5. Van Hoff V Keegal (1917) 4 CWR 258 is another case which states that a Police Officer who is found to have acted maliciously and not in the bona fide exercise of his official duties is not entitled to depend on the limitations of action provided in Section 79 (as it stands then) of the Police Ordinance No 16 of 1868. The decision in Van Hoff V Keegal was followed even in Ismalanne Lokka v Harmanis 23 NLR 192**.

6. Punchi banda V Ibrahim reported in 29 NLR 139 also considered the scope of section 79 (as it stands then) of the Police Ordinance, Fisher J stated that by the words 'intended to be done', section 79 extends the protection to any act which a police officer does in the reasonable and bona fide belief that he is acting within the scope of his authority, that is to say, that when he did the act under consideration he intended to do what he conceived and reasonably and honestly thought to be his duty and was not actuated by malice or ulterior motive (page 139) Drieberg A.J. also held that the police officer would not be entitled to the protection if he acted maliciously and not in bona fide exercise of official duties (At page 144)

As indicated by above case law, relevance and application of Section 88 of the Police Ordinance were circumscribed by the motive of the relevant officer, that is to say, if he had acted maliciously, he could not have claimed that section 88 is applicable.

However, in the second half of the 20th century and thereafter it appears that there is a significant departure in the approach and judicial thinking in this regard. However, before going through such cases that took a different view, it is important to highlight some negative aspects of the approach taken by our courts in the above decisions in the 1st half of the 20th century.

1. Section 88 of the Police Ordinance expects to commence proceedings within 3 months from the act complained of and the notice of action has to be given to the defendant or to the principal officer of the district at least one month prior to the commencement of the action. The latter part of the section indicates that the idea of giving notices is to make necessary amends in appropriate instances.

However, as indicated above and also decided in Saranankara v Kapurala Aratchi whether notice should have been given or whether the action has been prescribed has to be decided only after trial or after hearing considerable amount of evidence in relation to the relevant facts. When it is pleaded that an act was done maliciously with mala fide intent it is a matter to be decided through evidence. Thus, a mere averment in the plaint that alleged acts were done maliciously may deprive the defendant officer or the relevant principal officer his opportunity to receive notice prior to the institution of the action and also his ability to take up an objection at the beginning of the action that the action is prescribed since the relevant facts in relation to the malice has to be established through evidence. On the other hand, on such occasions after hearing the evidence, if the court comes to the conclusion that there was no malice, the relevant officer by that time would have gone through the trial in negation of his entitlement to receive notice under section 88.

Moreover if the court decides after hearing evidence that there was no malice, but harm has been caused due to exceeding of powers or undue use of powers, the opportunity to make amends may be lost and the Plaintiff may have to lose his case as he acted against a positive rule of law by not giving notice as contemplated by section 88 and/or not filing the action within the stipulated time frame: therefore, even though in Abaran Appu vs Banda Wood Renton J expressed his view that there is no reason to anticipate any difficulty would arise under our procedure, as explained above an allegation of malice which cannot be proved may negate the rights of the officer concerned. On the other hand, when the alleged malice is not proved but the harm is proved the Plaintiff may lose his entire claim.

2. Section 88 of the Police Ordinance contemplates acts which can be described as 'anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of said ordinance, or under the general police powers given under the said ordinance'. In interpreting the courts must first give the general meaning to the words used. To interpret it in a manner limiting its meaning to acts done in good faith and without malice, such words have to be introduced to section to read it some way similar to "…for anything done or intended to be done in good faith / without malice …". This seems to be contrary to rules in constructing the meaning of a statutory provision.

3. Further there may be occasions where the officer acts with malice, but the act is lawful. For an example, if a police officer raids a given place where the illicit liquor trade is carrying on by the owner greater number of times than he does in relation to other illicit liquor trading places in the area due to some malice the officer has against the said owner, can one say that the officer is not entitled to the notice and plea of time bar under the section, if the raid is lawful?

In the above backdrop, it is necessary to view the change of judicial thinking from 1950 onwards till now. In Ratnavira vs Superintendent of Police (CID) 51 NLR 217 in relation to section 461 of Civil Procedure Code Wijewardena CJ considered some of the cases referred to above but relying on some Indian cases which considered similar provisions, stated that Appusingo Appu Vs Don Aron and Abaran Appu Vs Banda have taken a restricted view of the section 461 where it was laid down that the section did not apply to public officers acting malafide. Wijewardena CJ in the discourse of his judgment refers to one Indian judgment Koti Reddi vs Subbiaha et al (1918) Indian Law Reports 41 Madras 792 which held that a public officer was entitled to notice of the action under section 80 of the Indian code even though he has acted malafide and quotes Sadasiva Ayyar J as follows: "…..I think that the expression 'any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity'… means 'any act of a public officer which is intended by him to carry forth or convey to the minds of all persons who become aware of that act the impression that he did the act in his official capacity and not as an ordinary private individual and which has the effect of conveying such an impression by its seeming or appearance'. …….an act done by a public officer would 'Purport' to be an act done in his official capacity not only if it was properly and rightly done by him in such capacity and within his powers but also if it has such a reasonable resemblance (though a false pretended resemblance) to a proper and right act that ordinary person could reasonably conclude from the character of the act and from the nature of his official powers and duties that it was done in his official capacity. But if the act done is so outrageous and extraordinary that no reasonable person could detect in it any resemblance to any act which the powers of such an officer could allow him to do on the facts as represented and declared by such officer, his mere allegation that he did the act in his official capacity would not suffice. ……. I think the question of good faith and bad faith of the public officer either as regards his belief in legality or propriety of his act or the limit of his powers or the existence of facts justifying the existence of such powers is irrelevant in the consideration of the question whether the officer is entitled to notice……"

Wijewardena CJ also refers to Dakshina Ranjan Ghosh v Omar Chand Oswal (1923) Indian Law Reports, 50 Calcutta 994 and Abdul Rahim V Abdul Rahim (1924) All India Law Reports, 46 Allahabad 851 and quotes the following passages from them.

"The decision of the Learned Subordinate Judge implies the importation of words into the section which cannot be found there. He would read the section as if it were 'in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer bona fide in his official capacity'. In my judgment it is not legitimate to construe the section by importing into the section words which do not appear in the Section." (Quoting Sanderson CJ).

"The contention urged on behalf of the Respondent in this court is that which was adapted by the court below, namely that section 80 has no application unless to act complained of was done in good faith. On the language of this section the question seems to us to admit no doubt. The section does not require that the act should have been done in good faith. It merely requires that it should purport to be done by the officer in his official capacity. If the act was one such as in ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting, the act clearly purports to be done in his official capacity within the 'ordinary' meaning of the term 'purport'. The motives with which the act was done do not entered the questions at all." (Quoting Neave JJ)

De Silva V Illangkoon 57 NLR 457 was a decision made by the Supreme Court. The Court relied on two Privy Council decisions over two Indian cases namely Albert West Meads V the King, and Gill and another V King. Basnayake ACJ held that he was unable to find in the language of section 461 anything which requires a person bringing in an action against a public officer to ascertain beforehand whether the act which he purported to do in his official capacity was malafide or bonafide " and it was further held that when construing a provision such as section 461, in the first instance, the expression used therein should be given the ordinary meaning; further the word 'purport' means ordinarily 'profess' or 'claim' or 'mean' or 'imply'.

Whereas in that case a public officer clearly in the exercise of his function as the Principal of a School had given a certificate to a pupil in accordance with the requirement of Government regulations, there was no doubt in the mind of the court that the act was one that he purported to do in his official capacity and there was no other capacity in which he could have given such a certificate. Basnayake ACJ stated that clearly therefore the mental process whether it be malicious or otherwise which induced him to write the words 'extremely bad' against the case 'conduct' was immaterial. (Pages 459-460).

In the case H.H.B. Gill V the King 1948 A.I.R.128 at 133, mentioned above it was stated as follows;

"A public servant can only be said to act or to purport to act in the discharge of his official duty, if his act is such as to lie within the scope of his official duty. Thus, a Judge neither acts nor purports to act as a Judge in receiving a bribe, though the judgment which he delivers may be such an act: nor does a government medical officer act or purport to act as a public servant in picking the pocket of a patient whom he is examining, though the examination itself may be such an act. The test may well be whether the public servant, if challenged, can reasonably claim that, what he does, he does in virtue of his office".

In Liyanage V Municipal Council Galle (1994) 3 Sr L R 216 at 226 in relation to a discussion on a similar provision in Section 307 of the Municipal Council Ordinance Mark Fernando J after considering many of the above-mentioned cases, stated that Section 461 is not intended to give some special advantage to the Defendant, but to enable him to consider or reconsider the grievance of the citizen and to offer amends" [also see Attorney General v Arumugam (1963) 66 NLR 403, 404].

In Amersinghe V Bandara CA (Rev) 517/96, dated 11.07.1997 Edirisuriya J observed as follows:
"… so that, even if the Respondent acted maliciously, the act of taking the Petitioner into custody and later producing the Petitioner before a Magistrate were done under the provisions of the Police Ordinance. It is on the allegation of malice that the action for damages has been instituted," and there the Court of Appeal held that Section 88 of the Police Ordinance applies even whether an action for malicious arrest is brought against the complainant.

The Court of Appeal again In Palitha Perera V Vincendrarajan* No. CALA 543/2002 on 18.05.2010, after considering some of the cases referred to above in this decision, decided to follow the reasoning in De Silva V Illangakoon (supra) and held that "whether the act was done lawfully or unlawfully and bona fide or mala fide they are acts purportedly done by virtue of the office. Hence the Plaintiffs is bound by section 88 of the Police Ordinance. "

As indicated above, our cases demonstrate that our judicial dicta on the matter in issue is divided, while the earlier authorities interpreted the scope of the section 88 of the Police Ordinance and similar Sections like section 461 of the Civil Procedure Code in a restricted manner, decisions since 1950 onwards have taken more liberal view to state that motives of an officer are immaterial to the applicability of those provisions.

Previously in this judgment I have already mentioned certain negative aspects of the earlier approach taken up by our courts. Moreover, in earlier decisions, even though some English cases were merely followed, there appear to be a lack of proper analysis of those decisions to see whether they were correctly decided and/or to see whether they are in fact relevant to the matters in dispute before our courts.

It was mentioned previously in this judgment that practical difficulties that may arise due to the situation, especially when the courts have to decide the existence of malice after hearing evidence. However, in my view, the most important part of the section which is relevant to filing an action against the police officer contains in the words 'for anything done and intend to be done under the provisions of the ordinance or under the general police powers hereby given'. These words indicate that the section applies only for, a) anything done or intended to be done by a police officer under the provisions of police ordinance and/or

b) anything done or intended to be done by a police officer under the general powers given by the ordinance.

These words do not contemplate the motive of the officer involved, whether there is malice or not, whether he acted in bad faith or not. Bindra on interpretation of Statute (10th Edition) at page 438 refers to a basic principle in constructing statutes as follows;

"Where the meaning of the word is plain, it is not the duty of the courts to busy themselves with supposed intention. A court cannot stretch the language of a statutory provision to bring it in accord with the supposed legislative intention underlying it unless that words are susceptible of carrying out the intention".

Thus, as indicated before, the approach of our courts in interpreting section 88 and the Police Ordinance and similar provisions in the early part of the 20th century appear to be not in line with the said principles as it requires one to understand the words as 'anything done or intended to be done without malice or bad faith'. Therefore, in my view that observations made by Wijewardene CJ in Ratnavira vs superintendent of police (CID) 51 NCR 217 interpreting Section 461 of the Civil Procedure Code, which is also relevant in interpreting section 88 of the Police Ordinance, is more appropriate to follow. Further, in my view De Silva v Illangakoon (supra), Palitha Perera v Vincendrarajan (Supra), Liyanage v Municipal Council of Galle (Supra), Amerasinghe v Bandara (Supra) exhibited the correct approach in interpreting section 81 of the Police Ordinance or similar provisions such as Section 461 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Apparent intention of the legislature of giving notice as per Section 88 is to make amends prior to the institution or at the beginning of the action. Deciding whether one acted with malice or not through evidence and then deciding entitlement to notice appears to be in conflict with such intention. As mentioned above, if one adheres to the previous approach mere pleading of malice of the defendant in the plaint would take all such actions out for the scope of section 88 till the motive is decided through evidence. Further if one acts with bona fide and according to law, there may be very limited occasions to make amends such as in a matter where the relevant officer acts in bona fide but exceeds his powers.

In my view what is important is not the fact whether the relevant officer acted with malice or with bad faith but whether he had acted or intended to act under the provisions of the Ordinance or general powers given under the Ordinance. In recognizing whether the relevant officer acted or intended to act so, Judicial insights expressed by Sadasiva Ayyar J and Neave J as quoted in Ratnavira Vs Superintendent of Police (Supra) as well as what is quoted above from H.H.B Gill Vs the King (Supra) may shed light.

Thus, in my view the judicial dicta and approach expressed in cases decided from the beginning of the second half of the 20th century till now as referred to above are correct. Further, since there is a time limit to file the action from the occasion of the incident and direction to give notice of the action one month prior to expiry of that period, non-compliance of the requirements of the section is fatal.

One may argue that some of the allegations namely, getting another officer to scold at and threaten the plaintiff and/or scolding the plaintiff or attempting to assault the plaintiff do not fall within the scope of 'anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of the Police Ordinance or general powers given under ordinance. (See para 14, 15 of the plaint) However, as per the paragraph 17, the plaintiff himself has taken up the position that all the acts, complained of were done by maliciously using Defendant's official status and authority. As said the plaintiff cannot be understood as taking up such a stance as his complaint is that the defendant used his official position maliciously against him. Thus, overall position of the plaint is that the Defendant's acts were done or intended to be done under the provisions of the police ordinance or general powers given under the ordinance but maliciously.

Hence, the questions of law mentioned above have to be answered in the following manner in favour of the defendant.

1. Section 88 contemplates any act done by a police officer under the cloak of his authority. Motive is irrelevant.
2. Whether the non-compliance of section 88 of the Police Ordinance was fatal to the Plaintiff's action is answered in affirmative.

Thus, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

This appeal has been preferred against the judgment of the Court of Appeal which quashed the direction given by the Ministry of Education to the Horana Asoka College [the School] to refrain from conducting classes solely in the English language and to adopt the bilingual policy of the Government.

Background facts

By letter dated 2nd September 2015 [P12], the Secretary, Ministry of Education who is the 1st Respondent – Appellant [the 1st Appellant], informed the 4th Respondent – Respondent [the 4th Respondent] who at that time was the Manager of the said School that:

(a) Section 6 of the Assisted Schools and Training Colleges (Special Provisions) Act, No. 5 of 1960 [the 1960 Act] requires all 'Government approved unaided private Schools' to comply with the general education policy of the Government; and

(b) the said School, by conducting classes solely in the English medium from Grades 1 to 11 is acting contrary to the education policy of the Government on the medium of instruction that should be adopted by schools.

Furthermore, by P12, the 1st Appellant directed the 4th Respondent to adopt the bilingual policy of the Government of teaching part of the subjects in English and the balance subjects in Sinhalese or else, to adopt Sinhalese solely as the medium of instruction and thereby comply with the Government policy with regard to the medium of instruction.

The 1st – 4th Petitioners – Respondents [the Respondents] whose children are students of the said School and who were concerned that compliance with P12 would result in the medium of instruction being changed from English to bilingual [i.e., Sinhalese and English] or Sinhala, invoked the Writ jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal and sought a Writ of Certiorari to quash P12 and a Writ of Prohibition prohibiting the implementation of the decision contained therein. By its judgment delivered on 10th June 2019, the Court of Appeal issued a Writ of Certiorari quashing P12, the Writ of Prohibition as prayed for, and imposed costs in a sum of Rs. 400,000 payable by the 1st Appellant to the 1st – 4th Respondents.

Dissatisfied with the said judgment, the 1st Appellant and the 7th Respondent – Appellant, the Commissioner General of Examinations [the 7th Appellant] [collectively the Appellants] sought and obtained leave to appeal on 2nd July 2020 on four questions of law, which I shall refer to later in this judgment. It would suffice to state at this stage that the critical issue that needs to be determined in this appeal is whether the School is required to comply with the general education policy of the Government, and more particularly with the policy of the Government with regard to the medium of instruction, if any such policy exists.

Legislation relating to education

In order to place the above issue in perspective, it would be important to consider very briefly the development of the legislation relating to education since the turn of the Twentieth Century, the manner in which State responsibility for education and the medium of instruction has evolved during that period.

The starting point would be the Town Schools Ordinance No. 5 of 1906, which was an Ordinance to provide for compulsory vernacular education in Municipal and Local Board Towns, and the Rural Schools Ordinance No. 8 of 1907, which was an Ordinance to provide for the education in the vernacular languages of children in rural and planting districts for whose education other adequate provision has not been made. In terms of the latter Ordinance, vernacular schools include schools in which instruction is given in English, in addition to the vernacular, provided that English does not form one of the subjects in which it is compulsory to receive instruction.

The above Ordinances were repealed and replaced by the Education Ordinance No. 1 of 1920, which sought to revise and consolidate the law relating to education. This Ordinance refers to two types of schools, namely (a) Government Schools, which meant schools, whether secondary or elementary, established by or transferred to the Government and maintained entirely from the public funds of the State, and (b) Assisted Schools, which meant schools, whether secondary or elementary, to which aid is contributed from the public funds of the State. Although not referred to in any of the above Ordinances, there also existed in the country schools which had been commenced by the missionaries commonly referred to as denominational schools where the medium of instruction was generally in English, and where fees were levied from its students, even though such schools may have received financial assistance from the State.

State responsibility for Education

In the chapter titled, 'Full State Responsibility for Education', in the book 'Education in Ceylon – A Centenary Volume' [(1969) Ministry of Education and Cultural Affairs], it has been stated as follows:

"Since the establishment of the Department of Public Instruction, the State, whilst continuing to assist denominational schools, started schools of its own. Christians, Buddhists, Hindus and Muslims vied with one another in establishing schools, towards the end of the nineteenth century, thus adding to the number of denominational schools. These two types, called Assisted Schools and Government Schools respectively, existed side-by-side till 1960 in which year the State assumed full responsibility for almost all schools in the Island .

During the Donoughmore period the government in its endeavour to build a welfare state began to assume greater responsibility for education. The Executive Committee for Education, with its Chairman designated the Minister of Education, had control of general policy, finance and administration of education. The task of executing the education programme to build a welfare state fell on this Executive Committee of Education, which, during the period 1931 – 1947 under the distinguished Minister of Education Dr. C.W.W. Kannangara made significant changes in the Island's school system, through a series of measures that widened the responsibility of the State for education.

After tiding over the epidemic of malaria in 1935, the Ministry of Education continued its policy of expansion opening up more and more schools in still unserved areas. Dr. C.W.W. Kannangara whilst pursuing this policy was quite determined on widening State control of the Island's school system. He remarked thus in 1938: "In all justice to the country and the State Council, if the State Council pays the money for educating the youth of this country, it should be able to control education; he who pays the piper, should be able to call the tune."

The gradual control that the State began to exercise over education through the Education Ordinance of 1920 has been discussed in a Chapter titled, 'Unaided Schools' in the aforementioned book 'Education in Ceylon – A Centenary Volume' [supra], where the author states as follows:

"State Control began to be deemed necessary for the effective planning of education and for the provision of educational opportunity for all. In 1931, the Minister of Education took upon himself the responsibility of planning education on a national scale. Denominational activity was as a result curtailed and some of the missionary schools were taken over when their managers willingly handed them over to the State. In 1934, restrictions were placed on the opening of new schools by private and denominational bodies and there were signs of increasing State control of denominational schools.

Education Ordinance No. 31 of 1939 and Unaided Schools

The Ordinance of 1920 was replaced by the Education Ordinance No. 31 of 1939, which Ordinance, subject to several amendments, exists to this date [the Ordinance]. Among the many provisions of the new Ordinance was Section 32(1) which enabled the Minister to make regulations for the purpose of giving effect to the principles and provisions of the Ordinance.

The first amendment to this Ordinance came by way of the Education (Amendment) Act, No. 26 of 1947, and contained three significant amendments to the principal enactment. The first was the power to make regulations in respect of the language through the medium of which instruction shall be given in any class in any Government School or Assisted School – vide Section 32(2)(ca). The second was Section 41A(1), which stipulated that no fees shall be charged in respect of admission to, or for the education provided in a Government School or an Assisted School. The third was Section 43A, which perhaps for the first time, contained provisions with regard to a third category of schools referred to as Unaided Schools, which were those schools that did not receive any financial assistance from the State. This section empowered the Director of Education to examine such Unaided Schools upon complaints on certain specified matters and give directions on the remedial measures that were to be taken, or where such school failed to remedy the situation, to discontinue such schools.

"Ordinance No. 26 of 1947 abolished fees in government and assisted schools and ushered in the Free Education scheme recommended by the Special Committee on Education in 1943. Assisted schools which did not join the Free Education Scheme were allowed to become private schools unaided by Government*. Out of 3079 assisted schools in 1945, the majority of which were denominationally managed, only 115 assisted schools remained outside the Free education scheme. The schools that remained outside the Free Education Scheme became "fee levying private schools" and the others became "non-fee levying private schools under denominational management".*

Compliance with the free education scheme on the part of assisted schools was purely voluntary according to the new educational policy formulated in 1946, but the decision had to be made by the schools before 30th April 1948. Schools which did not join the free education scheme ceased to receive aid of any kind after first October 1948.

Schools outside the Free Education Scheme were allowed to levy fees and run as unaided fee-levying private schools*.* But they had to conform to set standards and follow State policy regarding education*. Thus, the hand of the State was felt to touch the private schools in more than one way.*" [emphasis added]

Thus began legislation empowering the Director of Education to exercise control over Unaided Schools. While previous legislation sought to regulate schools that received in some measure State assistance, the 1947 Amendment sought to establish the State's control over all schools. What is important is that at the time of Independence, there existed in Ceylon three categories of schools, namely Government Schools, Assisted Schools and Unaided Schools.

The Education (Amendment) Act No. 5 of 1951 and the Education Regulations, 1951

It is acknowledged by the author of the aforementioned chapter titled 'Unaided Schools' that, "The White Paper (Government Proposals for Education Reform in Ceylon) of 1950 brought all unaided schools, assisted schools and government schools under one system in the greater interests of the nation. The Education (Amendment) Act No. 5 of 1951 provided the necessary legislation to give effect to some of the changes envisaged in the White Paper."

The Education (Amendment) Act No. 5 of 1951 contained two important provisions with regard to Unaided Schools. The first was Section 42A(1), which stipulated that "No person shall, on or after the 1st day of June, 1951, maintain any unaided school unless the principal or other person for the time being in control of the school has notified to the Director in writing all such particulars relating to the school as the Director may, by notice published in the Gazette, require to be furnished to him in respect of unaided schools."

The second was Section 43A(1), which was amended by the inclusion of a new paragraph (e) that enabled the Director to issue an Order where, "the education and training at the school does not accord effectively with the national interest or with the general educational policy of the Government, including the policy regarding the medium of instruction in schools." These two amendments further strengthened State control over Unaided Schools.

Regulation 2 of the Education Regulations, 1951 required the proprietor of any school who required assistance from the State to make an election in that regard, thus making such school an Assisted School.

Regulations 4 and 5(1) of the said Regulations contained provisions relating to the medium of instruction, which may be summarised as follows:

(a) Where there are not less than 15 Sinhalese or Tamil pupils in all the classes of any primary school, instruction shall be given to all such Sinhalese pupils or Tamil pupils, as the case may be, through the medium of the Sinhalese or Tamil language;

(b) Where the parents of at least 15 Muslim pupils in any primary school who are neither Sinhalese nor Tamil requests that instruction shall be given to each of those pupils in Sinhalese, English or Tamil, instruction shall be so given to all these pupils through the medium of the specified language;

(c) In the case of every pupil in any primary school to whom instruction is given in Sinhalese or Tamil, English shall be taught to such pupil as a compulsory second language from Standard Three upwards;

(d) Where a student receives his instruction in English, Sinhalese or Tamil shall be a compulsory second language from Standard Three upwards;

(e) Every pupil in a secondary school, which, on 31st March 1951 was registered for the purposes of the said Regulations as a Sinhalese School shall be given instruction through the medium of the Sinhala language. There was similar provision with regard to Tamil Schools;

(f) The Minister however had the power to authorise or direct that instruction in any subject specified by him be given in any specified class of any such school through the medium of the English language, if the Minister was satisfied having regard to all the circumstances, that the use of the appropriate national language is not practicable;

(g) There shall be provided in every secondary school, a compulsory course in English complying with such minimum requirements as may be prescribed by the Director.

While the said Regulations therefore provided for all three languages to be the medium of instruction in the circumstances set out in the said Regulations, I shall refer to in detail later in this judgment to the provisions of Regulation 5(2) and (3) of the said Regulations where the Minister could change the medium of instruction in schools registered as English schools to one of the national languages, and the direction made by the Minister in that regard in 1963 [R2].

The Respondents have annexed to the petition a document marked X2 said to be based on a book titled, 'History of Education in Ceylon' by K.H.M. Sumathipala, which briefly sets out the evolution of English as a medium of instruction. It is claimed in X2 that when Sinhala was declared as the Official language by the Official Languages Act, No. 33 of 1956, the medium of instruction in education, even in schools where English was the medium of instruction was changed and all subjects were taught in Sinhala. The said Act however does not contain any provision with regard to a change in the medium of instruction in schools and the Respondents have not submitted any material to explain the manner in which the change in the medium of instruction was implemented.

Assisted Schools and Training Colleges (Special Provisions) Act, No. 5 of 1960

The next significant milestone in the education sector of this Country took place in 1960, when the Government of that time introduced the Assisted Schools and Training Colleges (Special Provisions) Act, No. 5 of 1960 [1960 Act]. The developments that led to the introduction of the 1960 Act are explained in the aforementioned chapter titled, 'Full State Responsibility for Education' in the following manner:

> "In the 1950s, the education policy of the State came to be criticised for making financial provision for a system of denominational schools which was controlled by non-government, sectarian agencies. The demand for full State control of education had gathered the force of a widespread social movement. To bring about a just distribution of educational opportunities it was demanded that all denominational schools be taken under direct State control. Whilst this controversy raged on, public opinion in favour of the State assuming full responsibility for education gathered greater and greater momentum. Responding to this widespread public agitation, the State passed legislation to take over all Assisted Schools and Training Colleges. The State in agreeing to take over active administration of all Assisted schools brought to a close a trend towards full State control of education which had been latently developing within its own policy, simultaneous with the increase in the State's financial obligation for education."

While the said Act defined 'Assisted School' to mean, "any school or training college to which aid is contributed from State funds or was contributed from such State funds on July 21, 1960", Section 3(1) of the 1960 Act provided that, "The Minister may, by Order published in the Gazette, declare that, with effect from such dates as shall be specified in the Order, the Director shall be the Manager of every Assisted School to which this Act applies."

In terms of Section 5(1), "The proprietor of any Assisted school (not being an Assisted training college) which is a Grade I or Grade II school may, at any time before the date specified in the Order made and published under section 3, elect to administer such school as an unaided school and if, before that date, he serves a written notice on the Director to the effect that he has made such an election and specifying the date of such election (such date being a date earlier than the date specified in the Order) the provisions of the proviso to the said section 3 shall apply in the case of such school with effect from the date of such election." [emphasis added]

The proviso to Section 3(1) reads as follows:

> "… where the proprietor of any Assisted school to which this Act applies (not being an Assisted training college) has, at any time before the date specified in such Order, served under Section 5, a written notice on the Director under this Act to the effect that he has from the date specified in the notice elected to carry on the administration of such school as an unaided school, such Order shall, with effect from the date so specified in the notice, cease to apply to such school."

Section 6 of the Act provided as follows:

> "The proprietor of any school which, by virtue of an election made under Section 5, is an unaided school –
> (a) shall educate and train the pupils in such school in accordance with the general educational policy of the Government*; …*
> (g) shall comply with the provisions of any written law applicable to such school and matters relating to education;" [emphasis added]

With the introduction of the 1960 Act, the number of Unaided Schools that existed at that time came down as a result of several Unaided Schools opting to become and thereafter be classified as Assisted Schools. What continued thereafter as Unaided Schools were those schools that levied fees from their students and therefore had the financial capacity to continue without funding of any form from the State.

The following excerpts from the aforementioned Chapter titled 'Unaided Schools' places in perspective the position of Unaided Schools:

> "The story of Unaided Schools in Ceylon is the story of a 'rise and decline,' the decline having accompanied a rise in the State control of schools in the face of a growing demand for a comprehensive national system of education. Today the Unaided Schools number a mere 92, and have a pupil enrolment of less than one per cent of the school-going population. In their heyday, they … numbered over 3000.
>
> The majority of today's Unaided Schools have had a long and illustrious history going back to early British times when the Missionary school system emerged as a distinctive feature of education in Ceylon, especially at a time when direct governmental activity in the sphere of education was meagre or non-existent… Most of the schools which remain today as Unaided Schools were associated with one religious denomination or another and bore a resemblance to the public schools of England."

Establishment of the National Education Commission

I must at this stage refer to the National Education Commission, which was established in terms of the National Education Commission Act, No. 19 of 1991, to make recommendations on education policy in all its aspects to the President.

Section 2(1) of the Act provides that the President, subject to the provisions of the Constitution, may, declare from time to time the National Education Policy which shall be conformed to by all authorities and institutions responsible for education in all its aspects. As provided in Section 2(2), the National Education Policy includes the medium of instruction. Although the National Education Policy is yet to be declared, the Commission has made certain recommendations with regard to bilingual education in its National Education Policy Framework (2020 – 2030) [2022], to which I shall refer to later in this judgment.

The gradual decline in the use of English as a medium of instruction and its reintroduction

It is common knowledge that the waves of nationalism, cultural revivalism and nationalisation that swept across newly independent Asian and African countries in the 1950's and 1960's including Sri Lanka contributed to English as a medium of instruction being gradually done away with in our Country in favour of instruction in Sinhalese and Tamil. Although the 1960 Act did not contain any provisions relating to the medium of instruction, it is widely acknowledged that the said Act contributed to the above change.

The use of English as a medium of instruction in our education system and its gradual decline have been summarised in the following paragraph from the National Education Policy Framework (2020-2030) prepared by the National Education Commission [page 139]:

> "Since the inception of the island-wide school system in Sri Lanka, which evolved under British colonial rule, the medium of instruction has been Sinhala or Tamil in most schools except in the urban elite schools. The first effort to formulate a policy on medium of instruction was attempted in 1943, and the report of the committee, which is widely known as "Kannangara Report" declared that the "mother tongue is the natural medium of education and the genius of a national finds full expression only through its own language and literature". There were two other historical events in the mid-twentieth century that influenced the policy on the medium of instruction in schools. Firstly, the Free Education Act of 1947 and secondly bringing the whole education system under government control in the 1960s. Concurrently, with the increase in demand to switch the medium of instruction to the national languages, Sinhala or Tamil, the government in the 1970s decided to change the medium of instruction gradually by stopping the English medium in the Grade I class from 1971 and eliminating it class by class in succession. By 1983, there were no English medium classes in government or private schools."

Even though English was taught as a second language in urban and suburban schools, the National Education Commission, referring to the removal of English as a medium of instruction has acknowledged that "this policy proved to be a setback for the individuals concerned and society. The government, educators, and the public began to notice the vacuum created by the neglect of teaching in the English medium, and the promotion of the English medium in the last decade is a consequence of this change of perception."

To cater to this need of having English as a medium of instruction, we saw the emergence of international schools in the early 1980's, with the National Education Commission identifying the following as the categories of international schools that exist today*:*

(i) schools following an international curriculum;
(ii) schools offering both international and local curricula; and
(iii) schools offering local curriculum only.

In its judgment, the Court of Appeal has referred to a speech made in 2011 by Professor Rajiva Wijesinha, one time Member of Parliament and Senior Professor of English at the University of Sabaragamuwa, where he has stated as follows:

> "English is no longer just the language of the British, a legacy we could do without. Rather it is the principal international language, one of increasing opportunities all over the world. The comparative advantage we had with regard to English has been sacrificed at the altar of a divisive linguistic nationalism, which I fear has contributed to our nation being deprived of a tool that could have helped us immeasurable. While the privileged continued to benefit from their possession of this tool, the vast majority of our people, of all communities, had no access to it. We owe it to them and to the nation as a whole to take all possible steps, in the interests of equity as well as national prosperity, to set right this sad situation."

The Court of Appeal has also made the following extremely important observation with which I wholeheartedly agree, on the importance of English for every student of this Country:

> "Competence in English is essential for personal success in today's globalized world. English should not be the language of the urban elite to downgrade otherwise talented rural youth. In my view, it is hypocrisy to make it compulsory to the children of under-privileged to study in Sinhala or Tamil Medium, while making it possible for the children of the elite and affluent to study in English Medium at International Schools or overseas, may be, to keep the distance."

Circulars relating to English as a medium of instruction and bilingual education

Circular No. 5 of 2001 dated 22nd February 2001 issued by the Ministry of Education [P7A] saw the re-introduction of English as a medium of instruction in Government schools, although limited to the Advanced Level Science Stream. The said Circular clearly highlights that globalisation and rapid changes in the field of Information Technology have led to much significance being placed on English, and that it is timely that those entering universities acquire expertise in English.

According to P7A, a survey carried out by the Ministry of Education had revealed that 26% of those students intending to follow Science subjects at the Advanced Level examination were keen to pursue the said subjects in English and that 50% of the graduates were keen to teach in English. Thus, the Government had decided to implement as a pilot project, the teaching of five subjects [Bio-science, Physics, Chemistry, Applied Maths and Zoology] in the English medium for Advanced Level Students.

In May 2002, the Ministry of Education issued a further Circular [P7B] by which it introduced bilingual education. P7B accordingly permitted the teaching of three subjects at Grade 6 [Maths, Social Studies and Health & Physical studies] and four subjects from Grades 7 – 11 [Maths, Social Studies & History, Health & Physical Studies and Science] in the English medium, subject to the availability of teachers in the English medium.

Although approval had been granted for bilingual education from Grades 6 - 11, the Ministry of Education had noticed that some schools had commenced teaching in the English medium even for lower grades, which prompted the Ministry of Education to inform all schools, by its letter dated 5th May 2003 [P7C] that, "නමුත් ඉංග්‍රීසි මාධ්‍යයෙන් ඉගැන්වීම ප්‍රතිපත්තියක් වශයෙන් පිලිගෙන නැත. එබැවින් ප්‍රාථමික පන්තිවල ඉංග්‍රීසි මාධ්‍යයෙන් ඉගැන්වීම නොකළ යුතුය."

By Circular No. 2008/12 dated 21st April 2008 [P7], the Ministry of Education issued the following directions to all schools relating to bilingual education.

"4.2 ඉංග්‍රීසි භාෂාවේ අවශ්‍යතාවය හා වැදගත්කම සැලකිල්ලට ගෙන 2002 වර්ෂයේ සිට 6 – 11 ශ්‍රේණි සඳහා සමහර විෂයයන් ඉංග්‍රීසි මාධ්‍යයෙන් ඉගැන්වීමට ඒ සඳහා අවශ්‍ය පහසුකම් පවතින පාසල්වලට අවසර දෙන ලදි.

The Appellants have not explained the rationale for paragraphs 4.6 and 4.8, which in effect encourages English as the medium of instruction for all subjects that a student must sit for at the Ordinary Level examination.

Further instructions with regard to bilingual education in Grades 6-11 had been issued by Circular No. 27/2010, where it has been reiterated that bilingual education should only be implemented from Grade 6 upwards. Thus, the position of the Ministry of Education with regard to students from Grades 6 – 11 was that while such students can be taught in Sinhala/Tamil and English [bilingual], at least Religion and History must be taught in Sinhala/Tamil.

Horana Asoka College

It is in the above background that I shall now consider the establishment of the Horana Asoka College [the School]. According to the 1st – 4th Respondents, in 1990, Ven. Kahatapitiye Rahula Nayake Thero had commenced a private school by the name of Asoka College, and located the said School within the premises of the Horana Raja Maha Viharaya. It is admitted by the Respondents that from its inception, other than the subject of Sinhala, all other subjects including Buddhism, Art and History have been taught in the said School in the English medium from Grade 1 upwards.

The Respondents have not produced any documents to establish that the said Ven. Thero had obtained the prior approval of the Ministry of Education, as required by Section 49(1) of the Education Ordinance, for the establishment and/or operation of the said School. It is in fact conceded by the Respondents that by 1990, the Government was no longer granting approval for the registration of a school as a private school. Thus, the establishment of the said school in 1990 was not in terms of the law. In spite of not being registered, the Respondents state that not only were the students of the said school permitted to sit for the examinations conducted by the Department of Examinations, including the Grade V scholarship examination, and to take part in several Zonal and District competitions conducted by the Department of Education, but they were also recipients of free school books, uniforms etc.

By letter dated 6th December 2007 [P2], the Zonal Director of Education had informed the Principal of the said School that as the said school was not a private school approved by the Government, its students would not be permitted to sit the Grade V scholarship examination, nor would they be entitled to free text books and uniforms. To overcome the aforementioned situation, the 5th Respondent – Respondent who by then was the Ven. Nayake Thero of the Raja Maha Viharaya had purchased a school situated in Dehiwela by the name of Marshall Preparatory School. While it is not in dispute, (a) that Marshall Preparatory School had been registered in the latter part of the Nineteenth century, (b) that it had been an English medium private school at some point of its existence, and (c) was a 'Government Approved Unaided Private School', it is admitted by the Respondents that by 2007, Marshall Preparatory School was no longer functioning as a school, although its registration had not been cancelled by the Ministry of Education.

The 5th Respondent had thereafter sought the approval of the Ministry of Education to locate the said Marshall Preparatory School in the premises of the Horana Raja Maha Viharaya. In response to the said request, the Ministry of Education, by letter dated 12th February 2008 [P4] had informed the 5th Respondent that the re-location of Marshall Preparatory School could be allowed subject inter alia to the condition that "අධ්‍යාපන අමාත්‍යාංශයේ ප්‍රතිපත්ති වලට අනුකූලව අනුමත විෂය මාලාව මෙම පාසලේ ක්‍රියාත්මක කිරීම කළ යුතු අතර එම ප්‍රතිපත්තින් සම්බන්ධව අධ්‍යාපන අමාත්‍යාංශය විසින් නිකුත් කරනු ලබන චක්‍රලේඛ/උපදෙස් පිළිපැදීමට ඔබ බැඳි සිටිනු ඇත."

The very next day, a further request had been made to change the name of Marshall Preparatory School to Horana Asoka College. By letter dated 26th February 2008 [P5], the approval of the Ministry of Education had accordingly been granted to the said request. It is through the aforementioned mechanism of purchasing Marshall Preparatory School and thereafter changing its name to Horana Asoka College that the said School was able to function in terms of the law. It is perhaps important to reiterate that pursuant to the approval that has been granted by P4 and P5, the school that is now being carried out at the said Raja Maha Viharaya is Marshall Preparatory School with its name having been changed to Horana Asoka College.

Having carried out an inspection and an on-site examination of the said School, the Ministry of Education, by its letter dated 11th August 2015 [P10] had informed the Manager of the said School inter alia of the following:

> "ප්‍රාථමික අධ්‍යාපනය ඉංග්‍රීසි මාධ්‍යයෙන් ලබා දීම රජයේ අධ්‍යාපන ප්‍රතිපත්තිවලට පටහැනි බැවින්, වහාම ක්‍රියාත්මක වන පරිදි 1 ශ්‍රේණියේ සිට 5 ශ්‍රේණිය දක්වා ඉගෙනුම - ඉගැන්වීම් කටයුතු රජයේ අධ්‍යාපන ප්‍රතිපත්තිවලට අනුකූලව දරුවන්ගේ මව් භාෂාවෙන් (සිංහල/දෙමළ) සිදු කිරීම, 6 ශ්‍රේණියේ සිට 11 ශ්‍රේණිය දක්වා ද ඉගෙනුම් - ඉගැන්වීම් කටයුතු දරුවන්ගේ මව් භාෂාවෙන් (සිංහල/දෙමළ)

By his reply to P10 dated 23rd September 2015 [P13], the Principal of the School, while admitting that History, Buddhism and Art are being taught in English, agreed to comply with the circulars of the Ministry of Education, and sought permission to continue to teach the said subjects in English to those students who had already enrolled at Grade 6 or above.

P10 had been followed with the following letter dated 21st August 2015 [P11] sent by the Ministry of Education to the Commissioner General of Examinations, with copy to the Principal of Horana Asoka College, in respect of students who were scheduled to sit for the Ordinary Level examinations in 2015:

Challenge to P12

In November 2015, the parents of three children studying in Grade 10 of the said School and who were due to sit for the General Certificate of Education (Ordinary Level) examination in December 2016 had filed Fundamental Rights Application No. 442/2015 alleging that the decision contained in P12 would not only interrupt the education of their children but that it would cause great inconvenience to their children as they would have to sit the subjects of Buddhism, History and Art in Sinhala and is therefore violative of their fundamental rights guaranteed by Article 12(1). The said case had however been settled with the 1st Appellant agreeing to permit the children of the said petitioners to offer the said subjects at the 2016 examination in the English medium. This would appear to indicate that permitting students to sit for the said subjects in the English medium was a matter of discretion and not mandated by any Government policy.

On 13th May 2016, the Respondents whose children were studying in various grades at the said School filed the aforementioned Writ application seeking a Writ of Certiorari to quash P12, and a Writ of Prohibition preventing the 1st Appellant from taking any steps pursuant to P12.

The arguments of the Respondents before the Court of Appeal were twofold.

The first was that the Government Policy with regard to the medium of instruction is embodied in the Education Ordinance and in the Regulations made thereunder in terms of which English medium education is permissible. The second was that there is no national education policy in terms of Section 2(1) and 2(3) of the National Education Commission Act No. 19 of 1991 which makes bilingual education or education in the mother tongue compulsory, or precludes English as a medium of instruction.

As the Court of Appeal did not address the first of the above arguments of the Respondents, I shall address this at the outset.

Does the Ordinance provide for English as the medium of instruction?

The Respondents are correct when they state that English as the medium of instruction is permissible under the Ordinance. This is reflected in Regulation 5(2) of the Education Regulations, 1951, which reads as follows:

> "Subject to the provisions of paragraph (3) of this Regulation, every pupil in a secondary school, which, on March 31, 1951, was registered for the purposes of the Code as an English school shall for the time being be given instruction through the medium of the English language." [emphasis added]

Regulation 5(3) reads as follows:

> "The Minister may from time to time, if satisfied having regard to all the circumstances that the use of the appropriate national language is practicable, direct that in any specified class in a secondary school referred to in paragraph (2) of this Regulation, instruction in any specified subject shall be given through the appropriate national language to Sinhalese or Tamil pupils. The Minister shall in every such direction specify the date, not being earlier than twelve months after the date on which the direction is given from and after which the direction shall be operative."

The cumulative effect of the above two Regulations is that while English can be the medium of instruction in schools registered as English schools, the Minister may instruct that any specified subject be taught through the appropriate national language to Sinhalese or Tamil students.

The 1st Appellant has produced marked R2 the Direction made under Regulation 5(3) by the then Minister of Education and Cultural Affairs on 5th November 1963, published in the Ceylon Government Gazette No. 13,818 of 14th November, 1963 which reads as follows:

> "In the exercise of the powers vested in me by Regulation 5(3) of the Education Regulations, 1951, I, Idampitiya Rallage Punchi Banda Gunatilleke Kalugalla, Minister of Education and Cultural Affairs, being satisfied having regard to all the circumstances that the use of the Sinhala or Tamil Language as a medium of instruction is practicable in the General Certificate of Education (Ordinary Level) Classes and the General Certificate of Education (Advanced Level) Classes of any school referred to in paragraph 2 of that Regulation (where instruction has hitherto been given through the medium of the English language) do hereby –
> (1) direct that the medium of instruction in all subjects, other than the subjects specified in the Schedule hereto, in the General Certificate of Education (Ordinary Level) Classes and in the General Certificate of Education (Advanced Level) Classes in any such school shall be Sinhala for Sinhalese and Tamil or Sinhala for Tamil pupils; and further,
>
> (2) specify that this direction shall be operative –
>
> (a) from and after 1.1.1965 in all the General Certificate of Education (Ordinary Level) Classes in any such school;
>

(c) from and after 1.1.1967 in all the General Certificate of Education (Advanced Level) Classes in any such school.

Thus, even assuming that Marshall Preparatory School had been registered as an English School, the argument of the Respondents that English medium education is permissible under the Ordinance is subject to an important limitation embodied in Regulation 5(3), which permits the Minister to specify that even in English schools, one or more subjects be taught in Sinhalese or Tamil. The Minister has made such a directive [R2] and in the absence of any other material placed by either of the parties, it appears to me that it is pursuant to this directive that English ceased to be the medium of instruction and was replaced by either Sinhalese or Tamil in all schools, whether they be Government, Assisted or Unaided. Thus, to my mind, the first argument of the Respondents cannot be sustained, even though the scope of R2 has been diminished by the aforementioned Circulars issued in 2001, and thereafter.

The reasoning of the Court of Appeal

The Court of Appeal took the view that although Section 6 of the 1960 Act requires an Unaided School to educate pupils in accordance with the general educational policy of the Government, and comply with the provisions of any written law applicable to such school and matters relating to education, Section 6 of the 1960 Act which forms the basis for P12:

(a) has no application to all Unaided Schools;

(b) applies only to former Assisted Schools but which later became an Unaided School by virtue of an election made under Section 5 of the 1960 Act;

(c) has no application to Asoka College as its predecessor [Marshall Preparatory School] did not become an Unaided School by virtue of an election made under Section 5 of the 1960 Act.

In other words, the position of the Court of Appeal was that Marshall Preparatory School was an Unaided School prior to the 1960 Act, and hence did not have to make an election under Section 5, with the consequence that the said School was not required to comply with a direction given under Section 6 to educate its pupils in accordance with the general educational policy of the Government. It is on this basis that the Court of Appeal concluded that the decision contained in P12 is based on a wrong premise and is therefore bad in law, and proceeded to issue the Writ of Certiorari quashing P12, and the Writ of Prohibition.

The Court of Appeal thereafter went on to consider the second argument of the Respondents that there is no Government policy,

(a) with regard to the medium of instruction, or

(b) that prohibits English as a medium of instruction.

Having done so, the Court of Appeal stated that the Government had failed to declare its National Educational Policy including its policy with regard to the medium of instruction in spite of legislation enacted in 1991 requiring it to do so and that the Circulars issued by the Ministry of Education from time to time displays a clear lack of vision on the part of the Government in that regard. The Court of Appeal in fact went on to state that while the Ministry of Education was attempting to impose restrictions on schools registered with it, entities registered under the Companies Act or as Board of Investment projects as international schools have been operating in a vacuum with no regulation, management or control by the Ministry of Education.

Questions of law

It is against this judgment of the Court of Appeal that special leave to appeal was granted on the following questions of law:

(1) Did the Court of Appeal err in law, by failing to appreciate that it is upon election within the limited time period given under Section 5 of the Assisted Schools and Training Colleges Act that a school would be categorised and operate as a 'Government Approved Unaided Private School'?

(2) In view of the predecessor to the subject school, Marshall Preparatory School admittedly operating as a 'Government Approved Unaided Private School' under the above Assisted Schools and Training Colleges Act, did the Court of Appeal err in law by failing to appreciate that the predecessor school [Marshall Preparatory School] had already elected under Section 5 of the Assisted Schools and Training Colleges Act to be categorised as a 'Government Approved Unaided Private School'?

(3) Despite the Court of Appeal acknowledging in the judgment dated 10th June 2019 that the subject school is a 'Government Approved Unaided Private School', did it err in law by failing to appreciate that therefore, the said school is bound to comply with the general education policy of the Government, and are thereby bound to educate and train students accordingly?

(4) Does the conclusion of the Court of Appeal that there was an error on the face of the record in the impugned order marked P12 constitute and/or amount to an error of law?

Should Asoka College comply with the education policy of the Government?

I have already stated that the critical issue that needs to be determined in this appeal is whether the said School is required to comply with the general education policy of the Government, and more particularly with the policy of the Government with regard to the medium of instruction. This issue is reflected in the third question of law raised by the Appellants. In my view, the other three questions of law are not directly relevant to a proper determination of this appeal, and shall not be considered.

While it is admitted by both parties that Marshall Preparatory School functioned as a Government approved unaided private School from the time of the 1960 Act, there is no material to demonstrate the status of Marshall Preparatory School as at the time the 1960 Act was introduced – i.e., was it already an Unaided School or was it an Assisted School to which the 1960 Act applied and where an election had been made in terms of Section 5 of the 1960 Act? The Court of Appeal proceeded on the basis that Marshall Preparatory School was a Government approved unaided private School prior to 1960, and for that reason the 1960 Act did not apply to it. Regretfully, none of the parties have submitted any material to support or contradict such a finding.

If Marshall Preparatory School became a Government Approved Unaided Private School under the 1960 Act, then in terms of Section 6 of that Act, it was under a statutory duty to educate and train its pupils in accordance with the general educational policy of the Government. If, on the other hand, Marshall Preparatory School was a Government approved unaided private School prior to 1960 and the 1960 Act had no application, the provisions of the Education Ordinance would still be applicable to Marshall Preparatory School, and thereby to Asoka College.

Accordingly, in terms of Section 43A(1) of the Ordinance,

(a) the Ministry of Education has the power to issue directions to a school that does not accord effectively with the general educational policy of the Government, including the policy regarding the medium of instruction;

(b) Asoka College would have to comply with an Order that it acts in accordance with the general educational policy of the Government, including the policy regarding the medium of instruction in schools.

Thus, the issue is not whether Marshall Preparatory School had made an election as provided by Section 5(1) of the 1960 Act, or whether it was an Unaided School at the time the said Act was introduced, as either way, Marshall Preparatory School, and now Horana Asoka College, is required to comply with the general educational policy of the Government.

The fact that in issuing P12, the wrong statutory provision has been invoked does not make such a decision illegal or invalid, as long as the decision maker has the power to do what he is seeking to do. This position was emphasised in L.C.H Peiris v Commissioner of Inland Revenue [65 NLR 457] where it was held by Sansoni, J (as he then was) that:

> "It is well-settled that an exercise of a power will be referable to a jurisdiction which confers validity upon it and not to a jurisdiction under which it will be nugatory. This principle has been applied even to cases where a Statute which confers no power has been quoted as authority for a particular act, and there was in force another Statute which conferred that power."

In Kumaranatunga v Samarasinghe and Others [(1983) 2 Sri LR 63 at 73], having cited Peiris with approval, Soza, J went onto state as follows:

> "Bindra in his work on the Interpretation of Statutes states the principle as follows at p. 153:
>
> "It is a well-settled principle of interpretation that as long as an authority has power to do a thing, it does not matter if it purports to do it by reference to a wrong provision of law."
>
> Bindra is here stating the principle as it was enunciated by Nain J. in the case of Deviprasad Khandelwas & Sons v. Union of India.
> "It is a well-settled principle of interpretation that as long as an authority has the power to do a thing, it does not matter if he purports to do it by reference to a wrong Provision of law. The order made can always be justified by reference to the correct provision of law empowering the authority making the order to make such order."

Peiris has also been followed in K.P.K.L.P. Maduwanthi v S.M.G.K. Perera, District Secretary, Matale and Others [SC (FR) Application No. 23/2021; SC Minutes of 18th November 2022] where Janak De Silva, J has cited the above passage with approval.

I am therefore of the view that it was competent for the Ministry of Education to issue directions to the said School to comply with Government Policy and therefore, P12 is not illegal, even if the 1960 Act does not apply to the said School.

Is the decision in P12 nonetheless illegal?

However, the question of the illegality of P12 is also contingent upon whether it was issued in pursuance of express Government Policy. If an administrative authority is empowered to act only upon the existence of certain conditions, but proceeds to exercise its power despite such conditions being absent, it would be acting ultra vires. Consequently, its actions would be illegal.

The Court of Appeal has noted that the National Education Policy of the Government is to be understood on assumptions in bits and pieces of circulars and directions issued by the Ministry of Education. Indeed, the material placed before us needs to be pieced together like a jigsaw, in order to determine the precise policy position of the Government with regard to bilingual education in Government, Assisted and Unaided Schools. Even then, there are several gaping holes, including the disparity in the manner in which English as a medium of instruction is being implemented, as noted by the Court of Appeal. This is amply demonstrated by the fact that a Sri Lankan student who is admitted to an international school could study all subjects in the English medium whereas a Sri Lankan student studying in a Government, Assisted or Unaided School can only take five of the eight subjects in the English medium, although both categories of students may sit for the same examination conducted by the Department of Examinations.

Indeed, no material has been placed before us to indicate as to why students are permitted to sit for examinations in English even though the purported Government Policy was that those subjects must be taught in the vernacular. The necessary implication of permitting some students to sit for those specified subjects in English is that the Government Policy does not prohibit it.

The fact that there is no clear Government policy on bilingual education is clearly borne out by three Reports that have been published since 2014.

In 2014, the National Education Commission had commissioned ten research studies in order to identify the important policy issues in the General Education System in Sri Lanka. In its report titled "Study on Medium of Instruction, National and International Languages in General Education in Sri Lanka", the Committee,

(a) having referred to the aforementioned Circulars by which the medium of instruction either as bilingual or in English have been implemented, have opined that, "there is no clear policy regarding bilingual education in the Sri Lankan school system at present, irrespective of the practices of bilingual education itself under the common term, 'English medium education'",

(b) have made many recommendations that should be considered in formulating the policy regarding bilingual education.

In 2016, the then Minister of Education had appointed a National Committee to formulate a new Education Act for general education, under the chairmanship of Dr. G.B. Gunewardena. The following two important observations that have been made by the said Committee in its Final Report reflects the concerns that the Court of Appeal had with regard to the lack of a coherent policy with regard to the medium of instruction.

The first is that "Education in Sri Lanka appears to have moved on without the guidance of a holistic and coherently enunciated long term educational policy for the last few decades and the resultant lack of direction has brought on uncertainty in the minds of people." The second is that "the Education Ordinance of 1939 which is 69 years old is outdated and obsolete. The other Acts passed by Parliament need revision and amendment to meet the demands of effective implementation of reforms and changes introduced to the system ….".

In the National Education Policy Framework (2020 - 2030) published by the National Education Commission, under the title "Absence of a sound bilingual education policy and discrepancies in implementing the MoE directives on bilingual education in schools", the National Education Commission has stated as follows [page 141]:

> "State and State-assisted schools have no uniformity in the selection of students and practice of bilingual education. Many schools have overlooked the directives of the MoE and followed their own implementation procedures. Although the MoE has recommended teaching only a few selected subjects in English from Grade six after the student has completed the primary education in the first language, some schools have introduced bimedium education from the primary school and some schools have adopted an all-English approach contravening the MoE guidelines. It appears that this situation has arisen mainly due to the absence of a policy that states clear instructions to all the schools on bilingual education." [emphasis added]

> "The NEC in liaison with relevant stakeholders shall undertake a comprehensive review of current practices of implementation of bilingual education and formulate a comprehensive policy and strategic framework on bilingual education and teaching of English as the second language*.*
> The MoE by taking into consideration of the policy and strategic framework that would be recommended by the NEC based on the proposed review, shall take steps to issue comprehensive circular instructions to promote bilingual education while taking steps to improve English language standards of school children in an equitable manner across all schools in all regions. The MoE should promote bilingualism throughout the country by using English as the medium of instruction in selected subjects such as mathematics, science, information technology in the secondary grades, year by year from Grade 6.

The MoE should continue the current practice of students of secondary grades having the option to; (a) study any subject in the English medium in the G.C.E. (O/L) and G.C.E. (A/L) grades subject to the availability of teachers, and (b) sit the G.C.E. (O/L) and G.C.E. (A/L) examinations in the medium of their choice." [emphasis added]

The position therefore is that Asoka College must comply with the general education policy of the Government and the Government policy on the medium of instruction. However, compliance with the Government policy on the medium of instruction is contingent upon the existence of such a Policy, which is sadly not in place, although a period of twenty years have lapsed since the issuance of the first Circular relating to bilingual education.

Conclusion

In the above circumstances:

(a) I am in agreement with the Court of Appeal that the decision contained in P12 cannot be enforced against the said School in the absence of a clear policy decision by the Government with regard to bilingual education that prohibits such teaching;

(b) I would therefore answer the third question of law as follows – Horana Asoka College must comply with the general education policy of the Government and the Government policy on the medium of instruction, and educate and train its students in accordance with such policy. However, in the absence of a Government policy specifically precluding English as a medium of instruction, the Ministry of Education is not empowered to implement the decision in P12.

The National Education Commission must fulfil its statutory responsibility and submit its recommendations on the policy that should be adopted by the Government with regard to the medium of instruction that should be followed from Grades 1 – 11 of all Government, Assisted and Unaided Schools. The 1st Appellant is therefore directed to communicate this decision to the National Education Commission.

Subject to the above finding that the Court of Appeal erred when it held that P12 is issued on a wrong premise and therefore bad in law, and the setting aside of the Order for costs, the judgment of the Court of Appeal is affirmed. I make no order with regard to the costs of this appeal.

The Petitioners to the instant application namely, Wickremasinghage Francis Kulasooriya and Devamuni Lakshman De Silva had sought special leave to appeal against the Judgment by the Court of Appeal in CA Writ Application 338/2011 dated 22.10.2018.

This Court after considering the material placed on behalf of all parties, decided to grant special leave to appeal on the questions of law referred to in paragraph 10 (a) and (c) of the petition dated 03.12.2018 which reads as follows;

10 (a) Did the Court of Appeal err in law in failing to appreciate that in view of the extraordinary circumstances, the Petitioners' application was a fit and proper case for the Court of Appeal to exercise its writ jurisdiction under Article 140 of the Constitution?

(c) Did the Court of Appeal err in law in failing to appreciate that the mere availability of an alternative remedy does not prevent the Court of Appeal from exercising Writ Jurisdiction under Article 140 of the Constitution?

As revealed before us the 1st Petitioner was a Sub-Inspector of Police and the 2nd Petitioner was a Police Constable serving at the Kirindiwela Police Station. According to the two Petitioners, while they were on mobile duty on 13.08.2010, at about 20.55 hours they were informed by the Kirindiwela Police Station that a person under the influence of liquor was behaving violently and causing a nuisance to the public close to the Pepiliyawala Junction within the Police area of Kirindiwela. The Petitioners who proceeded to the Pepiliyawala Junction in a single cab of Kirindiwela Police Station arrested one Amarasinghe Arachchige David Amarasinghe for his unruly behavior under the influence of liquor. When the cab proceeded towards Kirindiwela Police Station after getting him into the rear portion of the cab, the suspect jumped out of the moving cab and was lying on the road with bleeding injuries. With the assistance of the public, the injured were rushed to Radawana Hospital. The injured who was transferred to Gampaha Hospital and thereafter to National Hospital succumbed to his injuries in the early hours of 14th August 2010.

On the 14th itself, the Officer in Charge of the Police Station Kirindiwela had reported the facts before the learned Magistrate Pugoda by way of a 'B' Report. the Acting Magistrate before whom the 'B' Report was called, had made two orders, one was to the J.M.O Colombo to hold the Post Mortem Examination and the other was a directive for the Police Officers who were on mobile duty on the 13th to be present before the Magistrate for inquest proceeding.

The inquest proceedings were commenced on 18.08.2010 before Magistrate Pugoda and the evidence of several witnesses was recorded during the inquest proceedings. Some of the witnesses who testified before the Magistrate gave versions different from what was reported to the Magistrate in the 'B' Report. After recording the evidence of several witnesses, the Magistrate made an order remanding the two Police Officers who were engaged in the arrest of the deceased person and discharged the Police Driver who drove the police cab at the time the deceased was said to have jumped out from the police cab.

As revealed before us, on behalf of the two Police Officers (the two Petitioners before this Court) an application was made for bail before the Magistrate on 23.08.2010 but the said application was refused by the Magistrate as the investigations were incomplete at that time. The Revision Application filed against the Order of the Magistrate too was rejected by the High Court Judge of Gampaha on 24.11.2010. Magistrate Pugoda by order dated 28.04.2011 decided to commence a non-Summary proceeding for the death of Amarasinghe Arachchige David Amarasinghe.

Whilst the non-summary proceedings were pending before the Magistrate's Court of Pugoda, a fresh bail application was filed on behalf of the two suspects before the High Court of Gampaha but the said application too was rejected by the High Court on 25.02.2011 despite Hon. Attorney General informing Court that there is no objection for granting bail.

In the meantime, the Hon. Attorney General had called for the original case record acting under Section 398 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act No. 15 of 1979 (as amended).

As submitted before us, the Hon. Attorney General After considering the material available to him at that time, formed an opinion that the said material was insufficient to establish a prima-facia case against the two accused, (the two Petitioner-Petitioners before this Court) and has sent the following instruction to the Officer in Charge of Police Station Kirindiwela by letter dated 28.02.2011 with a copy to the Magistrate Pugoda.

"පූගොඩ මහේස්ත්‍රාත් අධිකරණයෘ - නඩු අංක 678/10

2. පොෘකොෘ. 47797 දේවමුණි ලක්ෂ්මන් සිල්වා"

During the argument before us, the learned Additional Solicitor General who represented the Hon. Attorney General took up the position that the Hon. Attorney General had made the above order acting under section 398 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act No. 15 of 1979 (as amended) and therefore the learned Magistrate was bound to act on the said directive.

However as submitted by the Petitioners, the learned Magistrate Pugoda had refused to act on the above instructions, when the Officer in Charge of Kirindiwela Police Station had reported the above position before the Magistrate on 03.03.2011. On a directive made by the Magistrate Pugoda, an Officer from the Attorney General's Department was present before the Magistrate's Court of Pugoda on 31.03.2011 and explained the reasons and the legality of the directive dated 28.02.2011 but the Magistrate had refused to act on the said directive. By his order dated 28.04.2011, he ordered the non-summary inquiry to proceed against the two Petitioner-Petitioners.

As admitted by all parties before us the said order of the learned Magistrate was not a final order but was amenable to the revisionary jurisdiction of the High Court. However, as it appears from the material before us, neither the aggrieved party nor the Hon. Attorney General filed papers before the High Court in order to revise the order of the Magistrate dated 28.04.2011.

However, the two Petitioners invoke the writ jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal and filed a Writ Application seeking the following relief,

a) A Writ of Certiorari to quash the proceedings in case No. NS/577 in the Magistrate's Court of Pugoda;
b) A Writ of Certiorari to quash the order of the 3rd Respondent refusing to discharge the Petitioners in Case No. NS/577 in the Magistrate's Court of Pugoda;
c) A Writ of Prohibition prohibiting the 3rd Respondent from refusing to discharge the Petitioners in Case No. NS/577 in the Magistrate's Court of Pugoda;
d) A Writ of Mandamus directing the 3rd Respondent to discharge the Petitioners from the proceedings in Case No. NS/577 in the Magistrate's Court of Pugoda;

When the said matter was argued before the Court of Appeal, parties argued the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal to issue orders in the nature of writs against an order of the courts of first instance and whether the Magistrate is bound to act on the directive issued by the Attorney General.

However, as a preliminary matter Court decided to consider, whether the Court should use its discretion and issue orders in the nature of writs when the Petitioners had failed to make use of the alternative remedies available to them. It was submitted that in the instant case, the Petitioners had failed to make use of revisionary jurisdiction under Article 138 of the Constitution before invoking writ jurisdiction under Article 140 of the Constitution.

Article 138 (1) The Court of Appeal shall have and exercise subject to the provisions of the Constitution or of any law, an appellate jurisdiction for the correction of all errors in fact or in the law which shall be [committed by the High Court, in the exercise of its appellate or original jurisdiction or by any Court of First Instance], tribunal or other institution and sole and exclusive cognizance, by way of appeal, revision, and restitutio in integrum, of all causes, suits, actions, prosecutions, matters, and things [of which such High Court, Court of First Instance] tribunal or other institution any have taken cognizance;

Provided that no judgment, decree, or order of any Court shall be reversed or varied on account of any error, defect, or irregularity, which has not prejudiced the substantial rights of the parties or occasioned a failure of justice.

(2) The Court of Appeal shall also have and exercise all such powers and jurisdiction, appellate and original, as Parliament may by law vest or ordain.

Article 140 Subject to the provisions of the Constitution, the Court of Appeal shall have full power and authority to inspect and examine the records of any Court of First Instance or tribunal or other institution and grant and issue, according to law, orders in the nature of writs of certiorari, prohibition, procedendo, mandamus and quo warranto against the judge of any Court of First Instance or tribunal or other institution or any other person

The plain reading of any of the above constitutional provisions does not explain the characteristics of each remedy but our Courts have decided/explained the parameters within which these remedies will be available to an aggrieved party.

The revisionary jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal is further explained under Article 145 of the Constitution as follows;

Article 145 The Court of Appeal may ex mere motu or on any application made, call for, inspect and examine any record of any Court of First Instance and in the exercise of its revisionary powers may make any order thereon as the interests of justice may require.

When considering the above two provisions, it appears that the revisional power of the Court is very wide but when implementing those powers our Courts were careful in discharging them.

In the case of Gnanapandithan and Another V. Balanayagam and Another (1998) 1 Sri LR 391 at 397 GPS de Silva CJ observed the following;

> "On consideration of the proceedings in this case, I hold that there had been a miscarriage of justice, the object of the revision as stated by Sansoni CJ in Mariam Beebee V. Seyed Mohomed. "Is the due administration of justice…." In the words of Soza J in Sommawathie and Madawala and Others "The Court will not hesitate to use its revisionary power to give relief where a miscarriage of justice has occurred Indeed the facts of this case cry aloud for the intervention of this Court to prevent what otherwise would be a miscarriage of justice" The words underline above are equally applicable to the present case.
> I am accordingly of the view that the Court of Appeal was in serious error when it declined to exercise its revisionary power having regard to very special and exceptional circumstance of this partition case."

In the case, Don Chandra Maximan Elangakoon V. OIC Eppawala and another CA PHC APN 99 2006 CA Minute 04.10.2007 Sarath Abrew Judge of the Court of Appeal (as he then was) had observed the tests that should be used in granting relief in a revision application. Whilst giving reference to a series of cases decided by the Court of Appeal, his Lordship has identified some of the tests that should be applied as follows;

> The Petitioner should plead or establish exceptional circumstances warranting the exercise of the revisionary power,
> There should not be any unreasonable delay in filing the application
> There should be full disclosure of material facts and show uberrima fide as non-disclosure is fatal.

With regard to the powers vested with the Court of Appeal under Article 140 in issuing orders in the nature of writs, it is well settled that when an alternative and equally efficacious remedy is available to a party, the party should be required to pursue that remedy before invoking the writ jurisdiction.

This position was considered by Shirani Thilakawardena J in the case of Ishak V. Lakshman Perera Director of Customs and Others (2003) 3 Sri LR 18 as follows;

> "Where there is an alternative procedure which will provide the applicant with a satisfactory remedy the Courts will usually insist on an applicant exhausting that remedy before seeking judicial review. In doing so the Court is coming to a discretionary decision." Where there is a choice of another separate process outside the Courts, a true question for the exercise of discretion exists. For the Court to require the alternative procedure to be exhausted prior to resorting to judicial review is in accord with the judicial review being properly regarded as being a remedy of last resort. It is important that the process should not be clogged with unnecessary cases, which are perfectly capable of being dealt with in another tribunal. It can also be the situation that Parliament, by establishing an alternative procedure, indicated either expressly or by implication that it intends that procedure to be used, in exercising its discretion the Court will attach importance to the indication of Parliament intention." (Emphasis by me)

Her ladyship had considered invoking the writ jurisdiction as the "last resort." In the above circumstances, it is necessary for the Petitioners in a writ application either to aver that the party had exhausted the alternative remedy or explain why the party decided to invoke writ jurisdiction without resorting to the alternative remedy available to them.

As observed by the Court of Appeal, the Petitioners before the Court of Appeal were silent regarding their decision to invoke the writ jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal without resorting to the revisionary jurisdiction of the High Court, which is an equally effective remedy available to them. When responding to the above and whilst challenging the decision by the Court of Appeal, before the Supreme Court, the Petitioners have submitted that;

a) Court of Appeal also conceded the non-availability of judgments where writ applications were rejected for failure to exercise revisionary jurisdiction as an alternative remedy
b) The judgment in Halwan and Others V. Kaleelful Rahuman (2000) 3 Sri LR 50 relied upon the Court of Appeal in the impugned judgment is also not a case where writ application was dismissed on the basis that there was the possibility of instituting a revision application

c) At the time the impugned order was made by the learned Magistrate refusing to comply with the directive given by the Attorney General, the Petitioners were under continuous remand custody and their bail application to the High Court had also been refused. In the circumstances, the Appellants opted to come before the Court of Appeal by way of a Writ Application as that would be the most efficacious remedy

d) Revisionary jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal under Article 138 of the Constitution or the revisionary jurisdiction of the Provincial High Court in terms of Article 154 (3) of the Constitution read with High Courts of Provinces (Special Provision Act No 19 of 1990) are discretionary remedies

e) Litigant must establish exceptional circumstances to invoke Revisionary jurisdiction and argued that there is no necessity for the Petitioners to give reasons before the Court of Appeal when they invoke the writ jurisdiction since it was the most efficacious remedy available to them.

As already observed above, it appears that each remedy referred to above has its own characteristics which need to be fulfilled when invoking the said jurisdiction. As further observed by this Court both, revisionary jurisdiction and the writ jurisdiction are discretionary remedies and when granting such relief, the Court will consider whether the party who invoke the relevant jurisdiction had fulfilled the requirements to invoke the said jurisdiction.

A party who invokes the revisionary jurisdiction is required to satisfy Court that there are exceptional circumstances for the party to invoke such jurisdiction and the Court will use its discretion when deciding to grant such relief. Similarly, a party invoking the writ jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal is necessary to satisfy Court that the said party had exhausted all equally efficacious remedies available to them before invoking the writ jurisdiction. In other words, failure by a party to make use of equally efficacious remedies available to them will become a ground for the Court to use its discretion and refuse to grant such relief.

As further observed by this Court the party who does not wish to invoke the jurisdiction of an alternative remedy available, the said party, should give reasons as to why the party had decided to invoke the writ jurisdiction of such Court and the Court is free to make use of its discretion when considering the reasons placed before Court.

The Petitioners argued, that the revisionary jurisdiction being a discretionary remedy where the parties who invoke the revisionary jurisdiction need to establish exceptional circumstances, it cannot be considered as an effective alternative remedy to oust the writ jurisdiction of the Court.

In this regard, the Petitioners tried to compare the appellate jurisdiction of the Court and argue that the cases relied on by the Respondents before the Court of Appeal had been decided based on the failure of Petitioners in those cases to make use of the appellate jurisdiction available to them by a statute.

Unlike in a statutory appeal where the Appellant should act within a specific period and within the framework identified in the statute, the revisionary jurisdiction of the Court has a wide range where it will be available for litigants who do not have any other remedy to address them. It is well-settled law that revisionary jurisdiction is available to a litigant when he failed to exercise his statutory remedy within the stipulated period and also in a situation similar to the instant case where the order challenged before Court is not a final order amenable to a final appeal.

As guided by the Court of Appeal in the instant case, I do agree and would be happy to be guided by the decision in the case of Mariam Beebee V. Seyed Mohomed and Other 69 CLW 34 to the effect;

> "The power of revision is an extraordinary power which is quite independent of and distinct from the appellate jurisdiction of this court. Its object is the due administration of justice and the correction of the errors, sometimes committed by this Court itself, in order to avoid a miscarriage of justice"

In the above context when using the extraordinary power vested with the Court, the law requires the Court to be vigilant on the wide discretion given to such Court and that is why our Courts expect the parties who invoke the revisionary jurisdiction to establish "exceptional circumstances" under which the party wishes to invoke the revisionary jurisdiction of the said Court.

Therefore, I cannot agree when the petitioners submitted that the revisionary jurisdiction is not an effective alternative remedy since the party who invoke the revision jurisdiction need to establish exceptional circumstances, whereas no such requirement is to be fulfilled when invoking writ jurisdiction. The extraordinary nature of the revisionary jurisdiction as discussed above clearly establishes that the revisionary jurisdiction is an equally efficacious jurisdiction when compared to writ jurisdiction.

