preferred to the Court of Appeal by the 1D Appellant to revise the aforesaid order of the High Court of Civil Appeal. The Plaintiff states that instead of filing an appeal to the Supreme Court challenging the original judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court, and subsequent order dated 11th March 2010 relating to substitution, the Appellant sought to set aside both the judgment and the order by a revision application to the Court of Appeal.

8. The Appellants state that they withdrew the said application (before the Court of Appeal) subsequently, as it was the duty of the Plaintiff to take the necessary steps to substitute the proper person in the room of the deceased original Defendant. The Plaintiff, however, maintains in the written submissions that the Plaintiff took up a preliminary objection to the application on the grounds that as per the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 54 of 2006, the Court of Appeal does not have the jurisdiction to hear and determine the appeal. The Plaintiff states that it was due to the said preliminary objection, the counsel for the Appellants had withdrawn the said appeal.

9. On 30th June 2011, the Plaintiff made an application to the District Court of Badulla under section 341 of the Civil Procedure Code to substitute the Appellants in the room of the deceased original Defendant. The Appellants state that they were purportedly substituted in the room of the deceased original Defendant for the purpose of executing the decree and thereafter the Plaintiff filed a Petition dated 30th September 2011 to execute the decree.

10. The Learned District Judge directed those notices be issued on the Petitioners (the present Appellants) on 06th January 2012, on which date the Appellants filed statement of objections to the Plaintiff's application on the basis that since the judgment of the Uva Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal was delivered after the death of the deceased Defendant, there is no valid judgment in favour of the Plaintiff. The Learned District Judge had made an order on the same day, rejecting the objection of the Appellants and ordered the execution of the writ.

11. To have the said order of the District Judge referred to above set aside, the Appellants filed an application for leave to appeal in the High Court of Civil Appeal. The application was supported on 12th July 2012. After hearing submissions from both parties, the Learned High Court Judge, by order dated 06th September 2012, dismissed the application.

12. Being aggrieved by the said dismissal, the Appellants preferred two Leave to Appeal applications to this court and were granted Leave to Appeal. The Leave to Appeal application numbered SC HC CA LA No. 420/2012 was concerned with the application UVA/HCCA/BDL/LA/03/2012 while the Leave to Appeal application SC HC CA LA No. 421/2012, was concerned with the revision application UVA/HCCA/BDL/REV/04/2012. Leave to Appeal was granted for SC HC CA LA No. 420/2012 as SC Appeal 45/2013 and for SC HC CA LA No. 421/2012 as SC Appeal 44/2013. In addition, interim relief was granted to the Appellant as per prayer (g) of the Petition staying the execution of the decree until the final determination of this application. SC Appeal 44/2013 and SC Appeal 45/2013 i.e. the present matter, were supported together. The parties having agreed to abide by a single judgement, the decision in the present matter should be considered as concluding SC Appeal 44/2013 as well.

13. The questions of law on which Leave to Appeal was granted are stated in paragraph 19 of the petition as follows;

i. Whether the Learned High Court Judges have erred in law by failing to consider the fact that the judgement dated 11. 03. 2010 of the Uva Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal of Badulla has no effect in law and is a nullity as the same has been delivered after the death of the original Defendant before the steps being taken to substitute the heirs?

ii. Whether the Learned High Court Judges have erred in law by failing to consider the fact that the District Court has no jurisdiction to execute a decree in which the judgment was delivered after a death of a party and in the absence of a substitution, it is of no consequence that the proceedings had been formally conducted for are coram non judice*?*

iii. Whether the Learned High Court Judges have erred in law by failing to consider the fact that the judgment entered against the dead party is void and a nullity?

iv. Whether the Learned High Court Judges have erred in law by failing to consider the fact that the proceedings being void, there is no judgment and a decree to be executed under section 341 of the Civil Procedure Code?

v. Whether the Learned High Court Judges have erred in law by failing to consider the fact that due to the failure on the part of the Respondent to substitute the Defendant at the correct stage the appellants have been deprived of their statutory right to prefer an appeal against the judgment of the appeal bearing No. UVA/HCCA/BDL/18/2001 (F)?

vi. Whether the Learned High Court Judges misconceived in law in holding that the application of the Appellants is res judicata*?*

14. Upon considering the questions of law referred to in the preceding paragraph, it appears that the issues raised in the said questions of law are intrinsically interwoven and the crux of the matter is contained in the questions no. (i) and (iii) of paragraph 19. That is, whether a judgment entered against a dead party is void and a nullity and if so, whether the judgement of the High Court of Civil Appeal has no effect in law and is a nullity.

15. The death of the original Defendant prior to the delivery of the judgment of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal means that there was no (live) defendant before the court. As such the judgment of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal is a nullity and is coram non judice. In Ittepana v. Hemawathie 1981 1 SLR 319 at page 483, Justice Sharvananda recognized the 'jurisdiction of persons' as one of the three heads of jurisdiction necessary for a judgment to be valid. His Lordship, as he then was, cited Black on Judgments at page 261 to explain the 'jurisdiction of persons'; "It [the court] cannot act upon persons who are not legally before it, upon one who is not a party to the suit… upon a defendant who has never been notified of the proceedings." His Lordship further cited Black to illuminate the effect that the lack of jurisdiction would have on a judgment. "If the court has no jurisdiction, it is of no consequence that the proceedings had been formally conducted, for they are coram non judice*. A judgment entered by such court is void and a mere nullity.*"

16. In the present case, at the stage of the first appeal, the original Defendant had passed away after the conclusion of the proceedings, but before the delivery of the judgment. As such the Defendant, being alive upto the point of the judgment being reserved, has been present and represented before the High Court. Although there was no live defendant before the court at the time of the delivery of the judgment, the Defendant having been present and represented before the High Court in the abovementioned manner, the judgment, rather than becoming an outright nullity, became abated. Subsequently, it becomes necessary to effect substitution and repronounce the judgment, allowing the dissatisfied party to appeal against the judgment if it so wishes and the right to sue survives.

17. The Appellants submit that the death or change of status of a party to an appeal makes the case record defective. To support this contention section 760A of the Civil Procedure Code is cited;

"760A. Where at any time after the lodging of an appeal in any civil action, proceeding or matter, the record becomes defective by reason of the death or change of status of a party to the appeal, the Court of Appeal may in the manner provided in the rules made by the Supreme Court for that purpose, determine who, in the opinion of the court, is the proper person to be substituted or entered on the record in place of, or in addition to, the party who has died or undergone a change of status, and the name of such person shall thereupon be deemed to be substituted or entered of record as aforesaid."

18. I would like to refer to a judgment of the Court of Appeal Rannaide v. Priyanka CA Appeal No 1015/1993(F) decided on 26.10.2007 (2007 Bar Association Law Reports at page 97) where the effect of section 760A was considered. Black's Law Dictionary (8th Edition) was cited to state that an 'absolute nullity' is incurable, and that an 'absolute nullity' could be defined as "an act that is void because it is against public policy, law or order." On that basis the decision of the appellate court was held to be an absolute nullity due to being against law as not effecting a substitution was contrary to section 760A.

19. The Appellants relied on the decision of Gamaralalage Karunawathie v. Godayalage Piyasena and Others (2011) 1 SLR 171 in support of their arguments. As the facts of the case in Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra) are somewhat similar to the present case, I wish to refer to the facts of that case before discussing the ratio of Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra). This was a partition action and during the pendency of the case and prior to the delivery of the judgement by the District Court, the 15th Respondent had died and no steps were taken to substitute the said party. Thereafter, the judgement was challenged before the High Court of Civil Appeals and while the appeal was pending, the 2nd Respondent had passed away, before the judgement was delivered. Again, no substitution was effected before the delivery of the High Court Judgement. Her Ladyship Shirani Bandaranayke CJ, upon analyzing Section 760A of the Civil Procedure Code, and two decisions of the Indian Supreme Court, which I have referred to below, held "Accordingly, it is evident that both those judgments are ineffective and therefore each judgment would be rejected as a nullity. For the said reason the judgment of the High Court dated 13.10.2009 and the judgment of the District Court of Kegalle dated 20.05.2005 are both set aside".

20. In the case of Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra) Her ladyship observed further that; "When a party to a case has died during the pendency of that case, it would not be possible for the court to proceed with that matter without bringing in the legal representatives of the deceased in his place. No sooner a death occurs of a party before court, his counsel loses his position in assisting court, as along with the said death and without any substitution he has no way in obtaining instructions."

21. Drawing from the Indian case law the Appellants cited the State of Punjab v. Nathu Ram (AIR 1962 SC 89) judgment to state that after the death of a party, the proceedings against the party abates. Chief Justice Shirani Bandaranayake in Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra) cited an analysis of the State of Punjab v. Nathu Ram provided in Swaran Singh Puran Singh and another v. Ramditta Badhwa (dead) and others (AIR 1969 Punjab & Haryana 216). Two propositions made therein are relevant to the present case. Firstly, "On the death of a respondent, an appeal abates only against the deceased, but not against the other surviving respondents." which specifies that an appeal abates on the death of the respondent. Secondly, that "the abatement of an appeal means not only that the decree between the appellant and the deceased respondent has become final, but also as a necessary corollary that the Appellate Court cannot in any way modify that decree directly or indirectly. At that stage, the question arises, as to how and what are the steps that have to be taken in order to cure the defect."

22. Explaining the steps to take after the abatement of appeal, Her Ladyship referred to the Indian judgments Kanailal Manna and Others v. Bhabataran Santra and Others (AIR 1970 Calcutta 99) and Achhar Singh and Others v. Smt. Ananti (AIR 1971 Punjab & Haryana 477). In both these judgments it was held that where an appeal becomes a nullity due to being passed in ignorance of the death of one of the defendants during the pendency of that appeal (as in the present case, subject to the distinction that in the present case the Defendant had passed away only after the judgment was reserved) and when that appeal had abated totally, the proper course is to set aside the decree and to remand the case to the court where the abatement took place. It was further stated in both cases that if there is an entitlement, it could be kept open for the parties concerned to take steps to get the abatement set aside. On the strength of these judgments, the case was sent back to the District Court for the appellant to take steps for substitution.

23. The Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra) judgment was later declared per incuriam by a five-judge bench of the Supreme Court in Bulathsinhala Arachchige Indrani Mallika v. Bulathsinhala Arachchige Siriwardane of Dummalasooriya SC Appeal 160/2016 [SC minutes 02.12.2022] as the decision was made without considering the applicable provisions of the Partition Act. In the case of Bulathsinhala Arachchige Indrani Mallika (supra), the court observed; "The judgment of the Supreme Court is based on a series of Indian authorities which are irrelevant in the teeth of our express statutory provisions. (emphasis added)" (at page 26). Although the ratio in Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra) may not be applicable to partition actions in view of the domestic statutory provisions exclusively applicable to such actions, I am of the view, however, that the decision in Gamaralalage Karunawathie (supra) is sound law as far as the instant case is concerned.

24. While the position is such, I would like to consider here the contention of the Plaintiff that the provisions of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 54 of 2006 are applicable to the present matter.

25. The Plaintiff contends that by virtue of section 5 of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 54 of 2006, if a party is dissatisfied with a judgment and/or an order of the Civil Appellate High Court the only forum available to them to challenge the said judgment is the Supreme Court. Section 5 of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 54 of 2006 reads as follows;

"5C. (1) An appeal shall lie directly to the Supreme Court from any judgment, decree or order pronounced or entered by a High Court established by Article 154P of the Constitution in the exercise of its jurisdiction granted by section 5A of this Act, with leave of the Supreme Court first had and obtained. The leave requested for shall be granted by the Supreme Court, where in its opinion the matter involves a substantial question of law or is a matter fit for review by such Court.

(2) The Supreme Court may exercise all or any of the powers granted to it by paragraph (2) of Article 127 of the Constitution, in regard to any appeal made to the Supreme Court under subsection (1) of this section."

26. The Appellants cited the ratio of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Abeysinghe v. Abeysekera (1995) 2 SLR 104 to contend that where the judgment entered is void and a nullity "the person affected can apply to have the same set aside ex debito-justitiae in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of the court." However, this ratio has to be considered with Abeygunasekara v. Wijesekara (2002) 2 SLR page 269 on which the Plaintiff relied. In the latter case the court held that where specific provisions have been made, the court cannot exercise its inherent powers contrary to such specific provisions. "I am inclined to take the view that inherent power of Court could be invoked only where provisions have not been made, but where provision has been made and are provided in s. 754 (2) CPC inherent power of this Court cannot be invoked; inherent powers cannot be invoked to disregard express statutory provisions." (Somawansa, J.)

27. I am of the view that the contention of the Plaintiff- Respondent that by virtue of section 5 of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act the Supreme Court is the exclusive forum available to a party dissatisfied with a judgment and/or order of a Civil Appellate High Court pronounced in the exercise of its jurisdiction granted by section 5A, is correct. Section 5A confers Provincial High courts with "appellate and revisionary jurisdiction in respect of judgments, decrees and orders delivered and made by any District Court or a Family Court within such Province and the appellate jurisdiction for the correction of all errors in fact or in law, which shall be committed by any such District Court or Family Court, as the case may be." In light of the specific provisions made in that regard by the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act, the inherent jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal cannot be invoked.

28. The present case warrants to be dealt with in view of the effect of the above legal provisions. It is unfortunate that the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals took an easy way out when they were put on notice that the Defendant-Respondent had already passed away at the point they delivered the judgement. It is rudimentary that in such an eventuality the proceedings become abated until such time substitution is effected. The court had only to direct the parties to substitute the deceased party and re-pronounce the judgement which step, regrettably, the learned judges were not bothered to take. Furthermore, as the High Court had overturned the decision of the District Court, the Defendants were deprived of their legal entitlement of pursuing the remedies that were available to them under the law. This case has taken a long and winding path from one Court to another due to the learned High Court Judges lightly brushing aside the application made before it to have the deceased Defendant substituted.

29. I note with dismay the observation made by the learned judges of the High Court in their order in refusing the application for substitution made by the son of the Defendant in spite of the fact that they were put on notice that the Defendant had passed away. The learned judges stated that "the Registered Attorney-at-Law has represented and taken notice of the judgement on behalf of the Deceased Defendant." It is fundamental that with the demise of a party to a case, the proxy granted to an Attorney loses its force and in effect the Defendant could not have been represented by an 'instructing attorney'. Section 27(2) of the Civil Procedure Code clearly stipulates the circumstances under which an appointment of a registered attorney may lose its force. The said subsection makes it clear that, one such instance would be after an appointment under subsection (1) is filed, the appointment of the registered attorney shall only be in force until 'the client dies'.

30. In order to appreciate the arguments placed before us on behalf of the Plaintiff, for ease of reference I shall restate the sequence of the judgements delivered and orders made by different courts;

(i) Judgement delivered by the High Court of Civil Appeals dated 11th March 2010, in favour of the Plaintiff, overturning the judgment of the District Court.

(ii) Order made by the High Court of Civil Appeals dated 11th May 2010 refusing the application to substitute the deceased defendant.

(iii) Order made by the District Court of Badulla dated 6th January 2012 overruling the objection raised by the substituted-Defendants against executing the decree on the basis that there is no valid judgement.

(iv) Order made by the High Court of Civil Appeals dated 6th September 2012, refusing the leave to appeal application of the substituted-Defendants challenging the order of order of the learned District judge referred to (iii) above.

31. The present application was filed challenging the dismissal of the leave to appeal application made before the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal Badulla [(iv) above] seeking to have the Bench Order by the District Court of Badulla [(iii) above] ordering the execution of writ following the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal judgment dated 11th March 2010 [(ii) above]. The Plaintiff-Respondent to the present application contends that the instant application should be confined to reversing the said order dated 06th January 2012, and not extend to reversing the said judgment (dated 11th March 2010).

32. The Plaintiff relied on Candappa v. Ponnambalampillai (1993) 1 SLR 184 to state that a party cannot be permitted to present in appeal a case different from that presented to the lower court. In Candappa (supra) it was held that "A party cannot be permitted to present in appeal a case different from that presented in the trial court where matters of fact are involved which were not in issue at the trial such case not being one which raises a pure question of law."

33. In the matter before us, I do not think the issue of reversing the judgement of the High Court of Civil Appeals (dated 11th March 2010) would arise, and as such there is no necessity to consider the arguments placed before this court on behalf of the Plaintiff, regarding the said issue.

34. For the reasons set out above, I hold that with the death of the original Defendant, the proceedings became abated and what proceeded thereafter has no legal effect. I hold further that a judgment entered against a dead party after the judgment is reserved but prior to the delivery of the same is abated and as such the judgement of the High Court of Civil Appeal dated 11th March 2011 has no effect in law. Accordingly, I answer the questions of law referred to in subparagraphs (i) and (ii) of paragraph 19 of the Petition referred to above in the affirmative. Accordingly, the appeal is allowed.

35. Upon perusal of the proceedings before the High Court of Civil Appeals, it is clear that the written submissions in connection with the appeal challenging the District Court judgement in DC L/752 had been filed on 28th October 2008 and the matter had been taken up for argument on 23rd July 2009. The arguments had been concluded on the same day and judgement was reserved. Not only the original Defendant had been alive but was also represented before the court. Thus, there is no question about his interest in the appeal being adequately safeguarded.

36. In the circumstances I make the following orders;

(a) The order made by the Uva High Court of Civil Appeals holden in Badulla dated 11.05.2010 in case No. UVA/HCCA/BDL/18/2001(F) refusing the application to effect substitution is hereby set aside.

Judgement

Aluwihare, PC, J,

(1) This matter which was argued before the Court of Appeal was decided on a preliminary issue and as such the facts referred to here are confined, to the extent necessary to the issue in question.

Factual Background

(2) The Plaintiff-Respondent-Petitioner-Appellant, [hereinafter the Plaintiff] jointly with his now deceased father who was the 1st Plaintiff, filed action against the Defendant-Appellant-Respondent [hereinafter referred to as the Defendant] seeking a declaration of title to the land described in the Schedule "B" to the plaint upon the deeds pleaded in the plaint, for an order permitting the erection of a boundary fence separating the lands occupied by the plaintiffs and the defendant and to have the defendant ejected from the land described in Schedule "B" to the plaint, and for damages and Costs.

(3) The Defendant by his amended answer dated 28th January 1992 took up the position that his father J.A.Stephen Appuhamy and he were entitled the entire land described in the Schedule to the said amended answer and depicted in Plan No. 5026 dated 3.9.1986 marked "P7" by uninterrupted and undisturbed possession for well over the prescriptive period and in addition, the Defendant also took up the position that there was a misjoinder of parties and causes of action and that the plaint was contrary to Section 35 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code and moved to have the plaintiffs' action dismissed.

(4) By the judgment dated 4th July 2000 the learned Additional District Judge entered judgment for the plaintiffs as prayed for in the plaint with the exception that the damages in prayer (d) to the plaint were restricted to Rs.2500/-.

(5) The land described in Schedule "B" of the plaint is lot 1 of Koangahawatte depicted in plan no. 159 dated 2nd March, 1968 made by K.A.G. Amarasinghe

Licensed Surveyor, which is in extent of 1 acre 1 rood and 9 perch. The Plaintiff and the deceased Plaintiff in the plaint alleged that the property described in the Schedule "A" to the plaint was owned by the Deceased Plaintiff and his brothers and thereafter the deceased Plaintiff and his brothers, divided the said property by an amicable partition and in terms of the said division the Deceased Plaintiff claimed that he became the absolute owner of the property described in Schedule "B" to the plaint.

(6) The Deceased Plaintiff and the Plaintiff further stated that the Deceased Plaintiff by deed no. 8015 dated 1.3.1970 gifted the said property to the Plaintiff subject to the life interest of the Deceased Plaintiff.

(7) The plaintiff averred that a portion to the north west of the property described in Schedule "A" of the plaint at the time of the said division of the property was reserved for one J. A. Stephen Appuhamy and both the Deceased Plaintiff and the Plaintiff alleged that the Defendant around September 1985, removed a fence and caused damage to certain trees situated in the Plaintiffs' land and the said action of the Defended led to the institution of this action before the District Court.

(8) The Defendant in his amended answer stated that his father and he, possessed a portion of the land depicted in plan no. 5026. The Defendant described the land as a property of 1 rood and 1.2 perches in extent, depicted in plan no. 2635 dated 29th December 1988 made by R. I. Fernando Licensed Surveyor. The Defendant claimed ownership by prescriptive title to this portion of land, whilst raising an objection that the Deceased Plaintiff and the Plaintiff had wrongfully joined causes of action in violation of Section 35(1) of the Civil Procedure Code.

(9) At the trial, 2 admissions, 10 issues on behalf of the Plaintiff and 4 issues on behalf of the Defendant were recorded. The Plaintiff closed his case by calling the brother of the Appellant, Ariyaratne Nanayakkara as a witness and reading in evidence documents marked P1 to P7a. On behalf of the Respondent, one Samarasena Senarath and one Wijerathna Arachchige Nimalsena were called in to give evidence.

(10) The District Court on 4th July 2000 entered judgment for the Plaintiff, granting reliefs prayed for, subject to the restriction of damages to Rs. 2,500/- in prayer (d) of the Plaint. Being aggrieved by the said judgement, the Defendant appealed therefrom to the Court of Appeal.

(11) The Defendant in his petition of appeal dated 17th August 2000 has set out ten grounds of appeal numbered (a) to (j). By judgement dated 23.10.2013, the Court of Appeal held that the Plaintiff's action did not comply with Section 35(1) of the Civil Procedure Code and proceeded to set aside the judgment of the District Court without addressing any of the other issues raised by the Defendant.

(12) Being aggrieved by the said Judgement of the Court of Appeal, the Plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court. On 17.03.2014, this Court granted Special Leave to Appeal on the question of law set out in Sub-paragraph (a) of paragraph 17 of the Petition of the Appellant [Plaintiff] dated 02.12.2013. The court, however, was of the opinion that the issue on which the Court of Appeal decided the appeal and the question of law on which special leave was granted could not be reconciled. In the circumstances with the consent of the learned counsel who represented the parties it was agreed that, instead of the question of law on which special leave was granted on 02. 12. 2013, the appropriate questions that should be considered by this court are the questions of law that are referred to in sub-paragraphs (g) and (h) of paragraph 17 of the Petition. Accordingly, by order dated 30.03.2021, this Court resolved to consider the questions of law referred to in the sub-paragraph (g) and (h) of paragraph 17, instead of paragraph (a).

The said questions of law referred to in the said sub -paragraphs are reproduced below,

(g) Did the Court of Appeal err by failing to appreciate that this action of the Plaintiff was for the recovery of land within the meaning of section 35(1) of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the prayers (a), (b) and (c) in the plaint were prayers only for the recovery of land and that therefore, so far as the said three prayers are concerned, there was no necessity to obtain leave under the said provisions of law;

(h) So far as prayers (d) and (e) in the plaint are concerned, was there no necessity to obtain leave of court as the said two prayers came within section 35(1)(b), and accordingly there was no necessity to obtain leave of court to include them in the prayer to the plaint, as held by the District Court [p.160].

(13) The learned counsel for the Plaintiff contended that in deciding the cause of action on which a Plaintiff came to court, it is necessary to examine the plaint as a whole, including all its averments and reliefs prayed for. He further contended that on a plain reading of the plaint, the action instituted by the Plaintiff cannot be understood as an action for the definition of boundaries. He maintained that the court of appeal gravely erred in holding that the present action is an action for the definition of boundaries, even though several ingredients needed to be pleaded in an action for the definition of boundaries are not found in the plaint. He submitted that all the prayers set out in the Plaint are based on the title of the Plaintiff, and thus the action constitutes a rei vindicatio action. His position was that the relief prayed for, namely permission to erect a fence on the common boundary is part of and in furtherance of the "recovery of immovable property" within the meaning of section 35 of the Code. It was also submitted that if the relief for the erection of a fence on the common boundary was wrongly included in the prayer of the plaint because leave of the court under Section 35(1) of the Code was not obtained by the Plaintiff, only that particular relief should have been refused, without a dismissal of the action in its entirety.

(14) The learned Presidents' Counsel for the Respondent argued that paragraph [12] of the Plaint as well as prayer (b) taken together with prayers (a) and (c) of the Plaint make it clear that the Appellant is attempting to combine an action for declaration of title and ejectment, with an action for the definition of boundaries. He submitted that this is contrary to Section 35(1) of the Code since the Plaintiff has not first obtained leave from the Court to combine such actions. He noted that the Defendant by their answer dated 24th April 1987 has raised this objection. The learned Presidents' Counsel also referred to several decided judgements in support of the contention that an action for the definition of boundaries cannot be combined for an action for declaration of title. These judgements will be analysed later in this judgment. Accordingly, it was the Defendant's submission that the judgement of the Court of Appeal be upheld and that this appeal be dismissed.