Even though the petitioners have failed to explain the reason for them to invoke the writ jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal without resorting to the revisionary jurisdiction of the High Court, it was submitted before us on behalf of the Petitioners that, the writ jurisdiction was the most effective remedy compared to a revision application since the Petitioners moved the Court of Appeal to issue a writ of certiorari quashing the decision of the Magistrate to proceed with the non-summary inquiry ignoring the directive of the Hon. Attorney General and to issue a writ in the nature of a mandamus directing the Magistrate to act on the directive of the Hon. Attorney General and discharge the Petitioners.

As already referred to in this judgment, writ jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal too has its own characteristics and the party who invokes writ jurisdiction must necessarily satisfy that the said party had exhausted all equally efficacious remedies available to him.

Similarly, Courts are reluctant to grant orders in the nature of writs when the matters on which the relief is claimed are in dispute or in other words when the facts are in dispute.

This was considered in the following terms by Ranasinghe J (as he then was) in a celebrated case of Thajudeen V. Sri Lanka Tea Board [1981] 2 Sri LR 471;

> "A comparison of the respective positions taken up by the Respondents and the Petitioner unmistakably shows that the claim of the Petitioner, that he is entitled to the amount set out in his Petition, is denied by the Respondents and that such denial is not based only upon questions of law alone. One of the main grounds of objections raised in respect of the said claim is that the said sum of money is not, in fact, due. This objection is one based upon questions of fact. The Respondents dispute the correctness of the figures relating to the purchases of the green tea leaf. They deny that such > quantities of green tea leaf were in fact purchased as claimed by the Petitioner. The very foundations of fact, which the Petitioner must establish to prove that he is, in fact, entitled to claim the payment of the sum of money, which he seeks to compel the Respondents to pay him, are therefore, not only not admitted by the Respondents but are also very strenuously denied and disputed by the Respondents. The basic of fundamental issues of fact the proof of which is essential, to the claim for the relief the Petitioner seeks in these proceedings, have in the first instance to be established by the Petitioner. In the absence of incontrovertible proof or an admission by the respondents of such matters of fact, the petitioner's claim to the payment of the said sum of money cannot be maintained. All such disputed matters of fact must be resolved before a mandatory order, such as is claimed by the Petitioner in these proceedings and goes out from this court. The issuance of such an order carries with it the implication that this Court is satisfied that the said amount is in fact due to the Petitioner and that there is no question about the basic primary questions of fact upon which the Petitioner's claim is founded. When, however, such questions of fact are in dispute they can and must only be settled by a regular action between the disputants before the appropriate Court of First Instance. Such questions, the decision of which calls for the leading of evidence, both oral and documentary, and the cross–examination of witnesses are all questions that can be best decided by way of regular procedure falling within the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts of First Instance. (Emphasis added)

The Petitioners before the Court of Appeal had made the learned Magistrate Pugoda as the 3rd Respondent in the said application and the 3rd Respondent in his affidavit submitted to the Court of Appeal has taken up the position that there was no directive made by the Hon. Attorney General directing the Magistrate to conduct and/or conclude and/or terminate the non-summary proceeding under section 398 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act No. 15 of 1979, as amended. Even though the Officer in Charge of the Police Station Kirindiwela had filed a communication received by him from the Attorney General, it was the position of the 3rd Respondent that the said communication cannot be construed as a directive issued under section 398 (2)

As further observed in this judgment it was transpired at the inquest proceeding held before the Magistrate Pugoda, that there were witnesses who contradicted the version given in the 'B' Report with regard to the incident that took place on 13.08.2010. These are factual matters that need to be considered in a regular action but not in an application for judicial review.

When considering the matters already discussed in this judgment it appears to me that the Court of Appeal was correct in refusing to entertain the application filed before the said Court, for the failure by the Petitioners to invoke revisionary judicial of the High Court which is an equally effective remedy available to them.

In the said circumstances, I answer the first question of law in negative. I will not be answering the 2nd question of law under which the leave was granted since I cannot agree with the term used by the Petitioners "mere availability of an alternative remedy "as against "equally effective remedy."

As already discussed in this Judgment, the Court of Appeal was mindful of this fact and had correctly decided the case.

The appeal is dismissed/ No Costs.

Judge of the Supreme Court

Justice K.K. Wickremasinghe,

I agree,

Judge of the Supreme Court

E. A. G. R. Amarasekara, J.

I had the privilege of reading the Judgment written by His Lordship Justice Vijith. K. Malalgoda in its draft form. I am in agreement with his lordship's final conclusion to dismiss the appeal without costs. I intend to set down in writing following reasons to fortify my view that this appeal should be dismissed.

1. The Petitioners' case is based on the premise that the communication from the Honourable Attorney General to the SSP Gampaha Dated 28.02.2011 is a directive issued in terms of section 398(2) of the Criminal Procedure Code and the learned magistrate was bound to act on the said directive. The Position of the Petitioners is that by refusing to discharge the petitioners and proceeding with the non-summary inquiry made the proceedings before the magistrate court ultra vires and hence the better remedy was to file a writ application when compared with other available remedies.

2. For the reasons mentioned below, I do not see that the said communication can be considered as a directive issued in terms of section 398(2) of the Criminal Procedure Code.
    a) Firstly, it is addressed to the SSP, Gampaha Division and not the Magistrate. It directs the said SSP to inform the magistrate that the magistrate may discharge the petitioners since further legal proceedings are not intended against the petitioners. This communication may be considered as a directive to the SSP to convey the opinion contained therein to the relevant magistrate but it cannot be considered as a directive issued to the magistrate as it is not addressed to the magistrate concerned.
    b) Secondly, the Contents of the said communication state that the magistrate may discharge the Petitioners (ඔවුන් නිදහස් කල හැකි බව දැන්විය යුතුය). The use of the word “May” indicates that it gives a discretion to the magistrate. The contents do not compel the magistrate to discharge the petitioners. When the words used has given a discretion to the magistrate, one cannot say that the proceedings became ultra vires by not following the instructions. The character of the said communication does not change merely because a state counsel appeared on a subsequent date and confirmed the opinion expressed in the said communication.

Hence, the first question of law has to be answered in the negative and it is sufficient to dismiss the appeal.

The Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the 'Appellant') is a limited liability company, incorporated under the laws of Sri Lanka, engaged inter alia, in the business of manufacturing multi-walled kraft paper sacks for the bulk packing of tea. The Appellant then sells these paper sacks to regional plantation companies in Sri Lanka. The Appellant claimed exemption from Turnover Tax on the sale of these paper sacks to the aforesaid companies claiming that the said companies export bulk tea packed in these paper sacks.

The dispute arose when the Appellant had submitted its Tax returns for certain taxable periods claiming exemption from payment of Turnover Tax under section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 1981. To facilitate the easy reference and comprehension by the reader, I would at this initial stage itself reproduce below, section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 1981.

Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981.

> "(1).The Minister may, if he is of opinion that it is essential for the economic progress of Sri Lanka, exempt by Order published in the Gazette any business or such business as may be specified, which is carried on by any person, from the turnover tax.
> (2). Every Order under subsection (1) shall come into force on the date of its publication in the Gazette or on such later date as may be specified in such Order and shall be brought before Parliament within a period of three months from the date of the publication of such Order in the Gazette or, if no meeting of Parliament is held within such period, at the first meeting of Parliament held after the expiry of such period, by a motion that such Order shall be approved.

The Minister acting under the powers vested in him under the above section then published the Gazette (Extraordinary) No 432/03 dated 16.12.1986. The part of the said Gazette notification relevant to the questions of law in the instant case reads as follows.

> "By virtue of powers vested in me under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act, No. 69 f 1981, I Ronal Joseph Godfrey de Mel, minister of Finance and Planning, being of opinion that it is essential for the economic progress of Sri Lanka, do by this Order, with effect from midnight of 31 December 1986/ 1 January, 1987 exempt the following from Turnover Tax:—

3) ….
4) "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article;"
5) ….

Relying on the item (4) [above mentioned clause], the Appellant had claimed that the paper sacks it manufactured are exclusively for export of tea, and therefore it was entitled to an exemption under item (4) of the above Gazette read with section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act. The Assessor had rejected the Appellant's claim for exemption on the basis that the local supply of such paper sacks to plantation companies does not constitute 'export' as contemplated under the Gazette notification No. 432/03 dated 16.12.1986, which was relied upon by the Appellant. The Assessor had taken the view that any exemption under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981, is only available to a business which exports its products, and as the Appellant company does not export paper sacks, and only sells the paper sacks locally to plantation companies, the sales of the Appellant company will not qualify for an exemption under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act.

Being aggrieved by the aforesaid decision of the assessor, the Appellant appealed to the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Commissioner General). The Commissioner General, by the Determination dated 03.09.2001 (produced marked X1) had dismissed the said appeal.

Being aggrieved by the aforesaid Determination of the Commissioner General, the Appellant appealed to the Board of Review under Section 119 of the Inland Revenue Act No. 28 of 1979, as provided for, by Section 18 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981. The said appeal was presented on the basis that, the Appellant was either an exporter or an indirect exporter-supplier, and therefore was entitled for an exemption from Turnover Tax under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No.69 of 1981. The Board of Review having heard the submissions of the parties, by its Determination dated 31.03.2008 (produced marked X3) had confirmed the assessment issued by the Assessor and dismissed the said appeal of the Appellant.

Being dissatisfied with the Determination of the Board of Review, the Appellant then appealed to the Court of Appeal by stating a case for the opinion of the Court of Appeal.

The question of law formulated for the opinion of the Court of Appeal by the Board of Review is as follows,

> "Is the Assessee an exporter and/or an indirect exporter-supplier to claim tax exemption under the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981 when it did not export but supplied its paper sacks to companies inter alia exporting bulk tea".

The Court of Appeal by its judgment dated 23.02.2012 (produced marked X5), upheld the order of the Board of Review which had concluded that 'the Appellant is neither a direct nor indirect exporter and was not in an activity that was exempted form turnover tax'.

Being dissatisfied with the opinion of the Court of Appeal, the Appellant sought Special Leave to Appeal from this Court. This Court, upon hearing the learned counsel for the Appellant and the learned Deputy Solicitor General, by its order dated 01.04.2014, had granted Special Leave to Appeal only on the following question of law:

> "Is the Appellant exempt from turnover tax in terms of Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981 as reflected in the Gazette No. 432/ 3 dated 16.12.1986?"

I will now move on to discuss the question whether the business of the Appellant will classify as "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article" in order for that business to fall under the exemption set out in clause 4 of the above mentioned Gazette.

The Appellant claims that he is entitled to the above exemption claiming that it is an exporter of a manufactured article on the following basis: the paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant is not sold for local consumption and is solely used for the export of tea; the paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant are an integral part of the export process of the tea; and therefore, the paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant are an integral part of the export itself.

The Gazette notification (Extraordinary) No. 432/03 dated 16.12.1986 exempts "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article". When taken the literal meaning, it is evident that the Gazette explicitly intends to cover a 'business for the export of any manufactured article', and therefore is imperative that to come under this exemption, the relevant business must be capable of being classified entirely as a business for the export of the article it manufactures.

Let me next consider whether the Appellant's business is a business for export. The Appellant in order to qualify itself as an exporter must satisfy all the characteristics of an exporter, i.e., being engaged in international trade, the existence of an overseas buyer, the relevant shipping documents as well as standard payment methods involved in international trade transaction. Furthermore, the presence of the earned foreign exchange which is the price for the goods exported would be an integral characteristic of an exporter. The Appellant if indeed is carrying on with a business of export, can easily provide proof of at least one of the followings: an international sales arrangement; invoice or an export order; any letter of credit opened; any shipping/air freight document etc., presence of any such evidence would have indicated at least some confirmation of the fact that the Appellant is engaged in exporting of the items it manufactures. However, the Appellant has not provided any such evidence and hence has not established any of the above characteristics of an exporter.

The multi-walled kraft paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant are simply sold to the regional plantation companies. The regional plantation companies do not export the multi-walled kraft paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant, but merely use them for packing the article they endeavour to export, which is tea. Thus, neither the regional plantation companies nor the Appellant is engaged in any business for the export of the multi walled kraft paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant. The Appellant also does not carry on its business of manufacturing paper sacks either to be exported or for the export market. The Appellant manufactures their paper sacks to be sold to local plantation companies to bulk pack tea. What may be gleaned from the available material is that this tea is then sent to Colombo tea auctions where the tea may or may not be exported. Therefore, the paper sacks sold to the regional plantation companies are not the articles being exported. Thus, I am not satisfied that the Appellant is engaged in exporting of the items it manufactures.

Moreover, as has been already mentioned above, in order to be eligible for an exemption under this section it is imperative that the relevant business must be a 'business of manufacturing or processing articles for export'. I can observe that there are two limbs present in Clause 4 of the relevant Gazette notification. The Clause states: "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article". This means firstly, that the business from which the relevant turnover is derived must be a business for export. That is the first limb. The second part of the Clause 4 sets out clearly as to what kind of goods should be exported by such business. The goods exported must be manufactured or processed articles. That is the second limb.

The next question is, as to who should have manufactured the articles referred to in Clause 4. The first observation I make is that any article must have been manufactured by somebody at some point of time for articles cannot fall from the sky. If this aspect of Clause 4 is forgotten, export of anything would attract the exemption granted under that provision. That is the reason as to why the law has only empowered the Minister to exempt by Order published in the Gazette any business from turnover tax only if he is of opinion that the exemption of such business would be essential for the economic progress of Sri Lanka. In the instant situation, what the Minister has exempted is "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article". This must be understood as a business which exports any manufactured or processed article. In the instant case, a business which exports any manufactured article. The Appellant is not engaged in any such business.

The Appellant referring to both 'direct export' as well as 'indirect export' in its written submissions[1], has sought to argue that the Court of Appeal had failed to consider the definition of both direct and indirect export. Let me now consider this aspect.

When the Appellant sells the paper sacks to the Plantation Companies, the sale transaction between them has been completed as the property in the goods stand transferred to the Plantation Companies. Therefore, at that point itself the relevant transaction is completed between the Appellant and the plantation companies. The Appellant thereafter is not entitled to monitor or to know the use to which the plantation companies would put the paper sacks they had purchased. In any case, the argument of the Appellant is not that the plantation companies export the paper sacks they had purchased but that the plantation companies export tea packed in the paper sacks they had purchased.

The paper sacks are manufactured by the Appellant and then sold to local plantation companies to bulk pack tea which is then sent to Colombo tea auctions where the tea may or may not be exported. Indeed, the Appellant has not adduced any evidence to establish as to what really happens to the multi-walled kraft paper sacks after they are sold to the regional plantation companies. Be that as it may, one thing is clear; the Appellant cannot be regarded as either a direct or indirect exporter of the multi-walled kraft paper sacks it manufactures. The Appellant plays no part in the part of any transaction involving any export. The Appellant was only the manufacturer who supplied their finished product to the local plantation companies, who then use these paper sacks for packing their tea and therefore, the Appellant cannot be classified as an 'indirect exporter'.

Therefore, I am unable to accept the argument of the Appellant that they do not sell any of the manufactured paper sacks for local consumption itself and all of the manufactured paper sacks are used for the export of tea and hence the paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant form an integral part of the export process of the tea. It must be stressed that the relevant exporters, export tea and not paper sacks. On this basis, I am unable to conclude that the Appellant's business is a 'business for the export of any manufactured article within the meaning of the Gazette (Extraordinary) No 432/03 dated 16.12.1986.

Before I part with this judgment, let me also refer to the case of Perera & Silva Ltd. Vs. Commissioner General of Inland Revenue,[2] which had considered the question whether a business for supplying material for the packaging of export goods will also classify as a 'business for export'.

Although the question of law in this case was based on a subsequent statute, the basis for argument for the exemption of turnover tax by the Appellant in the case of Perera & Silva, was similar to the argument advanced by the Appellant in the instant case.

Perera & Silva Ltd. was a firm manufacturing wooden boxes and shooks (a component part used in assembling wooden boxes). A part of its production was on orders by persons who exported goods such as tea, batteries, and spices from Sri Lanka. The dispute in that case was whether the turnover relating to the sale of wooden boxes and shooks by Perera & Silva Ltd., which were subsequently used by buyers for the export trade, should be excluded from the liability of turnover tax of Perera & Silva Ltd. The Commissioner General of Inland Revenue had held that those transactions of Perera & Silva Ltd. are liable to business turnover tax and confirmed the tax charged by the Assessor.

The Board of Review on Appeal held that: the wooden boxes and shooks though manufactured in Ceylon were not exported by the assessee; the assessee became liable to pay tax on the proceeds of sale, immediately after the sale was concluded, whether the proceeds of sale, were actually received or only became receivable; the proceeds of sale which are liable to tax at the time the turnover is made cannot by a process of interpretation be converted into proceeds of sale which would be exempted from tax.

[2] 79 NLR (Volume II) page 164.

At the time of the case of Perera & Silva Ltd. the turnover tax was payable in respect of the completed transactions, unless those transactions came within one of the exceptions provided under section 121 (1) of the Finance Act No. 11 of 1963. For easy reference for the reader, I would set out below, Section 121 (1) of the Finance Act.

> "(1) The Minister may by order published in the Gazette declare any article specified in such Order to be an excepted article for the purposes of this Part of the Act. Different articles may be declared to be excepted articles in respect of different classes or descriptions of businesses.

Just like in the instant case, in Perera & Silva's case also the then Minister acting under Section 121 (2) had declared by the Schedule to the Gazette notification No. 14,864/9 of 02.08.1969 that "articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported" be excluded from the liability of turnover tax.

Upon the application of Perera & Silva Ltd. The Board of Review had stated a case for the opinion of the Supreme Court under section 138A (1) of the Finance Act, No. 11 of 1963. The questions of law stated for the opinion of the Supreme Court in that case are,

i. Does "articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported " in the order published in Gazette No. 14,864/9 of 2.8.69, mean articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported in a single business.
ii. Is the turnover arising from wooden boxes and shooks, sold by the assessee during the quarters 31.12.69, 31.3.70, 30.6.70 and exported by others exempt from business turnover tax under the order made under 121 (1) published in the Gazette Extraordinary 14,864/9 of 2.8.69.

Thamotheram J giving the opinion of the Supreme Court in Perera and Silva's case, stated as follows.

> "In our opinion the business carried on by Perera and Silva Ltd. was only one of manufacture. It is only when the business in question includes both manufacture and export that the exception to liability can arise; the turnover tax is in respect of the turnover made by that person (Perera & Silva Ltd.) from that business (manufacture of wooden boxes). The exception is when that business— includes both manufacture and export.
> Our opinion therefore is as follows :
>
> (2) The turnover arising from wooden boxes and shooks sold by the assessee during the quarters 31.12.64, 31.3.70 and 30.6.70 and exported by others are not exempted from business turnover tax under the order made under 121 (1) published in the Gazette Extraordinary No. 14,864/9 of 2.8.69.
>
> I may also add that in our view when an article, e.g., tea, is exported in wooden boxes, it is wrong to say that the boxes in which tea is exported are themselves exported— it is true the literal meaning of ' export' is 'sending out'— but export connotes a business transaction between some person in Sri Lanka with a person outside. If a Sri Lankan firm exports tea to a firm abroad, I think, it does violence to the English language to say that the firm also exported wooden boxes in which the tea was sent. It is not any part of the particular export business.
> The order made by the Minister on 2.8.69 had been amended by an order published in Gazette No. 83/8 of 1.11.73. One of the excepted articles mentioned in the latter order is "articles manufactured in Sri Lanka and exported by the manufacturer."

This amendment was no doubt due to the point taken in the present case being taken by many an assessee. We however do not think that the statute was not express or that it was ambiguous."

It was on the above basis that this Court in that case held that the words "manufactured in Ceylon" and "exported" should be read conjunctively and accordingly the exemption is available only in respect of articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported in the course of the same business.

In the instant case too, undoubtedly when the Appellants sell these paper sacks they manufacture to local plantation companies, there is no element of 'export' involved in that business transaction. This could be further illustrated by referring to Section 5 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981 which stipulates the meaning of "turnover" as being, "the total amount received or receivable from transactions entered into in respect of that business or for services performed in carrying on that business". The transaction in relation to the Appellant's business namely the sale of the multi-walled kraft paper sacks to the plantation companies for the packaging of tea was a completed transaction entered into, in respect of that business. It is at that point that the Appellant becomes liable for the payment of turnover tax.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the view that the Appellant is not entitled for the relevant exemption under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981. Therefore, I hold that the Board of Review has correctly concluded that the Appellant is not entitled to any exemption under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981. I also hold that the Court of Appeal too has correctly taken the same view.

Accordingly, I answer the question of law in respect of which this Court has granted Special Leave to Appeal as follows:

"The Appellant is not entitled for an exemption from turnover tax in terms of Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981 read with the Gazette No. 432/ 3 dated 16.12.1986."

I affirm the judgment dated 23.02.2012 of the Court of Appeal and dismiss this Appeal with costs.

The Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the 'Appellant') is a limited liability company, incorporated under the laws of Sri Lanka, engaged inter alia, in the business of manufacturing multi-walled kraft paper sacks for the bulk packing of tea. The Appellant then sells these paper sacks to regional plantation companies in Sri Lanka. The Appellant claimed exemption from Turnover Tax on the sale of these paper sacks to the aforesaid companies claiming that the said companies export bulk tea packed in these paper sacks.

The dispute arose when the Appellant had submitted its Tax returns for certain taxable periods claiming exemption from payment of Turnover Tax under section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 1981. To facilitate the easy reference and comprehension by the reader, I would at this initial stage itself reproduce below, section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 1981.

Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981.

> "(1).The Minister may, if he is of opinion that it is essential for the economic progress of Sri Lanka, exempt by Order published in the Gazette any business or such business as may be specified, which is carried on by any person, from the turnover tax.
> (2). Every Order under subsection (1) shall come into force on the date of its publication in the Gazette or on such later date as may be specified in such Order and shall be brought before Parliament within a period of three months from the date of the publication of such Order in the Gazette or, if no meeting of Parliament is held within such period, at the first meeting of Parliament held after the expiry of such period, by a motion that such Order shall be approved.
> (3). Any Order which Parliament refuses to approve shall, with effect from the date of such refusal, be deemed to be revoked but without prejudice to the validity of such Order until the date of such refusal, and the notification of the date on which such Order is deemed to be revoked shall be published in the Gazette."

The Minister acting under the powers vested in him under the above section then published the Gazette (Extraordinary) No 432/03 dated 16.12.1986. The part of the said Gazette notification relevant to the questions of law in the instant case reads as follows.

> "By virtue of powers vested in me under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act, No. 69 f 1981, I Ronal Joseph Godfrey de Mel, minister of Finance and Planning, being of opinion that it is essential for the economic progress of Sri Lanka, do by this Order, with effect from midnight of 31 December 1986/ 1 January, 1987 exempt the following from Turnover Tax:—

3) ….
4) "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article;"
5) ….
24) ….

Relying on the item (4) [above mentioned clause], the Appellant had claimed that the paper sacks it manufactured are exclusively for export of tea, and therefore it was entitled to an exemption under item (4) of the above Gazette read with section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act. The Assessor had rejected the Appellant's claim for exemption on the basis that the local supply of such paper sacks to plantation companies does not constitute 'export' as contemplated under the Gazette notification No. 432/03 dated 16.12.1986, which was relied upon by the Appellant. The Assessor had taken the view that any exemption under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981, is only available to a business which exports its products, and as the Appellant company does not export paper sacks, and only sells the paper sacks locally to plantation companies, the sales of the Appellant company will not qualify for an exemption under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act.

Being aggrieved by the aforesaid decision of the assessor, the Appellant appealed to the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Commissioner General). The Commissioner General, by the Determination dated 03.09.2001 (produced marked X1) had dismissed the said appeal.

Being aggrieved by the aforesaid Determination of the Commissioner General, the Appellant appealed to the Board of Review under Section 119 of the Inland Revenue Act No. 28 of 1979, as provided for, by Section 18 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981. The said appeal was presented on the basis that, the Appellant was either an exporter or an indirect exporter-supplier, and therefore was entitled for an exemption from Turnover Tax under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No.69 of 1981. The Board of Review having heard the submissions of the parties, by its Determination dated 31.03.2008 (produced marked X3) had confirmed the assessment issued by the Assessor and dismissed the said appeal of the Appellant.

Being dissatisfied with the Determination of the Board of Review, the Appellant then appealed to the Court of Appeal by stating a case for the opinion of the Court of Appeal.

The question of law formulated for the opinion of the Court of Appeal by the Board of Review is as follows,

> "Is the Assessee an exporter and/or an indirect exporter-supplier to claim tax exemption under the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981 when it did not export but supplied its paper sacks to companies inter alia exporting bulk tea".

The Court of Appeal by its judgment dated 23.02.2012 (produced marked X5), upheld the order of the Board of Review which had concluded that 'the Appellant is neither a direct nor indirect exporter and was not in an activity that was exempted form turnover tax'.

Being dissatisfied with the opinion of the Court of Appeal, the Appellant sought Special Leave to Appeal from this Court. This Court, upon hearing the learned counsel for the Appellant and the learned Deputy Solicitor General, by its order dated 01.04.2014, had granted Special Leave to Appeal only on the following question of law:

> "Is the Appellant exempt from turnover tax in terms of Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981 as reflected in the Gazette No. 432/ 3 dated 16.12.1986?"

I will now move on to discuss the question whether the business of the Appellant will classify as "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article" in order for that business to fall under the exemption set out in clause 4 of the above mentioned Gazette.

The Appellant claims that he is entitled to the above exemption claiming that it is an exporter of a manufactured article on the following basis: the paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant is not sold for local consumption and is solely used for the export of tea; the paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant are an integral part of the export process of the tea; and therefore, the paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant are an integral part of the export itself.

The Gazette notification (Extraordinary) No. 432/03 dated 16.12.1986 exempts "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article". When taken the literal meaning, it is evident that the Gazette explicitly intends to cover a 'business for the export of any manufactured article', and therefore is imperative that to come under this exemption, the relevant business must be capable of being classified entirely as a business for the export of the article it manufactures.

Let me next consider whether the Appellant's business is a business for export. The Appellant in order to qualify itself as an exporter must satisfy all the characteristics of an exporter, i.e., being engaged in international trade, the existence of an overseas buyer, the relevant shipping documents as well as standard payment methods involved in international trade transaction. Furthermore, the presence of the earned foreign exchange which is the price for the goods exported would be an integral characteristic of an exporter. The Appellant if indeed is carrying on with a business of export, can easily provide proof of at least one of the followings: an international sales arrangement; invoice or an export order; any letter of credit opened; any shipping/air freight document etc., presence of any such evidence would have indicated at least some confirmation of the fact that the Appellant is engaged in exporting of the items it manufactures. However, the Appellant has not provided any such evidence and hence has not established any of the above characteristics of an exporter.

The multi-walled kraft paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant are simply sold to the regional plantation companies. The regional plantation companies do not export the multi-walled kraft paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant, but merely use them for packing the article they endeavour to export, which is tea. Thus, neither the regional plantation companies nor the Appellant is engaged in any business for the export of the multi walled kraft paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant. The Appellant also does not carry on its business of manufacturing paper sacks either to be exported or for the export market. The Appellant manufactures their paper sacks to be sold to local plantation companies to bulk pack tea. What may be gleaned from the available material is that this tea is then sent to Colombo tea auctions where the tea may or may not be exported. Therefore, the paper sacks sold to the regional plantation companies are not the articles being exported. Thus, I am not satisfied that the Appellant is engaged in exporting of the items it manufactures.

Moreover, as has been already mentioned above, in order to be eligible for an exemption under this section it is imperative that the relevant business must be a 'business of manufacturing or processing articles for export'. I can observe that there are two limbs present in Clause 4 of the relevant Gazette notification. The Clause states: "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article". This means firstly, that the business from which the relevant turnover is derived must be a business for export. That is the first limb. The second part of the Clause 4 sets out clearly as to what kind of goods should be exported by such business. The goods exported must be manufactured or processed articles. That is the second limb.

The next question is, as to who should have manufactured the articles referred to in Clause 4. The first observation I make is that any article must have been manufactured by somebody at some point of time for articles cannot fall from the sky. If this aspect of Clause 4 is forgotten, export of anything would attract the exemption granted under that provision. That is the reason as to why the law has only empowered the Minister to exempt by Order published in the Gazette any business from turnover tax only if he is of opinion that the exemption of such business would be essential for the economic progress of Sri Lanka. In the instant situation, what the Minister has exempted is "any business for the export of any manufactured or processed article". This must be understood as a business which exports any manufactured or processed article. In the instant case, a business which exports any manufactured article. The Appellant is not engaged in any such business.

The Appellant referring to both 'direct export' as well as 'indirect export' in its written submissions[1], has sought to argue that the Court of Appeal had failed to consider the definition of both direct and indirect export. Let me now consider this aspect.

When the Appellant sells the paper sacks to the Plantation Companies, the sale transaction between them has been completed as the property in the goods stand transferred to the Plantation Companies. Therefore, at that point itself the relevant transaction is completed between the Appellant and the plantation companies. The Appellant thereafter is not entitled to monitor or to know the use to which the plantation companies would put the paper sacks they had purchased. In any case, the argument of the Appellant is not that the plantation companies export the paper sacks they had purchased but that the plantation companies export tea packed in the paper sacks they had purchased.

The paper sacks are manufactured by the Appellant and then sold to local plantation companies to bulk pack tea which is then sent to Colombo tea auctions where the tea may or may not be exported. Indeed, the Appellant has not adduced any evidence to establish as to what really happens to the multi-walled kraft paper sacks after they are sold to the regional plantation companies. Be that as it may, one thing is clear; the Appellant cannot be regarded as either a direct or indirect exporter of the multi-walled kraft paper sacks it manufactures. The Appellant plays no part in the part of any transaction involving any export. The Appellant was only the manufacturer who supplied their finished product to the local plantation companies, who then use these paper sacks for packing their tea and therefore, the Appellant cannot be classified as an 'indirect exporter'.

Therefore, I am unable to accept the argument of the Appellant that they do not sell any of the manufactured paper sacks for local consumption itself and all of the manufactured paper sacks are used for the export of tea and hence the paper sacks manufactured by the Appellant form an integral part of the export process of the tea. It must be stressed that the relevant exporters, export tea and not paper sacks. On this basis, I am unable to conclude that the Appellant's business is a 'business for the export of any manufactured article within the meaning of the Gazette (Extraordinary) No 432/03 dated 16.12.1986.

Before I part with this judgment, let me also refer to the case of Perera & Silva Ltd. Vs. Commissioner General of Inland Revenue,[2] which had considered the question whether a business for supplying material for the packaging of export goods will also classify as a 'business for export'.

Although the question of law in this case was based on a subsequent statute, the basis for argument for the exemption of turnover tax by the Appellant in the case of Perera & Silva, was similar to the argument advanced by the Appellant in the instant case.

Perera & Silva Ltd. was a firm manufacturing wooden boxes and shooks (a component part used in assembling wooden boxes). A part of its production was on orders by persons who exported goods such as tea, batteries, and spices from Sri Lanka. The dispute in that case was whether the turnover relating to the sale of wooden boxes and shooks by Perera & Silva Ltd., which were subsequently used by buyers for the export trade, should be excluded from the liability of turnover tax of Perera & Silva Ltd. The Commissioner General of Inland Revenue had held that those transactions of Perera & Silva Ltd. are liable to business turnover tax and confirmed the tax charged by the Assessor.

The Board of Review on Appeal held that: the wooden boxes and shooks though manufactured in Ceylon were not exported by the assessee; the assessee became liable to pay tax on the proceeds of sale, immediately after the sale was concluded, whether the proceeds of sale, were actually received or only became receivable; the proceeds of sale which are liable to tax at the time the turnover is made cannot by a process of interpretation be converted into proceeds of sale which would be exempted from tax.

[2] 79 NLR (Volume II) page 164.

At the time of the case of Perera & Silva Ltd. the turnover tax was payable in respect of the completed transactions, unless those transactions came within one of the exceptions provided under section 121 (1) of the Finance Act No. 11 of 1963. For easy reference for the reader, I would set out below, Section 121 (1) of the Finance Act.

> "(1) The Minister may by order published in the Gazette declare any article specified in such Order to be an excepted article for the purposes of this Part of the Act. Different articles may be declared to be excepted articles in respect of different classes or descriptions of businesses.

Just like in the instant case, in Perera & Silva's case also the then Minister acting under Section 121 (2) had declared by the Schedule to the Gazette notification No. 14,864/9 of 02.08.1969 that "articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported" be excluded from the liability of turnover tax.

Upon the application of Perera & Silva Ltd. The Board of Review had stated a case for the opinion of the Supreme Court under section 138A (1) of the Finance Act, No. 11 of 1963. The questions of law stated for the opinion of the Supreme Court in that case are,

i. Does "articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported " in the order published in Gazette No. 14,864/9 of 2.8.69, mean articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported in a single business.
ii. Is the turnover arising from wooden boxes and shooks, sold by the assessee during the quarters 31.12.69, 31.3.70, 30.6.70 and exported by others exempt from business turnover tax under the order made under 121 (1) published in the Gazette Extraordinary 14,864/9 of 2.8.69.

Thamotheram J giving the opinion of the Supreme Court in Perera and Silva's case, stated as follows.

> "In our opinion the business carried on by Perera and Silva Ltd. was only one of manufacture. It is only when the business in question includes both manufacture and export that the exception to liability can arise; the turnover tax is in respect of the turnover made by that person (Perera & Silva Ltd.) from that business (manufacture of wooden boxes). The exception is when that business— includes both manufacture and export.
> Our opinion therefore is as follows :
>
> (1) " Articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported " in the order published in Gazette No. 14,864/9 of 2.8.69 means articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported in a single business;
> (2) The turnover arising from wooden boxes and shooks sold by the assessee during the quarters 31.12.64, 31.3.70 and 30.6.70 and exported by others are not exempted from business turnover tax under the order made under 121 (1) published in the Gazette Extraordinary No. 14,864/9 of 2.8.69.
>
> I may also add that in our view when an article, e.g., tea, is exported in wooden boxes, it is wrong to say that the boxes in which tea is exported are themselves exported— it is true the literal meaning of ' export' is 'sending out'— but export connotes a business transaction between some person in Sri Lanka with a person outside. If a Sri Lankan firm exports tea to a firm abroad, I think, it does violence to the English language to say that the firm also exported wooden boxes in which the tea was sent. It is not any part of the particular export business.
> The order made by the Minister on 2.8.69 had been amended by an order published in Gazette No. 83/8 of 1.11.73. One of the excepted articles

mentioned in the latter order is "articles manufactured in Sri Lanka and exported by the manufacturer."

This amendment was no doubt due to the point taken in the present case being taken by many an assessee. We however do not think that the statute was not express or that it was ambiguous."

It was on the above basis that this Court in that case held that the words "manufactured in Ceylon" and "exported" should be read conjunctively and accordingly the exemption is available only in respect of articles manufactured in Ceylon and exported in the course of the same business.

In the instant case too, undoubtedly when the Appellants sell these paper sacks they manufacture to local plantation companies, there is no element of 'export' involved in that business transaction. This could be further illustrated by referring to Section 5 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981 which stipulates the meaning of "turnover" as being, "the total amount received or receivable from transactions entered into in respect of that business or for services performed in carrying on that business". The transaction in relation to the Appellant's business namely the sale of the multi-walled kraft paper sacks to the plantation companies for the packaging of tea was a completed transaction entered into, in respect of that business. It is at that point that the Appellant becomes liable for the payment of turnover tax.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the view that the Appellant is not entitled for the relevant exemption under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981. Therefore, I hold that the Board of Review has correctly concluded that the Appellant is not entitled to any exemption under Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981. I also hold that the Court of Appeal too has correctly taken the same view.

Accordingly, I answer the question of law in respect of which this Court has granted Special Leave to Appeal as follows:

"The Appellant is not entitled for an exemption from turnover tax in terms of Section 4 of the Turnover Tax Act No. 69 of 1981 read with the Gazette No. 432/ 3 dated 16.12.1986."

I affirm the judgment dated 23.02.2012 of the Court of Appeal and dismiss this Appeal with costs.

Facts of the case

This is an appeal to set aside the Order of the Commercial High Court dated 12th of March, 2013 granting an interim injunction restraining the parate execution of a mortgaged property until the conclusion of the trial.

The 2nd plaintiff-respondent (hereinafter referred to as "the 2nd respondent"), who is the wife of the 1st plaintiff-respondent (hereinafter referred to as "the 1st respondent"), had obtained a housing loan of Rs. 8 Million on the 12th of April, 2005 from the defendant-appellant (hereinafter referred to as "the appellant bank") by mortgaging the property described in the schedule to the plaint as security, which is owned by her. In addition to the above security, the 1st respondent had given a personal guarantee to secure the said loan.

Thereafter, the 2nd respondent had obtained another loan of Rs. 6 Million on the 17th of January, 2007 from the appellant bank against the same property by entering into a secondary mortgage. Further, the said loan was settled in full by the 2nd respondent and the secondary mortgage bond had been discharged by the appellant bank.

Subsequently, the respondents had jointly obtained another loan of Rs. 5 Million on the 25th of February, 2008 from the appellant bank by entering into a secondary mortgage as security against the same property.

After some time, the respondents had defaulted on the repayment of both the said loans. Hence, the appellant bank had sent a letter of demand dated 14th of February, 2011 to the respondents, requesting them to settle the money due to the appellant bank.

However, as the respondents did not pay the money due on the aforesaid loans, the appellant bank had passed a resolution for the sale of the said mortgaged property by parate execution to recover the sum due on the aforesaid loans.

The said resolution dated 20th of December, 2011 states inter alia, to sell the mortgaged property by public auction for the following reasons:

(a) recovery of a sum of Rs. 4,670,691/- with further interest at 12% per annum from the 17th of September, 2011 together with costs of advertising and any other incurred less payments (if any) since received; and

(b) recovery of a sum of Rs. 9,129,306/- with further interest on a sum of Rs. 5 Million per annum from the 17th of September, 2011 to date of sale together with costs of advertising and any other incurred less payments (if any) since received.

In the circumstances, the respondents instituted action against the appellant bank in the Commercial High Court on the 30th of May, 2012 alleging that the resolution passed by the appellant bank to parate execute the said mortgaged property to recover both the aforesaid loans is unlawful as the appellant bank was not entitled to treat the loan of Rs. 8 Million in default. Further, the respondents prayed for an interim injunction staying the sale of the mortgaged property by parate execution.

Thereafter, the learned High Court Judge, by his Order dated 12th of March, 2013 granted an interim injunction restraining the appellant bank and any persons acting under it from selling the said mortgaged property until the conclusion of the said case in the Commercial High Court.

Being aggrieved by the said Order of the Commercial High Court, the appellant bank appealed to this court and this court granted leave to appeal on the following questions of law:

"ii) the Learned High Court Judge erred gravely in law and misdirected himself in law in failing to consider the provisions of s.12 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act No. 4 of 1990 by which the Defendant Bank has been specifically empowered by the legislature to adopt a resolution of the manner of 'X14' and take steps thereunder;

v) the Learned High Court Judge gravely erred in law and misdirected himself in law in failing to take cognizance of the fact that the Plaintiffs were expressly barred from obtaining the relief prayed for in the plaint in law;

vi) the Learned High Court Judge gravely erred in law and misdirected himself in law in failing to consider and/or apply and/or properly apply the tests required for the grant of an interim injunction in the delivery of his Order."

Further, the learned counsel for the respondents raised the following question of law to be considered by this court:

"In any event in the totality of the circumstances of this case and in view of the amendments brought to Act No. 01/11 (Section 5(A) and Section 22) and as further amended by Act N. 19/11, was a High Court Judge in event right in granting the interim injunction."

The Learned High Court Judge erred gravely in law and misdirected himself in law in failing to consider the provisions of s. 12 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act No. 4 of 1990 by which the Defendant Bank has been specifically empowered by the legislature to adopt a resolution of the nature of 'X14' and take steps thereunder

In respect of the above question of law, the issue that needs to be considered is whether the appellant bank has been conferred with the power under section 12 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act No. 4 of 1990 (hereinafter referred to as the "Recovery of Loans by Banks Act) to adopt a resolution to authorise the sale of a mortgaged property for the recovery of money due on two or more loans when the respondents have defaulted only on one loan.

In terms of section 3 read with section 4 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks Act, whenever a default is made in the payment of any sum due on any loan granted to a borrower, the Board of Directors of the bank may, inter alia, pass a resolution to sell the mortgaged property by public auction to recover the whole of the unpaid portion of such loan.

However, in terms of section 5A(1) of the said Act, a bank is not entitled to recover a loan under the said Act if the principal sum of the loan does not exceed Rs. 5 Million. Further, the interest accrued on such a loan or the penalty imposed thereon shall not be taken into consideration when calculating the principal sum borrowed by a borrower from the bank. Thus, the said section contemplates situations where the principal sum given as a loan or money advanced should be more than Rs. 5 Million to fall within the purview of the Act.

In the instant appeal, the principal amounts borrowed from the appellant bank are Rs. 8 Million and Rs. 5 Million. Thus, both loans exceed the Rs. 5 Million threshold stipulated in the said section. Hence, the bank is entitled by law to invoke the provisions of the said Act to recover both loans granted to the borrower.

In the circumstances, the appellant bank has passed a resolution under section 4 of the said Act to recover the total sum of the money due on the mortgage bond as well as on the secondary mortgage loan by authorising the sale of the property.

Further, the appellant bank has published a notice of the resolution in the Gazette dated 11th of May, 2012 and in three daily newspapers, and copies of such publications were sent to the respondents in terms of section 8 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks Act. Nevertheless, the respondents had not settled the arrears due to the appellant bank on the Rs. 5 Million loan. Therefore, the appellant bank had advertised the sale of the mortgaged property to recover the total sum due to it in respect of both loans under section 9 of the said Act and served copies of the notices of sale on the respondents.

> "(1) In any case where two or more loans have been granted by a Bank on the security of the same property and, default made in the payment of any sum due upon any one or more of such loans*, the foregoing provisions of this Act shall apply* notwithstanding that default may not been made in respect of the other loan or any of the other loans and the Board may, in any such case, by resolution under section 4 authorise the sale of the property for the recovery of the total amount due to the Bank in respect of both or all of the loans*, as the case may be, and these provisions shall apply accordingly.*
> (2) Nothing in section 3 to 15 (both sections inclusive) shall be read or construed as prohibiting a Bank from recovering the amount due on a mortgage bond in accordance with the provisions of any other law."

Accordingly, the words "notwithstanding that default may not have been made in respect of the other loan" referred to in section 12(1) means that where two or more loans have been granted to a borrower against the security of the same property and if a borrower defaults to repay any one or more of those loans, the bank is entitled to pass a resolution under section 4 of the said Act to authorise the sale of the mortgaged property for the recovery of the total amount due to the bank in respect of all the loans granted to a borrower even though the borrower has not defaulted on the other loans granted to him by the bank.

If the said section is interpreted to mean that, when two or more loans have been granted on the security of the same property, a bank is not entitled to sell the mortgaged property to recover the money due on loans that are being defaulted merely because the other loans have been serviced without any default, the bank would not be able to recover the money due on the defaulting loan. Such an interpretation would render the said section nugatory.

Thus, the appellant bank is entitled to pass a resolution in terms of section 12(1) of the said Act for the sale of the mortgaged property to recover the total amount due on both of the aforesaid loans, even though there was no default in the re-payment of the loan of Rs. 8 Million since both of the aforesaid loans have been granted on the security of the same property.

Therefore, I am of the view that the appellant bank is entitled to sell the said mortgaged property to recover the total sum due to the bank on both of the aforesaid loans.

However, section 14 of the said Act stipulates that if there is any excess money remaining from the proceeds of sale of the said mortgaged property, it should pay the balance remaining, if any, to the borrower after deducting from the amount due on the mortgage and the money and Costs recoverable under section 13 of the said Act.

In the circumstances, I am of the opinion that the learned High Court Judge erred in law in failing to hold that the appellant bank has been specifically conferred power under section 12 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks Act to adopt the resolution marked and produced as 'X14' to take steps to sell the said mortgaged property to recover the outstanding money due on both of the aforesaid loans.

The Learned High Court Judge gravely erred in law and misdirected himself in law in failing to consider and/or apply and/or properly apply the tests required for the grant of an interim injunction in the delivery of his Order

The learned High Court Judge, by his Order, granted an interim injunction restraining the appellant bank from selling the said mortgaged property until the conclusion of the said case in the Commercial High Court.

However, as stated above, the appellant bank is entitled to sell the mortgaged property to recover the money due to the bank. In view of the aforementioned findings and taking into consideration the other facts and circumstances of the case, I am of the opinion that the respondents have failed to establish a prima facie case in favour of them and that the balance of convenience lied in favour of the appellant bank, as section 12 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks Act allows the bank to sell the mortgaged property to recover the money due to them.

Therefore, I am of the view that the High Court Judge erred by not properly applying the aforementioned tests required for the grant of an interim injunction and issuing an interim injunction preventing the appellant bank from parate executing the mortgaged property.

Conclusion

In the circumstances, I am of the view that the following questions of law should be answered as follows;

"the Learned High Court Judge erred gravely in law and misdirected himself in law in failing to consider the provisions of s.12 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act No. 4 of 1990 by which the Defendant Bank has been specifically empowered by the legislature to adopt a resolution of the nature of 'X14' and take steps thereunder."

Yes

"the Learned High Court Judge gravely erred in law and misdirected himself in law in failing to consider and/or apply and/or properly apply the tests required for the grant of an interim injunction in the delivery of his Order."

Yes

Due to the foregoing answers, the other questions of law need not be considered.

Therefore, the appeal is allowed. I set aside the order of the learned High Court Judge.

No costs.

This judgment relates to an Appeal against a judgment of the Court of Appeal, originating from a judgment pronounced by the District Court of Panadura.

Background and institution of civil proceedings

On 23rd June 1987, the Plaintiff – Respondent – Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "the Plaintiff") instituted action in the District Court of Panadura against the 1st Defendant – Appellant – Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "the 1st Defendant" and at other times referred to as "the 1st Defendant - Appellant") on the premise that on 2nd September 1986 she gave a loan of Rs. 25,000/= to the 1st Defendant at an interest rate of 24% per annum. As security for the loan, the 1st Defendant mortgaged to her a property owned by her, which mortgage she alleged is depicted in mortgage bond No. 8643 dated 17th June 1986 attested by Notary Public Lasantha Stembo. The Plaintiff alleged that the 1st Defendant defaulted the repayment of the loan and interest amounting to Rs. 6,000/=, and accordingly prayed for a decree for the total amount due being Rs. 31,000/=. She also prayed for a decree for the sale by auction under the supervision of court the mortgaged property to recover the afore-stated amount due to her.

On 15th July 1994, the Plaintiff filed an amended Plaint. In addition to the 1st Defendant, the 2nd Defendant – Respondent – Appellant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "the 2nd Defendant" and at times referred to as "the 2nd Defendant - Appellant") was cited as the 2nd Defendant. The amended Plaint contained the same allegation against the 1st Defendant. However, the Plaintiff averred that the property referred to in the Plaint (also referred to in the schedule to mortgage bond No. 8643) had been previously subjected to a primary mortgage in favour of the 2nd Defendant and that the said primary mortgage was reflected in mortgage bond No. 8425 dated 12th March 1986 which had also been attested by Notary Public Lasantha Stembo. Accordingly, the Plaintiff averred that mortgage bond No. 8643 (the mortgage in favour of the Plaintiff) was a secondary mortgage and was subject to mortgage bond No. 8643 (a primary mortgage in favour of the 2nd Defendant).

On 19th June 1995, the 2nd Defendant filed Answer, in which she averred that the 1st Defendant had obtained a loan of Rs. 50,000/= from her at an annual interest rate of 24%. As security, the 1st Defendant mortgaged her property to the 2nd Defendant, which is reflected in mortgage deed No. 8425. The 2nd Defendant alleged that the 1st Defendant defaulted re-payment of the loan. She claimed that the mortgage given by the 1st Defendant in her favour (mortgage deed No. 8425), should be treated as a primary mortgage and hence her claim against the 1st Defendant should gain priority over the claim of the Plaintiff against the 1st Defendant. The 2nd Defendant also prayed for a decree against the 1st Defendant for the payment of Rs. 50,000/= to her, together with interest at the rate of 24% till the date of judgment. As a means of recovering the said amount, the 2nd Defendant prayed for an order for the sale of the afore-stated property, and should there be an amount remaining from the sales proceeds, payment of the sum due from the 1st Defendant to the Plaintiff.

On 9th March 1998, the 1st Defendant filed Answer denying that she obtained a loan from either the Plaintiff or the 2nd Defendant. She also denied having mortgaged her property to either the Plaintiff or to the 2nd Defendant. She averred that she obtained Rs. 15,000/= from 'Stembo's finance company' and that she signed 'some incomplete deed forms and several incomplete documents'. She pleaded illiteracy. She prayed that the Plaint be dismissed.

At the commencement of the trial, parties recorded one admission. That was to the effect that mortgage bond No. 8643 was signed by the 1st Defendant. Issues raised were as per the averments in the pleadings.

Evidence at the trial

Plaintiff - The Plaintiff testified and said that Lasantha Stembo ran an organization at which money was lent on interest. In June 1986, as promised by Stembo, she gave Rs. 25,000/= to him in order to obtain monthly interest thereon. She subsequently clarified that through Lasantha Stembo, she gave the money as a 'loan – mortgage' to the 1st Defendant. In return Lasantha Stembo gave her "P1", a mortgage deed bearing No. 8643. [At the time of producing "P1", no objection to it was raised on behalf of the defendants.] Subsequently, she did not receive either the money so given or the interest thereof.

2nd Defendant - The 2nd Defendant testifying stated that Lasantha Stembo inquired from her whether she would like to invest money in return for the mortgage of a land situated in Rajagiriya. He agreed. In March 1986, she invested Rs. 50,000/= in the organization of Lasantha Stembo. Accordingly, the mortgage deed was executed. Stembo introduced to her the 1st Defendant at the time the mortgage bond was executed. Two witnesses, the 1st Defendant and Stembo singed the deed. Stembo gave Rs. 25,000/= in cash to the 1st Defendant and another Rs. 25,000/= by way of a cheque. Later she received the mortgage bond. The 2nd Defendant produced marked "2V1" mortgage deed No. 8425. At this stage, on behalf of the 1st Defendant, her counsel indicated that the 1st Defendant is not contesting the fact that the deed was attested by the Notary Public, but was contesting the contents thereof.

1st Defendant - The testimony of the 1st Defendant was that in 1986, she wanted to obtain some money by mortgaging her land. Thus, she went to Stembo's office (which she referred to as a 'the finance company of Stembo') and sought an 'arrangement'. She did not meet either the Plaintiff or the 2nd Defendant or directly obtain money from them. She saw them for the first time in court. She initially obtained Rs. 35,000/= from Stembo by cheque and subsequently obtained another Rs. 15,000/=. She then signed some documents that had blank spaces. According to her testimony, she did not sign deed "P1". She further testified that though she has paid over Rs. 10,000/= as interest fees to Stembo's company, she did not pay any interest to either the Plaintiff or to the 2nd Defendant. Under cross-examination the 1st Defendant admitted that both "2V1" and "P1" contain her signature.

Judgment of the District Court

By his judgment dated 26th September 2000, the learned District Judge held in favour of both the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant.

The judgment of the District Court contains the following reasoning: In view of the 1st Defendant having contradicted herself (in comparison with the position she has taken up in the Answer) regarding obtaining a particular amount of money as a loan (as stated by her, from 'Stembo's finance company') and the number of occasions on which she obtained loans, it is not possible to place any reliance on the 1st Defendant's testimony and accordingly her testimony must be rejected. In comparison thereof, the learned judge has accepted the testimony of both the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant.

The learned district judge has arrived at the finding that the 2nd Defendant had through Lasantha Stembo lent Rs. 50,000/= to the 1st Defendant (a part of which by cheque and the other part in cash) in consideration of which the 1st Defendant had mortgaged property to her, which transaction is depicted in mortgage deed produced marked "2V1".

In view of the foregoing, the learned judge has answered the issues in favour of the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant. Accordingly, the learned judge of the District Court has held that the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant are entitled to the relief prayed for by them. He has also concluded that the mortgage held by the 2nd Defendant is a primary mortgage and subject to that the mortgage held by the Plaintiff is a secondary mortgage. He thus ordered the sale of the property referred to in the schedule of the two mortgage bonds (one and the same) for the recovery of the monies due from the 1st Defendant to the 2nd Defendant and the Plaintiff.

Appeal to the Court of Appeal

The 1st Defendant appealed to the Court of Appeal against the judgment of the District Court. It is the judgment of the Court of Appeal dated 10th May 2019 pronounced following the hearing of the said Appeal, which is the subject matter of the instant Appeal.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal

The learned Justice of the Court of Appeal has approached this matter on the footing that the issue to be determined is whether the two mortgage bonds "P1" and "2V1" are valid and effectual. Having taken into consideration the oral evidence of the 1st Defendant on the one hand and the evidence given by the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant on the other, the learned justice of the Court of Appeal has concluded that the documents marked and produced as "P1" and "2V1" which are ostensibly mortgage bonds are shams and are illusionary, fictitious and colourable instruments. In the circumstances, the learned Judge has concluded that the 1st Defendant has neither initially mortgaged her property to the 2nd Defendant nor thereafter mortgaged the same property to the Plaintiff. In this regard, the learned Judge has noted that Notary Public Lasantha Stembo had been operating a clandestine 'finance company'.

The learned judge has further observed that when "2V1" was sought to be marked and produced at the trial, counsel for the 1st Defendant objected to it. In that regard, it has been observed that the position of the 1st Defendant was that what she signed were several 'blank' papers, and that she has contradicted the testimony of the 2nd Defendant.

The position of the learned judge is that in the circumstances, the 2nd Defendant should have called at least one witness of "2V1" to prove the due execution of the document. The learned judge opined that the failure to do so was fatal to the admissibility of the deed.

The learned judge has noted that both the 2nd Defendant and the Plaintiff have not discharged the burden cast on them by section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance read with section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance, which required them to prove that the two documents "P1" and "2V1" had been duly executed.

In conclusion, the learned Justice of the Court of Appeal has held that the 1st Defendant has not executed the purported mortgage bonds "P1" or "2V1". He has held that they are nullities. The Court of Appeal has also concluded that there was no 'loan agreement' between the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant and the 2nd Defendant and the 1st Defendant. Therefore, the 1st Defendant had no obligation towards either the Plaintiff or the 2nd Defendant. It was Notary Stembo who had loaned money to the 1st Defendant. Therefore, the 1st Defendant could not have executed real and effectual mortgages in favour of the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant.

Accordingly, the claims of both the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant were rejected. Based on this reasoning, the Court of Appeal allowed the Appeal of the 1st Defendant and set aside the judgment of the District Court.

Appeal to the Supreme Court and questions of law

Being aggrieved by the judgment of the Court of Appeal, the 2nd Defendant (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "the 2nd Defendant - Appellant") appealed to the Supreme Court. Notice of Appeal was served on both the 1st Defendant – Appellant – Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "the 1st Defendant - Respondent") and the Plaintiff – Respondent – Respondent. By letter dated 4th November 2019, the Plaintiff – Respondent – Respondent informed this Court that she is not objecting to the granting of leave. Thereafter, the Plaintiff – Respondent – Respondent did not participate in the proceedings held before this Court. The 1st Defendant – Respondent was represented by counsel who objected to the grant of leave. On a consideration of the Petition seeking special leave to appeal and submissions made by both learned counsel, on 25th June 2020 this Court granted leave. Both before and following leave being granted, the 1st Defendant – Appellant – Respondent participated fully in the proceedings held before this Court through learned counsel.

Vide journal entry of 25th June 2020, in this matter, leave was granted by this Court on the following questions of law:

(i) Did the Court of Appeal err in law by holding that the mortgage bond No. 8425 dated 12th March 1986 has not been proved?

(ii) Did the Court of Appeal err in law by holding that the consideration has not been paid by the 2nd Defendant?

During the hearing, both counsel submitted to this Court that the outcome of this Appeal will rest on the answer this Court arrives at with regard to the first question of law, and that, should this Court conclude that mortgage bond No. 8425 has been proved, the appellant would succeed and that an opposite finding will result in the Appeal being dismissed.

Submissions on behalf of the 2nd Defendant – Appellant

Learned counsel for the 2nd Defendant – Appellant drew the attention of this Court to the following items of evidence, those being that the 1st Defendant admitted (i) the execution by her mortgage deed No. 8425 and (ii) that her brother had signed mortgage deed No. 8643 as a witness. At the time deed No. 8425 ("2V1") was produced by the 2nd Defendant, no objection was raised on behalf of the 1st Defendant. Learned counsel pointed out to the explanation to section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code. He further submitted that as the 1st Defendant admitted the due execution of the mortgage deed No. 8425, proof of due execution under section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance was not necessary. In the circumstances, learned counsel stressed that it was incorrect for the learned Justice of the Court of Appeal to have insisted on compliance with section 68, and thus he submitted that the rejection of deed No. 8425 was an error of law and fact.

Learned counsel for the Appellant cited two judgments of this Court, namely the judgment of Justice Vijith K. Malalgoda in Mohamed Naleem Mohomed Ismail v. Samsulebbe Hamithu and the judgment of Justice Sisira de Abrew in Kadireshan Kugabalan v. Sooriya Mudiyanselage Ranaweera and Another, which he submitted was ostensibly against his submissions, though the facts of those cases could be distinguished from the facts pertaining to the instant Appeal. He pointed out that Justice E.A.G.R. Amarasekara had pronounced a dissenting opinion in Kadireshan Kugabalan v. Sooriya Mudiyanselage Ranaweera and Another, which was in his favour.

In conclusion, learned counsel for the Appellant moved that this Court be pleased to set aside the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal and affirm the judgment of the District Court.

Submissions on behalf of the 1st Defendant – Respondent

Citing certain excerpts of the proceedings of the trial, learned counsel for the 1st Defendant – Respondent submitted that it was erroneous to assert that the 1st Defendant did not object to "2V1" at the time it was produced. She insisted that even if one were to assume that "2V1" was admitted by the District Court without any objection from the 1st Defendant, nevertheless, the 2nd Defendant could not have been relieved of the burden of proving "2V1" as laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. Learned counsel elaborated on that submission by asserting that if at all, what was admitted was the 'attestation' of the deed, and not the 'execution' of it. It was submitted that the evidence of the 2nd Defendant stands alone without proof of the execution of deed No. 8425.

Learned counsel submitted that notwithstanding the ratio of earlier cases such as Cinemas Limited v. Sounderarajan, Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another v. Jugolinija – Boal East and Balapitiya Gunananda Thero v. Talalle Methananda Thero which contained the view that where documents have not been objected or opposed to by the opposing party at the close of the case, those documents are deemed to have been duly proved, in recent times an exception to that principle has been identified by superior courts. Learned counsel submitted that this Court has recently held that, if documents are required to be proved in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, then notwithstanding absence of objection by the opposing party, those documents must be proved as required by section 68. In support of that contention, learned counsel submitted the judgment of Justice Prasanna Jayawardena, PC, in Amerasinghe Arachchige Don Dharmaratne v. Dodangodage Premadasa and Others and the judgment of Justice Sisira J. de Abrew in Dadallage Anil Shantha Samarasinghe v. Dadallage Mervin Silva and Another.

Learned counsel also drew the attention of this Court to the findings of the Court of Appeal that as regards the purported loan said to have been obtained by the 1st Defendant from the Plaintiff and from the 2nd Defendant, there was no muutum, and as such, there could not have been a mortgage of property by the 1st Defendant to the Plaintiff and to the 2nd Defendant, as a mortgage bond is only an accessory to another obligation.

In view of the foregoing, learned counsel for the Respondent moved this Court to be pleased to affirm the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal and dismiss this Appeal with costs.

Consideration of evidence and submissions of counsel, conclusions reached and findings of the Court

In this part of the judgment, on a consideration of the evidence led before the District Court by the 1st and 2nd Defendants and submissions made before this Court by learned counsel, I propose to deal in detail with the first question of law in respect of which leave was granted, i.e. whether the Court of Appeal had erred in law by holding that mortgage bond No. 8425 dated 12th March 1986 had not been proved. I shall thereafter, briefly though deal with the second question.

I wish to commence this analysis by observing that an examination of the issues raised on behalf of the 1st Defendant at the trial reveals that she has not raised an issue challenging the validity of mortgage bond No. 8425. Furthermore, through the issues, she has not required the 2nd Defendant to prove the said mortgage bond.

It is pertinent to also note that the 8th issue raised before the District Court, required the learned district judge to answer the following question:

"Through mortgage bond No. 8425 written and attested by L.T.K. Stembo, did the 1st Defendant mortgage property referred to in the schedule to the Plaint and obtain a sum of Rs. 50,000/= as a loan at an annual interest rate of 24%?"

It is to be noted that this issue has been raised on the footing that mortgage bond No. 8425 is a valid document. However, in order to answer the said issue in favour of the 2nd Defendant, the learned district judge should have impliedly though concluded that mortgage bond No. 8425 has been proved in terms of the law. The learned district judge has answered this issue in the affirmative.

Furthermore, the 12th issue raised before the District Court, required the learned district judge to answer the following question:

"Has any transaction occurred between the 2nd Defendant and the 1st Defendant, founded upon Deed No. 8425 referred to in the issues raised by the 2nd Defendant?"

The learned district judge has answered this issue also in the affirmative.

A consideration of the judgment of the District Court also reveals that the learned district judge has concluded that the execution of mortgage bond No. 8425 has been duly proved by the 2nd Defendant.

During the trial, at the time Mortgage Bond No. 8425 was sought to be produced by the 2nd Defendant marked in evidence as "2V1", learned counsel for the 1st Defendant has submitted to court that the 1st Defendant was not disputing the fact that the Notary wrote and attested (certified) the document, but was disputing (only) the contents thereof. Thus, the proceeds of the trial do not show that "2V1" was produced by the 2nd Defendant 'subject to proof'. Further, when learned counsel for the 2nd Defendant closed the case, he has once against marked document "2V1", and on that occasion, learned counsel for the 1st Defendant has not raised any objection to "2V1". Nor has the 1st Defendant required the 2nd Defendant to prove the document "2V1".

It was in this factual backdrop and the provisions of section 154(1) of the Civil Procedure Code and the Explanation thereto, that learned counsel for the 2nd Defendant - Appellant submitted that the 2nd Defendant was not required by law to prove "2V1" as provided by section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. In response, the position of the learned counsel for the 1st Defendant - Respondent was that notwithstanding the provisions of section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code, if the law requires a particular document to be proved in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, strict compliance with that provision of law was necessary, before inviting court to treat the contents of such document as evidence.

A consideration of these two opposing submissions must necessarily commence by considering the legal background to the evidential requirement contained in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance.

I must take note of the fact that, of the four categories of evidence presently recognized by the law of Evidence of this country, namely 'oral evidence', 'documentary evidence', 'contemporaneous audio-visual recordings' and 'computer evidence', documentary evidence plays a critical part in civil cases. Chapter V of the Evidence Ordinance has been devoted to 'Documentary Evidence', and section 61 provides that the contents of a document may be proved by either 'primary evidence' or 'secondary evidence'. While section 62 describes what is primary evidence relating to a document, section 63 describes what is secondary evidence relating to a document. Sections 64 and 65 relate to the admissibility of primary and secondary forms of documentary evidence, which emphasize on original evidence (evidence relating to the contents of a document being presented through primary evidence) being presented, save and except permitted forms of secondary evidence (authorized forms of copies and other means by which evidence relating to the contents of a document can be given) and instances where the presentation of such secondary evidence would be permissible. These provisions so evidently have been crafted to ensure that genuine documents are produced in judicial proceedings, and thus go into the very root of the integrity of documentary evidence.

Provisions of the Evidence Ordinance contained in sections 61 to 65 though of no special relevance to the instant case, are of importance to bear in mind, as in the scheme of the law relating to proof of a document, it is necessary to first ensure that the document is admissible prior to proving its due execution and thereby inviting court to treat its contents as evidence. The document must be first made admissible, and thereafter it should be proved. To that extent, this Court takes note of the fact that it was not argued either at the trial or in the instant Appeal that the original of deed No. 8425 or an authorized copy thereof was not produced. To that extent, the genuineness of the deed is not in doubt and thus, the document is admissible.

Sections 67 relates to proof of handwriting and signature of documents, irrespective of whether or not the law requires the document to be attested. Section 68 provide for the manner in which a document the execution of which law requires to be attested should be proved. This distinction arises out of the fact that the law mandatorily requires certain documents to be 'attested' and as regards some others, no such imperative requirement existing. Section 68 relates to the manner of proving documents the execution of which are required by law to be attested.

Before proceeding any further, at this stage itself, it would be useful to consider section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance No. 7 of 1840 (as amended), which provides as follows:

> "No sale, purchase, transfer, assignment or mortgage of land or other immovable property and no promise, bargain, contract or agreement for effecting any such object or for establishing any security, interest or incumbrance affecting land or other immovable property (other than a lease at will or for any period not exceeding one month), nor any contract or agreement for the future sale or purchase of any land or other immovable property and no notice, given under the provisions of the Thesawalamai Pre-emption Ordinance, of an intention or proposal to sell any undivided share or interest in land held in joint or common ownership, shall be of force or avail in law unless the same shall be in writing and signed by the party making the same or by some person lawfully authorized by him or her in the presence of a licensed notary public and two or more witnesses present at the same time, and unless the execution of such writing, deed or instrument be duly attested by such notary and witnesses*."* [Emphasis added.]

It would thus be seen that for mortgage deed No. 8425 to be of force or avail in law (valid in the eyes of the law and enforceable through judicial proceedings), section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance requires the following to be satisfied:

(i) The mortgage should be in writing.

(ii) The mortgage should have been signed by the party who made the mortgage (in the instant appeal by the 1st Defendant being the mortgagor) who is the executant of the deed.

(iii) The mortgagor should have signed the mortgage in the presence or a Notary Public and two or more witnesses who were present at the same time.

(iv) The mortgage should have been duly attested by the Notary and the afore-stated two witnesses.

In Weerappuli Gamage Gamini Ranaweera v Matharage Dharmasiri and others [SC Appeal 56/2020, SC Minutes of 20.05.2022], Justice Samayawardhena has held that in the execution of deeds, the requirements under section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance are mandatory, and that non-compliance renders a deed invalid.

At this point, it would be necessary to consider section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, which was at the epicenter of the arguments presented before us during the hearing of the Appeal.

Section 68 provides as follows:

> "If a document is required by law to be attested*, it shall* not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution*, if there be an attesting witness alive, and subject to the process of the court and capable of giving evidence."*

Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, the undisputed author of the Indian Evidence Act (the Evidence Ordinance of this country being a virtual clone copy of the Indian Evidence Act, subject only to a few changes) in his Digest to the Indian Evidence Act has described the rule contained in Section 68 of the Indian Evidence Act (original section), stemming from an ancient rule of English common law which is inflexible in its operation. Thus, strict compliance with this provision is required in situations where the opposing party denies the due execution of the document.

In essence, what section 68 requires to be done by the party presenting the document and seeking that the contents thereof be treated as evidence, is, if the document is one which is required by law to be attested, then, (i) if at least one attesting witness is alive, (ii) such witness is subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and (iii) if such witness is capable of giving evidence, then to call such witness to testify for the purpose of proving the due execution of the document. Non-compliance with this requirement is fatal to the use of the contents of the document as evidence.

As pointed out above, section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance requires inter-alia, a deed pertaining to an immovable property to be duly attested by a licensed Notary and by two witnesses. Thus, a mortgage deed is a document the execution of which the law requires to be attested: Hence, the applicability of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. Therefore, ordinarily, for the contents of deed No. 8425 to have been used as evidence, it would have been necessary for the party presenting the deed as evidence (namely the 2nd Defendant) to have called either or both the attesting witnesses (Weerasekera Hettiarachchige Stanley Perera and Hiniduma Kapuge Gamini) to give evidence for the purpose of proving the due execution of the deed. Their names appear on the list of witnesses submitted on behalf of the 2nd Defendant. However, neither of them have been called to testify.

In the very early case of Bandiya v. Ungu et. al (15 NLR 263), Chief Justice Lascelles explained that the requirements contained in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance is a "wholesome rule" and held that, a notarially attested Deed shall not be used as evidence, until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, subject to the circumstances that an attesting witness is alive, he is capable of giving evidence and is subject to the process of the court.

It has been held in L. Marian v. Jesuthasan et. al [59 NLR 348], that for the purposes of proof under section 68, in addition or in the alternative to calling the 'attesting witnesses' to testify, the Notary who attested the deed can also be called to testify (treating such Notary also as an 'attesting witness'), provided he is capable of testifying that the signature is that of the executant, and is therefore able to testify that the executant placed his signature on the document in his presence. For that purpose, the executant must have been known to the Notary. In the Notarial attestation of Deed No. 8425, Notary Lasantha Stembo does not certify that he knew the executant. In fact, his certification indicates that he knew the two attesting witnesses and that they had claimed that they knew the executant - mortgagor. Thus, in the instant matter it would not have been possible for the 2nd Defendant to have called Notary Lasantha Stembo to testify regarding the due execution of deed No. 8425 by the 1st Defendant. However, he could have been called to prove that the other formalities relating to the deed were duly performed. In fact, it appears that the 2nd Defendant had listed Notary Lasantha Stembo as a witness, though he was not called to testify.

In view of the attendant facts and circumstances of this case, what is contemplated by 'due execution' is that the 1st Defendant signed deed No. 8425 as a consenting party (upon a correct understanding of the contents of the mortgage deed) and that the signature of the purported mortgagor is that of the 1st Defendant. Admittedly, the 2nd Defendant (Appellant) did not take steps in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance to prove the due execution of mortgage deed No. 8425. As stated above, the position advanced on behalf of the 2nd Defendant is that it was not necessary for him to prove the deed in terms of section 68, as the 1st Defendant did not initially object to the deed being produced in evidence (when it was marked "2V1" and did not reiterate that objection when the 2nd Defendant closed her case).

Therefore, this Court needs to consider whether the law exempted the 2nd Defendant from proving Deed No. 8425 in terms of section 68. There are six primary exceptions to the rule of proof contained in section 68. They are found in sections 69, 70, 71, 89, and 90 of the Evidence Ordinance. In view of the positions that were taken up by learned counsel for the 2nd Defendant - Appellant and the learned counsel for the 1st Defendant - Respondent, it is only necessary for this Court to consider the applicability of the exception found in section 70, which reads as follows:

> "The admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested."

Therefore, the admission by a party to an attested document that it was executed by him, will, so far as such party is concerned, supersede the duty cast on the party which produced the document and is seeking that the contents of the document be treated as evidence, of either calling the attesting witness or of giving any other evidence of its due execution. Thus, section 70 serves as a proviso to section 68. In the circumstances, it is necessary to consider whether the 1st Defendant had admitted the execution of mortgage deed No. 8425. If the 1st Defendant has admitted to the execution of deed No. 8425, then it would not have been necessary for the 2nd Defendant to have complied with the rule of proof contained in section 68.

In this matter, prior to the commencement of the trial, the 1st Defendant has not admitted the execution of Deed No. 8425. Thus, this Court must consider whether some other admission recognized by law of the due execution of the deed exists.

Section 154(1) of the Civil Procedure Code provides that "Every document or writing which a party intends to use as evidence against his opponent must be formally tendered by him in the course of proving his case at the time when its contents or purport are first immediately spoken to by a witness. …" In the instant case, there is no challenge that the 2nd Defendant had not complied with this requirement.

The explanation to section 154 provides as follows:
"If the opposing party does not, on the document being tendered in evidence, object to its being received, and if the document is not such as is forbidden by law to be received in evidence, the court should admit it.
If, however, on the document being tendered the opposing party objects to its being admitted in evidence, then commonly two questions arise for court:
Firstly, whether the document is authentic – in other words, is what the party tendering it represents it to be, and Secondly, whether supposing it be authentic, it constitutes legally admissible evidence as against the party who is sought to be affected by it.
The latter question in general is a matter of argument only, but the first must be supported by such testimony as the party can adduce. If the court is of the opinion that the testimony adduced for this purpose, developed and tested by cross-examination, makes out a prima facie case of authenticity and is further of opinion that the authentic document is evidence admissible against the opposing party, then it should admit the document as before.
If, however, the court is satisfied that either of those questions must be answered in the negative, then it should refuse to admit the document.
Whether the document is admitted or not it should be marked as soon as any witness makes a statement with regard to it; and if not earlier marked on this account, it must, at least, be marked when the court decides upon admitting it." [Emphasis added.]