(15) The observation made by the Court of appeal [page 3 of the judgement] was that; the Plaintiff has sought to combine a rei vindicatio action with an action for definition of boundaries and proceeded to hold that "It clearly appears from prayer (a) of the plaint that the Respondent [the Plaintiff] has sought a judgement declaring him as the owner of the land described in the schedule "B" to the Plaint. In contrary to the said relief the Respondent, in prayer 'b' of the plaint, has sought to erect the boundary fence between the Appellant's [the Defendant] and the Respondent's lands. It seems from paragraph 12 and prayer 'b' and 'c' of the plaint that the Respondent's action is for Definition of boundaries."

(16) The Court of Appeal further observed that "It was apparent from the evidence of the Respondent [the Plaintiff] that there was a fence between the two lands and the Appellant [the Defendant] has destroyed the said fence and has encroached the Respondent's [Plaintiff's] land. Hence it was clear that there had been an ascertainable common boundary between the two lands and such boundary had been obliterated subsequently. Apart from that the Appellant has encroached the Respondent's land. But in an action for definition of boundaries

a plaintiff cannot seek to eject a person from a land or from a portion of land which has been encroached by a Defendant." [Emphasis added]

(17) It is evident from the above observation, that the Court of Appeal has proceeded on the basis that Plaintiff's action was one for definition of boundaries. Therefore, the first issue to be ascertained by this court is whether the Plaintiffs, by their Plaint sought an action for the definition of boundaries in addition to an action for declaration of title.

(18) The Court of Appeal has concluded that the action is one for definition of boundaries by referring to paragraph 12 and prayers (a), (b), (c) of the Plaint. Paragraph 12 merely sets out that a cause of action has accrued to the Plaintiff to sue for the reliefs claimed by the Plaint. By prayer (a) of the Plaint, the Plaintiffs had sought a declaration of title to the land described in the Schedule "B" to the plaint. By prayer (b) they had sought [for permission] to erect a boundary fence separating the lands occupied by the Plaintiffs and the Defendant. By prayer (c) she has sought the ejectment of the defendant from the land described in the Schedule "B" to the plaint, after the erection of the said boundary fence.

(19) Prayers (a) and (c) of the Plaint, namely, for declaration of title to the land in question, and ejectment of defendants from the same land, are standard relieves prayed in a re vindicatio action. In reality it is only prayer (c) of the Plaintiff's plaint that may not strictly fall within the standard reliefs one would pray for in such an action. Considering the totality of the evidence led and the attended circumstances, however, I am unable to agree that prayer (c) along with averments in paragraph 12 of the Plaint one could conclude that the Plaintiff's action was one for definition of boundaries.

(20) On behalf of the Defendant, several decisions were cited in support of their preposition that an action for definition of boundaries cannot be joined with an action for declaration of title. However, in all those cases cited, the plaintiffs have sought a definition or demarcation of a boundary through the prayer.

In Somawathie and Others v Illangakoon [2013] 1 Sri L.R. 94, at page 96 it is stated that,

"In the prayer of the plaint, the plaintiffs have prayed for an order demarcating the boundaries of their land, ejectment of the defendant from that land and for damages as quantified in prayer 'C' of the plaint." [Emphasis added]

In Leelawathie hamine and another v Gnanasiri [1989] 1 Sri L.R. 322, it is stated at page 322,

"The plaintiffs in the prayer to the plaint have asked that their western boundary be defined according to title plan No. 290399."

In the case of M. Jacolis Apphu v W.A. David Perera (1967) 69 NLR 548, at page 549 it is stated,

"The plaintiff-respondent to this appeal, claiming to be the owner of the allotment of land depicted as lot 4B of Plan No. 1194 (P8) dated 8.2.1962 made by A. R. C. Kiel, Licensed Surveyor, instituted this action for a definition of the western boundary of that allotment, namely the boundary separating that allotment from the allotment marked Lot 4A on the said plan." Emphasis added]

(21) These cases are quite distinct from the present action, as the Plaint in the present action does not contain a prayer for the definition or demarcation of a particular boundary to a land. Prayer (b) is for an erection of a boundary fence separating the Plaintiff's land from the Defendant's. The said prayer in my view does not denote that the Plaintiff's action is one for the definition of boundaries.

(22) A complete picture of the nature of the Plaintiff's action may be gleaned by referring to the issues and admissions of the parties. The following issues have been raised by the Plaintiff and the Defendant at the commencement of the trial,

Issues by the Plaintiff:

1. Were the 1st Plaintiff and his brothers the owners of the land described in Schedule "A" to the Plaint by virtue of Deed No. 699 dated 05.02.1951 attested by B.B.P. Wijewardena Notary Public and Deed No. 6454 dated 30.11.1925 attested by S.J.V. Wickremasuriya Notary Public?

2. Did the 1st Plaintiff and his brothers, by the deed of partition No. 40 dated 29.08.1968 attested by D.A.F.D. Jayawardena Notary Public, partition the land described in Schedule "A" to the Plaint?

3. In terms of the said partition, did the 1st Plaintiff become the owner of the land described in Schedule "B" of the Plaint?

4. Did the 1st Plaintiff by Deed No. 8015 dated 01.03.1970 attested by D.R.S. Gunawardena Notary Public gift the land described in Schedule "B" of the Plaint to the 2nd Plaintiff, subject to the life interest of the 1st Plaintiff?

5. Is the 2nd Plaintiff entitled to the said land described in Schedule "B" to the Plaint on deeds as well as prescriptive possession?

6. At the time the land described in Schedule "B" to the plaint was partitioned, was a portion from its northwestern side separated off to be possessed by J. A. Stephen Appuhamy?

7. After the death of the said J. A. Stephen Appuhamy, has the Defendant been in occupation?

8. On or about 01.09.1985 did the Defendant wrongfully and unlawfully break down the boundary fence separating the land occupied by the Defendant and the land described in Schedule "B" of the Plaint, cut down three Jak trees, cut down branches of a Mango tree and cause damage to the other trees?

9. If so, what is the quantum of damages?

10. If the above issues be answered in favour of the 2nd Plaintiff, is she entitled to the reliefs prayed for, in the Plaint?

The only issue relating to the boundaries of the land in question is issue no. 8. Referred to above. It is significant to note [from the issue no. 8] that the Plaintiffs were never in doubt as to what the northern boundary to the impugned property was. They are only alleging that the Defendant caused damage to the fence that was already in place, along the said boundary.

(23) As stated, none of the issues referred to above relate specifically to the issue of boundaries between the Plaintiff's and Defendant's lands. Issue No. 8, appears to have been raised in order to quantify damages that the Plaintiff has claimed as a result of the damage caused to the fence by the Defendant's alleged acts. The issues raised do not indicate in any manner that the Plaintiffs had endeavoured to maintain an action for the definition of boundaries.

(24) To my mind, there was only one cause of action and that is for declaration of title to the land referred to in schedule 'B' of the plaint. The claim for the damages caused to the fence is merely consequential in that the Plaintiffs alleged that the Defendant trespassed on to their property and in the process of cutting down some trees, caused damage to the fence as well.

(25) Fernando vs. Lakshman Perera 2000 (2) S.L.R 413 was a case where the Plaintiff not only sought a declaration that he was entitled to the land in question, but also a further declaration, inter alia, to invalidate two deeds. It was argued that the joinder violated the provisions of section 35[1] of the Civil Procedure Code, as in an action instituted in terms of Section 35, no other claim or cause of action shall be made unless with leave of court, except in cases enumerated therein.

Justice Jayawickrema delivering judgement held;

"In paragraph 17 of the plaint he states that a cause of action has arisen to evict the Defendant and place the Plaintiff in possession of the land. On a perusal of this plaint, I find that there is only one cause of action as per Paragraph 17 of the plaint. The prayer for invalidation of two deeds referred to above is consequential to the main cause of action to obtain a declaration of title to this land. For this purpose, it is necessary to prevent the 1st and the 2nd Respondents from alienating the land by way of transferring, selling, agreeing to sell and mortgaging the said land. Under Section 35(1)(b) of the Civil Procedure Code the Plaintiff in an action for declaration of title to immovable property is entitled to make a claim for damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held; or consequential on the trespass which constitute the cause of action. In the instant case the claim to invalidate the deed and agreement itself is consequential to the main cause of action to obtain a declaration of title. It is necessary to prevent the alleged actions of the Defendant and to invalidate any illegal transfers or alienations. It is abundantly clear on a reading of the plaint which states in minute detail the alleged conduct of the Defendant to alienate the property which is the subject matter of this action, that the only cause of action is to obtain a declaration of title and possession of the subject matter." [Emphasis added]

(26) In Peiris and Another v Siripala [2009] 1 Sri L.R. 75, His Lordship De Silva J observed; [at page 78]

"One of the main legal arguments of the Appellants, put forward in their submissions was based on section 35 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code. The relevant issue is issue number 6. The Appellants argued that a cause of action to have the deed P2 declared null and void cannot be joined with a cause of action for a declaration of title to immovable property without leave of the court first had and obtained. Appellants argued that the Respondent should have dropped one of the causes that is, the Respondent should have either maintained the cause of action for a declaration of title or should have abandoned that cause of action and maintained a cause of action for a declaration that the aforementioned deed P2 was a fraudulent deed and therefore was void."

His lordship went on to hold that; [at page 79] "On the other hand, assuming without conceding that the Respondent had formulated issues on both causes of action, namely the declaration of title and for a declaration that deed P2 is void, I find such procedure to be perfectly in order. The law permits one to adopt such a cause and is not repugnant to section 35 (1). There is no misjoinder as there is in reality only one cause of action. A prayer for invalidation of a deed (in this case P2) is consequential to a prayer for declaration of title."

(27) In the instant case too, the Plaintiffs, in their issues raised have confined themselves to an action for declaration of title, and to recover damages resulting from the wrongful trespass into their land by the Respondent. Accordingly, I find that the Court of Appeal has erred in deciding that the Appellant has instituted and action for the definition of boundaries.

(28) Considering the aforestated, I hold that the action of the Plaintiff was for the recovery of the land in question and as such there was no need to obtain leave of the court in terms of Section 35(1) of the Civil Procedure Code. Accordingly, the question of law referred to in sub-paragraph (g) of Paragraph 17 of the Petition is answered in the affirmative. [The 1st question of law on which special leave was granted]

(29) The next issue to be determined is whether the inclusion of prayers (d) and (e) in the Plaint, makes the action contrary to Section 35(1) of the Civil Procedure Code as no leave of the court was obtained. [Question of law referred to in sub-paragraph (h) of Paragraph 17 of the Petition].

In paragraph (d) of the prayer to the plaint, the plaintiffs have claimed Rs. 5000/- as damages whereas in paragraph (e) they have sought an order for ejection of the Defendant and peaceful possession of the land after erecting the fence.

(30) Section 35(1) of the Civil Procedure Code states,

"In an action for the recovery of immovable property, or to obtain a declaration of title to immovable property, no other claim, or any cause of action, shall be made unless with the leave of the court, except

(a) claims in respect of mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed;

(b) damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof is held; or consequential on the trespass which constitutes the cause of action; and

(c) claims by a mortgagee to enforce any of his remedies under the mortgage"

(31) As referred to earlier the several cases have held that Section 35(1) does not bar a Plaintiff instituting an action for declaration of title, from including in the prayer, other consequential reliefs flowing from the same cause of action. In Fernando v Lakshman Perera [2000] 2 Sri L.R. 413 the Plaintiff in his Plaint had prayed for a declaration of title to the land in suit as well as for invalidation of two deeds relating to the said land. Jayawickrema, J, at page 416 held,

"On a perusal of this plaint I find that there is only one cause of action as per Paragraph 17 of the plaint. The prayer for invalidation of two deeds referred to above is consequential to the main cause of action to obtain declaration of title to this land.

In Peiris and Another v Siripala [supra] referred to earlier, Ranjith Silva, J, states [at page 78],

"On the other hand, assuming without conceding that the Respondent had formulated issues on both causes of action, namely the declaration of title and for a declaration that deed P2 is void, I find such procedure to be perfectly in order. The law permits one to adopt such a cause and is not repugnant to section 35 (1). There is no misjoinder as there is in reality only one cause of action. A prayer for invalidation of a deed (in this case P2) is consequential to a prayer for declaration of title. It is to prevent the Respondents from alienating the land or in order to prove that he still retains title and that he has not alienated his rights.

(32) On a perusal of the Plaint of the Appellant in the present action, it is quite clear that there is only one cause of action. The cause of action alleged by the Appellant is that on or about 01.09.1985 the Defendant wrongfully and unlawfully broke down the boundary fence separating the land occupied by the Defendant and the land described in Schedule "B" of the Plaint, cut down, three Jak trees and branches of a Mango tree and caused damage to the other trees. All reliefs prayed for in the Plaint, namely, for a declaration of title to the land, for the erection of a boundary fence, for ejectment of defendants from the said land, and for damages, flow from this single cause of action. Accordingly, the relief prayed in paragraph (e) of the Plaint, which is for an erection of a boundary fence separating the lands occupied by the plaintiffs and the defendant, flows from the same cause of action and is consequential to the main relief prayed which is for the declaration of title to the said land. Therefore, the said prayer is not repugnant to Section 35(1) of the Civil Procedure Code.

(33) Accordingly, I find that the Court of Appeal has erred in finding that the action by the Appellant is contrary to Section 35(1) of the Civil Procedure Code. I answer the second question of law upon which Special Leave was granted, being on the questions of law referred to in paragraph 17(h) of the Petition of Appeal, also in the affirmative.

Accordingly, the judgement of the Court of Appeal is set aside and the appeal is allowed. We observe, however, that the Court of Appeal had not dealt with any of the other issues raised by the Defendant before it. As such this matter is referred back to the Court of Appeal for consideration of the appeal of the Defendant on its merits.

However, the Court of Appeal would not be required to re- visit the issue raised under Section 35(1) of the CPC as this court had already made a pronouncement.

The Court of Appeal is further directed to consider the appeal and to dispose of the matter as early as possible considering the delay that has already resulted in the process of litigation.

The appeal is allowed subject to cost of Rs. 50,000/-

Judgement

Aluwihare PC. J,

The central question of this appeal is the validity of a deed of gift executed in favour of the 1st Defendant-Respondent by the donor, C.H. Weerasinghe. The Plaintiff's argument was that C.H. Weerasinghe did not have the capacity to execute the deed of gift in issue, as he was a person of unsound mind and moved that the District Court declare the same null and void. The Defendant's case on the other hand was that Weerasinghe had recovered from his illness and that he was in a good state of mind when he executed the impugned deed.

In concurrent findings, both the District Court as well as the Court of Appeal held that the impugned deed of gift is void. The present appeal is against the said findings. This Court granted leave to appeal in this matter on seven questions of law which are referred to in paragraph (15) of this judgement.

Factual background

(1) The original Plaintiffs Gothamadattawa Weerasinghe (now deceased) (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the '1st Plaintiff') and Vijitha Weerasinghe (now deceased) (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the '2nd Plaintiff') are the widow and son respectively of one Charles Hector Weerasinghe (now deceased) (hereinafter sometimes referred to as C.H. Weerasinghe').

(2) The property in suit called "Meegahawatta" alias "Ambagahawatta" had been gifted to C.H. Weerasinghe by the original owners, Don Martinus Perera Weerasinghe and Dona Justina Peternella by Deed No. 217 dated 17th August 1917.

(3) In Case No. 2221/LG, the District Court of Colombo, on the basis that said C.H. Weerasinghe, [the purported donor of the gift referred to above], was a person of unsound mind, appointed the 1st Plaintiff's wife as the Manager of his estate 'until he was of sound mind and understanding', as evidenced by the certified copies of the certificate of management dated 18th September 1929, marked P2 (at page 568 of the Brief) and the security bond marked P3 (at page 570 of the Brief). This fact had not been disputed by the Defendants.

(4) C.H. Weerasinghe received treatment as an in-house patient at the Angoda Mental Hospital, and according to the 2nd Plaintiff's testimony (vide pages 416-417 of the Brief) he had been in the hospital for a period of 31 years, i.e., from 1933 and was discharged in 1964.

(5) After being released from the hospital, C.H. Weerasinghe had resided at the house of one O.J. Jayawardena, a male nurse who was attached to the Angoda Mental Hospital, up to his death, in 1977.

(6) While C.H. Weerasinghe was living with O.J. Jayawardena, he had gifted the property in suit to Eron Singho, the 1st Defendant-Respondent [hereinafter the 1st Defendant] by Deed No. 41 dated 2nd July 1977. C.H. Weerasinghe died the following month, on 24th August 1977 at the age of 87, leaving the Plaintiffs as his heirs. His estate was administered in D.C. Colombo case No. 1963 wherein the 1st Plaintiff was appointed as the administratrix of his estate.

(7) Following C.H. Weerasinghe's death, Eron Singo, the 1st Defendant, by execution of a Conditional Transfer No. 20390 dated 11th December 1978, had obtained a sum of Rs. 4000/- from one Lionel Ranasinghe. Having discharged the said Conditional Transfer by Deed No. 21524, the 1st Defendant transferred the said property to Rajakaruna, the 2nd Defendant-Appellant, for a sum of Rupees 30,000/- by Deed No. 21525 dated 4th March 1980.

(8) The Plaintiffs assert that C.H. Weerasinghe had transferred the property in suit to the 1st Defendant without the sanction of the Court or of his guardian while he was insane, thus making Deed No. 41 null and void. Therefore, it was argued that Deed No. 21525 by which 1st Defendant transferred the impugned property to Rajakaruna, is also void as no title passed to Eron Singo, the 1st Defendant.

Action Before the District Court

(9) The 1st and 2nd Plaintiff-Respondents instituted this action in the District Court of Panadura against the 1st Defendant [Eron Singo] and the 2nd Defendant [Rajakaruna], praying inter alia;

1. For a declaration of title to the property more fully described in the Schedule to the Plaint.
2. A Declaration that Deeds No. 41 and No. 21525 are null and void.
3. An interim and/or permanent injunction restraining the Defendants from entering the said property.

(10) The District Court dismissed the action of the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs. The Plaintiff-Respondents appealed against the said judgment in Case No. 85/87(F) and on 15th February 1990, the Court of Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court and directed the District Court to hold a trial de novo.

(11) The second trial commenced under the same case number in 1991 and at the conclusion of the trial, by his judgement dated 31.01.1997, the learned District judge held that both Deeds, i.e., No. 41 and No. 21525 were invalid.

(12) Aggrieved by the said judgment the 1st Defendant and 2nd Defendant-Appellant preferred appeals to the Court of Appeal. [CA Case No. 509A/97(F) and CA Case No. 509/97(F) respectively].

(13) Both appeals were consolidated and taken up for hearing and the Court of Appeal by its judgment dated 17th June 2016 dismissed the Appeals.

(15) Being aggrieved by the Judgment of the Court of Appeal, the 2nd Defendant-Appellant preferred a leave to appeal application to this Court and Leave to Appeal was granted on the following questions of law, set out in paragraphs 19 (i), (iv), (v), (viii) and (ix) of the Petition which are reproduced verbatim below;

i. Did the Court of Appeal err in law by not taking into consideration that at the time of the execution of Deed No. 41 by Hector Weerasinghe, he was quite capable of managing his affairs as reflected by the uncontroverted evidence adduced at the trial in respect of his mental capacity?

iv. Was the Court of Appeal in error by not taking into cognizance that the 2nd Defendant being a bona fide purchaser was not bound to make application in terms of Section 578 of the Civil Procedure Code for a declaration that the said Weerasinghe was of sound mind prior to the execution of Deed No. 21525 by the 1st Defendant?

v. Whether our law prohibits a person who has been declared a person of unsound mind by a competent Court to enter into a contract when such a person was fully conscious and aware of what he intended to do and capable of understanding the transaction?

viii. Did the Courts below err in law by the conclusion that the presumption of lunacy created by the Court Order was in operation as the Defendants had not taken steps under Section 578?

ix. Did the Court below misdirect in law by insisting on a higher degree of proof which is not required by the Roman-Dutch Law?

The learned Counsel for the Substituted 1st and 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondents raised the following questions of law;

1."Has the Defendant formulated issue No. 12 based on the fact that C.H. Weerasinghe executed deed No. 41 during the lucid interval."

2. If so, that the Defendant admits that the deed was executed between the space of time between two fits of insanity either the Lucid interval to be proved by competent medical evidence as the Defendant failed to do so?"

The position of the 2nd Defendant-Appellant

(16) The learned President's Counsel on behalf of the 2nd Defendant contended that C.H. Weerasinghe was of sound mind when he executed the Deed No.41 and that ample evidence had been led in the District Court to substantiate that position.

(17) The 2nd Defendant primarily relied on the testimonies of the 1st Defendant and witnesses, O.J. Jayawardena and Notary Public Chandrapala Hettige, to establish that after being discharged, C.H. Weerasinghe had led a normal life, regained full sanity and Deed No. 41 had been executed by him while he was fully conscious and had the mental capacity to understand the nature of the transaction, i.e., the execution of the deed no 41.

(18) The position of the 2nd Defendant was that, when C.H. Weerasinghe was discharged from the Angoda Mental Hospital in 1964, he had fully recovered from his mental illness according to 'expert medical opinion of the specialist doctors' at the hospital. He also sought to prove that C.H. Weerasinghe was of sound mind through the testimony of O.J. Jayawardena, a male nurse who had worked at the said Mental Hospital with whom C.H. Weerasinghe had spent the final 13 years of his life after he was released from the hospital.

(19) Giving evidence at the trial, O.J. Jayawardena stated that he was a senior nursing officer who was attached to the Angoda Mental Hospital and that he had special knowledge of nursing mental patients. The witness had further stated that he had become acquainted with C.H. Weerasinghe while he was receiving treatment at the Mental Hospital. He observed that C.H. Weerasinghe possessed a sound knowledge of English and of Shakespeare and that during one of their light-hearted conversations he had expressed his desire to leave the hospital and Weerasinghe had requested the witness to keep him with the witness as his wife and son, [the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs], did not want to take him back on account of their social status. Having informed the 1st Plaintiff and having obtained permission from the doctors, the witness stated that C.H. Weerasinghe was discharged and taken to the witness' home where he remained for 13 years till his death. When questioned as to why C. H. Weerasinghe had been lodged in his house, the witness stated that it was at the requests made by C.H. Weerasinghe and the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs. Jayawardena said that after C.H. Weerasinghe was brought to his place, the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs visited him once every two to three months and the witness was paid for Weerasinghe's upkeep.

(20) O.J. Jayawardena, testified to the effect that he would never have taken the risk of accommodating C.H. Weerasinghe at his residence where he lived with his spouse and children, if he had been mentally unsound. According to him, C.H. Weerasinghe did not exhibit abnormal behaviour during his 13 year-stay at his residence. On the contrary, the witness claimed that C.H. Weerasinghe gave English tuition to children in the neighborhood, accompanied his children to school, bought items needed for the household, went out alone, attended cricket matches and occasionally enjoyed an alcoholic drink and a cigarette. These items of evidence, the 2nd Defendant claims, establish that he was quite sane, had regained his natural state of mind and lived a very productive life for a person of his age.

(21) In order to substantiate the assertion that C.H. Weerasinghe was of sound mind, memory and understanding at the time of execution of Deed No. 41, reference was made to the evidence of the Notary, Chandrapala Hettige who executed the deed. He had testified to the effect that when C.H. Weerasinghe visited him to give instructions regarding the drafting of the deed, he appeared to be of sound mind and that he did not have any doubts regarding his mental state.

(22) To further substantiate the assertion, the attention of the court was drawn to evidence of the 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent, who accepted that it was his father's signature on Deed No. 41 (vide page 425 of the Brief) and that even the District Judge in his judgment accepted the placement of the signature of C.H. Weerasinghe, thus, it was contended that it further established that he was of sound mind, memory and understanding when the deed was executed.

(23) The 2nd Defendant-Appellant has sought to justify the gifting of the property to the 1st Defendant-Respondent, by highlighting the evidence given by the 1st Defendant -Respondent during the trial. According to the 1st Defendant-Respondent's evidence, he was married to the niece of C.H. Weerasinghe and had been treated as his adopted child. The 2nd Defendant contrasted this with the estranged relationship between the Plaintiff-Respondents and C.H. Weerasinghe which is evidenced by the testimony of O.J. Jayawardena who stated that when the Plaintiff-Respondents visited him once every two to three months, they stayed only for a few minutes.

(24) In his evidence, the 1st Defendant-Respondent stated that he used to visit C.H. Weerasinghe at witness Jayawardena's residence, who had stated that he wished to donate the property in suit to the 1st Defendant-Respondent. The 1st Defendant -Respondent also stated that when he went to the Notary Public's office on 2nd July 1977, he met C.H. Weerasinghe and two witnesses and the said deed was executed by C.H. Weerasinghe and that he too signed the deed accepting the said gift. He admitted that the same had been transferred in the name of the 2nd Defendant-Appellant in 1980 by Deed No. 21525 and strongly denied that C.H. Weerasinghe was of unsound mind at the time he transferred the land in his name.

(25) To further buttress the 2nd Defendant-Appellant's position regarding C.H. Weerasinghe's mental state, attention was also directed towards the admission made by the 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent at the trial regarding his correspondence with his father after he was discharged from the mental hospital. It is to be noted that 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent had admitted that his father, while he was residing with O.J. Jayawardena, sent postcards to him and that he, in return, sent his father postcards to inform him of the dates of his to visits. It was suggested that the postcards had allegedly been destroyed by the 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent, which allegation was refuted by him. In the light of this evidence, it was submitted that Weerasinghe was not mentally deranged as the Plaintiff- Respondents had tried to make out when he was at Jayawardena's and could not have corresponded with him if he had been a lunatic.

(26) With respect to the validity of Deed No. 21525, the 2nd Defendant-Appellant giving evidence at the trial stated that she did not know of C.H. Weerasinghe's mental disabilities, and only entrusted her Notary, Arthur Wijesuriya with the task of examining the title to the land. Arthur Wijesuriya, giving evidence, stated that he examined the title before he attested the deed and recommended to the 2nd Defendant-Appellant that the title was good and therefore at her request, attested the deed. The 2nd Defendant-Appellant claimed that she was not aware of the mental illness of C.H. Weerasinghe prior to and during the period material to the execution of the deed.

(27) It was submitted that in any event, the 2nd Defendant is a bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration without any knowledge whatsoever of the mental ailments of C.H. Weerasinghe and that in the circumstances the 2nd Defendant-Appellant is entitled to the said property.

The position of the Plaintiff-Respondents

(28) The Plaintiff-Respondents argued that what has to be decided is whether C.H. Weerasinghe executed Deed No. 41 during a lucid interval, which has been conceded by the original Defendants by issue No. 12 which states (in translation) "At the time Charles Hector Weerasinghe executed Deed No. 41, did he sign the deed voluntarily, conscious of what he was doing?"

(29) The argument on behalf of the Plaintiff-Respondent was, that an insane person is presumed to be so, until it is shown that he has recovered and that the original Defendants on whom the burden of proof lay had failed to discharge that duty. The contention of the Plaintiff-Respondents is that C.H. Weerasinghe was mentally deranged up to his death in 1977. It was the contention of the Plaintiff-Respondents that he was lodged at the house of O.J. Jayawardena on the advice of his doctor who said that he should be kept in a place where he could be well provided for, and was close to the hospital so that he could be taken to the clinic every week (vide page 417 of the Brief).

(30) In countering the evidence adduced by the Defendants regarding the mental state of C.H. Weerasinghe, the Plaintiff-Respondents argue that despite the assertion that it was the "expert opinion of specialist doctors at the hospital" that C.H. Weerasinghe had fully recovered from his mental illness, no expert opinions were adduced during the trial. It was argued that the most important evidence that can be led to establish a person's sanity is medical evidence. However, the 2nd Defendant-Appellant has primarily relied on the opinions of the male nurse, O.J. Jayawardena who cannot be regarded as an expert who is fully capable of assessing and submitting a professional opinion with respect to Weerasinghe's mental state to the satisfaction of the court. With respect to the testimony of O.J. Jayawardena, the Plaintiff-Respondents have highlighted the admissions made by him when giving evidence, which points to the fact that C.H. Weerasinghe was of unsound mind even after he was discharged from the mental hospital.

(31) According to O.J. Jayawardena, C.H. Weerasinghe suffered from simple schizophrenia and had experienced moments where he would zone out and stare into the distance (vide pages 474-475 of the Brief). He proceeded to admit that C.H. Weerasinghe would recover when given medication. The admission was also made that C.H. Weerasinghe was given psychopharmaceutical drugs on certain occasions, during his stay at O.J. Jayawardena's residence. (vide; pages 470 and 478 of the Brief).

(32) To further strengthen the assertion that C.H. Weerasinghe remained a mentally deranged individual to his death, the original Plaintiffs to the action, submitted two letters addressed to the 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent by O.J. Jayawardena marked P11 and P12. In the letter marked P11 dated 25th March 1972, O.J. Jayawardena states as follows with respect to C.H. Weerasinghe, "he is also getting vitamin tablets and psychopharmaceuticals." In the letter marked P12 dated 9th October 1965, the male nurse states as follows, "Mrs. Weerasinghe, his doctor is on maternity leave. So I am getting treatment for him from Dr. Sittampalam." Which confirms the position that that Weerasinghe continued to receive professional treatment for his mental disorder even after he was discharged from the hospital.

(33) Commenting on the evidence pertaining to placement of C.H. Weerasinghe's signature on Deed No. 41 and the Notary Public Chandrapala Hettige's evidence, the Plaintiff-Respondents argue that it those testimonies are inadequate to establish C.H. Weerasinghe's sanity. It was submitted that attention must be given to the fact that although the 1st Defendant-Respondent's claimed that he informed the Notary Public Chandrapala of C.H Weerasinghe's period of treatment at the Angoda Hospital (page 336 of the Brief), this was denied by the Notary Public who claimed that if this information had been divulged to him, he would not have executed the deed (page 356 of the Brief). Witness Chandrapala's evidence recorded in the first trial was adopted by the consent of the parties.

(34) The Plaintiff-Respondents also note that, in Deed No. 41 Eron Singho is referred to as the "step-son" of C.H. Weerasinghe, which they argued indicated that at the time of the execution of the Deed, Weerasinghe was under the insane delusion that he was married to Eron Singho's mother.

(35) The Plaintiff-Respondent's Counsel argued that the postcards supposedly sent by the 2nd Plaintiff Respondent's father contained no meaning, [pg. 427 of the Brief]. They claimed that if these postcards had not been destroyed, they would have proven that C.H. Weerasinghe was still mentally ill and receiving treatment. Therefore, due to lack of expert evidence, medical or psychiatric, the presumption of insanity persists, and Deed No.41 and the ensuing Deed No.21525 are invalid, according to the Plaintiff-Respondent.

The Legal position

(36) The sanity of a person is presumed, [R vs Laytou 1849 4 Cox C.C 149 at155] unless the court adjudicates otherwise. If a court had declared someone to be insane, our law presumes this status still exists, though this can be disproved by clear evidence. This case concerns whether C.H. Weerasinghe who had been determined to be insane, could have signed a deed while adjudication was still in force. The first issue to be considered is whether he was having a lucid interval or had sufficiently recovered or rational. The second issue is what proof is needed to establish that he was of sound mind at the time of signing the deed, given the court's prior adjudication of insanity.

(37) The learned President's Counsel for the 2nd Defendant-Appellant argued that, according to the law, a person who has been declared of unsound mind by a competent court does not need to seek a Court order to prove his sanity under Section 578 of the Civil Procedure Code. He also argued that, in this situation, the applicable law should be Roman Dutch Law and not English Law. I agree with this contention, as our law differs from English Law in that an adjudication is not considered conclusive proof of lunacy. In English Law, any contract entered into by an adjudicated person while the order is in place is null and void [In re Walker L.R. 1905 1 Ch.8 at 160].

(38) The learned Counsel on behalf of the Plaintiff-Respondents on the other hand argued that a person who is adjudicated insane is presumed to be so until it is established that he had a lucid interval at the relevant time or that he had recovered from lunacy and the burden of establishing that fact is on the party so contending, before the court. It is trite law that lunacy is a contractual disability. Our courts, however, have recognized that a person of unsound mind could enter into valid contracts during a lucid interval. A lucid interval as understood in law refers to a perfect restoration to reason or a temporary cessation of the insanity (vide A.G. vs. Parnther (1792) 3 Bro. C. Rep. 442) which in turn would enable such individual to understand the nature and effect of a deed or contract.

(39) This principle of law is laid down in the cases of Hamid vs. Marikkar (1951) 52 NLR 269 and in the case of Amarasekara vs. Jayanetti 64 CLW 17.

In the case of Amarasekera vs. Jayanetti (supra), in which the appellant who was adjudged to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs had conveyed his interests in certain lands by way of deeds to the husband of the respondent, T.S. Fernando J. held,

> "(1) …an alienation of land executed during a lucid interval by a person adjudicated by the District Court to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing his own affairs, is valid even though the execution has taken place while the adjudication remains unreversed. [emphasis added]
> (2) That this question must be determined by the Roman Dutch Law and not by the English Law. The provisions of Chapter XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code have not superseded the Roman-Dutch law on this point."

(40) In the case of Hamid vs. Marikar (1951) 51 NLR 269, which arose in respect of a mortgage bond executed by a person who had been adjudicated to be of unsound mind at a time when the adjudication stood unreversed, Swan J., observed (at page 272);

"Whether the mortgage bond entered into by Razeena Umma was null and void is a matter of interest. If it was executed by her during a lucid interval, it would, under the Roman-Dutch law, be considered valid. Under English law, however, once a person is adjudged to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs, any contract entered into by him, while that order stands, is null and void….Under the Roman-Dutch law, however, a contract made by a person, declared by a competent Court to be a lunatic and for whom a curator has been appointed, would be valid if it was made during a lucid interval." [emphasis added]

Swan J., proceeded to cite the position taken up in the South African case of Prinsloo's Curators vs. Crafford and Prinsloo (1905) T.S. 669. In this case Prinsloo had, by order of Court been declared to be of unsound mind and curators were appointed. He married two years later and it was proved that he was no longer insane. It was contended that he could not contract while the order was in force. The Transvaal Supreme Court held that;

"…an order declaring an alleged lunatic to be of unsound mind was not a judgment in rem but only operated, while in force, to create a rebuttable presumption that he was a lunatic."

(41) Therefore, the rebuttable presumption of lunacy can be held to be recognized by our law. Professor Weeramantry in his "The Law of Contracts"- at page 467 draws the distinction between the Roman-Dutch law and English law in the following words;

"It is always a question of fact whether the person in question was mentally defective at the time of his making a contract. If there has been an adjudication of lunacy by a Court, there would under our law be a presumption of continuance of this condition, but this is rebuttable by clear evidence to the contrary. Our law differs in this respect from the English law under which an adjudication operates as conclusive proof of lunacy, and any contract entered into by the adjudicated person while such order stands is null and void."

(42) Therefore, in light of the abovementioned observations, the inference that can be drawn is that our law does not prohibit a person who has been declared to be of unsound mind by a competent court to enter into a contract when it can be shown that he was of sound mind and understood the nature of the transaction at the time he entered into it. The rationale behind this principle is succinctly enunciated by Professor Lee in 'Introduction to Roman-Dutch Law' (5th Ed.) at page 115 as follows;

"It is tempting to speak of unsoundness of mind as constituting a status; but it would not be correct to do so, for mental unsoundness is not necessarily permanent or constant, and the question which must be answered is not, 'Has the man been declared mad?' but, 'Was he, in fact, incapable of understanding the particular transaction which is brought in issue?' If the answer is negative, the transaction stands.'

(43) Considering these observations referred to above, the question of law No. (v) "Whether our law prohibits a person who has been declared a person of unsound mind by a competent Court to enter into a contract when such a person was fully conscious and aware of what he intended to do and capable of understanding the transaction?", must be answered in the negative, that is, in favour of the Appellant.

The evidence and burden of proof

(44) In light of the legal principles pertaining to the instant case, attention shall be directed towards the first (i) and ninth (ix) questions of law which are as follows;

(i) Did the Court of Appeal err in law by not taking into consideration that at the time of the execution of Deed No. 41 by Hector Weerasinghe, he was quite capable of managing his affairs as reflected by the uncontroverted evidence adduced at the trial in respect of his mental capacity?

(ix) Did the Court below misdirect in law by insisting on a higher degree of proof which is not required by the Roman-Dutch Law?

In light of the aforementioned judicial decisions, [as referred to in paragraphs 41-43] it can be observed that a declaration of lunacy has no conclusive effect and the logical inference that can be drawn is that, when such declaration remains unrevoked the only legal effect would be to shift the burden to the person who asserts the validity of the impugned contract to satisfy the Court that the contractor was sane at the relevant time.

(44) Commenting on the onus of proof Solomon J in the South African case of Prinsloo's Curators vs. Crafford and Prinsloo (1905) T.S. 669, observed that;

"…an order declaring a person to be of unsound mind is conclusive proof of the fact that at the time that the order was made such person was insane and consequently an order of that nature merely shifts the onus of proof. For there is no doubt a presumption that when a person has been declared to be of unsound mind he continues to be of unsound mind, but it is open to him at any time to bring evidence to satisfy the Court that subsequent to the date of the order he became sane and that consequently a contract entered into by him was a valid contract…:"

(45) Counsel on behalf of the Plaintiff-Respondents, on the other hand argued that the presumption of lunacy/insanity created by a declaration of the court can only be rebutted by leading expert evidence which is the most important evidence that can be led to establish a person's sanity. Their contention is that a lay individual's evidence can only supplement expert evidence and that there was no strong medical evidence to support the alleged existence of a lucid interval at the time the transaction was entered into. In this vein, the Plaintiff-Respondents refer to the dicta of De Villiers J.P. in the case of Estate Rehne and Others vs. Rehne;

"I also take into consideration the expert evidence led to the effect that persons subject to delusions may appear quite sane to the lay mind, and that they are often secretive and, in many cases, will not tell their delusions to everyone but only to their doctors, and that they are apt to disguise their delusions.'

(46) The crux of the case rests on the mental state of C.H. Weerasinghe. Although it is not a sine-qua-non, given the facts and circumstances of the case before us, producing some evidence emanating from a source having expert knowledge of the subject of lunacy would have been desirable on the part of the Defendants to determine whether the disorder was still present, as the legal burden of rebutting the presumption was on the Defendant.

(47) In the absence of such evidence, the finding of fact on the part of the learned district judge in holding that C.H. Weerasinghe was a person of unsound mind until his death cannot be faulted. The learned district Judge had relied on the documents marked as P11 and P 12, both are letters written by witness Jayawardena to the 2nd Plaintiff. In one letter written in 1977, [P11] he refers to C.H Weerasinghe "getting vitamin tablets and other psychopharmaceuticals". The learned District judge, in concluding, had stated that, having considered the evidence placed and the written submissions tendered by both parties, he accepts the evidence placed on behalf of the Plaintiffs, suggesting impliedly that the Defendants have failed to discharge the burden of rebutting the presumption of lunacy.

(48) It is trite law that a factual finding by the original court should not be disturbed on appeal, unless the finding is visibly erroneous. Therefore, the question of law No. (ix) regarding whether the Court below misdirected itself in law by insisting on a higher degree of proof which is not required by the Roman-Dutch Law, must be answered in the negative.

(49) In light of this standard of proof, the Appeal was dismissed by the Court of Appeal on the finding that the fact that C.H. Weerasinghe was experiencing a lucid interval had not been proved at the trial as there was no evidence pointing to the assertion that he was sane when the deed was being executed and the Court of Appeal observed that they saw no reason to interfere with the judgment of the learned District Judge.

(50) It is pertinent to note that the learned District Judge had the advantage of observing the demeanor and the deportment of the witnesses and had analyzed the entire gamut of evidence placed before the court, which is amply reflected in the judgment. In the case of Gunawardena V. Cabral and Others (1980) 2 Sri. LR 220, it was held that the appellate court will set aside inferences drawn by the trial Judge only if they amount to findings of fact based on: - (a) inadmissible evidence; or (b) after rejecting admissible and relevant evidence; or (c) if the inferences are unsupported by evidence; or (d) if the inferences or conclusions are not rationally possible or Perverse.

(51) On the perusal of the judgement of the learned District Judge, it cannot be said that the findings and the inferences drawn by him are vitiated by any of these considerations and therefore as rightly held by the Court of Appeal, there was no justification for interfering with the conclusions reached by the learned District Judge which are based on the evidence placed before him. Therefore, the first question of law also must be answered in the negative.

The Applicability of Section 578

(52) Section 578 of the Civil Procedure Code reads as follows;

"578. Further inquiry, when a person of unsound mind so found alleged to have recovered.

(1) When any person has been adjudged to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs, if such person or any other person acting on his behalf, or having or claiming any interest in respect of his estate, shall represent by petition to the District Court, or if the Court shall be informed in any other manner, that the unsoundness of mind of such person has ceased, the Court may institute an inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining whether such person is or is not still of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs.

(2) The inquiry shall be conducted in the manner provided in section 560 and the four following sections of this Ordinance; and if it be adjudged that such person has ceased to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs, the Court shall make an order for his estate to be delivered over to him, and such order shall be final."

(53) As regards capacity of a lunatic to contract during a lucid interval, the settled position is that our common law [Roman Dutch law] on this matter must be taken to have superseded the provisions of Chapter XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code (vide Amarasekera vs. Jayanetti (supra)). This, however, does not imply that the provisions of the Code are of no avail. According to our law, if a party to a contract is insane at the time of contracting, the contract is null and void even though the other party contracted bona fide without knowledge of insanity (vide Soysa vs. Soysa (1916) 19 NLR 314). Therefore, if an application had been made under Section 578 to establish the sanity of an individual declared to be a lunatic by a court of law, it would be beneficial to that individual and other interested parties in securing the validity of contracts or deeds executed for or on behalf of such individual.

(54) In the present case, however, the 2nd Defendant, who had purchased his rights to the property from the 1st Defendant, was not aware that the original owner C.H Weerasinghe was a person who had been adjudicated as a person of unsound mind by the court. He had merely got the property transferred to himself from the 1st Defendant after having checked the land registry as to the devolution of title, and having satisfied himself that 1st Defendant Eron Singho had title to the land in issue, he had proceeded with the transfer of the property. Therefore, the questions of law [no. iv and viii] pertaining to whether the Court of Appeal erred by not taking into cognizance that the 2nd Defendant being a bona fide purchaser was not bound to make application in terms of Section 578 of the Civil Procedure Code for a declaration that the said Weerasinghe was of sound mind prior to the execution of Deed No. 21525 by the 1st Defendant and whether the Courts below err in law by the conclusion that the presumption of lunacy created by the Court Order was in operation as the Defendants had not taken steps under Section 578, must be answered in the affirmative, in favour of the Appellant.

(55) In conclusion, it can be held, however, that the Defendant-Appellants had failed to prove that C.H. Weerasinghe, [in respect of whose property his wife was appointed by the District Court to manage his property until said lunatic (Weerasinghe) is of sound mind and understanding], was of sound mind, memory and understanding at the time of the execution of Deed No. 41. Therefore, the conclusion of the learned District judge that, the Deed No. 41 is null and void ab initio and consequently, the 1st Defendant-Respondent had no legal title to pass on to the 2nd Defendant-Appellant under Deed No. 21525, thus Deed No. 21525 should also be held to be null and void, in my view, cannot be faulted.

Conclusions;

I have answered the questions of law referred to in subparagraphs (iv), (v) and (viii) of paragraph 19 of the Petition of the Appellant in favour of the Appellant and the questions of law referred to in subparagraphs (i) and (ix) of the said paragraph of the Petition in favour of the Respondents.

As referred to in this judgement, questions (i) and (ix) are the primary issues, namely whether the Appellant [The 2nd Defendant] and the 1st Defendant have rebutted the presumption of insanity [of C.H. Weerasinghe] by adducing sufficient evidence. For the reasons set out, I have concluded that the finding of the learned trial judge on that issue cannot be faulted. In the circumstances, the judgement of the District Court and the Court of appeal are affirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

The substituted 1st and 2nd Plaintiff Respondent -Respondent would be entitled to the cost of this matter.

Appeal Dismissed.

ALUWIHARE PC, J

I had the benefit of reading the judgements written by my brother judges, His Lordship Justice Amarasekara and His Lordship Justice Samayawardhena. I would like, however, to express my own view on this matter. As their Lordships have succinctly dealt with the factual background to the case, I shall be referring to the facts to the extent necessary to address the legal issues involved.

The contesting defendants in this partition action were the 5th and the 11th Defendants [mother and daughter respectively]. They sought a dismissal of the Plaintiff's action. The learned District Judge, however, accepted the pedigree of the Plaintiff and rejected the pedigree put forward by the aforesaid Defendants. Although the 5th and the 11th Defendants canvassed the legality of the District Judge's findings before the High Court of Civil Appeals, they were not successful in their endeavour. The 5th Defendant passed away at a point in the course of the proceedings and 11th Defendant was substituted in her place as the '5a' Defendant. As the learned District Judge had considered the claim of the 5th Defendant in her judgment, for the purpose of clarity I shall continue to refer to the 5th Defendant in this judgement.

It is the Appeal of the said Defendant's [5th and the 11th] that this court considered on the following questions of law.

1. Has the High Court and the District Court erred in law by failing to appreciate that the pedigree of title put forward by the 5th and the 11th defendants proved that they were the sole owners of the corpus for partition?
2. In any event, whether the 5th and the 11th defendants and their predecessors have acquired prescriptive title to the land sought to be partitioned by long possession?

Although it may not be directly relevant to the issues at hand, it would be pertinent to refer to the following facts;

The Plaint described the corpus a 'Kahatagaha addara owita, alias Kahatagaha liyadda also known as Bakmadala watte alias Bakmadala owita' in extent of 8 Kurunis. The Preliminary Plan No.120 dated 01.01.1990 was prepared by surveyor G.B.S Bandula De Silva, which was marked and produced as X. In 1996, the Plaintiff by an amended plaint changed the name of the land as "bakmadala owita alias, Kahatagahaliyadda alias Kahatagaha addara Owita which is a part of Bakmadala watte". The boundaries, however, remained the same.

I do not see any significance in changing the description of the corpus referred to above, as the learned Counsel representing the 5th and the 11th defendants had taken up the position that the question of the identity of the corpus will not be challenged. Thus, the only issue that remains to be addressed is the devolution of title.

Subsequent to the survey carried out by Surveyor Bandula De Silva on which the Preliminary Plan No.120 [X] was prepared, another plan [No. 4131] was also prepared on a commission [moved by the 5th and the 11th Defendants] by licensed Surveyor Garvin De Silva, which was marked and produced as "Y".

I wish to stress the fact that the District Courts should desist from the practice of issuing an alternative commission to survey the corpus after the issuance of a commission to survey the corpus for the purpose of preparing the Preliminary plan. There are series of decisions by the appellate courts to the effect that, after the preliminary survey is carried out, any further commissions in terms of Section 16(2) of the Partition Law should be issued to the same surveyor who did the original Commission in terms of Section 16(1) of the said Law. There appears to be a misapprehension that in certain local jurisdictions that such a cursus curiae has been established. This belief is contrary to the settled law. This is certainly not the case, and I am of the view that it would be prudent on the part of the district judges to desist from this practice unless the District Judge takes a considered view that such a step is essential for the adjudication of the matter before the court. The exceptions to the rule in my view would be in an instance where, either the Surveyor who carried out the Preliminary Survey is dead or under the circumstances, his services can no longer be obtained.

This principle is articulated in the case of Hettige Don Tudor and others v. Hettige Don Ananda Chandrasiri SC Appeal 134 of 2016 [SC minutes of 19.02.2018] and also by Justice Salam in the case of Sumanasena v. Premaratne CA/1336 and 1337 CA minutes 06.03.2014. In recent times, Justice Laffar in the case of Premalal Vidana Arachchi v. T.A. Annie Nona Siriwardena and others, CA /DFC/768/99 CA minutes 26.07.2021, had made the same observation.

Coming back to the issues at hand, it should be noted that the case before the District Court was prosecuted, not by the Plaintiff, but by the 6th and the 8th Defendants. The 6th to the 10th Defendants happen to be the siblings of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff, however, gave evidence in the case.

The case for the 5th and the 11th Respondents

It was contended on behalf of the 5th and the 11th Defendants that both the learned District Judge as well as the Hon. Judges of the Civil Appellate Court failed to appreciate the pedigree of title put forward by the 5th and the 11th defendants. Hence, it would be necessary to consider this aspect in order to determine whether in fact, the District Court and/or the High Court of Civil Appeals erred when considering this matter.

According to the 5th and the 11th Defendants, the original owner of the land in question was Don Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe [hereinafter Elias Jayasinghe].

Both, said Elias Jayasinghe and his wife Dona Francinahamy executed a joint last will dated 06-02-1890. An English translation of the said will was marked and produced as 5V14 and the inventory filed in the testamentary case was filed as 5V13.

It is the position of the 5th and the 11th Defendant's that the entire land in question is item no. 27 in the inventory and the sole ownership of the land was bequeathed to Munidasa Amrasiri Jayasinghe and he in turn by deed No. 32 dated 18-07-1912 [5V3] conveyed the land to Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe. After the demise of Dhrmadasa Amrasiri Jayasinghe, his intestate estate was administered in DC Galle case No. T/7769 and the letters of administration were issued to Mahaweera Jayasinghe [5V11] and it was the position of the 5th and the 11th Defendants that the land in question was item No 18 in the inventory [5V12] filed in that case. It was also the position of the said Defendants that all the siblings of Mahaweera Jayasinghe, by deed No. 411 on 16-01-1941 [5V2] conveyed all their interest in the said land to Mahaweera Jayasinghe, and he became the sole owner of the corpus.