It would be seen that section 154(1) contains a procedural requirement (as opposed to an evidential requirement) as to the time at which a document should be tendered by a party to civil proceedings governed by the Civil Procedure Code. The document should be tendered by the party intending to use the document as evidence, when its contents or purport are first immediately spoken to by a witness. The 'explanation' to section 154 highlighted above, provides guidance which is imperative for the court to follow, on what the court should do when a document is sought to be produced by a party. If the opposing party does not object to the document being received, the court should admit the document, unless the document is such that its production is prohibited by law.

In view of the afore-stated 'explanation' to section 154 and the cursus curiae of civil courts, the issue which arises for consideration is whether, if at the time the document is sought to be produced the opposing party does not object to the document being tendered, and or, at the time the party that produced the document seeks to close its case and reads in evidence the contents of the document, the opposing party does not reiterate its objection, and if the document is such that the law requires it to be attested, does the party seeking to produce the document become exempted from the requirement of proving the document as stipulated in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance?

In search of an answer to this question, I shall now consider the applicable judicial precedent, giving special attention to the judgments cited by learned counsel for the Appellant and the Respondent.

In Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another v. Jugolinija – Boal East [(1981) 1 Sri L.R. 18], in clear obiter Chief Justice Samarakoon observed with regard to a document that the law did not require attestation (and therefore not a document which comes within the scope of the documents provided in section 68), that, though the opposing party (at the time the document was first produced) had objected to the marking of the document without calling its author to testify, since the opposing party had not once again objected to the document when counsel who produced the document closed the case and read in evidence the documents marked and produced, the contents of the document in issue is evidence for all purposes of the law. His Lordship proceeded to observe that this was the cursus curiae of original civil courts. Thus, he held that in appeal it was too late to object to contents of such document being accepted as evidence.

In response to the submissions made by learned counsel for the Appellant, it would be difficult for this Court to accept the proposition that Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another v. Jugolinija – Boal East is authority to the principle asserted by him, that if a deed is not objected to by the opposing party when the case for the party who sought to produce the document is closed, proof of the document becomes unnecessary, notwithstanding non-compliance with the requirement of proof contained in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. That is because, it must be borne in mind that Chief Justice Samarakoon made the afore-stated observation in respect of a document which did not come within the purview of section 68, as the document in issue was not a document which was required by law to be attested. In fact, the judgment does not even make a reference (quite rightfully) to section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance.

In Balapitiya Gunananda Thero v. Talalle Methananda Thero*, [(1997) 2 Sri L.R. 101],* His Lordship the then Chief Justice G.P.S. De Silva referring to a handbill (announcing a Buddhist religious festival at which certain lay persons were to be ordained and robed as Buddhist monks), which document was produced at the trial 'subject to proof', although was read in evidence at the closure of the case for the party that produced the document without objection from the opposing party and the learned district judge having ruled that the document had not been proved, held following Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another v. Jugolinija – Boal East that, in view of the cursus curiae of civil courts, the document becomes evidence in the case.

It is necessary to observe that though the documents in issue in Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another v. Jugolinija – Boal East and Balapitiya Gunananda Thero v. Talalle Methananda were similar in that both documents were such that the law did not require attestation, the facts were slightly different. In the first case, the opposing party had not objected to the admission of the document at both stages, i.e. when it was originally marked and produced and when the case for the party who produced the document being closed and the contents of the document being read in evidence. The objection was taken only in Appeal. Whereas, in the second case, when the document was originally produced, it was objected to and the document was produced 'subject to proof', and when the case was closed for the party who produced the document, the objection was not reiterated. In both Appeals, the Supreme Court has held that in the circumstances, the documents in issue must be treated as having been duly proved and hence their contents be taken into consideration as evidence. I would respectfully express agreement with both these findings, as in both matters, the court was not required to adjudicate in appeal regarding proof of a document which was required by law to be attested. Thus, it is my considered opinion that both these judgments are of no particular relevance to the instant matter, as in this Appeal consideration need be given regarding proof of a deed, which is a document the execution of which is required by law to be attested, and thus coming within the scope of section 68.

In Cinemas Limited v. Sounderarajan [(1998) 2 Sri L.R. 16] Justice F.N.D. Jayasuriya dealing with the admissibility of a document issued by a competent authority of a foreign country, held that, when an objection to a document is not taken up at the trial or inquiry and is raised for the first time in appeal or revision the court must consider the effect of the Explanation to section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code. Justice Jayasuriya proceeded to point out that "… in civil proceedings it is of paramount importance for the opponent to object to a document if it is inadmissible having regard to the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance. Where he fails to do so, the objections to admissibility cannot be raised for the first time in appeal. … Had objection been taken, the party proposing to adduce the document would have tendered to the court evidence aliunde and by the failure to take the objection the opposing party has waived the objection. … In a civil case when a document is tendered the opposing party should immediately object to the document. Where the opposing party fails to object, the trial judge has to admit the document, unless the document is forbidden by law to be received, and no objection to its admission can be taken up in appeal."

It is observable that Cinemas Limited v. Sounderarajan also does not deal with proof of a document which comes within the scope of section 68 and furthermore, the judgment makes no reference to the impact of either presenting or not presenting an objection to a document when the party that produced the document seeks to close its case and read in evidence the contents of the document.

In Samarakoon v. Gunasekera and Another [(2011) 1 Sri L.R. 149], Justice Gamini Amaratunga referring to proof relating to four deeds produced at the trial 'subject to proof', and no witness having been called for the purpose of proving the deeds in compliance with section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, and when at the closure of the case the contents of the deeds were read in evidence the opposing side having objected and moved court to exclude such evidence, held as follows:
"In the course of giving evidence, if a witness refers to a document which he proposes to use as evidence, it shall be marked in evidence. If the party against whom such document is sought to be used as evidence, does not object to it being received in evidence, and if the document is not one forbidden by law to be received in evidence, the document and its contents become evidence in the case. On the other hand, if the opposing party objects to the document being used as evidence, it is to be admitted subject to proof. When a document is admitted subject to proof, the party tendering it in evidence is obliged to formally prove it by calling the evidence necessary to prove the document according to law. If such evidence is not called and if no objection is taken to the document when it is read in evidence at the time of closing the case of the party who tendered the document, it becomes evidence in the case. On the other hand, if the document is objected to at the time when it is read in evidence before closing the case of the party who tendered the document in evidence, the document cannot be used as evidence for the party tendering it.

A deed for the sale or transfer of land, being a document which is required by law to be attested, has to be proved in the manner set out in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance by proof that the maker (the vendor) of that document signed it in the presence of witnesses and the notary. If this is not done the document and its contents cannot be used in evidence."

Thus, it would be seen that, in Samarakoon v. Gunasekera and Another this Court has insisted on strict compliance with the requirement of proof contained in section 68 with regard to documents which the law requires to be attested (such as a deed), if the opposing party objects to the document when it is initially produced (thus, produced 'subject to proof') and the objection is reiterated when the party who produced the document closes its case and reads in evidence the contents of the document. It would also be noted that the court has also not disregarded the explanation to section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code and the cursus curiae of civil courts relating to the practice adopted when the case for the opposing party that produced the document is sought to be closed.

In Amerasinghe Arachchige Don Dharmaratne v. Dodangodage Premadasa and Others [SC Appeal 158/2013, SC Minutes 12th October 2016], the Plaintiff had produced 'subject to proof' three deeds based upon which he was claiming title to a land, and was required by the Defendant in the Answer to prove the three documents. However, no issue had been raised by the Defendants disputing the validity of the three deeds. The Plaintiff called only one out of the three Notaries who had attested the three deeds. The court concluded that the Notary who was called had also not known the executant of that particular deed. None of the attesting witnesses were called to testify. While concluding that compliance with section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance was an imperative requirement, Justice Prasanna Jayawardena held that, the Plaintiff's case must fail, as he had not proved the three deeds as required by law.

I wish to now consider Mohamed Naleem Mohomed Ismail v. Samsulebbe Hamithu [SC Appeal 04/2016, SC Minutes 2nd April 2018 (reported in BASL Law Journal Vol. XXIV, 2018/19)], wherein, Justice Malalgoda also considered proof of a document which the law required to be attested. However, the facts of this case differ from the facts of Samarakoon v. Gunasekera and Another and Amerasinghe Arachchige Don Dharmaratne v. Dodangodage Premadasa and Others. In this case, when the deed was produced, the opposing party objected to its production, but when the party that produced the document closed its case without having called any witness to prove the deed, the opposing party did not raise any specific objection regarding the failure on the part of the party who produced the deed to prove the document. Justice Malalgoda held that in the absence of any written admission recorded at the trial, and an objection recorded when the document was initially marked and produced, it is difficult to ignore the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, even though no specific objection was raised when the party that produced the document closed its case producing several documents including the document in issue.

It would thus be seen that in Mohamed Naleem Mohomed Ismail v. Samsulebbe Hamithu this Court has recognized the importance of strict compliance with section 68, if an objection to the deed was raised either when the document was initially sought to be produced or when that party closed its case. Thus, impliedly holding that when a document that is required by law to be attested (such as a deed) is produced at a trial, strict compliance with the requirement of proof contained in section 68 would not be necessary, only if, an objection to the document was not raised when the document was sought to be initially produced and when the party that produced the document closed its case and read in evidence the contents of such document. If in either of these situations, an objection was raised by the opposing party, the party that produced the document must prove it in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance.

In Dadallage Anil Shantha Samarasinghe v. Dadallage Mervin Silva and Another [SC Appeal 45/2010, SC Minutes 11th June 2019], at the trial, the Plaintiff had produced a deed 'subject to proof', and at the closure of the case for the Plaintiff, the Defendant had not objected to the document. Justice Sisira de Abrew observed that although a document is produced in court with or without objection, it cannot be used as evidence if it is not proved in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. Whether the opposing party takes up an objection or not to a deed which is sought to be produced, the court will have to follow the procedure laid down in law. Justice de Abrew held that, when a document which is required to be proved in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance is produced in evidence 'subject to proof', but not objected to at the close of the case of the party which produced it, such a document cannot be used as evidence by courts if it is not proved in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. He held further that failure on the part of a party to object to a document during the trial does not permit court to use the document as evidence if the document which should be proved in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance has not been proved. Acts performed or not performed by parties in the course of a trial do not remove the rules governing the proof of documents.

I shall now consider Kadireshan Kugabalan v. Sooriya Mudiyanselage Ranaweera and Another [SC Appeal 36/2014, SC Minutes 12th February 2021]. In this matter, the plaintiff sought to establish that he had acquired title to the land in issue through a deed by which he alleged that the defendant transferred title to him. The defendant denied having transferred title to the plaintiff and also denied that he signed the relevant title deed. Further, he denied the signature which appears on the deed. The defendant also denied that he knew the relevant Notary. When the plaintiff produced the deed in question, the defendant objected to it being produced, and therefore it was produced marked 'subject to proof'. In this backdrop, the plaintiff called the relevant Notary as a witness. However, he did not call the two attesting witnesses to testify. The Notary's position was that the executant of the deed was unknown to him. Further, in the attestation, the Notary has failed to record that the two attesting witnesses were known to him, and that they knew the defendant. However, when the plaintiff closed his case and read in evidence the contents of the deed, the defendant did not reiterate his objection to the production of the deed and its contents being treated as evidence.

Expressing the majority view, Justice Sisira de Abrew quoting Marian v. Jethuthasan held that as the defendant was not known to the Notary and as the witnesses were not known to the defendant either, the Notary could not vouch for the due execution of the deed by the defendant. Therefore, the Notary Public cannot be regarded as an attesting witness. In the circumstances, Justice de Abrew held that the deed in issue had not been proved in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. He observed that "… although a document is produced in court with or without objection, it cannot be used as evidence if it is not proved. If the principle enunciated in Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another v. Jugolinija Boal East is accepted in respect of deeds, even a fraudulent deed marked subject to proof can be used as evidence if it is not objected by the opposing party at the close of the case of the party which produced it. In such a situation, one can argue that courts will have to disregard section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. … Whether the opposing party takes up an objection or not to a deed which is sought to be produced, the courts will have to follow the procedure laid down in law. … when a document which is required to be proved in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance is produced in evidence subject to proof but not objected to at the close of the case of the party which produced it, such a document cannot be used as evidence by courts if it is not proved in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. … failure on the part of a party to object to a document during the trial does not permit court to use the document as evidence if the document which should be proved in accordance with the procedure laid down in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance has not been proved.". In the circumstances, the Appeal of the Plaintiff was dismissed.

Pronouncing a concurring judgement as regard the outcome of the Appeal (that the Appeal should be dismissed), nevertheless expressing different reasons therefor, Justice E.A.G.R. Amarasekara quoting the legal maxim cursus curiae est lex curiae ("the practice of court is the law of the court") held that if a particular practice of court is not inconsistent with a rule laid down by a statute or a long-standing practice or usage, that practice has the force of law. He highlighted the importance of not invalidating in Appeal, long-standing practices of original courts, as such rulings could have far-reaching and serious implications and repercussions to litigants. Citing several judgements of the Supreme Court, Justice Amarasekara who in my respectful view is ideally suited to comment on practices of original civil courts, held that if no objection is taken when a document is tendered in evidence for the first time and marking it, for all purposes of the case, it becomes evidence, even if it is a deed. In such circumstances, it is not necessary to prove the deed in accordance with section 68. However, as the objection to the reception of the deed as evidence had not been taken in the original court (at the time of the closure of the case for the Plaintiff) Justice Amarasekara held that that objection cannot be taken up for the first time in Appeal. Therefore, he agreed with the majority view that the Appeal should be dismissed.

It would be seen that both Dadallage Anil Shantha Samarasinghe v. Dadallage Mervin Silva and Another and the majority view in Kadireshan Kugabalan v. Sooriya Mudiyanselage Ranaweera and Another (majority view) follow the principle contained in the previous two judgments relating to proof of documents which are required by law to be attested (such as deeds), which insist on strict compliance with section 68, save only in situations where the opposing party has not objected to the admission of the document when it was initially sought to be produced thus requiring the document to be produced 'subject to proof' and not having reiterated the objection when the party which produced the document closed its case and read in evidence its contents.

It is my view that, in the light of judicial precedence cited above, it was quite correct in law for the learned justice of the Court of Appeal to have insisted upon strict compliance with section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance as regards proof of mortgage deed No. 8425 ("2V1"), and in the absence thereof conclude that the said mortgage deed and mortgage deed No. 8643 ("P1") were both invalid and unenforceable, as they have not been proved as stipulated by section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. That was the primary basis for the Court of Appeal having ruled against the 2nd Defendant, and allowed the Appeal of the 1st Defendant.

In my view, judicial precedent pertaining to the applicability of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance and the necessity of proof of execution of documents required by law to be attested is very clear, consistent and founded upon rational reasoning. The reasoning is aimed at protecting the integrity of evidence stemming from contents of documents, the execution of which are required by law to be attested. The learned judges seem to have been acutely conscious that when contents of documents the execution of which are required by law to be attested such as deeds are received in evidence, oral evidence which contradicts contents of such proven documents which are required by law to be attested, are excluded. Thus, the importance in ensuring that documents required by law to be attested by proved to a high degree of authenticity.

I must now take cognizance of a recent and pertinent legislative development (which took place following the hearing of this Appeal and pending the delivery of this judgment), which caused the addition of a new section numbered "154A" to the Civil Procedure Code by section 2 of the Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act No. 17 of 2022. This Act (No. 17 of 2022), came into operation upon the Speaker having certified the Act on 23rd June 2022.

The new section so introduced to the Civil Procedure Code (section 154A) provides as follows:

> "(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance (Chapter 14), in any proceedings under this Code, it shall not be necessary to adduce formal proof of the execution or genuineness of any deed, or document which is required by law to be attested, other than a will executed under the Wills Ordinance (Chapter 60), and on the face of it purports to have been duly executed, unless –
>
> (a) In the pleadings or further pleadings in an action filed under the regular procedure in terms of this Code, the execution or genuineness of such deed or document is impeached and raised as an issue; or
>
> (b) the court requires such proof:
>
> Provided that, the provisions of this section shall not be applicable in any event, a party to an action seeks to produce any deed or document not included in the pleadings of that party at any proceedings under this Code.
> (2) The provisions of subsection (1), shall mutatis mutandis apply in the actions on summary procedure under this Code."

Thus, it is seen that section 154A(1) of the Civil Procedure Code is a proviso to section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. Compliance with the requirements of section 68 would become necessary only if (a) in the pleadings or further pleadings the execution or genuineness of the deed or other document (which the law requires to be attested) has been impeached and also raised as an issue, or (b) the court requires the party which produced the deed or other document to provide proof of it. This proviso would not have any application, if the deed or such other document was not pleaded. It would thus be seen that section 154A(1) causes a significant impact on the previous judicial precedent relating to proof of deeds and other documents which the law requires to be attested. The imperative nature of the form of proof insisted upon by section 68 is now significantly narrowed down. Thus, the necessity of proving the contents of a deed as provided by section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance would arise only if (a) the execution or genuineness of the deed has been impeached in the pleadings of the opposing party, and (b) an issue relating to proof has been raised by the opposing party, or (c) the court requires proof of such deed to be adduced, or (d) the deed in issue has not been included in the pleadings.

> "Notwithstanding anything contained in section 2 of this Act, and the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance, in any case or appeal pending on the date of coming into operation of this Act –
>
> (i) if the opposing party does not object or has not objected to it being received as evidence on the deed or document being tendered in evidence*; or*
>
> (ii) if the opposing party has objected to it being received as evidence on the deed or document being tendered in evidence but not objected at the close of a case when such document is read in evidence*,*
>
> the court shall admit such deed or document as evidence without requiring further proof*;*
>
> (b) if the opposing party objects or has objected to it being received as evidence*,* the court may decide whether it is necessary or it was necessary as the case may be, to adduce formal proof of the execution or genuineness of any such deed or document considering the merits of the objections taken with regard to the execution of genuineness of such deed or document."

As observed by Justice Priyantha Fernando in Wadduwa Palliyagurunnanselage Namal Senanayake v. L.B. Finance PLC (SC/CHC Appeal No. 56/2013, SC Minutes of 14th June 2023) the afore-stated transitional provision applies to not only pending trials, it applies to pending Appeals (such as the instant Appeal) as well.

In view of this transitional provision, with regard to pending Appeals, the following scheme shall apply:

(i) If the opposing party had not objected to the admission of the deed either when it was initially tendered in evidence or when the party that produced the document closed its case and read in evidence the contents of the document, then the court is required to admit the document without insistence upon complying with the form of proof stipulated in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance.

(ii) If the opposing party had objected to the deed being received in evidence (ostensibly a reference to an objection being raised either at the time of the deed was initially sought to be produced or at the close of the case of the party that produced the deed), considering the merits of the objection raised, the court may decide on whether or not to require the party producing the deed to tender proof of the genuineness and execution of the deed in the manner provided by law.

It is observable that this amendment to the Civil Procedure Code, has directly impacted upon the principles of law which are contained in the earlier mentioned judgments. The amendment seems to have given statutory recognition to the cursus curiae of original courts pertaining to the production and proof of documents such as deeds required by law to be attested. When legislative provisions are inconsistent with legal principles contained in previous judicial precedent, courts are obliged to apply subsequent legislative provisions which may have impliedly repealed legal principles contained in such previous judicial precedent. That is a fundamental legal principle recognized in common law jurisdictions including Sri Lanka.

I shall now revert to the following attendant circumstances of this case pertaining to Mortgage Deed No. 8425.

(i) Vide proceedings of 9th June 1999, when the 2nd Defendant sought to initially produce Mortgage Deed No. 8425 ("2V1"), learned counsel for the 1st Defendant submitted to the trial court that the 1st Defendant was not disputing the fact that the Notary wrote and attested (certified) the document, and was disputing (only) the contents thereof. Further, vide proceedings of 15th February 2000, under cross-examination, upon "2V1" being shown to the 1st Defendant, she has admitted that the signature appearing therein is hers. Furthermore, "2V1" was not produced 'subject to proof'.

(ii) When the learned counsel for the 2nd Defendant closed his case and marked "2V1" in evidence (amounting to reading in evidence the contents of the deed), counsel for the 1st Defendant has not raised any objection to it.

It would thus be seen that the 1st Defendant had neither objected to the production of deed No. 8425 at the stage of its initial production, nor had she objected to the deed at the stage of the case for the 2nd Defendant being closed and the deed was read in evidence. These attendant circumstances in my view require this Court to apply the transitional provisions contained in section 3(a) of the Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act No. 17 of 2022. Accordingly, I hold that the 2nd Defendant was not required to prove deed No. 8425 in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance. Therefore, both the genuineness and the due execution of mortgage deed No. 8425 ("2V1") must be taken cognizance of by this Court. Insistence upon proof of the deed as stipulated in section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance was not required.

Furthermore, vide section 92 of the Evidence Ordinance, once a document (such as a deed) pertaining to a contract, grant or other disposition of property, or any matter required by law to be reduced to the form of a document has been proved, and its contents are treated as evidence, oral evidence led for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from its terms, supersede the contents thereof or substitute such contents must be excluded. Thus, the oral evidence of the 1st Defendant which contradicts the contents of "2V1" must be excluded.

In the circumstances, I hold that the findings contained in the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal must now be set aside and vacated, for the simple reason that the Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act No. 17 of 2022 has impacted upon the finding quite rightly reached by the learned Justice of the Court of Appeal relating to "2V1".

In the circumstances, it is now necessary to treat the contents of deed No. 8425 as evidence in the case to the exclusion of oral evidence that may be inconsistent with the contents of the deed, as both the genuineness and due execution must be presumed by this Court. According to the contents of "2V1", this Court takes cognizance of the following items of evidence contained in the said deed:

(i) That on 12th March 1986, the 1st Defendant – Respondent had solicited from the 2nd Defendant – Appellant a sum of Rs. 50,000/= as a loan and obtained from her that sum of money, payable at an annual interest rate of 24%.

(ii) That the 1st Defendant – Respondent promised to settle the afore-stated loan, when demanded by the 2nd Defendant – Appellant.

(iii) That in consideration for the obtaining the afore-stated loan, as security, the 1st Defendant – Respondent mortgaged the property described in the schedule of that deed to the 2nd Defendant – Appellant.

Thus, "2V1" is clear and reliable proof of the 1st Defendant having obtained a loan of Rs. 50,000/= from the 2nd Defendant and having mortgaged the property referred to in the schedule to deed No. 8425 as security for the said loan.

In view of the foregoing, I answer the two questions of law in respect of which leave was granted in this matter in the following manner:

(i) Did the Court of Appeal err in law by holding that the mortgage bond No. 8425 dated 12th March 1986 has not been proved?

In view of the law that prevailed when the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal was delivered, the Court of Appeal did not err in holding that mortgage bond No. 8425 dated 12th March 1986 has not been proved. However, in view of the transitional provision of the Civil Procedure (Amendment) Act No. 17 of 2022, the afore-stated finding must be vacated and set-aside. In view of provisions of section 3 of the said Act, this Court must conclude that the 2nd Defendant – Appellant was not required by law to have proved mortgage bond No. 8425 in terms of section 68 of the Evidence Ordinance, and hence, its contents could have been taken as evidence in the adjudication of the case.

(ii) Did the Court of Appeal err in law by holding that the consideration has not been paid by the 2nd Defendant?

In view of the contents of mortgage bond No. 8425 being treated as evidence, this Court concludes that though at the time of the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal being delivered there was an evidential basis to conclude that the consideration had not been paid by the 2nd Defendant to the 1st Defendant, in view of the finding of this Court relating to the afore-stated first question of law, this Court must conclude that there is clear evidence (which emanates from the contents of Deed No. 8425) that consideration of Rs. 50,000/= had been paid by the 2nd Defendant – Appellant to the 1st Defendant - Respondent.

Accordingly, the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal is set-aside and vacated and this Appeal is allowed. The judgment of the District Court shall prevail.

Parties will bear their own costs.

I wish to acknowledge with appreciation the invaluable assistance given by learned counsel for the 2nd Defendant – Appellant and the 1st Defendant – Respondent towards the adjudication of this Appeal.

Introduction

The plaintiff filed this action in the District Court of Kuliyapitiya seeking a declaration of title to, ejectment of the defendant from, the two allotments of land described in the schedule to the plaint, and damages. The plaintiff relied on deed No. 3016 to claim title to the said allotments. The 1st defendant filed answer seeking dismissal of the plaintiff's action on the basis that the 1st defendant came into possession of the land upon making some advance payments to the vendors of deed No. 3016 well before the execution of this deed. After trial, the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action accepting the defendant's version. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal of Kurunegala set aside the judgment of the District Court and entered judgment for the plaintiff. Hence this appeal by the 1st defendant. This Court granted leave to appeal mainly on three questions of law:

(a) Did the High Court err in law in not considering that in a rei vindicatio action the burden is on the plaintiff to establish title pleaded and relied on by him and the defendant need not prove anything?

(b) Did the High Court err in law in not considering that the title deed of the plaintiff only conveys undivided 7/8 shares of the property and therefore the plaintiff failed to establish title as held in Hariette v. Pathmasiri [1996] 1 Sri LR 358?

(c) Did the High Court err in law in not considering that the plaintiff was a speculative buyer who knew the land was possessed by the defendant, possession having been given to the defendant by the same vendors?

Burden and standard of proof in a rei vindicatio action

At the commencement of the trial before the District Court admissions were recorded. The third and fourth admissions are that at one point of time the 2nd defendant was the owner of the land in suit and she (the 2nd defendant) executed the aforementioned deed of transfer No. 3016 in favour of the plaintiff. The 1st defendant has no paper title to the land. Learned counsel for the 1st defendant in his post-argument written submission admits this when he says "The defendant had an actual exclusive possession of the land with the intention of becoming the owner." In the plaint the plaintiff has taken up the position that the 1st defendant came into possession of the land on the leave and licence of the plaintiff's vendors. This has not been accepted by the District Judge. Despite the above admissions, the District Judge has held that by deed No. 3016 what has been transferred is only 7/8 shares but not the full title as claimed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff does not challenge this finding of the District Judge. Based on these findings, learned counsel for the 1st defendant argues that this being a rei vindicatio action, the plaintiff has failed to prove title to the land as pleaded in the plaint and therefore the plaintiff's action must fail. I will deal with this in greater detail since the burden of proof and the standard of proof in rei vindicatio actions are overwhelmingly shrouded in misconceptions, misconstructions and misunderstandings.

In order to succeed in a rei vindicatio action, first and foremost, the plaintiff shall prove his ownership to the property. If he fails to prove it, his action shall fail. This principle is based on the Latin maxim "onus probandi incumbit ei qui agit", which means, the burden of proof lies with the person who brings the action. Section 101 of the Evidence Ordinance is also to a similar effect.

Macdonell C.J. in De Silva v. Goonetilleke (1960) 32 NLR 217 at 219 stated:

> There is abundant authority that a party claiming a declaration of title must have title himself. "To bring the action rei vindicatio plaintiff must have ownership actually vested in him". (1 Nathan p. 362, s. 593.)....The authorities unite in holding that plaintiff must show title to the corpus in dispute and that if he cannot, the action will not lie.

In Pathirana v. Jayasundera (1955) 58 NLR 169 at 172, Gratiaen J. declared:

> "The plaintiff's ownership of the thing is of the very essence of the action." Maasdorp's Institutes (7th Ed.) Vol. 2, 96.

In Mansil v. Devaya [1985] 2 Sri LR 46, G.P.S. De Silva J. (as he then was) stated at 51:

> In a rei vindicatio action, on the other hand, ownership is of the essence of the action; the action is founded on ownership.

In Latheef v. Mansoor [2010] 2 Sri LR 333 at 352, Marsoof J. held:

> An important feature of the actio rei vindicatio is that it has to necessarily fail if the plaintiff cannot clearly establish his title.

Having said the above, it needs to be emphasised that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action has no heavier burden to discharge than a plaintiff in any other civil action. The standard of proof in a rei vindicatio action is on a balance of probabilities.

Professor George Wille, in his monumental work Wille's Principles of South African Law, 9th Edition (2007), states at page 539:

> To succeed with the rei vindicatio, the owner must prove on a balance of probabilities, first, his or her ownership in the property. If a movable is sought to be recovered, the owner must rebut the presumption that the possessor of the movable is the owner thereof. In the case of immovables, it is sufficient as a rule to show that title in the land is registered in his or her name. Secondly, the property must exist, be clearly identifiable and must not have been destroyed or consumed. Money, in the form of coins and banknotes, is not easily identifiable and thus not easily vindicable. Thirdly, the defendant must be in possession or detention of the thing at the moment the action is instituted. The rationale is to ensure that the defendant is in a position to comply with an order for restoration.

In Preethi Anura v. William Silva (SC/APPEAL/116/2014, SC Minutes of 05.06.2017), the plaintiff filed a rei vindicatio action against the defendant seeking a declaration of title to the land in suit and the ejectment of the defendant therefrom. The District Court held with the plaintiff but the High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court on the basis that the plaintiff failed to prove title to the land. The plaintiff's title commenced with a statutory determination made under section 19 of the Land Reform Law in favour of his grandmother, who had bequeathed the land by way of a last will to the plaintiff, with the land being later conveyed to the plaintiff by way of an executor's conveyance. No documentary evidence was tendered to establish that the last will was proved in Court and admitted to probate in order to validate the said executor's conveyance. The District Court was satisfied that the said factors were proved by oral evidence but the High Court found the same insufficient to discharge the burden that rests upon a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action, which the High Court considered to be very heavy. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the High Court and restored the judgment of the District Court, taking the view that the plaintiff had proved title to the land despite the purported shortcomings. In the course of the judgment, Dep C.J. (with De Abrew J. and Jayawardena J. agreeing) remarked:

> In a rei vindicatio action, the plaintiff has to establish the title to the land. Plaintiff need not establish the title with mathematical precision nor to prove the case beyond reasonable doubt as in a criminal case. The plaintiff's task is to establish the case on a balance of probability. In a partition case the situation is different as it is an action in rem and the trial judge is required to carefully examine the title and the devolution of title. This case being a rei vindicatio action this court has to consider whether the plaintiff discharged the burden on balance of probability.

What is the degree of proof expected when the standard of proof is on a balance of probabilities? This is better understood when proof on a balance of probabilities is compared with proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

On proof beyond a reasonable doubt, in Miller v. Minister of Pensions [1947] 2 All ER 372, Lord Denning declared at 373:

> Proof beyond reasonable doubt does not mean proof beyond the shadow of doubt. The law would fail to protect the community if it admitted fanciful possibilities to deflect the course of justice. If the evidence is so strong against a man as to leave only a remote possibility in his favour which can be dismissed with the sentence "of course it is possible, but not in the least probable," the case is proved beyond reasonable doubt, but nothing short of that will suffice.

In relation to proof on a balance of probabilities, it was stated at 374:

> That degree is well settled. It must carry a reasonable degree of probability, but not so high as is required in a criminal case. If the evidence is such that the tribunal can say: "We think it more probable than not," the burden is discharged, but, if the probabilities are equal, it is not.

In consideration of the degree of proof in a rei vindicatio action, we invariably refer to the seminal judgment of Pathirana v. Jayasundara (1955) 58 NLR 169. In that case the plaintiff sued the defendant on the basis that the defendant was an overholding lessee. The defendant admitted the bare execution of the lease but stated that the lessors were unable to give him possession of the land. He averred that the land was sold to him by its lawful owner (not one of the lessors) and that by adverse possession from that date he had acquired title by prescription. The plaintiff then sought to amend the plaint by claiming a declaration of title and ejectment on the footing that his rights of ownership had been violated. The Supreme Court held:

> A lessor of property who institutes action on the basis of a cause of action arising from a breach by the defendant of his contractual obligation as lessee is not entitled to amend his plaint subsequently > so as to alter the nature of the proceeding to an action rei vindicatio if such a course would prevent or prejudice the setting up by the defendant of a plea of prescriptive title.

In the course of the judgment the Court distinguished an action for declaration of title (based on the contractual relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant) from an action rei vindicatio proper. In general terms, in both actions, a declaration of title is sought – in the former, as a matter of course, without strict proof of title, but in the latter, as a peremptory requirement, with strict proof of title. H.N.G. Fernando J. (as he then was) at page 171 explained the distinction between the two in this way:

> There is however the further point that the plaintiff in his prayer sought not only ejectment but also a declaration of title, a prayer for which latter relief is probably unusual in an action against an overholding tenant. I have no doubt that it is open to a lessor in an action for ejectment to ask for a declaration of title, but the question of difficulty arises is whether the action thereby becomes a rei vindicatio for which strict proof of the plaintiff's title would be required, or else is merely one for a declaration (without strict proof) of a title which the tenant by law precluded from denying. If the essential element of a rei vindicatio is that the right of ownership must be strictly proved, it is difficult to accept the proposition that an action in which the plaintiff can automatically obtain a declaration of title through the operation of a rule in estoppel should be regarded as a vindicatory action. The fact that the person in possession of property originally held as lessee would not preclude the lessor-owner from choosing to proceed against him by a rei vindicatio. But this choice can I think be properly exercised only by clearly setting out the claim of title and sounding in delict.

The term "strict proof of the plaintiff's title" used here does not mean that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action shall prove title beyond a reasonable doubt or a very high degree of proof. The term "strict proof of the plaintiff's title" was used to distinguish the standard of proof between a declaration of title action based on a contractual relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant such as lessor and lessee, and a rei vindicatio action proper based on ownership of the property. In a rei vindicatio action, if the plaintiff proves on a balance of probabilities that he is the owner, he must succeed.

The distinction between an action for declaration of title and ejectment and a rei vindicatio action was also emphasised by Wigneswaran J. in Luwis Singho and Others v. Ponnamperuma [1996] 2 Sri LR 320 at 324:

> Though due to procedural steps introduced by the Civil Procedure Code there may appear no real difference today in Sri Lanka between an action rei vindicatio and an action for declaration of title and ejectment it may not be correct to equate them as co-extensive in scope and content.

Professor G.L. Peiris, in his treatise Law of Property in Sri Lanka, Vol I, makes it clear at page 304:

> It must be emphasized, however, that the observations in these cases to the effect that the plaintiff's title must be strictly proved in a rei vindicatio, cannot be accepted as containing the implication that a standard of exceptional stringency applies in this context. An extremely exacting standard is insisted upon in certain categories of action such as partition actions.…It is clear that a standard characterized by this degree of severity does not apply to the proof of a plaintiff's title in a rei vindicatory action.

(Justice) Dr. H.W. Tambiah opines in "Survey of Laws Controlling Ownership of Lands in Sri Lanka", Vol 2, International Property Investment Journal 217 at pages 243-244:

> In a vindicatory action, the plaintiff must prove that he is the owner of the property which is in the possession of the defendant. See de Silva v. Gunathilleke, 32 N.L.R. 217 (1931); Abeykoon Hamine v. Appuhamy, 52 N.L.R. 49 (1951); Muthusamy v. Seneviratne, 31 C.L.W. 91 (1946). Once title is established, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove that by adverse possession for a period of 10 years he has acquired prescriptive title. Siyaneris v. Udenis de Silva, 52 N.L.R. 289 (1951). In rei vindicatory action once the plaintiff proves he was in possession but then he was evicted by the defendant, the burden of proving title will shift to the defendant. In Kathiramathamby v. Arumugam 38 C.L.W. 27 (1948) it was held that if the plaintiff alleges that he was forcibly ousted by the defendant the burden of proving ouster remains with the complainant. As a practical matter, the burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is not burdensome. The plaintiff must prove only that he is the probable owner of the property.

The view of Dr. Tambiah "As a practical matter, the burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action is not burdensome. The plaintiff must prove only that he is the probable owner of the property" shall be understood in the context of his view expressed at the outset that "In a vindicatory action, the plaintiff must prove that he is the owner of the property which is in the possession of the defendant."

The recent South African case of Huawei Technologies South Africa (Pty) Limited v. Redefine Properties Limited and Another [2018] ZAGPJHC 403 decided on 29.05.2018 reveals that the burden of proof cast on a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action is not unduly onerous. In this case it was held that what the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action needs to prove is that he is the owner of the property (which the Court stated could be done by producing his title deed) and that the defendant is holding or in possession of the property. Once this is done, the onus shifts to the defendant to establish a right to continue to hold against the owner. Cele J. declared:

> The rei vindicatio is the common law real action for the protection of ownership. C.P. Smith, Eviction and Rental Claims: A Practical Guide at p. 1-2; Graham v. Ridley 1931 TPD 476; Chetty v. Naidoo 1974 (3) SA 13 (A). It is inherent in the nature of ownership that possession of the res should normally be with the owner and it follows that no other person may withhold it from the owner unless he or she is vested with some right enforceable against the owner. The owner, in instituting a rei vindicatio, need do no more than allege and prove that he is the owner and that the defendant is holding or in possession of the res. The onus is on the Defendant to allege and establish a right to continue to hold against the owner. Chetty v. Naidoo (supra) at 20 A–E. A court does not have an equitable discretion to refuse an order for ejectment on the grounds of equity and fairness. Belmont House v. Gore NNO 2011 (6) SA 173 (WCC) at para [15]. In the case of eviction based on an owner's rei vindicatio, the owner has only to prove his ownership which can be done by producing his title deed indicating that the property is registered in his name. Goudini Chrome (Pty) Ltd v. MCC Contracts (Pty) Ltd [1999] ZASCA 208; 1993 (1) SA 77 (A) at 82 A–C.

In De Vos v. Adams and Others [2016] ZAWCHC 202 decided on 06.12.2016, Davis J. stated:

> Turning specifically to the rei vindicatio it is clear that there are three requirements which the owner must prove on a balance of > probabilities, in order to succeed with the particular action. Firstly, the applicant must show his or her ownership in the property. In the case of immovable property it is sufficient as a result to show the title in the land is registered in his or her name. Secondly, the property must exist, be clearly identifiable and must not have been destroyed or consumed. Thirdly, the defendant must be in possession or detention of the property at the time that the action is instituted.

The requirement of proof of chain of title which is the norm in a partition action is not applicable in a rei vindicatio action. If there is no challenge to the title deed of the plaintiff on specific grounds, the plaintiff can prove his ownership to the property by producing his title deed. This view was expressed by Professor Wille (op. cit. at page 539) when he stated that "In the case of immovables, it is sufficient as a rule to show that title in the land is registered in his or her name."

When the standard of proof is on a balance of probabilities, the Court is entitled to consider whose version – the plaintiff's or the defendant's – is more probable.

Banda v. Soyza [1998] 1 Sri LR 255 was a rei vindicatio action filed by a trustee of a temple seeking a declaration of title, the ejectment of the defendant and damages. The Court of Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court and the plaintiff's action was dismissed on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to establish title to the subject matter of the action or even to identify the land in suit. But the Supreme Court set aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal and restored the judgment of the District Court on the basis that there was "sufficient evidence led on behalf of the plaintiff to prove the title and the identity of the lots in dispute." G.P.S. de Silva C.J. laid down at page 259 the criterion to be adopted in a rei vindicatio action in respect of the onus of proof in the following manner:

> In a case such as this, the true question that a court has to consider on the question of title is, who has the superior title? The answer has to be reached upon a consideration of the totality of the evidence led in the case.

Dr. H.W. Tambiah (op. cit. at p. 244) refers to proof of superior title by the defendant as a defence to a rei vindicatio action.

> In a vindicatory action, the defendant has numerous defenses, which include: denial of the plaintiff's title; establishment of his own title, in the sense of establishing a title superior to that of the plaintiff; prescription; a plea of res judicata; right of tenure under the plaintiff – for example usufruct, pledge or lease of land; the right to retain possession subject to an indemnity from the plaintiff under peculiar conditions; a plea of exception rei venditae et traditae; and, ius tertii.

The Full Bench of the Supreme Court in Jinawathie v. Emalin Perera [1986] 2 Sri LR 121 adverted to superior title and sufficient title and held that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action shall prove that he has title to the disputed property and that such title is superior to the title, if any, put forward by the defendant, or that he has sufficient title which he can vindicate against the defendant.

The plaintiff in Jinawathie's case filed a rei vindicatio action against the defendants relying upon a statutory determination made under section 19 of the Land Reform Law, No. 1 of 1972. The defendants sought the dismissal of the plaintiff's action on the basis that the alleged statutory determination did not convey any title on the plaintiff and that in the absence of the plaintiff demonstrating dominium over the land, the plaintiff's action shall fail. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeal held with the plaintiff and the Supreme Court affirmed it. Ranasinghe J. (as he then was) with the agreement of Sharvananda C.J., Wanasundera J., Atukorale J., and Tambiah J., whilst emphasising that in a rei vindicatio action proper, the plaintiff's ownership of the land is of the very essence of the action, expressed the view of the Supreme Court in the following terms at page 142:

> This principle was re-affirmed once again by Gratiaen J. in the case of Palisena v. Perera (1954) 56 NLR 407 where the plaintiff came into court to vindicate his title based upon a permit issued under the provisions of the Land Development Ordinance (Chap. 320). In giving judgment for the plaintiff, Gratiaen, J. said: "a permit-holder who has complied with the conditions of his permit enjoys, during the period for which the permit is valid, a sufficient title which he can vindicate against a trespasser in civil proceedings. The fact that the alleged trespasser had prevented him from entering upon the land does not afford a defence to the action."
> In a vindicatory action the plaintiff must himself have title to the property in dispute: the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that he has title to the disputed property, and that such title is superior to the title, if any, put forward by the defendant in occupation. The plaintiff can and must succeed only on the strength of his own title, and not upon the weakness of the defence.
> On a consideration of the foregoing principles – relating to the legal concept of ownership, and to an action rei vindicatio – it seems to me that the plaintiff-respondent did, at the time of the institution of these proceedings, have, by virtue of P6 [statutory determination], "sufficient" title which she could have vindicated against the defendants-appellants in proceedings such as these.

In the Supreme Court case of Khan v. Jayman [1994] 2 Sri LR 233 the plaintiff sued the defendant for ejectment from the premises in suit and damages on the basis that the defendant was in forcible occupation of the premises after the termination of the leave and licence given to the defendant. The defendant claimed tenancy. The District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action on the basis that the plaintiff failed to establish that the defendant was a licensee and the Court of Appeal affirmed it. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff shall succeed since the defendant failed to establish a "better title" to the property after the plaintiff established his title and the defendant in his evidence admitted the plaintiff's title. Kulatunga J. with the agreement of G.P.S. De Silva C.J. and Wadugodapitiya J. stated at page 235:

> The plaintiff did not pray for a declaration of title or raise an issue on ownership, presumably because no challenge to his ownership was anticipated. Indeed the defendant's answer did not deny the plaintiff's title. At the trial, the plaintiff established his title and the defendant in his evidence admitted the plaintiff's title to the premises in suit. This action is, therefore, a vindicatory action i.e. an action founded on ownership. Maasdorp's Institutes of South African Law Vol. II Eighth Edition page 70 commenting on the right of an owner to recover possession of his property states –
> "The plaintiff's ownership in the thing is the very essence of such an action and will have to be both alleged and proved …"
>
> He also states –
> "The ownership of a thing consists in the exclusive rights of possession … and in the absence of any agreement or other legal restriction to the contrary, it entitles the owner to claim possession > from anyone who cannot set up a better title to it and warn him off the property, and eject him from it".

The argument of the defendant that he was prejudiced in his defence as the plaintiff did not sue the defendant as the owner of the premises was rejected by the Supreme Court. Kulatunga J. stated at 239:

> Learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent also submitted that in view of the fact that this was not a case of the plaintiff suing as owner simpliciter and in the absence of an issue on ownership, the defendant would not have known the case he had to meet and was prejudiced in his defence. I cannot agree. As stated early in this judgment, the plaintiff pleaded his ownership and clearly set out his case, including the fact that the defendant was in occupation of a room of the premises in suit by leave and licence. The defendant too set out his case in unambiguous terms viz. that he was a protected tenant from 1971. In the end, the plaintiff proved his case whilst the defendant failed to establish a better title to the property. As such, the question of prejudice does not arise.

When the paper title to the property is admitted or proved to be in the plaintiff, the burden shifts to the defendant to prove on what right he is in possession of the property.

In Siyaneris v. Udenis de Silva (1951) 52 NLR 289 the Privy Council held:

> In an action for declaration of title to property, where the legal title is in the plaintiff but the property is in the possession of the defendant, the burden of proof is on the defendant.

In Theivandran v. Ramanathan Chettiar [1986] 2 Sri LR 219 at 222, Sharvananda C.J. stated:

> In a vindicatory action the claimant need merely prove two facts; namely, that he is the owner of the thing and that the thing to which he is entitled to possession by virtue of his ownership is in the possession of the defendant. Basing his claim on his ownership, which entitles him to possession, he may sue for the ejectment of any person in possession of it without his consent. Hence when the legal title to the premises is admitted or proved to be in the plaintiff, the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that he is in lawful possession.

This was quoted with approval by G.P.S. de Silva C.J. in Beebi Johara v. Warusavithana [1998] 3 Sri LR 227 at 229 and reiterated in Candappa nee Bastian v. Ponnambalam Pillai [1993] 1 Sri LR 184 at 187. Vide also Wijetunge v. Thangarajah [1999] 1 Sri LR 53, Gunasekera v. Latiff [1999] 1 Sri LR 365 at 370, Jayasekera v. Bishop of Kandy [2002] 2 Sri LR 406 and Loku Menika v. Gunasekara [1997] 2 Sri LR 281 at 282-283.

The right to possession is an essential attribute of ownership. The owner of the land has the right to exclude others from its use.

Maasdorp's Institutes of South African Law, Vol II, 8th Edition (1960), p. 27) states the rights of an owner are "comprised under three heads, namely, (1) the right of possession and the right to recover possession; (2) the right of use and enjoyment; and (3) the right of disposition". He goes on to say that "these three factors are all essential to the idea of ownership but need not all be present in an equal degree at one and the same time".

As stated in K.J. Aiyar's Judicial Dictionary, 11th Edition (1995), page 833, it is not possible to give a comprehensive definition to the rights of ownership. Traditionally, those rights include:

> Jus utendi – the right to use of the thing
> Jus possidendi – the right to possess a thing

Jus abutendi – the right to consume or destroy a thing
Jus despondendi vei transferendi – the right to dispose of a thing or to transfer it as by sale, gift, exchange etc.
Jus sibi habendi – the right to hold a thing for oneself
Jus alteri non habendi or Jus prohibendi – the right to exclude others from its use

In general, in a rei vindicatio action the plaintiff's case is based on his paper title whereas the defendant's case is based on prescriptive title. Prescriptive title commences and endures through adverse possession, not lawful possession. When the Court declares that title by prescription is established, it transforms illegality into legality. As stated by Udalagama J. in the Supreme Court case of Kiriamma v. Podibanda [2005] BLR 9 at 11 "considerable circumspection is necessary to recognize the prescriptive title as undoubtedly it deprives the ownership of the party having paper title. It is in fact said that title by prescription is an illegality made legal due to the other party not taking action." This was quoted with approval by Chithrasiri J. in Sumanawathie v. Sirisena (CA/830/98(F), CA Minutes of 10.03.2014) and Salam J. in Fathima Naseera v. Mohamed Haris (CA/818/96(F), CA Minutes of 11.07.2012).

Defendant's evidence in a rei vindicatio action

Whilst emphasising that (a) the initial burden in a rei vindicatio action is on the plaintiff to prove ownership of the property in suit and (b) the standard of proof in a rei vindicatio action is proof on a balance of probabilities, if the plaintiff in such an action has "sufficient title" or "superior title" or "better title" than that of the defendant, the plaintiff shall succeed. No rule of thumb can be laid down in what circumstances the Court shall hold that the plaintiff has discharged his burden. Whether or not the plaintiff proved his title shall be decided upon a consideration of the totality of the evidence led in the case.

In making a determination in this regard, the Court is entitled to consider evidence of all parties, including the evidence of the defendant. The oft-quoted dicta of Herat J. in Wanigaratne v. Juwanis Appuhamy (1962) 65 NLR 167 that "The defendant in a rei vindicatio action need not prove anything, still less, his own title. The plaintiff cannot ask for a declaration of title in his favour merely on the strength that the defendant's title is poor or not established. The plaintiff must prove and establish his title." should not be misconstrued to imply that the Court is precluded from taking the defendant's evidence into consideration in arriving at the final conclusion in a rei vindicatio action.

The dicta of Herath J. in Wanigaratne v. Juwanis Appuhamy (supra) is eminently relevant to the facts of that particular case but has no universal application to all rei vindicatio actions. Since it is a one-page brief judgment, the facts are not very clear. However, as I understand, the plaintiffs in that case had filed a rei vindicatio action against the defendant on the basis that the defendant was a trespasser notwithstanding that he (the defendant) had been in occupation of some portions of the land for a considerable period of time. From the following sentence found in the judgment, "In this case, the plaintiffs produced a recent deed in their favour and further stated in evidence that they could not take possession of the shares purchased by them because they were resisted by the 1st defendant", it is clear that the plaintiffs, if at all, had only undivided rights in the land. It is also clear from the judgment that whether or not the defendant also had undivided rights was not clear to Court. It is in that context Herat J. states "The learned District Judge, in his judgment expatiates on the weakness of the defence case; but unfortunately has failed to examine what title, if any, has been established by the plaintiffs. No evidence of title has been established by the plaintiffs in our opinion."

It may be noted that in Wanigaratne's case, the finding of the Supreme Court is that "No evidence of title has been established by the plaintiffs". The facts are totally different in the instant case. In the instant case, by way of the 3rd admission recorded at the trial, the 1st defendant admitted that the 2nd defendant transferred the land to the plaintiff by deed No. 3016 marked at the trial as P3. The title of the plaintiff in the land was never challenged by the defendant; nor did the defendant ever make a claim for title to the land. The defendant is in unlawful occupation as he has manifestly failed to prove any legal basis for his occupation of the land of which the plaintiff is the paper title holder.

As this Court held in Wasantha v. Premaratne (SC/APPEAL/176/2014, SC Minutes of 17.05.2021), the Court can in a rei vindicatio action consider the evidence of the defendant in arriving at the correct conclusion:

> Notwithstanding that in a rei vindicatio action the burden is on the plaintiff to prove title to the land no matter how fragile the case of the defendant is, the Court is not debarred from taking into consideration the evidence of the defendant in deciding whether or not the plaintiff has proved his title. Not only is the Court not debarred from doing so, it is in fact the duty of the Court to give due regard to the defendant's case, for otherwise there is no purpose in a rei vindicatio action in allowing the defendant to lead evidence when all he seeks is for the dismissal of the plaintiff's action.

This Court took the same view in Ashar v. Kareem (SC/APPEAL/171/2019, SC Minutes of 22.05.2023).

Actio rei vindicatio* and action *in rem

In Pathirana v. Jayasundara (1955) 58 NLR 169 at 173 Gratiaen J. states:

> A decree for a declaration of title may, of course, be obtained by way of additional relief either in a rei vindicatio action proper (which is in truth an action in rem) or in a lessor's action against his overholding tenant (which is an action in personam). But in the former case, the declaration is based on proof of ownership in the latter, on proof of the contractual relationship which forbids a denial that the lessor is the true owner.

The fact that a rei vindicatio action is identified as an action in rem has unmistakably contributed to the expectation of a high degree of proof of title from a plaintiff in such an action. Is this thinking correct?

The phrase "in rem" requires an explanation rather than a definition. The Latin term "in rem" derives from the word "res", which means "a thing or an object" whether movable or immovable. Actions in rem were originally used as a means of protecting title to movables, especially slaves, because land was not at first the object of private ownership – Buckland and McNair, Roman Law and Common Law Comparison (Cambridge University Press, 1936) p. 6. Also, in rem jurisdiction is invoked in maritime cases where a party could bring an action in rem against a ship instead of the owner of the ship. It is the ship that suffers the consequences in an action in rem. The owner suffers the consequences if it is an action in personam.

Maasdorp (op. cit., Vol II, 8th Edition (1960), p.70) states "The form of action for the recovery of ownership was under the Roman law called vindicatio rei, which was an action in rem, that is, aimed at the recovery of the thing which is in the possession of another, whether such possession was rightfully or wrongfully acquired, together with all its accretions and fruits, and compensation in damages for any loss sustained by the owner through having been deprived of it."

Black's Law Dictionary, 11th edition, defines the term "in rem" as "Latin 'against a thing' – Involving or determining the status of a thing, and therefore the rights of persons generally with respect to that thing." It defines the term "in personam" as "Latin 'against a person' – Involving or determining the personal rights and obligations of the parties. (Of a legal action) brought against a person rather than property."

The following passage of Dr. H. W. Tambiah (op. cit. p. 242) explains why rei vindicatio is an action in rem.

> The primary remedy granted to an owner against the person who disputes his ownership is rei vindicatio. This Roman-Dutch Law remedy has been adopted by the courts in Sri Lanka. Since the owner, as dominus, has a right of possession, occupation and use of the land, this action is in the nature of an action in rem. See Vulcan Rubber Ltd. v. South African Railways and Harbours, 3 S.A. 285 (1958); Hissaias v. Lehman, 4 S.A. 715 (1958). In this type of action, the owner of land whose title is disputed and who has been unlawfully ejected, may bring an action for a declaration of title and ejectment. If the owner has not been ejected but his title is disputed he is entitled to bring a declaratory action to dismiss any disputes to his title. Where an owner is unlawfully ejected he may bring an action for declaration of title for mesne profits, damages and ejectment.

In the case of Allis Appu v. Endris Hamy (1894) 3 SCR 87, Withers J. categorised rei vindicatio both as an action in rem and action in personam:

> Certain actions of an analogous nature apart, the action rei vindicatio is allowed to the owner and to him alone. Lesion to the right of property is of the very essence of the action and in that respect constitutes it an action in rem. Lesion to the personal right of the true proprietor properly constitutes a claim to compensation for the produce of which he has been deprived by the possessor and in that respect constitutes it an action in personam.

In classical Roman Law although actio rei vindicatio is classified as an action in rem as opposed to an action in personam, the term "action in rem" shall not be understood in the popular sense that we conceive it in contemporary society. An action in rem means an action against a thing whereas an action in personam means an action against a person. A partition action is considered an action in rem in that the judgment in a partition action has a binding effect on all persons having interests in the property whether or not joined as parties to the action. It transcends the characteristic of an inter partes action and assumes the characteristic of an action in rem resulting in title good against the world. The scheme of the Partition Law is designed to serve that purpose. But the entire world is not bound by the judgment in a rei vindicatio action. The judgment in a rei vindicatio action binds only the parties to the action and their privies. In modern-day legal jargon, rei vindicatio is not an action in rem but an action in personam.

The fact that rei vindicatio is not an action in rem in the popular sense is reflected in the dicta of Dep C.J. in Preethi Anura v. William Silva (supra) where in reference to the standard of proof in a rei vindicatio action it was stated "The plaintiff's task is to establish the case on a balance of probability. In a partition case the situation is different as it is an action in rem and the trial judge is required to carefully examine the title and the devolution of title."

In Sithy Makeena v. Kuraisha [2006] 2 Sri LR 341 at 344, Imam J. with Sriskandarajah J. in agreement stated "It is well-settled law that only the parties to a rei vindicatio action are bound by the decision in such a case, as a rei vindicatio action is an action in personam and not an action in rem."

In the Supreme Court case of Mojith Kumara v. Ariyaratne (SC/APPEAL/123/2015, SC Minutes of 29.03.2016), the plaintiff filed action seeking declaration of title to the land in suit, ejectment of the defendants therefrom and damages. It was a rei vindicatio action proper. The defendants sought dismissal of the plaintiff's action. The plaintiff relied on a decree entered in his favour in a previous rei vindicatio action filed against a different party, but in respect of the same land. The District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action on the basis that the defendants before Court were not parties to the previous action and therefore they are not bound by that judgment. On appeal, the High Court set aside the judgment of the District Court and held that the plaintiff can claim ownership to the land on the strength of the previous decree apparently on the basis that rei vindicatio is an action in rem. The Supreme Court held that the previous rei vindicatio action is an action in personam and not an action in rem and therefore third parties are not bound by that judgment. Chitrasiri J. with the agreement of Aluwihare J. and De Abrew J. held:

> A decree in a case in which a declaration of title is sought binds only the parties in that action. Such a proposition is not applicable when it comes to a decree in rem which binds the whole world. Effects and consequences of actions in rem and actions in personam are quite different. Action in rem is a proceeding that determines the rights over a particular property that would become conclusive against the entire world such as the decisions in courts exercising admiralty jurisdictions and the decisions in partition actions under the partition law of this country. Procedure stipulated in Partition Law contains provisions enabling interested parties to come before courts and to join as parties to the action even though the plaintiff fails to make them as parties to it. Therefore there is a rationale to treat the decrees in partition cases as decrees in rem.

Actions in personam are a type of legal proceedings which can affect the personal rights and interests of the property claimed by the parties to the action. Such actions include an action for breach of contract, the commission of a tort or delict or the possession of property. Where an action in personam is successful, the judgment may be enforced only against the defendant's assets that include real and personal or movable and immovable properties. Therefore, a decree in a rei vindicatio action is considered as a decree that would bind only the parties to the action. In the circumstances, it is clear that the plaintiff cannot rely on the decree in 503/L to establish rights to the property in question as against the defendants in this case are concerned.

The greater includes the less

It may be recalled that in Preethi Anura v. William Silva (supra) Chief Justice Dep stated that a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action need not establish the title in the property "with mathematical precision nor to prove the case beyond reasonable doubt as in a criminal case." In a rei vindicatio action the plaintiff need not strictly adhere to the exact manner in which he has pleaded title in the plaint. For instance, if the plaintiff in the plaint pleads title relying on one deed but at the trial marks several other deeds that are duly listed to fortify his case, the Court need not mechanically dismiss the plaintiff's action or disallow the plaintiff to mark those deeds on the basis that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action must prove title strictly in the same manner which he has pleaded in the plaint. Even in a criminal case or partition case such stringent procedure is not adopted. This does not mean that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action can present a different case at the trial from what he has pleaded in his pleadings. Suffice it to say, even that is possible, if issues are raised in that direction and accepted by Court, for the case is tried not on pleadings but on issues.

Stemming from the misconception that the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action shall strictly prove title exactly as pleaded in the plaint, a popular argument mounted is that, if the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action had come to Court seeking a declaration of title to the entire land and ejectment of a trespasser from the whole or part of the land, but later if the Court decides that the plaintiff is only a co-owner who is entitled to undivided rights of the land, the Court shall dismiss the action since the plaintiff came before the Court as the sole owner of the land.

If the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action seeks a declaration of title to the entire land, but at the end of the trial, if the Court finds that the plaintiff is not entitled to the entire land but only to a portion of it, the Court need not dismiss the action in toto. It is a recognised principle that when a plaintiff has asked for a greater relief than he is actually entitled to, it should not prevent him from getting the lesser relief which he is entitled to. Non debet cui plus licet quod minus est non licere, also known as, Cui licet quod majus non debet quod minus est non licere: the greater includes the less. This is a well-established principle in law and also in consonance with common sense. Vide King v. Kalu Banda (1912) 15 NLR 422 at 427, Rodrigo v. Abdul Rahman (1935) 37 NLR 298 at 299, Police Sergeant, Hambantota v. Simon Silva (1939) 40 NLR 534 at 538, Ibralebbe v. The Queen (1963) 65 NLR 433 at 435, Abeynayake v. Lt. Gen. Rohan Daluwatte and Others [1998] 2 Sri LR 47 at 55, Bulankulama and Others v. Secretary, Ministry of Industrial Development and Others [2000] 3 Sri LR 243 at 260-261, Attanayake v. Ramyawathie [2003] 1 Sri LR 401 at 409.

The finding that the plaintiff is entitled to a portion of the land means he is a co-owner of the land. It is well-settled law that a co-owner can sue a trespasser to have his title to the undivided share declared and for ejectment of the trespasser from the whole land. This the plaintiff can do by way of a rei vindicatio action.

In Hevawitarane v. Dangan Rubber Co. Ltd. (1913) 17 NLR 49 at 53 Wood Renton A.C.J. declared:

> Any co-owner, or party claiming under such a co-owner, is entitled to eject a trespasser from the whole of the common property. (Unus Lebbe v. Zayee (1893) 3 SCR 56, Greta v. Fernando (1905) 4 Bal. 100) Moreover, prima facie evidence of title is all that is required in such an action.

In the same case, Pereira J. stated at page 55:

> As regards the rights of owners of undivided shares of land to sue trespassers, I have always understood the law, both before and after the coming into operation of the Civil Procedure Code, to be that the owner of an undivided share of land might sue a trespasser to have his title to the undivided share declared and for ejectment of the trespasser from the whole land, the reason for this latter right being that the owner of the undivided share has an interest in every part and portion of the entire land (see section 12, Civil Procedure Code; Unus Lebbe v. Zayee (1893) 3 SCR 56; Greta v. Fernando (1905) 4 Bal. 100; Arnolisa v. Dissan 4 NLR 163).

In Hariette v. Pathmasiri [1996] 1 Sri LR 358 at 362 the Supreme Court quoted the said principle of law with approval. This was reiterated in several decisions including Rosalin Hami v. Hewage Hami and Others (SC/APPEAL/15/2008, SC Minutes of 03.12.2010) and Punchiappuhamy v. Dingiribanda (SC/APPEAL/4/2010, SC Minutes of 02.11.2015).

Learned counsel for the defendant submits that since the plaintiff filed this action rei vindicatio seeking a declaration of title to the lands described in the schedules to the plaint and ejectment of the defendant therefrom as the sole owner of the lands, but as conceded later, the plaintiff is only entitled to 7/8 shares of each land, the plaintiff's action must fail. Learned counsel says that this view was taken by the Supreme Court in the case of Hariette v. Pathmasiri (supra). I am not inclined to agree with this submission. As I have already explained, the plaintiff can be granted the lesser relief. In any event, as I will explain below, the Supreme Court in Hariette's case did not take such a view.

In Meera Lebbe Cassy Lebbe Marker v. Kalawilage Baba (1885) 7 SCC 97, Dias J. held:

> If the plaintiffs can establish their rights even to less than what they claim, they may have a judgment for that reduced share. Though a plaintiff cannot recover more than he claims, there is nothing to prevent him recovering less.

Gunawardana J. in the case of Allis v. Seneviratne [1989] 2 Sri LR 335 at 337 observed:

> The fact that the appellant has asked for a larger relief than he is entitled to, should not in my view prevent him from getting the lesser relief which he is entitled to.

In Chandrasiri Fernando v. Titus Wickramanayake [2012] BLR 344 Gooneratne J. at 346 quoted this with approval.

In the Supreme Court case of Punchiappuhamy v. Dingiribanda (supra) the plaintiffs filed action seeking a declaration of title to the whole land and ejectment of the defendant therefrom. The District Court granted both reliefs. On appeal, the High Court reversed the judgment of the District Court. Whilst dismissing the appeal on ejectment, Wanasundara J. remarked: "I am of the view that the Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court should have granted a declaration of title only to 11/24th share of the co-owned land of Belinchagahamula Hena to the Plaintiffs instead of dismissing the action altogether. I hold that the Appellants are only entitled to that relief and no more. Since it was not proved that the Defendant was a trespasser, he cannot be ejected by the Plaintiffs."

Applicability of Hariette v. Pathmasiri

In actions rei vindicatio, defendants tend to rely on Hariette v. Pathmasiri (supra) to argue that when a plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action seeks a declaration of title to the entire land, his action must fail if he fails to prove that he is the sole owner of the entire land. This in my view is a misinterpretation of the judgment. In Hariette's case the Supreme Court held at pages 362-363 as follows:

> However, it has to be borne in mind that our law recognizes the right of a co-owner to sue a trespasser to have his title to an undivided share declared and for ejectment of the trespasser from the whole land. In the case of Hevawitarana v. Dangan Rubber Co. Ltd 17 NLR 44 at 55, Pereira, J. stated as follows:-
> "I have always understood the law, both before and after the coming into operation of the Civil Procedure Code, to be that the owner of an undivided share of land might sue a trespasser to have his title to the undivided share declared and for ejectment of the trespasser from the whole land, the reason for this latter right being that the owner of the undivided share has an interest in every part and portion of the entire land".

> ejectment of the Defendant from that land. She has pleaded that she possessed the land described in schedule 2 for and in lieu of her undivided share and seeks the ejectment of the Defendant from that land. Therefore the case for the Plaintiff cannot stop at adducing evidence of paper title to an undivided share. It was her burden to adduce evidence of exclusive possession and the acquisition of prescriptive title by ouster in respect of the smaller land described in schedule 2.

Since the prescriptive title to schedule 2 had not been proved, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the Court of Appeal and dismissed the appeal.

If I may repeat for emphasis, in Hariette's case the plaintiff sought to eject the defendant from the portion of land described in the second schedule to the plaint (which was part of the larger land described in the first schedule to the plaint) on the basis that she possessed the portion of the land described in the second schedule to the plaint in lieu of her undivided shares described in the first schedule to the plaint. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff failed to establish that she acquired prescriptive title to that portion of land by ouster and therefore the plaintiff's action cannot succeed.

Hariette's case was followed by the Supreme Court in Attanayake v. Ramyawathie [2003] 1 Sri LR 401 where facts were similar. The Supreme Court at page 403 summarised the issue in that case in the following manner:

> It was agreed by both counsel at the hearing, that the only issue that has to be gone into is whether a co-owner of a land who sues a trespasser for a declaration of title and ejectment is entitled to > maintain the action if he instituted action as the sole owner of the premises.

This question was answered emphatically in the affirmative. Bandaranayake J. (as she then was) stated at page 409:

> I am of the firm view that, if an appellant had asked for a greater relief than he is entitled to, the mere claim for a greater share in the land should not prevent him, having a judgment in his favour for a lesser share in the land. A claim for a greater relief than entitled to should not prevent an appellant from getting a lesser relief. However, it is necessary that the appellant adduces evidence of ownership for the portion of land he is claiming for a declaration of title. It is amply clear that the appellant in the instant case has not been able to adduce such evidence.
> In such circumstances the question raised by the counsel for the appellant is answered in the following terms. A co-owner of a land who sues a trespasser for a declaration of title and ejectment is entitled to maintain the action even if he instituted the action as the sole owner of the land and premises. The fact that an appellant has asked for greater relief than he is entitled to, should not prevent him from getting the lesser relief which he is entitled to.

However, as in Hariette's case, the Supreme Court was not inclined to grant relief to the plaintiff-appellant because the plaintiff failed to prove that he was entitled to the land described in schedule B to the plaint. The reason was that the plaintiff sought a declaration of title and ejectment of the defendant from the land described in schedule B to the plaint.

> The facts in the present case are very much similar to that of Harriette's case. As referred to earlier in the instant case the appellant (the original plaintiff) had instituted action in the District > Court for a declaration of title and for ejectment from the land morefully described in the Schedule B to the plaint of the respondent therefrom. [page 406] However, it is necessary that the appellant adduces evidence of ownership for the portion of land he is claiming for a declaration of title. It is amply clear that the appellant in the instant case has not been able to adduce such evidence. [page 409]

Learned counsel for the defendant contends that the High Court was wrong when it stated that Hariette v. Pathmasiri has no application to the instant case. I cannot agree.

The ratio decidendi in one case cannot be mechanically applied to decide another case unless facts are similar. A principle of law laid down in a decision must be understood in the light of facts and circumstances of that particular case.

There are two schedules in the plaint of the instant action. However, unlike in Hariette's case (and Attanayake's case), in the instant case, the plaintiff sought declaration of title and ejectment from both lands which are two separate allotments – lot 6 in plan No. 467 in the first schedule and lot 7 in the same plan in the second schedule. Hence the High Court was correct in holding that Hariette's case has no direct applicability to resolve the instant case.

These two judgments (Hariette v. Pathmasiri and Attanayake v. Ramyawathie) unequivocally admit that a co-owner is entitled to:

(a) file an action seeking a declaration to his undivided rights of the land and ejectment of a trespasser from the whole land; and
(b) successfully sue a trespasser for a declaration of title and ejectment notwithstanding that he instituted the action as the sole owner of the premises. This is based on the common-sense principle that the greater includes the less.

If a co-owner of a land as the plaintiff can successfully sue a trespasser for ejectment from the whole land notwithstanding that he initially instituted the action as the sole owner of the land based on the common-sense principle that the greater includes the less, the plaintiff's action cannot and should not be dismissed if he seeks to eject a trespasser from an identified portion of the whole land on the basis that he filed the action as the sole owner of the identified portion of the land but he is in fact a co-owner of that identified portion of the land. In such an event, the Court can declare that the plaintiff is a co-owner of the whole land or of that identified portion of the land and eject the trespasser on that basis.

Vendor's duty to put the purchaser in possession

It is admitted that the owner transferred the property to the plaintiff by deed No. 3016. The defendant does not have a deed of transfer in his name. However, it is the position of the defendant that the owner placed the defendant in possession prior to the execution of the said deed in favour of the plaintiff. Hence learned counsel for the defendant argues that the immediate cause of action accrued to the plaintiff is to seek a refund of the purchase money and damages from the vendor. Learned counsel for the defendant in his written submissions cites two authorities in support – Babaihamy v. Danchihamy (1913) 16 NLR 245 and Don Seneris Appuhamy v. Guneris 1 Balasingham Reports 8.

The real dispute in those two cases was between the vendee and the vendor, not between the vendee and a third party in possession.

In Appuhamy v. Appuhamy (1880) 3 SCC 61 the Full Bench of the Supreme Court presided over by Cayley C.J. held:

> The execution and delivery of a conveyance of land, the property of the vendor, if in conformity with the Ordinance of frauds, transferred the title to the land to the purchaser, although no corporeal delivery > or actual possession of the land had followed. And that by virtue merely of the title so created, the purchaser might maintain an action seeking for a declaration of title against a third party in possession without title or under a weaker title.

In Punchi Hamy v. Arnolis (1883) 3 SCC 61 the Full Bench of the Supreme Court presided over by Burnside C.J. held:

> A purchaser of land who has a conveyance from his vendor, but has never had any possession, may maintain an action to eject from the land a third party claiming title adversely to the vendor.

This position has been followed in Latheef v. Mansoor (supra) wherein Marsoof J. held at 352:

> The action from which this appeal arises is not one falling within these special categories, as admittedly, the Respondents had absolutely no contractual nexus with the Appellants, nor had they at any time enjoyed possession of the land in question. Of course, this is not a circumstance that would deprive the Respondents to this appeal from the right to maintain a vindicatory action, as it is trite law in this country since the decisions of the Supreme Court in Punchi Hamy v. Arnolis (1883) 5 SCC 160 and Allis Appu v. Edris Hamy (1894) 3 SCR 87 that even an owner with no more than bare paper title (nuda proprietas) who has never enjoyed possession could lawfully vindicate his property subject to any lawful defence such as prescription.

In Andris v. Siman (1889) 9 SCC 7 it was observed that, in an action rei vindicatio, if the plaintiff seeks ejectment of the defendant on paper title, "title lies in deed only, and possession is not necessary to perfect it". Burnside C.J. held "if the plaintiff having failed to prove possession and ouster, had relied on his paper title only to entitle him to possession, then the question to be determined would have been whether the plaintiff had succeeded in establishing a good paper title to the land as against the defendants, whose actual possession was sufficient until the plaintiff had proved good title."

The Full Bench of the Supreme Court presided over by Hutchinson C.J. in Ratwatte v. Dullewe (1907) 10 NLR 304 held "Where the question is between a purchaser and a third party, the delivery of the deed of transfer is sufficient to entitle the purchaser to maintain an action, as owner, against such third party." Middleton J. stated at page 309:

> It seems to be good and settled law (Appuhamy v. Appuhamy (1880) 3 SCC 61 following Don Andris v. Illangakoon (1857) 2 Lor. 49) that the execution and delivery of conveyance of land in conformity with the Statute of Frauds confers the dominium on the purchaser, and so gives him title to maintain an action against a third party in possession without or under a weaker title.
> I have no doubt therefore that if the plaintiff [purchaser] here and accepted the conveyance tendered by the defendant [vendor], he might maintain his action against Dullewe [third party] for declaration of title, and might have called upon his vendor to warrant and defend the title conferred.

As held in Luwis Singho and Others v. Ponnamperuma (supra) by Wigneswaran J. at 324-325:

> But in a rei vindicatio action, the cause of action is based on the sole ground of violation of the right of ownership. In such an action proof is required that;
>
> (i) the Plaintiff is the owner of the land in question i.e. he has the dominium and*,*

(ii) that the land is in the possession of the Defendant (Voet 6:1:34)

Thus even if an owner never had possession of a land in question it would not be a bar to a vindicatory action.