Finally, the 5th and 11th Defendants take up the position that in the year 1941, by deed No. 1045 [5V1] Mahaweera Jayasinghe conveyed the corpus to the 5th Defendant, and she became the sole owner of the land which was to be partitioned.

From the foregoing it is clear that the 5th and the 11th Defendant's pedigree pivots on the joint last will purported to have been executed by Elias Jayasinghe and his wife Francinahamy. As referred to by His Lordship Justice Samayawardena, the 5th and 11th Defendant's position was that, the joint last will of the couple, dated 02.06.1980 was proved in the testamentary action 2970/T in the District Court of Galle, which was, however, not admitted by the Plaintiff. Furthermore, the paragraph 1 of original last will which was in Sinhala, [5V15] states that "the joint last will dated 06.02.1890 is hereby revoked."

One of the grounds for dismissing the appeal of the 5th and the 11th Defendants by the High Court of civil Appeals was; that the last will in Sinhala [5V15] and the English translation of the purported last will [5V14] contain contradictory contents. It should be noted that the 5th and the 11th Defendants in their original statement of claim, refer to a last will dated 02.10.1891 as the last will by which Elias Jayasinghe and his wife Francinahamy devised the property in question to one of their sons; Munidasa. The said Defendants, however, when tendering the amended statement of claim [17.12.1996] had relied on the testamentary case No. DC2970 but no reference was made to the date of the last will they were relying on.

The learned district judge in considering the devolution of title put forward by the 5th and the 11th Defendants had referred to the fact that the said defendants had based their entitlement on the strength of the transfer deed executed by Mahaweera Jayasinghe who had claimed that he derived title to the corpus consequent to his father Dharmadasa Amarasinghe getting title from the testamentary case No2970. The learned District Judge had observed that, although it was claimed that Dharmadasa Amerasinghe derived title to the impugned property consequent to the last will of Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe, no material had been placed [by the 5th and the 11th Defendants] to establish that fact.[Pages 21 and 22 of the DC judgement].

Considering the material placed before the trial court and the applicable legal principles, I cannot fault the learned District Judge regarding the observation referred to above. The success of the claim of the 5th and the 11th Defendants pivots on the last will of Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe. What was produced is an English translation of the will executed in 1890 and further, paragraph 1 of the original will which was in Sinhala states that the joint last will executed in 1890 is revoked.

It is trite law that, testamentary proceedings in the District Court do not consider title to the property and only consider whether the testator has executed the last will on his own free will and a suitable person has been appointed to be granted letters of administration. The Indian Supreme Court observed in the case of Krishna Kumar Birla v. Vijaya C. Gurshaney [2008] 4 SCC 300; " a testamentary court is only concerned with finding out whether or not the testator executed the testamentary instrument of his free will. It is settled law that the grant of a probate or letters of administration does not confer title to property. They merely enable administration of the estate of the diseased". Justice H.N.G. Fernando, in the case of Rosalin Nona v. Herat, 65 C.L.W 55 observed that; "the court does not in the Testamentary proceedings, have jurisdiction to determine the dispute as to title in respect of such property between the administrator and the third party".

As far as the title to the corpus is concerned, the positions of the respective parties can be summarised as follows; the 5th and the 11th Defendants, claim that the entirety of the corpus at one point was owned by Don Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and on the strength of his and his wife's joint last will, subsequent testamentary proceedings and Notarial conveyance, the title to the entire land passed to Mahaweera Jayasinghe from whom the 5th Defendant asserts she purchased the land. whereas the position of the Plaintiff is that Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe was entitled to only 2/3rd of the corpus, based on the two title deeds produced as 8V1 and 8V2.

The learned District Judge having considered the evidence placed before court, had come to a firm finding of fact that, both the Plaintiff as well as the 5th and the 11th Defendants have established that Elias Jayasinghe had title to

2/3 of the corpus, but the 5th and the 11th Defendants have failed to establish that Elias Jayasinghe possessed the balance 1/3 of the corpus and had derived title by prescription to the balance portion [page 22 of the judgement]. This is a finding of fact by the trial judge and I do not think this finding can be upset unless there is clear material indicative of the fact learned District Judge having misdirected herself. I do not find any such material and in the circumstance, I answer both questions of law on which leave was granted in the negative.

For the reasons set out above, I am of the view, the appeal should be dismissed.

JUDGE OF THE SUPREME COURT

E.A.G.R. AMARASEKARA, J.

I had the privilege of reading the judgment written by my brother Judge Honourable Justice Samayawardhena in its draft form. With all due respect to the views expressed by His Lordship in coming to the conclusions he made, I would prefer to dissent and express my views as elaborated below in this separate judgment.

The Plaintiff – Respondent – Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff) instituted this action in the District Court of Galle by plaint dated 18.11.1986 seeking to partition the land described in paragraph 2 thereof as Kahata Addara Owita alias Kahawe Liyadda alias Bathmadala Watte alias Bathmadala Owita in extent of about 8 kurunis of paddy sowing among the Plaintiff and the 1st – 10th Defendants named therein the plaint. Thereafter, the Plaintiff filed an amended plaint dated 14.08.1996 amending the original plaint on the pretext that the devolution of the 3rd Defendant's share had not been properly pleaded – vide proceedings dated 13.05.1996. The 6th and 8th Defendants filed their joint statement of claim dated 30.08.1995 and finally amended it by joint amended statement of claim dated 01.10.1997. They agreed with the amended plaint as to how the shares should be allocated for partition. At the trial 6th and 8th Defendants prosecuted this action instead of the Plaintiffs.

The 5th and 11th Defendants (mother and daughter respectively) filed their joint statement of claim dated 11.01.1995 and thereafter filed an amended joint statement of claim dated 17.12.1996. The 5th and 11th Defendants by their statement of claim contested the identity of the land to be partitioned as well as the pedigree of title set out by the Plaintiff. Accordingly, the 5th and 11th Defendants prayed for the dismissal of this action and for a declaration that the corpus for partition belonged to the 5th Defendant and for the recovery of damages caused by obtaining an enjoining order and an injunction. During the course of the trial the 5th defendant died and the 11th defendant was substituted in her place.

Subsequent to the trial Learned District Judge delivered the judgment dated 18.05.2009 and by the said judgment points of contest were answered in favor of the 6th and 8th Defendants and against the 5A/11th Defendant. The Learned District Judge decided to partition the subject matter of the action as per the shares allocated in the judgment. Followings are among the reasons given by the Learned District Judge in arriving at her conclusions.

- The 8th Defendant has given clear evidence as to the pedigree they relied on and the original Plaintiff also has given evidence to corroborate that without contradictions and thus have proved their pedigree.

- 5A Defendant failed in proving that the last will was a last will of Don Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and that he further failed in proving that the whole land was possessed by the said Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe along with his wife Francina, even though the Plaintiff has confirmed at one time that 2/3 was owned by the said Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe.

- There is no proof to indicate that the said Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe became the owner of balance 1/3 by prescription but it was proved that the said 1/3 was in the possession of one Abraham who was the father of the original Plaintiff, and the 8th Defendant. One Hemasara, a retired officer of the Agrarian Department had given evidence in support of the said possession and as per the said evidence, the 8th Defendant and the Original Plaintiff had come to the possession after the demise of said Abraham. According to the evidence given by the said witness, nothing was revealed as to the possession of the 5th Defendant. Even though the said witness Hemasara is a relative of the original Plaintiff and the 8th Defendant, he came on summons and his evidence can be relied upon.

- Even though the original Plaintiff and the 8th Defendant admitted in evidence that the aforesaid Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe had daughters other than the sons disclosed in their pedigree, and Mahasena, one of the sons of said Elias, had 8 children where only 3 have been revealed in their pedigree, since no one has come forward to intervene in the partition action, it cannot be decided that there are parties not revealed by the Plaintiff. Contesting 5th Defendant has not taken any attempt to add them if there are other heirs.

- 5A and 11th Defendant failed in proving that the title to the whole corpus devolved on the 5th Defendant.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment the 5A/11th Defendant appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court of Galle. Subsequent to the arguments made by both the parties learned Civil Appellate High Court Judges delivered its judgment dated 01.06.2016 and by the said judgment learned High Court Judges dismissed the appeal with costs. Among other things following reasons have been expounded by the learned High Court Judges.

a) 5V 15 and 5V14, namely Sinhala copy of the last will and English translation of the last will are two documents containing contradictory contents.
b) 5th and 11th Defendants' position is that said Elias and his wife devised the subject matter to Munidasa by last will dated 06.02.1890 but item 1 of 5V 15 indicates that the last will dated 06.02.1890 was cancelled.
c) The 5th and 11th defendants failed to produce letters of probate of T2970 as evidence at the trial.
d) Munidasa by executing 5V3, had transferred only what he has inherited and not what he has got through a Last Will. As such, it defeats the stance taken up by the 5th and 11th Defendants.

The 5A/11th Defendant sought leave to appeal from this court against the said Judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court, and this court was inclined to grant leave on the following questions of law as formulated by learned counsel for the appellant at the stage of supporting for leave: (-Vide Journal Entry dated 09.03.2018)

1. Have the High Court and the District Court erred in law by failing to appreciate that the pedigree of title put forward by the 5th and the 11th defendants proved that they were the sole owners of the corpus for partition?

2. In any event, whether the 5th and the 11th defendants and their predecessors have acquired prescriptive title to the land sought to be partitioned by long possession?

Before the original court there had been a pedigree dispute as well as a dispute relating to the identification of the corpus between the contesting parties.

The original plaintiff Walakadagamage Munidasa filed the partition action in the District Court of Galle to get the land described in the original plaint which was named as Kahataaddara Owita alias Bathmadalawaththa alias Bathmadala Owita alias Kahaweliyadde partitioned. However, it can be observed that some of the deeds found in original plaintiff's pedigree that describe the corpus also as Bathmadalawatta alias Bathmadala Owita were executed very close to the filing of the partition action in the District Court on 18/11/1986- vide deeds no. 2276 and 2267 and 376. However, on 13.05.1996, on a request made by the plaintiff to amend the pedigree to show the devolution of title downwards from one Tissa Jayasinghe named in the Plaintiff's pedigree, the District Court has granted permission to tender an amended plaint but, it appears that the amended plaint dated 14.08.1996 tendered on this permission has changed the description of the land to indicate that it is not Bathmadalawaththa or Bathmadala Owita but only as a portion of said Bathmadalawaththa or Bathmadala Owita which is not even in accordance with the description found in the aforesaid deeds executed close to the filing of the partition action. Perhaps this might have happened due to an afterthought since the plans made and available at the time of filing the original plaint, old deeds as well as relevant old entries in the land registry do not describe this land as Bathmadalawaththa or Bathmadalaowita.

Even though, the original Plaintiff did not prosecute the partition action, the 6th and 8th defendants who prosecuted the partition action have relied on the same description of the land as per their statement of claim and the amended statement of claim. The 5th and the 11th Defendants, who contested the position taken by the original plaintiff as well as the position of the 6th and 8th defendants who prosecuted the partition action, in their statement of claim as well as in the amended statement of claim have described the corpus only as Kahataliyadde alias Kahataaddra Owita. Accuracy of such description is confirmed by the old deeds, plans and old entries in the land registry, some of which were marked or even relied on by the original Plaintiff and the 6th and the 8th Defendants- vide 8v1,8v2,5v1,5v2,5v3,5v5,5v6,5v10.

Although the learned District Judge has expressed in her judgment that the 5A and 11th Defendant in her evidence in cross examination had admitted that the land is also described as part of Bathmadala Owita, it appears that the said Defendant in her evidence had not made such an admission but had clearly said that there are no other names to this land other than Kahatagaha Liyadde and Kahatagahaaddara Owita. What she had admitted in her evidence is that in the plaint, the Plaintiff has described it as Bathmadalawatta and Bathmadala Owita. She has clearly denied these additional names used by the Plaintiff- vide pages 415,416,418. The Counsel for the 5A and 11th Defendant Appellant has indicated in his written submissions that the Appellant does not intend to pursue the question of the identity of the corpus in this appeal anymore. If the corpus is identified as per the boundaries, it does not matter even if some of the parties use additional names to describe the land, but what is stated above indicates that the original Plaintiff as well as the 6th and 8th defendants were not even conversant with the name of the land. Other than the names used by the 5th and 11th Defendants, they have, in aforesaid recent deeds, used two other names, namely Bathmadalawatta and Bathmadalaowita and during the pendency of the action have changed the position to describe the corpus as part of Bathmadalawatta or Bathmadalaowita. It also poses the question, if it is a part of a bigger land as per their stance, whether one can maintain a partition action without establishing that it became a separate land from the bigger land.

As far as the pedigree dispute is concerned, the Original Plaintiff and the 6th and 8th Defendants in their amended pleadings relied on the same pedigree, and the 13th and the 14th Defendants in their statement of claim have stated that the share given to the 3rd Defendant as per the pedigree shown by the 6th and the 8th Defendants should devolve on them indicating that they also rely on the pedigree shown by the 6th and the 8th Defendants. As per the said pedigree, Corpus was originally owned by Karolis (1/3 of the corpus), K.G. Punchihamy, W. Elias, W. Seetu, W. John, W. Dingo, W. Nero (1/3 of the corpus) and Walakadagamage Abraham (1/3 of the Corpus). The said pedigree further indicates that 1/3 of the aforesaid Walakadagamage Abraham was devolved on the Plaintiff and the 6th to 10th Defendants and the other 2/3 was sold to Don Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe by the aforementioned original owners by deeds no. 3565 and 2530 marked as 8v1 and 8v2 at the trial. It must be noted here that said Don Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe is one of the original owners referred to by the 5th and 11th Defendants in their Pedigree. As per the pedigree relied by the Original Plaintiff and 6th and 8th Defendants, 2/3 of said Don Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe had devolved on his sons Jinadasa, Mahasena, and Munidasa. According to the position taken by the original Plaintiff and the 6th and 8th Defendants in their pedigree, at the end, Jinadasa's share has passed to 1st,2nd, 13th ,14th Defendants and the original Plaintiff; Mahasena's share has passed to the original Plaintiff and the 4th Defendant while Munidasa's share has passed to the 5th Defendant through the deeds No. 32, 411 and 1045 executed in the years 1912,1941 and 1941 respectively. It appears, as mentioned before, the deeds written in favour of the original Plaintiff by the descendants of Jinadasa and Mahasena were executed very close to the date of filing the partition action, namely within 3 months prior to the filing of the action.

The 5th and 11th Defendants claimed title to the whole land and their position was that the land originally belonged to said Don Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and his wife Nagoda Gamage Francinahamy, and as per the joint last will proved in the case No. 2970 in the Galle District Court, it devolved on one of the sons of the testators, namely Munidasa and further, through aforesaid deeds No. 32,411 and 1045, 5th Defendant became the owner of the entire land. Thus, they prayed for a dismissal of the partition action.

The learned District Judge has accepted the version of the original Plaintiff and the 6th and the 8th Defendants with regard to the pedigree dispute, and the learned High Court Judges in appeal have confirmed the findings of the learned District Judge.

It appears, with regard to the pedigree dispute even the learned High Court Judges have held that the 5th and 11th defendants failed to prove their position with regard to the proof of the last will in DC case no. T 2970.

However, it appears that the learned High Court Judges failed to see whether there was sufficient evidence to prove the pedigree relied on by the Plaintiff and others. As per the evidence led, it is clear that there was no dispute that at one time 2/3 was with the said Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe. As such, one dispute as to the pedigree would be whether the balance 1/3 was with Abraham, the father of the original Plaintiff and of the 8th Defendant, or whether that was also subject to the alleged testamentary case as one of the properties included in the Last Will of said Elias and his wife. The other dispute as to the pedigree was whether the said 2/3 owned by said Elias was devolved upon the parties as per the pedigree of the original Plaintiff and the 6th and 8th Defendants or whether it along with balance 1/3 was subject to the testamentary action no. DC2970 as one of the properties of said Elias and his wife, and whether it devolved on the 5th Defendant as per the pedigree of the 5th and 11th Defendants. In other words, whether the whole corpus was subject to the testamentary case or whether the pedigree of the original Plaintiff is fully or partly relevant to the corpus.

Now I would prefer to see whether the findings with regard to the alleged Last will and the Testamentary Action DC 2970 by the courts below were satisfactory.

In the original statement of claim filed by the 5th and 11th Defendants, they have mentioned the Last Will dated 02.10.1891 as the relevant Last Will by which said Elias and his wife devised the property in question to one of their sons, namely Munidasa- vide paragraph 5 of the said statement of claim. However, when they tendered an amended statement of claim dated 17.12.1996 they have not referred to the date of the Last Will in the body of the statement of claim but have referred to the testamentary case no. DC 2970- vide paragraph no.7 of the amended statement of claim of the 5th and 11th Defendants. However, in the pedigree attached to the said amended statement of claim, the date of the Last Will is mentioned as 06.02.1890. Anyhow, through the evidence led at the trial, the 5A and the 11th Defendant have marked the purported last will proved in Testamentary case No. DC 2970 as 5V14 (see pages 406 and 407of the brief) and again it has been referred to as the certified translation of the Last Will proved in Testamentary case no. DC 2970 -vide page 413 of the brief. 5V15 has been marked as the document in Sinhala relevant to 5V14 and further it has been referred as the Sinhala copy of the original Last Will- vide page 413 of the brief. Neither of these documents were objected or marked subject to proof when they were marked in evidence, and no such objection was reiterated when the 5th and 11th defendants closed their case. Thus, they became evidence for all purposes of the case. Once documentary evidence is tendered, even if a lay witness introduces and gives it a name as he understands it, it is the duty of the court to see what it is and what it contains as evidence. The secretary of the District Court of Galle has issued 5V14 on 10.04.48 certifying it as a true copy of the translation of the Last Will in D.C.2970- vide 5V14A. It appears that up to item 5 of the original document was considerably torn even at the time of it was issued. 5V15 is also a certified copy issued by the secretary of District Court of Galle and it appears to have been issued on 12.04.48 just two days after the date of issue of 5V14. The secretary has certified 5V15 as a true extract of the Last Will in D C 2970 indicating that it is not the complete document but an extract. It contains only the introductory part and items 1 to 4 of the document. As up to item 5 was considerably torn as per the English translation marked 5V14, 5v 15 might have been taken to complement the missing parts in the 5V14. 5v14 as well as 5v15 have been issued in the middle part of the 20th century, many years prior to the institution of the partition action and filing of the statement of claims by the 5th and 11th Defendants. These are certified copies issued by a court and they were not marked subject to any objection and as said before, they are evidence for all purposes of the case. Thus, no one can assume that they are fraudulent documents prepared for the present case. Further, when section 61, 63,64,65(5),74(i)(ii),76 and 77 of the Evidence Ordinance read together, it can be considered that 5V14 and 5 V15 were proved as part of the case record in Testamentary case D C 2970. Under such circumstances a court cannot just ignore such evidence. Following observations also indicate that these two documents are not contradictory but complementary.

As per 5V15, it is a joint Last Will of Galaboda Liyanage Don Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe Mudiyanse and his wife Dona Francina Hamina. By that, it appears,

1. They have revoked their previous Joint Will dated 06.02.1890

2. Have appointed the survivor (if one dies) as the executor of the Will.

3. Have given life interest to the survivor on the immovable and movable property (It appears this is so given if there is no other direction in the will)

4. After the said life interest, certain properties were to be devolved on the named 5 sons as explained in the item no. 4, namely the properties described in items 5,6, -, -,9,10,11 and 20 (rest of the Sinhala copy is not available and as explained above this is only an extract of the Last Will).

6. In the said 5v 14 purported translations of the Last Will, as said before, from the introduction to item 1 to 4 seems to be considerably torn but what remains corresponds with the Sinhala copy. For example, a. In the introductory part, the words "Galaboda", "Jayasinghe", "wife", "Nagoda", "Hamine" can be found in both copies.

b. Under item 1 "we do hereby" may relate to the revocation of previous Will in Sinhala copy.
c. Under item 2, "we do hereby…… the survivor …… of our estate" can relate to the appointment of the survivor as the executor in the Sinhala copy.
d. Under item 3, "the survivor…. Life time all" may relate to the granting of life time interest to the survivor in the Sinhala copy.
e. Item 4 cannot be separately identified in the English copy. Maybe it was torn when the certified copy of the translation was issued, but parts of the names of the 5 sons are found in the English copy along with the reference to item 11 and 20 of the Last Will which correspond with the item 4 of the Sinhala copy.
f. Items 5,6,7,8,9,10,11 and 20 found in the English copy which is not available in the Sinhala copy bequeath properties to the 5 sons in accordance with the item 4 of the Sinhala copy.

Thus, my view is that there was evidence before the learned District Judge to indicate that,

- There was a joint last will of aforesaid Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and his wife Francina which was the subject matter of D C Galle 2970.

- 5V15 is an extract of the Will which contained up to item 5 and 5v14 was the English translation of the said Last Will, of which up to item 5 was considerably torn and 5v15 and 5v 14 are complementary and not contradictory.

Now it is necessary to see whether this Will was proved in DC No. 2970 and probate was issued,

i. Inventory marked 5V13 is a certified copy of the inventory in the said case DC 2970, tendered to Court on 16.06.1892 by the surviving testator who was the executor named in the joint Will; it has been explained to the executor by the interpreter and countersigned by the District Judge. It has been issued as a certified copy on 03.05.1949. Since the District Judge has counter-signed, it cannot be an inventory tendered with the Petition but the inventory that had to be filed by the executor after his appointment. Nowhere in the document it is mentioned that it had been submitted by a temporary executor. Executor is appointed when the Will is proved. Thus, 5V13 contains secondary evidence to show that the Will was proved and probate was issued.

ii. 5V14, certified copy of the English translation of the Will, contains a heading to say that it was a translation tendered for the purposes of accounting. Accounting starts with the proof of Will and the issuance of probate. So, this is also secondary evidence to show that the Will was proved and the probate was issued in DC 2970.

I agree that the best proof of probate was the letters issued in that regard after the proof of Will but the document marked 5V14 indicates that the case record was in dilapidated condition even in 1948/1949. I think if the original Court record is destroyed, one can prove the proof of Will and the probate through secondary evidence. I would like to bring to the attention the meaning of probate as per K.D.P. Wickremesinghe in 'Civil Procedure in Ceylon' at page 354 and 355.

""probate" is an English term signifying the proof of the Will of a deceased person in a competent Court as required by Law. The term probate in its strictest sense signifies the copy of the Will which is given to the executor, together with a certificate granted under seal of the Court, and signed by the secretary of the Court certifying that the Will has been proved, and this probate constitutes the executor's title to act. In a wider sense, the word indicates the process and results of proving a Will."

If we take the strict interpretation, there is only secondary evidence to say that in DC 2970, the Will was proved, the executors were appointed and the letters of probate were issued. On the other hand, if we take it in its wider sense, in my view, there is material to show that a joint Will was proved in that case (of course not the one executed on 06.02.1890 but the one dated 02.10.1891). It must be kept in mind the original documents were made in the 19th century and the certified copies were issued in the middle part of the 20th century, many years prior to the institution of the partition action in the latter part of the 20th Century. As pointed out above, certified copies can be used to prove the contents of the case record DC 2970 Galle, and as mentioned before, these documents were not objected or marked subject to proof. As per the items marked as 5V 14 B and 5V14 C on the document marked 5V 14, the relevant property had been bequeathed to Munidasa, one of the sons of said Don Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe.

As per the deed No.32 marked 5V3 and land registry extracts marked 5V6, said Munidasa had transferred 8 Kuruni land known as Kahateliyadde to Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe. The said Munidasa in the said deed has stated the property had been held, enjoyed and possessed by him by right of inheritance. In my view, merely because he had used the term 'by right of inheritance', one cannot come to the conclusion it was not his entitlement gained through the last will as succession can be testate or intestate. If he had only an undivided share coming through intestate succession, he could have indicated a transfer of an undivided share in the schedule to the said deed but he had mentioned transfer of whole 8 Kuruni Land in the schedule in the said deed written in 1912. Said 5V3 supports the stance taken by the 5th and 11th Defendants. Further, documents marked 5V11 and 5 V12 are the letters of administration and the inventory respectively in the testamentary case No.7769, filed with regard to the intestate estate of the said Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe vendee of said 5V3. Item No.18 of 5V12 has been marked as 5V12A. 5V12A also indicates that even the administrator of said Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe included the whole land in the inventory of the said Testamentary case as part of said Daramadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe's estate. Thus, documents marked with regard to the testamentary case relating to the joint last will of Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and Francinahamy, 5V3 and documents relating to the testamentary case of Dharamadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe show that people belonging to 3 generations in the 5th and 11th Defendants' pedigree from latter part of the 19th century to the middle part of the 20th century considered the whole property as their property only.