It is true that it is the duty of the vendor to deliver possession of the property to the vendee at the time of the sale, and warrant and defend the title when a third party challenges the title of the vendee. However, merely because the vendor does not deliver possession of the property to the vendee at the time of the sale, the sale does not become ineffective or unenforceable against third parties, nor does the vendee become a speculative buyer. The vendee can either sue the vendor seeking rescission of the sale and a refund of the purchase price together with damages or sue the trespassers for a declaration of title and ejectment, and defend his title with the assistance of the vendor.

Conclusion

I answer the questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted in the negative. I affirm the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal and dismiss the appeal with costs.

The plaintiff filed this action against the defendant in the District Court of Matale seeking a declaration of title to the land described in the schedule to the plaint and a declaration that the defendant's title deed No. 1711 is a forgery. Conversely, the defendant sought a declaration of title to the same land and a declaration that the plaintiff's title deed No. 275 is a forgery. At the trial, paragraphs 2-5 of the plaint were recorded as admissions, i.e., Atipola Kiri Banda Karunaratne was the original owner of the land; he transferred his rights by deed No. 1451 to four persons including Heen Banda Atipola; the other three persons later transferred their rights to the said Heen Banda Atipola by deed No. 10601; and Heen Banda Atipola by deed No. 183 dated 01.02.1997 gifted the land to Bandaranayake. Both parties accept that the said deed of gift No. 183 was later revoked by Heen Banda Atipola. The fact that Heen Banda Atipola was at one time the owner of this land was admitted by both parties. The real issue was whether Heen Banda Atipola transferred the land to the plaintiff by deed No. 275 or whether he transferred the land to the defendant by deed No. 1711. In the event the Court decided that the forgery was not proved, the defendant alternatively claimed priority by registration of his deed in the correct folio despite his deed having been executed after the deed of the plaintiff.

However, during the course of leading evidence in the defendant's case, a further issue was raised by the defendant on the basis that by judgment delivered on 10.06.2009 in case No. CA/1152/98 marked V3 (page 542 of the brief), the Court of Appeal had come to the conclusion that the aforementioned deed No. 1451 attested by a notary public, namely T.M.A. Sally, is null and void since the notarial licence of Mr. Sally had not been extended at the time of execution of the deed and therefore both parties to the present case cannot derive title from Heen Banda Atipola.

The Court of Appeal concluded that "According to the evidence of Malani Perera an official of the High Court of Kandy, the notarial license of T.M.A. Sally who executed the deed No. 1451 of 11.04.1978 had not been extended beyond 22.02.1978. Accordingly Mr. T.M.A. Sally was not a notary public on the date he attested the deed No. 1451 which was marked V1 at the trial." But according to the judgment of the District Court marked V8 (page 580 of the brief), witness Malani Perera's evidence is that notary Sally had a valid licence at the time of the execution of deed No. 1451. The evidence is not available in the brief. The Court of Appeal in its judgment has not explained why the finding of the District Court in that regard is wrong. In any event, as I will explain below, even if the notarial licence has not been extended, the notary does not cease to be a notary and the deeds executed during that period do not become invalid ipso facto.

The Court of Appeal in the said judgment (page 543) also states that the aforesaid Etipola Kiribanda Karunaratne died on 28.04.1978 leaving a last will whereby this property was bequeathed to Chandrasena Karunaratne who transferred the same to the plaintiff in that case by deed No. 4151 dated 31.12.1984. According to the judgment of the Court of Appeal, the deed had been tendered for the first time to the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal has accepted that position despite there being no indication that the said last will was proved before a court of law and admitted to probate.

Ultimately the Court of Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court which was in favour of the defendant-respondent in that case on the submissions made by counsel for the defendant-respondent himself. This is very unusual. The Court of Appeal states: "Upon submission made before this Court by the counsel for the defendant-respondent it is contended that the deed No. 4151 marked as X conveys title to the plaintiff/appellant. And the deed No. 1451 attested by T.M.A. Sally 11.04.1978 conveys no title to the defendant-respondents. Accordingly we allow the appeal and grant the reliefs prayed by the plaintiff-appellant in the amended plaint dated 10.03.1992." Unless there is collusion, it is hard to believe that the defendant-respondent, in favour of whom judgment has been entered, would make submissions on appeal in support of their opponent.

The subject matter of this case and the aforesaid Court of Appeal case is the same. The defendant in this case is the substituted defendant in the Court of Appeal case. But the plaintiffs are different. The application for intervention in the Court of Appeal case by the plaintiff in the instant case was refused by the Court of Appeal in view of the objections raised by the plaintiff-appellant and the substituted defendant in the Court of Appeal case, the latter being, as I have already stated, the defendant in this case (vide V4 at page 545).

The judgment of the Court of Appeal is not binding on the plaintiff in the instant action inter alia because he was not a party to the said (in my view, collusive) appeal.

E.R.S.R. Coomaraswamy in his book The Law of Evidence, Vol I, 2nd Edition (1989), at pages 528-529 states that in order to establish a plea of res judicata, the following constituents must be established:

(i) the former action must have been a regular action;
(ii) the two actions must be between the same parties or their representatives in interest (privies);
(iii) the previous decision must be what in law is deemed such;
(iv) the particular judicial decision must have been in fact pronounced as alleged;
(v) the previous judgment must be a final judgment;
(vi) the same question or identical causes of action must have been involved in both actions;
(vii) the judicial tribunal pronouncing the decision must have had competent jurisdiction in that behalf;
(viii) the judgment should not have been obtained by fraud or collusion;
(ix) if it is a foreign judgment, it should have been passed in accordance with the principles of natural justice.

The learned author adds that the correctness of the decision is not a relevant consideration.

After a lengthy trial before the District Court on several contentious issues, which commenced on 27.03.2006 and ended on 28.06.2012, spanning over six years, the District Court by judgment dated 23.01.2013 dismissed the plaintiff's action as well as the defendant's cross claim stating that the District Court is bound by the judgment of the Court of Appeal on the doctrine of stare decisis. In view of that finding, the District Court did not answer the real issues raised by both parties over which voluminous evidence was led at the trial. The District Court merely concluded that answering those contentious issues does not arise in view of the Court of Appeal judgment.

On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal of Kandy affirmed the judgment of the District Court and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff is before this Court against the judgment of the High Court. This Court granted leave to appeal on the question whether the High Court and the District Court erred in law in applying the doctrine of stare decisis to this case.

The doctrine of state decisis was considered in the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Mallika v. Siriwardena and Others (SC/APPEAL/160/2016, SC Minutes of 02.12.2022). Stare decisis is an abbreviation of the Latin phrase stare decisis et non quieta movere (to stand by precedent and not to disturb settled points).

Regarding deed No. 1451, the Court of Appeal found it to be a nullity because "the notarial license of T.M.A. Sally who executed the deed No. 1451 of 11.04.1978 had not been extended beyond 22.02.1978." Assuming this is true, this does not make the deed a nullity.

According to section 2 of the Notaries Ordinance No. 1 of 1907 as amended every appointment to the office of notary shall be by warrant granted by the Minister in charge of the subject. According to section 13, it is a punishable offence for a person to practice as a notary without such warrant. Once enrolled as a notary, he shall renew his certificate on a yearly basis. Section 27 sets down the procedure to be followed in granting certificates to practice as a notary on a yearly basis by every Registrar of the High Court holden in every judicial zone. Section 29 provides for appeals for an aggrieved notary whose application for certificate has been refused. What happens if such notary practices as a notary without renewal of the certificate? Section 30 provides the answer: "If any person shall act as a notary without having obtained such certificate as aforesaid, he shall for or in respect of every deed executed or acknowledged before him as such notary, whilst he shall have been without such certificate, be guilty of an offence and be liable to a fine not less than five thousand rupees and not exceeding twenty five thousand rupees." He will have to pay a fine in a sum not less than five thousand rupees and not exceeding twenty five thousand rupees for every deed executed. Until the Increase of Fines Act No. 12 of 2005 was enacted, the fine was a sum not exceeding fifty rupees for every such deed. In terms of section 35, such offence is even compoundable by the Registrar-General. There is no provision in the Notaries Ordinance which makes those deeds invalid.

I must emphasise that the instant appeal is not against the judgment of the Court of Appeal. But consideration of the said Court of Appeal judgment is intensely relevant to decide this appeal. Insofar as the instant appeal is concerned, I hold that the said judgment of the Court of Appeal does not represent the correct position of the law.

The High Court in its judgment cites Wickramanayake v. Perera (1932) 34 NLR 168 and states that in that case "the issue of failure to renew notarial license was discussed and it was held that if a notary had acted as a notary before renewal of his certificate and obtained it later it has no retrospective effect." I am in agreement with this statement of law. However, in that case the question was not whether the deeds the notary executed during that period were valid or invalid but whether the conviction of the notary for failure to renew the certificate at the correct time was right or wrong. That case is of no assistance to resolve the instant issue.

The District Court in my view should not have allowed the defendant to present a different case after the plaintiff closed his case by raising additional issues on a judgment of a different case to which the plaintiff was not a party. The District Court whilst answering issue Nos. 31 and 32 admits that the defendant was not a party to that case and therefore the defendant is not bound by the judgment of the Court of Appeal. Thereafter the learned District Judge fell into error by concluding that the District Court is bound by that judgment on the doctrine of stare decisis.

> අභියාචනා අධිකරණ තීන්දුවකින් දිසා අධිකරණයේ අනුගමන්‍ය පූර්ව නිදර්ශන නියායට (stare decisis) යටත්ව බැඳී සිටි. එසේම එල්. 3412 හා සී ඒ 1152 අභියාචනාධිකරණ තීන්දුවෙන් පැමිණිලි කරු බැඳි නොමැති නම් 1451 දරණ සලේ මහතාගේ ඔප්පුව වලංගු ඔප්පුවක් බව සනාථ කිරීමට සාක්ෂි කැඳවීමට ඉල්ලා සිටීමට පැමිණිල්ලට අවස්ථාවක් තිබුනි. එසේ ඔහු කර නොමැති බැවින්, 1451 ඔප්පුව වලංගු ඔප්පුවක් බව සනාථ කිරීමට කිසිදු සාක්ෂියක් පැමිණිල්ලෙන් ඉදිරිපත් වී නොමැත. ඒ අනුව අභියාචනාධිකරණ නියෝගය බලාත්මකව පවති.

The District Court held that the plaintiff did not prove deed No. 1451 by calling witnesses. At page 19 of the judgment, the District Court held that in terms of section 31 of the Evidence Ordinance, admissions recorded at the trial are not conclusive. This interpretation is erroneous. There was no necessity to prove deed No. 1451 because it was recorded as a formal admission at the commencement of the trial. Section 31 of the Evidence Ordinance reads as follows: "Admissions are not conclusive proof of the matters admitted, but they may operate as estoppels under the provisions hereinafter contained." Section 31 relates to informal admissions. It is section 58 which is applicable to formal admissions in Court. Section 58 reads as follows: "No fact need be proved in any proceeding which the parties thereto or their agents agree to admit at the hearing, or which, before the hearing, they agree to admit by any writing under their hands, or which by any rule of pleading in force at the time they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings: Provided that the court may, in its discretion, require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions."

I answer the question of law on which leave was granted in the affirmative and set aside the judgments of the High Court and the District Court and allow the appeal. In view of the judgment of this Court there is no purpose in directing the High Court to rehear the appeal. As I stated previously, voluminous evidence has been led before the District Court on several issues raised before that Court although the District Court ultimately disregarded the entirety of the evidence on the erroneous basis that the Court of Appeal judgment is binding on it. I direct the incumbent District Judge of Matale to pronounce the judgment afresh on the evidence led and to answer all the issues raised at the trial. Counsel for both parties shall be given an opportunity to file comprehensive written submissions before the matter is fixed for judgment. The plaintiff is entitled to costs in all three Courts.

COUNSEL : Saliya Pieris, PC with Ruwan Udawela and Anjana Rathnasiri for the 4th Accused-Appellant-Appellant.

Rohantha Abeysuriya, PC, ASG for the Hon. Attorney General.

ARGUED &
DECIDED ON : 04th October 2023

P. PADMAN SURASENA, J.

Court heard the submissions of the learned President's Counsel for the 4th Accused-Appellant-Appellant and also the submissions of the learned Additional Solicitor General, PC for the Hon. Attorney General and concluded the argument.

The Attorney General has indicted the 4th Accused-Appellant-Appellant along with five others under fifteen counts.

> Count No. 01 has alleged that the Accused had committed the conspiracy to commit the attempted murder of Pattiyawattage Nimal Perera Samarasinghe who is the prosecution witness No. 01 listed in the indictment, an offence punishable under section 300 read with sections 113 B and 102 of the Penal Code.

Count No. 02 has alleged that the Accused had been members of an unlawful assembly, the common object of which was to cause the death of Deepthi Champa Samarasinghe, an offence punishable under Section 300 of the Penal Code.

Count No. 03 has alleged that the Accused had committed an offence punishable under Section 296 read with Section 146 of the Penal Code on the basis that one or more of the members of the afore-said unlawful assembly had committed the offence of murder by causing the death of said Deepthi Champa Samarasinghe in furtherance of the common object of the said unlawful assembly.

Count No. 04 has alleged that the Accused had committed an offence punishable under Section 300 read with Section 146 of the Penal Code on the basis that one or more of the members of the afore-said unlawful assembly had committed the offence of attempted murder of said Pattiyawattage Nimal Perera Samarasinghe (who is the prosecution witness No. 01) in furtherance of the common object of the afore-said unlawful assembly.

Count No. 05 has alleged that the Accused had committed an offence punishable under Section 380 read with Section 146 of the Penal Code on the basis that one or more of the members of the afore-said unlawful assembly had committed the offence of robbery of cash, gold jewellary and wrist watches from the possession of said Pattiyawattage Nimal Perera Samarasinghe (prosecution witness No. 01) in furtherance of the common object of the afore-said unlawful assembly.

Count No. 06 has alleged that the Accused had committed an offence punishable under Section 443 read with Section 146 of the Penal Code on the basis that one or more of the members of the afore-said unlawful assembly had committed the offence of criminal trespass on the house of said Pattiyawattage Nimal Perera Samarasinghe (prosecution witness No. 01) in furtherance of the common object of the afore-said unlawful assembly.

Count No. 07 has alleged that the Accused had committed an offence punishable under Section 445 read with Section 146 of the Penal Code on the basis that one or more of the members of the afore-said unlawful assembly had trespassed on the house of said Pattiyawattage Nimal Perera Samarasinghe (prosecution witness No. 01) in order to commit the attempted murder of said Pattiyawattage Nimal Perera Samarasinghe in furtherance of the common object of the afore-said unlawful assembly.

Count Nos. 08, 09, 10, 11 and 12 are counts framed under Section 32 of the Penal Code corresponding to the same incidents set out respectively in afore-mentioned counts 3-7.

Count No. 13 has alleged that the 03rd Accused had committed robbery while being armed with a pistol, an offence punishable under Section 383 of the Penal Code.

Count No. 14 has alleged that the 04th Accused had committed robbery while being armed with a pistol, an offence punishable under Section 383 of the Penal Code.

Count No. 15 has alleged that the 05th Accused had committed robbery while being armed with a knife, an offence punishable under Section 383 of the Penal Code.

The 14th and 15th counts are in relation to the offence of robbery punishable under Section 383 of the Penal Code. (Counts 13, 14 and 15 are only against 3rd, 4th & 5th Accused respectively)

At the conclusion of the trial, the learned High Court Judge had acquitted the 6th Accused from all the counts and proceeded to convict the 1st-5th Accused on Count Nos. 1-12. The learned High Court Judge had also convicted the 3rd Accused on Count No. 13; the 4th Accused on Count No. 14; and the 5th Accused on Count No. 15 respectively.

Although the learned High Court Judge had also convicted the 1st-5th Accused on the remaining counts framed under Section 32 of the Penal Code (i.e., the Count Nos. 08, 09, 10, 11, 12), he had not passed any sentence on the 1st-5th Accused in respect of those counts.

Being aggrieved by the judgement dated 04-06-2007 pronounced by the High Court, the 1st-5th Accused had appealed to the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal after the argument by its judgment dated 25-03-2011, had decided to acquit the 2nd, 3rd and 5th Accused from all counts framed against them. However, the Court of Appeal had proceeded to affirm the conviction and sentence imposed on the 1st and 4th Accused on counts 8-12 and the conviction and the sentence imposed on the 4th Accused in respect of count Nos. 1, 8-12 and 14. The Court of Appeal had proceeded to acquit the 4th Accused from count Nos. 2-7.

The main complaint made by the learned President's Counsel who appeared for the 4th Accused-Appellant-Appellant in this case is against the two different decisions made by the Court of Appeal respectively in respect of the 3rd Accused and the 4th Accused. He pointed out to the evidence of witness No. 01, Pattiyawattage Nimal Perera Samarasinghe who is the sole eye witness in this case. The said witness is the only person who had identified the Accused at the subsequently held identification parade. It is not disputed by the learned Additional Solicitor General that the evidence against the 3rd and 4th Accused is similar. Wherever and whenever the prosecution witness No. 01 had narrated the incident pertaining to this case, what he had stated was that he had identified both the 3rd and 4th Accused. He had always mentioned the names of the 3rd and 4th Accused together. This is apparent from pages 116, 118, 129 and 130 of the Appeal Brief. It is appropriate to re-produce those parts of his evidence in this regard.

Thus, it is not disputed and is indeed clear from the above portions of evidence recorded in the trial that it is one and the same evidence that could be used either to convict or acquit the 3rd and 4th Accused as far as the evidence in relation to their facial identities are concerned.

According to the judgement dated 25-03-2011, the Court of Appeal has stated as follows-:

> The 3rd Accused was sentenced to death and rigorous imprisonment ranging up to 15 years. The evidence against the 3rd accused was his identification at a parade and joint representation by Counsel. The 3rd accused is said to have worn a facemask during the commission of the offences and the virtual complainant claims to have identified him when the 3rd accused had occasionally removed/lifted the mask. In any event his identification alone by a single witness unaccompanied by other evidence does not warrant a conviction on the charges as such evidence is insufficient to convict him on the charges. For the reasons, I am satisfied that the verdict against the 3rd Accused was unreasonable and against the weight of the evidence, and that a verdict of acquittal should be entered in his case. Hence, I feel constrained to think that the convictions of the 3rd accused and > sentences passed on him should be set aside and the 3rd accused be acquitted on all the charges.

Therefore, it is clear that the Court of Appeal was not convinced that the identity of the 3rd Accused was established to the satisfaction of Court through the evidence of prosecution witness No. 01. It is on that basis that the Court of Appeal had set-aside the conviction of the 3rd Accused and proceeded to acquit him from all counts in the indictment.

The Court of Appeal as regards the 4th Accused had stated as follows-:

> The case against the 4th accused mainly depended on the evidence relating to the identification parade, dock identification and section 27 discovery of the firearms and an opinion expressed by a ballistic expert regarding the use of the firearms in the commission of the offences. The conviction of the 5th accused was based on mere identification, at a parade followed by dock identification. The Counsel for the 4th accused contended that the evidence adduced against their clients is hardly sufficient to bring home a conviction while the State argued the contrary.

Therefore, it appears that the Court of Appeal was satisfied about the identity of the 4th Accused on the same evidence that it rejected as regards the 3rd Accused, in the presence of evidence of a recovery of a revolver subsequent to 'Section 27 statement' made by the 4th Accused. It appears that the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal had also taken in to consideration that joint representation entered by a single counsel for the 3rd, 4th and 5th Accused and the fact that counsel is a junior of the learned President's Counsel who had appeared for the 1st Accused. This is apparent from the following extract taken from the Court of Appeal judgement.

> In the circumstances, it could safely be assumed that the 1st accused has indirectly admitted the stand of the prosecution that the 3rd, 4th and 5th accused were concerned with the commission of the crime. In that frame of mind, it is difficult to understand as to the basis on which the 1st accused could have reposed confidence in his Counsel who had also taken instructions to defend the 3rd, 4th and 5th accused. This is a grave incriminating circumstance that should have been taken into consideration as an item of evidence against the 1st accused.

The joint representation entered by a single Counsel applies to the 3rd, 4th and 5th accused vice versa. In this background, the prosecution has invited us to take notice of this unusual arrangement made to represent the accused by one single Counsel, as a relevant fact against them as well in determining their degree of responsibility in the commission of the crimes. Considering the extreme unusual conduct of the 1st accused and others, I am of the opinion that it constitutes strong incriminating evidence falling into the category of subsequent conduct of the accused.

I have stated that a President's Counsel had appeared for all the accused in the High Court until 08.09.2005. It is thereafter that the appearance had been marked separately for the 1st accused and others. After this date until the conclusion of the trial, the same President's Counsel continued to enter his appearance for the 1st accused and quite surprisingly his junior in the case, ceased to be his Junior Counsel and took over case of the other accused. This clearly shows that the cure provided was even worse that the disease. The conspiracy between the 1st accused and the others, particularly the 4th accused is quite apparent from this arrangement. This being relevant to the fact in issue, cannot be ignored in determining the degree of culpability of the accused. As this is borne out by the record of the Magistrate Court and High Court none can say that it is not proved to the required standard.

We see no basis for such conclusion. Moreover, since this conclusion has been categorically repeated in more than one place in the judgment, we have no reason to reject the submission made by the learned President's Counsel for the 4th Accused-Appellant-Appellant that this erroneous conclusion had influenced the mind of the Judges of the Court of Appeal. This factor appears to have ultimately prompted them to arrive at a different conclusion in respect of the 4th Accused which had resulted in a different treatment meted out to the 4th Accused as against the 3rd Accused despite the fact that the evidence against each one of them remains the same.

Let me now deal with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal about the presence of evidence of a recovery of a revolver subsequent to 'Section 27 statement' made by the 4th Accused. Admittedly, the 4th Accused had surrendered with an Attorney-at-Law to the police station at 9.00 pm, fifteen days after the incident. We also observe that the police officer had recorded the statement from the 4th Accused at 9.15 pm, just fifteen minutes after the time he had surrendered to Maharagama police station. It is this statement which had contained the 'Section 27 statement' which is alleged to have led to the recovery of a revolver from a particular place. Having regard to: the time at which the 4th Accused had surrendered to the Police Station; the time at which his statement had been recorded; the background of the evidence regarding the identity of the Accused coming from a solitary witness who says at one point of time that the 4th Accused was wearing a mask, it is highly questionable as to whether it is right for the Court of Appeal to place that much of reliance on the 'Section 27 statement' and the subsequent recovery of a revolver to come to a conclusion that the identity of the 4th Accused has been established beyond reasonable doubt. In any event, as pointed out by the learned President's Counsel for the 4th Accused, even if the evidence of a recovery of a revolver subsequent to 'Section 27 statement' made by the 4th Accused is accepted, it is clear that the effect of the 'Section 27 statement' and the subsequent recovery is limited only to the inference that the 4th Accused had knowledge of the particular revolver concealed or placed at that particular location. That would be an independent item of evidence. Moreover, although the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal in their judgment at page 50, had stated that "According to the evidence of the government analysts P3 is a revolver and it is a gun within the meaning of the law and the two bullets recovered from the body of the deceased may have been fired from the said revolver". It is clear that this is also not a correct conclusion.

The relevant Government Analyst's report dated 26-02-1990 was tendered to this Court by the 4th Accused-Appellant-Appellant by way of motion dated 09-09-2011. This has been produced in the High Court marked P9. What the Government Analyst report has stated is as follows-:

> " පැ1 සහ පැ2 උණ්ඩ බරින්, ප්‍රමාණයෙන් සහ වර්ණයෙන් ආමානය 9×19mm පතරොම් වල දක්නට ලැබෙන උණ්ඩ වලට හා අනුරූප විය. මෙම උණ්ඩ මත වූ ගිනි අවි ලකුණු පරීක්ෂාකිරීමේදී හෙළිවූයේ ඒවාට වඩා විශාල ආමානයකින් යුත් කානුවක් ඇති තුවක්කුවකින් වෙඩි තබා ඇති බවයි. පැ1 සහ පැ2, පැ3 රිවෝල්වරයෙන් වෙඩි තැබුවා විය හැක. පැ1 සහ පැ2 තවදුරටත් පරීක්ෂාකිරීමේදී හෙළිවූයේ ඒවා මත සැසඳීමට තරම් ප්‍රමාණවත් ගිනි අවි ලකුණු නොතිබුණ බවය.

We observe that පැ1 and පැ2 referred to in the Government Analyst's report are spent bullets. පැ3 is the revolver. Therefore, what the learned Judge of the Court of Appeal has stated in his judgement does not appear to be a conclusive opinion expressed by the Government Analyst. We observe that this fact also has influenced the mind of the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal to come to the conclusion that the identity of the 4th Accused-Appellant has been established.

As the Court of Appeal has held that the evidence of witness No. 01 relating to the identity of the 3rd Accused is not satisfactory, the Court of Appeal had acquitted the 3rd Accused. Hon. Attorney General had not appealed against that finding. Therefore, to date, the Court of Appeal's conclusion on that matter has survived. The question before us is whether there is any additional material to affirm the conviction of the 4th Accused in view of the fact that it was on the witness No. 01's evidence that the prosecution had sought to establish the identity of the 4th Accused also. We are unable to see any such additional material against the 4th Accused which is capable of independently establishing the identity of the 4th Accused. Thus, we are compelled to take the view that there is a clear disparity in the judgment pronounced by the Court of Appeal which had opted to treat the 4th Accused in a way different to that of the 3rd Accused.

Going by the Court of Appeal conclusion with regard to the 3rd Accused we are of the view that there had been no basis before the Court of Appeal to have enabled it to arrive at a conclusion that the identity of the 4th Accused is nevertheless established.

Although this Court has granted Special Leave to Appeal in respect of several questions of law set out in paragraph 15 of the petition dated 06-05-2011 we are of the view that it would suffice to provide an answer to the following question of law which is set out in paragraph 15 (c) of the petition dated 06-05-2011.

> Did their Lordships err when they concluded that the Petitioner was clearly identified while at the same time acquitting the 3rd and 5th Accused whose convictions were also based on substantially the same evidence?

We answer the above question of law in the affirmative. Therefore, we proceed to set aside the conviction and the sentence imposed on the 4th Accused and direct that the 4th Accused be acquitted and discharged from all counts in the indictment.

Judgment of the High Court in so far as the 4th Accused is concerned, is set aside. The judgement of the Court of Appeal in so far as the 4th Accused is concerned, is set aside.

Registrar is directed to forward the copy of this judgement to the relevant High Court as soon as the judgment is ready.

Appeal is allowed.

Aluwihare PC. J.,

This is a case related to the vesting, and subsequent revocation of land taken over by the Land Reform Commission under the Land Reform Law. The Petitioner-Petitioner-Appellant [hereinafter the Appellant] seeks to impugn the decision of the Minister to revoke the vesting of the disputed land in the State Plantations Corporation, which had leased the said land to the Appellant. This court granted Special Leave to Appeal against the Order of the Court of Appeal dated 01.11.2007 on the following questions of law.

(a) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal made only an observation on the bare denial of the Respondents that the DEEGALA DIVISION is not part of the VOGAN ESTATE as against the strong documentary evidence placed by the Petitioners to the contrary?

(b) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal considered Section 27A(4) of the Land Reform Law in isolation and having no regard to the material circumstances as set out in detail by the Petitioner, which contentions were supported by documentation?

(c) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal failed to consider that principles of natural justice would have warranted a hearing and/or notification to the Petitioner prior to making of the Revocation Order 'P10' by Gazette Extraordinary No. 1059/16 dated 24.12.1998?

(d) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal failed to consider that Revocation order 'P10' itself gives no reason as to why the said Revocation Order was made?

(e) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal failed to consider that the Petitioner is not only the Lessee of the entirety of VOGAN ESTATE including the said extent of 94A:2R:14P for a period of 99 years as stated above, but also holds a Power of Attorney No. 345 dated 4th May 1995 from the State Plantations Corporation, 2nd Respondent- Respondent and that the Petitioner would suffer grave prejudice and loss if the said extent of land vests in the Land Reform Commission by virtue of the said Revocation Order?

(f) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal failed to consider that the Revocation Order 'P10' has been made by the 1st Respondent despite being well aware that the Petitioner had sought judicial recourse against the sub lessee for non-payment of the rentals and moreover without any notice to the Petitioner of the said Revocation order? Thus had the 1st Respondent acted arbitrarily, ultra vires, with mala fides, in an unreasonable manner and had been made for an ulterior motive?

(g) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal considered the Revocation Order 'P10' having no regard to the commercial complexities applicable to the said VOGAN ESTATE and especially the DEEGALA DIVISION?

(h) Did the Court of Appeal fail to consider the letter dated 27th February 2003 ('X15') by the Land Reform Commission sent to the Petitioner marked 'P12', by which letter the Land Reform Commission clearly stated that no further steps would be taken under and in terms of the Gazette Extraordinary No. 1059/16 dated 24.12.1998 to re-vest the DEEGALA DIVISION in the Land Reform Commission as per the said Gazette notification?

(1) It would be prudent to mention the facts of the case before addressing the questions of law which warrant determination by this Court. 'DEEGALA DIVISION' is a division of the 'VOGAN ESTATE' situated in Kalutara and described in Schedule 'A' to the Petition. By and under virtue of the provisions of the Land Reform Law, No. 1 of 1972 the VOGAN ESTATE was duly vested in the Land Reform Commission. Thereafter, the Minister of Forestry, Irrigation and Mahaweli Development acting under and by virtue of the powers vested under Section 27A of the Land Reform (Special provisions) Act, No. 39 of 1981, by order published in the Gazette Extraordinary of 21st April 1994 vested the 'VOGAN ESTATE' in the Sri Lanka State Plantations Corporation. Subsequently, by and upon Indenture of Lease No. 344 dated 4th of May 1995 attested by D.C. Pieris Notary Public, the State Plantations Corporation leased the said land, estate, plantations and premises of VOGAN ESTATE for a period of 99 years commencing 22nd of June 1992 and ending 31st December 2091 to the Appellant.

(2) One Mrs. Gunawardane and family, who were the original owners of the portion of land-94A.2R.14P comprising part of DEEGALA DIVISION prior to it being vested in the Land Reform Commission, requested the Ministry of Public Administration, Home Affairs, Plantation industries and Parliamentary Affairs that an extent of 94A:2R:14P be leased to them. The Ministry directed the land Reform Commission to lease the said extent of land out of DEEGALA DIVISION to Mrs. Gunawardane and family.

(3) At this point, the Appellant [Kotagala Plantations Ltd] objected to the lease, maintaining the position that the aforementioned land, by virtue of being part of the VOGAN ESTATE was duly vested in the Sri Lanka State Plantations Corporation, which had in turn, leased the entirety to the Appellant. A letter dated 23.07.1996 sent by the Director of Land Alienation of the Land Reform Commission to the Director of the Land Reform Authority of Kalutara directed that possession be taken of the said extent of 94A:2R:14P out of DEEGALA DIVISION for the purpose of leasing it to Mrs. Gunawardane and family. The Appellant, having been compelled to seek legal recourse due to the aforementioned letter, instituted Case No. 4696/Spl in the District Court of Colombo on 6th August 1996 against the Land Reform Commission, Sri Lanka State Plantations Corporation and Mrs. Gunawardane. In that case, the Appellant claimed relief in the form of a declaration that the Appellant is the lawful lessee of VOGAN ESTATE including DEEGALA DIVISION, a permanent injunction and interim injunction restraining the Land Reform Commission from entering and/or taking possession of VOGAN ESTATE including DEEGALA DIVISION, and an interim injunction restraining Mrs. Gunawardane from entering and/or taking possession of VOGAN ESTATE including DEEGALA DIVISION.

(4) The Case was fixed for trial in the District Court. In the interim, the Land Reform Commission and the Ministry agreed that the Appellant should lease the said extent of 94A:2R:14P to Mrs. Gunawardane and family. DC Colombo Case No. 4696/Spl was settled and in or around 8th April 1997, the Appellant, by indenture of Lease No. 1594 dated 8th April 1997 attested by Gilbert Somasiri Herath Gunaratne Notary Public, in pursuance of the authority under the Indenture of Lease No. 344, sub-leased to Mrs. Gunawardane and her children the allotment of land, estate, plantations and premises in extent 94A:2R:14P of DEEGALA DIVISION of the VOGAN ESTATE with the buildings for a period of 50 years commencing 1st November 1996. The Land Reform Commission refunded to the Appellant the sum of Rs. 400,000 paid to it by Mrs. Gunawardane for the lease rental and the amount was given as credit in favour of Mrs. Gunawardane and utilised by the Appellant as the first year's rental from Mrs. Gunawardane. A Receipt of Rs. 453,600 received by the Appellant, was provided to Mrs. Gunawardane.

(5) The terms of the said indenture of lease were such that the Gunawardanes shall pay a rental of Rs. 453,600 during the first year of the said term, that an yearly rental would be paid in the manner set out in the lease, that if the yearly rental or any part of it was unpaid for 60 days after becoming payable, or if any covenant on the part of the Gunawardanes contained in the indenture were not performed or observed, it shall be lawful for the Appellant at any time thereafter to re-enter the premises or any part of it, and that if at any time, any question, dispute or difference of opinion in relation to or in connection with the lease, or in the interpretation of any provision arises during the continuance of the lease term, which cannot be amicably settled by the Parties, it shall be referred to Arbitration.

(6) Having entered into possession of the land, the Gunawardanes failed or neglected to make payment of rental due as per the lease agreement for the period between 1st November 1997 to 30th October 1998. Due to the failure of the Arbitration proceedings which followed as a result of the dispute, the Appellant instituted an action in the District Court of Colombo bearing No. 5222/Spl against Mrs. Gunawardane and family seeking inter alia an enjoining order restraining the Gunawardanes from removing or using any produce of the land. On 27th October 1998, the Court issued the said Enjoining Order prayed for along with notice of Interim Injunction for the same purpose.

(7) Thereafter, the Minister of Plantation Industries, the relevant Minister at that time; by Gazette Extraordinary No.1059/16 dated 24.12.1998, acting under Section 27A(4) of the Land Reform Law, revoked the vesting order made by him in the Gazette Extraordinary of 21st April 1994 vesting land extent 94A:2R:14P of the DEEGALA DIVISION of the VOGAN ESTATE in the State Plantations Corporation. It is the validity of this Revocation Order that was canvassed before the Court of Appeal by the Appellant.

(8) It is the Appellant's position that by the vesting order published in the Gazette Extraordinary of 21st April 1994, the Sri Lanka State Plantations Corporation became vested with the title to and ownership of the said land, estate, plantations and premises of VOGAN ESTATE and that as per Section 27A(4) of the Land Reform Law as amended by Land Reform (Special Provisions) Act, No.39 of 1981, the Vestee must have failed to comply with any term or condition in relation to the vesting Order for the Minister to revoke the vesting Order. The Appellant notes that the said revocation order provides no reason as to why the revocation order was made, and by virtue of holding Power of Attorney to the State Plantations Corporation, the Appellant was entitled in law to be noticed and provided an opportunity of being heard as to why the Revocation Order was issued. Therefore, the Appellant contends that the said Revocation Order is arbitrary, mala fide, ultra vires and unreasonable. On this premise, the Appellant contended before the Court of Appeal that it was entitled in law for an Order in law in the nature of a Writ of Certiorari quashing the said Revocation Order.

(9) It must be mentioned that no notice of revocation order was provided to the Appellant until a copy of the said order was produced by the Attorney-at-Law for the Minister of Plantation Industries in DC Colombo Case No. 4696/Spl on 27th January 1999.

(10) Furthermore, the Appellant contends that in any event, the Revocation Order is not valid as the Land Reform Commission, in a letter dated 27th February 2003 (X 15), states that no further steps would be taken under and in terms of the Gazette Extraordinary No. 1059/16 dated 24.12.1998 for the re-vesting of the DEEGALA DIVISION in the Commission. The Appellant prays that the of the Court of Appeal dated 01.11.2007 be set aside and for the issuance of a Writ of Certiorari quashing the Revocation Order.

(11) The 1st Respondent- Respondents, the Land Reform Commission [LRC] maintains that the DEEGALA DIVISION was and is not part of the VOGAN ESTATE, that it was vested separately in the Land Reform Commission, that it was not vested in the State Plantations Corporation and that the State Plantations Corporation merely managed the DEEGALA DIVISION- of which the Title Ownership was vested in the Land Reform Commission. The LRC further submits that the DEEGALA DIVISION was not included in the Indenture of Lease No. 344 dated 4th May 1995 attested by D.C. Pieris Notary Public whereby the State Plantations Corporation leased the land, estate, plantations and premises of the VOGAN ESTATE for a period of 99 years commencing 22nd June 1992 and ending 31st December 2091 to the Appellant, and that the State Plantations Corporation has offered no explanation as to how it considered (if at all) the DEEGALA DIVISION to be part of the VOGAN ESTATE. The LRC submits that the above matters are factual disputes and would be best resolved by the District Court, and not by way of a Writ of Certiorari as prayed by the Appellant. It is of significance to note that when the Appellant, the LRC and the 2nd Respondent -Respondents, State Plantation Corporation [SPC] entered into a settlement in the District Court case referred to above, based on which the Appellant leased DEEGAL DIVISION to Gunawardenas, LRC or the SPC never took up the position that the DEEGALA DIVISION was not a part of the Vogan Estate.

(12) Moreover, the LRC submits that, in any event, the terms of condition of the vesting Order which was breached for the Minister to publish the Revocation Order by the Extraordinary Gazette is clear as the Vesting Order mentions that the State Plantations Corporation is bound to pay the Land Reform Commission the nominal value of lands referred to in the schedule – which the State Plantations Corporation failed to fulfil as it had not paid the Land Reform Commission the nominal value of the lands amounting to Rs. 14,412,000. The above explanation, the LRC contends, was also made clear in the affidavit submitted by the then Minister of Plantation Industries. Additionally, the LRC notes that the duty of diligence to seek out clarity in terms of payments and documentation on the part of the State Plantations Corporation prior to entering into a Lease agreement falls upon the Appellant.

(13) The Appellant, during the hearing, took up the position that if non-payment of consideration for the entire VOGAN ESTATE was the reason for revocation, the Minister should have revoked the entire estate, not merely the disputed land of extent 94A:2R:14P. The LRC then proceeded to take up a novel position in response. In the written submission dated 25th February 2019, the LRC argues as follows: that Section 27A(4) offers the relevant Minister the power to revoke the vesting of small portions of selected land of a vested Estate, and this form of part-vesting and part-revocation of an estate or land is permitted under Section 27A(1) read together with Section 27A(4) of the Land Reform Law, and that the above is apparent when considering how part-vesting and part-revocation conforms with the policy and scheme of the Act whereby lands vested in the Land Reform Commission may be utilised for multiple purposes and different portions of the same land may be utilised differently.

Is the DEEGALA DIVISION including the land of extent 94A.2R.14P part and parcel of the VOGAN ESTATE?

(14) Section 27A(1) of the Land Reform (Special provisions) Act, No. 39 of 198 states: "At the request of the Commission, the Minister may, where he considers it necessary in the interest of the Commission to do so, subject to Sections 22, 23 and 42H, by Order published in the Gazette, vest, in any State corporation specified in the Order, with effect from a date specified in that Order, any agricultural land or estate land or any portion of the land vested in the Commission under this Law, and described in the Order, subject to terms and conditions relating to consideration for the vesting of that land in such corporation as may be agreed upon between the Commission and such Corporation."

(15) It is by virtue of the above provision that by order published in the Gazette Extraordinary of 21st April 1994 (marked 'P3') by the Minister, the 'VOGAN ESTATE' was vested in the Sri Lanka State Plantations Corporation.

(16) The Hectarage Statement submitted by the Appellant marked 'P2' notes the DEEGALA DIVISION comprising 81.15 hectares to be part of the total hectarage of the VOGAN ESTATE of 847.43 hectares. The Vesting Order which vests the VOGAN ESTATE in the State Plantation Corporation, marked 'P3', also states the total hectarage of the VOGAN ESTATE as 847 hectares. It is also conceded that the 94A:2R:14P leased to the Gunawardenas, is part of the DEEGALA DIVISION. Even the Court of Appeal had acknowledged [pages 4 and 5 of the Order] that Board of Directors of the Appellant Company on a request made by the Ministry of Plantation and Industry, leased out 94A:2R and 14 P to the Gunawardena family the original owners of Deegala Division which indicates that Deegala Division was part and parcel of the Vogan Estate.

Was the disputed land vested in the State Plantations Corporation?

(17) In addition to the conclusion determined above, I am also of the view for the purpose of this case, that the LRC cannot maintain the position that DEEGALA DIVISION was not vested in the State Plantations Corporation while also maintaining the argument that the Revocation Order revoked the vesting of the same land 'in any event'. This, in essence, as pointed out by the learned President's Counsel for the Appellant, constitutes an admission that the disputed extent of land was in fact vested in the State Plantations Corporation since that which has not been vested cannot be revoked.

Is the Revocation Order bad in law?

(18) The determination of the court in this regard is whether part-vesting and part-revocation is permissible in law as per Section 27A(1) and Section 27A(4) of the Land Reform Act, and if so, whether the order for part-revocation in the present case was lawful.

(19) Section 27A(4) of the Land Reform (Special provisions) Act, No. 39 of 1981 states: "Where any term or condition relating to consideration for the vesting of any agricultural land or estate land or portion thereof in any State Corporation by an Order under subsection (1) is not complied with, the Minister may by Order published in the Gazette, revoke the Order under subsection (1) relating to that land and thereupon that land shall revest in the Commission."

(20) It is by virtue of the above provision that by order published in the Gazette Extraordinary No.1059/16 dated 24.12.1998 (marked 'P10') the Minister revoked the vesting order made by the former Minister in the Gazette Extraordinary of 21st April 1994 vesting land extent 94A:2R:14P of the DEEGALA DIVISION of the VOGAN ESTATE in the State Plantations Corporation. It is to be noted that this is the exact extent of land that was leased to Gunawardenas by the Appellant.

(21) It is the LRC's contention that the 'term or condition relating to consideration' for the vesting Order which the State Plantations Corporation has failed to comply with is the payment of a nominal value of Rs. 14,412,000 for the lands, premises and estate of the VOGAN ESTATE. This is the pith and substance on which the Court of Appeal refused to quash the vesting order. To appreciate that no material was placed before this Court supporting the failure of payment as reason for revocation besides the affidavit of the Minister himself dated 20th July 1999 which states that the State Plantations Corporation failed to pay due consideration of Rs. 14,412,000 as the nominal value of the entire estate. This allegation was strenuously disputed by the Appellant as well as the State Plantations Corporation. The monies were due to the LRC, and consequently, it was incumbent upon the LRC and not the Minister to complain about the non-payment. The Vesting Order "P 3" does not require the payment of consideration within a stipulated time and therefore it follows that even if the State Plantations Corporation had failed to pay, the revocation could not have been done without providing an opportunity to pay. In any case, it must be borne in mind that the Minister's allegation is that that the State Plantations Corporation failed to pay due consideration of Rs. 14,412,000 as the n*ominal value of the entire estate.* The succeeding question then, is why the specific land of extent 94A.2R.14P of the DEEGALA DIVISION alone was revoked and re-vested in the Land Reform Commission, and not the entire Division or Estate. Therefore, even if partial revocation may be permissible, for the present Revocation Order to stand it must be proven that the State Plantations Corporation failed to provide consideration of a defined amount for the specific extent of land.

(22) There is no mention of consideration being apportioned and assigned for the specific extent of land to the State Plantations Corporation, and the Respondents have failed to provide any reason for the partial revocation as divorced from the non-payment of nominal fees for the entire Estate. This is a pertinent consideration since the LRC, in the written submission dated 25th February 2019 submits that the policy, and underlying reasoning behind the part-revocation was that there were various utilities in different portions of lands held for the State. Although the LRC's argument does conform to the purpose of the act spelled out in the the preamble to the Land Reform Law- which provides inter alia "…to prescribe the purposes and the manner of disposition by the commission of agricultural lands vested in the commission so as to increase productivity and employment,…", no such reasoning, as applicable for the disputed portion of land of extent 94:A:2R:14P has been offered, and no specific use or viability of purpose the land possesses that other lots of land in the VOGAN ESTATE do not hold has been noted either by the Respondents.

(23) Therefore, even if it could be established that the Minister was entitled to revoke the vesting order due to the State Plantations Corporation's alleged failure to pay consideration for the entire state, and part-revocation is permissible under Section 27A(1) and Section 27A(4) of the Land Reform Act, it cannot be established that the Minister was entitled to revoke the specific extent of land pertinent to the present dispute.

(24) The exact portion of land that was revoked i.e. 94A:2R:14P was the extent of the land which was sub-leased to the Gunawardenas by the Appellant. This reality, considered with the fact that no reasoning was provided for the exclusive revocation could only lead to the conclusion that the revocation was effected for the collateral purpose of benefiting the Gunawardenas alone.

(25) In Sugathapala Mendis Vs. Chandrika Kumaratunga [2008] 2 Sri LR 339, Her Ladyship Justice Shiranee Tilakawardane, in determining whether the acts impugned in that case constituted a "public purpose", held [at page 360] that the primary object of "public purpose" is the general interest of the community. Though in achieving the public purpose the individual or individuals may be benefited, the benefit to such individual or individuals must only be indirect.

(26) While 27A(4) of the Land Reform (Special provisions) Act, No. 39 of 1981 does not expressly restrict the Minister's power to revoke lands vested for "public purposes", I am of the view that any actions taken under the Act must conform to the policy considerations contemplated by the legislature in enacting such act. This view was also taken by five Lordships of this Court in Jayanetti Vs. The Land Reform Commission & Others [1984] 2 SLR 172, where the Court, referring to the preamble of the Land Reform Law stated that "alienations should be strictly confined to purposes which would ensure productivity or utilization of manpower, and not for other reasons. All activity of the Commission is subsumed under overriding policy considerations…" [at page 189]. Revocation of the portion of land which constitutes the exact portion of land the Gunawardenas have sought does not in any way contribute to effecting the purposes of the Land Reform Law or the Land Reform (Special provisions) Act. Therefore, it is evident that the Minister published the Revocation Order for an arbitrary, collateral purpose and is therefore bad in law and liable to be quashed.

Was the Minister bound to provide the Petitioner notice in advance and/or a hearing prior to publishing the Revocation Order per Principles of Natural Justice?

(27) No administrative body or executive organ exercising an administrative function is entitled to escape the requirements of Natural Justice. The jurisprudence of our courts has not wavered in this conviction; therefore, I do not find it necessary to reproduce dicta in this regard. The Appellant was not provided notice in advance of the revocation; neither was the Appellant granted a hearing before the revocation order was published. This is not disputed by the Respondents. Therefore, it is ex facie evident that the Minister, being a creature of the Constitution and exercising an administrative function bound to adhere to the immutable principle of audi alteram partem, had lamentably failed in such adherence.

(28) This failure is further aggravated by the manner in which the resort to judicial recourse by the Appellant for the non-payment of rentals by the sub-lessee (Gunawardenas) was neglected in publishing the revocation order particularly where letter dated 27th February 2003, states that no further steps would be taken under and in terms of the Gazette Extraordinary No. 1059/16 dated 24.12.1998 for the re-vesting of the DEEGALA DIVISION in the Commission.

For the aforementioned reasons, I answer the questions of law upon which leave was granted in the following manner.

(a) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal made only an observation on the bare denial of the Respondents that the DEEGALA DIVISION is not part of the VOGAN ESTATE as against the strong documentary evidence placed by the Petitioners to the contrary?
Yes.

(b) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal considered Section 27A(4) of the Land Reform Law in isolation and having no regard to the material circumstances as set out in detail by the Petitioner, which contentions were supported by documentation?
Yes.

(c) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal failed to consider that principles of natural justice would have warranted a hearing and/or notification to the Petitioner prior to making of the Revocation Order 'P10' by Gazette Extraordinary No. 1059/16 dated 24.12.1998?

Yes.

(d) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal failed to consider that Revocation order 'P10' itself gives no reason as to why the said Revocation Order was made?
Yes.

(e) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal failed to consider that the Petitioner is not only the Lessee of the entirety of VOGAN ESTATE including the said extent of 94A:2R:14P for a period of 99 years as stated above, but also holds a Power of Attorney No. 345 dated 4th May 1995 from the State Plantations Corporation, 2nd Respondent- Respondent and that the Petitioner would suffer grave prejudice and loss if the said extent of land vests in the Land Reform Commission by virtue of the said Revocation Order?
Yes.

(f) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal failed to consider that the Revocation Order 'P10' has been made by the 1st Respondent despite being well aware that the Petitioner had sought judicial recourse against the sub lessee for non-payment of the rentals and moreover without any notice to the Petitioner of the said Revocation order? Thus had the 1st Respondent acted arbitrarily, ultra vires, with mala fides, in an unreasonable manner and had been made for an ulterior motive?
Yes.

(g) Did the Court of Appeal err in fact and in law when the Learned Justice of the Court of Appeal considered the Revocation Order 'P10' having no regard to the commercial complexities applicable to the said VOGAN ESTATE and especially the DEEGALA DIVISION?
Yes.

(h) Did the Court of Appeal fail to consider the letter dated 27th February 2003 ('X15') by the Land Reform Commission sent to the Petitioner marked 'P12', by which letter the Land Reform Commission clearly stated that no further steps would be taken under and in terms of the Gazette Extraordinary No. 1059/16 dated 24.12.1998 to re-vest the DEEGALA DIVISION in the Land Reform Commission as per the said Gazette notification?

Yes.

In view of the conclusions reached, and considering the facts and circumstances of this case a writ in the nature of certiorari is allowed quashing the Revocation Order 'P10' published in the Gazette Extraordinary No. 1059/16 dated 24.12.1998 and I direct that no steps or measures are taken under such Order. Accordingly, the Order of the Court of Appeal dated 01.11.2007 is set-aside.

K. PRIYANTHA FERNANDO, J

1. On 15.09.2003, the company named Olympus Constructions (Private) Limited (formerly known as Daya Constructions (Private) Limited) (hereinafter referred to as the 'plaintiff') instituted an action against the company named Hovael Constructions (Private) Limited (hereinafter referred to as the 'defendant') in the District Court of Colombo praying, inter alia, for the recovery of an additional sum of Rs. 2,704,178.94 in respect of asphalt supplied and laid on a public road in Negombo.

2. After trial, the learned Additional District Judge pronounced judgment on 18.02.2009 in favour of the plaintiff. Thereafter, the respondents filed an appeal against the judgment of the learned trial Judge, upon which the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal of Colombo by their judgment dated 03.03.2015, allowed the appeal setting aside the District Court judgment which was entered in favour of the plaintiff.

3. Being aggrieved by the decision of the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court, the plaintiff preferred the instant appeal, whereby this Court on 20.02.2019, granted leave to appeal on the questions of law set out in paragraph 13(a), (b) and (c) of the petition dated 02.04.2015.

The said questions of law are as follows,

(a) Have the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law in failing to take cognisance of and/or appreciate the difference between a "Measure and Pay Contract" and a "Lump Sum Contract"?

(b) Have the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law in concluding that in a "Measure and Pay Contract", the Respondent was not contractually obliged to pay on the actual material used by the Petitioner?

(c) Have the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law in concluding that in a "Measure and Pay Contract", there is a requirement for the parties to have a further agreement to pay for the utilization for over and above the minimum requirement stated in the contract?

In addition, further leave was granted on the following question of law raised by the learned Counsel for the respondent,

"Has the Plaintiff-Respondent-Petitioner proved that extra tonnage reflected in P17 (1) to P17 (139) was used under the contract?"

Facts in Brief:

4. The plaintiff company entered into an agreement with the defendant company to lay and compact an asphalt wearing course with 50mm thickness, on a 7m wide road of approximately 5.5km long, leading from Kurana Junction to Browns Beach Hotel Junction, according to RDA specifications.

5. The defendant company, as the main contractor, has entered into an agreement with Urban Development and Low Income Housing Project (also referred to as the Employer), for the making of the roadway leading from Kuruna Junction to Browns Beach Hotel Junction.

6. According to the contract entered between the defendant company and the Employer, the defendant company is obliged to clear the road surface, construct drains and to raise the level of the existing road using and/or laying aggregate base course (hereinafter referred to as 'ABC') to the parameters set out by the Consultant Engineer. ABC is a mixture of small stones and quarry sand.

7. The defendant company has then entered into an agreement with the plaintiff company (who is now a sub-contractor to the Employer) to lay asphalt on top of the ABC layer laid down by the defendant company.

8. According to the contract entered between the defendant company and the plaintiff company, the plaintiff company is to lay asphalt at a thickness of 50 mm (+/-5mm). However, the plaintiff company claims that during the course of the project and particularly towards the latter part, they have discovered large undulations on the ABC layer laid by the defendant company.

9. The plaintiff company holds that the large undulations on the road surface has resulted in them laying asphalt layer in excess of the predetermined thickness of 50 mm (+/- 5mm).

10. The plaintiff company claims that consequent to a core sample test, the average thickness of the asphalt layer laid was found to be 62.72 mm thick and therefore claims that they had been obliged to lay over and above the agreed average thickness in order to complete the works to the satisfaction of the Employer and its engineer.

11. The defendant company claims that they are only obliged to pay a sum of Rs. 6,684,385.11 to the plaintiff company for the work they have done. However, the plaintiff company claims that an additional sum of Rs. 2,704,178.94 should be paid to them by the defendant company for the extra tonnage of asphalt which they have had to use due to the large undulations on the ABC road surface prepared by the defendant company.

12. The plaintiff company claims that this contract is a 'measure and pay' contract, and for that reason the defendant company is liable to pay for the additional tonnage used by the plaintiff company.

Written Submissions on Behalf of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant:

13. The learned President's Counsel for the plaintiff, drawing the attention of this Court to the evidence of the witness for the defendant company namely, Shantha Surin Senanayake Alagiyawanna, the Civil Engineer, submitted that the said witnesses evidence together with several documents submitted by the plaintiff, is proof to show that the actual agreement entered into between the parties is a 'measure and pay' contract and that it is not based on a theoretical figure.

14. The learned President's Counsel submitted that, a 'price per ton' was agreed upon by the defendant company for the reason that the exact quantum of asphalt to be used was unknown at the time of tender.

15. The learned President's Counsel further submitted that, if not, there was no difficulty in agreeing on a lump sum for the entire contract at the beginning itself. Therefore, takes the position that the defendant company is now liable to pay for the extra amount of asphalt used.

16. The plaintiff company tendered to this Court delivery notes marked as ['P17 (1) to P17 (139)'], which contains the quantities of asphalt delivered to the work site in order to substantiate the fact that extra tonnage of asphalt was being used.

17. The learned President's Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that, the plaintiff company by these delivery notes has established the actual tonnage supplied to the site. It was his contention that, the fact that the delivery notes were not proved is untenable as they have been signed by the site supervisor.

18. The learned President's Counsel further submitted that the defendant company entered into agreement with the plaintiff company to lay asphalt, approximately one month after the ABC layer had been placed by the defendant company. Subsequently, the ABC surface as a surface which consists of stones and quarry dust, is prone to deterioration due to vehicle movements and in particular rain, therefore there could be undulations on the ABC surface by the time the plaintiff was made to lay the asphalt layer.

19. The learned President's Counsel further submitted that, the plaintiff company in the interest of executing the contract to the best of its ability had informed of the undulations to the site supervisors and the Managing Director of the defendant company namely, Mr. Joel Selvanayagam.

20. Furthermore, the learned President's Counsel draws the attention of this Court to the document marked ['P10']. This document ['P10'] was a letter sent by the defendant company to the plaintiff company on 04.10.2002 as a response to the plaintiff company's letter dated 02.10.2002, which was marked as ['P9']. The learned Counsel submitted that, as per the said letter, the director of the respondent company has categorically stated that, the plaintiff should forward core sample test results and based on the same, payment will be made to the appellant. The learned Counsel has cited the paragraph from the letter marked as ['P10']. What is stated in ['P10'] reads as follows:

> "We will need the above information to work out the tonnage supplied, laid and compacted to make payment to you".

21. Moreover, the learned President's Counsel submitted that, the fact that core samples were taken at the request of the respondent is ex facie further proof of the fact that the contract was not a 'lump sum contract' but a 'measure and pay contract'. Therefore, puts forward the position that the defendant company having made representation and written undertaking to make payment on the actual tonnage used, cannot thereafter, refuse to pay for the asphalt by alleging that the basis of payment was some other method.

Written submissions on behalf of the Defendant-Appellant-Respondent:

22. In respect of the delivery notes marked ['P17 (1) to P17 (139)'], the learned Counsel for the defendant company submitted that, the defendant company has denied all the delivery notes and made the submission that none of the delivery notes have been proven as against the defendant. Therefore, the defendant is not liable to pay for extra asphalt allegedly used as per those documents.

23. The learned Counsel further submitted that, none of the delivery notes were seen by the project engineer of the defendant company on the site, nor by anyone else on behalf of the defendant.

24. In addition to that, the learned Counsel submitted that the defendant company had admitted that the contract entered between the two parties is a 'measure and pay' contract and not a 'lump sum' contract. Further, submitted that if the plaintiff in fact has used more asphalt than was estimated originally, the plaintiff company must have proved the extra quantity.

25. The learned Counsel submitted that the plaintiff company had totally failed to prove the extra quantity by its failure to prove documents marked, ['P17 (1) to P17 (139)'].

26. It was contended by the learned Counsel that, the day of completion of asphalting the road was 02.10.2002, and only on that day did the plaintiff company send the letter marked ['P9'] informing about the large undulations for the first time and the need to increase the amount of asphalt used.

27. The learned Counsel further submitted that, the site engineer of the defendant, one Shantha S. Senanayake Alagiyawanna, who gave evidence for the defendant company, had been in attendance every day during the period from the commencement of the work up until the completion date. He has testified that he was never made aware at any time that any extra tonnage of asphalt was being used for any reason.

28. It was put forward by the learned Counsel that by letter dated 10.10.2002, marked as ['P11'], the defendant has informed the plaintiff company that, they do not agree that there were large undulations on the ABC surface and that, the ABC surface had in fact been approved by the Consultant staff prior to asphalting. The learned Counsel submitted that, through the letter marked ['P11'], the defendant company has further informed the plaintiff company that they should have brought such undulations to the notice of the defendants before laying the asphalt wearing course.

29. The learned Counsel draws the attention of this Court to the evidence led in this action in the District Court by both the plaintiff and the defendant with regards to the documents marked ['P17 (1) to P17 (139)']. The learned Counsel submitted that the witness for the plaintiff company itself, could not identify the signatures on the said documents.

30. It was further submitted that the delivery notes have not been acknowledged either by the witness of the defendant's company namely, Shantha S. Senanayake Alagiyawanna (the Civil Engineer of the defendant), nor its site engineer or any of its agents. Moreover, none of the other officers of the defendant's company had been aware of those documents. Therefore, the learned Counsel takes the position that those documents have not been proved and hence there is no proof that any such extra quantity of asphalt was used on the job.

31. It was further submitted that, no person who had allegedly weighed the asphalt laden trucks at the plaintiff's premises at Boralesgamuwa had been called to prove any of the delivery notes.

32. The learned Counsel hence contended that, the defendant company had correctly calculated the amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff in terms of the contract and sent the letter marked ['P12'] dated 05.11.2002 with the full and final balance payment due as Rs. 684,385.11.

Answering to the Questions of Law:

33. Having heard learned Counsel for both parties at the hearing, and at the perusal of the petition, written submissions, proceedings of the trial, and documents tendered to this Court, I shall now resort to answering the questions of law before this Court and whether the defendant company is obliged to pay the sum of Rs. 2,704,178.94 to the plaintiff company.

34. I will first resort to answering the question of law raised by the learned Counsel of the defendant as to whether the plaintiff-respondent-appellant has proved that an extra tonnage was used under the contract, as reflected in the delivery notes tendered by the plaintiff.

35. It could be observed from page 287 of the brief (proceedings dated 26.07.2006) during the evidence of the witness for the plaintiff company, the Managing Director namely, T.D.Roshan, when questioned as to whether he was able to identify the signatures placed on the delivery notes, he answered that he could not recognize them.

    Furthermore, on page 6 of the proceedings dated 18.02.2008, during the evidence of the witness for the defendant's company, the Civil Engineer namely, Shantha Surin Senanayake Alagiyawanna was also questioned as to the signatures placed on the delivery notes. He had answered that the defendant's company had not placed such signatures. He has further stated that, if such delivery notes were to be signed at the site, he was the one who was in charge to sign such documents.

36. Section 67 of the Evidence Ordinance No.15 of 1895, provides,

"If a document is alleged to be signed or to have been written wholly or in part by any person, the signature or the handwriting of so much of the document as is alleged to be in that person's handwriting must be proved to be his handwriting".

In the instant case, there is no evidence to show that the plaintiff had taken steps to prove as to who had signed the delivery notes. It is evident from the testimony of the witness of the plaintiff company, that the plaintiff company itself is not aware of who has signed the delivery notes. Therefore, the extra tonnage of asphalt cannot be proven, as the documents marked ['P17 (1) to P17 (139)'] have not been proved by the plaintiff.

37. It is provided in the explanation to Section 154(1) of the Civil Procedure Code that,

"If the opposing party does not, on the document being tendered in evidence, object to its being received, and if the document is not such as is forbidden by law to be received in evidence, the court should admit it."

38. Further, it was held in the case of Cinamas Ltd. v Soundaranrajam [1998] 2 S.L.R. 16 that, in a civil case when a document is tendered the opposing party should immediately object to the document. Where the opposing party fails to object, the trial judge has to admit the document unless the document is forbidden by law to be received and no objections can be taken in appeal.

39. It was stated by his Lordship, Hon. Chief Justice Samarakoon, in the case of Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another v Jugolinija-Boal East [1981] 1 SLR 18,

"If no objection is taken, when at the close of a case documents are read in evidence, they are evidence for all purposes of the law. This is the cursus curiae of the original civil courts".

40. It could be seen through case law precedents that although the production of the document is objected to during the trial, if the party objects to the document fails to object to same at the closure of the case, it is evidence for all purposes.

41. However, now it is enacted law through Section 3(a)(ii) of the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act No.17 of 2022 (that amends section 154 of the Civil Procedure Code) where it provides,

"3. (a) (ii) if the opposing party has objected to it being received as evidence on the deed or document being tendered in evidence but not objected at the close of a case when such document is read in evidence,

the court shall admit such deed or document as evidence without requiring further proof;

42. During the trial, when the delivery notes were marked through the witness of the plaintiffs company, T.D. Roshan, they were objected to by the defendant's company. Further, at the end of the case for the plaintiff company, when the documents were referred to in closing the plaintiff's case, the objection was confirmed by the learned Counsel for the defendant.

43. On the evidence placed before the District Court, it is clear that the plaintiff company has made the claim for the additional amount based on the delivery notes marked ['P17 (1) to P17 (139)']. The plaintiff company has clearly failed to prove those documents as hereinbefore mentioned. By mere producing core sample test reports before the District Court, the plaintiff company has failed to demonstrate that the above claimed amount is due. Plaintiff has failed to prove that they got prior approval or consent from the defendant to apply additional asphalt nor they have proved that additional asphalt was used. Therefore, this question of law raised by the defendant company is answered in the negative.

44. In answering the two questions of law under paragraph 13(a) and (b), I hold that when delivering the judgment by the learned High Court Judges dated 03.03.2015, the learned Judges were fully aware that the contract entered between the plaintiff company and the defendant company was a measure and pay contract and that, the defendant company was obliged to pay for any tonnage of asphalt used for the job. The learned High Court Judges set aside the District Court judgment on the basis that prior consent had not been obtained by the plaintiff to increase the thickness of the asphalt wearing course.

45. At the perusal of the documents marked ['P1 to P17'] tendered to this Court, it is evident that the two parties have initially agreed on the parameters of the length, width and thickness, and as held by the learned Judges of the High Court, the plaintiff company ought to have realized upon inspection of the road, that they needed an additional quantity of asphalt due to the large undulations on the ABC surface.

46. It is my view that the plaintiff company as a construction company, with experience in such asphalt works, should have at first instance done an inspection on the standard of the ABC surface laid by the defendant company, in order to ascertain as to whether there are any such undulations. In the circumstances of such undulations, the plaintiff company ought to have informed the defendant company and obtained their approval or consent before initiating the project.

47. As was clearly highlighted by the learned High Court Judges, the last delivery note sent by the plaintiff company is dated 02.10.2002, and the letter marked ['P10'] informing about the need to use more asphalt due to undulations on the ABC surface is also dated 02.10.2002. As stated in the judgment of the High Court, had the plaintiff company brought this to the notice of the defendant company prior to completion of the contract and obtained their permission, there was no reason for them to write the letter ['P9']. It is therefore evident that the position taken by the plaintiff company that they have informed the defendant company of the need to use a higher quantity of asphalt is incorrect. As the learned High Court Judges clearly stated, there is no evidence in record to show that prior consent had been obtained by the plaintiff company to increase the thickness of the asphalt wearing course.

48. I must also address that, in response to the submission made by the learned President's Counsel for the plaintiff that, the plaintiff company has taken core samples at the request of the respondent. The learned Counsel for the defendant contends that, the defendant company has requested for core sample reports through letter dated 04.10.2002 marked as ['P10'], however this has not been a response to ['P9']. It is evident that the defendant company has responded to the letter marked as ['P9'] by a letter dated 10.10.2002, which is marked as ['P11'], informing the plaintiff company that they do not agree that there were large undulations on the ABC surface while giving reference to the letter dated 02.10.2002 of the plaintiff company. Therefore, it is clear that the defendant company has never approved any extra tonnage to be used when they rejected the claim of undulations.

49. Hence, the learned High Court Judges were correct when they found that the plaintiff is not entitled to the amount claimed. Therefore, on the above premise, the questions of law under paragraphs 13(a) and (b) of the petition are answered in the negative.

50. The third question of law raised by the appellant under paragraph 13(c) of the petition is as to whether the learned Judges of the High Court erred in law in concluding that there is a requirement to have a further agreement to pay for the utilization for over and above the minimum requirement stated in the contract.

    The learned High Court Judges do not conclude that any such further agreement is required but rather holds that, there had been no understanding between the parties to pay for anything more than what was agreed upon by them, and had the plaintiff company informed of the need to increase the quantity of asphalt initially, the defendant company would have considered approval and paid.

51. The thickness of 50mm stated in the contract is the standard thickness of asphalt that the defendant company is required to lay. This thickness is agreed by both parties. As I have discussed above, where the plaintiff company was required to lay more than what was needed, they should have informed the defendant company at the outset.

52. Therefore, the question of law raised by paragraph 13(c) is also answered in the negative.

53. For the reasons stated above the Judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal dated 03.03.2015 is affirmed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Samayawardhena, J.

The appellant's services as the Country Manager in Sri Lanka of Etihad Airways were terminated by Etihad Airways by letter dated 03.07.2017. He filed an application dated 11.12.2017 in the Labour Tribunal of Colombo in terms of section 31B(1) of the Industrial Disputes Act, No. 43 of 1950, as amended, primarily seeking compensation and gratuity on the basis that the termination of his employment was unlawful. Although he filed the application against both Etihad Airways and its Cluster General Manager, at the time of supporting the application, it was informed to this Court that he would not proceed against the Cluster General Manager.

The Minister of Labour acting in terms of section 4(1) of the Industrial Disputes Act referred this dispute for settlement by arbitration by letter dated 28.12.2017. According to P7(a)-(e), the registrar for the arbitrator informed this to the appellant by letter dated 05.01.2018. The appellant surrendered to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator and filed the statement of facts dated 06.02.2018. The respondent Etihad Airways filed a preliminary statement/objection dated 20.03.2018 before the arbitrator seeking dismissal of the proceedings in limine on the basis that parallel proceedings cannot be maintained before both the Labour Tribunal and the arbitrator seeking the same relief. The appellant then filed answer dated 20.04.2018 reiterating that the arbitrator has jurisdiction to proceed with the matter and grant him relief.

In the meantime, the respondent filed answer in the Labour Tribunal dated 24.01.2018 and moved inter alia to dismiss the application of the petitioner in limine in terms of section 31B(2)(b) of the Industrial Disputes Act. The appellant filed answer in reply dated 23.02.2018 reaffirming that the Labour Tribunal has jurisdiction to proceed with the matter and grant him relief. Both parties made oral submissions followed by written submissions on this preliminary objection. In the written submissions dated 09.07.2018 the appellant concluded that "Therefore the applicant submits that the objection of the said respondents that this application be dismissed under section 31B(2)(b) be rejected and instead it be suspended under section 31B(3)(a) of the Industrial Disputes Act No. 43 of 1950 as amended with costs to the applicant."

The Labour Tribunal by order dated 12.09.2018 upheld the preliminary objection and dismissed the application of the appellant except for the relief on gratuity. The Labour Tribunal based its decision on section 31B(2)(b) and further concluded that section 31B(3)(a) is inapplicable to the facts of this case. The revision application filed against the said order of the Labour Tribunal was dismissed by the High Court of Colombo by judgment dated 27.08.2020. The appellant filed this application before this Court seeking leave to appeal against the said judgment of the High Court. This Court granted leave to appeal to the appellant on four questions of law as formulated by the appellant. They have been reproduced with answers at the end of this judgment.

The respondent relies on section 31B(2)(b) to have the application before the Labour Tribunal dismissed whereas the appellant relies on section 31B(3)(a) to have the application before the Labour Tribunal suspended until the proceedings before the arbitrator are concluded. This is the crux of the matter.

Section 31B(2)(b) reads as follows:

> A labour tribunal shall-
> where it is so satisfied that such matter constitutes, or forms part of, an industrial dispute referred by the Minister under section 4 for settlement by arbitration to an arbitrator, or for settlement to an industrial court, make order dismissing the application without prejudice to the rights of the parties in the industrial dispute.

In the case of Upali Newspapers Ltd. v. Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya and Others [1999] 3 Sri LR 205, the Court of Appeal in interpreting section 31B(1)(b) held "this provision would apply only to an application made to a Labour Tribunal subsequent to a reference made by the Minister to an arbitrator or to an industrial court for settlement." In other words, if the application was made to the Labour Tribunal before the Minister referred the dispute for settlement by arbitration, section 31B(1)(b) would not apply and the Labour Tribunal could proceed with the application.

On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed this judgment of the Court of Appeal – vide Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v. Upali Newspapers Ltd. [2001] 1 Sri LR 107. In the course of the judgment of the Supreme Court, Ismail J. (with the agreement of M.D.H. Fernando J. and Wijetunga J.) held at 108 "I accordingly hold that the Court of Appeal has not erred in the interpretation of Article 116(1) of the Constitution and that the Minister had no power to refer the dispute regarding the termination of services for compulsory arbitration when applications in respect of the said dispute were pending in the Labour Tribunal." No question of law was raised to reconsider this conclusion of the Supreme Court, and no full submissions were heard in this regard during the course of the argument. The veracity and implications of the said conclusion can be fully explored in a future case.

In my view, there is no necessity for a confrontation between the Labour Tribunal and the Minister on these references. According to section 4(1), the Minister can refer a dispute "for settlement by arbitration to an arbitrator appointed by the Minister or to a labour tribunal". If the dispute is already before a Labour Tribunal, the question of further reference by the Minister does not arise. In terms of section 3(1)(d), even the Commissioner General of Labour can refer such disputes for settlement by arbitration to a Labour Tribunal. In general terms, what practically happens is that when the dispute is referred for settlement by arbitration, the Commissioner General of Labour or the subject Minister is unaware that an application has already been filed by the employee before the Labour Tribunal. This seems to be the case in the instant matter as well. The application was filed by the appellant before the Labour Tribunal on 11.12.2017. As seen from the letter found at page 61 of the appeal brief, the Commissioner General of Labour formulated the question to be tendered to the Minister on 19.12.2017. It appears that they were unaware of the application before the Labour Tribunal. Neither the Commissioner General of Labour nor the Minister is a party to the application before the Labour Tribunal.

Be that as it may, the Labour Tribunal and the High Court are bound by the Supreme Court judgment in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v. Upali Newspapers Ltd. However, both the Labour Tribunal and the High Court state that this judgment is inapplicable to the facts of the instant case because the application was not "pending" before the Labour Tribunal when the Minister referred the dispute for settlement by arbitration. The learned President of the Labour Tribunal in his order clarified that the Minister had referred the dispute for arbitration before the case was called in open Court (although in point of fact the application before the Labour Tribunal had been filed prior to the said reference).