I would also like to refer to page 460 of Laws of Ceylon, Walter Pereira to indicate that with the death of the testator, property specifically devised vest in the devisee immediately. But the title is imperfect as it is subject to administration by the executor. In the case at hand, after the testamentary case relating to the joint last will of Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and Francina, the devisee named in the last will (see 5V14B and 5V14C) has dealt with the property indicating that it was not sold otherwise for the administration of that estate but it came to the hands of the named devisee.

A joint Will generally is considered as a separate Will of the relevant testators, but if the Will disposes the property on the death of the survivor, or, as it is sometimes expressed, that the property is consolidated into one mass for the purpose of joint disposition or the survivor adiates what was given by the cotestator, the survivor has to abide by the joint Last Will – see Walter Pereira's Laws of Ceylon page 401 and 405. In the case at hand it appears, after the death of Francinahamy, the testamentary case was filed with regard to the estate covered by the joint last will and the said Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe, the survivor accepted the executorship created by their joint last will and further the devisee who was named for the subject matter had later dealt with the subject matter by 5V3. This indicates that the said Elias abided by the joint last will. Further, as indicated above life interest has been given to the survivor indicating that the property was to be disposed to the named devisee only after the death of the survivor.

No one has taken a position that, for the purpose of administration of the intestate estate of the Vendee of 5V3 Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe, the subject matter was sold to other parties. 5A and 11th Defendant has stated in evidence that after the demise of Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe, subject matter was devolved upon Alfred, Biatris, Chandrawathie, Victor, Cyril and Mahaweera Amarasiri Jayasinghe. Said Alfred, Biatris, Chandrawathie, Victor and Cyril by executing deed no.411 have conveyed the property to aforesaid Amarasiri Jayasinghe who by executing deed no.1045, again conveyed it to the 5th Defendant. Thus, there appears to be considerable evidence supporting the version of 5th and 11th Defendants to indicate that;

- There was a joint last will by Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and his Wife, Francina which was admitted to probate in the Testamentary Case No. DC 2970, Galle District Court.

- 5v15 was a certified extract of the Sinhala copy of the said Last Will which contained up to item 5 of the Will, and 5V14 is the certified copy of the English translation of the said Will, of which up to item 5 was considerably torn.

- The corpus in the present action was included in the said Joint last will and the devisee was one Munidasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe.

- Said Munidasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe transferred the corpus to Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe by executing 5V3.

- After Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe, the corpus devolved upon Alfred, Biatris, Chandrawathie, Victor, Cyril and Mahaweera Amarasiri Jayasinghe, and due to the execution of deeds No. 411 (5V2) and 1045(5V1) the corpus became the property of the 5th Defendant.

Only defect in the 5th and 11th Defendants' position is that, though they mentioned the date of the joint last will admitted to probate in D C 2970 as 06.02.1890 in their pedigree annexed to the amended statement of claim, in fact, Last Will dated 06.02.1890 is the one cancelled by the joint last will dated 02.10.1891 which was admitted to probate in D C 2970. The stance of the 5th and 11th defendants was that the corpus was originally owned by aforesaid Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and his wife, Francina and they executed a joint last will which was admitted to probate in DC 2970 and then it came to the ownership of the 5th Defendant as per the pedigree shown in her statement of claim. When there is evidence to establish that stance, merely because there is an error in mentioning the date of relevant joint last will, in my view, a judge cannot ignore the rights of the party who made an error or a mistake in mentioning the date of the last will. On the other hand, for the sake of argument, even if one goes to the extreme and argues that change in the date of the joint last will is a change of stance and the 5th and 11th defendants cannot take up the position that their entitlement flows from the last will marked in evidence, in my view, learned District Judge still could not have approved the pedigree of the original Plaintiff or of the 6th and 8th Defendants which does not flow from the said joint last will which as per the evidence led was admitted to probate in DC 2970, as such evidence indicates that there is a different pedigree involved as to the rights in the corpus, at least in respect of the undisputed 2/3 share of Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe, who was one of the testators in the said joint last will. (Evidence with regard to the balance 1/3 will be discussed later in this judgment). In this regard, I would like to stress that, this is a partition action and the investigation of title is the duty of the District Judge – vide Kularatne v Ariyasena (2001) B L R 6, Chandrasena V Piyasena (1999) 3 Sri L R 201. By this I do not mean that the judge should go on a voyage of discovery in investigating title. The judge may have to do it within the limits of pleadings, admissions, points of contests, evidence both oral and documentary – vide Thilagaratnam V Athpunathan (1996) 2 Sri L R 66. It must also be noted that in Golagoda V Mohideen 40 N L R 92 it was held that the court should not enter decree in a partition action unless it is perfectly satisfied that the persons in whose favour it makes the decree are entitled to the property. If the Learned Judges of the courts below were vigilant enough, they could have observed the available evidence in favour of the 5th and 11th defendants that I referred to above. In a partition action, even if the pedigree or part of the pedigree proposed by a party is wrong, if the evidence/documents led at the trial proves title through a different pedigree, the judge has to consider the pedigree proved through evidence. In my view, in a partition action, what is more important is not the pedigree of which party is more acceptable on balance of probability, but as per the evidence/documents led at the trial what is the acceptable pedigree on balance of probability. Thus, in a partition action sometimes pedigree of any of the party may not be totally correct, but the evidence and documents tendered by all parties may establish a more probable pedigree when compared to the pedigrees tendered by individual parties. This is further established by certain decisions of the superior courts which indicate that in investigating title, judge is not bound even by the points of contests raised by the parties. Basically, the points of contests reflect the stances taken by parties in contesting the case. The said cases are Peris V Perera 1 N L R 362, Nona Baba V Namohamy 3 N L R 12, Weerappa Chettiar V Rambukpotha Kumarihamy 45 N L R 332

As said before, it is apparent that the judges in the courts below failed to appreciate the evidence available for the benefit of the 5th and 11th Defendants or against the stance of the original Plaintiff and the 6th and the 8th Defendants in evaluating evidence.

The learned District Judge in holding in favour of the original Plaintiff's pedigree has indicated that there is clear evidence to establish that pedigree as per the evidence given by the original Plaintiff and the 8th defendant. In my view, the fallacy of this finding is evinced by what is mentioned below;

• Firstly, as explained before, the learned District Judge failed to appreciate that undisputed 2/3 of Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe could not have devolved upon as per the pedigree of the Plaintiff due to the evidenced placed before the District Court, since Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe was one of the testators of the joint will which was admitted to probate in DC 2970. Even if the date of the Last Will was not 06.02.1890 but 02.10.1891, there was evidence to show that the latter was admitted to probate in D C 2970 and for a pedigree to be accepted it should have a link to those testamentary proceedings and the said Last Will.

• Secondly, the 8th Defendant while giving evidence, in cross examination, has admitted certain facts indicating that the pedigree presented by them including the original Plaintiff is not correct. In relation to that he has admitted that Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe had daughters other than the sons revealed in their pedigree and they should also inherit. This was done only after denying that there were daughters, and later he admits that he knew about the said daughters even at the time of the institution of the action -vide pages 228 to 231 of the brief. Further, he has admitted that Mahasena Amarasiri Jayasinghe who appears in their pedigree had eight children even though they have shown only 3 children in their pedigree. He has even revealed the names of some of the children not shown in their pedigree when questioned in cross examination. However, again, in re-examination tries to deny that he had any knowledge about the daughters of Elias. At one point, it appears that he had the knowledge with regard to the testamentary proceedings that existed at the time of the death of Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe- vide page 239 of the brief. If so, it appears that this witness has evaded revealing such testamentary proceedings in their pedigree. Further, it can be observed that he had evaded in answering some of the questions relating to the pedigree. The learned District Judge should have observed the incoherent and unreliable nature of the evidence given by this witness, namely the 8th Defendant in relation to the pedigree they rely on. However, after observing the said admissions made by the 8th defendant while giving evidence, the learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that there cannot be other parties who have not been revealed as no other party has intervened. Said conclusion cannot be condoned since some of the names have been revealed by the 8th defendant in his evidence. If what has been revealed by the 8th defendant in cross examination is correct, share allocation could not have been done according to the pedigree relied by the original Plaintiff and the 8th Defendant. Further, the Learned District Judge says, if there are others, the 5th and 11th Defendants could have taken steps to add them. 5th and 11th Defendants' position was that this action should be dismissed since the subject matter belongs to them, I cannot understand this reasoning as to why the learned District Judge find fault with parties, who do not seek to partition the land but claim the land as a whole, for not taking steps to add others. They need not even reveal any parties as per their stance.

- Thirdly, the original Plaintiff in his evidence has revealed certain facts which are inimical to his as well as the 6th and 8th defendants' stance, which are highlighted below; Such statements also stand against the findings in their favour by the learned District Judge.

    - The original Plaintiff states that from 1960 he came to know that his father Abraham had 1/3 of the corpus-vide page 313 of the brief.

However, in 1986 he has bought from one Gunasena Amarasiri Jayasinghe 1/2 of the corpus or what belongs to said Gunasena Amarasiri Jayasinghe- vide deed no. 2267 marked 8V4. If their version of pedigree in the plaint is correct Gunasena Amarasiri Jayasinghe could not have 1/2 of the corpus but only 2/27 since they admit that only 2/3 was with Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe. Further, if Mahasena Amarasiri Jayasinghe had more than 3 children as stated by the 8th Defendant, Gunasena Amarasiri Jayasinghe's share has to be further reduced. The Plaintiff tries to explain that it was so bought as 1/2 of the corpus, as per his knowledge at the time 8V4 was executed. If 1/3 was with Abraham and 2/3 was with said Elias, and he knew their pedigree was correct, he should have known that said Gunasena Amarasiri Jayasinghe could not have 1/2 of the corpus. This indicates that his statement that Abraham had 1/3 and he came to know it in 1960 cannot be relied upon. To buy 1/2 of the corpus from said Gunasena, he appears to have believed in 1986 that Gunasena's predecessors had more than he had shown in his pedigree in his plaint. At least this shows he was not aware of the correct pedigree when he bought from Gunasena Amarasiri Jayasinghe. Then his evidence in courts relating to pedigree must be false or based on some knowledge he gained from some unexplained sources after the execution of 8V4 which may amount to hearsay.

- The original Plaintiff at page 343 and 345 of the brief attempts to state that aforesaid Elias got his entitlement to the lands in the village through his marriage and his wife Francina had 1/9 of the corpus. As per their pedigree Elias has bought 2/3 from others. Thus, this reference to entitlements of Elias through his marriage and Francina's entitlement for 1/9 is more in favour of the stance taken by the 5th and 11th defendants since, as per their version Elias and his wife Francina were the original owners and as per the 6th,8th Defendants' and the original Plaintiff's stances Francina did not have any rights to this land. However, after referring to the entitlements of Elias that he got through his marriage and Francina's 1/9 share in the corpus, original Plaintiff has expressed that his reference to Francina's entitlement was a mistake due to old age- vide pages 345,346 and 347. Anyhow, due to such contradictory statements, his evidence cannot be considered as reliable, since he might have tried to explain his reference to Francina's entitlement for 1/9 as a mistake as he suddenly realized such statement is inimical to their stance. In fact, it appears that he himself has referred 2/9 entitlement that came from Francina to Elias prior to that. If there were entitlements that came to Elias through his marriage or if 1/9 of the corpus was with Francina, original Plaintiff's or 6th and 8th Defendants' stance that Abraham had 1/3 of the corpus cannot be correct as there was no dispute that Elias got 2/3 from other sources through deeds marked 8V1 and 8V2. Further, this original Plaintiff has stated that Abraham got his 1/3 from his father Walakada Gamage Appune and Appune had another child, a daughter named Wilisina – vide pages 348. If Appune had 1/3 and he had two children, Abraham cannot have entitlement to 1/3 of the corpus, as Appune's entitlement should devolve on both of them. As per his evidence, he first has denied his knowledge with regard to the children of Wilisina but later states that she had 3 or 4 children and admits that if Appune had rights, it should also devolve on Wilisina.

- Fourthly, the 8th Defendant in his evidence has tried to convince the court that his father Walakadagamage Abraham was the owner of 1/3 of the corpus and he possessed and cultivated sugar cane during his time and after his demise his children are possessing the land and 1/2 of the extent is in their possession – vide page 239 of the brief. No documentary evidence was produced to show any dealing relating to cultivation of sugar cane. On the other hand, if they are in possession of the land, the natural response during the preliminary survey would be the showing of the area in their possession to the surveyor to include that in the plan and the report. However, preliminary plan and report marked X and X1 do not show any area in the possession of the children of Abraham except for a cross claim made by the original Plaintiff to 9 trees against the claim made by the 11th Defendant on behalf of the 5th Defendant for all the trees and a tomb on the land. Anyhow, as per the superimposition plan and report marked Y and Y1, no one has claimed the trees other than the 5th and 11th defendants even though some of the children of Abraham, namely the Plaintiff, 6th ,7th, 8th, and the10th Defendants were present at that survey. Thus, the cross claim made on the first instance of the survey is questionable since they did not claim when the claim was made on behalf of the 5th Defendant while they were present when it was surveyed again for the superimposition. Even though, as mentioned before, it was said that after demise of Abraham they are in possession, no area has been shown in the preliminary plan or in the superimposition plan where they were in possession.

- Fifthly, it appears that the Learned District Judge heavily relied on the evidence given by one of the witnesses for the original Plaintiff and the 6th and 8th defendants, namely Walakada Gamage Hemasiri. It does not seem that he has given evidence using official records as an ex-officer. The Learned District Judge has accepted his evidence stating even though he is a relative of the original Plaintiff and the 6th and 8th Defendants, he came to give evidence on summons. The Learned District Judge has further stated that nothing has come to light from this witness about the possession of the 5th Defendant, but this witness had revealed that after Abraham, his children including original Plaintiff and the 6th and 8th Defendants, came to the possession of the land. However, when one goes through his evidence it can be observed that he is not an impartial witness but one who tried to hide the possession of the 5th and 11th Defendants at the early part of his evidence. In this regard following would be relevant.

- As per his evidence, he resides close to the subject matter of this case and it was Abraham who cultivated sugar cane and other crops in this corpus who died about 25 years ago to the date he gave evidence. He had never seen that 5th and 11th Defendants were in the possession of the corpus-– vide evidence in chief of the said witness. He admits that 6th and 8th Defendants are his close relatives-vide cross examination at page 265 of the brief. He has seen Abraham was in possession when he was passing through the nearby road- vide page 268 of the brief. No one other than Abraham and his sons possessed this corpus and 5th Defendant never had the possession of this land – vide page 271 of the brief. It is Abraham's children who possess this corpus – vide re-examination at page 270. However, this witness admits that he does not know whether Abraham had any title to the corpus- vide page 270. When questioned about the tea plants claimed on behalf of the 5th Defendant as per the survey report, this witness first says that he did not see such plants and changed his evidence to say that Abraham possessed only a separated portion – vide pages 273 to 275. No such separated portion in the possession of Abraham's children is shown in the preliminary survey.
- If this witness is a truthful witness, the portion enjoyed by Abraham or his children must have been revealed in the preliminary plan. As said before, survey reports marked at the trial clearly indicates that on behalf of the 5th Defendant there was a claim to the whole plantation and with a cross claim to some trees by the original Plaintiff which cross claim was not made in the survey report for the superimposition plan. Further, the original Plaintiff admits that he prayed for an injunction when the 5th and 11th Defendants took steps to build for weekly fair arranged by the Gramodaya Mandalaya. Moreover, the 5A and the 11th Defendant in her evidence has revealed that she removed the plantation including the tea plants. In the circumstances, it is clear that, being a person living close to the corpus, the said Hemasara had attempted to hide the possession of the 5th and the 11th Defendants and was a witness partial to the original Plaintiff and the 6th and the 8th Defendants. Whatever it is, his evidence at most can be considered as evidence that speaks of cultivation of crops and sugar cane by Abraham in the corpus but by his evidence it is clear that he cannot vouch for that such cultivation was done as a co-owner who was entitled to 1/3 of the corpus. The 5A and the 11th Defendant has clearly stated in her evidence about her and her predecessor's possession of the corpus. The Learned District Judge has refused to accept that the balance 1/3 was owned by Francina when, as mentioned before, from the latter part of the 19th century 3 generations have dealt with the corpus as their own as per the pedigree of the 5th and 11th Defendants, but the Learned District Judge has accepted that 1/3 was owned by Abraham when the evidence given on behalf of the original Plaintiff and the 6th and the 8th Defendants lacks integrity and was not reliable in that regard as indicated above. On the other hand, mere possession or enjoyment of a portion of unknown extent of the land which is not depicted on a plan cannot establish that Abraham was entitled to 1/3 of the corpus.

- Sixthly, the 8th Defendant has admitted that he was prosecuting the action as per the amended Plaint tendered by his brother, the original Plaintiff – vide page 197 of the brief. However, the original Plaintiff, when further probed in cross-examination with regard to the contradictory facts revealed through his evidence as to the pedigree, has stated that as per the advice given by lawyers, he filed the action and the lawyers makes the case in a manner feasible to prosecute.

Thus, as per the evidence led, I wonder how the Learned District Judge allocated shares as per the shares allocated in the plaint. In my view the Learned District Judge failed in properly appreciating the evidence placed before the District Court. Since there was a testamentary case where a Last Will was proved, 2/3 belonged to Elias could not have devolved as per the pedigree relied upon by the original Plaintiff and the 6th and the 8th Defendants. There was no clear evidence to show that 1/3 was owned by the Abraham. In fact, the evidence placed by the party who prosecuted the plaint and the original Plaintiff indicates that the pedigree they relied on was incomplete. Further, certain statements made by the original Plaintiff support the stance of the 5th and 11th Defendants that the other 1/3 also was with Francina, the wife of Elias and also that, in any case, Abraham could not have 1/3 of the corpus. Hence, the original Plaintiff and the 6th and 11th defendants failed in proving their case to get the corpus partitioned.

The Learned District Judge who wrote the Judgment heard only the latter part of the evidence of 5A Defendant. Thus, she was not in a better position to evaluate the rest of the evidence than a judge sitting in appeal as she also had to rely on what was recorded and submitted as evidence.

As per the reasons given above, it is my view that on balance of probability, the answer to question of law no.1 and 2 should be in the affirmative, and in any event, even if the sole ownership of Elias and his wife is considered as not proved, the original Plaintiff and or the 6th and the 8th Defendants who prosecuted the partition case have failed to prove a reliable pedigree to get the land partitioned. Thus, in my view, the partition action should have been dismissed.

Thus, I allow the appeal with costs.

MAHINDA SAMAYAWARDHENA, J

The plaintiff filed this action in the District Court of Galle to partition the land depicted in the Preliminary Plan, among the plaintiff and the 1st-10th defendants. The only contesting defendants were the 5th and 11th defendants, mother and daughter respectively, who sought dismissal of the plaintiff's action on the basis that the 5th defendant was the sole owner of the land. During the course of the trial the 5th defendant died and the 11th defendant was substituted in her place. After trial the District Court accepted the pedigree of the plaintiff and rejected the 5th and 11th defendants' pedigree and entered judgment accordingly. The appeal filed against this judgment by the 5A/11th defendant (appellant) was dismissed by the High Court of Civil Appeal. Hence this appeal to this court. This court granted leave to appeal on the following two questions of law as formulated by learned counsel for the appellant at the stage of supporting for leave:

(i) Has the High Court and the District Court erred in law by failing to appreciate that the pedigree of title put forward by the 5th and the 11th defendants proved that they were the sole owners of the corpus for partition?

(ii) In any event, whether the 5th and the 11th defendants and their predecessors have acquired prescriptive title to the land sought to be partitioned by long possession?

What is the pedigree unfolded by the appellant? The acceptance or refusal of the appellant's pedigree depends on the acceptance or refusal of the alleged joint last will executed by Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and his wife Francina Hamine. In the pedigree attached to the statement of claim dated 17.12.1996 (submitted to the District Court) and paragraphs 9 (i)-(ii) of the written submissions dated 17.01.2019 and paragraphs 10(i)-(ii) of the written submissions dated 19.05.2021 (submitted to this court), the appellant states that Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and his wife by their joint last will dated 06.02.1890 which was proved in DC Galle case No. 2970/T bequeathed the entire land which is the subject matter of this partition action to their son Munidasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe; and he by deed marked 5V3 of 1912 transferred it to Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe; and after his death, Mahaweera Amarasiri Jayasinghe became entitled to the land by deed marked 5V2 of 1941; and he transferred it to the appellant by deed marked 5V1 of 1941.

The plaintiff does not admit that there was a joint last will as alleged by the appellant which was admitted to probate. According to the appellant the original last will which is in Sinhala was marked 5V15 and the English translation of it was marked 5V14.

However, as the High Court has observed, paragraph 1 of the original last will states that the joint last will dated 06.02.1890 (which the appellant says was admitted to probate) is thereby revoked. If the last will dated 06.02.1890 was revoked, the appellant's pedigree based on the said last will shall fail.

Having realised this predicament, the appellant in paragraph 36 of the written submissions dated 19.05.2021 states "In the original Sinhala last will marked 5V15 paragraph 1 states that a previous last will of 06.02.1890 is being revoked. Paragraph 1 in 5V15 appears to have revoked a last will of 1890 and not the last will which was proved in the testamentary action 2970/T and which is dated 02.10.1891." This is contradictory to the earlier position taken up by the appellant from the District Court up to the Supreme Court that what was proved in case 2970/T was the last will dated 06.02.1890. The appellant cannot take up a new position before the Supreme Court for the first time on a question of fact which goes to the root of the case. A partition case is no exception.

There is no date of execution of the original last will 5V15. 5V14 dated 02.10.1891 is undoubtedly not the English translation of the original last will 5V15. Having realised this, the appellant in paragraph 35 of the written submissions dated 19.05.2021 takes up the position that "Documents 5V14 and 5V15 complement each other and they must be read together." I am unable to agree. The original and its translation cannot complement each other. The translation is not intended to supplement the original. There is no last will acceptable to court. There is no probate before court. The appellant argues that the inventory marked 5V13 proves that the last will was admitted to probate. Which last will? On the other hand, an inventory tendered in a testamentary case is not conclusive proof that the deceased testator was the absolute owner of all the properties stated therein.

It is also relevant to note that after the above-mentioned testamentary proceedings were over, when Munidasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe transferred the land to Dharmadasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe by 5V3, he traces his title to the property to "right of inheritance". He makes no reference to the last will or any executor conveyance. The appellant argues that the recital in 5V3 is entirely correct. I have my reservations. When someone acquires property by a last will admitted to probate, there is no reason for him not to refer to the last will or the executor conveyance executed in terms of the last will as the source of title in the recital of the subsequent deed.

The appellant then argues that whether it is by inheritance or last will, nothing flows from it to the benefit of the plaintiff. This is not correct. Munidasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe is also in the plaintiff's pedigree. According to the plaintiff's pedigree, Munidasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe being one of the three children of Eliyas Amarasiri Jayasinghe is only entitled to 2/3 x 1/3 = 2/9 or 24/108 share. But according to the appellant, Munidasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe was entitled to the entire land on the strength of the last will.

The appellant admits in evidence that by deed 8V1 of 1865 and 8V2 of 1878 produced by the plaintiff, Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe became entitled to only 2/3 of the land, not the entirety. This is prior to the alleged last will. How he became entitled to the balance 1/3, the appellant does not know. She thinks by prescription.

I am not satisfied, as the learned District Judge and the learned Judges of the High Court were, that there was a last will admitted to probate by which Elias Amarasiri Jayasinghe and his wife, being the lawful owners of the entire land subject to partition, bequeathed it to Munidasa Amarasiri Jayasinghe. If this is not proved, the subsequent deeds tendered on that assumption need not be scrutinised since what could have been transferred by those deeds was only what was entitled to the transferors and nothing more.

I answer the 1st question of law in the negative.

The next question relates to prescriptive possession. I do not think the appellant vigorously pursued such claim in the District Court, the High Court or before this court. In the District Court an incomplete issue (issue No.16) has been raised on prescription. In the High Court, the appeal has not been argued on prescription but only on identification of the corpus and devolution of title based on the aforesaid last will. In that backdrop it is my considered view that the appellant cannot try to establish a prescriptive claim as a main ground of appeal in the Supreme Court because it is a mixed question of fact and law if not a pure question of fact.