I have no hesitation in concluding that this is a wrong interpretation. In the context of this appeal, "pending" means "awaiting decision". This begins not from the date the application is called in open Court but from the date the application is filed in the Labour Tribunal (in this case on 11.12.2017) and ends after the satisfaction of the order of the Labour Tribunal (not even after its pronouncement). Cf. Ponniah v. Rajaratnam (1964) 68 NLR 127, Abeysinghe v. Gunasekara (1962) 64 NLR 427.

Ideally, the matter should have been laid to rest there. However, it did not happen due to another argument strenuously put forward by learned President's Counsel for the appellant. He argues that, if the Minister referred the dispute for arbitration after the application was filed before the Labour Tribunal, in terms of section 31B(3)(a), the Labour Tribunal shall suspend its proceedings until the proceedings before the arbitrator are concluded. This argument in my view is both unnecessary and unsustainable. This has rightly been rejected by the Courts below.

> Where an application under subsection (1) [of section 31B] relates-
>
> (a) to any matter which, in the opinion of the tribunal, is similar to or identical with a matter constituting or included in an industrial dispute to which the employer to whom that application relates is a party and into which an inquiry under this Act is held, or
>
> (b) to any matter the facts affecting which are, in the opinion of the tribunal, facts affecting any proceedings under any other law,
> the tribunal shall make order suspending its proceedings upon that application until the conclusion of the said inquiry or the said proceedings under any other law, and upon such conclusion the tribunal shall resume the proceedings upon that application and shall in making an order upon that application, have regard to the award or decision in the said inquiry or the said proceedings under any other law.

Section 31B(3)(a) cannot be invoked to suspend the proceedings before the Labour Tribunal when the same dispute between the same parties is before the arbitrator and the Labour Tribunal. If the Minister's reference for arbitration precedes the application filed in the Labour Tribunal, in terms of section 31B(2)(b), the application before the Labour Tribunal shall be dismissed; if the Minister's reference for arbitration follows the application filed in the Labour Tribunal, the Labour Tribunal can proceed with the application.

If the argument of learned President's Counsel is accepted, for instance, after a long inter partes inquiry, if the arbitrator decides to dismiss the application of the employee on the ground that the termination is justifiable, the Labour Tribunal can thereafter commence a fresh inquiry to decide whether the termination is in fact justifiable. This is patently unacceptable on first principles and is debarred by section 31B(5).

Section 31B(5) reads as follows:

> Where an application under subsection (1) is entertained by a labour tribunal and proceedings thereon are taken and concluded, the workman to whom the application relates shall not be entitled to any other legal remedy in respect of the matter to which that application relates, and where he has first resorted to any other legal remedy, he shall not thereafter be entitled to the remedy under subsection (1).

Vide Ceylon Tobacco Co. Ltd. v. J. Illangasinghe, President, Labour Tribunal and Others [1986] 1 Sri LR 1.

As learned President's Counsel for the respondent correctly points out, section 31B(3)(a) caters for a situation where, for instance, services of several employees have been terminated by the same employer in relation to a specific incident, and an inquiry against some of them is pending before an arbitrator while others are before the Labour Tribunal, the Labour Tribunal is required to suspend its proceedings until the inquiry before the arbitrator is concluded. The outcome of that inquiry should then be considered in deciding the matter before the Labour Tribunal. In both forums, the dispute and the employer remain the same or identical but the employees may be different. Under section 31B(2)(b), in both forums, the dispute, the employer and the employee are the same.

The finding of the Labour Tribunal, which was affirmed by the High Court, that there is no applicability of section 31B(3)(a) to the facts of this case is flawless.

High-flown technical objections and hair-splitting arguments should as much as possible be avoided in matters that fall under the purview of the Industrial Disputes Act, the purpose and object of which, as repeatedly pointed out by this Court, is the maintenance and promotion of industrial peace. Industrial law is founded on social justice.

The respondent cannot on the one hand say that Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v. Upali Newspapers Ltd. has wrongly been decided before the Labour Tribunal (on the interpretation of section 31B(2)(b)) and on the other hand say that it has rightly been decided before the arbitrator (to say that the Minister has no power to refer the dispute for arbitration when the dispute is pending before the Labour Tribunal for determination) to non-suit the appellant employee. The submission of the appellant is no better. The appellant wants the Labour Tribunal proceedings to be suspended and the arbitration proceedings to be continued. The appellant does not seek a direction to the Labour Tribunal to continue with the proceedings. I cannot be a party to non-suit an employee who says his services were unjustly terminated.

What will then be the outcome of this appeal? If the Labour Tribunal cannot dismiss the application under section 31B(2)(b) and it also cannot suspend the proceedings under section 31B(3)(a), the Labour Tribunal shall proceed with the whole matter without confining the dispute only to the payment of gratuity.

The questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted and the answers thereto are as follows:

Q: Has the High Court misdirected itself in law in failing to consider that the petitioner's application before the Labour Tribunal was filed on 11.12.2017 prior to the reference to arbitration by the Minister of Labour which was made on 28.12.2017 under section 4(1) of the Industrial Disputes Act, No. 43 of 1950 (as amended)?

A: Yes.

Q: Has the High Court misdirected itself in law in construing sections 31B(2)(b) and 31B(3)(a) of the Industrial Disputes Act having regard to the reference to arbitration being made after the application to the Labour Tribunal?

A: In respect of the first part of the question, i.e. the construction of section 31B(2)(b), the answer is "Yes"; and in respect of the second part of the question, i.e. the construction of section 31B(3)(a), the answer is "No".

Q: Has the High Court misdirected itself in law in failing to apply and/or failing to follow the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v. Upali Newspapers Ltd and Others [1999] 3 Sri LR 205 affirmed by the Supreme Court in [2001] 1 Sri LR 105 where it was held that section 31B(3)(a) of the Industrial Disputes Act applies where the reference to arbitration by the Minister is made subsequent to the application filed before the Labour Tribunal which is what transpired in this instance?

A: Those two judgments have not held so.

Q: Has the High Court erred in law in determining that section 31B(3)(a) of the Industrial Disputes Act does not apply to the application of the petitioner and failing to hold that the proceedings before the Labour Tribunal must be suspended until the conclusion of the arbitration proceedings and resumed before the Labour Tribunal thereafter?

A: No.

The judgment of the High Court on the question of the applicability of section 31B(2)(b) is set aside, and the appeal is partly allowed. The Labour Tribunal is directed to hear the application of the appellant in its entirety. The proceedings before the arbitrator shall stand terminated. Let the parties bear their own costs.

Aluwihare, P.C. J.

I had the advantage of reading judgements in a draft of their Lordships, Hon. Justice Gamini Amarasekara and Hon. Justice Mahinda Samayawardhena. His Lordship Justice Amarasekara has arrived at the conclusion that the concurrent findings reached in the case of Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v. Upali Newspapers Ltd and Others, by the Court of Appeal [1999 - 3 SLR 205] and The Supreme Court [2001 – 1 SLR 105] are not correct, in particular the finding that section 31B(2) of the Industrial Disputes Act applies only to applications filed after the reference for arbitration by the Minister.

The focus of the arguments before us were on the four questions of law on which leave to appeal was granted. Sub-paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (e) of Paragraph 18 of the Petition. The only question of law that directly touched the reference in issue is the question of law referred to in sub paragraph (c) of Paragraph 18 which is reproduced below;

"Has the High Court misdirected itself in law in failing to apply and/or failing to follow the judgement of the Court of Appeal in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v. Upali News Papers Ltd. and Others (1999) 3 SLR 205 affirmed by the Supreme Court in (2001) 1 SLR 105, where it was held that Section 31B (3) (a) of the Industrial Disputes Act No. 43 of 1950 (as amended) applies where the reference to arbitration by the Minister is made subsequent to the Application filed before the Labour Tribunal which is what transpired in this instant?"

Although reference was made to the decision in Upali News Papers [supra] In the course of the argument neither party made any serious challenge the decision of the said case that it was decided incorrectly and if that was the case, there would have been a specific question of law on the issue and followed by an in depth argument on the correctness or otherwise of the judgement. I find that the ratio in judgement in issue had been consistently applied over the years and I am of the view that from the standpoint of the parties to this case, it would have been more appropriate had they been put on notice of the issue and the decision in Upali News Papers [supra] deliberated fully before arriving at a conclusion.

With all due deference to his Lordship Justice Amarasekara, who had embarked on an analysis of the decision in Upali News Papers and had expressed his views of that decision, I take the view that, for the reasons referred to here, it would not be pertinent for me to express my views on the issue.

Having considered the judgement of His Lordship Justice Samayawardhena, I am inclined to agree with his Lordship's conclusion that the appeal should be partially allowed and the Labour Tribunal should be directed to hear the application of the Applicant-Appellant.

E.A.G.R. Amarasekara, J.

I had the opportunity of reading the judgment written by His Lordship Justice Samayawardhena in its draft form. With all due respect to his lordship's views, I expect to express a dissenting view as demonstrated below.

His Lordship in his draft judgment has referred to the Court of Appeal judgment in Upali Newspapers Ltd v Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya and Others as well as to the Supreme Court judgment in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v Upali Newspapers Ltd and Others which confirmed the said Court of Appeal Judgment, reported in (1999) 3 Sri LR 205 and (2001) 1 Sri LR 105 respectively. With all due deference to the views expressed by their Lordships who decided Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v Upali Newspapers Ltd and Others, I am of the opinion that it was not correctly decided as explained below in this judgment.

In the Court of Appeal case reported in (1999) 3 Sri L R 205, it was held that;

"The combined effect of the provisions of Articles 170, 114, 116 is that the proposition that the Minister has unlimited powers under s. 4 (1) which would enable him to refer a dispute which is pending before Labour Tribunal to an Arbitrator for settlement, is incorrect. A contrary interpretation would necessarily infringe and violate the principle of independence of the judiciary enshrined in Article 116 of the Constitution which is the paramount law."

In appeal, while confirming the said decision, the Supreme Court as reported in (2001) 1 Sri L R 205 held as follows;

"that the Court of Appeal has not erred in the interpretation of Article 116(1) of the Constitution and that the Minister had no power to refer the dispute regarding the termination of services for compulsory arbitration when applications in respect of the said dispute were pending in the Labour Tribunal."

It appears that such interpretation was reached in the aforesaid case on the premise that such reference for arbitration, while an application made to the Labour Tribunal is pending, interferes with the judicial process of the Labour Tribunal and therefore, is obnoxious to the independence of the Judiciary.

However, in my view, an interference with the judicial process by reference of an industrial dispute for an arbitration by the Minister arises only if following circumstances are established.

a) If the Minister knows that there is a pending application before Labour Tribunal at the time of the reference for arbitration is made; and,
b) The intention of the Minister to refer for compulsory arbitration is none other than to disrupt the proceedings before the Labour Tribunal.

If the intention of the Minister is bona fide and not to disrupt the proceedings before the Labour Tribunal but relates to the best interests of the parties and the community at large as discussed later in this judgment, it cannot be considered as interference with the judicial process.

Thus, considering the mere reference of disputes for arbitration as causing infringement and a violation of the principle of the independence of the judiciary in the said decision cannot be viewed as correct since such a conclusion cannot be made in general terms but such a conclusion may have to depend on the facts of each case.

The Industrial Dispute Act provides a number of mechanisms to prevent and resolve industrial disputes. Collective agreements, settlement by conciliation and settlement by voluntary arbitration (by reference with the consent of the parties by the Commissioner of Labour), compulsory arbitration and settlement in terms of Section 4 of the Industrial Disputes Act (by reference to arbitration or settlement by the Minister) and filing an application before Labour Tribunal based on alleged unjust termination are among them.

For compulsory arbitration, parties' consent is not necessary. It is necessary to understand why this power is given to the Minister.

It appears that compulsory State intervention in industrial disputes was first introduced to Sri Lanka as a war time measure during the second world war through regulations. Compulsory settlement through a reference to an Industrial Court by an order of the Minister was introduced in a permanent form by section 4 of the Industrial Dispute Act of 1950 as amended by Act no 25 of 1956[1].

The said section read as follows;

[1] See page 185 A General Guide to Sri Lanka Labour Law by S. Egalahewa and Parliamentary Debates (Hansard), Senate Official Report, Volume 4, 1950-1951 June 20, 1950 to March 28,1951 page 228 Speech of Senator, Hon. Mr. Wijeyeratne (Minister of Home Affairs and Rural Development)

"4. The Minister may, by an order in writing, refer an industrial dispute to an industrial court for settlement if such dispute in an essential industry or if he is satisfied that such dispute is likely to prejudice the maintenance or distribution of supplies or services necessary for the life of the community or if he thinks that it is expedient to do so."[2]

Further, acts in furtherance of any lockout or strike after such reference to an Industrial Court had been made punishable[3].

The said section itself indicates that the said compulsory settlement was introduced concerning the interests of the community at large as some disputes may affect the essential services and supplies and services needed for the life of the community at large.

However, with the amendments introduced in 1957, Section 4 of the Industrial Dispute Act now reads as follows;

"4. (1) The Minister may, if he is of the opinion that an industrial dispute is a minor dispute, refer it, by an order in writing, for settlement by arbitration to an arbitrator appointed by the Minister or to a Labour Tribunal, notwithstanding that the parties to such disputes or their representatives do not consent to such reference.

(2) The Minister may, by an order in writing, refer any Industrial Dispute to an Industrial Court for settlement."

The amendment made in 1957 has made the powers of the Minister to refer disputes for arbitration apparently much wider since the present section 4, unlike the previous one, does not directly refer to dispute in essential industry or dispute that affects the maintenance or distribution of supplies or services necessary for the life of the community. However, the disputes whether minor or otherwise as contemplated in the present section may necessarily include disputes that relate to supplies and services of essential services and which are necessary for the life of the community.

When compulsory settlement and/or arbitration was introduced in a permanent manner in 1950 or further amended giving wider powers in 1957, number of members of parliament, especially the left-wing members opposed to it on the premise that it was obnoxious to the rights of the working class to stage strikes and it dilutes the bargaining powers of the workers. However, the relevant Minister of Labour who held the office at the relevant time, whether it was in 1950 or 1957, during the relevant debate has indicated that the compulsory arbitration is necessary to serve the interest of the community at large and/or the national interest[4].

In interpreting a statute, a Court cannot presume that the legislature intended to cause harm to the rights of any one or any group of the society such as working class. Thus, it can be understood that this provision for compulsory arbitration was introduced to preserve and balance the interests of the parties involved in the dispute as well as the interests of the community at large. It must also be noted that the compulsion caused by section 4 and the relevant punishments contained in section 40 of the Industrial Dispute Act apply not only to the employee but to the employer as well.

Thus, such powers were given to the Minister not merely to take steps to resolve the dispute between the parties but also to minimize the effect of such disputes on the community at large. An application before the

[4] See the Parliamentary Debates (Hansards), House of Representatives 1950-51 Vol 8, 20.06.1950to 18.08 1950, and Parliamentary Debates (House of Representatives) 1957-58 Vol 30 Sept,3 to Dec, 20, 1957 Part 1. Also see Á General Guide to Sri Lanka Labour Law by S. Egalahewa pages 203 and 204

Labour Tribunal may resolve a dispute between an employer and employee whose employment has been terminated but such process may not address the effect of such dispute that may have been caused on the community at large which requires immediate attention and speedy solutions.

Certain industrial disputes may cause hardship to community at large. For example, if an employer terminates employment of a trade union leader, on an application made to Labour Tribunal, the Labour Tribunal may decide whether the termination is justified or not, and may provide relief on just and equitable grounds. However, such a dispute may trigger a strike action not only within the relevant institution that the trade union leader was employed, but also in other institutions where the same trade union or supporting trade unions have branches. Such a situation may develop to a situation that disrupts the economy and essential needs of the community at large and it may affect the interests of the investors including foreign investors compelling them to withdraw from their investments. The effect of such strike or chain of strikes may harm the interests of community at large. Similarly, even employers can stage lockouts to suppress upcoming trade union activities causing hardships to many employees and their families and even to the community at large. On the other hand, if the interpretation given in the aforesaid case Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v Upali News Papers Ltd is considered as correct, an employer or a trade union with ulterior motives needs only a little bit of pre-planning to impede the minister using his powers for compulsory arbitration. An employer who wants to suppress trade union activities can stage a lockout while getting one of his stooges get involved, thereafter sack him along with few others and getting him to file an application before the Labour Tribunal. Similarly, a trade union with other political motives can stage a chain of strikes to disrupt the economy just after filing an application in the Labour Tribunal. Thus, in my view, whether the reference for compulsory arbitration is an interference with the independence of the Judiciary or to safeguard the interests of the community at large has to be evaluated depending on the facts pertaining to each occasion.

In my view, the power given to the Minister to refer disputes for compulsory arbitration is interrelated to the needs of life of the community at large. However, I do not intend to say that the Minister has unlimited or absolute power in this regard. If the Minister uses his power arbitrarily, irrationally or illegally, other remedial measures such as writs may be available. However, in the backdrop explained above, in my view, it is illogical to think that such power is vested with the Minister only to use prior to the filing of an application before the Labour Tribunal.

Therefore, it is my view that mere reference for Arbitration by the Minister cannot be considered as an interference with the judicial process, even if there is any application already filed by an employee before Labour Tribunal prior to the reference for compulsory arbitration.

The Section 31B(2)(b) of the Industrial Disputes Acts reads as follows;

"A labour tribunal shall where it is so satisfied that such matter constitutes, or forms part of, an industrial dispute referred by the Minister under section 4 for settlement by arbitration to an arbitrator, or for settlement to an industrial court, make order dismissing the application without prejudice to the rights of the parties in the industrial dispute".

The plain reading of the said Section does not indicate that the reference by the Minister for compulsory arbitration has to be made prior to the filing of an application before the Labour Tribunal. Even the section 4 of the Industrial Dispute Act quoted above does not limit the power of the Minister to disputes that are not pending before Labour Tribunals.

In the book Maxwell on The Interpretation of Statutes (11th Edition) [1962] page 2 states;

"If the words of the statute are in themselves precise and unambiguous, no more is necessary than to expound those words in their natural and ordinary sense, the words themselves in such case best declaring the intention of the legislature"

In N.S. Bindra's Interpretation of Statutes (12th Edition) [2017] page 317 states that;

"If the words of the section are plain and unambiguous, then there is no question of interpretation or construction. The duty of the court then is to implement those provisions with no hesitation".

To give such an interpretation to say that, to dismiss an application, the reference for arbitration has to be done prior to the filing of the application before the Labour Tribunal, one has to add such words giving that meaning to at least to one of the aforesaid sections in the Industrial Dispute Act.

Therefore, it is my view that it is not correct to view that such power is given to the Minister only to use prior to the filing of an application before the Labour Tribunal.

Outcome of the decisions made by Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v Upali Newspapers Ltd and Others indicates that due to Articles 114 and 116 of the Constitution, the section 4(1) has to be interpreted to mean that such reference of the dispute for compulsory arbitration can validly be done only when there is no application pending before the Labour Tribunal. As explained before, unless the Minister refers the dispute for arbitration with an intention of disrupting the proceedings before the Labour Tribunal, it is difficult to say that it is an interference by the Minister as contemplated by then Article 116 (now Article 111C). The Minister even may not be aware of any pending application before the Labour Tribunal when he decides to refer a dispute for compulsory arbitration. With the reference for Arbitration, it is the law of the country contained in section 31B(2)(b) that requires the application before the Labour Tribunal be dismissed. When the factual position whether there is an interference with the judicial process or not depends on the circumstances of each case as explained above, I do not think relevant sections in the Industrial Dispute Act should be read with necessary adjustments as contemplated by Article 168(1) of the Constitution.

Thus, in my view, conclusion reached in the decision of Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v Upali Newspapers Ltd and Others that a reference for compulsory arbitration by the Minister in terms of section 4(1) of the Industrial Dispute Act while an application to a Labour Tribunal is pending, is bad in law is not correct unless there are specific facts revealing that such reference was intended to disrupt the proceedings before the Labour Tribunal.

It appears that the only point raised in appeal in the said Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya Case was whether the Minister has the power to refer to an industrial dispute for arbitration in terms of said section 4(1) when there is an application pending in the Labour Tribunal. As such, any view expressed stating that section 31B(2)(b) would apply only to an application made to Labour Tribunal subsequent to a reference made by the Minister to an Arbitrator or to an Industrial Court for settlement has to be considered as obiter. The refusal of the request made to revive the dismissals made in the Labour Tribunal in the said Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya case further strengthens the fact that the matter that was under consideration in the said case was not the application of section 31B(2)(b) but the validity of the reference for arbitration by the Minister. The Appellant has also referred to the decision in W.K.P.I Rodrigo Vs Central Engineering Consultancy Bureau SC Appeal No. 228/2017 SC Minutes 02.10.2020. However, the contents of the decision show that, even though there is reference made to section 31B(2)(b) in the said judgment, the issue in that case also was not related to the application of section 31B(2)(b) but to section 31B (5). Thus, what is stated there referring to section 31B(2)(b), without analyzing section 31B(2)(b) and its application as a matter in issue, also has to be considered as obiter.

The plain reading of the Section 31B(2)(b) indicates that the said section does not contemplate the time at which the relevant application is filed in the office/secretariat of the Labour Tribunal. It contemplates the time the Labour Tribunal take cognizance of the application. In other words, the time at which the President of the Labour Tribunal considers the application. If the President of the Labour Tribunal finds that there is a pending arbitration as per section 4 of the Industrial Dispute Act, the President of the Labour Tribunal has to dismiss the application.

One may argue that the learned High Court Judge as well as the President of the Labour Tribunal were bound to follow the decision of Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v Upali Newspapers Ltd and Others. It appears from the decision of the learned High Cort Judge that the Learned High Court Judge distinguished the decision in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya stating that the matter in issue in that case was whether the Minister had the power to refer an industrial dispute for arbitration in terms of section 4(1) of the Industrial Dispute Act when there were applications pending in the Labour Tribunal. In other words, the learned High Court Judge identified the matter in issue in the Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya case was whether the reference for arbitration by the Minister was valid and not as one relating to the application of section 31B(2)(b). It must be noted that the Counsel for the Appellant in the written submissions dated 20.12.2022 indirectly invites this court to reconsider the correctness of said decision in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya case – vide para 16 – 21. The Counsel for the Respondents also in his written submissions dated 09.06.2022 submits that the views expressed in the said case in relation to section 31B(2)(b) of the Industrial Dispute Act was merely obiter- vide item 4, under the topic Stare Decisis- Section 31B(2)(b) of the Industrial Dispute Act.

However, when the decision of the High Court is challenged in appeal and taken up before this court, this court is not bound to follow the said decision in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya case, if it is not correctly decided and this court has to apply the law as it sees as correct law. In my view, as per the law, dismissal of the application by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal and its confirmation by the Learned High Court is correct as I do not see the said decision in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya case as correct in law and what is relevant is whether the dispute had been referred for arbitration or settlement by industrial court by the Minister when the application was considered by the President of the Labour Tribunal.

His Lordship Justice Samayawardhena has correctly pointed out that section 31B(3)(a) has no relevance to the facts of this case. It applies only for instances where similar or identical dispute exists where the same employer is a party but not to instances where another inquiry is pending on a similar or identical dispute between same parties. If it is interpreted to say that it applies even where another inquiry is pending on a similar or identical dispute between same parties, namely same employer and employee, section 31B(2)(b) may become redundant. Section 31B(3)(b) also has no relevance to the circumstances of this case as that section contemplates proceedings or inquiries pending in terms of any other law.

Compulsory arbitrations are done under the provisions of the same Industrial Dispute Act. My brother judge, honourable Justice Samayawardhena has referred to section 31B (5) in his draft Judgement. In my view, first part of section 31B (5) applies where the dispute has been referred to and concluded by the Labour Tribunal. On such instances, the workman is not entitled to any other remedy. In fact, if the dispute has been attended and concluded by the Labour Tribunal, there cannot be an existing dispute to ask for any other remedy other than an appeal over the decision of the Labour Tribunal. Second part of section 31B (5) refers to instances where the workman has resorted to a different legal remedy other than filing of an application before the Labour Tribunal in terms of section 31B (1). Filing of an action in the District Court may fall within that part but as reference for compulsory arbitration can be done without the consent of the parties, I doubt whether such remedy can be considered as one resorted by the workman. In any case, if the dispute has been referred for compulsory arbitration, application before the Labour Tribunal on the same dispute has to be dismissed in terms of section 31B(2)(b). Anyway, I do not see any relevance of section 31B (5) to the circumstances of this case.

Even though, section 31B(2)(a) of the Industrial Dispute Act has no relevance to the present case before us, as it contemplates concurrent discussions between the employer and the trade union of which the applicant to Labour Tribunal is a member, it is pertinent to note that if the thinking behind the decision of Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya case referred above applies to this section, one can argue that such discussions interfere with the judicial process and such suspension of proceedings as contemplated in that section is not warranted. In my view, irrespective of the pending case before the Labour Tribunal, law provides for discussions with the employer through the trade union which has a better bargaining power since solution based on settlement is more effective than one reached through litigation as far as industrial peace and harmony is concerned.

It appears that the Respondent has taken preliminary objections before Labour Tribunal as well as before the Arbitrator. In my view, it should not be taken as an attempt to nonsuit a party at this moment. A vigilant lawyer may take up such objections in both forums since if he raises his objection only before one forum and fails, his client may have to face two inquiries based on the same dispute before two forums. On the other hand, if the objection before the Arbitrator is that two separate proceedings cannot be maintained on the same issue, it cannot be proceeded with if the Labour Tribunal dismisses the application on the objection raised.

On the other hand, whether the objection before the arbitrator is to nonsuit the appellant or whether it is the correct legal position taken up as a preliminary objection has to be decided when the order relevant to that objection is made and challenged and not in an appeal based on a decision made by a different forum.

Thus, in my view the questions of law have to be answered in the following manner.

Q. Has the High Court misdirected itself in Law in failing to consider that the petitioner's application before the Labour Tribunal was filed on 11.12.2017 prior to the reference to arbitration by the Minister of Labour which was made on 28.12.2017 under section4(1) of the Industrial Dispute Act, No.43 of 1950 (as amended)?

A. Since I view that Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya Case was not correctly decided, I answer this in the Negative as what is relevant is whether there is a pending arbitration in terms of section 4 of the Industrial Dispute Act when the application is being considered by the Labour Tribunal.

Q. Has the High Court misdirected itself in Law in construing sections 31B(2)(b) and 31B(3)(a) of the Industrial Dispute Act No. 43 of 1950 (as amended) having regard to the reference to Arbitration being made after the application to the Labour Tribunal?

A. No

Q. Has the High Court misdirected itself in law failing to apply and/or failing to follow the Judgment of the Court of Appeal in Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya v Upali Newspapers Ltd and Others (1999) 3 Sri LR 205 affirmed by the Supreme Court in (2001) 1 Sri L R 105 where it was held that section 31B(3) (a) of the Industrial Dispute Act No.43 of 1950 (as amended) applies where the reference to arbitration by Minister is made subsequent to the application filed before the Labour Tribunal which is what transpired in this instance?

A. The said judgments do not relate to section 31B(3)(a). Even if reference to section 31B(3)(a) is a typographical error and it has to be considered as section 31B(2)(b), the learned High Court Judge has distinguished the issue that was in question in the said Eksath Kamkaru Samithiya case from the case at hand. It appears that the position of the Learned High Court judge was that the said case was to challenge the validity of the Reference of the dispute in that matter for Arbitration, and since there is no writ issued in this matter the Labour Tribunal's decision to dismiss the present application before the Labour Tribunal is correct.

Q. Has the High Court erred in law in determining that section 31B(3)(a) of the Industrial Dispute Act No.43 of 1950(as amended) does not apply to the application of the petitioner and failing to hold that the proceedings before the Labour Tribunal must be suspended until the conclusion of the arbitration proceedings and resumed before the Labour Tribunal thereafter?

A. No. However, it could have been prudent to suspend the proceeding in relation to the gratuity but not the application in toto, as the result of the Arbitration proceedings may have a bearing on the terminal benefits.

For the reasons stated above this appeal is dismissed. No Costs.

The Petitioner-Appellant filed a petition before the Court of Appeal praying inter alia, a Writ of Certiorari to quash the decision of the Maharagama Urban Council contained in item No. 10 of the Local Government Notice published in Gazette No. 1461/ 2006 dated 01-09-2006. The said Notice published in the afore-stated Gazette was to vest a by-lane in the Maharagama Urban Council (1st Respondent-Respondent) in terms of Sections 50 and 52 of the Urban Councils Ordinance. The said by lane has been depicted in the sketch produced marked P 5(c) which was annexed to the petition filed in the Court of Appeal. As per the said sketch, the said by-lane commences from the property bearing the Assessment No. 48 in Jambugasmulla Mawatha in Nugegoda and runs up to the property bearing the Assessment No. 50. The properties bearing the Assessment Nos. 48/1, 48/2 and 48/3 are on one side of that by-lane and the properties bearing the Assessment Nos. 52, 52/1 50/1 and 50 are on the other side of the by-lane.

At the outset, I must state that the Petition dated 16-10-2007 filed by the Petitioner in the Court of Appeal which had sought the above Writ, has not set out any legal basis upon which the Court of Appeal could have acted in order to consider issuing the writ prayed for by the Petitioner-Appellant.

When filing a writ application any petitioner is obliged to state in its petition the legal basis upon which he/she seeks the writs prayed for in its petition. This is necessary because the court is required to consider such application by applying the relevant law applicable to the legal basis stated in such application. For example, some of such bases which could be cited in such petitions are illegality, irrationality and procedural impropriety etc. whatever such basis would be, it must be clearly discernible from the petition filed by such petitioner in Court. This is because Article 140 of the Constitution has only empowered the Court of Appeal to grant and issue, according to law, orders in the nature of writs of certiorari, prohibition, procedendo, mandamus and quo warranto against any public authority. The law applicable to one ground differs from another and that is why the compliance of the requirement to clearly state the legal basis in a petition is necessary.

There is another important reason as to why this should be so. The public authorities who have been made respondents to such writ applications are required to defend themselves against the allegations that may have been levelled against them. They generally conduct their defences with the help of legal assistance from lawyers. Thus, it is of paramount importance not only for any such respondent in such writ application, but also for his/ her lawyers who would appear for such respondent, to know exactly the legal basis upon which a writ has been sought from court against such respondent under Article 140 of the Constitution. Any petition which does not comply with the afore-said requirement at least remotely, would therefore be a petition which is misconceived in law.

A closer look at the Petition filed by the Petitioner-Appellant, shows that the several averments in the Petition only contain the sequence of events of certain incidents. They merely have set out the factual background of a dispute to the relevant by-lane that had existed between the Petitioner-Appellant and certain other parties who are residents of some of the afore-mentioned plots of land situated by the side of the relevant by-lane. Having considered the several averments of the Petition filed by Petitioner-Appellant in the Court of Appeal, I am of the view that the said Petition is a petition misconceived in law as it does not set out any legal basis upon which the Court of Appeal could have considered the prayers for the issuance of writs.

I also have to observe at this juncture the followings: the Petitioner-Appellant has not made any of those persons who were involved in the above dispute, parties to the writ application he had filed in the Court of Appeal; some of the said parties had in fact subsequently filed an application to intervene in to the case filed by the Petitioner-Appellant in the Court of Appeal; the Petitioner-Appellant had objected to their intervention in the Court of Appeal; the Court of Appeal by order dated 07-03-2008 had upheld this objection and refused permission for those parties to intervene in this case. I observe that one such party that sought intervention in this case was Gamini Jayaweera Fernando who is admittedly the owner of the soil rights of this by-lane.[1]

In my view, it is not reasonable for the Petitioner-Appellant to take such high ground to ensure the exclusion of the afore-stated relevant persons involved in this dispute from these proceedings. In as much as the Petitioner-Appellant has agitated for some grievance, the afore-stated parties are also interested in placing their side of the story before court. This is particularly because, this is basically a dispute between two parties rather than a dispute between the Petitioner-Appellant and the relevant Urban Council. Indeed, the Urban Council has taken steps to publish the impugned Gazette notification produced marked X 3[2] (in the Petition to this Court dated 24-02-2012), only at the request of the afore-stated parties who made such request in X 10 in the Petition to this Court dated 24-02-2012. For the above reasons, I am of the view that the Petitioner-Appellant had failed to add necessary parties to his petition filed before the Court of Appeal and that would be fatal to his case.

The Petitioner-Appellant relies on the Deed No. 416 attested on 01-04-1993 by Singappuliarachchige Don Susil Premajayanth Nortary Public[3], to assert his right to the disputed by-lane. However, both according to the Petitioner-Appellant's Deed and his Pleadings, he has only acquired a servitude of a Right of Way over the relevant disputed by-lane. Thus, his interest to the relevant by-lane in the circumstances of this case, must be viewed only as an interest of a person who has acquired such servitude of right of way over that by-lane.

The 1st Respondent-Respondent in his statement of objections dated 04-04-2008 filed before the Court of Appeal[4], has taken up the position that afore-stated Gamini Jayaweera Fernando who enjoys the soil rights of the relevant by-lane, together with several others occupying the afore-stated several other plots of lands situated by the side of this by-lane, by the document produced marked R 2[5] (in the Court of Appeal) had requested the Urban Council to develop and maintain this by-lane. R 2 is dated 21-09-2002 and signed by: Gamini Fernando (Owner of Assessment No. 50/1, 50/A and 50/B); D. S. Weerasuriya (Owner of Assessment No. 52); R. P. P. A. Samarasinghe (Owner of Assessment No. 48); S. J. P. A. Samarasinghe (Owner of Assessment No. 48/2); and S. P. A. Samarasinghe (Owner of Assessment No.48/3).

According to Deed No. 1596 attested on 14-09-1996[6], the original owner Jayaweerage David Fernando who is the father of Jayaweerage Gamini Fernando had gifted the properties bearing Assessment Numbers 50 and 50/1 and the relevant by-lane to said Jayaweerage Gamini Fernando. The three plots of land above mentioned, appear to have been depicted in plan No. 2470 dated 30-01-1990 prepared by D. C. Hettige Licensed Surveyor. The two plots of land bearing assessment Nos. 50 and 50/1, are Lot Numbers 1 and 2 depicted in that plan and the by-lane is depicted as Lot 2 in the said plan. The Petitioner-Appellant has not produced this plan in Court. According to deed No. 1596, Lot 2 is a road reservation dedicated for common use. Be that as it may, as per the Second Schedule of the Deed No. 1596 dated 14-09-1996 attested by S. R. Kalurathna Notary Public, Gamini Fernando has soil rights over the strip of land (in dispute) in extent of A0: R0: P0630 which is the by-lane relevant to this case. However, the Petitioner-Appellant's entitlement is only limited to the use of it as a right of way.

Since the Urban Council has acted under Sections 50 and 52 of the Urban Councils Ordinance, let me at this juncture reproduce those two sections here for convenience.

Section 50 of the Urban Councils Ordinance:

Power of Urban Council to construct new, and improve existing, thoroughfares.

The Urban Council of each town may within that town—

(a) lay out and construct new roads, streets, bridges, or other thoroughfares;

(b) widen, open, or enlarge any street or other thoroughfare (not being a principal thoroughfare);

[5] Also produced marked X 10 in the Petition to the Supreme Court dated 24-02-2012 and produced marked Z in the Counter Objections filed by the 1st to the 5th intervenient Petitioners in the Court of Appeal on 14-02-2008.

[6] Produce marked R 1 in the statement of objections filed before the Court of Appeal on 04-04-2008.

> (c) turn, divert, discontinue, or stop up, whether in whole or in part, any public street or other thoroughfare (not being a principal thoroughfare), > making due compensation to the owners or occupiers of any property required for such purposes, or any person whose legal rights are thereby infringed.

Section 52 of the Urban Councils Ordinance:

> Gifts of land required for diversion or enlargement of thoroughfares.
> If in connexion with the turning, diversion, widening, opening, enlargement or improvement of any thoroughfare, it becomes necessary for any Urban Council to take possession of the land of any person for public use, and if the person claiming to be the owner of the land desires to make a free gift of the land to the Council for such purpose and to renounce all claim to compensation therefor, a record in writing to that effect duly signed by such person in the presence of the Chairman or of a person authorized by the Chairman in writing in that behalf shall be sufficient to vest the land in the Council. No such record shall be deemed to be invalid or of no effect in law by reason only that the requirements of section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance have not been complied with as to attestation by a notary public and by witnesses.

According to Section 52 of the Urban Councils Ordinance when the owner of the land makes a free gift of his land, to the Council for the purpose of developing it as a roadway, renouncing all his claims for compensation thereto, it would be sufficient for such land to be vested in the Council. The only other requirement under the above section is that such gift must be in writing, duly signed by such person in the presence of a Chairman or a person authorized by the Chairman in writing. The above requirements can be broken down to four distinct items to facilitate its convenient analysis. They are as follows:

1. The owner of the land who desires to make a free gift of the land must make a record in writing of his desire to make a free gift of the land to the Council for such purpose.
2. He must renounce all claims to compensation thereto.
3. He must duly sign such record by himself.
4. The signing must be done in the presence of the Chairman or of a person authorized by the Chairman in writing in that behalf.

Another important factor which needs specific attention is that the said section has also relaxed the application of Section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance, which is the requirement of such writing to have been attested by a Notary Public and witnesses. Thus, such record will not be invalid for non-compliance of Section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance. In other words, according to Section 52 of the Urban Councils Ordinance, the requirements of attestation by a Notary Public and making such record in the presence of witnesses are not mandatory requirements for a valid vesting as per that section.

Let me now consider the letter (produced marked X 10) written by said Gamini Fernando, gifting the relevant soil rights to the 1st Respondent Council has complied with the above requirements. It is this document that the 1st Respondent-Respondent relies on, to convince this Court that the 1st Respondent Urban Council had complied with the provisions in Section 52 of the Urban Councils Ordinance.

Let me consider the afore-stated first requirement. The first requirement is the presence of a record in writing, and this is satisfied by the letter produced marked X 10 by the Respondents-Respondents. In the letter X 10, the signatories clearly and unconditionally request Maharagama Urban Council (the 1st Respondent-Respondent) to take steps to acquire this by-lane and develop it as a tarred public roadway. They also request the 1st Respondent-Respondent to fix streetlamps for the common benefit of all users. This letter by itself is evidence that the first of the afore-stated requirements has been complied with.

The second requirement is a renunciation of compensation by those who gift it to the Urban Council. What is required according to Section 52 is a record in writing to that effect. Looking at X 10 as a whole, it is clear that those who had gifted the by-lane to the Urban Council have not sought any compensation in that regard from the Urban Council. They have not even made any such remote indication that they anticipate any compensation when the by-lane is vested in the Urban Council. For those reasons, I hold that there has in fact been a renunciation of compensation for the land by those who had gifted it to the Urban Council. Therefore, I hold that the second of the above requirements has also been complied with.

Thirdly, since the owner of the soil rights who made this free gift to the Council is a signatory to the letter X 10. Thus, the third requirement that the record must be signed by the maker of such free gift has also been complied with.

The fourth requirement is the signature of the Chairman, or an individual appointed by the Chairman in writing. On the face of it there is no record to establish that the letter X 10 was signed before either the Chairman of the Urban Council, or an individual appointed by the Chairman.

The letter X 10 has been directly addressed to Chairman Maharagama Urban Council which has been received by it according to the stamp placed thereon by Maharagama Urban Council).

The letter X 10 indicates that it has been copied to R. H. Ranjith, a Member of Maharagama Urban Council.

The letter dated 10-02-2003 addressed to the Chairman Maharagama Urban Council by R. H. Ranjith (the member of the Maharagama Urban Council) has also made the same request to the 1st Respondent-Respondent. The Chairman of Maharagama Urban Council who stands as the 1st Respondent-Respondent in this case has never ever challenged the fact that the free gift has in fact been made as per the letter X 10 by its signatories. Indeed, the position taken up by the 1st Respondent-Respondent is that Maharagama Urban Council set the rest of the procedure in motion as per the request in letter X 10. The said procedure was to have the by-lane vested in the Maharagama Urban Council in terms of Section 52 of the Urban Councils Ordinance. The Petitioner-Appellant himself, had admitted that the relevant vesting of the by-lane had been initiated upon a proposal presented to Maharagama Urban Council by one of its Member[7].

While the 1st Respondent-Respondent or its Chairman has never ever challenged the letter X 10, the fact remains that they had indeed acted and relied upon X 10.

It is also of paramount importance that the 1st Respondent-Respondent Maharagama Urban Council, had even proceeded to conduct an inquiry before it had acted on the request made in X 10. This inquiry was conducted in view of the objection raised by the Petitioner-Appellant to the proposed vesting. It is relevant to note that even the Petitioner-Appellant has admitted that it was upon his request for an inquiry that the 1st Respondent-Respondent had summoned all parties to the dispute and proceeded to hold an inquiry. The Petitioner-Appellant had admittedly placed all material facts before this inquiry.[8]

On the other hand, it is not the position of the Petitioner-Appellant in the Court of Appeal, that X 10 was invalid because it did not comply with the aforementioned 4th requirement. I find no trace of anything even remotely connected to non-compliance of Section 52 has ever been agitated as a ground for claiming the Writ of Certiorari in the Petition filed by the Petitioner-Appellant in the Court of Appeal. Therefore, that ground appears to be an afterthought entertained by the Petitioner-Appellant after conclusion of the case in the Court of Appeal. The Respondents have had no opportunity to meet or answer such ground when they had presented their case in the Court of Appeal. This appeal has been lodged against the Court of Appeal decision pronounced in respect of the case it had heard. Therefore, this Court cannot permit the Petitioner-Appellant to advance a case materially different to what was presented before the original court. It is trite law that no person in the course of hearing the

[8] Paragraph 11 of Petition dated 16-10-2007 filed in the Court of Appeal.

Appeal, can advance a case materially different to what was presented before the original court.

For the above reasons, I am not inclined to hold that the vesting of the by-lane in Maharagama Urban Council through the process that the 1st Respondent had followed, is bad in law merely because one could not find any writing on the face of letter X 10 to the effect that it was signed in the presence of the Chairman or of a person authorized by Chairman in writing in that regard. This is particularly because the authenticity of X 10 was never in issue before the Court of Appeal.

Perusal of the Petition presented to the Court of Appeal by the Petitioner-Appellant produced marked X 2 in this case, shows clearly that the main ground on which the Petitioner-Appellant had presented his case to the Court of Appeal is that the primary court of Gangodawila in an application filed before it under Section 66 of the Primary Courts Procedure Act, had made an order on 12-09-1996[9] that Premasiri Gamage (owner of assessment No. 52 Jambugasmulla Mawatha), had no right to use the right of way over this by-lane. The Petitioner-Appellant had also highlighted the fact that the High Court of Colombo upon an Application for Revision filed in that regard by said Premasiri Gamage, had affirmed the aforesaid primary court Order[10]. It was the position of the Petitioner-Appellant in the Court of Appeal that aforesaid Premasiri Gamage who had claimed a right of way in the aforesaid Primary Court case, has gained improper advantage due to this vesting despite a Primary Court ruling against him. With regard to this argument, suffice it to state here that any entitlement or non-entitlement for a servitude of Right of Way under Section 66 of the Primary Courts Procedure Act cannot hinder such person using a public road even if it is the same roadway which had earlier stood as a private road. Therefore, in my view this is not a valid ground for the Court of Appeal to issue a Writ of Certiorari which the Petitioner-Appellant had sought from it.

Although the Petitioner-Appellant in the Court of Appeal had stated that the 1st Respondent-Respondent had proceeded with the process of vesting without a proper technical report being obtained I see no merit or substance in such argument. This is because the identity of the by-lane was never in dispute between the parties and was clear in everyone's mind throughout the proceedings.

For the reasons set out above and having regard to the nature of the questions of law in respect of which this Court has granted Special Leave to Appeal I hold as follows:

[9] Produced marked P 7(b) in the Petition to the Court of Appeal dated 16-10-2007 and produced marked X 5 in the Petition to the Supreme Court dated 24-02-2012.

[10] Produced marked P 8 in the Petition to the Court of Appeal dated 16-10-2007 and produced marked X 6 in the Petition to the Supreme Court dated 24-02-2012.

I. The letter dated 21-09-2002 produced marked X 10 can be taken as a "free gift" within the meaning of Section 52 of the Urban Councils' Ordinance.

II. the vesting of the disputed private roadway by the Gazette Notification No. 1461 dated 01-09-2006 (produced marked X 3) complied with the imperative requirements in Section 52 of the Urban Councils Ordinance.

III. The fact that the Petitioner-Appellant has not signed the letter dated 21-09-2002 X 10 is not relevant as he does not have soil rights to the by-lane. His right of way can continue without any hindrance even after vesting the by-lane in the Urban Council as a public road.

I hold that the Court of Appeal has correctly held that in the circumstances of this case, there is no illegality or irrationality in the vesting. I also hold that the Court of Appeal has correctly held that if the Petitioner challenges the free gift of the said by-lane by said Gamini Fernando on the basis that he has no soil rights on the said strip of land it cannot be decided in this case as it involves disputed questions of facts.

I proceed to dismiss this appeal but without costs.

This Court had granted special leave to appeal to respondents-appellants from the judgement of the Court of Appeal dated 15.05.2019. The three petitioners-respondents had invoked the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal on 02nd April 2013 seeking inter alia a writ of certiorari to quash the decision of 1st, 2nd 4th and 5th to 10th respondents-appellants, to call applications from Sri Lanka Homeopathy degree holders and diploma holders for registration as new Homeopathy practitioners. An advertisement published in print media by the Registrar of the Homeopathy Medical Council was produced marked P8. Furthermore, petitioners-respondents sought a writ of Mandamus directing the respondent-appellants to publish an advertisement cancelling the aforesaid impugned advertisement – P8. Two other reliefs sought by the petitioner-respondents from the Court of Appeal against the aforesaid respondents-appellants were writs of prohibition preventing them from registering new Homeopathic practitioners and usurping powers and authority of the Homeopathic Council. Furthermore, they sought interim orders restraining the respondents-appellants from calling applications for registration as new homeopathic practitioners and doing any act incidental to and connected with calling said applications and / or making decisions and implementing them until the final determination of the application.

In the aforesaid application, the Minister in charge of Indigenous Medicine, the Secretary of the Ministry of Indigenous Medicine and Secretary of the Homeopathic Council were the 1st, 2nd and 4th respondents respectively. While the members of the Homeopathic Interim Control Committee were cited as 5th to the 9th respondents and the Homeopathic Interim Control Committee was cited as the 10th respondent.

Petitioners-respondents are registered practitioners of homeopathy and they invoked the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal on the basis that the aforementioned respondents-appellants have usurped the powers and authority of the Homeopathic Council, established under the provisions of the Homeopathy Act No 7 of 1970. Petitioners-respondents further claimed that 5th to 9th respondents named before the Court of Appeal are not members of the Homeopathic Council recognised by the Act, but of an Interim Control Committee appointed by the Minister. It was contended that the Minister had no power to appoint such committee and the committee has no power to register Homeopathic medical practitioners. They contended that it is the Homeopathic Medical Council who has the power to register new practitioners as provided under section 16(3) of the Homeopathy Act.

The Court of Appeal by its judgement dated 15.05.2019, allowed the application of the petitioner-respondents and granted reliefs prayed for in the prayer of the petition.

Respondents-appellants sought special leave to appeal from this court and three intervenient petitioners sought to intervene. This court at the hearing of the special leave to appeal application of the respondent–appellants had also considered the submissions of the learned President's Counsel for the three intervenient-petitioners when granting special leave to appeal on six questions of law, including the following question framed by the intervenient-petitioners:

"Did the Court of Appeal err in failing to hear the intervenient-petitioners prior to its judgement dated 15.05.2019?"

Four of the five remaining questions of law relate to the legality of the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal.

It is pertinent to note that the decisions the petitioners-respondents challenged in the Court of Appeal were made in 2013 and the judgement was delivered in the year 2019. The learned Deputy Solicitor-General at the outset of the hearing of this appeal submitted that the interim committee, whose decision was impugned in the Court of Appeal ceased to function and a council appointed under the provisions of the new Homeopathy Act, which came in to operation in 2016, is performing necessary duties, at present. Furthermore the said council had endorsed the registration of the intervenient-petitioners as homeopathy practitioners. In view of these changes due to intervenient factors, the learned Deputy Solicitor General submitted that the challenge to the Court of Appeal judgment based on the initial questions of law is an academic exercise and therefore he would confine himself to the sole legal question set out below:

"Did the Court of Appeal err in failing to hear the Intervenient Petitioners prior to its judgment dated 15th May 2019, and if so, whether the judgment dated 15th May 2019 could have an adverse impact on the intervenient petitioners and / or any others who are similarly circumstanced?"

Accordingly all parties agreed to pursue this matter based on the above question of law and restrict their respective cases to focus on the said question.

Before I proceed to examine the submissions on this legal issue I would first set out briefly the factual background as revealed by the material presented before this court.

Under the provisions of Homeopathy Act No 7 of 1970, a council called Homeopathic Council is established. During the period of first ten years commencing on the appointed date, the Minister had the power to appoint the members of the council and thereafter they are to be elected by the homeopathic practitioners registered under the Act. Powers of the council includes the power to register homeopathic practitioners. All the members of the council hold office for a term of five years and a member is deemed to have vacated from office on his removal by the Minister.

In the year 2006, a council had been elected and on 20th October 2009, the Minister had removed the members of the said council. Thereafter the Minister had appointed an interim committee and the term of office of the said interim committee came to an end on 30th January 2011. Thereafter, on 28th March 2011, having considered a memorandum submitted by the Minister, the cabinet of ministers had decided that action be taken in consultation with the Attorney-General. Thereafter, acting on the opinion of the Attorney-General, the Minister had appointed several interim committees. One such committee had been appointed with effect from 1st January 2013, and it is this committee that took steps to call for applications to register homeopathic practitioners. On 19th November 2013, petitioners-respondents challenged this decision and invoked the writ jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal. However, the said interim committee had ceased to hold office at the end of 2013 and a fresh interim committee had been appointed thereafter. On 4th December 2015, a gazette was published setting out the names of all registered homeopathic practitioners. In the following year a new Act had come in to force (Homeopathy Act No 10 of 2016) and on 7th November 2016 a council comprising of eleven members had been appointed in accordance with the provisions of the said Act.

The petitioners-respondents on 29th August 2017 had filed an amended petition in the Court of Appeal pleading inter alia that "they are entitled to and / or there are compelling reasons to maintain and continue with the application". Thereafter the impugned judgment of the Court of Appeal was delivered on 15 May 2019. It is also pertinent at this stage to note that the Court of Appeal when granting notices had refused granting interim relief prayed by the petitioners-respondents to restrain the respondents-petitioners calling applications for registration as new homeopathic practitioners and doing any act incidental to and connected with calling said applications and / or making decisions and implementing them.

The learned President's Counsel for the three intervenient petitioners submitted, that they in response to the advertisement P8, submitted applications to register themselves as homeopathic practitioners and obtained registration on or around 07th August 2013. Thereafter, on or around 18th May 2019 the Registrar of the 3rd Respondent-Petitioner Council informed that their registration would be cancelled as per the impugned judgement of the Court of Appeal dated 15th May 2019. He further submitted that the basis or the reason for said decision by the registrar of the council could be attributed to a specific finding of the Court of Appeal in the impugned judgment dated 15th May 2019. The learned judges of the Court of Appeal having granted relief prayed by the petitioner-respondents, further proceeded to hold:

"Learned Senior DSG for the respondents in his written submissions seeks to dismiss the petitioner's application on futility on the basis that five new homeopathy practitioners were registered in response to the advertisement P8 pending determination of this application. That registration of five new members is on the above-mentioned principle of law (is) a nullity".

On behalf of the intervenient-petitioners it was contended that they themselves and others who are similarly circumstanced are truly aggrieved by the impugned judgement, as their registration had been adversely affected without granting a hearing for them. They contend that they were necessary parties for the application and the failure on the part of the petitioners-respondents to name them as respondents is a fatal irregularity.

The registrar of the homeopathic council by the gazette No 1944 dated 05th December 2015, a copy of which is produced before this court by the intervenient-petitioners, had published the names of the registered homeopathic practitioners under the title "list of homeopathy practitioners-general register-2014". The said list contains two hundred and sixty one names including the three intervenient-petitioners. They are listed as 194, 195 and 197. The three petitioners-respondents are listed in the same list as 114,115 and 125. It is also pertinent to observe that the registrar of the homeopathic council had published a similar list of registered practitioners in the gazette no 1350 dated 16 July 2004 under the title "list of homeopathic practitioners – 2003" and the names of the three respondents-petitioners appear under the same sequential numbers. The three petitioners-respondents had produced a copy of this gazette along with their petition when invoking the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal.

In this context it is pertinent to observe that the petitioners-respondents neither in their original petition dated 02nd April 2013 nor in the amended petition dated 29th August 2017 had prayed for the cancellation of any registration granted pursuant to the impugned advertisement P8. However, they sought interim orders restraining the respondents-petitioners from calling applications for registration as new homeopathy practitioners and registering them under the provisions of the Act as well as directing the Secretary of the homeopathic council to publish an advertisement cancelling the impugned advertisement marked P8, but were not successful as the Court of Appeal did not grant such interim relief.

The learned Deputy Solicitor General while associating himself with the submissions of the learned President's Counsel for the intervenient petitioners submitted, that a motion with a copy of a letter of the Registrar of the homeopathic council confirming the registration of five persons out of twenty persons who submitted applications in response to the impugned advertisement P8, as registered homeopathy practitioners, together with an extract of the gazette dated 04.12.2015 which contains the names of the intervenient petitioners and the date of their registration namely 07th August 2013, was filed in the Court of Appeal on 17th December 2018. Furthermore, it was contended that the written submissions filed on behalf of the respondents-petitioners in the Court of Appeal on 01st March 2019, categorically drew the attention of the court to the fact that five qualified homeopathic practitioners have been selected from among twenty applicants who responded to the impugned advertisement and that their names were published in the gazette dated 04th December 2015. In the aforementioned written submissions it had been contended that the writ application should fail inter alia on the ground of futility and due to the failure to sight necessary parties as respondents. However, the learned judge of the Court of Appeal in his judgment dated 15th May 2019 had restricted his consideration to the submission on futility, in deciding to grant the reliefs prayed for in the prayer. Therefore, it is further contended that the learned judge of the court of appeal erred in holding that the registration of five new members a nullity while granting reliefs prayed in the petition as he failed to consider the submission on the failure to sight necessary parties.

Both the learned President's Counsel for the intervenient petitioners as well as the learned Deputy Solicitor General submitted that the finding on the validity of the registration of the intervenient petitioners without affording them an opportunity to present their case violates the core principles on fair adjudication namely audi alteram partem a cardinal rule of natural justice. Therefore, they contend that the revised question of law should be answered in the affirmative.

The learned counsel for the petitioners-respondents contests the above positions of the respondents-appellants and intervenient petitioners. He contended that the legal question should be answered in the negative and the cases of respondents-petitioners as well as intervenient petitioners should be dismissed. It is his contention that the respondents-appellants and intervenient petitioners by restricting the scope of the appeal to the sole question of law and thereby abandoning the appeal on the rest of the questions of law have left two main conclusions of the Court of Appeal intact. It is his position that no person should be allowed to be benefitted from an illegal act and the attempt of the intervenient petitioners to derive benefit from illegality should fail. He claims while the two main findings of the Court of Appeal that 'the appointment of the interim committee by the minister is ultravires' and that 'the decisions made by the purported Interim Committee are null and void ab initio' remain unchallenged, registration of the intervenient petitioners as homeopathic practitioners has no force in law, even though they were not accorded a hearing in the Court of Appeal. Furthermore, he submits that the intervenient petitioners "cannot possibly claim that they were unaware of the case pending in the court of appeal challenging the legality of the interim committee by the Minister…. and therefore they should have acted with precautions….". Furthermore, he submits that they are not without remedy as they could obtain registration under the provisions of the Homeopathy Act no. 10 of 2016.

As I have enumerated herein before, the scope of this appeal was restricted to a solitary question of law on the basis that arguing the full appeal is only an academic exercise, due to the subsequent changes. Therefore both the learned Deputy Solicitor-General as well as the learned President's Counsel for the intervenient petitioners confined their challenge to the specific finding of the impugned judgment that directly adversely affected the intervenient petitioners. Therefore the sole issue before this court is whether the learned judge of the Court of Appeal erred when he proceeded to hold "that registration of five new members is on the above mentioned principle of law is a nullity" without according a hearing to the said five new members who were registered by the interim committee.

The registration of these five new members had taken place on 07 August 2013 and by that time there was no judicial pronouncement on the legality of the interim committee. Furthermore, the Court of Appeal had declined issuing an interim order to restrain the respondents-petitioners from calling for applications for registration as new homeopathic practitioners and proceeding to register them or doing any act incidental or connected with calling said applications or making decisions and implementing them.

The Supreme Court in Gnanasambanthan v Rear Admiral Perera and others [1998] 3 SLR 167 at 172 observed that "..it is both the law and practice in Sri Lanka to cite necessary parties to applications for Writs of Certiorary and Mandamus".

In Rawaya Publishers and other v Wijedasa Rajapaksha, Chairman Sri lanka Press Council & Others [2001] 3 SLR 213 at 216, Justice J.A.N.De Silva, President Court of Appeal (as he then was) citing with approval Udit Narayan Singh v Board of Revenue, AIR 1963 – SC 786, observed that:

> "it has been held that where a writ application is filed in respect of an order of the Board of Revenue not only the Board it self is a necessary party, but also the parties in whose favour the Board has pronounced the impugned decision because without them no effective decision can be made. If they are not made parties then the petition can be dismissed in limine. It has also been held that persons vitally affected by the writ petition are all necessary parties".

In Wijeratne (Commissioner of Motor Traffic) v Ven. Dr Paragoda Wimalawansa Thero et al [2011] 2 SLR 258 at 267 the Supreme Court while examining the rules governing the issue of 'necessary parties' to an action observed that;

> "the second rule is that those who would be affected by the outcome of the writ application should be made respondents to the application".

The Court further elaborated

> "A necessary party to an application for a writ of mandamus is the officer or the authority who has the power vested by law to perform the act or the duty sought to be enforced by the writ of mandamus. All persons who would be affected by the issue of mandamus also shall be made respondents to the application" (at 268).

In the matter before us, one of the reliefs sought by the petitioners-respondents is a Writ of Mandamus directing the respondents to publish an advertisement cancelling the impugned advertisement calling for applications to register new homeopathic practitioners and the Court of Appeal granted the said relief too. Three intervenient petitioners who gained registration based on the applications submitted in response to the said impugned advertisement are therefore necessary parties to the said application. They had gained such registration within a period of just over four months of filing the application in the Court of Appeal by the petitioners-respondents. There had been a period of five years between the intervenient petitioners gaining registration and final submissions in the Court of Appeal. Such submissions had been made three years after the publication of the list of practitioners in 2015 that contained inter alia the names of the new practitioners who gained registration in 2013. It is also pertinent to observe that the petitioners-respondents filed an amended petition in the Court of Appeal, two years after the publication of the gazette, but opted not to add the practitioners who were registered in 2013 in consequent to the impugned advertisement. Petitioners-respondents failed to provide a valid explanation on their failure to add new practitioners other than the mere assertion that they were unaware of such registration. In my view this assertion is far from truth. It is clear that the publication of the list of practitioners is not unusual. Petitioners-respondents themselves produced the publication in 2004 containing 178 names. Their explanation, the claim of ignorance on the publication of list of practitioners in 2015, at a time they had invoked jurisdiction of a court of law challenging the registration of new practitioners is unacceptable. Filing of the amended petition in 2017 demonstrates that the petitioners-respondents had been vigilant on the changes that had been taking place in relation to matters surrounding the litigation they initiated in 2013. It is also interesting to note that apart from the five persons who had been registered in August 2013, sixty five new persons had been registered in the following year – 2014 and the publication in 2015 contains all persons who have been registered between the time the petitioners-respondents invoked the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal and December 2015. This increase had taken place within the space of two years in a background there were only one hundred and ninety-two persons who had been registered between the years 1982 and 2011. When all these facts are taken cumulatively, the ignorance pleaded by the petitioners-respondents on the registration of three intervenient-petitioners by 2017, is unacceptable.

Respondent-petitioners having failed to discharge their responsibility to add necessary parties take up the position that the intervenient-petitioners should be denied of any relief by this court as they failed to intervene in the Court of Appeal. It is the contention of the petitioners-respondents that the intervenient-petitioners who gained registration in 2013 performed certain functions associated with the interim committee and therefore they ought to have known about the proceedings pending in the Court of Appeal. However, there is no proof as to the exact nature of interaction the intervenientpetitioners maintained with the interim committee. Furthermore, there were no interim reliefs granted by the court. Petitioners-respondents further submitted that there is no bar for the intervenient-petitioners to seek registration under the 2016 Act, after satisfying that they possess necessary qualifications and hence they are not without any remedy.

Aforesaid contentions of the petitioners-respondents neither absolve them from the responsibility they shoulder nor valid explanations for their lapse. In my view requiring the intervenient petitioners to recommence the registration process under the 2016 Act, causes nothing but an unnecessary and unwarranted burden on them. In this regard it is pertinent to observe that the qualifications the intervenient-petitioner posses are set out in the petition, affidavit and annexures of the intervention application filed in this court and they are not disputed. Furthermore, it is pertinent to observe that in August 2013 out of twenty applicants, only four had been successful gaining registration. Petitioners-respondents do not claim that the intervenient petitioners do not possess required qualifications. The learned Deputy Solicitor-General submitted that the newly constituted homeopathic council, under the provisions of 2016 Act had already decided to ratify all the registrations previously made.

It is also pertinent to observe that the learned judge of the Court of Appeal has made reference to the findings of the Supreme Court in its judgment in SC FR 891/2009 and had relied on it when he proceeded to observe that the registration of five new members in consequent to impugned P8 advertisement is a nullity. In my view it is necessary to examine the facts and circumstances based on which SC FR 891/2009 had been instituted to decide the relevancy of its judgment to the matters under consideration in the Court of Appeal. In 2006, members to the homeopathic council had been elected for a period of five years. However, in 2009 the Minister had removed them and had appointed an interim committee. The members who were removed by the Minister had invoked the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in SC FR 891/2009 and had challenged their removal. Meanwhile the term of the interim committee that was appointed in 2009 had come to an end in 2011. Thereafter several interim committees had been appointed until the enactment of the new Homeopathy Act in 2016. The impugned Advertisement P8 had been published on a decision of one such interim committee. The said committee had functioned from 01st January 2013 till end of the year and a new committee had been appointed thereafter. Therefore the scope of the instant writ application is limited to the decisions of the said interim committee appointed on 01st January 2013. The appointment of the members to the 2013 interim committee took place at a time there was no judicial pronouncement on the initial removal of the members in 2009. Furthermore, the appointment of members to the interim committee in 2013 was not a matter that was impugned in SC FR 891/2009. The said judgment that was pronounced in March 2016 focused on the removal of members in 2009 and the appointment of the interim committee in the same year. The learned Deputy Solicitor-General submitted that the scope of the said judgment does not extend to the subsequent appointments of several interim committees, including the interim committee appointed in 2013 in consequent to a cabinet decision and on the advise of the Attorney-General.

When all these factors are considered in the backdrop of the failure on the part of the petitioners-respondents to add necessary parties to the application – parties who were directly affected from the impugned judgment - the intervenient-petitioners and who are similarly circumstanced - and the fact that they were denied a hearing before the Court of Appeal prior to the impugned judgment was delivered together with the fact that the learned judge of the Court of Appeal failed to consider this issue even though it was specifically raised, I am of the view, that the Court of Appeal erred in failing to hear the Intervenient Petitioners prior to its judgement dated 15th May 2019 and therefore the aforesaid judgement dated 15th May 2019 could not have an adverse impact on the Intervenient Petitioners and /or any others who are similarly circumstanced. Hence, the impugned judgement of the Court of Appeal dated 15th May 2019, is varied accordingly.

We make no order on costs.

Samantha Rathwatte, PC with M. Bandara instructed by Upuli Amunugama for the Plaintiff - Appellant - Respondent.

WRITTEN SUBMISSIONS : Defendant-Respondent-Petitioner – not filed.

ARGUED ON : 08th September 2023.

DECIDED ON : 20th October 2023.

S. THURAIRAJA, PC, J.

In the matter before this Court, the Plaintiff-Appellant-Respondent, namely Abdul Kareem Nizar (hereinafter referred to as "the Plaintiff"), brought forth a petition for the dissolution of his marriage with the Defendant-Respondent-Petitioner, namely Inoka Uthpalani Kaluarachchie (hereinafter referred to as "the Defendant"), praying for a decree of divorce a vinculo matrimonii on grounds of malicious desertion by the Defendant in the District Court of Kandy. The District Court, through its judgment rendered on 4th March 2017, adjudged that the Plaintiff had failed to substantiate the charge of malicious desertion and accordingly dismissed the Plaintiff's claim. Subsequently, the High Court of Civil Appeal of the Central Province Holden in Kandy, by Judgment dated 11th December 2020, held in favour of the Plaintiff and overturned the decision of the District Court.

The Defendant, aggrieved by the judgment of the High Court, has now sought recourse from this Court, lodging an appeal by way of Petition dated 13th January 2021, praying that the High Court's Judgment be set aside, and the District Court's Judgment be reinstated.

Upon the presentation of the instant case before this Court on 16th July 2021, leave to appeal was granted on the following question of law:

> "(i) Did the Civil Appellate High Court misdirect themselves that the evidence led by the Respondent amounts to malicious desertion?"

The question of law set out above requires this Court to examine the evidence proffered before the District Court and subsequently determine whether the learned High Court Judges rightly diverged from the view taken by the learned District Court Judge in determining that the Plaintiff had satisfactorily established the culpability of the Defendant for malicious desertion.

Factual Matrix

The narrative of this case unfolds against the backdrop of a marriage between the Plaintiff and the Defendant on 31st January 2010. The Plaintiff is the husband, and the Defendant is the wife. No children were born of the marriage. Further, the Defendant surpasses the Plaintiff in age by seven years, and their affiliation to different religious faiths, Islam for the Plaintiff and Roman Catholic for the Defendant, underscores their diverse backgrounds. The registration of the marriage transpired without the knowledge of the Plaintiff's parents, primarily due to apprehensions stemming from their divergent religious affiliations. Nevertheless, the Plaintiff avers that, over time, his parents came to accept the marriage, even bestowing gold ornaments upon the Defendant as a symbol of their approval, a fact which is undisputed by the Defendant.

It is to be noted that on examination of the testimony, disparities exist in the chronology of events as recounted by both parties. The Plaintiff, employed within the hospitality industry in Sri Lanka at the time of the marriage, averred that he travelled to Seychelles in search of a new job in February 2010. Six months hence, in August 2010, the Defendant followed suit, and together, they established their matrimonial home in Seychelles.

The Plaintiff further contended that in the ensuing period between August 2010 and October 2011, there was a gradual breakdown of the marriage attributable to the Defendant's conduct. The Plaintiff highlighted a series of incidents: the Defendant's unfounded suspicions, escalating quarrels, and disparaging conduct towards the Plaintiff's friends and family, which allegedly culminated in emotional detachment and disruption of the Plaintiff's professional life. The Plaintiff posits the age disparity and religious divergence as contributing factors to the discord.

A specific incident of note (pages 81 and 84 of the Appeal Brief marked "X") involves an alleged visit by the Defendant to the Plaintiff's workplace, during which she caused a commotion that rendered an impossible work environment for the Plaintiff.

Notably, the Plaintiff and the Defendant frequently shuttled between Seychelles and Sri Lanka during their matrimonial journey. For instance, in October 2010, the Plaintiff and the Defendant returned to Sri Lanka and temporarily resided at the Defendant's parental home. The Plaintiff subsequently returned to Seychelles in late October 2010, with the Defendant joining him approximately a month later.

However, in October 2011, following an extended period of discord, the Plaintiff and the Defendant returned to Sri Lanka together. Upon arrival at the airport, the Defendant chose to depart with her parents. Since October 2011, the Plaintiff and the Defendant have maintained separate residences, marking a decisive cessation of conjugal cohabitation. This act of separation constitutes the basis for the Plaintiff's claim of malicious desertion against the Defendant.

The Plaintiff asserted that, during the period from October 2011 to the initiation of these proceedings, the Plaintiff took proactive steps, with the support of his parents, to invite the Defendant to resume marital life, which the Defendant had allegedly refused.

Conversely, the Defendant denied these averments made by the Plaint, stating that she did not intend to terminate the matrimonial relationship, and is, in fact, inclined to resume said matrimonial life with the Plaintiff, but on the condition that this is done so at any place except the Plaintiff's parental house. The Defendant has testified that the impetus for this condition is alleged mistreatment by the Plaintiff's family, in particular his sister, at the matrimonial home in Seychelles (page 85 of the Appeal Brief marked "X"). According to the Defendant, the Plaintiff's sister attempted to confine the Defendant in the matrimonial house in Seychelles to prevent her from visiting the Plaintiff's workplace and, as a result, the Defendant contends to possessing legal justification for not being inclined to resume marital life at the Plaintiff's parental house.

What does seem to be apparent, however, is that the above-mentioned incident appears to align with the Plaintiff's account of the commotion incited by the Defendant at his workplace.

On behalf of the Plaintiff, he and his father gave evidence. On behalf of the Defendant, the Defendant gave evidence, and no witnesses were called.

Analysis

Section 19(1) of the Marriage Registration Ordinance No. 19 of 1907, as amended, lists "malicious desertion" as one of the three grounds upon which a decree of divorce a vinculo matrimonii may be entered by a competent Court. This form of desertion may manifest either as simple malicious desertion (sometimes called actual malicious desertion) or by way of constructive malicious desertion.

The Marriage Registration Ordinance does not explicitly define the term "malicious desertion" employed in Section 19(2) of that enactment. Consequently, one has to peruse past decisions of the Courts to determine the constituent elements requisite for establishing grounds for divorce based on malicious desertion.

In Attanayake vs. Attanayake 16 Cey L. R. 206, Poyser J identified the two pivotal elements necessary to establish malicious desertion as follows:

> "In order to constitute desertion, there must be cessation of cohabitation and an intention on the part of the accused party to desert the other."

This fundamental premise was affirmed by Sinha J in Bipinchandra Jaisinghbhai Shah vs. Prabhavati (AIR 1957 SC 176), wherein the learned Judge stated:

> "For the offence of desertion, so far as the deserting spouse is concerned, two essential conditions must be there, namely (1) the factum of separation, and (2) the intention to bring cohabitation permanently to an end (animus deserendi)."

It has to be borne in mind that what constitutes malicious desertion invariably hinges upon the specifics of each case, as articulated by Jayawardena J in Gomes vs. Gomes (S.C. Appeal No. 123/14 by minutes dated 07th June 2018):

> "The question of whether the elements required to constitute malicious desertion have been established in a particular case are questions of fact to be decided by the Court upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case."

This is especially pertinent because, as observed by Sir Henry Duke (later Lord Merrivale P.), in Pulford vs. Pulford (1923 Probate 18):

> "Desertion is not the withdrawal from a place but from a state of things".

Factum of Separation

In the case of Gomes v Gomes (supra), Jayawardena J stated as follows:

> "Simple malicious desertion or, as it is sometimes called, actual malicious desertion is where the spouse who is alleged to be guilty of malicious desertion physically separates from the matrimonial home or terminates matrimonial consortium*, with the intention of deserting his or her spouse. The term "consortium" usually denotes the composite incidents of a marital relationship."*

[Emphasis added]

The term "consortium" is taken to be synonymous with "cohabitation" used in Poyser J's statement in Attanayake v Attanayake (supra) referred to above. Furthermore, Jayawardena J drew upon the elucidation of "consortium" as propounded by Harcourt J in Grobbelaar vs. Havenga (1964 S SALR (N) 522):

> "An abstraction comprising the totality of a number of rights, duties and advantages accruing to spouses of a marriage… [which embraces] companionship, love, affection, comfort, mutual services, sexual intercourse - all belong to the married state. Taken together, they make up the consortium."

In Rajeswararanee vs. Sunthararasa (64 NLR 366), Basanayake CJ stipulated that, with regard to the first requirement of the factum of desertion, the desertion must be "against the desire" of the deserted spouse.