If there was no last will the appellant also becomes a co-owner of the land. Proof of prescriptive title is difficult. Proof of prescriptive title among co-owners is more difficult. Long possession of the co-owned land by one co-owner does not establish prescriptive possession unless it is established by cogent evidence that adverse possession commenced by way of an overt act continued for over 10 years. In this case evidence has been led that, apart from the appellant, others who come under the plaintiff's pedigree also possessed the land. There are no buildings or valuable plantation on the land. No cogent evidence has been led to prove that the appellant is entitled to the entire land by prescription based on adverse possession against the other co-owners. This maybe because the appellant claimed the entire land on deed 5V1 based on the aforesaid last will. If a person claims title to a property as the absolute owner on paper title, in my view, he cannot in the same breath make a prescriptive claim to the same property because a prescriptive claim is based upon adverse possession against the true owner of the property.

I answer the 2nd question of law also in the negative.

The appeal is dismissed but without costs.

The question that arises for determination in this appeal is whether the Plaintiff – Respondent – Respondent [the Plaintiff] has conveyed to the 1st Defendant – Appellant – Appellant [the 1st Defendant] by Deed No. 4158, the beneficial interest in the land referred to in the said Deed. The answer to this question would then determine whether the said land is being held by the 1st Defendant in trust for the Plaintiff, as provided for by Section 83 of the Trusts Ordinance.

Facts in brief

By Deed of Declaration No. 3939 dated 16th August 2002, the Plaintiff declared as follows:

(a) The original owner of the land referred to in the said Deed is Kalawilage Don Odiris Appuhamy;

(b) The said land, which is in extent of 0A 1R 11.90P and depicted in Plan No. 731/2002 dated 19th May 2002, is situated within the limits of the Beruwala Pradeshiya Sabha;

(c) Upon the death of Odiris Appuhamy, Kalawilage Don Somipala, who is the son of Odiris Appuhamy and the husband of the Plaintiff, came into possession of the said land and occupied the said land for a long period of time;

(d) Don Somipala passed away in 1989 and thereafter, the Plaintiff has been in undisturbed and uninterrupted possession of the said land;

(e) By virtue of such long possession, she is the owner of the said land.

In June 2003, which is less than one year after the execution of the above Deed of Declaration, the Plaintiff had the said land sub-divided into two lots marked A1 and A2, as more fully depicted in Plan No. 554/2003. According to the said Plan, the house of the Plaintiff and the well used by her had been situated on Lot A2, while the toilet was situated on Lot A1.

On 21st September 2003, the Plaintiff executed the impugned Deed of Transfer No. 4158 attested by Nadeel Malagoda, Attorney-at-Law, by which she transferred to the 1st Defendant, who is a relation of hers and who lived close to her house, Lot A1 in Plan No. 554/2003, in extent of 0A 0R 25P. The purchase consideration has been stipulated as Rs. 50,000, with the Notary certifying that the consideration was not paid in his presence. It must be noted that Deed No. 4158 does not contain any condition relating to the re-transfer of the said land to the Plaintiff and on the face of it, was an absolute transfer.

By Deed of Transfer No. 4560 executed on 7th March 2004, the 1st Defendant had transferred Lot A1 to the 2nd Defendant – Respondent – Respondent [the 2nd Defendant] for a sum of Rs. 60,000. The 2nd Defendant is said to be a company engaged in money lending. On 2nd October 2006, the 3rd Defendant – Appellant – Appellant [the 3rd Defendant] purchased from the 2nd Defendant the said land by way of Deed of Transfer No. 221 attested by Nirosha Silva, Attorney-at-Law, for a sum of Rs. 65,000, with the 1st Defendant signing as a witness and the Attorney-at-Law certifying that the consideration had been paid prior to the execution of the said Deed.

The Plaintiff claims that in 2007, she had requested the 1st Defendant to re-transfer the said land to her on payment of Rs. 50,000, which is the sum of money that the Plaintiff received from the 1st Defendant, together with interest, but that the 1st Defendant rejected the said request. The Plaintiff says that it is at this point that she was informed by the 1st Defendant that he had mortgaged the land to the 2nd Defendant. The Plaintiff states that her Attorney-at-Law had thereafter carried out a search at the Land Registry which revealed the execution of the aforementioned Deeds in favour of the 2nd Defendant and the 3rd Defendant.

On 20th October 2009, which is six years after the initial conveyance to the 1st Defendant, and two years after the Plaintiff found out about the execution of the aforementioned deeds in favour of the 2nd and 3rd Defendants, letters of demand have been sent on behalf of the Plaintiff to all three Defendants claiming that Deed No. 4158 was in fact only a mortgage, that the said Deed did not seek to convey the beneficial interest in the said land to the 1st Defendant, that the beneficial interest in the said land remains with the Plaintiff and that the 1st Defendant is holding the said land in trust for the Plaintiff. The said letters of demand went on to state that the value of one perch of the said land was Rs. 125,000 and that the Plaintiff has continued to remain in possession of the said land. None of the Defendants have responded to the said letters of demand, with the result that the claim of the Plaintiff that she continues to be in possession of the said land, has not been rejected by any of the Defendants at the first available opportunity.

Action in the District Court

On 7th December 2009, the Plaintiff instituted action in the District Court of Kalutara against all three Defendants. In her plaint, while reiterating the aforementioned matters contained in the letters of demand, the Plaintiff stated that she had been in urgent need of money to settle a loan that she had taken [ලබාගෙන තිබූ නයක් භදිසියෙන් ගෙවීමට සිදු වූ බැවින්] and that she had borrowed a sum of Rs. 50,000 from the 1st Defendant to settle the said loan. The Plaintiff had averred that although she had executed Deed No. 4158 as a transfer, it was in effect a mortgage and that she did not intend to transfer the beneficial interest in the said property to the 1st Defendant and further, that the 1st Defendant was in fact holding the said property in trust for her. The Plaintiff was therefore seeking to contradict the terms of Deed No. 4158, which, as I have noted already, did not contain any terms or conditions to support the claim of the Plaintiff and was, on the face of it, an absolute transfer.

The position taken up by the Plaintiff in her plaint thus brought into focus fairly and squarely the provisions of Section 83 of the Trusts Ordinance, which provides a Court with a mechanism to decipher the real intention of the owner of a property who later claims that he or she did not intend to transfer the beneficial interest in the property to the transferee, by considering the attendant circumstances surrounding the said transfer.

The Plaintiff had accordingly sought the following reliefs in her plaint:

(a) A declaration that Lot A1 in Plan No. 554/2003 is held in trust by the 1st Defendant in favour of the Plaintiff;

(b) A direction that the 1st Defendant re-transfer the said land to the Plaintiff;

(c) A declaration that the 2nd and 3rd Defendants are not entitled to the said land on the Deeds executed in their favour.

While the 1st and 3rd Defendants filed their answers, the 2nd Defendant did not file an answer and the trial against the 2nd Defendant proceeded ex parte. In his answer, the 1st Defendant denied the version of the Plaintiff and took up the position that Deed No. 4158 was an outright transfer, a position from which he resiled at the trial. He admitted that he had mortgaged the property to the 2nd Defendant in order to raise a loan and that the said loan had been settled by him. While stating that he was in possession of the said land, the 1st Defendant sought a declaration that he was entitled to the beneficial interest in the said land. The 3rd Defendant claimed in his answer that he had paid Rs. 170,000 to the 1st Defendant at the office of the 2nd Defendant to enable the 1st Defendant to settle the loan that he had taken and for the 2nd Defendant to transfer the said land to him. The 3rd Defendant therefore claimed that he was a bona fide purchaser and that he is in possession of the said land. Thus, the principal issue raised on behalf of the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant revolved on the true nature of Deed No. 4158.

At the trial, the Plaintiff gave evidence on her behalf and led the evidence of the Grama Niladhari of the area and a Valuer, while the 3rd Defendant gave evidence on his behalf. The Attorney-at-Law for the 1st Defendant, having informed Court that the 1st Defendant was accepting the position of the Plaintiff, closed the case for the 1st Defendant without leading any evidence.

Judgment of the District Court

By judgment dated 12th May 2014, the learned District Judge, having applied the provisions of Section 83, found that the Plaintiff had been in possession of both lots A1 and A2 at all times and that the consideration she received from the 1st Defendant did not accurately reflect the true value of the land. The learned District Judge, having concluded that,

(a) the Plaintiff did not intend to transfer the beneficial interest in the said land to the 1st Defendant;

(b) there existed a constructive trust between the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant; and

(c) no ownership rights passed to the 2nd and 3rd Defendants by virtue of the deeds executed in their favour, delivered judgment in favour of the Plaintiff and directed the 1st Defendant to re-transfer the said land, i.e., Lot A1, to the Plaintiff upon the payment of Rs. 50,000 by the Plaintiff.

The appeal filed by the 3rd Defendant against the said judgment in the High Court of the Western Province holden in Kalutara exercising Civil Appellate jurisdiction [the High Court] was dismissed by the High Court by its judgment delivered on 5th December 2019.

Questions of Law

The 3rd Defendant thereafter sought and obtained leave to appeal from this Court on 10th June 2020 on the following two questions of law:

(1) Have the learned Judges of the High Court failed to consider the fact that the learned Trial Judge has erred in law by failing to appreciate the necessary ingredients applicable in establishing a constructive trust?

(2) Have the learned Judges of the High Court as well as the learned Trial Judge failed to consider and apply attendant circumstances required to establish a constructive trust in its proper perspective?

In answering the above questions of law, I would consider the findings of the learned District Judge and the learned Judges of the High Court in the light of the test laid down in Section 83 and the evidence that was available to the learned District Judge.

Reception of oral evidence of an instrument

There are two laws that I must refer to at the very outset, in order to give context to Section 83.

The first is the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance, of which Section 2 (prior to its amendment by the Prevention of Frauds (Amendment) Act No. 30 of 2022) provided as follows:

> "No sale, purchase, transfer, assignment, or mortgage of land or other immovable property, and no promise, bargain, contract, or agreement for effecting any such object, or for establishing any security, interest, or incumbrance affecting land or other immovable property (other than a lease at will, or for any period not exceeding one month), nor any contract or agreement for the future sale or purchase of any land or other immovable property, and no notice, given under the provisions of the Thesawalamai Pre-emption Ordinance, of an intention or proposal to sell any undivided share or interest in land held in joint or common ownership, shall be in force or avail in law unless the same shall be in writing and signed by the party making the same, or by some person lawfully authorized by him or her in the presence of a licensed notary public and two or more witnesses present at the same time, and unless the execution of such writing, deed, or instrument be duly attested by such notary and witnesses." [emphasis added]

The second is the Evidence Ordinance of which Sections 91 and 92 are relevant and are re-produced below:

Section 91

> "When the terms of a contract, or of a grant, or of any other disposition of property have been reduced by or by consent of the parties to the form of a document, and in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such contract, grant, or other disposition of property*, or* of such matter, except the document itself*, or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible under the provisions herein before contained*. …" [emphasis added]

Section 92

> "When the terms of any such contract, grant, or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, have been proved according to the last section, no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted as between the parties to any such instrument, or their representatives in interest, for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from its terms. …" [emphasis added]

None of (a) the exceptions to Section 91 and (b) the provisos to Section 92 arise for consideration in this appeal.

The cumulative effect of the above provisions is that while the disposition of any immovable property must be reduced to writing, proving the terms of a deed by which any immovable property has been transferred can be done only by producing the deed itself or where permissible by way of secondary evidence and in the manner provided therefor in the Evidence Ordinance, and no oral evidence can be given to inter alia contradict the terms of such deed. The resultant position is that oral evidence relating to any instrument relating to land that seeks to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract the terms contained in such deed cannot be received by a Court.

Section 83 of the Trusts Ordinance

Section 83 of the Trusts Ordinance, however, acts as an exception to the said rule laid down in Section 92, and reads as follows:

> "Where the owner of property transfers or bequeaths it, and it cannot reasonably be inferred*,* consistently with the attendant circumstances that he intended to dispose of the beneficial interest therein*, the transferee or legatee must hold such property for the benefit of the owner or his legal representative*." [emphasis added]

In Muttammah v Thiyagarajah [62 NLR 559] H.N.G. Fernando, J (as he then was) referring to Section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance and Section 92 of the Evidence Ordinance, stated as follows at page 571:

> "The plaintiff sought to prove the oral promise to reconvey not in order to enforce that promise, but only to establish an "attendant circumstance" from which it could be inferred that the beneficial interest did not pass. Although that promise was of no force or avail in law by reason of Section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance, it is nevertheless a fact from which an inference of the nature contemplated in Section 83 of the Trusts Ordinance properly arises. The Prevention of Frauds Ordinance does not prohibit the proof of such an act. If the arguments of counsel for the appellant based on the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance and on section 92 of the Evidence Ordinance are to be accepted, then it will be found that not only section 83, but also many of the other provisions in Chapter IX of the Trusts Ordinance will be nugatory. If for example "attendant circumstances" in Section 83 means only matters contained in an instrument of transfer of property it is difficult to see how a conveyance of property can be held in trust unless indeed its terms are such as to create an express trust."

A similar view was expressed in Krishanthy Balasubramanium and Another v Vellayar Krishnapillai and Wife and Another [SC Appeal No. 28/2008; SC minutes of 24th May 2012] where Sripavan, J (as he then was) referring to the judgment in Dayawathie and Others v Gunasekera and Another [(1991) 1 Sri LR 115] stated at page 10 that this Court has "held that the provisions of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance and Section 92 of the Evidence Ordinance do not bar parole evidence to prove a constructive trust and that the transferor did not intend to pass the beneficial interest in the property. In such a case, extrinsic evidence to prove attendant circumstances can be properly received in evidence to prove a resulting trust."

In Fernando v Fernando and Another [SC Appeal No. 175/2010; SC minutes of 17th January 2017], Sisira De Abrew, J reiterated at page 10 that, "… Section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance and Section 92 of the Evidence Ordinance do not operate as a bar to lead parole evidence to prove a constructive trust and to prove that the transferor did not intend to dispose of beneficial interest in the property."

Section 83 thus being an exception, it has been held that in applying Section 83, Courts must exercise great caution. In Senadheerage Chandrika Sudarshani v Muthukuda Herath Mudiyanselage Gedara Somawathi [SC Appeal No. 173/2011; SC minutes of 6th April 2017], Prasanna Jayawardena, PC, J stated at page 15 that:

> "The Court has to keep in mind that, a notarially attested deed of transfer should not be lightly declared to be a nullity. The Court must also guard against allowing a false or belated claim of 'Trust' made by a transferor who has transferred his property and then had second thoughts or seeks to profit from changed circumstances. Dalton J's observations made close to 90 years ago in Mohamadu vs. Pathuamma [11 CLR 48 at page 49], (that) "It is becoming not uncommon by the mere allegation of a trust to seek to evade the very salutary provisions of (the Evidence) Ordinance to which I have referred," continues to remain a salutary caution."

What is an attendant circumstance?

The application of the test laid down in Section 83 would enable the Court to decide whether the owner of the property intended to dispose of the beneficial interest in the said property when he transferred it. Accordingly, the intention of the owner must be reasonably inferred from, and be consistent with, the attendant circumstances surrounding the transfer.

Aluwihare, PC, J in Watagodagedara Mallika Chandralatha v Herath Mudiyanselage Punchi Banda and Another [SC Appeal No. 185/2015; SC minutes of 4th December 2017] emphasised [at page 8] that, "One needs to bear in mind that where a constructive trust within the meaning of Section 83 of the Trust Ordinance is asserted, it is incumbent on the court to meticulously examine the evidence placed before the court, the reason being, on the face value the evidence placed may give the appearance of a straight forward transaction of a sale but the real intention of the parties can only be gleaned from a close scrutiny of the circumstances under which the transaction was effected. And the intention of the parties is of paramount importance."

What, then, would be an attendant circumstance? In Muttammah v Thiyagarajah [supra; at page 564], Chief Justice Basnayake who delivered the minority opinion, referring to Section 83 stated as follows:

> "The section is designed to prevent transfers of property which on the face of the instrument appear to be genuine transfers, but where an intention to dispose of the beneficial interest cannot reasonably be inferred consistently with the attendant circumstances. Neither the declaration of the transferor at the time of the execution of the instrument nor his secret intentions are attendant circumstances. Attendant circumstances are to my mind circumstances which precede or follow the transfer but are not too far removed in point of time to be regarded as attendant which expression in this context may be understood as "accompanying" or "connected with". Whether a circumstance is attendant or not would depend on the facts of each case." [emphasis added]

In Senadheerage Chandrika Sudarshani v Muthukuda Herath Mudiyanselage Gedara Somawathi [supra; at page 14], Prasanna Jayawardena, PC, J prior to referring to the above passage of Basnayake, CJ with approval, stated that, "The words 'attendant circumstances' can be broadly described as meaning the facts surrounding the transaction. In Black's Law Dictionary (9th Edition) the words 'attendant circumstance', as used in the American Law, have been defined as "A fact that is situationally relevant to a particular event or occurrence."

Over the years our Courts have identified different circumstances as being attendant circumstances, and emphasised that, what an attendant circumstance is and the weight that must be attached to such circumstance in reasonably inferring the intention of the owner, would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. It would also mean that a circumstance which is attendant in one case may not be an attendant circumstance in another.

Dias, J stated thus in Ehiya Lebbe v Majeed [48 NLR 357 at 359]:

> "There are certain tests for ascertaining into which category a case falls. Thus if the transferor continued to remain in possession after the conveyance, or if the transferor paid the whole cost of the conveyance or if the consideration expressed on the deed is utterly inadequate to what would be the fair purchase money for the property conveyed – all these are circumstances which would show whether the transaction was a genuine sale for valuable consideration, or something else."

In Thisa Nona and Three Others v Premadasa [(1997) 1 Sri LR 169] Wigneswaran, J held that the following circumstances which transpired in that case were relevant on the question whether the transaction was a loan transaction or an outright transfer:

(1) The fact that a non-notarial document was signed by the transferee contemporaneous to the impugned deed of transfer, agreeing to transfer the land if the sum of Rs. 1,500 referred to in the deed was paid within six years;

(2) The payment of the stamp duty and the Notary's fees by the transferor;

(3) The fact that the transfer deed came into existence in the course of a series of money transactions;

(4) The continued possession of the premises in suit by the transferor in the same manner as she did before the transfer deed was executed.

In Carthelis v Ranasinghe [(2002) 2 Sri LR 359] it was held at page 369 that, "If it was a pure and simple transfer, one would expect the title deeds and all other old deeds to be in the hands of the transferee having obtained them from the transferor, for the purpose of preparing the deed of transfer."

I am therefore of the view that it is in the light of the sequence of events and the nature of attendant circumstances peculiar to a case that a Court must arrive at its conclusion on whether Section 83 of the Trusts Ordinance applies to that particular case or not.

The burden of proof

It is clear that the burden of proof lies on the person who claims that he or she did not intend to transfer the beneficial interest in the property to the transferee. In Watagodagedara Mallika Chandralatha v Herath Mudiyanselage Punchi Banda and Another [supra] Aluwihare, PC, J cited with approval the following passage from 'The Reception in Ceylon of the English Trust' (1971) by L.J.M. Cooray – "Where a person has a notarial conveyance in his favour, courts have placed a heavy burden on the transferor to prove facts bringing himself within Section 83."

The manner in which the Court must be satisfied that the said burden has been discharged was considered in Senadheerage Chandrika Sudarshani v Muthukuda Herath Mudiyanselage Gedara Somawathi [supra], where this Court held as follows:

> "…. the use of the aforesaid words in Section 83 require that, the Court applies an objective test when determining the intention of the owner from the attendant circumstances. Therefore, if the claim of a Constructive Trust is to succeed, the attendant circumstances must make it plainly clear to the 'reasonable man' that, the owner did not intend to part with his beneficial interest in the property. A secret or hidden intention to retain the beneficial interest will not do. The attendant circumstances must be such that they would have demonstrated to the transferee that the owner intended to retain the beneficial interest in the property. The transferee is judged here as standing in the shoes of the 'reasonable man'. If a 'reasonable man' must have known from the 'attendant circumstances' that the owner intended to retain his beneficial interest in the property, the transferee is deemed to hold the property upon a Constructive Trust in favour of the owner. However, if a 'reasonable man' may not have drawn such an inference from the attendant circumstances, the transferee holds the property absolutely, since no Constructive Trust can be deemed to have arisen. Further, the burden of proof lies firmly on the person who claims a Constructive Trust to prove it." [page 15; emphasis added]

At the trial, the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff relied on two principal circumstances in order to establish his position that the Plaintiff did not intend to transfer to the 1st Defendant the beneficial interest in the said land – firstly, that the Plaintiff has continued to remain in possession of the said land; and secondly, that the value of the land was much higher than what was paid to her by the 1st Defendant. These are the two grounds relied upon by the learned District Judge, as well.

However, prior to considering these two grounds, I shall set out the background to the transaction as it transpired before the learned Trial Judge, as the said background places in context the said two grounds urged by the Plaintiff.

The explanation of the Plaintiff for the execution of the Deed

The first matter that I wish to refer to is the purpose for which the Plaintiff required the money, which in her own words is as follows:

"එවැනි ගණුදෙනුවක් කිරීමේ අරමුණ වුනේ, මගේ ස්වාමියා අවුරුදු 12 ක් එක තැන ඉදලා නැති වුන වෙලාවේ ගත්ත ණය. පැවරීම කරල තිබෙන්නේ 2003 වර්ෂයේ. මේ ඔප්පුව ලියන්න රු. 50,000/- ක් ලබා ගත්ත. මේ ගණුදෙනුව කරන අවස්ථාවේ එයාට ඉල්ලුවාම මම ඔයාට ලියන්නම් හදිසියට පිරිමහන්න, සල්ලි සොයාගෙන පස්සෙ මම බේර ගන්නම් කියන පොරොන්දුව පිට දුන්නේ 1 වත්තිකරුට. සල්ලි අවශ්‍යතාවයක් වුනේ."

Thus, the Plaintiff's position was that she had a specific purpose to obtain a sum of Rs. 50,000 as a loan. Whether her evidence on this issue is credible or not is an issue that I shall consider in detail, later in this judgment.

The second matter that I wish to refer to, which explains the reason for the Plaintiff to have approached the 1st Defendant to fulfil her immediate need for money, and the long time taken for her to seek redress from Court, is the blood relationship that existed between the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant, who in addition was personally known to her and lived about ten houses from where she lived. This relationship in turn appears to have given rise to the implicit trust that the Plaintiff claims that she had in the 1st Defendant, and prompted her to sign a deed of transfer, even though she allegedly had no intention of transferring the land.

Referring to Deed No. 4158, the Plaintiff has stated that:

> "මේ ලේඛණය විකුණුම්කරයක් ලෙස ලියලා තියෙන්නේ. විකුණුම්කරයක් ලෙස ලිව්වේ මට ලොකු විශ්වාසයක් මත ලියලා මම එයාගෙන් රුපියල් 50000 ක් ගත්තා. විශ්වාසයක් තිබුනා එයා මේක විකුණනවා නම් මට පිටින් දෙන්නේ නැහැ කියලා විශ්වාසය නිසාම රු. 50000 ක් ගත්තා." [emphasis added]

The Plaintiff thereafter stated that:

> "මේ ඔප්පුව විකුණුම්කරයක් ලෙස ලිව්වට මෙම ඉඩම විකුණන්න අදහස් කලේ නැහැ. 1 වෙනි විත්තිකරු කියන්නේ ඥාතියෙක්. ඔවුන් අද ආවා. මගේ පුතා ඥාති සහෝදරයකුගේ පුතා පොඩි කාලේ සිට මගේ ගෙදර ඉදලා වැඩිලා හිටියා මා විශ්වාසය මත ලිව්වේ. මේ ඔප්පුව ගණුදෙනුවක් සිද්ධ වුන නිසා විකුණුම්කරයක් ලෙස ලිව්වා.
> මම 1 වෙනි විත්තිකරුට කිව්වා මෙම ගණුදෙනුව මොන වගේ ගණුදෙනුවක්ද කියලා. විශ්වාසය මත ගොඩ නගාගෙන මම නැවත මුදල් දුන්නහම මට නැවත මේක දෙනවා කියලා එයා කිව්වා ලොකු විශ්වාසයක් මත ලිව්වේ විශ්වාසයක් ගොඩ නගා ගත්තා. මම ඔහුට කියා සිටියා නැවත මුදල් දුන්නහම දෙන්න කියලා."

To my mind, the first answer reflects the thinking of the Plaintiff at the time she executed the Deed – that is, the 1st Defendant would hold the said land in trust for her and that the land would not be sold to a third party without first offering it to her or, in other words, that the Plaintiff would be entitled to a right of first refusal and a re-transfer of the property. The second answer makes it clear that the land was to be re-transferred to her. The Plaintiff has however not been cross-examined on whether she was entitled only to a right of first refusal and not a re-transfer of the said Deed as of right.