Sinha J, in Bipinchandra Jaisinghbhai Shah vs. Prabhavati (supra), stated as follows:

> "Two elements are essential so far as the deserted spouse is concerned: (1) the absence of consent, and (2) absence of conduct giving reasonable cause to the spouse leaving the matrimonial home to form the necessary intention aforesaid. The petitioner for divorce bears the burden of proving those elements in the two spouses respectively."

It is, therefore, evident that in cases involving simple malicious desertion, the factum of desertion is substantiated when the spouse accused of malicious desertion deliberately and without sufficient cause, physically leaves the matrimonial home or ceases cohabitation against the wishes of the deserted spouse.

The Defendant contended that the Plaintiff failed to establish that she left the matrimonial home in Seychelles as they both left Seychelles jointly and arrived together in Sri Lanka in October 2011. In application of the above-established principles to the instant case, however, the Defendant's choice to depart with her parents in October 2011, and thereby cease co-habitation with the Plaintiff, constitutes the initial requirement, i.e., the factum of desertion, requisite to establishing malicious desertion. On the face of the evidence presented to the District Court, in my view, the Plaintiff substantiates his claim that this separation was against his consent and willingness. Furthermore, it is important to note that between the period from October 2011 to the institution of legal proceedings, and up until present day, the Plaintiff and the Defendant have not lived together.

Animus Deserendi

In Perera v Gajaweera (2005 1 SLR 103), Wimalachandra J observed that establishing malicious desertion necessitates demonstrating:

> "...not only the factum of the desertion but also the required animus to repudiate the marital relationship."

In Silva v Missinona (26 NLR 113), Bertram CJ defined this concept as follows:

> "Deliberate and unconscientious, definite, and final repudiation of the obligations of the marriage state."

He further added that the desertion must be "sine animo revertendi", signifying that the deserting spouse must harbour no intention to resume the marriage.

Similarly, in the cases Goonerwardene v Wickremensinghe (34 NLR 5), Garvin SPJ opines:

> "It must be of such a character as would justify the inference that the spouse who is alleged to have deserted the other did so deliberately and with the intention of repudiating the marriage state."

In English case of Buchler v Buchler [1947 1 AER 319], Lord Greene MR stated:

> "In the case of actual desertion the mere act of one spouse in leaving the matrimonial home will in general make the inference an easy one."

Consequently, the mere act of the Defendant discontinuing cohabitation serves as a sufficient foundation for inferring animus deserendi.

The Defendant's intention to desert the Plaintiff is further underscored by her refusal to recommence the marital life at the Plaintiff's parental house, citing mistreatment by the Plaintiff's family, which has led to her reluctance to reside in a place where she perceives a threat of confinement.

As articulated by Sinha J in Bipinchandra Jaisinghbhai Shah vs. Prabhavati (supra), a spouse charged with simple malicious desertion may counter such charge by establishing that he or she was justified in leaving the marital home or ceasing cohabitation because he or she was given sufficient cause to do so by the other spouse.

Dalton ACJ reflects this limitation in Ramalingam v Ramalingam (35 NLR 174), where the learned judge declared:

> "If a woman left her husband finally, against his will, and without legal justification, her desertion would in law be malicious."

H.N.G Fernando J, as he was then, employed similar views in in Ariyapala v Ariyapala (65 NLR 453 at p.454).

Counsel for the Defendant invoked the case of Ramalingam v Ramalingam (supra) to establish that the Defendant possessed lawful justification for not residing in the Plaintiff's parental home due to fears of potential confinement.

The learned High Court Judges make reference to these averments in their verdict and state that by the Defendant's own testimony, where she alleges that the Plaintiff's sister endeavoured to confine her within the matrimonial residence in Seychelles to prevent her from causing disruptions at the Plaintiff's workplace (page 85 of the Appeal Brief marked "X"), confirms that such incidents caused by the Defendant have occurred in the past. The learned High Court Judges further state that no police report or similar corroborative evidence attesting to such an incident involving the Plaintiff's sister was presented by the Defendant.

I am inclined to concur with the learned High Court Judges' inferences and, consequently, hold that the Defendant's desertion of the Plaintiff lacks legal justification and is, therefore, characterized by malicious intent.

Another facet to consider is the Plaintiff's averments that he entreated the Defendant to resume marital life before initiating legal proceedings in this Court.

In Muthukumarasamy vs. Parameshwary (78 NLR 488) Sharvananda J, as he then was, stated:

> "Termination of desertion can take place by a supervening animus revertendi coupled with a bona fide approach to the deserted spouse with a view to resumption of life together... The refusal of a defendant's bona fide offer to return which the plaintiff had no right to refuse converted the plaintiff into the deserting party and the plaintiff thereafter became the deserter and rendered himself guilty of malicious desertion."

Similar views were taken in Canekaratne v Canekaratne (66 NLR 380) by Sasoni J:

> "It should also be remembered that a spouse may offer to resume cohabitation after a separation has taken place, but it is for the Court to decide whether the offer is genuine. It is only genuine if there is 'a fixed and settled intention to offer a resumption of marital life under reasonable conditions'; and it will not be a fixed and settled intention if it is a mere 'fluctuating desire to resume cohabitation'. When either spouse has made such an offer, a rejection of it by the other will turn him or her into a deserter."

This was affirmed by Jayawardena J in Gomes v Gomes (supra), where he observed:

"A desertion may end if, before the deserted spouse commences an action praying for a divorce on the ground of malicious desertion, the deserting spouse reconciles and returns to the matrimonial home or resumes cohabitation or makes a bona fide offer to do so. Further, an unreasonable refusal of such an offer by the erstwhile deserted spouse may, in some circumstances, turn the tables and make the erstwhile deserted spouse a deserting spouse."

The learned High Court Judges have referred to the Plaintiff's testimony that he, with the support of his parents, proactively sought the Defendant to resume marital life, which the Defendant allegedly declined. This submission is corroborated by the evidence submitted by the Plaintiff's father. The High Court Judges further referenced the Defendant's assertion that she has always acted with the sole purpose of maintaining marital life with the Plaintiff, yet, the learned Judges observed, she failed to exhibit any concrete positive steps or initiatives post-October 2011 to resume marital life.

In light of these aforementioned facts and circumstances, I discern no valid grounds to take a different view than that of the learned High Court Judges. The Defendant's claims of making multiple offers to recommence marital life do not appear genuine, particularly due to the absence of evidence to corroborate that these offers were made before the Plaintiff instituted legal proceedings.

Therefore, I am inclined to endorse the position taken by the learned High Court Judges, which entails setting aside the District Court's judgment and affirming that, based on the evidence presented before the District Court, the Plaintiff has satisfactorily proven that the Defendant is guilty of malicious desertion.

At this juncture, it is imperative to underscore that I am cognizant of the conventional understanding that marriage is not only a union of two individuals but also an amalgamation of two families and their respective cultural bonds, inevitably intertwined when two individuals enter into matrimony. This perspective finds reflection in the law; the legal framework governing divorce in Sri Lanka, as embodied in the Marriage Registration Ordinance of 1907 and heavily influenced by pre-existing Roman-Dutch and English legal systems, is premised on the notion that marriage is a lifelong commitment that can only be dissolved upon on proof of serious matrimonial fault. This underscores the law's aversion to marital dissolution and its preference for the preservation of conjugal ties, even in the face of life's trials and tribulations.

In Silva v Missonona (supra), Bertram CJ refers to the following principle adopted in the South African case of Gibbon v Gibbon (1 2 E.D.C. 284), per Shippard J:

> "The theory of the Roman-Dutch law appears to have been that divorce should never be granted while there remains a hope of reconciliation."

However, the law and its application must evolve in conjunction with the shifting tides of societal mores and perspectives. Especially when drawing focus upon newer generations, it is hardly a need to say that venerable concepts such as education, financial independence, and gender roles in the context of marriage have transformed since the enactment of the Marriage Registration Ordinance in 1907, influenced partly by the cultures of Western societies. To a large extent, the current law remains unreformed and is, in several notable ways, incompatible with modern notions relating to marriage.

With this in mind, I allude back to Harcourt J's definition of the word "consortium" in Grobbelaar v Havenga (supra). On observation of this instant case, there is an evident absence of an abstraction encompassing companionship, love and affection, among other elements, within the marital relationship between the Plaintiff and the Defendant. Most importantly, I find a palpable absence of hope, replaced by a discernible withdrawal from a state of things amounting to "desertion," as elucidated by Sir Henry Duke (later Lord Merrivale P.), in Pulford vs. Pulford (supra). As stated above, notwithstanding the absence of any reservations in law about cohabitation during divorce proceedings, I do not observe any instances or even genuine attempts at resuming marital life in the period between the institution of this action and the present day.

In fact, there is a striking observation in the Plaintiff's evidence: he testifies that he found the Defendant's behaviour so intolerable that,

> "මට තීරණයක් ගන්න අමාරුයි. මට ඉවසාගන්න බැරි නිසා මම ආවේ. ඊට පස්සේ එයත් එක්ක ගිහින් මගෙන් එයාට කරදරයක් වෙයි කියලා මට බය හිතුනා."

An approximate and unofficial translation of the above reads as follows:

> "Making a decision is challenging for me. I came because I could not be patient any longer. Later, I was afraid that if I went with her, I would cause harm to her."

In the face of such circumstances, I am of the view that this Court is not inclined to mandate cohabitation and the resumption of a marital life upon any man or woman, as the law currently stands, that appears before this Court.

Decision

Finally, I turn to address the question of law to which leave has been granted by the Supreme Court on 16th July 2021, as previously cited.

In response to the question of law, pursuant to the aforementioned facts and circumstances, I answer in the negative in finding that the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court did not misdirect themselves that the evidence led by the Respondent amounts to malicious desertion. The appeal is thereby dismissed.

Appeal Dismissed.

JUDGEMENT

Aluwihare, PC, J,

This is an appeal against a Judgement of the of the Provincial High Court of the Western Province. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 'Plaintiff) instituted an action by Plaint dated 17th September 1997 in the District Court of Colombo against the Defendants in that matter, including the 3rd and 4th Defendant-Petitioners-Appellants (hereinafter 'Defendants'), seeking inter alia a sum of Rs. 1,000,000 as damages. The Plaintiff had also prayed for interest on damages from the date of the Plaint till the date of the Decree as well as legal interest on the aggregate sum awarded as Damages by the Decree, from the date of the Decree till the date of payment (vide 'P 1', the Plaint at p. 228 of the brief).

The learned District Judge pronounced Judgement on the 2nd February 2007, against the Defendants, granting the Plaintiff damages in a sum of Rs. 421,665 together with legal interest until payment in full and costs of suit. The Defendants filed an appeal against this judgement. However, the appeal was dismissed. Acting in terms of the said Judgement, the Defendants deposited in Court a sum of Rs. 421,665. This is evidenced by Journal Entry No. 58 dated 28th February 2011 (at p. 222 of the brief).

Subsequently, by way of Motion dated 7th August 2012, the Plaintiff made an application presenting a Bill of Costs and calculation of interest ('P5' at pages 262 and 264). According to the said calculation, the amounts that the Defendants were required pay was as follows.

- Rs. 344, 367.16 as legal interest from the date of filing the Plaint (17th September 1997) to the date of judgement.
- Rs. 386,390.58 as legal interest from the date of judgement (2nd February 2007) to the date of submission of the disputed Bill of Costs and Calculation of legal interest (15th October 2012).

According to the calculation, a sum of Rs. 730,757.74 was due.

The Defendants objected to the said Bill and calculation of interest by the Statement of Objections dated 3rd April 2013 and took up the position that the court did not award interest to the Plaintiff from the date of filing action up to the date of judgment and the Plaintiff is entitled to interest only from the date of judgement up to the date of the payment of damages awarded by the court. The matter was fixed for inquiry by way of written submissions and on the 23rd January 2014, the learned Additional District Judge made Order that the Plaintiff is entitled to a sum of Rs. 47,750 as the costs of suit, and a sum of Rs. 730,757.74 as legal interest and directed the Registrar of the District Court to act in terms of the said Order (vide 'P6' at p. 287 of the Brief).

Thereafter, the Defendants sought Leave to Appeal and Leave to Appeal was granted by the Civil Appellate High Court on the question of whether the Order of the learned Additional District Judge (P6) was in conformity with the Judgement of the learned District judge who granted relief to the Plaintiff. The learned Judges of the High Court delivered judgement on the 10th October 2014 dismissing the Defendant's appeal. Aggrieved by the said judgement, the Defendants sought leave to appeal from this Court and upon the same being supported this Court granted Leave to Appeal on the following questions of Law: -

(a) Have the learned Judges of the High Court misinterpreted the provisions of Section 192 of the Civil Procedure Code in holding that although not specifically mentioned in the judgement, the Plaintiff is entitled to recover legal interest from the date of the action?

(b) Did the learned Judges of the High Court err in failing to take into consideration that the learned Additional District Judge had awarded legal interest for a period after the 28th February 2011 notwithstanding that the sum awarded as damages had been released to the Plaintiff on the said date?

(c) In any event, is the Plaintiff not entitled to move Court to take steps with regard to the recovery of legal interest without tendering a Decree to be filed of record?

The questions of law which merit determination by the Court are addressed below.

(a) Have the learned Judges of the High Court misinterpreted the provisions of Section 192 of the Civil Procedure Code in holding that, although not specifically mentioned in the judgement, the Plaintiff is entitled to recover legal interest from the date of the action?

Relief provided by the Learned Trial Judge

Since the corpus of this appeal directly relates to the relief granted by the learned Trial Judge, it is prudent at this stage to conclusively clarify the relief which was provided by the Judge. The relevant issues, and the answers provided by the Judge to those issues are as follows:

Issue No. 7 as framed by the Plaintiff:

"විසඳිය යුතු ප්‍රශ්න පැමිණිල්ලේ වාසියට විසඳෙ නම් පැමිණිල්ලේ ඉල්ලා ඇති සහන ලබා ගැනීමට පැමිනිලිකරුට හිමිකම් තිබේද?"

The Learned Trial Judge had answered Issue No. 7 as follows;
"තීන්දුවේ සඳහන් පරිදි ලබා ගත හැකිය."

The Trial Judge, instead of merely answering issue number 7 in the affirmative, has proceeded to answer it in a detailed manner indicating that relief should be granted according to his judgement ['P2'].

In terms of the Judgement, the relief that was granted is as follows:
"පැමිනිලිකරුට අහිමි වූ ආදයම රු 120,000/- ක මුදලක්ද, වෛද්‍යය වියදම් රු 1,665/- ක මුදලක්ද සහ අත්විඳීමට සිදු වූ අපහසුතා සහ ශරීරික වේදනා සඳහා 300,000 මුදලක්ද වශයෙන් රු 421,665/- මුදල් නඩු ගාස්තුද එම මුදල ගෙවන තෙක් නෛතික පොලියද 3, 4 විත්තිකරුවන්ගෙන් එක්ව හ වෙන් වෙන්ම අය කර ගැනීමට අයිතිවාසිකම් ඇති බවට තීන්දු කරමි." [emphasis added]

The phrase 'එම මුදල ගෙවන තෙක් නෛතික පොලියද', followed by or preceded by no other reference to legal interest ('නෛතික පොලිය') clearly indicates that the trial judge only awarded legal interest from the date of the decree, till the date of payment of decreed amount. Therefore, when the trial judge stated that relief is granted in favour of the Plaintiff as stated in the judgment ('තීන්දුවේ සඳහන් පරිදි ලබා ගත හැකිය'), there can be no doubt or contention that he only intended to award legal interest from the date of decree, till the date of payment of the decreed amount.

The question which remains is whether the Additional District Judge and the learned judges of the Provincial High Court erred in determining that the Plaintiff was owed legal interest from the date of filing of the Plaint.

Was the denial of legal interest from the date of suit an oversight/error on the part of the Trial Judge?

The learned Judges of the Provincial High Court in their Judgement dated 10th October 2014 ('P8') provides limited reasoning for their position that the Plaintiff is entitled to legal interest from the date of instituting action. In the four-paragraph Judgement of the learned Judges of the High Court, consideration has only been adverted to Section 192(1) of the Civil Procedure Code and the case of Colombo Municipal Council v. Junkeer 71 NLR 85.

Despite arriving at the conclusion that Section 192 permits the court to award interest from the date of instituting action, and that the Judgement of the Trial Judge 'does not specifically mention' that the Plaintiff is entitled to recover legal interest from the date of action, the learned Judges of the High Court held that the Plaintiffs were entitled to recover legal interest from the date of action, affirming the Order of the additional District Judge.

Section 192(1) states that;
"When the action is for a sum of money due to the plaintiff, the court may, in the decree order interest according to the rate agreed on between the parties by the instrument sued on, or in the absence of any such agreement at the rate of twelve per centum per annum to be paid on the principal sum adjudged from the date of the action to the date of the decree, in addition to any interest adjudged on such principal sum for any period prior to the institution of the action, with further interest at such rate on the aggregate sum so adjudged, from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date as the court thinks fit."

Section 192(3) states that;
"Where such decree is silent with regard to the payment of further interest on such aggregate sum as aforesaid from the date of the decree to the date of payment or other earlier date, the court shall be deemed to have refused such interest, and a separate action therefor shall not lie."

It would be correct to comprehensively interpret Section 192 as follows:
The court retains the discretion to award legal interest. Where the court decides to award legal interest, it may order that such interest be paid on the principal sum adjudged from the date of the action to the date of the decree, in addition to any interest to be paid for a period prior to the institution of the action, along with further interest to be paid from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date. However, where the decree is silent on the payment of further interest to be paid from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to any earlier date, the court is deemed to have refused such further interest.

Accordingly, the court may award interest for three periods:

i. Interest for a period prior to filing of suit
ii. Interest from the date of institution of the action to the date of decree (pendency)
iii. Interest from the date of decree till payment/earlier specified date.

The principal contention of the Defendants relates to the Additional District Judge's failure to award of interest from the date of institution of the action. In other words, the principal point of divergence between the Judgement of the learned Trial judge and the subsequent Order of the learned Additional District Judge is 'Interest pendente lite' up to the date of suit.

At the outset, it must be understood that legal interest is not a penalty, but is the normal accretion on capital, calculated for a particular period (vide Alok Shanker Pandey vs Union of India & Others [2007] AIR SC 1198). Per Justice Markandey Katju at p. 1199; "For example if A had to pay B a certain amount, say 10 years ago, but he offers that amount to him today, then he has pocketed the interest on the principal amount. Had A paid that amount to B 10 years ago, B would have invested that amount somewhere and earned interest thereon, but instead of that A has kept that amount with himself and earned interest on it for this period. Hence equity demands that A should not only pay back the principal amount but also the interest thereon to B."

It appears to me that the debate on whether interest pedente lite must be awarded in suits for unliquidated damages is most strongly evident in Indian Jurisprudence. In fact, in The Colombo Municipal Council v. Junkeer [Supra] a case cited and relied on by both the Defendants and the Plaintiff in their submissions), the court referred to the contrasting opinions held by Indian Courts on the matter.

It was observed that a series of cases including Crewdson v. Ganesh Das 1(1920) AIR (Cal.) and Ratanlal v. Brijmohan (1931) AIR (Bom.), the Courts held the opinion that interest for damages does not run from the date of suit because the obligation or compensation to be paid has not yet been reduced to a definite sum of money, and interest accrues to the principle sum decreed to be damages from the date of decree.

In Ramalingam v. Gokuldas Madavji & Co. (1926) AIB (Mad.), the court held the opinion that denying the Plaintiff interest from the date of the Plaint is akin to stating that "the Plaintiff must be deprived of the fruits of his success to the extent of losing interest from day to day during the pendency of his suit on the sum that he was entitled to at the date of his going to Court". Twenty years later, in Anandram Mangturam v. Bholaram Tanumal 1 (1946) AIR (Bom.), it was held, interpreting Section 34 of the Indian Civil Procedure Code, that "the matter is clear beyond any doubt because under section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code it is entirely a matter for the Court's discretion whether to award interest from the date of the filing of the suit where the decree is for the payment of money."

S. 34(1) of the Indian Civil Procedure Code is almost identical to the Section. 192(1) of our Civil Procedure Code, with the latter perhaps deriving inspiration for its form from the former. Section 34(1) of the Indian Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 states:
"Where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money, the Court may, in the decree, order interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable to be paid on the principal sum adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, in addition to any interest adjudged on such principal sum for any period prior to the institution of the suit, with further interest at such rate not exceeding six per cent, per annum as the Court deems reasonable on such principal sum from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit."

The only difference between the two sections appears to be that the Indian Code proscribes discretion where the court decrees a 'payment of money', whereas the Sri Lankan Code proscribes permissible discretion 'when the action is for a sum of money due to the plaintiff'.

The Plaintiff cited Justice Spencer's dictum in Ramalingum v. Gokuldas Madavji (1926) 51 MLJ 243, which was referred to in The Colombo Municipal Council v. Junkeer [Supra] to argue that interest should be granted from the date of suit as of an entitlement. When considering this holding, one must bear in mind that while it may be applicable to interest on capital sums that one may be entitled to at the time at which the suit is brought due to contractual agreements, it may not necessarily be applicable to cases such as the instant, where no capital sum as damages or entitlement is determined at the time of suit.

It must also be noted that despite citing the holding in Ramalingam's case [supra], Fernando, J, in Colombo Municipal Council v. Junkeer [supra], went onto hold that "The Court is not bound to give interest; for, it must be noted, that the section gives a discretion to give or refuse interest; and whatever the nature of the claim is, whether it is a claim to a fixed sum of money or to unliquidated damages, the Court is bound in every case to exercise a sound discretion. The mere fact that the decree is for payment of damages cannot by itself be a bar to the plaintiff being awarded interest." and also that "Notwithstanding- the difference in the language employed in section 192 of our Code as compared with section 34 of the Indian Code, we do not consider that our section limits the power of the court to award interest to cases seeking decrees in respect of liquidated debts." [at p. 87]. The Court then answered the question whether interest should not have been awarded from the date of the action in that case in the negative.

Although I have alluded to the position of our jurisprudence relating to the province of interest pedente lite to enrich my reasoning, I am conscious that in the present appeal, the Court must not engage in a deduction or discernment as to whether the learned District Judge had reasonably exercised his discretion. Such an inquiry is not within the ambit of this appeal. This appeal only requires the Court to determine whether the learned District Judge bore a discretion to refuse legal interest from the date of the action, and whether the Judge's silence on the matter is to be interpreted as refusal of such interest.

Furthermore, looking beyond stare decisis, I observe that it is academically understood that where a decree is silent regarding any further legal interest (any legal interest beyond that which is already expressly awarded), the decree must be interpreted to have denied such further interest.

According to K.D.P Wickremasinghe,
"If the decree is silent as to further interest, the Court is deemed to have refused such interest." [Civil Procedure Code in Ceylon at page 227].

Therefore, although it is understood that legal interest may be provided, and in most cases, is provided from the date of the institution of the action, as per Section 192(1) of the CPC, Judges are not mandatorily obligated to grant such relief. The drafters of Section 192(1), being conscious of the myriad of considerations before the Judge, bestows upon the Judge, a discretion in the matter.

In this respect, it was argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that generally, if the District Court decides to hold in favour of the Plaintiff, relief prayed by that Plaintiff in the Plaint is granted, and if in some case, the Court wishes to vary such relief prayed and only grant some relief and not the rest, then what the Plaintiff would be entitled to is relief that is specifically referred to in the judgement. In my view, this is precisely what the learned District Judge had done when he said that relief is granted "තීන්දුවේ සඳහන් පරිදි" [in the manner specified in the judgement].

It is perplexing that the Plaintiff would not have discovered that legal interest had not been awarded from the date of the plaint, and then canvassed that ground before the Additional District Judge before filing a Bill of Costs claiming interest from the date of the plaint. If the Plaintiff wished to impugn the judgement of the learned trial judge, by canvassing the opinion that legal interest should have been granted from the date of suit to the date of decree, in addition to the legal interest granted from the date of decree till the date of payment, the Plaintiff ought to have resorted to the recourse provided by the law. Instead, at a subsequent date, after the Defendants had already deposited damages per the judgement, the Plaintiff filed a Bill of Costs, and the calculation of legal interest therein was not in conformity with the judgement.

Regrettably, the learned Additional District Judge, operating under the assumption that he could, by another Order remedy the purported defect in the Judgement of the learned Trial Judge without expressly addressing such defect as a question of law, ordered that legal interest must be paid per a sum calculated from the date the action was instituted. Thereafter, the learned Judges of the High Court affirmed the said calculation of the Additional District Judge.

That judges retain discretion over the awarding of relief for damages indeterminate at the date of filing the action is not a position unique to our jurisdiction. The examination of Indian Jurisprudence and the Civil Procedure Laws of India affirms that a Judge retains discretion regarding the award of legal interest from and till whichever stage of the action or decree.

Therefore, for all the reasons elucidated above, I answer this question of law [(a)] in the positive. That is to say that, yes, the learned Judges of the High Court misinterpreted the provisions of Section 192 of the Civil Procedure Code in holding that although not specifically mentioned in the judgement, the Plaintiff is entitled to recover legal interest from the date of the action.

(b) Did the learned Judges of the High Court err in failing to take into consideration that the learned Additional District Judge had awarded legal interest for a period after the 28th February 2011 notwithstanding that the sum awarded as damages had been released to the Plaintiff on the said date?

In the Calculation of Legal Interest submitted with the Bill of Costs before the Additional District Judge, legal interest has been calculated up to 05.10.2012. It is acknowledged by the learned Judges of the High Court that the decreed amount was promptly deposited by the Defendants on 28.02.2011. This is evidenced by Journal Entry No. 58 of the brief. However, the learned Judges of the High Court affirmed the Order of the Additional District Judge which orders payment of legal interest up to 05.10.2012.

There can be no rational argument that the Plaintiff was entitled to legal interest beyond the date of payment of damages. Such a position is anathema to the concept of Legal Interest. Therefore, I answer this question [(b)] too in the affirmative. The learned Judges of the High Court erred in failing to consider that the learned Additional District Judge had awarded legal interest for a period after the 28th February 2011 notwithstanding that the sum awarded as damages had been released to the Plaintiff on the said date.

For the reasons setout above, the Appeal is allowed. The Plaintiff is only entitled to legal interest from the date of the judgement of the trial judge (2nd February 2007) to the date wherein the Defendants deposited the sum awarded as damages to the Plaintiff (28th February 2011).

Accordingly, the order of the learned Additional District Judge dated 23rd January 2014 and the judgement of the High Court of Civil Appeals dated 10th October 2014 are set aside. The learned District Judge is directed to calculate the component of interest payable to the Plaintiff as stipulated in the judgement of the learned District judge dated 2nd February 2007 and in line with the views expressed in this judgment.

The respective parties to bear the costs of this case.
Appeal allowed.

Dr. Sunil Cooray with Ms. Sudarshani Cooray for the Defendant-Appellant-Respondent.

ARGUED &
DECIDED ON: 20th September 2023

P. PADMAN SURASENA, J

Court heard the submissions of the learned President's Counsel for the substituted Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant and also the submissions of the learned Counsel for the substituted 3rd Defendant-Appellant-Respondent and concluded the argument of the case.

During the course of the hearing, it was brought to the notice of Court that the questions of law set out in Paragraph 31 (b), (c), (f) and (g) of the petition dated 06-12-2015, in respect of which this court had granted Leave to Appeal are not clear enough to proceed with the argument on the facts and circumstances prevailing in this case. This fact was admitted by the learned Counsel for both parties who urged the Court to reframe afresh, questions of law upon which the argument could effectively proceed. Accordingly, the Court decided that the question of law upon which the argument should proceed to be as follows.

"Whether the 3rd Defendant in the present partition action has prescribed to the corpus of the instant partition action?

Learned Counsel for both parties agree that the corpus relevant to the instant case is Lot 2 in Plan No. 1730 dated 21-01-1962 which is the Final Plan in the Partition Action bearing No. DC Tangalle P 376.

By virtue of the said Final Partition Decree (dated 19-03-1962) in DC Tangalle case No. P 376, four persons namely; the Plaintiff Jasin Bastian Arachchige Chandrawathie; the 1st Defendant

Jasin Bastian Arachchige Karunawathie; the 2nd Defendant Jasin Bastian Arachchige Gunawathie; and another person by the name of Jasin Bastian Arachchige Betin Nona; had become entitled to said Lot 2 in the Final Plan No. 1730 dated 21-01-1962.

Subsequently said Jasin Bastian Arachchige Betin Nona by virtue of Deed No. 2051 dated 16-12-1975, had transferred her entitlement (i.e., ¼ share of Lot 02) to the 3rd Defendant Vidana Pathiranage Sunny.

It was on the above basis that the Plaintiff in this case had filed the Plaint against the afore-mentioned three Defendants praying for an order of Court to partition the corpus relevant to this case amongst them in equal shares.

Let me now refer to Lot No. 3 in that plan. It must be noted that Lot 2 and Lot 3 are adjoining lots in the Final Plan No. 1730 dated 21-01-1962. By virtue of the same Partition Decree in DC Tangalle case No. P 376, Lot No. 3 in that plan had been allotted in DC Tangalle case No. P 376, to the 3rd Defendant of the present action and to another. Thus, the 3rd Defendant had become a co-owner of Lot 3 since 1963 (by virtue of the said Partition Decree in DC Tangalle case No. P 376) and a co-owner of Lot 2 since 1975 (by virtue of Deed No. 2051 dated 16-12-1975).

Subsequent to the partition decree being entered, the Fiscal is reported to have handed over the possession of Lot 2 to the afore-mentioned four persons who became entitled to that Lot in 1963 (i.e., by virtue of the Partition Decree in DC Tangalle case No. P 376). Thus, by the year 1963, each of those persons who became entitled to Lot 2 by virtue of the partition decree in DC. Tangalle Case No. P 376 had become entitled to shares of Lot 2.

The 3rd Defendant (Vidana Pathiranage Sunny) in the present action in his Statement of Claim had taken up the position that he had prescribed to the corpus (Lot 2) in the instant Partition Action. However, the learned District Judge by her judgment dated 06-03-2012 had ordered the partition of the corpus.

Being aggrieved by the said Judgment pronounced by the District Court, the 3rd Defendant had appealed to the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals holden at Tangalle. The Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals by its judgment dated 29-10-2015 had concluded that the 3rd Defendant has prescribed to the corpus and it was on that basis that the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals had proceeded to direct that the action of the Plaintiff be dismissed. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant in this appeal has challenged the said judgment pronounced by the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals.

As has already been mentioned above, although this Court had earlier granted Leave to Appeal in respect of four questions of law, in the course of the hearing, with the concurrence of the learned Counsel for both parties, Court has now formulated the question as to whether the 3rd Defendant in the present partition action has prescribed to the corpus of the instant partition action. Thus, that is the sole question we have to decide in this case.

At the outset, it must be noted that the Plaintiff had only led the evidence of one witness. The said witness is the daughter of the original Plaintiff who now stands as the substituted Plaintiff.

From the evidence adduced in this case, it is not the case of the Plaintiff that they had ever been in possession of the corpus of this action. To the contrary, the witnesses for the Plaintiff under cross examination has admitted that neither she nor her mother was permitted to enter into the corpus and indeed were prevented by the 3rd Defendant since March 1963. She also has admitted that her mother (the original Plaintiff) had attempted to take the possession of the corpus from the 3rd Defendant through some previous litigations. Therefore, it is clear that the Plaintiff has never been in possession of this land since 1963. This is after the Fiscal had handed over the possession of this land to the four persons who became entitled to that land in 1963 by virtue of the Partition Decree in DC Tangalle case No. P 376.

Learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff relied on an averment in the answer filed in a different case (Case No. L/1189) by the 3rd Defendant in the instant case. It transpired during the hearing that the original plaintiff Chandrawathi had executed a lease for three years in favour of Thanthirige John in respect of the corpus of this case and it was said Thanthirige John who had filed the afore-said case No. L/1189 against the 3rd Defendant seeking to recover the possession of the corpus of the present action in his capacity as the lessee. According to the Paragraph 3 of the Plaint of Thanthirige John in case No. L/1189, this Deed of Lease No. 10518 had been executed on 29-10-1963.
The following averment No. 3) could be found in the afore-said answer filed in that case (Case No. L/ 1189) by the 3rd Defendant in the instant case.

> "answering Paragraph 3 of the plaint the Defendant denies that Chandrawathi referred to therein has any right to lease both lots 1 and 2 as she is entitled to

> 1/4th share of lot 2 only and without paying the sum of Rs. 88 due to this Defendant and his wife as compensation in partition case No. P/376 of this Court."

Mr. W. Dayaratne, PC for the Plaintiff advanced the argument that the above averment No. 3 in Case No. L/ 1189, amounts to an admission of ownership of the Plaintiff made by the 3rd Defendant.

I observe that the learned District Judge had concluded that the 3rd Defendant had maintained an uninterrupted possession of Lot 2 adverse to the Plaintiff and 1st and 2nd Defendants since 1963. However, the learned District Judge had refused to accept that the 3rd Defendant had prescribed to Lot 2 because the 3rd Defendant had thereafter proceeded to purchase 1/4th share of Lot 2 from Jasin Bastian Arachchige Betin Nona by virtue of Deed No. 2051 dated 16-12-1975.

However, Dr. Sunil Cooray appearing for the 3A Defendant (3A Defendant was substituted in place of the 3rd Defendant upon the demise of the 3rd Defendant during the pendency of the trial in the District Court) relying on the judgment of this Court in Silva Vs. Zoysa[1] argued that any subsequent purchase of title by a party claiming prescription to the same land, does not negate the prescriptive title acquired by such party to such land.

In Silva Vs. Zoysa, both the learned Judges who heard the case had pronounced two separate judgments. However, both the learned Judges had come to the same conclusion. Thus, I would reproduce below, one excerpt each from both the said judgments.
Macdonell C.J. in that case has held as follows,

> This, it seems to me, would be the inference to be drawn from the conveyance of September 9, 1925, even if it stood alone. But it does not; there was the other conveyance which the notary drew but which remained unexecuted because of Sahabandu's departure. It was, then, a conveyance that was to be executed by him at the instance of the second defendant. Then it is a warrantable inference that it was a conveyance making over to the second defendant the legal estate in the land which it was at last in Sahabandu's power to make over now that he had got a conveyance of it from the administratrix vendor. Then every detail in the "act" of the second defendant in regard to these two conveyances is referable to the sale of September, 1916, and to the title the second defendant acquired thereby "adverse to and independent of that of the administratrix vendor and that of Sahabandu; it was an "act" to perfect his own "existing right", and if so it cannot well have been an "acknowledgement of a right existing in some other person". Then it was no "interruption" of his possession of the land in dispute which had commenced some time in 1916. As no other "interruption" has been suggested, that possession matured into a prescriptive title in favour of the second defendant some time in 1926, that is to say, over two years before the conveyance from Sahabandu of June 13, 1929, under which the first defendant claims. The second defendant then has made good his title to the land in dispute, and the plaintiff, his lessee, is entitled to be restored to possession under the lease.

In the same case, Garvin S.P.J. in his judgment has stated as follows,

The argument, as I understand it, is that when the second defendant caused the execution of the deed by the administratrix in Sahabandu's favour he did an act acknowledging the "right" of Sahabandu within the meaning of section 3 of Ordinance No. 22 of 1871.

The words in parenthesis in section 3 - "that is to say, a possession unaccompanied by payment of rent or produce, or performance of service or duty, or by any other act by the possessor, from which an acknowledgment of a right existing in another person can fairly and naturally be inferred" have been held to be a definition of "adverse possession". The phrase "by any other act" must I think be read ejusdem generis with "payment of rent or produce or performance of service or duty" and as meaning an act which indicates that the possession is not adverse to but is acknowledged to be subordinate to the right of another to possession of the land. What the second defendant did was to take a step with a view to gathering into his hands the legal title from persons who on the facts proved in this case were under a legal obligation to vest in him the title to the land of which he was in possession and claimed to be in possession as of right. It was not an act done in acknowledgment of any right in them or either of them to the possession of this land but an assertion of his right to be clothed with the legal title as well.

This principle was followed by this Court in Mallika Achchillage Ranhamy Vs. Wellera Achchillage Singha Appuhamy.[2]

In any case, when a person through an overt act claims a possession adverse to its owner, the admission of the ownership at some point of time by the party who is maintaining such adverse possession does not dilute the quality of either the overt act or the possession adverse to its owner if such party had fulfilled the necessary requirements set out in law namely section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance to establish his or her prescriptive title.

As far as the afore-said averment in Paragraph 3 of the answer filed in case No. L/1189 by the 3rd Defendant is concerned, it must be borne in mind that it is an averment in the answer filed in a different case to state that Chandrawathi was entitled to ¼ share of Lot 2 as at 07-11-1966 which is the date of the said answer. On the other hand, the partition decree giving ¼ share of Lot 2 to Chandrawathi coupled with the fact of handing over the possession by fiscal in January 1963, there is no dispute that the plaintiffs became entitled to Lot 2 as at that date. The 3rd Defendant had commenced his possession adverse to the plaintiffs in March 1963. I observe that the Plaintiff had filed the plaint of the instant action on 23-07-1980. Thus, by the time the Plaintiff had filed the plaint in the instant action, the 3rd Defendant had completed his adverse uninterrupted possession for more than 10 years. Similarly, by the time the Plaintiff had thereafter proceeded to purchase 1/4th share of Lot 2 from Jasin Bastian Arachchige Betin Nona by virtue of Deed No. 2051 dated 16-12-1975 also, the 3rd Defendant had completed his adverse uninterrupted possession for more than 10 years. This is because the 3rd Defendant had commenced possessing this land since 1963 which is not in dispute in this case. Thus, in view of these facts, even if the said averment No. 3 in Case No. L/1189 amounts to an admission that Chandrawathi was entitled to ¼ share of Lot 2 by the 3rd Defendant, it makes no difference. It must also be noted that Thanthirige John in Case No. L/1189 in his plaint has stated that it was the 3rd Defendant in the present action who was in possession of Lot 2 at that time. Indeed, said Thanthirige John had filed that action to recover possession of Lot 2 from the 3rd Defendant.

Thus, the above facts show clearly that the learned Judges of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals on the available evidence in this case, had come to the correct conclusion that the 3rd Defendant has prescribed to the corpus of the action. Therefore, the learned Judges of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals had not erred when they directed the dismissal of the action. For the foregoing reasons, I answer the above question of law in the affirmative.

[2] 46 NLR 279.

I proceed to dismiss this appeal without costs.

JUDGEMENT

Aluwihare, PC, J,

The Plaintiffs-Plaintiffs (hereinafter referred to as 'Plaintiffs') preferred this Appeal to this Court by way of Petition dated 7th May 2021. On the 6th August 2021, having heard the submissions of counsel for each party, the court granted leave to appeal. The factual circumstances of this appeal and the questions of law which warrant determination have been set out below.

The Factual Circumstances of this Appeal

As set out in the accepted Offer Letter dated 8th August 2016 (marked 'R1'), addressed to the 2nd Plaintiff-Plaintiffs (hereinafter referred to as '2nd Plaintiff') by the Defendant-Defendant Bank (hereinafter 'Defendant bank'), the following facilities were offered on terms and conditions listed in the letter:

Facility No. 1

A Term Loan of Rs. 20,000,000 to part finance a purchase of property to be repaid in 72 equated monthly instalments with a grace period of 12 months "during which interest to be serviced monthly commencing 30 days from the date of grant of facility. After the grace period, 72 equated monthly instalments of Rs. 422,900/27 each" (vide 'R1'). Security for this facility was to be furnished in the form of a Primary Floating Mortgage Bond of Rs. 90 million over the 'property situated at Andiambalama depicted as Lot No. 2 and 5 in plan No. 6961 in extent of 3R 25.8P.

Facility No. 2

A Term Loan of Rs. 70,000,000 to part finance the construction cost of a hotel to be repaid in 72 equated monthly instalments with a grace period of 12 months "during which interest to be serviced monthly commencing 30 days from the date of grant of facility. After the grace period, 72 equated monthly instalments of Rs. 1,480,150/93 each" (vide 'R1'). Security for this facility too was listed as "same as security of Facility No.1".

A Joint and Several Personal Guarantee from the Directors for Rs. 90 million was given as additional security for both facilities.

The Directors of the 2nd Plaintiff, including the 1st Plaintiff who owned 70% shares of the 2nd Plaintiff company undertook the obligations which flow from the mentioned facilities by signing the Offer letter (marked 'R1'). In pursuance of the accepted offer, the 2nd Plaintiff entered into loan agreements for the two facilities dated 9th August 2016 (marked 'R2' and 'R3'). The Plaintiffs admitted to submitting the following as securities for repayment of the said Loan facilities with interest and charges.

a. the 2nd Plaintiff as the obligor/mortgagor mortgaged with the Defendant Bank, the land described in the 2nd Schedule (Lot 5) to the Plaint by Mortgage Bond No. 298 dated 12th August 2016.
b. the 2nd Plaintiff as obligor and the 1st Plaintiff as the mortgagor mortgaged with the Defendant Bank, the land described in the 1st schedule (Lot 2) to the Plaint by Mortgage Bond No. 300 dated 12th August 2016.

The certified copy of the Loan Ledger of the loan of Rs. 20 million produced as 'R4' notes that, as at 2nd April 2018, a sum of Rs. 20, 278, 983.95 was owed to the Defendant by the 2nd Plaintiff company. The certified copy of the Loan Ledger for the loan of Rs. 70 million produced as 'R5' notes that as at 2nd April 2018, a sum of Rs. 72,495,623.17 was owed to the Defendant by the 2nd Plaintiff company. Accordingly, the Plaintiffs owed the Defendant a total sum of Rs. 92,774,607.12 as at 2nd April 2018.

By two letters of demand dated 11th April 2018 ('R6' and 'R6(a)'), the Defendant Bank demanded that the Plaintiffs provide the said sums, with interest from 3rd April 2018. The letters also note that if the amounts demanded were not paid with interest, the Defendant Bank would take steps under the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 04 of 1990 (hereinafter sometimes referred to as 'the Act') to auction the mortgaged properties.
On 25th April 2018, the Board of Directors of the Defendant Bank resolved to auction the said properties mortgaged to the Bank in order to recover the said sums of Rs. 92,774,607.12 and interest from 3rd April 2018. The said resolution was published in the Government Gazette and in Newspapers in all three languages ('A28(ii)'-'A28(vii)') and also copied to the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs via covering letters dated 13th June 2018 ('R7' and 'A28(i)').

The public auction of the said property was fixed for 16th July 2018. The Defendant published the auction notice in the Government Gazette on 14th June 2018 and in Newspapers in all three languages ('A29(ii)'-'A29(vii)'). The Plaintiffs were also informed of the same by letters dated 26th June 2018 ('A28(i)'-'R8') along with copies of the Gazette Notice and Newspaper publications. By letter dated 29th June 2018 ('R8(b)'), the Plaintiffs agreed to deposit Rs. 4 million on or before 4th July 2018, requesting the Defendants to suspend the auction.

The Defendants claim that they suspended the said auction, acting on the representation and undertaking of the Plaintiffs. It is also submitted that the Plaintiffs did not repay the loans as undertaken by the Defendant. By letter dated 3rd October 2018, the Defendant requested the Plaintiffs to settle monies due the Defendant.

Since the Plaintiffs failed to settle the loans, the public auctions of the properties was, once again fixed for 12th November 2018, and the Defendant published the auction notice in the Government Gazette on 25th January 2019 and in Newspapers in all three languages ('A30(ii)'-'A30(vi)') before the said publications. The Defendant also informed the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs of the scheduled auction by covering letters dated 29th October 2018 along with copies of the Gazette and Newspaper Publications ('R10' and 'A30(i)'). The Defendant claims that this auction was also suspended at the request of the Plaintiffs due to several representations, promises and undertakings of the Plaintiffs to repay the amounts due.

By Offer letter dated 11th December 2018 ('R11'), the Defendant offered to reschedule the repayment contingent upon a deposit of Rs. 700,000 by the Plaintiffs. However, the Plaintiffs had failed to make such a deposit.

Thereafter, the Defendant had requested the Plaintiffs to settle the total arrears by letter dated 26th December 2018 ('R12'), which conveys that if the Plaintiffs fail to do so, or the parties fail to arrive at a settlement, the Defendant will proceed to parate execute the property. Indicating that the arrears was not settled, and no settlement was arrived at, the public auctions of the properties was once again fixed for the third time on the 28th February 2019 and the relevant notice was published in the Government Gazette and Newspapers on 25th January 2019 in all three languages ('A33(i)'-'A33(vii)'). Notice of the above scheduled auction, along with copies of the Gazette and Newspaper notifications was conveyed to the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs with covering letters dated 6th February 2019 ('R13', 'A33(i)').

By filing a Plaint dated 21st February 2019 (X1), the Plaintiffs instituted action in the Commercial High Court against the Defendant praying for inter alia:

- a declaration that the resolution adopted by the Board of Directors of the Defendant dated 25th April 2018 was illegal, wrongful and a document which cannot be enforced by law;
- a declaration that the Defendant does not have any right to adopt a consolidated resolution to auction for two separate properties stated in the Mortgage Bonds marked 'A35' and 'A36' (referred to above);
- a declaration that no right is devolved based on the above Mortgage Bonds.

The Plaintiffs also sought as interim relief:

- an enjoining order preventing the Defendant and its agents from selling the properties sought to be auctioned by the resolution (A28(ii)) and inter alia engaging in further activities based on the notices of sale of the properties until the determination of the interim injunction;

- an interim injunction preventing the Defendant and its agents from selling the properties sought to be auctioned by the resolution (A28(ii)) and inter alia engaging in further activities based on the notices of sale of the properties until the final determination of the action.

Pursuant to this action, the Commercial High Court issued an enjoining order as prayed for by the Plaintiffs. Due to the enjoining order, the auction which was fixed for 28th February 2019 was suspended. Thereafter, on 17th July 2019, the Defendant filed a Statement of Objections (X3). Subsequent to inquiry carried out by written submissions, the learned High Court Judge delivered an Order (X6) dated 21st April 2021 vacating the enjoining order and dismissing the application of the Plaintiffs for an interim injunction.

Being aggrieved by the said order, the Plaintiffs invoked the appellate jurisdiction of this court urging that the said order is contrary to law.

On the 6th of August 2021, having heard the submissions of counsel for each party, the court granted leave to proceed on the following questions of law.

(1) Has the learned High Court Judge failed to give his judicial mind to the fact that the impugned resolution was passed for a consolidated sum thereby depriving the Plaintiffs of their right to secure their loan to the maximum limit of each mortgage bond?

(2) Has the learned High Court Judge failed to identify that if the interim order sought is not given, the Defendants are permitted to recover an amount exceeding the amounts pledged by the Mortgage Bonds marked 'A35' and 'A36' to the plaint which is contrary to the provisions of Sections 10,11 and 14 of Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990 as amended?

(3) Has the learned High Court Judge failed to identify that if the interim order sought is not given, it will prejudice Plaintiffs to remedies available in terms of Sections 10 and 11 of Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No.

4 of 1990 (as amended) to deposit the upset price and release the scheduled properties from auction?

Further to granting leave to proceed, this court also issued an interim order dated 6th August 2018 staying the operation of the order of the Commercial High Court dated 21st April 2021 along with an interim order spare in the operation of the above order of the Commercial High Court and an ordered parties to maintain the status quo until final determination of the case.

The Position of the Plaintiffs

The principal position of the Plaintiffs is that although the two plots of land pledged as securities by the two mortgage bonds (A35 and A36) are situated next to each other, they are considered two separate plots of land belonging to two separate parties. The Plaintiffs submitted that the title to such lands were obtained in the following manner, by the following parties:

1. By virtue of Deed of Transfer bearing No. 22 dated 1st May 2016, attested by N.M.R Cooray Notary Public, the 1st Plaintiff seized and possessed the land described as Lot 02 in the Plan bearing No. 6961 dated 4th December 2015 made by K.R.S. Fonseka, Licensed Surveyor, containing in extent 1R.35.80P.
2. By virtue of Deed of Transfer bearing No. 39 dated 12th August 2016, attested by N.M.R Cooray Notary Public, the 2nd Plaintiff seized and possessed the land described as Lot 05 in the Plan bearing No. 6961 dated 4th December 2015 made by K.R.S. Fonseka, Licensed Surveyor, containing in extent 1R.30P.

It is the Plaintiffs' position that their case presents exceptional and extraordinary circumstances and that the Defendant Bank cannot arbitrarily recover the loss borne of default by way of parate execution and that the Defendant must act in a 'commercially reasonable manner' (vide the Plaintiffs' written submission dated 21st September 2021) in compliance with the terms of the respective mortgage bonds and the rules of law.

As final relief, the Plaintiffs seek that the order of the learned High Court Judge (X6) be varied, and an interim injunction be issued to preserve the properties in their possession and title until the Commercial High Court resolves the substantial matters at trial.

The Plaintiffs submitted, relying on His Lordship Chief Justice Sarath N. Silva's judgement in Ramachandra and another v. Hatton National Bank [2006] 1 SLR 393 that as per the process of recovery under the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990, parties' prejudiced by any decision of the Board of Directors has no remedy besides agitating their grievance prior to the auction sale as no notice is provided to the defaulter prior to the passing of the resolution, and that consequently, the process contravenes the principles of natural justice.

The Plaintiffs also complained that by passing a single Resolution in respect of both properties mortgaged to it, the Defendant had failed to set an 'upset price' for each property and had consequently deprived the Plaintiffs the opportunity to release at least one property by paying the amount recoverable. The Plaintiffs submitted that such conduct by the Defendant was 'commercially unreasonable', considering the economic strife caused by Covid-19 and other struggles singular to the Plaintiffs. On the aforementioned grounds, the Plaintiffs prayed for an interim injunction to preserve their possession of the properties and variation of the order of the learned Judge of the Commercial High Court (X6).

The Position of the Defendant Bank

Principally, the Defendant submitted that the Order of the learned High Court Judge is correct in all aspects and should not be set aside or varied. Buttressing this view, the Defendant submitted that the Plaintiffs have failed to establish a prima facie case for the grant of an Interim Injunction (vide Felix Dias Bandaranaike v. State Film Corporation [1981] 2 SLR 287 and DFCC Bank PLC v. Fathima Ruzana Fakurdeen SC Appeal No. 133/2014 S.C Minutes 24.03.2016).

The Defendant submitted that as admitted by both parties, the 2nd Plaintiff failed to repay the facility for Rs. 70 million and the facility for Rs. 20 million, that as at 2nd April 2018, the 2nd Plaintiff was in default of a sum of Rs. 92,774,607.12 and outstanding interest on capital of Rs. 88,639,658.09. Furthermore, the Defendant submitted that above computation accounted for repayments made till 2nd April 2018 as established by the Loan Ledgers marked 'R4' and 'R5'. As per the ledgers, no repayments have been made after 23rd January 2018.

The Defendant then adverted to Section 3 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990. Relying on the Section, the Defendants submitted within the meaning of the Act, where the Plaintiffs failed to fully repay the facilities obtained inclusive of interest, the Plaintiffs were in default. Accordingly, the Defendant submitted that acting under Section 4 of the Act, the Board of Directors adopted the Resolution to parate execute the mortgaged properties.

Furthermore, it was also noted by the Defendant that resorting to parate execution was lawful, correct and necessary to maintain daily commerce which would benefit society at large (vide People's Bank v. Telepix (Pvt) Limited [2010] BLR 235).

Responding the Plaintiffs' contention that the Resolution passed by the Defendant was bad in law as it relates to two separate properties, the Defendant submitted that the Plaintiffs are estopped from raising such contention as the Defendant had on two previous occasions passed resolution to parate execute the same properties and on both occasions, the Plaintiffs did not find fault with the form or contents of the resolution. Instead, on both occasions, the Plaintiffs provided various undertakings to repay the loans. The Defendant submitted that the Plaintiffs have acquiesced to their unfavourable position by engaging the previous resolutions and providing undertakings and are therefore barred from adopting a contrary position. Additionally, the Defendant submitted that the Plaintiffs' position is, in any event, without merit as they have not referred to any provision of law which prohibits the Defendant from passing one resolution in respect of two properties mortgaged for the purposes of two facilities given to the same borrower.

The Defendant also submitted that the principal contract between the 2nd Plaintiff and the Defendant is contained in the Offer Letter where it offered the facilities (R1) and the Loan Agreements (R2 and R3). Further, they submitted that as observed by the learned High Court Judge in the Order (p. 9), as per the loan agreements, both loans were secured by Lot No. 2 and 5 in Plan No. 6961 as joint security for both facilities.

Of final note, is that the Defendant has refuted the Plaintiffs' claim that the 2nd Plaintiff is not a willful defaulter. The Defendant submitted that the Plaintiffs have also defaulted on loans given by Hatton National Bank PLC and DFFC Bank PLC, and two more cases for which parate execution proceedings are ongoing before the Commercial High Court and the District Court of Negombo.

The Questions of Law

(1) Has the learned High Court Judge failed to give his judicial mind to the fact that the impugned resolution was passed for a consolidated sum thereby depriving the Plaintiffs of their right to secure their loan to the maximum limit of each mortgage bond?

Upon perusal of the order of the learned High Court Judge, it is evident that the learned Judge has provided ample consideration to the contentions advanced by the Plaintiffs regarding the security for each loan facility.

Noting that the central relief sought by the Plaintiffs was to an interim injunction to prevent the Defendant from auctioning the properties (at page 6 of X6), the learned Judge declared that the Plaintiffs grievances over not being able to enjoy the security of each loan to the maximum extent of each mortgage bond must be considered in light of the justifications advanced by the Plaintiffs for their failure to make payments owed the Defendant. Moreover, noting that Section 4 of the Act permits the Board of Directors to pass resolution to parate execute any property mortgaged to the Bank as security for a loan defaulted upon in order 'to recover the whole or the unpaid portion of such loan, and interest due thereon…', and that as per the elements in the three consequential tests laid down in Felix Dias Bandaranaike v. State Film Corporation [1981] 2 SLR 287, the learned Judge held that for an interim injunction to be granted, it is incumbent upon the Plaintiffs to establish that they have a strong prima facie case against the Defendants and that they would suffer irreparable and irremediable damage if such relief is not granted.

The learned Judge also had observed (at page 9 of X6) that the Resolution passed by the Defendant clearly set out the outstanding amount due under the two mortgage bonds and the Plaintiffs had the option to make payment in respect of one facility or both and get one or both lands released. The outstanding amounts set out in the Resolution seemingly correspond to the Loan Ledgers R4 and R5. Additionally, no material produced indicates that the Plaintiffs had made any attempt to make any repayments and get at least one property released. If the Plaintiffs wished to have at least one property released, they could have provided an undertaking to the Defendant to that effect such as the previous occasions where the auctions were suspended.

It is also pertinent to note that the learned High Court Judge, citing Yashoda Holdings (Pvt) Ltd. V. People's Bank [1998] 3 SLR 382 and Inglis v. Commonwealth Trading Bank of Australia [1972] 126 CLR 161 correctly observed (at pages 10-11) that the Bank's right to recover loans by the power of sale as mortgagee will not be prevented or interfered with by the court except on exceptional circumstances where it is shown that irremediable damage would be caused without such intervention. The Plaintiffs complaint regarding a single resolution being passed is particularly perplexing when considering that they had found no issue with the single resolution on the previous occasions for the auction of the properties (vide A28(ii)-A28(vii) and A30(ii)-(vi)).

Nothing in the law prevented the Bank from passing a single resolution to recover loans by parate executing two separate properties. The focus of the resolution is the Board's exercise of power over loans owed to them, not the property concerned. The law must be read in a manner which assists expediency while adhering to principles of natural justice, not a device which hampers commerce. The Court is bound to assist expediency, particularly where the legislature has legislated for that exact purpose.

As concluded by the learned High Court Judge, upon perusal of the Loan Agreements (R2 and R3), I too observed that the Plaintiffs have secured the facilities by providing Lots 2 and 5 in Plan No. 696 as joint security. In the portion titled "On the security of", the following is written.
"(1) Primary Floating Mortgage Bond for Rs. 90.0 Mn over the property situated at Andiambalama depicted as Lot No. 2 and 5 in Plan No. 6961 in extent of 3R.25.8P."

Both these agreements are signed and endorsed by Directors of the 2nd Plaintiff and the Plaintiffs have admitted to their contents. This lends credence to the Defendant's position that the Defendant lawfully, and quite appropriately, passed the same and single resolution in respect of both Lot Nos. 2 and 5.

Moreover, this court has on previous occasions too, refused to intervene and prevent Banks from exercising their lawful rights on mere grounds of procedural impropriety. In Amaradasa Liyanage v. Sampath Bank PLC (S.C. Appeal No. 126/2012, S.C Minutes 04.04.2014), this court noted that, (in the said case) the validity of the Certificate of Sale pursuant to a Resolution issued had been challenged on vexatious grounds i.e. upon the Certificate being signed by two members of the Board rather than all members of the board. Noting that this was an irregularity that could be readily remedied without any prejudice to the rights of the borrower, the court refused to overturn the High Court Judgement which was appealed against. Similarly, the validity of a Resolution which merely consolidated amounts and properties mortgaged to it for facilities in common is not a ground upon which the Plaintiffs appeal could succeed.

For these reasons, I am inclined to answer this question in the negative. It is my opinion that the learned Judge of the Commercial High Court has adequately addressed his judicial mind and had arrived at the appropriate conclusion.

(2) Has the learned High Court Judge failed to identify that if the interim order sought is not given, the Defendants are permitted to recover an amount exceeding the amounts pledged by the Mortgage Bonds marked 'A35' and 'A36' to the plaint which is contrary to the provisions of Sections 10, 11 and 14 of Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990 as amended?

It was the Plaintiffs' submission that by passing a single resolution in respect of both properties, the Defendant prevented the Plaintiffs from availing remedies/steps they were entitled to, in terms of Sections 10, 11 and 14 of the Act.

Section 10 of the Act states as follows:

"10. (1) If the amount of the whole of the unpaid portion of the loan, together with interest payable and of the moneys and costs, if any, recoverable by the Board under section 13 is tendered to the Board at any time before the date fixed for the sale, the property shall not be sold, and no further steps shall be taken in pursuance of the resolution under section 4 for the sale of that property.

(2) If the amount of the instalment in respect of which default has been made, and of the moneys and costs, if any, recoverable by the Board under section 13 is tendered to the Board at any time before the date fixed for the sale, the Board may in its discretion direct that the property shall not be sold and that no further steps shall be taken in pursuance of the substitution under section 4 for the sale of that property.

Accordingly, where the Resolution is passed and the borrowers are noticed, Section 10 envisages two options.

1. The borrower could settle the entire outstanding amount to the Bank including the costs recoverable under S. 13. If done so, the Bank cannot auction the property as it has no discretion in the matter.
2. Alternatively, the borrower could settle only the portion of the loan in arrears and costs recoverable. If done so, the Bank retains the discretion to decide whether to proceed with the auction.

Crucially, the Defendants cannot prevent the Plaintiffs from making payments in the manner specified under S. 10(1) or S. 10(2). Therefore, it would be incorrect to state that the Plaintiffs were 'prevented' from availing Section 10 of the Act by the Defendant Bank. For the purposes of commercial expediency, it is my view that Banks would in fact prefer such payments. This is evident in the fact that the Bank suspended previously scheduled auctions on two occasions, upon receiving undertakings from the Plaintiffs. As the Plaintiffs had not made any payments in accordance with the aforementioned provisions of Section 10, the Defendant was not bound to suspend the auction.

Section 11 states that;

"The Board may fix an upset price below which the property shall not be sold to any parson other than the bank to which the property is mortgaged."

As this portion of the judgement directly relates to the third question under which leave to appeal was granted, it will be substantially dealt with later on.

Section 14 states as follows.
"If the mortgaged property is sold, the bank shall, after deducting from the proceeds of the sale the amount due on the mortgage and the moneys and costs recoverable under section 13, pay the balance remaining, if any either to the borrower or any person legally entitled to accept the payment due to the borrowers or where the Board is in doubt as to whom the money should be paid into the District Court of the district in which the mortgage property is situated."

Section 14 contemplates the payment of any balance sum a borrower may be entitled to once the mortgaged property is sold. In my view, the Plaintiffs cannot seek to prevent the sale or auction of mortgaged property by arguing that if sold, it will not be entitled to any remaining balance, as it is evident that sale proceeds may not always yield a balance after deducting from the proceeds of the sale the amount due on the mortgage and the moneys and costs recoverable under section 13.

Therefore, this question of law is also answered in the negative.

(3) Has the learned High Court Judge failed to identify that if the interim order sought is not given, it will prejudice Plaintiffs to remedies available in terms of Sections 10 and 11 of Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act, No. 4 of 1990 (as amended) to deposit the upset price and release the scheduled properties from auction?

As per Section 11 of the Act, the Board of Directors of the Bank to which the property is mortgaged may fix an upset price, an amount lower than which the property shall not be sold to any person other than the bank. Section 17 of the Act provides that where the property auctioned and sold has been purchased on behalf of the Bank, upon the borrower paying the amount due in respect of the loan, the Board of Directors of the Bank may cancel any scheduled resale of the property.

"The Board may fix an upset price below which the property shall not be sold to any parson other than the bank to which the property is mortgaged."

The operative term in Section 11 is the word 'may'. Section 11 bestows a degree of discretion upon the Bank to determine whether an upset price may be fixed to purchase the property to itself, and then, if such intention is indicated, allow the Borrowers to re-purchase the property from the Bank. It is evident that such discretion was vested in the Board of Directors of the Bank because it may have to consider whether purchasing the property in its own name may be in its own interest. As in any purchase, a property does not carry the same relative commercial value to each prospective purchaser. The extent, the structure, its proximity to a metropolis and potential value for resale are all factors which take precedence in the Bank's considerations prior to evaluating the defaulter's concerns. Accordingly, the Plaintiffs cannot claim that the Defendant Bank acted 'unreasonably' when the Defendant Bank has provided ample consideration and opportunity for repayment to the Plaintiffs and then proceeded to act lawfully, within its rights, to ensure that it does not bear any losses due to the Plaintiffs' failure to honour debt obligations.

Therefore, I answer this question too in the negative.

Conclusion

It is clear that the Plaintiffs have sought an interim injunction to prevent the Defendant from parate executing the mortgaged properties. Parate Execution is a right the Defendant is entitled to execute lawfully as per the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act of 1990 as amended.

I wish to reiterate the role of the Court in matters relating to recovery of loans by banks under the Recovery of Loans by Banks Act, as eloquently expressed by Justice Tilakewardena in Amaradasa Liyanage v. Sampath Bank PLC (S.C. Appeal No. 126/2012, S.C Minutes 04.04.2014) at p. 12:

"The ambit and purpose of the Recovery of Loans by Banks Act is, in essence, to recover monies due to the Bank while ensuring that the Bank does not enjoy an unjust enrichment. The provisions of the Act, by allowing parate execution, is to facilitate the process of collecting monies due, without lengthy court proceedings, and to do so in a fair and reasonable manner. This objective should therefore not be hindered by minor procedural irregularities… for such minor irregularities cannot have much impact on the rights of the borrower.

Minor procedural irregularities cannot, further, be grounds upon which actions may be instituted for such actions would only amount to the abuse of the process of Court which must not be allowed."

The plaintiffs cannot seek the intervention of the court to prevent the Defendant Bank from lawfully exercising their rights in terms of a valid contract, without making a case for irreparable and irremediable damage. Courts cannot and should not be treated as the refuge of all defaulting creditors.

The Plaintiffs' appeal to vary the Order of the learned High Court Judge dated 21st April 2021 (X6) and issue an interim injunction is hereby dismissed.

The 1st and 2nd Complainants, presently, 1A and 2A Substituted Complainant-Petitioner-Respondent-Appellants (hereinafter referred to as the Complainant-Appellants) are the landlords of a paddy field known as Helambagahakumbura, in extent 10A, 3R and 4P. Hatharasinghe Arachchige Thomas was the tenant cultivator of 4A, 3R, 4P of the said paddy field and Gimara Dissanayake his wife, (hereinafter referred to as Thomas and Gimara respectively), was the tenant cultivator of the rest of the 6A of paddy land. The said Thomas and Gimara died in December 1992 and early 1993 respectively. After the death of the tenant cultivators, Hatharasinghe Arachchige Ranjith Premalal and Hatharasinghe Arachchige Gnanasiri, the 1st and 2nd Respondent-Respondent-Appellant-Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the 1st and 2nd Respondent-Respondents), the two sons of the said tenant cultivators, continued to cultivate the said paddy land.

Having claimed that the said children of the tenant cultivators, namely the 1st and 2nd Respondent Respondents are not entitled in law to cultivate the said paddy land in question, the Original Complainant-Appellants by application dated 04/02/1994, complained to the 4th Respondent-Respondent-Respondent, the Assistant Commissioner of Agrarian Services (hereinafter referred to as the Assistant Commissioner) to conduct an inquiry in order to evict them from the said paddy land cultivated by the Respondent-Respondents, in terms of Section 14(1) and (2) of the Agrarian Services Act. It must be noted that the 3rd Respondent-Respondent-Appellant Respondent, the sister of the 1st and 2nd Respondent-Respondents, namely Amitha Kanthi (hereinafter referred to as the 3rd Respondent-Respondent) was not a party Respondent to the application made to the Assistant Commissioner by the original Complainants and they did not recognize her as a tenant cultivator or even as an occupier of the subject matter in their application dated 04/02/1994.

The Complainant-Appellants, in their application to the Assistant Commissioner contended that, the 1st Respondent-Respondent, Ranjith Premalal, presently is a tenant cultivator of a paddy field called Kohombagaha Kumbura in extent of 3A and also the permit holder of a paddy field in extent of 2A, belonging to the Mahaweli Authority and that the 2nd Respondent-Respondent, Gnanasiri, is presently a tenant cultivator of a paddy filed called Kohombagaha Kumbura South, in extent 2 1/2A, and the owner cultivator of a paddy filed belonging to the Mahaweli Authority. However, as per P6 and P7, they have placed evidence only to show that Ranjith Premalal was a tenant cultivator of a paddy field called Kohombagaha Kumbura in extent of 3A for 1994 and Gnanasiri was a tenant cultivator for 2A 2R in extent of Kohombagaha Kumbara for 1993.

Having considered the evidence led at the said inquiry, the Assistant Commissioner, by Order dated 25/11/1997 held that, the Respondent-Respondents were cultivating the paddy field at the time their parents, Thomas and Gimara were cultivating the paddy land and also after their death, and therefore have established a connection with the Complainant-Appellants as landlord and tenant cultivators.

Being aggrieved by the said order, the Complainant- Appellants by Petition of Appeal dated 27/03/1998, appealed to the Provincial High Court holden in Hambantota, seeking a writ of certiorari to quash the said Order made by the Assistant Commissioner and a writ of mandamus to obtain possession of the said land. The Provincial High Court having considered the question of devolution of rights of a tenant cultivator, in terms of Section 4(1), 8(1) and 14(1) of the Agrarian Services Act (referred to as the said Act), by Order dated 27/10/1999, held that, only the 1st Respondent-Respondent was entitled to succeed to the tenancy in terms of Section 4(1) of the said Act, and that too, should be limited to in extent 5A. Accordingly, the Court issued a writ of certiorari to quash the Order of the Commissioner dated 25/11/1997 and a writ of mandamus to evict the rest of the Respondent-Respondents from the balance portion of the land in terms of Section 14(2) of the said Act.

Being aggrieved by the said Order, the Respondent-Respondents, by Petition of Appeal dated 09/12/1999, appealed to the Court of Appeal ("the Appellate Court"). The Appellate Court, inter alia, having taken into consideration documents marked 'V5' and 'V6', where it was found that the Complainant-Appellants had accepted the rentals from the Respondent-Respondents as tenant cultivators, held that, the Assistant Commissioner, by Order dated 25/11/1997, has correctly decided the issue before him, and that the learned High Court Judge's order to issue a writ of certiorari and mandamus on the basis that there was an error on the face of the record is erroneous. Accordingly, the Appellate Court, by Order dated 24/02/2012, set aside the Order of the learned High Court Judge dated 21/10/1999 and allowed the Appeal.

The Complainant-Appellants, by its Petition dated 02/04/2012, is before this Court to set aside the said Order dated 24/02/2012, delivered by the Appellate Court.

By Order dated 30/04/2015, this Court granted leave to appeal on the following questions of law.

1. Could the 1st to 3rd Respondents succeed to the tenancy rights of Thomas and Gimara in terms of the provisions in Section 8(1) of the Agrarian Services Act.
2. Is the Judgment of the Court of Appeal contrary to Section 14(1) and (2) of the Agrarian Services Act read together with Section 4 of the same Act.
3. Is there an illegality in the Judgment of the High Court for the Court of Appeal to set aside the same.
4. In the circumstances pleaded, is the Order of the Court of Appeal in terms of law.

In this action, the Complainant-Petitioners made an Application to the Assistant Commissioner under Section 14(1) and (2) of the Act, stating that;

a. they are the owners of a paddy field known as Helambagahakumbura, in extent 10A, 3R and 4P.
b. Thomas and Gimara, were their tenant cultivators, who died in 1992 and early part of 1993 respectively.
c. having no rights to cultivate the said paddy field, the 1st and 2nd Respondent-Respondents, Ranjith Premalal and Gnanasiri, the two sons of the tenant cultivators, continued to cultivate the said paddy field.
d. the said 1st and 2nd Respondent-Respondents are presently cultivating Kohombagaha Kumbura as tenant cultivators and paddy fields belonging to the Mahaweli Authority as a permit holder and as an owner cultivator respectively.
e. to hold an inquiry in terms of Section 14(1) and (2) of the Act, to evict the said Respondent-Respondents from the said paddy field.

In terms of Section 14 of the Act, where a tenant cultivator of any extent of land dies, no person who is not entitled under the said Act, to the rights of such tenant cultivator in respect of such extent, shall occupy and use such extent.

Therefore, as observed earlier, the Complainant-Appellants came before the Assistant Commissioner on the premise that the Respondent-Respondents had no rights under the said Act to cultivate the said paddy field after the death of previous tenant cultivators and sought an order of eviction of the Respondent-Respondents. Therefore, it is pertinent to note that the scope of the Application made by the Complainant-Petitioners before the Assistant Commissioner was to seek an order to evict the Respondent-Respondents from the paddy land in terms of Section 14(2), on the basis that the said persons were not entitled to any tenancy rights of the deceased tenant cultivators.

At the said Inquiry, witness Hewagamage Piyadasa, in cross examination stated that, the Respondent-Respondents cultivated the paddy filed jointly, as representatives of the tenant cultivators. This position was corroborated by the second witness called on behalf of the Complainant-Appellants. The said witnesses appear to be the present Substituted-Complainant-Appellants. All other witnesses stated that they cultivated separated/ different parts within the 10+ Acres.

The Original Complainants appear to have not given evidence before the Assistant Commissioner and as mentioned above, the present Substituted-Complainant-Appellants appear to be the witnesses for the Original Complainant-Appellants before the Assistant Commissioner and the said witnesses have denied that the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Respondent-Respondents were tenant cultivators of the subject matter. Since a relationship of that nature is an arrangement between the Landlord and the tenant cultivator, whether the Substituted Complainant-Appellants as witnesses at that time had any first-hand knowledge to deny that relationship is questionable. Anyhow, while giving evidence on behalf of the Original Complainants, willingness to give 5 acres to the 1st Respondent-Respondent for cultivation has been clearly stated even though the Original Complainants in their application had stated that the Respondent-Respondents have no right to the subject matter.

However, in the contrary, 1st, 2nd and 3rd Respondent-Respondents have given evidence to show that the 1st Respondent-Respondent worked in a separate portion as a tenant cultivator even when their parents were living. The 3rd Respondent cultivated the portion worked by her father, Thomas, and the 2nd Respondent cultivated the portion worked by his mother, Gimara. A Grama Niladari by the name K.M. Nandasena has given evidence to show that the Respondent-Respondents were cultivating the paddy field in question, but he came to know the subject matter only since 1996. However, a tenant cultivator of a nearby paddy field by the name Lionel Liyana Patabendi has given evidence in favour of the Respondent-Respondents stand that they were cultivating even when their parents were among the living.

Having taken into consideration the evidence led before the inquiry, the Assistant Commissioner by Order dated 25/11/1997 stated, that the Respondent-Respondents had cultivated the said paddy field in the life time of the tenant cultivators, Thomas and Gimara, and after their death, continued to work as tenant cultivators thus, creating a landlord tenant relationship. In arriving at this decision, the Assistant Commissioner has taken into consideration, the evidence given by the respective witnesses and the documents marked 'P13' and 'P14', (the two letters written to the 1st Respondent-Respondent relating to nonpayment of rent), and documents marked as 'V5' and 'V6', which established paying of due rent by the Respondent-Respondents and the collection of such proceeds by the landlord, while accepting the Respondent-Respondents as tenant cultivators. The Assistant Commissioner further held that there is no material evidence to show that Ranjith Premalal or Gnanasiri had cultivated any other land in their capacity as tenant cultivator.