Although a secret intention on the part of the Plaintiff will not be an attendant circumstance, the explanation of the Plaintiff demonstrates that she has clearly communicated her intention to the 1st Defendant and gives context not only to what transpired thereafter, but to the attendant circumstances that prompted the learned District Judge to hold in favour of the Plaintiff.

The position of the Plaintiff can therefore be summarised as follows:

(a) The Plaintiff requested a sum of Rs. 50,000 from the 1st Defendant, who was related to her and whom she trusted, in order to settle debts she had incurred.

(b) While agreeing to give her the money, the 1st Defendant had wanted the said land transferred in his name.

(c) The 1st Defendant had agreed to re-transfer the said land upon the re-payment of the money.

(d) Due to the relationship and the trust that she had in the 1st Defendant, and having clarified with the 1st Defendant that the property would be re-transferred upon re-payment, she agreed to the course of action proposed by the 1st Defendant and thereafter executed the said Deed as an outright transfer, without having specified any conditions relating to the re-transfer of the land.

Possession of the land by the Plaintiff

I have already stated that none of the Defendants responded to the letters of demand in which the Plaintiff claimed that she was in possession of the land. Although the 1st Defendant had stated in his answer that he was in possession of the said land, no evidence was placed during the trial to support this position. This applies to the 3rd Defendant as well. Unlike the 1st Defendant, the 3rd Defendant was a stranger to the Plaintiff and therefore should have taken steps that a bona fide purchaser would ordinarily take, such as having a search of title carried out by an Attorney-at-Law, having a fresh survey carried out to determine the exact extent of the land especially since the two lots, A1 and A2, had not been physically separated, having the land fenced soon after purchasing the land and having his name registered in the register at the local authority. Even though the 3rd Defendant gave evidence, he did not state if he did any of the above, except that he used to clean the said land regularly.

On the contrary, the position of the Plaintiff that she has been in possession of the land at all times has been supported by the evidence of the Grama Niladari. I have already stated that the Plaintiff had the land sub-divided into two lots three months prior to the execution of the impugned Deed, and that it is only one lot, namely A1, that is the subject matter of this appeal. Although Plan No. 554/2003 was produced and marked by the Plaintiff, the Plaintiff did not explain the reason or the necessity for the sub-division of the land into Lots A1 and A2, nor was she cross-examined on this issue by any of the Defendants. The learned Counsel for the 3rd Defendant has raised before this Court the issue of the land being sub-divided just three months before the execution of the impugned Deed in order to support his position that the intention of the Plaintiff was to transfer the beneficial interest in the lot referred to in the said Deed. However, I am unable to draw any adverse inference in the absence of this issue having been raised during cross-examination.

What is important is the evidence of the Plaintiff that the two lots were not separated by a fence and that she continued to occupy and possess both lots of land even after the transfer was executed in favour of the 1st Defendant. The Grama Niladari stated that the Plaintiff occupied the entire land and that in fact, until he was cross-examined on this issue, he did not even know the land had been sub-divided into two lots for the reason that there was no physical demarcation of the lots on the ground. The Plaintiff also stated that even though her house was situated on Lot A2, her toilet was situated on Lot A1, a fact which has been corroborated by the evidence of the Valuer. None of the Defendants have questioned the Plaintiff on her sanitation facilities being situated on Lot A1 and whether she had alternative arrangements on Lot A2. The Plaintiff stated further that she had a chicken pen on Lot A1 and that it was she who enjoyed the fruits of the said lot of land.

The learned District Judge has considered the above evidence and concluded as follows:

> "තවද පැමිණිලිකාරිය වෙනුවෙන් සාක්ෂි කැඳවූ එකි ග්‍රාමනිලධාරිවරයාගෙන් හෝ තක්සේරුකරුගෙන් හෝ පැමිණිලිකාරියගෙන් 1 විත්තිකරු හෝ 3 වන විත්තිකරු හරස් ප්‍රශ්න නගමින් පැමිණිලිකාරියගේ පදිංචිය අභියෝගයට ලක් කර නැති අතර 3 විත්තිකරු ඔවුන් ඉඩම මිලදි ගත් පසුවද 1 විත්තිකරු එයට පෙර පැ. 3 ඔප්පුවෙන් මිලදි ගත් පසුවද ඉඩමෙහි පදිංචියට ගිය බවට පදිංචිය සනාථ කරමින් කිසිදු සාක්ෂියක් ඉදිරිපත් කර නොමැති අතර 3 විත්තිකරුද සාක්ෂි දෙමින් ඉඩමට ගොස් සුද්ද පවිත්‍ර කරනවා යයි කියා තිබුණද එකි කරුණු පිළිබඳ ග්‍රාම නිලධාරිවරයා හරස් ප්‍රශ්නවලට භාජනය කරන අවස්ථාවේදි වත් තහවුරු වන ආකාරයට කරුණු ඉදිරිපත් කර නොමැත.
> ඒ අනුව වර්ෂ 2003 සිට මෙම නඩුව පවරන දින වන වර්ෂ 2009 දක්වා අදාල විෂය වස්තුවෙහි බුක්තියෙහි පැමිණිලිකාරිය සිටි බව පැහැදිලි වන අතර පැ. 3 ඔප්පුව ලියා අත්සන් කිරීමෙන් පසුව දේපලෙහි බුක්තියෙහි පැවරීමක් සිදුවී නොමැති බව තහවුරු වේ. ඒ අනුව අර්ථලාභි අයිතියක් පැමිණිලිකාරිය විසින් 1 විත්තිකරුට පැවරීමේ අදහසකින් පැ. 3 දරණ ඔප්පුව ලියා අත්සන් කොට ඇති බවට තහවුරු නොවේ."

The learned Judges of the High Court have affirmed the judgment of the District Court only after considering the above evidence. I am in agreement with the above conclusion and take the view that the Plaintiff has established that she continued to be in possession of the property at all times, thereby giving rise to a reasonable inference that she did not intend to transfer the beneficial interest in the said land to the 1st Defendant.

Value of the property

The second ground relied upon by the Plaintiff was that the consideration of Rs. 50,000 that passed from the 1st Defendant to her did not reflect the true value of the land. The consideration of Rs. 50,000 amounts to Rs. 2,000 per perch. With regard to the value, the Plaintiff stated that the land was worth Rs. 125,000 per perch at the time she signed the impugned Deed. The Plaintiff had also obtained through Court a Commission on D.I. Danthanarayana, an Incorporated Valuer, to ascertain the current market value as well as the value that prevailed at the time the impugned Deed was executed. He had reported that the current market value of one perch of the said land was Rs. 30,000 while the market value at the time the said Deed was executed was Rs. 20,000 per perch. Thus, even though there was a glaring disparity between the value given by the Plaintiff and the Court-appointed Valuer, the fact remains that the land was worth well over Rs. 2,000 per perch, thus supporting the version of the Plaintiff that she only obtained a loan from the 1st Defendant and that she did not intend to transfer the beneficial interest in the said land to the 1st Defendant. The Plaintiff and the Valuer have been cross-examined extensively on behalf of the 3rd Defendant but mostly with regard to the locality of the land and the facilities available in the said locality, and not with regard to any specific aspect of the valuation. It is on this basis that the learned District Judge has concluded that the consideration set out in the said deed does not reflect the true value of the said land. These findings have been considered by the High Court, and I see no reason to disagree with the said findings.

Other attendant circumstances

There are two other circumstances which in my view are attendant circumstances and confirm the position of the Plaintiff. The first, which has not been considered either by the District Court or the High Court, is that the original of the Deed of Declaration and the impugned Deed are with the Plaintiff, and not with the 3rd Defendant, as claimed in the written submissions filed on behalf of the 3rd Defendant. I say this for the reason that it was the Plaintiff who produced and marked the originals of the Deed of Declaration and the impugned Deed as P1 and P3, respectively. The originals are available in the case record and I have examined same. The simple position here is that if P3 was an absolute transfer, then, in the absence of any explanation to the contrary, the originals of P1 and P3 should have been handed over to the 1st Defendant. Furthermore, any bona fide purchaser, which the 3rd Defendant claims he is, would have sought the originals of the previous Deeds, especially as he was purchasing the land from the 2nd Defendant. No explanation has been given by the 3rd Defendant why he did not do so.

The second matter is that the consideration has not passed in the presence of the Attorney-at-Law before whom the impugned Deed was signed, which supports the position of the Plaintiff that the transaction was purely monetary and that the execution of the Deed was nominal.

Grounds urged on behalf of the 3rd Defendant

In addition to the submissions on possession and value, the learned Counsel for the 3rd Defendant presented two other arguments to support his position that a reasonable inference cannot be drawn that the Plaintiff did not intend to transfer the beneficial interest in the land to the 1st Defendant.

The first is with regard to the purpose for which the money was required. In the Plaintiff's own words, the money was required for the following purpose:

> "මම ඉන්න නිවසට අදාළ ඉඩම මට රු. 50000 ක මුදල් අවශ්‍යතාවයක් නිසා මගේ ස්වාමිපුරුෂයා අවුරුදු 12 ක් ඔත්පොලවෙලා හිටියා එයා නැති වුනා. ණය ගත්ත ඒවා වගයක් තිබුනා ඒවා ගෙවා ගන්න තමයි මම ඒක ලිව්වේ.
> ඉඩම ලිව්ව මගේ විශ්වාසය මත රු. 50,000 ට දෙන්නේ නැහැ, අන්ත අසරණ වී සිටියේ. ස්වාමියා නැති වෙලා ඉන්න අවස්ථාවේ මගේ ඥාති පුත්‍රයා ට රු. 50,000 ක් ගත්ත එයාට ලියලා ආපහු ඉඩම දෙන බවට."

As observed by the learned District Judge, the Plaintiff did not produce any further details with regard to the above-mentioned loans that she had taken, including the dates when she had taken such loans, from whom she had taken the loans or whether she used the money to settle such loans. These details become important in view of the fact that in the Deed of Declaration, the Plaintiff has stated as follows:

> "එකී කාලවිලගේ දොන් සොම්පාල යන අය වර්ෂ 1989 දී මිය යාමෙන් අනතුරුව මෙහි ප්‍රකාශකාරිය වන මා විසින් එකී දේපල වැඩී දියුණු කර අඛණ්ඩව නිදහස්ව නිරවුල්ව භුක්ති විඳගෙන එනු ලැබේ.
> මේ අනුව මෙහි ප්‍රකාශකාරිය වන මාගේ ස්වාමිපුරුෂයා විසින් පිය උරුමයට අයත්ව ඉතා දිර්ඝ කාලයක් භුක්ති විඳගෙන එනු ලැබූ බැවින්ද, මෙහි ප්‍රකාශකාරිය වන මාගේ ස්වාමිපුරුෂයා වර්ෂ 1989 දී මිය යාමෙන් අනතුරුව එතැන් පටන් මා විසින් අඛණ්ඩව නිදහස්ව නිරවුල්ව භුක්ති විඳගෙන එනු ලබන බැවින්ද."

In my view, the Plaintiff should have been cross-examined on her explanation as to the need for the money, especially since her husband is said to have expired in 1989 and the loan was being raised much later [2003]. However, in the absence of the evidence of the Plaintiff being challenged in cross-examination, it is not possible for this Court to consider the first argument of the learned Counsel for the 3rd Defendant.

The second is with regard to the arrangement for the repayment of the money. The learned Counsel for the 3rd Defendant submitted that if Rs. 50,000 was taken as a loan, there ought to have been an arrangement between the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant with regard to the re-payment of the said money and the payment of interest. It must be noted that neither the plaint nor the letters of demand sent on behalf of the Plaintiff contained any details with regard to the rate of interest, the period within which the monies should be repaid etc. During cross-examination, the Plaintiff was questioned in this regard and her position was that she had not paid any interest to the 1st Defendant. The Plaintiff however claims that when she wanted to repay the money in 2007, she offered to do so with interest which demonstrates the intention on the part of the Plaintiff to pay interest. In my view, given the relationship that existed between the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant, the failure to agree on the payment of interest, the rate of interest and the period of re-payment cannot displace the strong attendant circumstances referenced above, that had been established by evidence and which were relied upon by the learned Judges of the District Court and the High Court.

Conclusion

Having carefully considered the judgments of the learned District Judge and the learned Judges of the High Court, I am of the view that:

(a) both Courts have analysed and applied the evidence in light of the test laid down in Section 83; and

(b) it cannot reasonably be inferred, consistently with the attendant circumstances, that the Plaintiff intended to dispose of the beneficial interest that she had in Lot A1, to the 1st Defendant by way of Deed No. 4158.

In the said circumstances, I would answer in the negative the aforementioned questions of law raised by the 3rd Defendant.

I therefore direct that the Plaintiff shall pay to the 1st Defendant a sum of Rs. 50,000 together with legal interest thereon, from 21st September 2003 until the payment of the said sum of Rs. 50,000 is made. The 1st Defendant shall execute in favour of the Plaintiff a deed of transfer in respect of Lot A1 in Plan No. 554/2003 upon the aforesaid payment by the Plaintiff. If the 1st Defendant fails to execute a deed of transfer, the Registrar of the District Court of Kalutara shall execute a conveyance in favour of the Plaintiff, upon the Plaintiff depositing the aforementioned sum of money with the Registrar of the District Court of Kalutara.

Subject to the above, the judgments of the District Court and the High Court are affirmed and this appeal is dismissed, with costs.

Judgement

Aluwihare, PC, J.,

1) This is an appeal against an Order of the Commercial High Court of the Western Province holden in Colombo, relating to the winding up and liquidation of a company, and payment of its Creditors according to their character. Before examining the questions of law, I find it prudent to note the factual matrix of this case.

The Facts

2) The Petitioner-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Respondent) had obtained five banking facilities from the Respondent-Petitioner-Appellant Bank (hereinafter referred to as the Appellant) including an overdraft facility, a term loan, a hypothecation loan and a trust receipt. The overdraft facility for USD 40,000 had been secured by way of mortgage over leasehold property of a Factory Building and a Corporate Guarantee. For that purpose, a Mortgage Bond bearing No. 443/219 dated 06.12.1990 and a Corporate Guarantee was entered into between the parties. The present dispute relates to this facility.

3) The Respondent subsequently made an application before the Commercial High Court to be wound up by court under Section 270(a) and 270(e) of the Companies Act. The Winding Up order was issued on 29th April 2008 and a liquidator was appointed by the Court. Subsequently, the Appellant bank made a statement of claim to the liquidator and was recognised in the liquidator's report (marked 'A' in the Petition of Appeal) as a 'secured creditor' in respect of the factory building, among other things. Thereafter, the liquidator by letter dated 04.12.2009 (marked 'D' in the Petition) informed the Appellant Bank that the entire machinery and equipment of the Company situated in the Factory Building have been disposed of and the only remaining asset is the building itself. He further informed the bank that as the building is mortgaged to the bank, proceeds of the disposal of the factory building are payable to the bank subject to the deduction of expenses and fees. The letter also noted the direct expenses incurred by the Liquidator in respect of insurance amounting to Rs. 30,647 (for three months) and security charges amounting to Rs. 102,583 (per month) for safeguarding the building and requested the Appellant Bank to reimburse the costs borne for those expenses with effect from 01.01.2010.

4) On or around 8th October 2009, the Appellant Bank filed a Statement of Objections to a Report filed by the Liquidator on 31st August 2009 objecting to the Liquidator deducting a sum of Rs. 806,268.15 as fees and expenses incurred by the Liquidator in relation to the sale of machinery mortgaged by the Respondent to the Appellant Bank. The sale proceeds amounted to Rs. 518,000.00. The Liquidator had also stated a sum of Rs. 288,268.15 as being due from the Appellant in the Report dated 31st August 2009. On or around 4th December 2009, the Liquidator requested the Appellant to meet the expenses relating to insurance and security of the factory building of the Respondent under liquidation, which had been mortgaged to the Appellant. The Appellant did not respond.

5) On 06.01.2010, the Appellant Bank sent a letter to the Liquidator stating that in 'voluntary winding up' matters, the cost of winding up including for the safeguarding of assets should be borne by the company and its directors. Responding to that letter, the Liquidator wrote back (letter marked 'E') noting that the proceedings were not in the nature of a 'voluntary winding up', but a 'winding up by court' in terms of Section 270 of the Companies Act. The letter further informs the Appellant Bank that a sum of Rs. 2,272,617.41 has been paid to cover expenses pertaining to insurance, security, maintenance and other expenses, and that these expenses "should be reimbursed from the proceeds that would be realized on the disposal of the said building and premises in the course of liquidation proceedings."

6) Thereafter, the liquidator, acting in terms of Section 358(8) of the Companies Act sent a letter (marked 'G' in the Petition) requiring the Appellant Bank, as a secured creditor, to elect which of the Powers under Section 358(1) it wished to exercise, within 20 working days. The Appellant Bank did not respond to this letter either. By motion dated 3rd March 2010 the Appellant contended that the Liquidator's letters aforementioned had created a dispute between the Liquidator and the Appellant and sought an inquiry from the Court. The Court inquired into the issue by way of written submissions and delivered its Order (marked 'H') stating that:

1. Where a secured creditor has not acted in terms of Section 358(1), the Liquidator is entitled to recover costs and expenses from the assets, including assets mortgaged to the Bank;
2. The objection that the Liquidator cannot deduct costs and expenses from the proceeds realised from the sale of the mortgaged assets cannot be accepted;
3. The application of the Bank that the Liquidator's letters must be withdrawn cannot be accepted.

This Order has not been appealed against by the Appellant.

7) Thereafter, with the permission of the High Court and the Appellant bank, the Liquidator sold the factory building which had been mortgaged to the Appellant Bank for a sum of USD 375,000 out of which USD 56,761.29 (Rs. 6,597,644.21), being the sum secured by Mortgage Bond No. 443/219 in favour of the Appellant, was directly paid to the Appellant by the Purchaser (documents marked 'J, K1, K2, L' in the brief). On 22nd September 2011, the Liquidator wrote to the Appellant Bank (marked 'M') informing the Bank of the amounts due after the realisation of the machinery and factory building was realised. The amounts were stated as follows:

Mortgaged Machinery	Rs. 518,000.00
Mortgaged Building	Rs. 6, 597,644.21	Rs. 7,115,644.21

Less:-

Paid to Bank of Ceylon as Secured Creditor	Rs. (6,597,644.21)
	Rs. 518,000.00

Less:-

Fees and Expenses incurred

by the Liquidator and Remuneration of the Liquidator as at 22.09.2011 Rs. 2,573,445.75
Factory Building Insurance Rs. 436,925.96
Factory Building Security Rs. 4,611,871.60 Rs. (7,622,243.31)

Net Amount Receivable from BOC as at 22.09.2011 Rs. (7,104,243.31)

8) In a subsequent report filed by the Liquidator before the Commercial High Court, dated 9th May 2012, the Liquidator reported the costs and expenses incurred in relation to the sale of the factory building which included Liquidator's fees, insurance of the building and provision of security for the building aggregating Rs. 7,622,243.31. The Report further states that the net amount receivable from the Appellant Bank as at 22.09.2011 was Rs. 7,104,243.31. The Liquidators' said report alleges that although the Appellant Bank was called upon to meet the said amount by letters dated 14.07.2010 and 22.09.2011, the Liquidator had not received a responde from the Appellant Bank. The Liquidator also informed the Appellant that this sum was due. The Liquidator sought to recover the said sum from the Appellant Bank; claiming that the proceeds of the sale now formed part of the general pool of assets of the Company as the Appellant had lost its character as a Secured Creditor.

9) The Appellant Bank objected to the Liquidator's report referred to I the preceding paragraph and sequel to which and inquiry was held, andthe High Court made an Order (dated 7th June 2013 marked 'P'). The Order stated that the Appellant Bank be treated as a 'unsecured creditor' and that the money paid to the Appellant bank must be recovered from the Appellant Bank, to be returned to the liquidation pool. Aggrieved by the said Order, the Appellant made an application for leave to appeal on 18th July 2013. This court granted Special Leave to Appeal on the questions of law referred to in sub-paragaraphs (i)-(xiii) of paragraph 24 of the Petition of the Appellant Bank.:

(i) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in law holding that a creditor in winding up proceedings is under an obligation to reimburse the liquidator for expenses incurred, from moneys already recovered via a winding up process?

(ii) Did the Learned High Court Judge misdirect himself in fact and/or law by failing to consider that the entire proceeds of the sale were paid to the Respondent?
(iii) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in law in holding that the rights of parties in relation to the dispute referred to in written submissions dated 09.07.2012 and 21.09.2012 has been conclusively determined by the Order of the Commercial High Court dated 07.06.2013?
(iv) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in fact and/or law in failing to recognise that the liquidator had by his own admission and conduct admitted that the Appellant is a secured creditor?
(v) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in fact and/or law in holding that the Appellant should be treated as an unsecured creditor in terms of Section 358(1)(c) of the Companies Act, No. 07 of 2007?
(vi) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in fact and/or law in failing to recognise the right conferred on the Appellant Bank by Mortgage Bond No. 443/219 dated 06.12.1990?
(vii) Did the High Court err in law in failing to consider that the Mortgage over the relevant property had been released on the basis that the sums secured by the said Mortgage be paid to the Appellant?
(viii) Did the High Court err in fact and/or law in failing to consider that the transaction for the sale of the property subject to Mortgage Bond No. 443/219 was carried out upon the condition that the Appellant's rights under the said Mortgage would be given effect to?
(ix) Is the Order of the Learned High Court Judge in contravention of Section 365 and the Ninth Schedule to the Companies Act, No. 07 of 2007?
(x) Did the learned High Court Judge err in failing to recognise that the liquidator has failed to substantiate his claim?
(xi) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in failing to recognise that the liquidator has failed to recover all costs incurred by him in the manner provided in the Section 365 and the Ninth Schedule to the Companies Act, No. 07 of 2007?
(xii) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in failing to recognise that the liquidator's demands are illegal, unreasonable and are inconsistent with the purpose of liquidation?

(xiii) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in failing to recognise that the liquidator has no legal right/power to demand repayment of any sum duly paid to a creditor in a liquidation action?

10) In the course of argument of this matter, the parties focused on two questions of law and as such, I wish to confine this judgement to to the two issues relating to which submissions were made by the learned Counsel for the respective parties as the two questions would succinctly address all questions of law on which special leave was granted. The two questions are reproduced below..

1. Did the Appellant become an Unsecured Creditor by operation of and under and in terms of Section 358 of the Companies Act, No. 07 of 2007?
2. Is the Liquidator entitled to deduct expenses including the sum paid for the discharge of mortgage from and out of the sums realised from the sale of assets of the Company under liquidation?

Analysis

1. Did the Appellant become an Unsecured Creditor by operation of and under and in terms of Section 358 of the Companies Act, No. 07 of 2007?

I wish to reproduce Section 358 of the Companies Act in its entirety for ease of reference as I would be referring to several limbs of that Section in this judgement.

Section 358 states:

"(1) A secured creditor may—

(a) seize, attach and realise, issue execution against or appoint a receiver in respect of property subject to a charge, if entitled to do so;

(b) value the property subject to the charge and claim in the liquidation—

(i) as a secured creditor for the amount of his claim, up to the value of the security; and
(ii) as an unsecured creditor for the balance due, if any; or

(c) surrender the charge to the liquidator for the general benefit of creditors, and claim in the liquidation as an unsecured creditor for the whole debt

(2) A secured creditor may exercise the power referred to in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) whether or not the secured creditor has exercised the power referred to in paragraph (b) of subsection (1).

(3) A secured creditor who realises property subject to a charge—

(a) may claim as an unsecured creditor for any balance due after deducting the net amount realised;

(b) shall account to the liquidator for any surplus remaining from the net amount realised after satisfaction of the debt, including interest payable in respect of that debt up to the time of its satisfaction and after making any proper payments to the holder of any other charge over the property subject to the charge.

(4) If a secured creditor values the security and claims as a secured creditor, the valuation and claim shall be made in the prescribed form and shall—

(a) contain full particulars of the valuation and claim;
(b) contain full particulars of the charge including the date on which it was given; and
(c) identify any documents that substantiate the claim and the charge, and the provisions of sections 359, 360 and 362 shall apply to any claim as a secured creditor.

(5) The liquidator may—

(a)require production of any document referred to in paragraph (c) of subsection (4); and

(b)require a claim under subsection (4) to be verified by affidavit.

(6) Where a claim is made by a secured creditor under subsection (4), the liquidator shall either—
(a) accept the valuation and claim; or

(b) reject the valuation and claim in whole or in part, but—

(i) where a valuation and claim is rejected in whole or in part, the creditor may make a revised valuation and claim within ten working days of receiving notice of the rejection; and

(ii) the liquidator may if he subsequently considers that a valuation and claim was wrongly rejected in whole or in part, revoke or amend that decision.