It was the submission of the learned Presidents Counsel appearing for the Respondent-Respondents that the Provincial High Court in its Judgment dated 27/10/1999, did not appreciate the significance of documents marked 'V5' and 'V6', and also failed to examine the Application before the Assistant Commissioner in the context of a Complaint filed under Section 14(1) and (2) of the Act, instead, considered Section 8(1) read with Section 4(1) of the Act, and decided that only the 1st Respondent-Respondent, if at all, will be entitled to succeed to the tenancy, and limited the extent of the tenancy to 5 acres.

In arriving at the said conclusion, the High Court declared that, since Thomas died without a nomination, the land cultivated by him devolved on the surviving spouse Gimara and hence she became the tenant cultivator of the entire paddy filed in extent 10 acres. After the death of Gimara her rights devolved on the 1st Respondent being the eldest child of Thomas and Gimara, and in terms of Section 4(1) of the Act, the Court held, "since the maximum extent of paddy land that could be cultivated by a tenant cultivator shall be five acres" the 1st Respondent was the only tenant cultivator to succeed to the tenancy.

The learned High Court Judge was of the view that "there is an error on the Order made on 25/11/1997" and by its Judgment dated 27/10/1999, set aside the Order of the Assistant Commissioner dated 25/11/1997 and accordingly, issued a writ in the nature of certiorari to quash the order of the Commissioner, a writ of mandamus to comply with Section 14, and to evict the Respondent-Respondents from the land, leaving 5 acres for the 1st Respondent.

At this juncture it is pertinent to observe that Section 14(2) contemplates the eviction of occupants who are not entitled under the Act to the rights of the deceased tenant cultivator from the extent referred to in Section 14(1) which means the total extent occupied by the deceased tenant cultivator and not from certain parts of it. On the other hand, Section 4 and its subsections contemplate a different situation where a tenant cultivator, who generally has a right to occupy, cultivate in excess of the prescribed limit by law. Further Section 4 provides for the tenant cultivator's entitlement with the approval of the Commissioner to select the extent he is entitled in law to cultivate and vacate the rest and failing to exercise such entitlement, eviction of the tenant cultivator from the extent which is in excess of the prescribed limit. The said section also gives the landlord a right to cultivate the extent vacated by the tenant cultivator or to appoint one or more tenant cultivators to the extent so vacated by the tenant cultivator.

Thus, Section 14 applies to a situation where the paddy field is occupied by a person who does not have a right to occupy after the death of the tenant cultivator and Section 4 applies to a situation where a tenant cultivator cultivates more than the prescribed limit. The application before the Assistant Commissioner was based on the premise that the Respondent-Respondents had no right to the subject matter.

Even one considers that having the maximum limit in another paddy field under some other landlord is sufficient to apply Section 4 without making the other landlord a party, still the tenant cultivator may have an option to select his extent to cultivate. It appears that the learned High Court Judge failed to appreciate above differences between the situations and circumstances contemplated by said sections.

The learned High Court Judge also failed to appreciate that;

- Even though that Section 8 has some relevance in deciding who is entitled to occupy as possible successors to the deceased tenant cultivators, that the original application was not made to decide the successor or successors to the deceased tenant cultivator.
- As per the proviso to Section 4(1), even the extent cultivated by the spouse too is considered in deciding the ceiling prescribed by law and as such, if there was a cultivation exceeding the 5A limit, it was there from the commencement of tenancy by the parents of the Respondent-Respondents indicating that cultivation of the excess extent by children of the deceased tenant cultivators and acceptance of rent during the life time of the deceased tenant cultivators even for that excess extent and the evidence to say that 1st Respondent-Respondent cultivated a separate portion, favour the view that landlord and tenant cultivator relationship with 1st Respondent-Respondent commenced prior to the death of Respondent-Respondents' parents.
- Even if the payment of rent during the life time of the parents of the Respondent-Respondents were considered as payment of rent as agents of the deceased tenant cultivators, in the above backdrop, accepting of rent from the Respondent Respondents naming them as tenant cultivators by 'V5' and 'V6' supports the view that there was a new relationship of landlord and tenant cultivators between the Original Complainant and the Respondent-Respondents and as such, the landlord cannot use Section 14 to evict his own tenant cultivators. Thus, the allegations contained in the application before the Assistant Commissioner was false/ misconceived.

In its Judgment dated 24/02/2012, the Appellate Court having considered documents marked 'V5' and 'V6' led in evidence before the Assistant Commissioner, held that;

"The above documents clearly demonstrate the falsity of the Complaint of Amarasena and Karunawathie. The said document further demonstrates the fact that Amarasena and Karunawathie had accepted Ranjith Premalal and Gnanasiri as their tenant cultivators."

The Appellate Court approached the Application filed before the Assistant Commissioner, as one, in terms of Section 14(1) and (2) of the Agrarian Services Act. In that context, the Court decided that there was no truth in the Complaint and that the Respondent-Respondents were the tenant cultivators of the paddy land in question. Furthermore, the said findings clearly identified the scope of the Complaint before the Assistant-Commissioner, as formed in terms of Section 14 of the Act. Thus, the Court of Appeal has correctly recognized the application made to the Assistant Commissioner as a false application made under Section 14 to evict the tenant cultivators.

Accordingly, I answer the questions of law on which leave to appeal has been granted to the Complainant-Appellant, (and which has been quoted earlier), as follows –

1. Since it was found that the Respondent-Respondents are tenant cultivators who have their own right to occupy, Section 8(1) of the Act, has no application to the instant Appeal and accordingly, is answered in the negative.

2. The Assistant Commissioner has a duty to decide the correctness of the application. The Court of Appeal correctly found the application was based on a wrong premise and the Respondent-Respondents are Tenant Cultivators on their own as found by the Assistant Commissioner. Thus, this question of law does not arise as correctly found by the Court of Appeal, the application before the Commissioner was based on false footing.
3. Answered in the affirmative as the learned High Court Judge failed in appreciating relevant aspects as explained above.
4. Answered in the affirmative.

For these reasons, this Appeal is dismissed; the Judgment of the Appellate Court is affirmed; and that of the Provincial High Court is set aside. No order for costs.

Samayawardhena, J.

The Plaintiff filed this action against the three Defendants in the District Court of Embilipitiya seeking a declaration of title to the land described in the schedule to the plaint, the ejectment of the Defendants therefrom and damages. The Defendants filed answer seeking the dismissal of the Plaintiff's action and a declaration of title to the land described in the schedule to the answer. After trial, the District Court entered Judgment for the Plaintiff except for damages. The Court of Appeal affirmed the Judgment of the District Court and dismissed the Defendants' appeal. This appeal with leave obtained is from the Judgment of the Court of Appeal.

In summary, this Court granted leave to appeal on two main questions of law: (a) has the Plaintiff established that he is the owner of the land described in the schedule to the plaint? and (b) has the land described in the schedule to the plaint been properly identified? It is common ground that if the answers to both or one of them is in the negative, the Plaintiff's action shall fail. At the argument, learned Counsel for the Defendants placed special emphasis on (b) above, i.e. failure to identify the land.

The land the Plaintiff claims title to, as described in the schedule to the plaint, is as follows:

> The land called and known as Lunulandahena situate at Kolonna in the Kolonnagam Pattu of Kolonna Korale in the District of Ratnapura of the Sabaragamuwa Province bounded on the North by Heendeniya, South by Heena, East by Watumandiya and West by Divulgahawatta in extent of forty Kurunis of Kurakkan sowing area.

Although it is not decisive, according to traditional Sinhala land measurements (as cited in Ratnayake v. Kumarihamy [2002] 1 Sri LR 65 at 81), in general terms, one Laha or Kuruni of Kurakkan sowing area is equivalent to one acre and one Laha or Kuruni of Paddy sowing area is equivalent to ten perches. The Plaintiff claims title to a portion of land in extent of forty Kurunis of Kurakkan sowing area. This means, the Plaintiff in the plaint claims a portion of land in extent of about forty acres.

On what basis does the Plaintiff claim title to this land? He traces title to the land to a decree entered in favour of his father on 11.02.1944 by the Court of Requests of Ratnapura in case No. 1845 marked P5. But the land described in the said decree is not identical to the land described in the schedule to the plaint. The land described in the decree is as follows:

> The land called and known as Lunulandehena situate at Kolonna bounded on the North by Meedeniya [not Heendeniya as claimed by the Plaintiff], South by Heenna, East by Watumandiyahena [not Watumandiya as claimed by the Plaintiff] and West by Divulgahawatta in extent of forty Seers [not forty Kurunis as claimed by the Plaintiff] of Kurakkan sowing area.

Learned Counsel for the Plaintiff submits that "Kuruni" instead of "Seers" in the description of the extent of the land in the plaint is a typographical error and the variance in the northern boundary from "Meedeniya" to "Heendeniya" may be due to the lapse of time. Learned Counsel is silent about the discrepancy in the eastern boundary. In my view, this is not the stage to correct typographical errors or explain discrepancies in the boundaries. Those matters ought to have been addressed at the trial Court and not in the final Court. No explanation on this has been given by the Plaintiff in his evidence before the District Court.

Even assuming "Kuruni" instead of "Seers" is a typographical error, according to the same source cited above, one Kuruni is equivalent to four Seers. Forty Seers then means ten acres.

However, the Plaintiff in his evidence says the land he claims is approximately two acres. This is manifestly irreconcilable. It is difficult to understand how a forty-acre land or ten-acre land reduces to a two-acre land. There is no explanation forthcoming from the Plaintiff.

How does the Plaintiff describe the land in his evidence? The Plaintiff does not properly describe the boundaries of the land. He says the four boundaries are now different from the description of the land in the schedule to the plaint. He speaks of only two boundaries: North by a ditch and East by a road and live fence, which are incompatible with the boundaries given by him in the schedule to the plaint. He also says "towards the Defendants' land lies Watumandiya." (Page 39 of the Brief) This answer lends support to the Defendants' position that the Defendants are in possession of a different land because Watumandiya is the eastern boundary of the Plaintiffs' land as described in the schedule to the plaint.

Making confusion worse confounded, the Plaintiff in the document marked P2 says the land in suit is also known as Watumandiyahena (not Watumandiya). P2 describes the land as Lunulandehena alias Watumandiyahena. It may be recalled that in the decree marked P5, Watumandiyahena is the eastern boundary of Lunulandehena. In other words, Lunulandehena and Watumandiyahena cannot be the same land but are two adjoining lands. Further, according to P3 marked by the Plaintiff, the land is also known as Watumandiya and Maiyaundage Idama. P3 says Lunulandehena alias Watumandiya alias Maiyaundage Idama.

It is also relevant to note that the Plaintiff in his evidence states at one stage that Lunulandehena comprises several lands. (Page 42 of the Brief)

The Defendants claim a different land by name, boundaries and extent. It is described in the schedule to the answer as follows:

> The land called and known as Dunlandagawattahena situate at Kolonna in the Kolonnagam Pattu of Kolonna Korale in the District of Ratnapura of the Sabaragamuwa Province bounded on the North by Ditch and Live Fence, East by Road and Live Fence, South and West by Live Fence in extent of about two acres.

In my view, the Plaintiff in his evidence claimed two acres of land because the land claimed by the Defendants in the answer is a land in extent of about two acres. Also the Plaintiff vaguely gave boundaries such as "North by Ditch; and East by Road and Live Fence" in contradiction to the boundaries given in the plaint because these are the boundaries given by the Defendants in their answer describing the land they claim.

This approach of the Plaintiff is unacceptable in a vindicatory action such as this. The Plaintiff in a vindicatory action cannot come to Court in anticipation of proving his case with the material provided by the Defendant. Nor can the Plaintiff in such an action strengthen his case by highlighting the weaknesses of the Defendant's case. The Defendant in a vindicatory action has no burden to discharge until the Plaintiff proves his title. It is only after proof of the Plaintiff's title that the burden shifts to the Defendant to prove on what right he is in possession of the land.

However, I must add that proof of title without proper identification of the land is futile. Title shall be proved in respect of a properly identified portion of land which forms the subject matter of the dispute. If identification of the corpus fails, the action must fail. There is no need to go into the question of title.

The plaint is not accompanied by a plan to identify the land as required by section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code; nor did the Plaintiff take out a commission to prepare a plan after the institution of the action.

Section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code reads as follows:

> When the claim made in the action is for some specific portion of land, or for some share or interest in a specific portion of land, then the portion of land must be described in the plaint so far as possible by reference to physical metes and bounds, or by reference to a sufficient sketch, map, or plan to be appended to the plaint, and not by name only.

If the land the Plaintiff claims title to cannot be identified on the ground with precision, in the event the Plaintiff succeeds in the action, how can the Fiscal eject the Defendants and hand over possession of the land to the Plaintiff when the Defendants have taken up the position that they are not in possession of the land described in the schedule to the plaint? The delivery of possession in such circumstances is not possible. Vide David v. Gnanawathie [2000] 2 Sri LR 352, Gunasekera v. Punchimenika [2002] 2 Sri LR 43.

It was held in Peeris v. Savunhamy (1951) 54 NLR 207 that a Plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action must not only prove dominium to the land but also the boundaries of it, by evidence admissible in law.

In Hettiarachchi v. Gunapala [2008] 2 Appellate Law Recorder 70 at 79, it was held that if the Plaintiff fails to identify the land he claims dominium to with the land on the ground, his action must fail.

Marsoof, J. in Latheef v. Mansoor [2010] 2 Sri LR 333 at 378 expressed the same in greater detail:

> The identity of the subject matter is of paramount importance in a rei vindicatio action because the object of such an action is to determine ownership of the property, which objective cannot be achieved without the property being clearly identified. Where the property sought to be vindicated consists of land, the land sought to be vindicated must be identified by reference to a survey plan or other equally expeditious method. It is obvious that ownership cannot be ascribed without clear identification of the property that is subjected to such ownership, and furthermore, the ultimate objective of a person seeking to vindicate immovable property by obtaining a writ of execution in terms of Section 323 of the Civil Procedure Code will be frustrated if the fiscal to whom the writ is addressed, cannot clearly identify the property by reference to the decree for the purpose of giving effect to it. It is therefore essential in a vindicatory action, as much as in a partition action, for the corpus to be identified with precision.

The Defendants have disputed the identification of the corpus in the answer and also raised it by way of an issue. Issue No.16 raised by the Defendants is as follows: "Is the land described in the schedule to the plaint a separate one different from the land described in the schedule to the answer?" The learned District Judge, without analysing the evidence, perfunctorily answered this issue in the negative and the Court of Appeal affirmed it.

There is real confusion about the identification of the land the Plaintiff claims in terms of name, boundaries and extent. The Plaintiff has failed to identify the land in suit, which is of paramount importance to succeed in this action. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeal failed to address this vital issue, which goes to the root of the case, in its proper perspective. I answer question (b) upon which leave was granted in favour of the Defendants.

In view of the above finding, there is no necessity to go into the question whether the Plaintiff proved title to the land in suit.

The Judgments of both the District Court and the Court of Appeal are set aside and the appeal of the Defendant-Appellants is allowed. The plaintiff's action in the District Court shall stand dismissed. On the facts and circumstances of this case, I make no order as to costs.

By Plaint dated 08/07/1996, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the "Plaintiff-Respondent") filed Case bearing No. D.C. Gampaha 39800/P against the Defendant-Appellant-Appellant ("the Defendant-Appellant"), and sought a declaration that the Plaintiff-Respondent and the Defendant-Appellant are each entitled to half share, to the land to be partitioned called Gonnagahawatta alias Batadombagahawatta, in extent, 1A and 6P depicted in Village Plan No. 849/P, dated 26/07/1957, made by M.S. Perera, Licensed Surveyor, More fully described in the schedule to the Plaint.

In paragraph 7 of the said Plaint the Plaintiff-Respondent states that the said land sought to be partitioned is Lot No. 4, an unallotted portion of land in the Final Plan dated 26/07/1957, in Gampaha District Court Case No. 4095/P, of the land called Gonnagahawatta alias Batadombagahawatta, in extent, 1A 0R 6P, more fully described in the schedule to the Plaint. Admittedly, the land sought to be partitioned is depicted as Lot No. 4 in the said Plan No. 849/P dated 26/07/1957, is an unallotted potion of land in partition Case No. 4095/P of the District Court of Gampaha.

In the Amended Statement of Claim dated 29/11/2000, the Defendant-Appellant contends inter alia, that she and her predecessors in title possessed the unallotted Lot No. 3 in extent of 2R and 8.20P, depicted in Preliminary Plan No. 1175/P, dated 30/07/1998, made by A.C.P. Gunasena, Licensed Surveyor, for a period of over 60 years and thereby acquired prescriptive title to the said Lot No.3 in the said Plan No. 1175/P. On that basis, the Defendant-Appellant contends that presently, she is in possession and has prescribed to in excess of half share of the land to be partitioned.

Having considered the oral and the documentary evidence led by the respective parties, the learned Additional District Judge by Judgment dated 24/09/2008, held that the Plaintiff-Respondent and the Defendant-Appellant are each entitled to a half share of the unallotted portion of land as depicted in the Preliminary Plan No. 1175/P, dated 30/07/1998, made by licensed surveyor A.C.P. Gunasena. The Court also held that the Defendant-Appellants claim based on prescriptive possession to a portion in excess of half share of the unallotted portion was not proved and accordingly, the Court granted relief to the Plaintiff-Respondent as prayed for.

Being aggrieved by the said Judgment, the Defendant-Appellant, by Petition of Appeal dated 21/11/2008, appealed to the High Court of the Western Province exercising civil appellate jurisdiction holden in Gampaha ("the Civil Appeal High Court"). The Civil Appeal High Court, after hearing also considering the question of title of the Plaintiff-Respondent and the claim of prescriptive possession acquired by the Defendant-Appellant to the relevant portion, by Judgment dated 22/08/2013, held that;

a) the Defendant-Appellant is entitled only to a half of the unallotted land and that the Defendant-Appellant has failed to establish any amount in excess of such or established prescriptive title to any portion of the said land.
b) the Plaintiff-Respondent had purchased the rights of the 7 children of Punchi Singho and his wife.
c) the Plaintiff-Respondent has established the rights which devolved from Punchi Singho to the Plaintiff-Respondent.
d) the Deeds marked V1, V2 and V3 produced at the trial before the District Court by the Defendant-Appellant were not in conformity with the extent of the land which was claimed by the Defendant-Appellant.
e) the Defendant-Appellant failed to establish prescriptive title to a defined portion of the corpus.
f) the Defendant-Appellant is entitled only to a half share of the corpus.

Accordingly, the Civil Appeal High Court affirmed the said Judgment of the Additional District Judge dated 24/09/2008, and dismissed the appeal.

The Plaintiff-Appellant, by Petition dated 04/10/2013 is before this Court, to set aside the said Judgment dated 22/08/2013, delivered by the Civil Appeal High Court.

By Order dated 21/06/2019, this Court granted leave to appeal on the following questions of law;

1) Whether the Plaintiff has established title to a half share of the corpus?
2) If the answer to the above question of law is in the negative, what is the share that the Plaintiff is entitled to?
3) Whether the Defendant-Appellant-Appellant was allocated the shares according to the evidence and the documents led at the trial?

At the commencement of the trial before the District Court, both parties admitted that the land described in the schedule to the Plaint is the same land as depicted in the Preliminary Plan No. 1175/P, prepared by licensed surveyor A.C.P. Gunasena. They also admitted that Patikiri Arachchige Simon Singho and Patikiri Arachchige Andi Singho were the original owners of the land to be partitioned and were each entitled to an equal share. At the trial, only the Plaintiff-Respondent and the Defendant-Appellant testified before the District Court.

The Plaintiff-Respondent's position was that both the Plaintiff-Respondent and the Defendant-Appellant be declared entitled to a half share each to the land described in the said Preliminary Plan No. 1175/P, dated 30/07/1998.

It is in evidence that Patikiri Arachchige Simon Singho, one of the original owners, by Deed No. 15767 dated 17/01/1945, marked 'P2', transferred his undivided half share to Patikiri Arachchige Punchi Singho. When the said Punchi Singho died, his share devolved on his widow Mahavithanage Helenahamy and their six children according to inheritance under the pedigree. One child died issueless and his share devolved on Helenahamy and the rest of the siblings. The said Helenahamy, by Deed No. 23247 marked ‘P3’, transferred all her rights to the Plaintiff-Respondent, and the rest of the children also transferred their rights to the Plaintiff-Respondent by Deeds No. 25483 marked ‘P7’, and No. 24132 marked ‘P4’, respectively. Accordingly, the Plaintiff-Respondent purchased the undivided half share of Patikiri Arachchige Punchi Singho which devolved on his wife Helenahamy and their seven children, thereby claimed entitlement to half share to the said land.

The Defendant-Appellants position is that;

a) By the Deeds marked P1 to P8, the Plaintiff-Respondent gets title to the said land only on Deed Nos. 25483 (P7) and 24277 (P8), referred to in the Plaint and accordingly, would be entitled only to 9/20 share and not half share, as claimed.
b) having possessed the said divided Lot No.3 depicted in Preliminary Plan No. 1175/P dated 30/07/1998, for over 10 years, the Defendant-Appellant has acquired prescriptive title to a divided and a defined portion of the said land.
c) when the Defendant-Appellant obtained title to the said land by Deed No. 2690 dated 01/06/1973, marked ‘V1’, a fence was in existence, as shown in Plan No. 1705 dated 30/11/1973, marked ‘V4’ (not referred to in the said title Deed No. 2690), which establish that the Defendant-Appellant possessed and prescribed to the said Lot 3 of the said Plan No. 1175/P.
d) Patikiri Arachchige Amarasena is also a child of Patikiri Arachchige Punchi Singho and therefore, the Plaintiff-Respondent’s pedigree is challenged on the basis that Patikiri Arachchige Punchi Singho had seven children and not six as revealed in the Plaint and the name of Patikiri Arachchige Amarasena has been completely left out from the Plaint.

As noted earlier, Deed No. 2690 from which the Defendant-Appellant claims title to her land, makes no reference to the said Plan No. 1705 dated 30/11/1973. In evidence, the Defendant-Appellant states that the said plan was made after the land was purchased by the said Deed No. 2690. It is claimed that the fence depicted in the said Plan No. 1705 is the same fence shown in the Preliminary Plan No. 1175/P, and that the said fence was in existence for over 20 years by which prescriptive rights were acquired over Lot 3 of Plan No. 1175/P.

However, based on Plan No. 849/P dated 26/07/1957, produced in the District Court Case No. 4095/P, the Plaintiff-Respondent denies the above position on the basis that in 1957, there was no fence across Lot 4, and therefore, not seen in the said Plan No. 849/P.

The land to be partitioned was shown by the parties to the surveyor, and the Preliminary Plan No. 1175/P was prepared by superimposing Lot 4 of Plan No. 849/P. Surveyor A.C.P. Gunasena was not called to give evidence. However, according to the surveyor report dated 15/09/1998, the Defendant Appellant has been in possession of 00.26P towards the western boundary of Lot 4 of Plan No. 849/P. The said report also speaks of a fence in existence, as claimed by the Defendant Appellant. It is claimed that putting up of the fence had been the cause for dispute between the parties. However, it is pertinent to note that, there is no fence depicted in Plan No. 849/P.

Now I will deal with the question, whether the Defendant-Appellant was allocated shares according to inheritance under the pedigree and the evidence led at the trial.

It was the contention of the Plaintiff-Respondent that the Deeds submitted by the Defendant-Appellant claiming title to 95P does not relate to the land in question but another land, and therefore is not entitled to an extent of 95P of the corpus, but in fact is entitled only to half share, the remaining half of Lot 3 in Plan No. 1175/P, as mentioned above.

As observed earlier, Patikiri Arachchige Andi Singo and Patikiri Arachchige Simon Singho were the original co-owners of the land to be partitioned, each entitled to half share of an undivided land. It is undisputed that the said original owners possessed half share each of the said land depicted as Lot 3 in Plan No. 1175/P, dated 30/11/1973. Patikiri Arachchige Simon Singho, by Deed No. 15767 dated 17/01/1945 (P2), transferred his half share to Patikiri Arachchige Punchi Singho. Punchi Singho died intestate leaving his wife, Mahavithanage Helenahami, and 7 children.

As noted earlier the Defendant-Appellant questions the inheritance under the pedigree of the Plaintiff-Respondent on the basis that Mahavithanage Helenahami had seven children and not 6 namely, Sriyawathie, Chandradasa, Dayarathna, Dharmasena, Steven, Senevirathne, and Amarasena. It is contended that Amarasena is not disclosed in the Plaint as one of the children of Helenahami.

The Plaintiff-Respondent's position is that the said Helenahami and Dayaratna transferred their rights to the Plaintiff-Respondent by Deed No. 23247 dated 02/04/1980, marked 'P3'. Senevirathne died issueless, restoring his inherited rights back to his mother Helenahami and by Deed No. 194 dated 01/02/1997, marked 'P5', the said Helenahami and Sriyawathie transferred their rights to the Plaintiff-Respondent. Dayarathna, Dharmasena, and Steven have also transferred their rights to the Plaintiff-Respondent by Deed No. 24132 dated 13/02/1981 marked 'P4'. Amarasena and Chandrasdasa transferred their rights by Deed Nos. 24168 dated 27/02/1981 marked 'P6', and Deed No. 24277 dated 28/03/1981 marked 'P8', respectively, in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent. Sriyawathie transferred her rights to the Plaintiff-Respondent by Deed No. 25483 dated 05/06/1982, marked 'P7'.

Accordingly, by the said Deeds, the Plaintiff-Respondent claims to have acquired the rights to the land from the said Helenahami and her children.

The dispute regarding the number of children Helenahami had surfaced in evidence given by the Defendant-Appellant. As mentioned earlier, it was claimed that Punchi Singho and Helenahami had 7 children and not 6, namely, Sriyawathie, Chandradasa, Dayarathna, Dharmasena, Steven, Senevirathne, and Amarasena. The Civil Appeal High Court in its Judgement dated 26/08/2013, dealt with the said issue in the following manner.

> "It refers to Patikiri Arachchige Amarasena as the Vender and he alienated the rights derived from Punchi Singho as paternal inheritance. The quibble of the Defendant is that the name Amarasena is not referred to in the plaint. In those circumstances, though the Plaintiff does not refer to seven children of the said Punchi Singho there is no doubt that the Plaintiff has purchased rights of 7 children of Punchi Singho and his wife."

Both parties admitted that the land depicted in Plan No. 1175/P is the land sought to be partitioned. As noted earlier, Sriyawathie and Helenahami transferred their rights by Deed No. 194 dated 01/02/1997, to the Plaintiff-Respondent. It is also observed that Sriyawathie, by Deed No. 25483 dated 05/06/1982, marked 'P7' had independently transferred her rights to the Plaintiff-Respondent. However, Sriyawathie could not have transferred any right in excess of what she inherited through Helenahami. Therefore, it is safe to conclude that in any event, by the said Deed No. 25483, anything in excess of half share of the corpus would not have transferred to the Plaintiff-Respondent.

Furthermore, the said Deeds were produced in evidence at the trial without a contest, which makes the Plaintiff-Respondent's claim that both parties to this action were equally entitled to half share each, that much stronger. Therefore, through the said documents, the Plaintiff-Respondent has clearly established inheritance under the pedigree acquiring the rights of all 7 children of Punchi Singho and his wife Helenahami.

Therefore, the Civil Appeal High Court was correct in deciding that, after the death of Punchi Singho his rights devolved on Helenahami and their seven children.

For all the reasons stated above, I am of the view that the Plaintiff-Respondent purchased half share of an undivided land from the Plaintiff-Respondent's predecessors in title.

On this issue, the District Court and the Civil Appeal High Court were of the same view that the Plaintiff-Respondent had purchased all the rights of Helenahami and her seven children. Having considered the evidence placed before Court, I do not see any reason to disturb the said findings.

Therefore, I answer the 1st question of law in the affirmative.

Accordingly, the 2nd question of law on which leave to appeal to this Court has been granted need not be considered.

The Defendant-Appellant tendered in evidence Deed No. 2690 dated 01/06/1973, as 'V1', Deed No. 14288 dated 22/03/1971, as 'V2', Deed No. 952 dated 06/04/1964, as 'V3', to establish inheritance under the pedigree from Patikiri Arachchige Andi Singo.

The Defendant-Appellant claims title to a portion in extent 95P by Deed No. 2690 dated 01/06/1973, marked 'V1' (the said claim is not supported by the said Deed No. 2690). Plan No. 1705 dated 30/11/1973 marked 'V4', shows the total extent of land in Lot 4 as '95P'. In evidence before the District Court, the Defendant-Appellant stated that by Deed No 14288, a divided portion in extent, 2R 15P was transferred to her in 1973, and during that time the Defendant-Appellant with the consent of the Plaintiff-Respondent had put up a barbed wire fence to demarcate the boundary line between Lots 1 and 3 of Preliminary Plan No. 1705. It is observed that by the said Deed No. 14288, the Defendant-Appellant was entitled to an undivided portion of land in extent 2R 15P of a larger land, approximately in extent of 2A.

At the commencement of the trial both parties admitted that the land to be partitioned is depicted in Plan No. 1175/P, more fully described in the schedule to the Plaint. Therefore, the question arises as to whether the land described in Deeds marked 'V1', 'V2', and 'V3' and the said Plan No. 849/P dated 26/07/1957, produced in evidence in the District Court Case No. 4095/P, relate to the same land that is sought to be partitioned. The documents submitted by the Defendant-Appellant refers to a land in extent of 2A. However, according to the final decree based on the previous partition Plan No 849/P, filed of record in the District Court Gampaha Case No. 4095/P, the extent of land to be partitioned, in the instant action, is in extent, 1A and 6P, which is evidenced by document marked 'P9'. Even though the Defendant-Appellant claims that a lawful consideration was paid for 95P, and therefore is entitled to a portion in excess of half share, in evidence in examination in chief, the Defendant-Appellant was not certain of the extent of land which she claims and thereby failed to justify such claim. In that context, it is important to note the learned District Judge's observation that the schedules to the survey plans submitted by the Defendant-Appellant too, does not identify the corpus sufficiently and therefore failed to prove the extent of land, as claimed.

It is also noted that the Deeds marked 'V1', 'V2', and 'V3' relied upon by the Defendant-Appellant in order to prove entitlement in excess of a half share, does not sufficiently indicate a precise extent of land, as claimed by the Defendant-Appellant. Accordingly, the findings of the learned District Judge and the Civil Appeal High Court, to the effect that the existence of a discrepancy in the extents given in the documents relied upon by the Defendant-Appellant, cannot be faulted.

In the said background, it was the contention of the Plaintiff-Respondent that the Deeds submitted by the Defendant-Appellant claiming title to 95P from an undivided potion of land does not relate to the corpus sought to be partitioned and therefore the Defendant-Appellant is not entitled to an extent of 95P, but in fact is entitled only to a half share, which is the remaining half of Lot 3 of Plan No. 1175/P.

Therefore, from the documents tendered to Court and for the reasons stated above, I am of the view that the Defendant-Appellant is entitled only to a half share of the land, that is the remaining half of Lot 3 in Plan No. 1175/P.

The Plaintiff-Respondent has also made extensive submissions in this regard, in the written submissions filed in this Court, that the relief sought by the Defendant-Appellant is untenable in Law, with which I agree.

Therefore, the 3rd question of law is answered in the affirmative.

Apart from the three questions on which leave to appeal to this Court have been granted, it was also the contention of the Defendant-Appellant, that the Civil Appeal High Court disregarded her claim on prescriptive rights. She claims that the said prescriptive rights are based on an identifiable fence depicted in Plan No. 1705 dated 14/10/1973, also visible in the preliminary Plan No. 1175/P dated 30/07/1998, which she claims to be in existence for the past 20 years. The Defendant-Appellant contends that she obtained the consent of Helenahami to construct the said fence and thereby has prescribed to the said portion of land in Lot 3 in the said Plan No. 1175/P.

The said stand is totally denied by the Plaintiff-Respondent.

In the written submissions, dated the 15/06/2023, the Plaintiff-Respondent refers to the case of Corea Vs. Appuhamy, a Judgment delivered by the Privy Council reported in (1911) 15 NLR 65, which states in the head note that-

> "A co-owner's possession is in law the possession of his co-owners. It is not possible for him to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster could bring about that result."

In Sirajudeen and two others vs. Abbas (1994) 2 SLR 365, G.P.S. De Silva C.J. stated;

> "as regards the mode of proof of prescriptive possession, mere general statements of witnesses that the Plaintiff possessed the land in dispute for a number of years exceeding the prescriptive period are not evidence of the uninterrupted and adverse possession necessary to support a title by prescription. It is necessary that the witnesses should speak to specific facts and the question of possession has to be decided by thereupon by Court"

In the course of the Judgment in this case, the Supreme Court observed that this principle was best stated in the words of Gratiaen J. in Chelliah Vs. Wijenathan 54 NLR 337 in the following terms.

> "where a party invokes the provisions of Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance in order to defeat the ownership of an adverse claimant to immovable property, the burden of proof rests squirely and fairly on him to establish a starting point for his or her acquisition of prescriptive rights"

In view of the above and from what has been stated earlier in this Judgement, it is clear that in order to prove prescriptive title, the Defendant-Appellant has failed to fulfill the obligations and duties in duly discharging the burden of proof, in order to set up an uninterrupted and an adverse possession against the Plaintiff-Respondent by necessary evidence and therefore has failed to establish prescriptive title.

In these reasons, the Judgement dated 24/09/2008 of the Additional District Judge and the Judgement dated 26/08/2013, of the Civil Appeal High Court are hereby affirmed and this Appeal is dismissed. No order for Costs.

E. A. G. R. Amarasekara, J.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent-Petitioner (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff) instituted action in the District Court of Kurunegala by plaint dated 24.10.2013 against the Defendant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Defendant) seeking inter alia for a declaration of title to the paddy lands described in the schedule to the plaint (hereinafter referred to as the subject matter), for a permanent injunction preventing the Defendant, his servants, agents, or anyone acting under his authority from disturbing the Plaintiff's possession and from entering into the subject matter and/or engaging in any agricultural cultivation in the subject matter, for a judgment and decree setting aside the deed of declaration executed by the Defendant, bearing No.2091 dated 18. 06. 2012, attested by F.M. Rasheed Notary Public.

The Plaintiff, among other things, stated in the plaint as follows;

- that the original owner of the said lands was one Mrs. Chandrasekara Ekanayake Basnayake Mudiyanse Ralahamilage Mildred Sudarmha Madugalle (hereinafter Sudarma Madugalle), who was the mother of both the Plaintiff and the Defendant and she had gifted several lands including the subject matter in suit to the Defendant by deed No. 25719 dated 26.01.1972.
- that the said Sudharma Madugalle was subject to the Kandyan Law and she had revoked the gift made by the said deed in respect of the subject matter by deed No. 60073 dated 16.05.1991 and gifted the same to the Plaintiff by deed No. 60074 on the same day reserving her life interest.
- that with the demise of their mother Sudarmha Madugalle on 15. 07. 1996, the Plaintiff became the absolute owner of the subject matter.
- that the Defendant, in or around the year 2011, applied to get his name registered as the owner of the subject matter in the Agricultural Land Register.
- that the Defendant had prepared a deed of declaration No.2091 dated 18.06.2012 disputing the ownership of the Plaintiff.

The Defendant in his answer averred inter alia as follows;

- that with the revocation of the gift effected as mentioned above, Sudharma Madugalle exceeded the total extent of agricultural lands which could be owned by an individual and the subject matter in suit by operation of law got vested in the Land Reform Commission in terms of the provisions of the Land Reform Law No.1 of 1972.
- that Sudharma Madugalle did not have any rights to make the said gift by deed no. 60074 in favour of the Plaintiff.

Thus, the Defendant sought among other things a dismissal of the plaint and an order from court in terms of Section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code to add the Land Reform Commission, Intervenient Petitioner Respondent Respondent (hereinafter L.R.C.) as a necessary party to the action.

The Plaintiff filed a statement of objections against the application which sought to add the L.R.C. as a party stating that the L.R.C is not necessary to adjudicate all the matters relating to the action completely and effectually. In this regard, the Plaintiff has stated in his objection marked X3 that the Defendant, in his answer, had already admitted paragraph 1,2,3,4, 5 and 6 of the Plaint. The said admissions include that their mother who was subject to Kandyan Law, was the original owner and she gifted the subject matter reserving her right to revoke it and the said gift was accepted as a valid gift by the L.R.C by its decision dated 04.01.1974 and, further, their mother revoked the said gift as aforesaid and later gifted to the Plaintiff and after that the Defendant has no right whatsoever to the subject matter.

The Plaintiff in the said statement of objections(X3) further averred that the Chairman of the L.R.C had written to the Regional Agrarian Development Officer stating that the Defendant was the owner of the subject matter in suit and, as per the letter dated 22.10.2012 written by the Commissioner General of Agrarian Services, it was informed that, based on that letter issued by the Chairman of L.R.C, an inquiry would be held. The Commissioner General of Agrarian services has informed its decision by a letter dated 01.11.2012 that the title to the subject matter is with the Defendant. The Plaintiff in the said statement of objections had further taken up the position that the Defendant had acted in collusion with the officers of the L.R.C. Moreover, it is stated that the judgment in the present action only binds the Defendant and the Plaintiff and if L.R.C has any right, it is not bound by the Judgment and it can use its powers in terms of the Land Reform Law. The Plaintiff further averred in his said objections filed against the application for addition of parties, that addition of an unnecessary party would prolong the litigation and hinder the process of administration of justice.

It appears that, later on, even the L.R.C also has preferred an application moving it to be added as a party in terms of section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code, which application was lastly amended by petition dated 16.12.2014. According to the amended petition of the L.R.C, neither the Plaintiff nor the Defendant has any right to the subject matter in suit but it is the L.R.C which has title to it. In this regard, it had stated that as per the section 18 of the Land Reform Law, statutory declaration was made on 16.11.1972 and on 03.05.1974, the extent of land belonging to said Sudharma Madugalle was conveyed to her. It was also revealed that the statutory determination relating that extent which was 50 acres and 20 perches was gazetted on 29.03 1976 in the Gazette no.206/3. In that regard, among other things, L.R.C had stated that prior to the statutory declaration, the said Sudharma Madugalle executed deed of gifts No. 25719,25720, and 25718 but the gift given by deed No. 25720 to the Plaintiff is not valid since the Plaintiff was a minor at that time and it was not accepted by anyone on behalf of the Plaintiff. It was further stated that even the other two gifts made by deeds No. 25719 and 25718 to the Defendant and a mentally deceased daughter also had not been accepted and therefore they are not valid. Furthermore, when the deed of gift given to the Defendant was cancelled by Sudharma Madugalle, the extent of paddy land exceeded the limit that one can keep for oneself and therefore, the L.R.C. became the owner again and that Sudharma Madugalle became the statutory lessee. It is also stated that, in that backdrop, the gift made to the Plaintiff after the revocation of the gift given to the Defendant is not valid. It is also stated in the said amended petition that another case, namely No. 7873, has been filed by the Plaintiff against the L.R.C on the basis that said Sudharma Madugalle prescribed to another land around 8 1/2 acres. Thus, it appears that the position of the L.R.C. now is that the Plaintiff and the Defendant are not entitled to the subject matter in suit but the L.R.C is entitled to it, since Sudharma Madugalle, even though a statutory determination was made, had paddy lands exceeding the limit at the time when the impugned gift was made.

Before attending to the matter in issue, whether L.R.C is a necessary party to be added in the action or whether, as far as the action before the District Court is concerned, it can be completely and effectually solved through leading evidence, it must be noted that the L.R.C has placed contradictory positions before different forums. As said before, it has written to the Regional Officer of the Agrarian Services saying that the deed No.25719, by which the gift was made to the Defendant, is valid. It appears that, based on such communications, the Commissioner General of Agrarian Development has decided to remove the name of the Plaintiff from the Registers and insert the name of the Defendant. It is clear from the plaint that the Plaintiff's cause of action is based on the Defendant's conduct challenging the title claimed by the Plaintiff by his attempt to get his name inserted in the agricultural land register as the owner and by execution of his deed of declaration to indicate that he is the owner. When the Plaintiff filed the action to establish his title against the animosities caused by the Defendant to his title, now the L.R.C attempts to intervene and the Defendant attempts to get the L.R.C added as a Defendant to defeat the claim of the Plaintiff. However, if the L.R.C wants to get a declaration of title against the Plaintiff as well as the Defendant after the intervention, it must be stated here that a claim in reconvention cannot be prayed in this case against the Defendant as a claim in reconvention cannot be made against another Defendant in the same case. It must be noted that in terms of sections 73 and 75(e) of the Civil Procedure Code, a defendant can include a claim in reconvention in reply to the claim in the Plaint when the defendant does not admit the said claim made by the Plaintiff. In Muthucumarana Vs Wimalaratne and another (1999) 1 Sri L R 139 Wigneswaran, J. held as follows;

"Opposing parties who are at variance with each other are allowed to set off their individual claims against each other in the same action, there is no express provision in the Civil Procedure Code holding out that such a right of set off extends to defendants inter se"

On the other hand, it must be noted that as mentioned above, in a different forum, for some reason, L.R.C through letters has supported the Defendant to get his name registered as the owner in the Agricultural land registers. If the intention of the L.R.C is to establish its title against the Defendant also through a decree, it cannot be achieved here by intervention and thus, allowing the intervention will not effectually and completely solve all matters relating to L.R.C's title with regard to the subject matter in suit where L.R.C had communicated letters admitting the title of the Defendant and a decision made in relation to the Defendant's deed by the L.R.C. Thus, against the Defendant, L.R.C may have to resort to another action, since for some reason, it has already admitted Defendant's title before a different forum. Anyhow, as per the submissions and the questions of laws raised, it is clear that now the L.R.C has instituted an action in the Colombo District Court against the Plaintiff and the Defendant in this action. It is pertinent to note that addition of parties in an action is to avoid multiplicity of action. Furthermore, maintaining different cases in different forums on the same issue may give rise to different decision on the same issue and complicating the matters and causing hardships to the parties.

However, if the application for intervention by the L.R.C and the application by the Defendant to add L.R.C were intended only to defeat the claim made by the Plaintiff, it is not necessary to add L.R.C as a party since the Defendant also has now taken up the position that the subject matter in suit belongs to the L.R.C, and that, if correct, can be proved by adducing evidence in that regard. The action filed by the Plaintiff is a kind of quia temet rei vindicatio action based on his alleged ownership while anticipating intrusions by the Defendant. In such a situation, proof of the fact that the title is with a third party (jus tertii) is sufficient to defeat the claim made by the Plaintiff, and the Defendant even need not prove his title. As far as the Plaintiff's case is concerned, his case is based on an alleged cause of action that was arisen due to the conduct of the Defendant challenging his title by attempting to get his name included as the owner in the Agricultural Register and the Defendant's act of executing a deed of declaration. The Defendant's position in this regard in his answer was that the title is with L.R.C. Since *Jus tert*i is a valid defence in a rei vindicatio action, to completely and effectively adjudicate the case presented by the Plaintiff and the Defendant, I do not think that there is any necessity to add L.R.C as a party as it can be decided by leading evidence in relation to the ownership of the L.R.C. If it is a separate cause of action accrued to L.R.C against the Defendant and the Plaintiff, L.R.C has to institute a separate action based on that cause of action as L.R.C cannot make a claim in reconvention against the Defendant in this action.

If the confirmation of the Defendant's entitlement to the Agrarian Services Development Department by the L.R.C is a mistake or an error, it is questionable as to why the L.R.C is silent about any steps taken with regard to the correction of the outcome of that mistake or the error. Perhaps, L.R.C has not taken any meaningful step in that regard and in the event any step has been taken to correct the decision made for the benefit of the Defendant due to an act of the L.R.C, the Plaintiff may not even proceed with the present action, because mere deed of declaration made by the Defendant himself cannot have any effect on the rights of the Plaintiff. If the L.R.C conveyed its present position to the inquiry in relation to the correction of Agricultural Land Register and L.R.C was inserted as the owner, the Plaintiff could have advised himself whether to institute an action against L.R.C in that regard. The Defendant with the assistance of communication from the L.R.C has taken steps to get his name registered as the owner in the agricultural land register and as such, the Defendant has created a situation that may pose a threat to the alleged ownership rights of the Plaintiff. Rei Vindicatio action is basically to evict the Defendant who is in possession against the rights of ownership. As per the Plaint, it appears, the Defendant is not in possession. As said before, it is filed as a quia timet action anticipating threats to the alleged rights of ownership while praying for a permanent injunction against the Defendant. In my view it is not necessary to add all who assisted the Defendant in his attempt get his name inserted in the Agricultural Land Registry. Impending threat is from the Defendant. Therefore, the action is against the Defendant.

It is true in some of the decided judgments,[1] rei vindicatio action has been described as an action in rem. This may be based on the Johannes Voet's explanations in his Commentary on the Pandects (6.1.1) and (6.1.2) which read as follows;

[1] See Latheef Vs Mansoor (2010) 2 Sri L R 333 at 350

"To vindicate is typically to claim for oneself a right in re. All actions in rem are called vindications, as opposed to personal actions or condictions".

"From the right of ownership springs the vindication of a thing, that is to say, an action in rem by which we sue for a thing which is ours but in the possession of another."

It must be observed that a rei vindicatio action is based on ownership which is held against all others as proof of ownership of a third party makes the action unsuccessful. However, like in a partition action, no wider publicity through public notices is given in rei vindicatio actions in Sri Lanka. Thus, in my view one cannot say that the whole world is bound by a decision given in a rei vindicatio action. Hence, the L.R.C will not be prejudiced by not making it a party in this action as it is not bound by the decision between the Plaintiff and the Defendant when it is not a party.

Whether the gifts made by Sudharma Madugalle were accepted by the relevant donee or on behalf of them can be ascertained through evidence. It must be noted that acceptance of a gift can be done in many ways and not limited to the placing of the signature on the deed itself. Whether Sudharma Madugalle had lands or paddy lands exceeding the ceiling also can be ascertained through evidence. On the other hand, allowing intervention may extend the case beyond the cause of action presented by the Plaintiff and the case presented by the Defendant in reply when no relief has been prayed against the L.R.C by the Plaintiff. Even if intervention is allowed it is questionable whether the L R C can make a claim in reconvention since there is no direct relief prayed against the L R C in the Plaint since no cause of action against the L R C is revealed in the Plaint. It must be observed that what is allowed in claim in reconvention is what can be set off or mutually adjusted with the claim made by the Plaintiff- vide Silva V Perera 5 N L R 265, Muthucumarana Vs Wimalaratne and Another (1999) 1 Sri L R 139.

DC Order

The learned Additional District Court Judge of Kurunegala after considering the applications to add and intervene, by order dated 18.09.2015 refused to add L.R.C as a party intervenient. The learned Additional District Judge's conclusion is that since Jus Tertii is available as a defense and it is for the defendant to prove it and place evidence in that regard, it is not necessary to add L.R.C to proceed with the action.

High Court (Civil Appellate) Judgment

Being aggrieved by the order of the learned Additional District Judge dated 18.09.2015, the L.R.C. preferred an Appeal in the High Court of the Northwestern Province Holden in Kurunegala (Exercising Civil Appellate Jurisdiction) to set aside the order of the Learned Additional District Judge and upon the parties making their respective written submissions and upon considering the said submissions of the parties the Learned Judges of the said High Court delivered the Judgment dated 27.07.2017. By that Judgment learned High Court judges set aside the order of the Learned Additional District Judge and held that the L.R.C be made a party to the District Court action in terms of Section 18 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned High Court Judges while referring to narrow and wider constructions applied by courts in various decisions in relation to addition of parties and indicating its preference to apply wider or liberal approach, has stated following among other things in its judgment;

- The Plaintiff has stated that the L.R.C and the Defendant took contradictory positions before the officers of Agrarian Services Department and they are acting in collusion.

- The L.R.C has instituted a declaration of title case no. DLA 16/2016 in the District Court of Colombo after withdrawing the previous case no. DLA 55/2015 filed by the L.R.C.
- The Defendant's position is that the L.R.C is a necessary party under section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code and wider construction should be applied and the narrow construction should be rejected.

After referring to the case laws on narrow construction and wider construction and what has been stated in those cases, at the end, the learned High Court Judges have stated that the cases referred to by the Plaintiff are based on the narrow constructions which had been denied by Superior Courts. While stating that the learned District Judge ought to have considered the wider construction, the High Court set aside the order made by the learned District Judge and ordered to add L.R.C as a party.

It appears while commenting on wider construction relating to addition of parties that the learned High Court Judges have highlighted following matters;

- If the Court see that, in the transaction brought before it, rights of one of the parties will or may be affected and other actions may be brought in respect of that transaction, the Court has power to bring all the parties before it and determine the rights of all in one proceeding.
- Where there is one subject matter out of which several disputes arise, all parties may be brought before the court and all those disputes may be determined at the same time without the delay and expenses of several trials.
- A necessary party means a party whose presence before the court may be necessary for effectual and complete adjudication of all the questions involved in the action and the Court has the jurisdiction to add such a party and not otherwise. Such added party is bound by the result of the action and the question to be settled must be a one that cannot be effectually and completely settled unless he is a party. What the Court ought to see is whether there is anything which cannot be determined owing to the absence of the party proposed to be added or he will be prejudiced by not being joined as a party.
- Addition of parties is there to avoid multiplicity of actions and to diminish the cost of litigation.
- In the instant case, the Defendant has taken the defence of Jus Tertii. Though the Plaintiff has stated that L.R.C has filed an action in District Court of Colombo for a declaration of title, that fact has not been agitated before the trial judge. Since the matter before the Colombo District Court had not been decided by that time 'Res Judicata' would not be applied.
- As per the Plaintiff's stance the L.R.C has taken two contradictory stances, if added this can be clarified and combated by the Plaintiff, hence his rights would not be prejudiced.
- If the L.R.C is not added the final outcome would affect the rights of the L.R.C.

Above shows that the learned High Court Judges identified certain criteria for addition of parties which are discussed under wider construction, namely;

- Avoidance of multiplicity of actions,
- The need to save money and time,
- The need to adjudicate matters in issue effectually and completely,

- The need to add only the necessary parties for such effective and complete adjudication etc.

The above criteria are reflected in the decisions in Byrne Vs Brown and Diplock (1889) 22 QBD 657 and Montgomery Vs Foy, Morgan and Co. (1895) 2 QB 321 which have been referred to in the learned High Court Judges' Judgment as well as in the written submissions of the Defendant. The learned High Court Judges in their judgment as well as the Defendant in his written submissions has mentioned Weeraperuma Vs De Silva 61 N L R 481, The Charted Bank Vs De Silva 67 N L R 135, Arumugam Coomaraswamy Vs Andiris Appuhamy (1985) 2 Sri L R 219, Hilda Perera V Somawathi (2000) 3 Sri L R 219 etc. to indicate that lately our courts also have preferred wider construction. Even the relevant section, namely section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code empowers the court to add any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action. However, it must be said that, as per the plaint, this is an action to establish the alleged ownership of the Plaintiff and to vindicate such rights but not an action to get the different stances taken by the L.R.C clarified.

In my view, the question is not whether the narrow construction or wider construction should have been applied but whether the learned High Court Judges correctly applied the said criteria in evaluating the order of the original court. As said before in this judgment, the cause of action contained in the plaint based on the Defendant's alleged acts and the defence contained in the answer in reply to averments in the plaint can be completely and effectually solved without adding the L.R.C but by allowing to lead evidence to prove that the title is with a third party, namely L.R.C. because the defence taken by the answer is Jus Tertii. Jus Tertii is one of the defence that can be taken in a rei vindicatio action which has to be proved by the Defendant and it can be proved by placing necessary evidence. A Court need not add the third party who is said to have title merely because jus tertii is pleaded. By adding L.R.C, what happens is that the Court opens the gate to adjudicate a cause of action that the L.R.C may have against the Plaintiff and the Defendant, to meet which the Plaintiff may have to amend its pleadings. Such a situation may change the complexion of the case from a case against the Defendant based on his alleged acts to a case based on the added defendant's cause of action or a cause of action against the added defendant.

On the other hand, as explained above, owing to the fact that the L.R.C cannot make a claim in reconvention against the Defendant, addition of L.R.C may not solve all the questions that may be brought in with the intervention of L.R.C. To solve issues against the Defendant, the L.R.C may need another action to be filed against the Defendant and it also may have to take steps to correct the decision made by the officers of Agrarian Development Department.

It is pertinent to note, if no other action is filed by the L.R.C, but intervene and file an answer only to defeat the claim of the Plaintiff, and as a result Plaintiff loses his case, the Defendant will be able to enjoy the fruits of the decision by the Officers of the Agrarian Development Department even if the said decision is based on a misrepresentation made by the L.R.C. As per the stances taken by the Defendant and the L.R.C in the matter at hand the representation made by the L.R.C at the inquiry before the said department cannot be a correct stance. From the facts, it appears that the L.R.C intervention in the matter at hand was unwarranted.

On the other hand, as said before, in the matter at hand, the L.R.C cannot make a claim in reconvention against the Defendant. A claim in reconvention has the same effect as a plaint- vide section 75 (e) of the Civil Procedure Code. In a situation where the L.R.C cannot make a claim in reconvention against the Defendant, if it intervenes and make a claim in reconvention only against the Plaintiff in the guise of settling all the disputes involved, the L.R.C may be placed in a precarious position with regard its claims against the Defendant due to section 34(2) of the Civil Procedure Code as no other action is available for what is omitted or relinquished.

Anyhow, by the time the High Court was hearing the appeal, the L.R.C had filed an action in the Colombo District Court. However, all these factors indicate that the intervention or addition of L.R.C would not serve to avoid multiplicity of action. However, now, due to the case filed in the District Court Colombo, the addition of the L.R.C in the case at hand may pose the danger of having contrastive decisions from different forums which is one factor that may be considered in deciding whether the addition would help effectual and complete adjudication. It is pertinent to mention the principal nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa which translates as "No one should be tried twice in respect to the same matter". This principle is behind the doctrine of Res Judicata as well as lis alibi pendence- See Mudiyanse et al V Appuhamy (1937) C.L.Rec 254, 256. In this regard, to indicate that two actions can be maintained, the Counsel for the L.R.C has referred to Muthuranee V Thuraisingham (1984) 1 Sri L R 381 and Mudiyanse et al V Appuhamy (1937) C.L. Rec 254,255. The relevant statement of law cited from Muthuranee case refers to the seeking of same relief against same party in two different actions but based on different causes of action. Mudiyanse et al V Appuhamy relates to two different situations, namely one action based on section 247 of the Civil procedure Code and the other as a rei vindicatio action. It appears actions filed under section 247 had been withdrawn with liberty to file fresh action subject to objections that can be taken against the fresh institution. There is no indication that the action in the District Court of Colombo would be withdrawn. Thus, those two cases can be distinguished. On the other hand, it is worthwhile to observe that in Mudiyanse et al V Appuhamy at 256 and 257, in relation to the right to litigate before different tribunals, it is said that such a right is subject to the control of court to prevent its process being abused.

This Court observes that the learned Additional District Judge has made the impugned order in the matter at hand on 18.09.2015. The L.R.C had tendered its original petition dated 10.10.2014 praying for intervention. It appears that L.R.C had filed its first plaint in DLA/55/15 dated 08.06.2015 before the District Court of Colombo prior to the aforesaid decision dated 18.09.2015 made by the learned District Judge Kurunegala. Therefore, it cannot be said that due to the refusal of intervention, the L.R.C filed the application in the District Court of Colombo. One may argue that institution of another action, namely DLA/16/2016, before the District Court of Colombo was not a fact before the Learned Additional District Judge of Kurunegala when he made the impugned order refusing the intervention of L.R.C to support the correctness of that order. However, as per the written submissions filed on behalf of L.R.C before the District Court, case No. DLA/55/15, which appears to have been withdrawn to file DLA/16/2016, was pending before the Colombo District Court against the Plaintiff and the Defendant. Thus, the application for intervention does not appear to be for the avoidance of multiplicity of actions. However, learned Additional District Judge has refused to allow the intervention on a different ground.

While referring to the case of Appuhamy V Lokuhamy 2 Cey. L.R 57 K.D.P. Wickremesinghe in his Civil Procedure in Ceylon states as follows;

"Before a third person can be added as a party to a pending action, he must show-

(i) that he has an interest in the litigation and that he would be prejudiced by judgment being entered either for plaintiff or defendant;

(ii) that his admission would prevent the same question being tried twice over; and

(iii) that the subject matter of the action is the same as the subject matter claimed by him.

And as a general rule, a party claiming adversely to both plaintiff and defendant is not added as a party."

It is true that the L.R.C has an interest in the litigation and it is also the subject matter of the matter at hand that it now claims. However, as explained above, as far as it is not a party, the result of this action will not prejudice the L.R.C as the Judgment between the Plaintiff and the Defendant cannot bind it. Furthermore, as clarified above in this judgment, since L.R.C cannot make a claim in reconvention against the Defendant, all matters involved with regard to the stance of the L.R.C cannot be completely and effectually solved in this action filed in the District Court of Kurunegala. Thus, the intervention cannot prevent multiplicity of actions and in fact there is another action filed by the L.R.C in the Colombo District Court. However, the case presented by the plaint and the case presented in reply by the answer can be completely and effectually solved by submitting evidence regarding the title of the third party, namely L.R.C. Moreover, an addition may change the complexion of the case which is based on alleged acts of the Defendants to a case based on a cause of action accrued to the L.R.C or Cause of action accrued to the Plaintiff against L.R.C.

The learned High Court Judge appears to have refused to follow Appuhamy V Lokuhamy stating that it is a case that gives a narrow construction approach to the addition of parties without giving adequate reasons. What is quoted above indicates that the said decision considers many aspects such as prejudice that may be caused to the third party who is proposed to be added as a party, prevention of multiplicity of action etc. On the other hand, as at present, if it is permitted, addition of L. R. C may allow two separate proceedings to be conducted in two forums giving an opportunity to reach different conclusions at the end which may be averse to the requirement contained in section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code, namely effectual and complete adjudication. In my view, even if one does not consider the fact that there is another litigation, namely DLA/16/2016, before the Colombo District Court as that fact was not before the Learned Additional District Judge of Kurunegala, still the learned Additional District Judge was correct in refusing to add L.R.C as a party as the dispute L.R.C wants to present cannot be completely and effectually solved as L.R.C cannot make a claim in reconvention against the Defendant. However, as a matter of fact, case No. DLA/ 55/2015 was pending before the District Court of Colombo at the time written submissions were tendered to District Court. If the intention for intervention is only to defeat the claim of the Plaintiff, presenting evidence of third-party title (Jus Tertii) as identified by the learned Additional District Judge would completely and effectually solve the matter presented before the District Court by the Plaintiff and the Defendant. Finally, the general principal referred to above which states that a party claiming adversely to both plaintiff and defendant shall not be added as a party, in my view, does not emanate from the narrow construction but may relates to the incapability of a Defendant in our law to make a claim in reconvention against another Defendant except in special actions such as partition actions where statements of claims that pray for partition are treated as plaints.

In the Supreme Court

Being aggrieved by the Judgment of the High Court, the Plaintiff has appealed to this Court and leave to appeal was granted on the following questions of law raised in subparagraphs e, f (i), (ii)(a)(b)(c) and (d) of paragraph 13 of the petition dated 06.09.2017. They are answered as follows;

e) has the Learned Judge of the High Court erred in his failure to recognize the fact that the Intervenient Petitioner who disputes the rights of both the Plaintiff and Defendant cannot be made a party to this action?

A. Answered in the affirmative

f) (i) has the Court failed to consider that the Land Reform Commission is claiming adversely to both the Plaintiff and the Defendant and therefore, ought not, as a general rule to be added as a necessary party?

A. Answered in the affirmative

(ii) (a) has the Court failed to consider that the land Reform Commission filed action in DC Colombo case No. DLA 16/2016 for the same land forming the corpus in DC Kurunegala case No. 8009/L?

A. Case no. DLA 16/2016 has been filed after the decision of the Learned Additional District Judge. Thus, it could not have been considered in evaluating the correctness of the decision of the learned Additional District Judge. Therefore, this question of law does not arise. However, learned High Court Judge failed to observe that there had been a previous case pending, namely DLA/55/15, filed in the Colombo District Court prior to the decision of the Learned Additional District Judge.

(b) in view of the land Reform Commission filing action in DC Colombo Case No. DLA 16/2016, is the land reform Commission not a necessary party as it is not bound by the determination of the pending action?

A. Since DLA 16/2016 was filed after the decision of the learned Additional District Judge, the Learned High Court Judges could not have considered it in evaluating the correctness of the impugned order before it. However, the learned High Court Judges failed to recognize that L.R.C is not a necessary party and it is not bound by the decision of the case filed by the Plaintiff, if it does not become a party.

(c) in view of DC Colombo case No. DLA 16/2016, is the Land Reform Commission not a necessary party since the determination of the pending action will not affect the Land Reform Commission's Legal Rights?

A. As indicated in answers above, case No. DLA 16/2016 could not have been considered in evaluating the correctness of the decision of the learned Additional District judge. However, as for the reasons given above in the judgment, Learned High Court Judges failed to recognize that L.R.C is not a necessary party and it is not bound by the judgment of the Action filed in the District Court as far as it is not a party.

(d) in view of DC Colombo case No. 16/2016, will the Land Reform Commission not be a necessary party since the determination of this action will not affect the pecuniary interest of the Land Reform Commission?

A. As stated above learned High Court Judges could not have considered D.C. Colombo case No. 16/2016 in evaluating the correctness of the impugned order before them as it was filed after the impugned decision of the learned Additional District Judge. However, as explained above in the judgment, the decision between the Plaintiff and the Defendant cannot prejudiced the rights of the L.R.C as far as it is not made a party.

For the reasons given above in the Judgment, I allow the appeal with costs and set aside the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court of Kurunegala dated 27.07.2017 while affirming the Decision of the Additional District Judge of Kurunegala dated 18.09.2015. The Parties in the connected matter SC.HC.CA.LA.No. 409/2017 have agreed to abide by this decision in SC. Appeal No. 77/2018.

Facts of the case

This is an appeal filed in respect of an Order made by the High Court of the Western Province (hereinafter referred to as the "Commercial High Court") overruling an objection to the jurisdiction of the said court on the basis that the alleged cause of action pleaded in the Plaint arose from a delict and also arose prior to entering into the commercial transaction. Therefore, the said court does not have jurisdiction to hear and determine the action.

Plaintiff's case

The plaintiffs-respondents in SC/Appeal No. 80/2015 (hereinafter referred to as the "plaintiffs") filed action in the Commercial High Court and pleaded that the 1st defendant-appellant in SC/Appeal No. 80/2015 (hereinafter referred to as the "1st defendant company") was facing financial difficulties due to the collapse of the Golden Key Credit Card Company, and the depositors of the said company were demanding the return of their deposits. At that stage, the 1st defendant company had made a proposal to the 1st plaintiff company to take over its assets and liabilities.

Further, pursuant to the negotiations between the plaintiffs and the defendants, they had entered into an agreement bearing No. 1717 dated 6th of March, 2009 for the plaintiffs to purchase the shares of the 1st defendant company in order to take over the assets and liabilities of the 1st defendant company. A copy of the said agreement was produced annexed to the Plaint marked as "A1".

In the Plaint, the plaintiffs further stated that the plaintiffs purchased the said company based on the representations made by the defendants and the warranties given by them in Clause 4 (iii) of the said agreement marked "A1". Further, it was pleaded that the defendants made representations and gave warranties in respect of the corporate status, records and related entries, financial statements of PMB Credit Card Company (2nd plaintiff company), details of the depositors and liabilities.

Furthermore, the Annexures 'C(II)' and 'C(III)' annexed to the said agreement ("A1") were the only Financial Statements provided to the 2nd plaintiff by the 1st defendant, and the plaintiffs had relied on the said Financial Statements in purchasing the 1st defendant company, particularly on the credit card receivables of the 1st defendant company, in arriving at the valuation of the assets and liabilities of the said defendant company.

The plaintiffs further stated that they bought the 1st respondent company based on the warranties and representations stated in the said agreement ("A1"). However, the said agreement contained incorrect information, and as a result of that, they suffered a loss and damages of Rs. 206,036,188/- due to the breach of warranty and misrepresentation contained in Clause 4(iii) of the said agreement in respect of the credit card receivables of the 1st defendant company.

Moreover, the plaintiffs alleged that they would not have entered into the said agreement to take over the assets and liabilities of the 1st defendant company if not for the credit card receivables shown in Annexures 'C(II)' and 'C(III)' to the said agreement.

The plaintiffs further stated that the defendants had neglected and/or refused to pay the said loss and damages amounting to Rs. 206,036,188/- despite the several demands that were made to them. In the circumstances, the plaintiffs stated that a cause of action has accrued to them to sue the defendants jointly and severally for a sum of Rs. 206,036,188/-.

Trial of Issues

The defendants filed three separate answers. Thereafter, the trial commenced by marking the admissions and the 1st defendant, inter alia, admitted the jurisdiction of the Commercial High Court. (During the hearing of this appeal, it was submitted that there was a patent lack of jurisdiction and therefore, the said admission has no effect). However, the 2nd and 3rd defendants denied the jurisdiction of the Commercial High Court on the basis that the alleged cause of action pleaded in the plaint did not arise from a commercial transaction but from a delict. Further, the alleged cause of action arose prior to entering the commercial transaction.

Further, the defendants admitted that the agreement dated 6th of March, 2009 produced along with the Plaint marked as "A1" and its annexures marked as 'C(II)' and 'C(III)'.

Thereafter, several issues were raised by the parties. Once the issues were framed, all the parties had agreed to try the following issues as preliminary issues of law in terms of section 147 of the Civil Procedure Code and filed written submissions;

"(16) (a) Has the Plaintiffs not set out a cause of action against the 2nd Defendants?

(b) If so, has the 2nd Defendant been improperly joined as a Defendant and entitled to be discharged from these proceedings?

(20) As set out in paragraph 1 of the Answer of the 3rd Defendant;

(a) Does the Plaint ex-facie not disclose a cause of action against the 3rd Defendant?
(b) Has the 3rd Defendant been wrongly joined as a Party to this case?
(c) Should the 3rd Defendant be discharged from this Case in limine?

(26) Does this Court not have jurisdiction under the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 10 of 1996 to hear and determined this action against the 2nd and 3rd Defendant?

(27) If so, should the Plaintiff's action be dismissed in limine?"

After the parties filed their written submissions, the Commercial High Court delivered the Order dated 11th of May, 2013 and held that a cause of action had arisen out of a commercial transaction pleaded in the Plaint. Hence, the objection to the jurisdiction of the court was overruled. It was further held that issues Nos. 16 and 20 would be answered at the end of the trial, as it is necessary to hear the evidence to answer those issues.

Being aggrieved by the Order of the Commercial High Court, the 1st defendant in the said case sought leave to appeal from this court and this court granted leave to appeal on the following questions of law:

"(i) Has the said Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed as 'X14' failed to properly understand the ambit and/or scope and/or limitations of the relevant provisions in the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 10 of 1996?

(ii) Has the said Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' failed to properly construe the cause of action as averred and/or maintained by the 1st and 2nd respondents?

(iii) Has the said Order dated 11th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' failed to properly construe the cause of action as pleaded by the 1st and 2nd respondents and thus wrongly conclude that the High Court of the Western Province (Exercising Civil Jurisdiction and holden at Colombo) did have jurisdiction to hear and determine the 1st and 2nd Respondents Case?

(iv) Has the Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' failed to consider whether the cause of action as pleaded by in the plaint arose out of a commercial transaction within the meaning, scope and ambit of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 10 of 1996?

(v) Is the cause of action as pleaded and/or preferred in the plaint, a cause of action founded on the premise of a misrepresentation prior to entering into any commercial transaction, and if so, has the High Court of the Western Province (exercising Civil Jurisdiction and holden at Colombo) wrongly come to the finding that it has jurisdiction to try and determine the same?

(vi) Does the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 10 of 1996 confer jurisdiction on the High Court of the Western Province (Exercising Civil Jurisdiction) to try and/or determine matters arising out of an alleged misrepresentation which took place prior to any commercial transaction?

(vii) Has the said Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' erred in its findings by virtue of misrepresenting the case of the 1st and 2nd respondents and failing to give due consideration to the wording and/or scope and/or meaning of the relevant provisions and/or stipulations of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provision) Act No. 10 of 1996?

(viii) Has the said Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' erred in its findings because of inter alia failing to fully understand and/or comprehend the case of the 1st and 2nd Respondents?

(ix) Has the said Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' wrongly come to the finding that the High Court of the Western Province (Exercising Civil Jurisdiction and holden at Colombo) does have jurisdiction to try and determine the 1st and 2nd Respondent's case, and then contradictorily answer issue No. 26 in the affirmative?

(x) Has the said Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' failed to properly and/or appropriately evaluate the submissions made by the Petitioner?

(xi) Is the said Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' flawed in its reasoning and/or logic?

(xii) Is the said Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' wrong and/or contrary to law?

(xiii) Is the said Order dated 14th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' misconceived?"

At the hearing of the instant appeal, the court informed the parties that it would consider the question of law in respect of the jurisdiction of the Commercial High Court to hear the case, and all the parties agreed that it was the core issue in the instant appeal. Further, they agreed to have one judgment in respect of all three appeals.

Submissions of the 1st and 2nd defendants in SC/Appeal/80/2015

The learned President's Counsel for the 1st and 2nd defendants submitted that the cause of action as set out in the Plaint is based on an alleged misrepresentation and the incorrect warranty made by the defendants to the plaintiffs.

Further, the cause of action pleaded in the Plaint has not arisen out of a commercial transaction. Moreover, according to the averments in the Plaint, the alleged cause of action of the plaintiffs had arisen due to misrepresentation made by the 1st and/or 2nd and/or 3rd defendants, which induced the plaintiffs to enter into the said agreement marked and produced as "A1" annexed to the Plaint. Thus, the alleged cause of action is a delict, and therefore, the Commercial High Court does not have jurisdiction to hear the case.

It was further contended that the alleged misrepresentation had arisen prior to entering into the said agreement marked "A1". Hence, the cause of action as pleaded in the Plaint had arisen prior to entering the said agreement.

Therefore, it was submitted that the Commercial High Court lacks jurisdiction to hear and determine the plaintiff's case.

Submissions of the 3rd defendant in SC/Appeal No. 80/2015

The learned President's Counsel for the 3rd defendant submitted that, according to the averments of the Plaint, it is evident that the plaintiffs' purported claim is based on an alleged misrepresentation and the incorrect warranty given to the plaintiffs. Thus, the purported cause of action pleaded by the plaintiffs did not arise from a commercial transaction and therefore, it did not fall within the scope of the First Schedule to the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 10 of 1996. Therefore, the Commercial High Court does not have the jurisdiction to hear and determine the said action as it did not arise from a 'commercial transaction'.

Submissions of the plaintiffs in SC/Appeal No. 80/2015

The learned counsel for the plaintiffs submitted that the averments in the Plaint are in respect of a breach of a misrepresentation and a warranty contained in the Agreement No. 1717 produced and marked as "A1" and not prior to entering into the said agreement.

It was further submitted that the case of the plaintiffs is in respect of a breach of agreement arising from a commercial transaction, and the defendants admitted entering into the said agreement "A1"). Further, the 1st defendant admitted that the said agreement was a commercial transaction by admitting the jurisdiction of the court at the time of making admissions at the trial.

It was further contended that, in any event, the misrepresentation led to the entering into the commercial transaction, and therefore, the Commercial High Court is vested with the jurisdiction to hear and determine the action. Hence, in the foregoing circumstances, the order of the Commercial High Court answering the said issues Nos. 16 and 20 in favour of the plaintiffs is correct, and the Commercial High Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the action filed by the plaintiffs.

Has the High Court of the Western Province (Exercising Civil Jurisdiction and holden at Colombo) erred in law by holding that it had jurisdiction to hear and determine the action filed by the respondent

The Commercial High Court held that the cause of action pleaded in the Plaint had arisen out of a commercial transaction, and thus, the court did have jurisdiction to hear the action filed by the plaintiff.