(7) Where the liquidator—

(a) accepts a valuation and claim under paragraph (a) of subsection (6);

(b) accepts a revised valuation and claim under subparagraph (i) of paragraph (b) of subsection (6); or

(c) accepts a valuation and claim on revoking or amending a decision to reject a claim under subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (b) of subsection (6), the liquidator shall unless the secured creditor has realised the property, redeem the security on payment of the amount of the claim or the assessed value, whichever is the less.

(8) The liquidator may at any time by notice in writing, require a secured creditor within twenty working days after receipt of the notice—

(a) to elect which of the powers referred to in subsection (1) the creditor wishes to exercise; and

(b) if the creditor elects to exercise the power referred to in paragraph (b) or paragraph (c) of that subsection, to exercise the power within that period.

(9) A secured creditor on whom notice has been served under subsection (8) and who fails to comply with the notice shall be taken to have surrendered the charge to the liquidator under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) for the general benefit of creditors, and may claim in the liquidation as an unsecured creditor for the whole debt.

(10) A secured creditor who has surrendered a charge under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) or who is deemed to have surrendered a charge under subsection (9) may, with the leave of the court or the liquidator and subject to such terms and conditions as the court or the liquidator thinks fit, at any time before the liquidator has realised the property charged—

(a)withdraw the surrender and rely on the charge; or

(b)submit a new claim under this section.

(11) Every person who—

(a) makes or authorises the making of a claim under subsection (4) that is false or misleading in a material particular knowing it to be false or misleading; or

(b) omits or authorises the omission from a claim under subsection (4) of any matter knowing that the omission makes the claim false or misleading in a material particular, shall be guilty of an offence and be liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding one million rupees or to a term of imprisonment not exceeding five years or to both such fine and imprisonment."

11) In my view, the procedural Scheme provided by Section 358 attempts to reconcile the needs of efficient administration of liquidation with reasonable opportunity for recognition of a claim of a secured creditor, by providing rights, options, and duties for the secured creditors. It is a known fact that our Companies Act of 2007 drew inspiration from the New Zealand Companies Act of 1993 [K. Kanag-Isvaran and Dilshani Wijayawardana, Company Law (2014), at p. vii], and Section 305 of the New Zealand Companies Act, although not identical, is similar to Section 358. Section 305(1) of the New Zealand Companies Act contemplates three courses of action for the secured creditor;

1. Realising the property subject to a charge, if entitled to do so;
2. Valuing the property subject to the charge and claiming in the liquidation as an unsecured creditor for the balance due, if any; or
3. Surrendering the charge to the liquidator for the general benefit of creditors and claiming in the liquidation as an unsecured creditor for the whole debt.

12) It is recognized under the Companies Act of New Zealand that a secured creditor who does not prove a claim in accordance with Section 305 is excluded from distribution. The principle was recognized in Re H (a Bankrupt) [1968] NZLR 231 at 237–238, 241 and subsequently it was incorporated under Section 305 of the Companies Act of 1993 of New Zealand [Lisele Theron, Guide to Company Liquidation (Lexis Nexis 2013) at p. 63].

13) In my opinion, similar to that of the scheme laid down in Section 305 of the

New Zealand Act, as per Section 358(1)(a)(b) and (c) of our Act, a secured creditor may claim his dues in the liquidation in the manner prescribed. Section 358(8) provides the process by which a secured creditor may elect which of the powers referred to in Section 358(1) he wishes to exercise. Section 358(9) states that a Creditor who has been noticed, yet 'who fails to comply with the notice shall be taken to have surrendered the charge to the liquidator under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) for the general benefit of creditors and may claim in the liquidation as an unsecured creditor for the whole debt' [emphasis added]. It is by virtue of this provision that a Creditor who fails to respond to the Liquidator, loses his character as a Secured Creditor and is then compelled to claim in the liquidation process as an Unsecured Creditor. Section 358(10) allows a Secured Creditor who had surrendered a charge under Section 358(1)(c), or who is deemed to have surrendered the charge as per Section 358(9) (as in the instant case), to withdraw the surrender and rely on the charge or submit a new claim before the liquidator realises the property 'with the leave of the court or of the liquidator'.

14) The Appellant Bank had not responded to the notice sent by the Liquidator ('BOC 2') requesting the Appellant to elect which of the powers mentioned in subsection (1) of Section 358 the Appellant Bank wished to exercise within 20 working days. It is therefore, correct to state, that as per Section 358(9) the Appellant's failure to make a selection resulted in the surrendering of the charge to the Liquidator for the general benefit of all Creditors, and the Appellant could then only claim in the liquidation as an Unsecured Creditor for the whole debt. The character of the Appellant effectively changed thereupon from that of a Secured Creditor to that of an Unsecured Creditor.

15) The learned ASG argued however that the manner in which the Liquidator treated the Appellant Bank clearly tantamount to the treatment of a Secured Creditor and as such, the Liquidator's conduct constituted an admission that the Appellant Bank was in fact a Secured Creditor. In the circumstances, he argued, that the Appellant Bank therefore entitled to all Rights and Privileges bestowed upon Secured Creditors under the Companies Act. Importantly, the learned ASG noted the fact that the Liquidator sought the 'approval' of the Appellant Bank to sell the property mortgaged, reaffirmed the Appellant's position as a Secured Creditor.

16) It was submitted by the learned President's Counsel appearing for the Respondent that the purpose of Section 358(9) is to ensure that Creditors in Liquidation are not prejudiced by the inaction on the part of Secured Creditors and that the Liquidation process is not hampered by inordinate delay. It was also submitted that having been allowed the option of exercising its powers, the Appellant Bank's failure to do so should not permit the Appellant Bank to retain the monies erroneously conveyed to the Appellant by the Purchaser for the sole purpose of obtaining the discharge of the mortgage in order to facilitate the sale of the mortgaged building. Additionally, the learned President's Counsel noted that such conduct would be wholly contrary to the procedural scheme set out in Section 358(8) and 358(9) of the Act.

17) This Court is in agreement with the submissions of the learned President's Counsel for the Respondent and also wishes to add that the legislature has set out an exhaustive procedural scheme under Section 358 for Secured Creditors to exercise their Rights. Subsections (3) to (7) of Section 358 of the Act provide an exhaustive and meticulous detailing of the procedures to be adopted and performed by Secured Creditors where they wish to exercise their Rights. This court cannot therefore accept the submissions of the learned ASG for the Appellant Bank that the Liquidator has by conduct and action inferred the nature of the Appellant to be that of a Secured Creditor. The purpose of Section 358 is to provide a procedural scheme by which the Rights of a Secured Creditor are exercised and where such procedural scheme is not adhered to and followed by a Secured Creditor, as spelled out in Section 358(9), the Creditor is "taken to have surrendered the charge to the liquidator under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) for the general benefit of creditors, and may claim in the liquidation as an unsecured creditor for the whole debt".

18) In the hearing of oral submissions, the learned ASG for the Appellant Bank argued that Section 358(1)(b), 358(1)(c) and 358(2) and 358(9) have no practical application to a situation where the entire debt can be recovered from the sale of the secured asset, and that in the present case, as the secured asset was worth enough to realise more than the sum secured by the mortgage, the court should interpret the aforesaid sections of the Companies Act in a manner which provides opportunity for the Creditor to practically resolve claims. The learned High Court Judge addresses this contention in his Order dated 7th June 2013 where he notes that where the law specifically provides for the manner in which a secured creditor may realise/surrender its security, the creditor and the liquidator or a third party cannot enter into private arrangements for the realisation of the security beyond the procedural scheme set out in the Act. I am in agreement with the observation of the learned High Court Judge and also wish to note that it is not for the court to presume that the legislature overlooked the practical application of the relevant sections. To do so would be to operate on the assumption that the Legislature committed a mistake, which would be violative of fundamental principles of statutory interpretation. As Lord Halsbury stated in Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income Tax v. Pemsel [1891] AC 531, at p. 549:

"…a Court of Law is bound to proceed upon the assumption that the legislature is an ideal person that does not make mistakes. It must be assumed that it has intended what it has said…"

And, as Bindra states in N.S. Bindra's Interpretation of Statues, 12th Edition, at p. 205 "Even where there is a casus omissus, the remedy lies not with the court, but with the legislature."

19) In my opinion, it would be incorrect to state that the there is a casus omissus at all since the procedural scheme of the Act laid down in Section 358 is exhaustive and thorough in its statement of procedures to be adopted for the exercise of a Secured Creditor's rights in liquidation proceedings.

20) Additionally, I wish to note that where the scheme of the Act also provides an opportunity for Secured Creditors to act upon their security diligently via Section 358, the Appellant's failure to act upon such security according to the procedure mandated by the Act, cannot subsequently be allowed to benefit the Appellant as though he was still a Secured Creditor. If such consequence is permitted to be rationalised based on the conduct or behaviour of actors, as opposed to being determined by procedure, the procedural scheme of the act would lose all meaning.

21) It was also contended on behalf of the Appellant Bank that the learned High Court Judge erred in holding that the Appellant Bank had to obtain leave of the Liquidator or the Court to withdraw the surrender of its charge before the realisation of the property. This argument is not consonant with the wording of subsection (10) as it clearly states that "A secured creditor who has surrendered a charge under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) or who is deemed to have surrendered a charge under subsection (9) may, with the leave of the court or the liquidator and subject to such terms and conditions as the court or the liquidator thinks fit, at any time before the liquidator has realised the property charged—

a. withdraw the surrender and rely on the charge; or
b. submit a new claim under this section."

22) Therefore, it can be settled that the Appellant Bank lost its character as a Secured Creditor by failing to act per the notice under Section 358(8) and did not regain such character as it failed to obtain the leave of the court or the liquidator to withdraw the charge surrendered as mandated by Section 358(10).

2. Is the Liquidator entitled to deduct expenses including the sum paid for the discharge of mortgage from and out of the sums realised from the sale of assets of the Company under liquidation from a Creditor who lost its character as a Secured Creditor?

23) It is the Liquidator's position that the sum expense of Rs. 7,622,243.31 was incurred by the Liquidator as a direct result of the Liquidator having had to secure the assets of the Company that had been mortgaged to the Bank. In the Liquidator's letter to the Appellant Bank dated 04.12.2009, the Liquidator requested the Bank to meet the said expenses (vide 'G'). This request was refused. In his subsequent letter to the Bank ('BOC 2'), the Liquidator clarifies his position, notes that he has reserved the right to recover Rs. 2,272,617.41 spent on Insurance and Security charges, requests the Appellant Bank to notify him within 20 working days which of the Powers referred to in S. 358(1) of the Companies Act it wishes to exercise, and requests that should the Appellant elect to use powers referred to in (b) or (c) of S. 358(1), to do so within the mentioned period.

24) The Appellant Bank maintains that it is a secured creditor, and as such, the Bank is entitled to full payment of the secured claim regarding the mortgaged property. The Appellant contends that the secured assets of the Company under liquidation do not fall within the ordinary asset pool of the Company and that expenses in relation to insurance and security of the mortgaged asset must be met by the Liquidator without it being set off against the Bank's security. Since it is now settled that the Appellant Bank lost its character as a Secured Creditor and effectively became an Unsecured Creditor by operation of the law, the questions which remains are whether the (now) Unsecured Creditor loses any right to make preferential claims as per the Companies Act, and whether the Liquidator is entitled deduct expenses incurred including the amounts paid to secure the assets before their realisation.

25) Section 365 of the Companies Act states:

"(1) The liquidator shall pay out of the assets of the company the expenses, fees, and claims set out in the Ninth Schedule to the extent and in the order of priority specified in that Schedule and that Schedule shall apply to the payment of those expenses, fees, and claims according to its tenor.

(2) Without limiting paragraph 7(b) of the Ninth Schedule, the terms "assets" in subsection (1) shall not include assets subject to a charge, unless— (a) the charge is surrendered or taken to be surrendered or redeemed under section 358; or (b) the charge was when created, a floating charge in respect of those assets."

26) The Ninth Schedule, detailing the manner in which preferential claims must be addressed by the Liquidator states:

"1. The liquidator shall first pay, in the order of priority in which they are listed: —

a. the fees and expenses properly incurred by the liquidator in carrying out the duties and exercising the powers of the liquidator and the remuneration of the liquidator;
b. the reasonable costs of a person who applied to the court for an order that the company be put into liquidation, including the reasonable costs of a person appearing on the application whose costs are allowed by the court;
c. the actual out-of-pocket expenses necessarily incurred by a liquidation committee.

27) Therefore, it is apparent that the Act mandates the sum deduction of costs and expenses incurred by the Liquidator in the procuring of assets subject to a charge for their realisation, deemed to have been surrendered for the general benefit of Creditors under Section 358(1) of the Act. Essentially, the collated meaning of the scheme is such that assets subject to a charge are excluded from the general pool of assets from which the liquidator may deduct his expenses and comprise the preferential claim of the relevant secured creditor unless the charge is surrendered or deemed to have been surrendered as per Section 358(9). Accordingly, when a charge is deemed to have been surrendered, such asset forms part of the general pool of assets of the company out of which the claims of unsecured creditors are satisfied upon equal footing as per the 'pari passu' principle under and in terms of Section 366 which deals with the 'Claims of other Creditors and distribution of Surplus assets'.

28) Furthermore, it is observed that the expenses for the preservation of the Mortgaged building was borne out of the funds generated by the sale of the assets of the company. [Liquidator's letters marked, D, D2 & E] These funds ought to have been distributed among the Creditors in order of priority as mandated by the Companies Act. The Liquidator was compelled to use the funds of the general pool of assets to cover the expenses as the Appellant had ignored the Liquidator's request to pay for the security and insurance charges of the building. Therefore, it was submitted that the Appellant's refusal to reimburse these expenses is unfairly detrimental and prejudicial to other creditors.

29) By failing to respond to the letter issued to the Appellant Bank which requested it to elect which powers it wished to exercise under S. 358(1) of the Companies Act, the Appellant Bank surrendered its authority to claim treatment as a secured creditor and the consequences of its own inaction must not be borne by another. Effectively, the whole liquidation process is hampered by the Appellant's inaction and refusal to return to the liquidation the proceeds paid to it for the discharge of the mortgage and its refusal to reimburse the liquidator's expenses.

30) Furthermore, it must be noted that the learned High Court Judge, in his wisdom, comprehensively analysed the procedural impropriety which had ensued at the hands of the Appellant Bank and noted the distinction between sum amounts paid for the setting off and discharge of a mortgage and that of sums paid as result of pursuing the procedural scheme set out for the realisation of security and preferential claims set out in Section 358 of the Companies Act. Importantly, the learned High Court Judge notes that if the Appellant Bank claims to have acted as a Secured Creditor, it should have done so after making a valuation and claim in the manner prescribed in Section 358(4) and the Liquidator should have, upon receipt of the claim in the prescribed form, either accepted, revised or rejected the valuation as per Section 358(6) and 358(7). As correctly observed by the learned High Court Judge, the fact that the Appellant Bank had not pursued this procedural scheme would therefore indicate that the Appellant Bank was not, in fact, and by operation of the law, a Secured Creditor and that the proceeds of the realisation paid to the Appellant Bank to set off and discharge the mortgage should be returned to the liquidation process.

31) The order of the learned High Court Judge dated 7th June 2013 states that the expenses incurred by the Liquidator (including the amount paid for the discharge of the mortgage) must be recovered from the sale proceeds of property released from the mortgage. It also states that in the event the sale proceeds are insufficient to recover the Liquidator's expenses, the liquidator is entitled to recover the expenses from the Appellant Bank, in an amount not exceeding the amount paid for the discharge of the mortgage.

32) The Liquidator is therefore entitled to deduct expenses from the proceeds of the realisation of assets which were previously mortgaged to the Appellant Bank and now surrendered for the general Benefit of Creditors under Section 358(1) of the Act, in an amount not exceeding the amount paid for the discharge of the mortgage. The Appellant may claim any sums due and owed from the general pool of assets of the Respondent along with other creditors. Accordingly, I uphold the order made by the learned High Court Judge dated 7th June 2013 directing the Appellant to return the monies which were paid to it by the Purchaser amounting to Rs. USD 56,761.29 (Rs. 6,597,644.21), to the Liquidator to be used for the general benefit of all creditors. Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed,

E.A.G.R. Amarasekara J.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as 'the Plaintiff') instituted the action bearing No. 35137/05/MR in the District Court of Kandy against the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as 'the Defendant') praying inter alia for a judgment as follows.

a) Directing the Defendant to pay a sum of Rs. 1,000,000/= as damages to the Plaintiff for the alleged acts done maliciously against the Plaintiff under the cover of his authority.

b) For legal interests at 15% on the aforesaid amount from the date of the Plaint till the payment in full.

In the caption, the Defendant was named as Athula Amarasinghe, Officer in Charge, Police Station, Hasalaka. Thus, it is clear that the allegations were based on the acts of the Defendant done under his authority as the Officer in Charge of the Police Station, Hasalaka.

The Plaintiff in his Plaint averred as follows;

1. The Defendant had maliciously directed Plaintiff's wife, a WPC, to make a complaint against the Plaintiff.

2. The Defendant, using the said Police Complaint, had informed the Plaintiff via several telephone messages to the Koswatta Police Station where he was serving, to be present on 03.04.2005 at 10 a.m. at Hasalaka Police Station for an inquiry into the said Complaint-vide paragraph 7 of the Plaint.

The said messages received via telephone contained information about certain inquiries to be held against him into an alleged assault to his wife, neglect to maintain his children and wife and use of abusive words to threaten his wife. It is further stated that steps would be taken under Section 308 (a) of the Penal Code.

3. The Plaintiff attended Hasalaka Police Station on 03.04.2005 to comply with the said messages he received but the Defendant used obscene words towards the Plaintiff and attempted to assault him, threatened him and kept him in police custody- vide paragraph 9 of the Plaint.

4. On 19.04.2005, the Plaintiff's wife, on the instigation of the Defendant, filed a maintenance action bearing No. 34725 in the Mahiyanganaya Magistrate Court.

5. The Defendant on 25/7/2005 also submitted a report under reference No. BR 750/05 on the basis of a complaint made by his wife on 30.05.2005 and sought notices to be issued on the Plaintiff through Koswatta Police.

6. On 02/6/2005 and 05/6/2005, the Defendant informed the Plaintiff, by telephone messages through OIC Police Station Puttalam, to be present at Hasalaka Police Station and caused notice to be served through Koswatta Police Station knowing very well that the Plaintiff was serving at Puttalam Police Station. This was done with an intention to get a warrant issued against him.

7. When the Plaintiff made his presence at the Hasalaka Police Station he was subjected to abusive words and threats by Police Officers who were instigated by the Defendant.

8. The Defendant's malicious conduct on 03.04.2005 at the police station was defamatory and caused mental pain to the Plaintiff and this conduct of the Defendant caused the breakdown of the Plaintiff's matrimonial life.

9. Even though the Defendant had acted in the capacity of a Public Officer, he had used his official capacity maliciously towards the Plaintiff and the Defendant is personally liable for his conduct.

Thus, it is clear that the action is based on the actions taken by the Defendant in his capacity as a Police Officer, but the Plaintiff alleges that the Defendant is personally liable as the Defendant's conduct was malicious. Other than, stating that the Defendant acted maliciously, nothing is clearly revealed in the Plaint as to why he attributes malice to the Defendant.

By answer dated 18.03.2011, among other things, the Defendant denied the allegations of the Plaintiff and also raised the objection that an action against a public officer cannot be maintained without making the Honourable Attorney General a party and the action would be liable to be dismissed for non-compliance with the provisions of Crown (Liability in Delict) Act. By filing replication dated 24.06.2011, the Plaintiff stated that since the Plaint had been filed against unlawful acts of the Defendant, it was not necessary to name the Honourable Attorney General as a party.

Trial commenced on 06.12.2011, issues and admissions were recorded, and the evidence of the witness also commenced. However, the Defendant was not represented by the Attorney General at the beginning. On 02/12/2013, the Defendant was represented by Honourable Attorney General and further legal objections were raised as issues by the Learned State Counsel as to whether the Plaint was contrary to the provisions of Section 88 of the Police Ordinance, and if so whether the action could be maintained.

The learned District Judge, Kandy by order dated 22.08.2014 rejected the said preliminary objection based on Section 88 of the Police Ordinance. The Defendant preferred an application seeking leave to appeal to the High Court of Civil Appeal, Kandy and the High Court after considering the said application and the main matter together, by order dated 11.08.2015 allowed the appeal and set aside the order of the District Court dated 22.08.2014 and directed the District Judge to dismiss the plaint.

In granting leave against the said decision of the Learned High Court Judges, this court permitted the following questions of law.

a) whether the protection given under Sec. 88 of the Police Ordinance extends to acts done maliciously and mala fide by the public officer under the cloak of his authority?

b) In any event whether the non-compliance of Sec. 88 of the Police Ordinance was fatal to the plaintiff's action in the circumstances of this case?

In this regard it is worthwhile to see the scope of the Sec. 88 of the Police Ordinance which reads as follows;

"All actions and prosecutions against any person which may be lawfully brought for anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of this Ordinance, or under the general police powers hereby given, shall be commenced within three months after the act complained of shall have been committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such action and of the cause thereof shall be given to the defendant, or to the principal officer of the district in which the act was committed, one month at least before the commencement of the action; and no plaintiff shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court after such action brought, by or on behalf of the defendant".

To answer the aforementioned first question of law, it is necessary, to decide whether the words 'anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of this Ordinance, or under the General Police powers hereby given' includes any act/acts done maliciously or with mala fide intentions by police officers.

It is observed some case laws dealing with Sec. 88 of the Police Ordinance have referred to a similar provision in the Civil Procedure Code, namely Section 461 and vice versa. As per Sec. 461 of the Civil Procedure Code, 'no actions shall be instituted against Attorney General as representing the State or against a Minister, Deputy Minister or a public officer in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing has been delivered to such Attorney General, Minister, Deputy Minister, or officer (as the case may be)……' However, by an amendment to the Civil Procedure Code in 1977, Section 461 A was introduced and now, if such an action is filed without giving notice as aforesaid and an objection is taken, the court has to stay the proceedings for one month subject to such costs as ordered by the Court and the date immediately following one month after the institution of such action is treated as the date of the institution for the purpose of determination whether the action is prescribed. However, no such amendment has been introduced in relation to Sec. 88 of the Police Ordinance. Learned Senior State Counsel in his submission has shown the chronology of the case law and judicial pronouncement relating to the scope and intent of the Sec. 88 of the Police Ordinance and also relating to Sec. 461 of the Civil Procedure Code. It appears that in the first half of the 20th century our courts have interpreted said sections in a more restricted manner. In terms of those decisions motives of the officer concerned is relevant to the applicability of the said provisions.

What follows below would illustrate the restricted view taken by our courts;

1. Perera v Hansard (1886) 8 SCC 1
   The Supreme Court had to interpret Section 79 of the Police Ordinance which was worded similar to Sec. 88 of the Police Ordinance as it stands today. It was held that the officer was entitled to notice of action for anything done or intended to be done by him as a police officer, when he acted with bona fides (page 3), and as the defendant did not believe that he was justified in searching the plaintiff's house without a warrant and he was fully aware of the illegal manner the warrant was issued to which he had been a party, he was not entitled to notice of action (page 6).

2. Appusingo Appu v Don Aron 9 NLR 138 – in interpreting "an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity" as occurring in Section 461 of the Civil Procedure Code it was observed while referring to some English authorities that 'purporting' is equivalent to 'in pursuance of' and if the relevant officers honestly intended to put the law in force and believed that the plaintiff had committed the offence with which he was charged, even though there was no reasonable grounds for such belief , the officer was acting in pursuance of his statutory authority. It was further held that it would be intolerable if these privileges could be claimed by a public officer who is acting wrongfully and for the gratification of private malice, and whose official authority appears only in his badge. (At page 140).

3. Above was followed in Abaran Appu V Banda 16 NLR 49 where in interpreting section 461, it was observed that the protection given by sections expressed in these or in similar terms do not extend to the acts maliciously done by the public officer under the cloak of his authority and the protection is intended to be given when the defendant has acted in good faith and with an honest intention of putting the law into force (vide pages 50, 51). It appears that in coming to the conclusions Lascelles CJ relies on the authority of Perera V Hansard (above) and some English case laws. Wood Renton J saw no reason to anticipate any difficulty in considering whether or not the defendant had a right to notice of action due to the fact that the question of good faith was incapable of being determined before the action had been tried since no difficulty of that kind had arisen in England in consequence of the constructions by the English Courts on expressions such as 'in pursuance of or anything done or intended to be done'. – (at Page 52).

4. Referring to the aforementioned decisions, in Saranankara v Kapurala Aratchi (1916) 3 CWR 121 it was held that where the question as to whether or not a defendant can claim notices under Section 461 is one of fact, evidence must be taken before the decision is arrived at. Further it was stated that the Learned District Judge seemed to have not considered the question as to whether the Defendant acted mala fide. Hence the decision was set aside and sent back for a decision to be made after trial.