However, the defendants submitted that the cause of action pleaded in the plaint is based on an alleged misrepresentation and the breach of warranty given prior to entering into the commercial transaction under reference. Further, misrepresentation is a delict and therefore, it does not fall within the definition of a commercial transaction. Thus, the alleged cause of action pleaded in the Plaint did not fall within the First Schedule to the High Court of the Provinces Act, and therefore, the said court does not have jurisdiction to hear and determine the case. Thus, it is necessary to consider the following in the instant appeal:

Whether the alleged cause of action arose;

(1) prior to entering into the agreement contract sought to be enforced,
(2) as a result of misrepresentation and warranties given by the defendant, which is a delict, and
(3) from a commercial transaction.

Jurisdiction of the Commercial High Court

A High Court was established under the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 10 of 1996 (hereinafter referred to as the "High Court of the Provinces Act") to hear and determine all actions, inter alia, where a cause of action has arisen out of a commercial transaction.

Section 2(1) of High Court of the Provinces Act states:

> "Every High Court established by Article 154P of the Constitution for a Province shall, with effect from such date as the Minister may, by Order published in the Gazette appoint, in respect of such High Court have exclusive jurisdiction and shall have cognizance of and full power to hear and determine, in the manner provided for by written law, all actions, applications and proceedings specified in the First Schedule to this Act, if the party or parties defendant to such action resides or reside, or the cause of action has arisen, or the contract sought to be enforced was made, or in the case of applications or proceedings under the Companies Act, No. 17 of 1982 the registered office of the Company is situated, within the province for which such High Court is established.

The First Schedule to the said Act as amended by Gazette No. 943/12 dated 1st of October, 1996 states as follows:

> 1) All actions where the cause of action has arisen out of commercial transactions (including causes of action relating to banking, the export and import of merchandise, services affreightment, insurance, mercantile agency, mercantile usage, and the construction of any mercantile document) in which the debt, damage or demand is for a sum exceeding three million rupees or such other amount as may be fixed by the Minister from time to time, by Notification published in the Gazette, other than actions instituted under the Debt Recovery (Special Provisions), No. 2 of 1990.

2) All applications and proceedings under the Companies Act, No. 07 of 2007.
3) All proceedings required to be taken under the Intellectual Property Act, No. 36 of 2003 in the High Court established under Article 154P of the Constitution.

[emphasis added]

At present, the threshold to hear and determine matters in the Commercial High Court was increased to Rs. 50 Million by Gazette No. 2312/26 dated 28th of December, 2022.

Cause of action pleaded in the plaint

In the Plaint, the plaintiffs plead that they entered into an agreement produced marked as "A1" with the defendants to take over the assets and liabilities of the 1st defendant company. However, due to the alleged breach of a misrepresentation and the warranty contained in Clause 4(iii) of the said agreement produced with the Plaint marked as "A1", the plaintiffs had suffered damages of Rs. 206,036,188/-.

Clause 4 (iii) of the said agreement states;

> "The Company had provided and/or will provide to PMB Credit Card true correct and complete copies of the Accounts of the Company ("Financial Statements") and that such Financial Statements are in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles."

In this regard, the learned President's Counsel brought the attention of this court to paragraph 14 of the plaint, which stated;

> "The Plaintiffs reiterate that the Plaintiffs would not have entered into the aforesaid Agreement to take over the liabilities of the 1st Defendant up to a maximum of Rs. 785 Million if not for the credit card receivables of the 1st Defendant reflected in Annexures C(II) and C(III) to the Agreement bearing No. 1717 represented to the Plaintiffs as true and correct Financial Statements of the 1st Defendant prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting standards."

In the circumstances, the plaintiffs stated that they instituted action in the Commercial High Court against the defendants, claiming damages jointly and severally for the misrepresentation and breach of warranty that resulted in them purchasing shares of the said company.

It is pertinent to note that the misrepresentation and the incorrect warranty referred to in the Plaint were matters that took place during negotiations. Further, such matters had led to entering into the commercial transaction under consideration. Hence, it needs to be considered whether the cause of action pleaded in the Plaint relates to a misrepresentation and giving an incorrect warranty prior to entertaining the said commercial transaction, and therefore, the Commercial High Court has no jurisdiction to hear and determine the case.

In the instant appeal, the plaintiffs stated that they entered into the said commercial transaction on the premise that the defendants had provided them with accurate and complete copies of the 1st defendant's financial statements; records and related entries, corporate status, and the details of the depositors, credit card receivables, and liabilities. However, the defendants failed to disclose the true figures of the assets and liabilities of the 1st defendant company including the receivables from the credit cards issued by the said company.

Finality Clause

It is pertinent to note that there is a finality clause in the agreement marked as 'P1. Clause 14 of the said Agreement states;

> "This Agreement, including the Schedules and Annexures hereto, sets forth the entire agreement between the Parties on this subject and supersedes all prior negotiations, understandings and agreements between the Parties concerning the subject matter."

Thus, the finality clause mentioned above excludes negotiations, understandings, and agreements between the parties prior to entering the said agreement. However, the said Clause states that the Schedules and Annexures to the agreement consist of the entire agreement. Hence, anything relating to or arising from the said Schedules or Annexures should be considered part and parcel of the agreement produced with the Plaint marked as "A1".

A careful consideration of the plaint shows that the plaintiffs had instituted the action against the defendants, claiming damages jointly and severally on the basis of misrepresentation and breach of warranty referred to in Clause 4 (iii) of the said agreement and Annexures C(II) and C(III) to it. Thus, I am of the view that the alleged misrepresentation and breach of warranty referred to in the plaint are false within the scope of the said agreement filed along with the Plaint marked as "A1", as the annexures to the agreement are integral parts of the said agreement.

Whether the misrepresentation pleaded by the plaintiff amounts to a delict

Section 3 of the Introduction of Laws of English specifies the instances where English Law is applicable. In this context, it is pertinent to note that after the Dutch invasion of the coastal areas of Sri Lanka, the contracts and agreements were governed by Roman Dutch Law. However, after Sri Lanka became a colony of the British, our law of contract was superseded by English Law. Hence, at present, contracts and agreements are governed by the Roman Dutch Law supported by English Law.

Further, in 'The Law of Contracts' by C G Weeramanthry, Volume 1(reprinted in 1999) at pages 78 to 80 states;

> "Having reduced our sphere of inquiry to obligations recognised by the law, we must note that the term 'obligation' embraces not merely contractual but delictual or tortious obligations as well. It consequently becomes essential to distinguish obligations arising from contract from obligations arising from delict.
>
> A contractual obligation differs in nature from a delictual obligation in at least three respects.
>
> Firstly, contractual obligations arise from agreement between parties. In order to succeed, the plaintiff must depend on agreed terms, whereas in a delictual action the plaintiff does not and cannot spring from mere agreement between the parties.
>
> Secondly, duties arising from contract are owed to the parties to the contract (or their assignees), whereas delictual obligations are owed to a large and indeterminate class of person. The actual breach may however be by a specified individual, and enforcement of the duty therefore takes place against specified individual.

Thirdly, a delictual obligation imposes negative duties, that it to say, duties of forbearance, while a contractual obligation may impose positive or negative duties, this requiring either acts or forbearances.

A circumstance which tends to blur these distinctions between contract and delict is the fact that the very same situation may give rise to both contractual and delictual obligations. Thus where a common carrier causes damage by his negligence to goods entrusted to him, he would be liable in contract and alternatively in delict. A fraudulent misrepresentation in regard to the quality of goods may found an action in damages for breach of contract or an action in delict based on deceit.

The distinction between the two types of claim leads to the application of different principles and to the production of different results depending on whether the action is framed in contract or in tort. Thus the law of contract is concerned only with actual damages, whereas the law of delict sometimes awards exemplary damages. The law of contract is not concerned with pain of mind. Further, the form of action may have consequences on the question of remoteness of damage, for the tests of remoteness are different in contract and in tort. Most important of all, different criteria would determine the all-important question whether or not a cause of action has arisen."

Hence, a careful consideration of the facts and circumstances of the instant appeal shows that the cause of action pleaded in the Plaint arose from a misrepresentation and a breach of warranty that are incorporated in the said agreement marked as "A1".

Further, the cause of action pleaded in the Plaint has not arisen from a delict. In any event, misrepresentation, fraud, etc. that lead to entering into a commercial transaction cannot be considered as a delict as such matters lead to entering into an agreement or contract in respect of a commercial transaction fall within the First Schedule to the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 10 of 1996.

In this regard, Mark Fernando, J in Cornall and Company Limited v Mitsui and Company Limited [2000] 1 SLR 57 held that cases filed to claims damages arising from a commercial transaction can be heard by the Commercial High Court, i.e.;

> "In the context, that word only requires that the action "relates to", or "is connected with", or "involves", a debt, damage or demand (exceeding the prescribed amount); and that is consistent with its dictionary meanings."

Conclusion

In the circumstances, I am of the view that the alleged cause of action pleaded in the Plaint comes within the purview of the said High Court of Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 10 of 1996 and therefore, the Commercial High Court has the jurisdiction to hear the case under reference.

Has the said Order dated 11th May, 2013 marked and annexed hereto as 'X14' failed to properly construe the cause of action as pleaded by the 1st and 2nd respondents and thus wrongly conclude that the High Court of the Western Province (Exercising Civil Jurisdiction and holden at Colombo) did have jurisdiction to hear and determine the 1st and 2nd Respondent's Case?

No

In light of the above, the other questions of law need not be considered.

Samayawardhena, J.

The two Plaintiffs filed this action in District Court to partition the land described in the schedule to the plaint among two of them and the 1st-3rd Defendants. The contesting 3rd Defendant who is also a co-owner claimed prescriptive title to the entire land. After trial, the District Court dismissed the 3rd Defendant's prescriptive claim and proceeded to partition the land according to the pedigree set out in the plaint. According to the plaint, the allocation of shares shall be as follows:

1st Plaintiff	8/24
2nd Plaintiff	8/24
1st Defendant	2/24
2nd Defendant	3/24
3rd Defendant	3/24
Total	24/24

The Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal filed by the 3rd Defendant. This Court granted leave to appeal to the 3rd Defendant against the Judgment of the Court of Appeal on several questions of law. However, at the argument, learned President's Counsel for the 3rd Defendant confined his argument to one question of law: whether the Court of Appeal erred in law when it held that there is no basis to interfere with the Judgment of the District Court in respect of the devolution of title.

According to the pedigree of the Plaintiffs, there were four original owners, namely, Marcelina, Pelis, Lusia and Andiris. The Plaintiffs state that Marcelina transferred her ¼ share by Deed P1 to Philip, who is the father of the plaintiffs, and thereby they became entitled to that ¼ share by inheritance.

The Plaintiffs also state that Lusia's ¼ share devolved on her widower and three children, and they transferred that ¼ share to Philip and Lawrence by Deed P2 and thereafter Lawrence transferred his rights also to Philip by Deed P3 making Philip entitled to the entire ¼ share of Lusia. The Plaintiffs claim Lusia'a ¼ share also through their father, Philip.

The contention of the learned President's Counsel for the 3rd Defendant is that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to a ½ share of the land by Deeds P1-P3, and they are only entitled to 7/288 shares from Deed P1 and another 7/288 shares from Deeds P2 and P3.

The 1st Plaintiff who gave evidence at the trial for the Plaintiffs has been cross-examined on this point but the learned District Judge has not paid attention to it in the Judgment, probably because in the Judgment he mainly focused on the prescriptive claim of the 3rd Defendant.

However, by closer scrutiny of those Deeds, it is now clear that the Plaintiffs are only entitled to 7/288 shares from Deed P1 and another 7/288 shares from Deeds P2 and P3, and not the entire ¼ share of Marcelina by P1 or the entire ¼ share of Lusia by P2 and P3. That is what is stated in those Deeds. The plaintiffs claimed title to a ½ share of the land solely based on those deeds, and not on any other basis.

The Court of Appeal is not correct when it held that there is no necessity to interfere with the devolution of title as accepted by the learned District Judge.

The correct shares should be as follows:

1st Plaintiff	7/288
2nd Plaintiff	7/288
1st Defendant	24/288
2nd Defendant	36/288
3rd Defendant	36/288
Unallotted	178/288
Total	288/288

The question of law upon which leave to appeal was granted is answered in the affirmative. The learned District Judge will enter Interlocutory Decree according to the share allocation set out above. The other findings of the learned District Judge will stand. The appeal is allowed. No costs.

Introduction

This partition case has a checkered history. The plaintiffs filed this action in the District Court of Ratnapura to partition the land known as Madawatta described in the schedule to the plaint in accordance with the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977 among the plaintiffs and the 1st-8th defendants. The 1st-8th defendants in their joint statement of claim inter alia took up the position that since this land is subject to service (rajakariya) to the Sabaragamu Maha Saman Devalaya, the plaintiffs cannot maintain this action as partition cannot be sought for land subject to such service.

Subsequently, upon the application of the 1st-8th defendants, the Basnayake Nilame of Sabaragamu Maha Saman Devalaya was added as the 9th defendant. He submitted that partition is possible subject to service. At the trial, all parties agreed that this land is subject to service to the Sabaragamu Maha Saman Devalaya and recorded it as a formal admission.

The 1st-8th defendants raised issue Nos. 14-26 and the 17th issue was on this question as to whether this land which is subject to service (rajakariya) to the Sabaragamu Maha Saman Devalaya can be partitioned according to the Partition Law. The trial proceeded and the plaintiffs closed their case. Thereafter, the Attorney-at-Law for the 1st-8th defendants made a belated application to try issue No. 17 as a preliminary question of law.

The learned District Judge by order dated 01.11.2004 answered this issue in the negative and dismissed the plaintiffs' action on the basis that the District Court has no jurisdiction to partition a land subject to rajakariya notwithstanding that the ninda lord consents to partition. On appeal, the Court of Appeal by judgment dated 12.01.2010 affirmed the order of the District Court. Thereafter, on 06.08.2010, the Court of Appeal granted leave to appeal against its own judgment to the Supreme Court.

The feudal land tenure system

The feudal land tenure system in Sri Lanka, commonly referred to as the "rajakariya" system, is a historical one that started well before the colonial periods.

The Sinhala king was the lord paramount of all the land in the country. On this basis king granted away whole villages to temples or individual persons on sannasa (සන්නස), royal grant etc., though much of the land was already held by private parties. A village (ගම) so granted to a temple is viharagama (විහාරගම) or dewalagama (දේවාලගම), and a village granted to an individual is nindagama (නින්දගම). The proprietor of a viharagama, dewalagama or nindagama was known as ninda proprietor or ninda lord. Each such village consisted of a number of holdings or allotments and each such holding was known as panguwa (පංගුව). The ninda lord could assign such holdings to people subject to service (rajakariya). Such people are known as nilakarayas (නිලකාරයා). Nilakarayas were of two kinds, namely paraveni nilakaraya (පරවේනි නිලකාරයා) and maruwena nilakaraya (මාරුවෙන නිලකාරයා). Paraveni nilakaraya's panguwa is known as paraveni panguwa (පරවේනි පංගුව) whereas maruwena nilakaraya's panguwa is known as maruvena panguwa (මාරුවෙන පංගුව). Paraveni nilakarayas are those who held their lands before the nindagama or viharagama or dewalagama was granted to the ninda lord, and maruvena nilakarayas are those who received their lands from the ninda lord subsequent to the royal grant. Paraveni nilakarayas are hereditary holders in perpetuity of the pangu subject to the performance of different services to the ninda lord who could be the chief of the temple or dewalaya. In practical terms, maruwena nilakarayas also fall into the same category. However, paraveni nilakaraya is now statutorily recognised as a holder of a paraveni pangu in perpetuity by section 2 of the Service Tenures Ordinance No. 4 of 1870.

The excerpts, observations and dicta found in the Full Bench decision in Appuhamy v. Menike (1917) 19 NLR 361 throw some light to better understand this ancient system. In this judgment, Ennis J. states at 362-363:

> Burge (vol. IV, p. 68), speaking of the hereditary tenure under the Sinhalese kings, says: "The king was the lord paramount of the soil, which was possessed by hereditary holders on the condition of doing service according to their caste. The liability to perform service was not a personal obligation, but attached to the land…Besides the land thus held by the ordinary peasant proprietors, there were the estates of the crown, of the church, and the chiefs. These are known as gabadagam, royal villages; viharagam and dewalagam, villages belonging to Buddhist monasteries and temples (dewala); and nindagam, villages of large proprietors. These last were ancestral property of the chiefs, or were originally royal villages bestowed from time to time on favourites of the court. In these estates certain portions…were retained for the use of the palace…while the rest was given out in parcels to cultivators, followers, and dependents, on condition…performing various services…These followers or dependents had at first no hereditary title to the parcels of land thus allotted to them. These allotments, however, generally passed from father to son, and in course of time hereditary title was in fact acquired. The real status of these followers was thus well described in 1824 by Mr. Wright, the Revenue Commissioner. Writing of the followers of the chief, he says: 'They are in fact servants by inheritance, whose wages are paid in lieu of money, and though he has the power of dismissing them and transferring their land to others if he pleases, this is seldom or rarely ever excised; they leaving in most instances a kind of birthright, by long residence and possession, living happily and contented in performing all the customary services which by the tenure of these lands they are bound to perform to their chief.' "

Pereira in his Collection (Pereira 303) says: "The only paraveni tenants were those who were on the land prior to the grant of the village to the ninda lord".

The word "paraveni" imports a right in perpetuity (Weerasinghe v. De Silva 6 S.C.C.17). It would seem then that historically paraveni nilakarayas were originally hereditary holders under the king before the grant of the royal village to the ninda lord. Thereafter certain followers were given allotments (panguwa) by the lord, and in the course of years the holders of these allotments assimilated their tenure to that of the original paraveni tenants, i.e., the holding became heritable and alienable, and the holders acquired by prescription all the rights the original paraveni tenants under the king.

In the same judgment, De Sampayo J. states at 367-368:

The theory of the old Sinhalese constitution, as much as that of the English constitution, was that the king was the lord paramount of all the land, and on this basis the Sinhalese king granted away whole villages to temples or individual persons, though much of the land was already held by private parties. A village so granted to a temple is a viharagama or dewalagama, and a village granted to an individual is a nindagama. The proprietor of a temple village or a nindagama would also, after the grant, assign portions to tenants subject to service. Sir John D'Oyley's Notes quoted by Marshall state (see Marshall's Judgments 300) that paraveni tenants are those who held their lands before the nindagama or the temple village was granted to the proprietor, and maruvena tenants are those who receive their panguwas from the proprietor subsequent to the grant. This is confirmed by the Service Tenures Commissioners, who in their report (see Pereira's Collection 303) say that the only paraveni tenants were those who were on the land prior to the grant of the village to the ninda lord or vihare or dewale. With regard to the nature of tile paraveni tenant's right, Sawers (see Marshall's Judgments 307), after stating that a person having "the absolute possession of (and right to) real or personal property has the power to dispose of such property unlimitedly," adds "but to the unlimited power of disposing of landed property there was this exception, that lands liable to rajakariya, or any public service to the Crown, or to a superior, could not be disposed of either by gift, sale, or request to a vihare or dewale without the sanction of the king, or the superior to whom the service was due."

Basnayake C.J. in Herath v. Attorney General (1958) 60 NLR 193 at 205-206 traced the history of this ancient system in the following terms:

A village or gama in respect of which services (rajakariya) were performed are of four kinds, viz., gabadagama, nindagama, viharagama, and dewalagama. A gabadagama is a royal village which was the exclusive property of the Sovereign. The Royal Store or Treasury was supplied from the gabadagama, which the tenants had to cultivate gratuitously in consideration of being holders of praveni panguwas. A nindagama is a village granted by the Sovereign to a chief or noble or other person on a sannasa or grant. Similarly, a village granted by the Sovereign to a vihare is a viharagama and to a dewale is a dewalagama. Each gama or village consisted of a number of holdings or minor villages. Each such holding or minor village was known as a panguwa. Each panguwa consisted of a number of fields and gardens. Panguwas were of two kinds, viz., praveni or paraveni panguwa and maruwena panguwa. A praveni panguwa is a hereditary holding and a maruwena panguwa is a holding given out to a tenant for each cultivation year or for a period of years. The holder of a panguwa was known as a nilakaraya. They were of two kinds: Praveni or paraveni nilakarayas and maruwena nilakarayas. The praveni nilakarayas are generally those who were holders of panguwas prior to the Royal Grant and the ninda lord is not free to change them. They were free to transmit their lands to their male heirs, but were not free to sell or mortgage their rights. They were obliged to perform services in respect of their panguwas. The services varied according as the ninda lord was an individual, a vihare or a dewale. In the case of vihares or dewales personal services were such as keeping the buildings in repair, cultivating the fields of the temple, preparing the daily dana, participating in the annual procession, and performing services at the daily pooja of the vihare or dewale. In the scheme of land tenure the panguwa though consisting of extensive lands is indivisible and the nilakarayas are jointly and severally liable to render services or pay dues. Though the panguwa was indivisible, especially after a praveni nilakaraya's right to sell, gift, devise, and mortgage his panguwa came to be recognised, the practice came into existence of different persons who obtained rights from a nilakaraya occupying separate allotments of land for convenience of possession. The maruwena nilakaraya though known as a tenant-at-will held on a tenancy which lasted at least for one cultivation year at a time. Unlike the praveni nilakaraya he could be changed by the ninda lord; but it was seldom done. He went on year after year, but was not entitled to transmit his rights to his heirs. On the death of a maruwena tenant his heirs are entitled to continue only if they receive the tenancy. Though in theory maruwena tenure was precarious, in fact it was not so. So long as he paid his dues the ninda lord rarely disturbed him. Besides the praveni and maruwena panguwas in a nindagama, viharagama or dewalagama, there were also lands owned absolutely by the ninda lord both ownership and possession being in him.

In addition, the king preserved some lands for himself that were known as gabadagam (ගබඩාගම්) for the works of the royal palace. With the disappearance of kings as rulers, gabadagam also disappeared.

The abolition of the feudal land tenure system in Sri Lanka occurred in stages over time. The British colonial administration introduced certain land reforms during their rule, which began in the early 19th century. In 1832, the Colebrooke-Cameron Commission implemented land reforms with the objective of abolishing the feudal land tenure system. The shift from the old system to the new one was a gradual and complex process.

The Service Tenures Ordinance No. 4 of 1870 came into being in order "to define the services due by the paraveni tenant of wiharagama, dewalagama and nindagama lands and to provide for the commutation of those services." The following definitions were given by section 2 of the Ordinance.

> "maruwena nilakaraya" shall mean the tenant at will of a maruwena pangu.
> "maruwena pangu" shall mean an allotment or share of land in a temple or nindagama village held by one or more tenants at will.
>
> "nindagama proprietor" shall mean any proprietor of nindagama entitled to demand services from any praveni nilakaraya or maruwena nilakaraya, for and in respect of a praveni pangu or maruwena pangu held by him.
>
> "praveni nilakaraya" shall mean the holder of a praveni pangu in perpetuity, subject to the performance of certain services to the temple or nindagama proprietor.
>
> "praveni pangu" shall mean an allotment or share of land in a temple or nindagama village held in perpetuity by one or more holders, subject to the performance of certain services to the temple or nindagama proprietor.
>
> "temple" shall include wihara and dewala.
> "wiharagama proprietor" or "dewalagama proprietor" shall include the officer of any wihara or dewala respectively entitled to demand services from any praveni nilakaraya or maruwena nilakaraya, for and in respect of a praveni pangu or maruwena pangu held by him.

After the enactment of the Service Tenures Ordinance, the performance of services is not compulsory. Instead, sections 9, 10 and 14 provided for the commutation of nilakaraya's services by payment of money and section 24 imposed a period of limitation of one year in the case of the recovery of arrears of personal services and two years in the case of commuted dues. The right to recovery of services or dues if not enforced for ten years was to result in the loss forever of the ninda lord's rights in respect of the pangu. Section 25 also deprived the ninda lord of the right to proceed to ejectment against the nilakaraya on his failure to render personal services or to pay commutation.

Sections 9, 10, 14, 24 and 25 of the Service Tenure Ordinance read as follows:

9. On the day appointed in such notice the commissioners shall enter into their inquiries, and shall then, or on such other early day as they shall then and there from time to time publicly appoint, hear, try, and determine as follows:-

(a) the tenure of each pangu subject to service in the village, whether it be praveni or maruwena;

(b) the names, so far as the same can be ascertained, of the proprietors and holders of each praveni pangu;

(c) the nature and extent of the services due for each praveni pangu;

(d) the annual amount of money payment for which such services may be fairly commuted at the time the registries are made.

And their determination shall be final and conclusive in that or any future proceeding, whether before the said commissioners or any other judicial tribunal, as to the tenure of the pangus in such village, whether it be praveni or maruwena, the nature of the service due for and in respect of each praveni pangu, and the annual amount of money payment for which the services due for each praveni pangu may be fairly commuted at the time those registries are made.

10. So soon as the commissioners shall complete their inquiry into the claims in any village, they shall cause to be numbered and entered in a book of registry a list of praveni pangus in such village, and shall further cause to be entered the names, so far as the same can be ascertained, of the proprietors and tenants of each pangu, the nature and extent of the services due for such pangu, and the annual amount of money payment for which such services may be fairly commuted at the time the registry is made, and shall duly sign such registry and transmit the same to the kachcheri of the district.

14. If any praveni nilakaraya shall be desirous of commuting any service as aforesaid for a money payment, he shall, during the pendency of the commission (and the commission shall be held to be pending until the Governor-General[3] shall declare it to be at an end by notice in the Gazette), transmit to the commissioners, and, after the close of the commission, to the Government Agent of the district in which the praveni pangu is situated, an application in writing to that effect, which application shall set forth the name of the party making it, the name and number of the pangu in respect of which such service may be due, and the name of the village in which the same is situated. If there be more than one praveni nilakaraya in any praveni pangu, the application to commute must be made or acquiesced in by a majority of the entire number of nilakarayas who shall have attained the age of sixteen years. The commissioners or the Government Agent to whom such application shall be made shall issue a notice to the proprietor of the pangu, informing him that, on a day to be named in such notice, the application will be considered and determined upon. A copy of the application must be served with the notice.

24. Arrears of personal services in cases where the praveni nilakaraya shall not have commuted shall not be recoverable for any period beyond a year; arrears of commuted dues, where the praveni nilakaraya shall have commuted, shall not be recoverable for any period beyond two years. If no services shall have been rendered, and no commuted dues be paid for ten years, and no action shall have been brought therefor, the right to claim services or commuted dues shall be deemed to have been lost forever, and the pangu shall be deemed free thereafter from any liability on the part of the nilakarayas to render services or pay commuted dues therefor:

Provided, however, that if at the time of such right of action accruing the proprietor shall not be resident within Ceylon, or if by reason of his minority or insanity he shall be disabled from instituting such action, the period of prescription of such action shall begin to run, in every such case, from the time when such absence or disability shall have ceased.

25. It shall be lawful for any proprietor to recover damages in any competent court against the holder or holders of any praveni pangu who shall not have commuted, and who shall have failed to render the services defined in the registry herein before referred to. In assessing such damages, it shall be competent for the court to award not only the sum for which the services shall have been assessed by the commissioners for the purpose of perpetual commutation, but such further sum as it shall consider fair and reasonable to cover the actual damages sustained by the proprietor through the default of the nilakaraya or nilakarayas to render such personal services at the time when they were due; but it shall not be lawful for any proprietor to proceed to ejectment against his praveni nilakaraya for default of performing services or paying commuted dues; the value of those services or dues shall be recoverable against such nilakaraya by seizure and sale of the crop of fruits on the pangu, or failing these, by the personal property of such nilakaraya, or failing both, by a sale of the pangu, subject to the personal services, or commuted dues in lieu thereof, due thereon to the proprietor. The proceeds of such sale are to be applied in payment of the amount due to the proprietor, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the evicted nilakarayas, unless there should be any puisne incumbrance upon the holding, in which case such balance shall be applied to satisfy such incumbrance.

Nearly after a century from this Ordinance, Nindagama Lands Act No. 30 of 1968 became part of our law. In terms of section 29 of the Act, the Service Tenures Ordinance ceased to apply to any nindagama land. The Nindagama Lands Act was passed for the abolition of services due in respect of nindagama lands and for the declaration of tenants or holders as owners of such lands.

Sections 2-5 of the Nindagama Lands Act read as follows:

2. The services due from any tenant or holder of any nindagama land to any proprietor thereof are hereby abolished, and accordingly-

(a) no such proprietor shall be entitled to demand the performance of such services or to demand or receive any sum of money (due or which may fall due) in commutation of such services, from any tenant or holder thereof; and

(b) no such tenant or holder shall be liable to perform such services, or ten to pay such sum of money.

3. Every tenant or holder of any nindagama land is hereby declared to be the owner thereof.

4. No tenant or holder of any nindagama land shall be liable to pay compensation to the proprietor thereof or to any other person for any loss or damage incurred or suffered by such proprietor or other person, whether directly or indirectly, by reason of the abolition of the services due by such tenant or holder in respect of that land.

5. No tenant or holder of any nindagama land shall be liable to pay compensation to the proprietor thereof or to any other person for any loss or damage incurred or suffered by such proprietor or other person, whether directly or indirectly, by reason of his becoming an owner thereof.

However, according to the definition given to the term "nindagama land" in section 31 of the Nindagama Lands Act, viharagam and devalagam are unaffected by the Act.

"nindagama land" means any land in respect of which a proprietor thereof was, prior to the date of the commencement of this Act, entitled to demand services from any praveni nilakaraya or maruwena nilakaraya for and in respect of a praveni pangu or maruwena pangu held by any such nilakaraya, or to demand or receive from any such nilakaraya any sum of money in commutation of any such services, but does not include viharagama or devalagama land.

The Land Reform Law No. 1 of 1972 represented a significant step towards the further abolition of feudal land tenure.

Partition Law and the position of paraveni nilakaraya

The oldest Ordinance which governed partition proceedings was Ordinance No. 21 of 1844.

This Ordinance was replaced by the Partition Ordinance No. 10 of 1863.

These two Ordinances did not contain any special provision regarding the competency of a paraveni nilakaraya to partition a pangu land.

In Jotihamy v. Dingirihamy (1906) 3 Balasingham's Reports 67, the question whether a paraveni nilakaraya can file a partition action to partition a paraveni pangu was considered. The Court answered the question in the negative on two grounds: firstly, the paraveni nilakaraya lacks full dominium in the property, and secondly, the service required from them is indivisible. It is worth quoting the full judgment delivered by Wendt J. with the agreement of Middleton J. as some of the later cases followed this judgment without any hesitation.

> This is an action of the most novel kind, and in all my experience I have never known another like it. Shortly, this is an application by a man, who has purchased an undivided share of a Panguwa in a Nindagama that is to say, the interest of one of the Nilakarayo. The first question that suggests itself to me is whether the lands can be said to "belong" to the parties within the meaning of the Partition Ordinance. The Ordinance has hitherto been regarded as requiring nothing short of the full dominium. Now the dominium in Service Tenures land is generally regarded as vested in the person usually described as proprietor of the Nindagama, or the over lord, while the Nilakarayo are similarly spoken of as tenants. I do not of course forget that the interests of a Paraveny Nilakaraya cannot be determined against his will by a proprietor although upon the non-performance of services judgment can be recovered for damages and the interest of the tenant sold up and so brought to an end. But I do not see that this makes a tenant an owner; he cannot therefore claim partition of the land. Another objection is based upon the indivisibility of the services. Counsel on both sides were allowed the opportunity of looking into the authorities on this point but have not been able to produce anything which recognises the right of a tenant to maintain a partition action. We are therefore invited to decide the appeal upon general principles. Applying these to the best of our ability we think that the provisions of the Partition Ordinance do not apply to lands of the character of those in question. We therefore reverse the decree appealed from and dismiss the action with costs.

The question whether a paraveni nilakaraya can file a partition action to partition a paraveni pangu was addressed in the Partition Act No. 16 of 1951. Section 54 of the Act expressly recognised the right of the paraveni nilakaraya to institute a partition action:

54(1). Every praveni nilakaraya shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be a co-owner of the praveni panguwa of which he is a shareholder and shall be entitled to institute a partition action to obtain a decree for the partition or sale of that panguwa or of any of the lands in that panguwa.

(2). The rights of the proprietor of a nindagama shall in no way be affected by the partition or sale under this Act of a panguwa or of any of the lands in a panguwa, and that proprietor shall be entitled to exercise those rights as though that partition or sale had not occurred.

(3). In this section, the expressions "praveni nilakaraya" and "praveni panguwa" have the meanings respectively assigned to them in section 2 of the Service Tenures Ordinance.

Section 48(1) of the Partition Act No. 16 of 1951 which recognised finality of interlocutory and final decrees of partition "free from all encumbrances whatsoever other than those specified in that decree", further acknowledged that "the rights of a proprietor of a nindagama" was unaffected whether or not it is specified in the decree.

Section 48(1) read as follows:

48(1). Save as provided in subsection (3) of this section, the interlocutory decree entered under section 26 and the final decree of partition entered under section 36 shall, subject to the decision on any appeal which may be preferred therefrom, be good and sufficient evidence of the title of any person as to any right share or interest awarded therein to him and be final and conclusive for all purposes against all persons whomsoever, whatever right, title or interest they have, claim to have, to or in the land to which such decrees relate and notwithstanding any omission or defect of procedure or in the proof of title adduced before the court or the fact that all persons concerned are not parties to the partition action; and the right, share or interest awarded by any such decree shall be free from all encumbrances whatsoever other than those specified in that decree.

In this subsection "encumbrance" means any mortgage, lease, usufruct, servitude, fideicommissum, life interest, trust, or any interest whatsoever howsoever arising except a constructive or charitable trust, a lease at will or for a period not exceeding one month, and the rights of a proprietor of a nindagama.

The Partition Act No. 16 of 1951 was replaced by the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977, which represents the current law governing partition actions. However, the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977, does not contain a provision similar to that of section 54 of the Partition Act No. 16 of 1951. I am aware that as a general principal the Court cannot assume a mistake in an Act of Parliament. Nevertheless, several reasons can be attributed to this omission.

One is, on 25.07.1960, the Privy Council, which was the highest Court at that time, in the case of The Attorney General v. Herath (1960) 62 NLR 145 decided that paraveni nilakarayas are the owners of the land.

The other is, the services due in respect of nindagama lands were abolished and all nilakarayas were declared as owners by the Nindagama Lands Act No. 30 of 1968.

These developments took place after the enactment of the Partition Act No. 16 of 1951 but before the enactment of the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977. I doubt whether this would have led the drafter of the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977 to choose not to include a provision similar to section 54 of the Partition Act No. 16 of 1951.

This omission can also be deliberate on the part of the legislature.

It is noteworthy that despite this omission, paraveni nilakarayas continued to file partition actions in the District Courts without any objection from the ninda lords. The District Courts entertained these cases without hesitation until the learned District Judge in the present case held that, following the enactment of Partition Law No. 21 of 1977, no partition action can be filed for land subject to rajakariya. This is stated by none other than the ninda lord in the instant action (Basnayake Nilame of Sabaragamu Maha Saman Devalaya) in his written submissions tendered to the District Court dated 29.06.2004 and 02.09.2004 who says a paraveni pangu can be partitioned subject to rajakariya.

However, as I pointed out earlier, in the interpretation section of the Nindagama Lands Act, there was a reference excluding viharagam and devalagam from the operation of the Act. Therefore, whether paraveni nilakarayas in viharagam and devalagam can institute a partition action remains unresolved.

With this in view, a Bill was presented to Parliament in this year (which was gazetted on 23.02.2023) to amend the Partition Law introducing provisions similar to section 54 of the Partition Act No. 16 of 1951 expressly stating that paraveni nilakaraya can file a partition action to partition a paraveni pangu in a temple land according to the Partition Law. Following are the proposed amendments to the principal statute.

> 2A(1) Every praveni nilakaraya or any person who derives title from a praveni nilakaraya in a praveni pangu of a temple land shall be entitled to institute a partition action for the partition or sale of such praveni pangu in accordance with the provisions of this Law.
> (2) Where there are more than one praveni nilakarayas or persons having an interest in a praveni pangu, such praveni nilakarayas or such persons may be made parties to any action instituted under subsection (1).
>
> (3)(a) For the avoidance of doubt, it is hereby stated that the partition or sale of a praveni pangu shall not affect any rights of a temple enforceable under the provisions of the Service Tenures Ordinance (Chapter 467) and the temple shall be entitled to exercise rights under such Ordinance through its trustee or Viharadhipathi as the case may be, as though no partition or sale had occurred in respect of the entirety of the praveni pangu or any portion thereof as the case may be.

(b) Any right of a temple enforceable under the Service Tenures Ordinance (Chapter 467) shall remain unaffected irrespective of the fact that a trustee or a Viharadhipathi of such temple has been or has not been made a party to a partition action instituted under the provisions of this section.

(4)(a) A trustee appointed with reference to a temple referred to in subsection (1) under the provisions of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance (Chapter 318) or a Viharadipathi of a temple which is exempted under the provisions of section 4(1) of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance (Chapter 318), as the case may be, may make an application to be a party to the partition action instituted under subsection (1).

(b) Where such trustee or Viharadhipathi, as the case may be, makes an application under paragraph (a) of this subsection, the court shall make such trustee or Viharadhipathi a party to such action.

48(1) Substitution for the words "a lease at will or for a period not exceeding one month" of the words "a lease at will or for a period not exceeding one month or the rights of a temple enforceable under the Service Tenures Ordinance (Chapter 467)."

83. By the insertion of the following new definitions:

"praveni nilakaraya" shall have the same meaning assigned to it under section 2 of the Service Tenures Ordinance (Chapter 467) to the extent it relates to a temple;

"praveni pangu" shall include any land or a part of any land held by one or more persons subject to the performance of any service or rendering of any duties to the temple as defined in section 2 of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance (Chapter 318) in respect of which an order for commuted dues in lieu of services under section 15 of the Service Tenures Ordinance (Chapter 467) has been made and shall include the same meaning assigned to it in section 2 of the Service Tenures Ordinance (Chapter 467) to the extent it relates to a temple;"

"temple" shall have the same meaning assigned to it in section 2 of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance (Chapter 318) in so far as such temple is possessed of rights as specified under the Service Tenures Ordinance (Chapter 467);

"Trustee" shall have the same meaning assigned to it in section 2 of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance (Chapter 318).

The order of the District Court affirmed by the Court of Appeal

The District Court decided to dismiss the partition action on four grounds:

(a) Lack of absolute ownership to the land to be partitioned by the plaintiffs;
(b) The indivisibility of service to be performed to the ninda lord;
(c) Partition Law No. 21 of 1977 does not provide for partition of lands subject to rajakariya;
(d) Land subject to rajakariya cannot be partitioned even with the consent of the ninda lord.

Who can institute a partition action?

The question as to who can institute a partition action relates to (a), (c) and (d) above. The short answer to the question of who can institute a partition action is that any co-owner to the land can institute a partition action.

Section 10 of the Ordinance No. 21 of 1844 enacted that "when any landed property shall belong in common to two or more owners, it is and shall be competent to any one or more such owners to compel a partition of the said property". Section 15 provided for any such owner to seek sale of the land instead of partition when "on account of the number or poverty of the parties, the nature or value of the property, or from other causes, a partition would be injurious or impossible".

Section 2 of both the Partition Ordinance No. 10 of 1863 and the Partition Act No. 16 of 1951 contained similar provisions, addressing both partition and sale within the same section.

Section 2 of the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977 enacts the same:

> 2. Where any land belongs in common to two or more owners, any one or more of them, whether or not his or their ownership is subject to any life interest in any other person, may institute an action for the partition or sale of the land in accordance with the provisions of this Law.

The term "owner" was not defined in the previous Partition Ordinances or the Partition Act. Nor is it defined in the present Partition Law. In the absence of a specific definition of the term "owner" in the Act, it should be construed to refer to a person possessing the attributes of ownership as recognised by the general law at the time of the enactment of the Partition Law. Any modification to this interpretation should be made in consideration of the context in which the term is used. This was what was stated by the Privy Council in The Attorney General v. Herath at page 147 when it was called upon to define the term "owner" in the context of a different statute.

What are the rights sufficient to constitute a person an "owner" under our law? The short answer is, the right to possession, the right to recover possession, and the right to disposition. I need only to quote pages 147-148 of the same Privy Council decision for a complete answer:

> Lee (Introduction to Roman Dutch Law 5th edition p. 121) in a chapter headed "The Meaning of ownership" reflecting the views of Van der Linden says:-
>
> "Dominion or Ownership is the relation protected by law in which a man stands to a thing, which he may: (a) possess, (b) use and enjoy, (c) alienate. The right to possess implies the right to vindicate, that is, to recover possession from a person who possesses without title to possess derived from the owner."
>
> Grotius in Book 2 chapter 3 of his Introduction to the Jurisprudence of Holland says:-
>
> "Ownership is the property in a thing whereby a person who has not the possession may acquire the same by legal process."
>
> Commenting on this Lee says (p. 121) "Grotius selects this right as the most signal quality of ownership".
> Maasdorp (Volume 2 p. 27) says the rights of an owner are "comprised under three heads, namely, (1) the right of possession and the right to recover possession; (2) the right of use and enjoyment; and (3) the right of disposition". He goes on to say "these three factors are all essential to the idea of ownership but need not all be present in an equal degree at one and the same time".

The next question is whether a modification of the general meaning of the term "owner" is required in the context of the Partition Law.

Full ownership

Should the plaintiff have "full ownership" or "full dominium" or "absolute ownership" in the property to institute a partition action?

As previously quoted, in the early case of Jotihamy v. Dingirihamy, Wendt J. thought that "full dominium" was necessary and that in service tenure lands it vested in the ninda lord and not in paraveni nilakarayas. Paraveni nilakarayas were recognised as tenants. This judgment was followed by Hutchinson C.J. in Kaluwa v. Rankira (1907) 3 Balasingham's Reports 264.

However, in the discussion of parties entitled to institute partition actions, K.D.P. Wickremesinghe in The Law of Partition in Ceylon (1969) at page 46 under the subheading "Trustee and Beneficiary" states:

> To be entitled to institute a partition action it is not necessary that the co-owner should have absolute ownership in the property.

Citing several judgments in support, the learned author states at page 48:

> [T]he principle in all these cases is that a co-owner who institutes a partition action should have the legal estate of the property vested in him so that he can rightly be considered the owner. He need not be one who is entitled to the absolute dominium or who is beneficially interested.

In Daniel v. Saranelis Appu (1903) 7 NLR 163 the plaintiff who was a trustee of a temple filed a partition action claiming an undivided two-fifths share of the land. It was argued for the respondent that a trustee is not an owner such as is contemplated by the Partition Ordinance No. 10 of 1863. Rejecting this argument, Layard C.J. with the agreement of Wendt J. held at 165-166:

> It appears to me that Ordinance No. 10 of 1863 was not intended to be limited to persons who have an absolute ownership in the property, but that it also includes one who has an undivided share vested in him as trustee. The English Courts have allowed a partition suit to be brought by freehold tenants in possession, whether they are entitled in fee simple, or in fee tail or for life, and there have been cases in which they have allowed a partition action where an estate was vested in a person for a term of years only. The trustee under the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance appears to me to be the owner of the temple property subject to the terms of the trust on which the property is vested in him, and I see no reason why he should not be allowed to bring an action for partition under Ordinance No. 10 of 1863. No authority has been cited to us in which it has been held that such a trustee cannot bring a partition suit under that Ordinance. This Court has recognized the rights of executors and administrators as parties to a partition suit under Ordinance No. 10 of 1863, and having allowed trustees to be parties in such suits I see no reason why a trustee created by statute should be excluded from the right of bringing a partition suit, unless there is anything in the statute which limits the power of the trustee and prohibits him from bringing such an action.

In Babey Nona v. Silva (1906) 9 NLR 251 it was argued on behalf of the appellant that the Partition Ordinance was inapplicable to lands which are subject to fidei commissum because fiduciaries do not have absolute ownership in the property. This was rejected by Lascelles A.C.J. with the agreement of Middleton J. at pages 255-256 in the following terms:

> It is true that the language of the Partition Ordinance appears at first sight to limit the scope of the Ordinance to land which is held in common by two or more persons as absolute owners. Section 2, for example, deals with the case of landed property belonging in common to two or more owners, and authorizes one or more of such owners to compel partition.

This difficulty is largely reduced, if it is not altogether removed, when it is remembered that by the Roman-Dutch Law the fiduciarius was a true owner; he had a real though a burdened right of ownership. It is also material that in David v. Sarnelis Appu 7 N.L.R. 163 this Court held that a trustee under the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance was an owner for the purposes of the Partition Ordinance. In my opinion the balance of reason and authority is in favour of the view that property subject to fidei commissum may be the subject of partition, and I hold, in the case under consideration, that the property in dispute, though subject to fidei commissum, was lawfully partitioned.

But the partition decree in no way extinguishes the reversionary interest of the fidei commissarius. It merely sets apart a specific portion of the common estate to which the rights of the fidei commissarius attach in severalty.

By no reasonable construction of the Ordinance can it be held that the effect of a partition decree is to enlarge the life interest of the fiduciarius into absolute ownership. In the words of Lord Watson in Tillekeratne v. Abeysekere (2 N.L.R. 313): "…the partition…would not necessarily destroy a fidei commissum attaching to one or more of the shares before partition."

As mentioned previously, two of the essential attributes of ownership are the right to possession and the right to recover possession. However, in cases where a property is held by one person subject to the life interest of another, the former cannot be technically regarded as an owner because he is unable to exercise the right to possession. He has only the bare dominium of the property. It may be on that basis in cases such as Charles Appu v. Dias Abeysinghe (1933) 35 NLR 323 the Court held that a person who is entitled to the dominium only of an undivided share of land, the usufruct being vested in another, is not entitled to bring a partition action. Nevertheless, section 2 of the present Partition Law No. 21 of 1977 allows a co-owner, whose rights in the land are subject to the life interest held by another, to institute a partition action.

For the aforesaid reasons, I take the view that the plaintiff does not necessarily require absolute ownership of the land to institute a partition action.

Can paraveni nilakaraya be regarded as an owner for the purpose of partition law?

In the early cases of Marikar v. Assanpillai (1916) 4 Court of Appeal Cases 85 and Kiriduraya v. Kudaduraya (1916) 3 Ceylon Weekly Reporter 188, De Sampayo J. expressed the opinion that paraveni nilakarayas are the owners of their holdings subject only to the performance of service to their ninda lords.

In Marikar v. Assanpillai at page 86-87 it was held:

> The case for the plaintiff was put as high as this, that he was the owner of the tenants' holding and had in substance leased them to the tenants for a consideration which must be paid in some shape or another. This involves an entire misconception of the relation between the nindagama proprietor and the nilakarayas. The holding in fact belongs to the tenants themselves subject only to the performance of service, and they become free even of this burden if the right to service is lost, as, for instance, by non-performance of service for 10 years. The nature of the service is definite and > determined, and the tenant is bound to do that [service] and none other. If he has elected to commute the service by a money payment, the proprietor can of course claim the money irrespective of any change in the circumstances. But if there has been no such election the proprietor must be content with exacting the service, and if that becomes impossible, he must suffer the loss.

In Kiriduraya v. Kudaduraya at page 189-190 it was stated:

> The word paraveni does not mean "inalienable", it only implies permanency and descent to heirs. The paraveni tenant holds the land in fee simple subject only to the performance of service, and his title is liable to be affected by the ordinary incidents of adverse possession by a third party. The fact that the party who so possesses adversely is the overlord himself makes no difference.

However, in later decisions such as Jotihamy v. Dingirihamy and Kaluwa v. Rankira the contrary view was taken.

In the Full Bench decision in Appuhamy v. Menike (1917) 19 NLR 361, De Sampayo J. disagrees with the view expressed by Wendt J. in Jotihamy's case that a paraveni nilakaraya is not an owner but merely a tenant of paraveni pangu when he states at page 366:

> I may say, with great respect to Wendt J., who delivered the judgment, that I am not convinced that his conclusion as to the nature of the title of a paraveni nilakaraya was right. He did not profess to discuss the origin of this species of feudal tenure, nor refer to any authorities. All that is said in the judgment is that "the dominium in service tenure land is generally regarded as vested in the person usually described as proprietor of the nindagama or the overlord, while the nilakarayas are similarly spoken of as tenants." There are no grounds stated for the opinion that the dominium is generally regarded as vested in the overlord. That is the very problem requiring solution.

Ennis J. in Appuhamy v. Menike states at pages 361-362:

It is clear that the relations of the ninda proprietor and the nilakaraya as of a paraveni panguwa are not the ordinary relations of a landlord and tenant. A nilakaraya of a paraveni panguwa holds the land in perpetuity subject to the service (Ordinance No. 4 of 1870, section 3); and since 1870 the ninda proprietor has no right to eject a paraveni nilakaraya for non-performance of the service, he can recover only the value of the services in an action for damages (Ordinance No. 4 of 1870, section 25). It is to be observed that a panguwa is only a portion (allotment or share) of the holding of a ninda lord as the "proprietor" of the whole nindagama of which any part is held by a nilakaraya. A "paraveni nilakaraya" is defined as a "holder" of a paraveni panguwa, while the term "tenant" is used to describe a maruvena nilakaraya, who is a tenant at will, as distinct from a paraveni nilakaraya, a holder in perpetuity.

This question of whether a paraveni nilakaraya can be regarded as the owner of paraveni pangu was extensively dealt with in the aforementioned Privy Council decision in The Attorney General v. Herath, which was an appeal from the judgment of the Supreme Court in Herath v. The Attorney General where the principal judgment was delivered by Chief Justice Basnayake.

First, the Privy Council unhesitatingly agrees with the majority view of the Full Bench decision in Appuhamy v. Menike that a paraveni nilakaraya is the owner of paraveni pangu and states at pages 150-151:

The case of Appuhamy v. Menike needs further comment. The question which arose in that case was whether a paraveni nilakaraya could bring an action under the Partition Ordinance 10 of 1863 to partition a holding which he held with others. Two points had to be decided. The first whether a paraveni nilakaraya was an owner, the second was whether the nature of the services to be rendered made the ordinance inapplicable. There had previously been a conflict of authority and the case on appeal was referred for an authoritative decision to a bench of three judges of the Supreme Court, Ennis, J., de Sampayo, J. and Shaw, J. (normally two judges would have decided the appeal). On the question of ownership Ennis, J. came to the conclusion set out above [i.e. "In my opinion a paraveni nilakaraya holds all the rights which, under Maasdorp's definition, constitute ownership but he nevertheless does not possess full ownership in that the ninda lord holds a perpetual right to service, the obligation to perform which attaches to the land"]. De Sampayo, J. said "I am of opinion that paraveni nilakarayas are the owners of the land". Shaw, J. dissented. It will be seen that the majority of the court were of opinion that a paraveni nilakaraya is an owner. With this view their Lordships are in entire agreement.

Thereafter, the Privy Council at pages 148-150 provides its own explanation as to why a paraveni nilakaraya is entitled to be regarded as an owner in the following manner:

The next question is whether a paraveni nilakaraya can properly be regarded as an owner. It is common ground that a "nilakaraya" holds an allotment of land (known as a "pangu") subject to the performance of services for, or payment of dues to (where the performance of services had been commuted for the payment of dues) an "overlord" (referred to very appropriately by the learned Chief Justice in his judgment and hereafter by their Lordships as the "ninda lord"). Sometimes (as in the present case) a temple was the ninda lord. It is also common ground that the type of nilakaraya known as a "maruwena nilakaraya" holds the land as a tenant at will and the type known as a "paraveni nilakaraya" (second respondent belonged to this type) holds the land in perpetuity. It was, as stated by the learned Chief Justice, a "hereditary holding". The learned Chief Justice makes a forceful point in support of the view that a "paraveni nilakaraya" must be regarded as a tenant and not as an owner when he points out that in certain legislation language is used which seems to imply that a "paraveni nilakaraya" must be regarded as a tenant and not as an owner. For instance, in Section 27 of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance (Volume V Ceylon Legislative Enactments p. 655) the words "a paraveni pangu tenant's interest" are used. The Service Tenures Ordinance 4 of 1870 (Volume VI Ceylon Legislative Enactments p. 657) uses the words "nindagama proprietor" to designate a ninda lord:-

This language normally, in the absence of other relevant material, would afford strong reason for the conclusion that a paraveni nilakaraya does not occupy the status of an owner. But ultimately the question whether a person is an owner or not must be determined by the rights and attributes he possesses in law. If those attributes clearly establish his position as owner the considerations which arise from the language referred to above must give way.

The "rights of a paraveni nilakaraya in respect of his holding became enlarged in the course of time" as stated by the learned Chief Justice and this fact with its accompanying uncertainty as to what those rights were at any particular time probably led to some confusion particularly in the language by which they were sometimes described.

Following on a report by a commission called the Service Tenures Commission an ordinance, The Service Tenures Ordinance 4 of 1870 was passed. It was, as stated by de Sampayo, J. in the case of Appuhamy v. Menike (1917) 19 N.L.R. 361 at p. 367, on most points declaratory. Whatever the position was before the ordinance was passed, after its passage its provisions must be accepted to the exclusion of all contending views that may previously have existed. And, though historical research into those contending views may be interesting, it cannot modify the clear provisions of the ordinance. In Section 2 a paraveni nilakaraya is said to be "the holder of a praveni pangu in perpetuity, subject to the performance of certain services to the temple or nindagama proprietor"; a "paraveni pangu" is said to be "an allotment or share of land in a temple or nindagama village held in perpetuity by one or more holders, subject to the performance of certain services to the temple or nindagama proprietor". Section 24 is to the following effect:-

"24. Arrears of personal services in cases where the praveni nilakaraya shall not have commuted shall not be recoverable for any period beyond a year; arrears of commuted dues, where the praveni niIakaraya shall have commuted, shall not be recoverable for any period beyond two years. If no services shall have been rendered, and no commuted dues be paid for ten years, and no action shall have been brought therefor, the right to claim services or commuted dues shall be deemed to have been lost for ever and the pangu shall be deemed free thereafter from any liability on the part of the nilakarayas to render services or pay commuted dues therefor:".

A proviso to the section has no bearing on this case.

It is common ground that the services to be rendered were personal. Section 25 is to the following effect:-

"25. It shall be lawful for any proprietor to recover damages in any competent court against the holder or holders of any praveni pangu who shall not have commuted, and who shall have failed to render the services defined in the registry hereinbefore referred to. In assessing such damages, it shall be competent for the court to award not only the sum for which the services shall have been assessed by the Commissioners for the purpose of perpetual commutation, but such further sum as it shall consider fair and reasonable to cover the actual damages sustained by the proprietor through the default of the nilakaraya or nilakarayas to render such personal services at the time when they were due; but it shall not be lawful for any proprietor to proceed to ejectment against his praveni nilakaraya for default of performing services or paying commuted dues; the value of those services or dues shall be recoverable against such nilakaraya by seizure and sale of the crop or fruits on the pangu, or failing these, by the personal property of such nilakaraya, or failing both, by a sale of the pangu, subject to the personal services, or commuted dues in lieu thereof, due thereon to the proprietor. The proceeds of such sale are to be applied in payment of the amount due to the proprietor, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the evicted nilakarayas, unless there should be any puisne encumbrance upon the holding, in which case such balance shall be applied to satisfy such encumbrance."

This is what the ordinance declared the law to be and was the law after the ordinance came into force.

> It will be seen that a paraveni nilakaraya cannot be ejected for non-performance of service or non-payment of dues. This means that he is subject to no liability similar to that of forfeiture. Moreover he is accorded a right of possession in respect of his holding superior to the general rights of an owner*. The latter in respect of a judgment debt is liable to have any part of his property proceeded against in execution. But a paraveni nilakaraya's holding may be proceeded against on a judgment for damages for non-performance of services or for non-payment of dues only after certain property belonging to him has been exhausted.* It was not disputed that he had the right to the use and enjoyment of the land, the right to dispose of it, and the right to sue for and recover possession if he was disturbed. He has therefore all the rights which entitle him to be regarded as an owner*.*

The Privy Council then explains why the ninda lord cannot be regarded as an owner at page 151 in the following terms:

> As already stated a paraveni nilakaraya possesses all the essential attributes which a person must possess before he can be regarded as an owner. As for the "ninda lord" he has not the right of possession. He cannot even enter into possession for non-fulfillment of services or non-payment of dues. Further the right to possession of the paraveni nilakaraya has the special protection of the law already indicated. The "ninda lord" cannot sell or otherwise dispose of the holding of the paraveni nilakaraya. He has no right of use and enjoyment. He has a bare right to services. Their Lordships do not think he can possibly be regarded as the owner*.*

In the Full Bench decision of Appuhamy v. Menike, De Sampayo J. states at pages 368:

The state of the law to be gathered from the above references is made clearer by the Service Tenures Ordinance, No. 4 of 1870. It is remarkable that nowhere in the Ordinance is the lord of a nindagama referred to directly or indirectly as the owner of the lands held by the paraveni nilakarayas. On the other hand, section 24 declares that if services are not rendered or commuted dues paid by the paraveni nilakarayas for a period of ten years, the panguwa shall be deemed free thereafter from any liability on the part of the nilakarayas to render services or pay commuted dues. It seems to me clear that in such a case the Ordinance intends that what was previously qualified ownership shall become absolute ownership. Section 25 lays down the order in which the property of the nilakaraya may be sold in execution for default of payment of damages for non-performance of services, and provides that the value of services shall be recovered in the last resort "by a sale of the pangu." Here the pangu does not mean the possessory interest, because the same section enacts that the tenant shall not be ejected for non-performance of service. The pangu is defined in the Ordinance itself as the "allotment or share of land"; there is, to my mind, no meaning in providing for the sale of the pangu, unless the tenant is the owner of the allotment.

I hold that a paraveni nilakaraya is the "owner" of paraveni panguwa and therefore falls within the meaning of the term "owner" imposed upon it by the context of the Partition Law. The Partition Law does not restrict institution of partition actions by persons who have full ownership in the land to be partitioned.

Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance and Paraveni Nilakaraya

Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance No. 19 of 1931 contains several references to paraveni nilakaraya in its text although there are no express provisions on the partition of a paraveni panguwa. Nonetheless, those references are helpful to understand the status of a paraveni nilakaraya in respect of a paraveni panguwa belonging to a temple within the meaning of the Ordinance. A closer look at the provisions referring to paraveni nilakaraya in the Ordinance shows that throughout the Ordinance, he has been treated as a tenant rather than an owner. For instance, the very definition of a paraveni panguwa under section 2 is as follows:

> "paraveni panguwa" means an allotment of land held by one or more hereditary tenants subject to the performance of service or rendering of dues to a temple.

It can be implied from the terminology used in the said definition that while the paraveni nilakaraya is a tenant, his interest in the land is hereditary. The term "paraveni nilakaraya" has not been defined in the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance. This definition to the term "paraveni panguwa" found in the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance is different from the definition given to "paraveni panguwa" in the Service Tenures Ordinance which is the principal statute governing the matters in relation to service tenures. According to section 2 of the Service Tenures Ordinance, "paraveni panguwa" means an allotment or share of land in a temple held in perpetuity by one or more holders subject to the performance of certain services to the temple. Temple includes vihara and dewala. In the Service Tenures Ordinance, the paraveni nilakaraya has been defined as the holder of a paraveni pangu in perpetuity (not as the tenant of the paraveni pangu) subject to the performance of services to the temple. The maruwena nilakaraya has been defined as the tenant at will in respect of the maruwena pangu. There is a conflict between the two parallel statutes on this point.

The idea that a paraveni nilakaraya is a tenant is in contradistinction with some of the provisions of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance itself.

When section 26 of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance is read with section 27, it can be inferred that while the immovable property of a temple cannot be alienated, that does not apply to a paraveni panguwa. However, under section 27, when a paraveni pangu tenant's interest in any land held of a temple is transferred, it shall be the duty of the transferee within one month of such transfer to send a written notice thereof in duplicate to the Commissioner of Buddhist Affairs. Thereafter, the Commissioner of Buddhist Affairs shall send one copy of every such notice to the trustee of the temple concerned. It necessarily follows that, a paraveni nilakaraya can transfer his interest without the permission of the temple which is not in line with his status as a tenant.

Furthermore, under section 28 of the Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance, whenever the Commissioner of Buddhist Affairs is satisfied that any immovable property belonging to any temple has been before the commencement of the Ordinance mortgaged, sold, or otherwise alienated to the detriment of such temple, it is the duty of the Commissioner of Buddhist Affairs to direct the trustee, or the controlling viharadhipati, to institute legal proceedings to set aside such mortgage, sale, or alienation, and to recover possession of such property. But this provision does not apply to a paraveni panguwa with the implication that it does not fall within the ownership of the temple like any other immovable property.

Appuhamy v. Menike and Attorney General v. Herath held that a paraveni nilakaraya is an owner of the paraveni panguwa subject to the performance of service to the temple. In The Attorney General v. Herath, the Privy Council, referring to the term "paraveni pangu tenant's interest" found in section 27 of Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance states at page 148:

> This language normally, in the absence of other relevant material, would afford strong reason for the conclusion that a paraveni nilakaraya does not occupy the status of an owner. But ultimately the question whether a person is an owner or not must be determined by the rights and attributes he possesses in law. If those attributes clearly establish his position as owner, the considerations which arise from the language referred to above must give way.

Similarly, in Appuhamy v. Menike, De Sampayo J. while ruling that a paraveni nilakaraya is an owner states at page 366:

> The terms "overlord" and "tenant" are natural to any system of tenure, such as the fee simple tenure in the English system of real property, but they do not necessarily describe the nature of the rights.

Therefore, despite the references of Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance to a paraveni nilakaraya as a tenant, it is settled law that he is the owner of the paraveni panguwa subject to the performance of service to the temple.

Acquisition of full ownership

Under section 24 of the Service Tenures Ordinance quoted above, the ninda lord loses his rights to the services or commuted dues, if they have not been rendered or paid for ten years and no action has been brought for them within those ten years. This results in the paraveni nilakaraya acquiring full ownership to the land.

There are several nilakarayas in a panguwa and such panguwa can comprise several allotments. According to the ruling in Asmadale v. Weerasuria [1905] 3 Balasingham's Reports 51, for the application of section 24 of the Service Tenures Ordinance, it must be demonstrated that neither services have been performed nor dues paid by any one of the nilakarayas in respect of all the allotments included in the panguwa, and not solely in relation to the allotment that is the subject matter of the action. This ruling can be revisited in an appropriate future case.

If this is established, it was held in Bandara v. Dingiri Menika (1943) 44 NLR 393 that the paraveni nilakaraya acquires full ownership.

In this regard, the initial burden that no services were performed and/or no payments were made in respect of the allotment or allotments in suit lies with the paraveni nilakaraya. Once that burden is discharged, the burden shifts to the ninda lord to prove that services were rendered and/or payments were made in respect of other allotments of paraveni panguwa by some other nilakarayas.

In Bandara v. Dingiri Menika, Howard C.J. with the agreement of Keuneman J. stated at 395-396:

> [D]ue regard must be paid to the decision in Asmadale v. Weerasuriya (supra), which was followed in Martin v. Hatana [16 NLR 92], that the obligation of the tenants of a panguwa of a nindagama to render services is in the nature of an indivisible obligation, and therefore the liability to pay commuted dues is also indivisible. The whole amount may be recovered from one tenant. The payment, therefore of the dues by one tenant in respect of the whole panguwa prevents forfeiture of the ninda proprietors' rights against the other tenants under section 24 of the Service Tenures Ordinance, and it is also a bar to the other tenants gaining prescriptive rights under section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. So far as the evidence in this case goes, I agree with the learned Judge that the plaintiffs have established that neither services were performed nor dues paid in respect of the land, the subject of this action for a period of ten years. No evidence has been tendered by the appellants that such services were performed or dues paid in respect of other lands of the panguwa. In view of the fact that the plaintiffs had proved that no services were performed nor dues paid in respect of the land sought to be partitioned, I am of opinion that the burden of proof rested on the defendants to show that such performances were made or dues paid in respect of other lands of the panguwa.

The dicta of Howard C.J. at page 396 "The only clog on the full ownership of the nilakaraya is the obligation to perform services. Relief from such obligation would therefore confer full ownership" was approved by the Privy Council in The Attorney General v. Herath at page 151.

Howard C.J. ultimately held at page 397 "Inasmuch as the land is no longer subject to a liability to perform indivisible services I am of opinion that the learned Judge was right in coming to the conclusion that it could be the subject of a partition action under the Ordinance."

However, as I have already stated, full ownership in a paraveni pangu is not necessary for a paraveni nilakaraya to institute a partition action.

Partition with the consent of the ninda lord

In the instant case, the ninda load, consented to partition the land but the learned District Judge stated that even with the consent of the ninda lord, partition is not possible.

In Dias v. Carlinahamy (1919) 21 NLR 112, Scheider A.J. held at page 114 "lands subject to service tenures cannot be sold or partitioned under the provisions of the Partition Ordinance, unless it may be in cases where the proprietor of the nindagama and the paraveni nilakaraya are all consenting parties to the proceedings."

However, in Kasturiaracci v. Pini (1958) 61 NLR 167 it was held "The partition under the repealed Partition Ordinance of a paraveni panguwa is not valid even where the ninda proprietor is a consenting party to the proceedings." Basnayake C.J. at page 168 took the view that "where a Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an action parties cannot by consent confer jurisdiction on it. The learned District Judge is therefore right in holding that the partition decree is a nullity."

Parties cannot confer jurisdiction where there is none. In other words, when there is patent or total lack of jurisdiction (as opposed to latent lack of jurisdiction), parties cannot confer jurisdiction. The District Court has jurisdiction to hear partition cases and the question here is whether the jurisdiction has been invoked in the right way. It is not a question of patent or total lack of jurisdiction. In my view, in any event, a paraveni nilakaraya can file a partition action with the consent of the ninda lord.

Indivisibility of service

The Full Bench in Appuhamy v. Menike had to address two issues: whether paraveni nilakarayas are considered owners and whether the nature of services to be rendered made the Partition Ordinance inapplicable to pangu land.

In The Attorney General v. Herath, the Privy Council states at page 151 that the Full Bench in Appuhamy v. Menike decided that paraveni nilakarayas are disqualified from instituting a partition action because the services that have to be performed by nilakarayas in a pangu land are incapable of division. But the Privy Council did not express its opinion on that issue, although it expressed its opinion in favour of paraveni nilakaraya on the other issue, namely whether paraveni nilakaraya is considered an owner.

In the early case (C.R. Ratnapura, No. 284) decided on 31.05.1877 and reported in (1877) Ramanathan's Reports 131, the Basnayake Nilame of Maha Saman Devalaya of Sabaragamuwa sued 12 defendants to recover Rs. 18.50 as commuted dues for failure as tenants of a pangu belonging to the said devalaya to render certain services. The Supreme Court held that each of the nilakarayas of a panguwa was liable only for the share of the service which is proportionate to his share in the panguwa.

> The Commissioner has decided, as this Court thinks erroneously, that each is liable for the whole. We are not aware of any law or custom by which one of such nilakaraya's of a panguwa is liable to render services for the whole panguwa, that is to say, for himself as well as his co-tenants. The mere fact of the Commissioner having valued the services of the whole panguwa, instead of valuing the services of each nilakaraya, cannot create a liability which did not exist before.

In Ratwatte v. Polambegoda (1901) 5 NLR 143, the question whether liability of the nilakarayas was or was not joint and several was in issue. The trial Court held that it was joint and several. On appeal, although this matter was not specifically dealt with, it is clear from the judgment of Lawrie A.C.J. that His Lordship concurred in that proposition of law laid down by the trial Court. This was so stated by Lascelles C.J. in Martin v. Hatana (1913) 16 NLR 92 at 93.

In Herath v. Attorney General Basnayake C.J. at page 205 states "In the scheme of land tenure the panguwa though consisting of extensive lands is indivisible and the nilakarayas are jointly and severally liable to render services or pay dues."

In Asmadale v. Weerasuria it was held that the liability of nilakarayas is a joint liability. Pereira A.P.J. states at pages 52-53 that the whole service may be rendered or the whole commuted amount may be recovered from one nilakaraya and such nilakaraya is entitled to contribution from other nilakarayas of the panguwa.

> The liability of the tenants of a panguwa is a joint liability. At the same time the services in their nature were indivisible, and, therefore, the obligation to pay the commuted dues must be regarded as an indivisible obligation. Whether the service was to cultivate the muttettu field, or to accompany the ninda proprietor on a journey, or carry his talipot or watch his field or keep watch at his house, it was indivisible. Each tenant could not claim to be liable to cultivate a portion only of the field, or to accompany the chief on only a part of the journey, or to keep watch at a part only of his house, etc. The nature of the service was such that the liability to perform it was indivisible, and, therefore, as observed already, the liability to the commuted dues must also be regarded as an indivisible liability. This indivisible obligation must I take it, be given the same effect as it would have under our Common Law. The consequence to the debtors, where there are more than one, of an indivisible obligation, is practically the same as that of an obligation contracted in solido (see Pothier 2.4.31). Each obligator is obliged for the whole of the thing or act that forms the subject of the obligation. On his giving or performing such thing or act he is entitled to contribution from his co-obligors. The payment of the whole amount of the dues in the present case by one or more of the Nilakarayas, was a payment properly made in respect of the whole panguwa, and it cannot be said that there has been a forfeiture of the ninda proprietor's rights in respect of any part or portion of the panguwa under section 24 of the Service Tenures Ordinance; and for the same reason I think that the 3rd defendant cannot claim any prescriptive right under section 3 of Ordinance No. 22 of 1871.

The dicta of Pereira A.P.J. in Asmadale v. Weerasuria that "the services in their nature were indivisible, and, therefore, the obligation to pay the commuted dues must be regarded as an indivisible obligation" was not considered to be correct by Soertsz J. in Jayaratne v. Gunaratna Thero (1944) 45 NLR 97 at 99 when His Lordship stated "If I may say so with respect this view, that the obligation to pay the commuted dues is an indivisible obligation, appears to me to be the correct view in the light of the provision of the Service Tenures Ordinance itself, and not for the reason given by Pereira J. that the services being indivisible, it necessarily followed that the alternative or secondary obligation was indivisible."

According to Soertsz J. at pages 99-100

Service Tenures Ordinance makes it sufficiently clear that the services as well as the dues attached to the panguwa and are indivisible and owed jointly and severally by the nilakarayas and are exigible from any of them subject to his or their right to claim contribution. Sections 9 and 10 of the Ordinance provide for the ascertainment and registration of the nature and extent of the services in relation to each pangu. Sections 14 and 15 make it clearer still that the unit is the pangu and not the Nilakaraya for section 14 requires the application for commutation in the case of a pangu with several or many Nilakarayas to be made or acquiesced in by a majority of those above sixteen years of age, and section 15 requires the Commissioner to ascertain as far as practicable whether all the Nilakarayas above 16 years of age desire the commutation. Both these requirements would surely be out of place, if it were intended to leave it open to one or more of the Nilakarayas to commute his or their services for a pro rata payment of dues. Section 15 goes on to > say that once commutation has been determined and fixed "the Nilakarayas shall be liable to pay the proprietors…the annual amount of money payment due for and in respect of…the services; and such commuted dues shall thenceforth be decided to be a head rent due for and in respect of the pangu". That, as I understand it, makes the pangu "the head" or the unit. This view is supported by the terms of section 25 which provides the remedy of a proprietor when there is default of payment of the commuted dues. It enacts that if the dues be not paid, they shall be recovered by "seizure and sale of the crop or fruits on the pangu or failing these by the personal property of the Nilakaraya or failing both by a sale of the pangu". The crop and fruits on the whole pangu, and ultimately the whole pangu itself being made liable it follows the proprietors may seize and sell any part of the crop and fruits or any part of the pangu.

The opinion expressed by Wendt J. in the old case of Jotihamy v. Dingirihamy decided in 1906 was not a considered opinion on that matter. If I may repeat, this is all what Wendt J. stated at page 68:

> Another objection is based upon the indivisibility of the services. Counsel on both sides were allowed the opportunity of looking into the authorities on this point but have not been able to produce anything which recognises the right of a tenant to maintain a partition action. We are therefore invited to decide the appeal upon general principles. Applying these to the best of our ability we think that the provisions of the Partition Ordinance do not apply to lands of the character of those in question.

In my view, Martin v. Hatana (1913) 16 NLR 92 is an eye-opener and provides insights into solving the issue of indivisibility. In this case the plaintiff ninda lord filed action against several nilakarayas in terms of section 25 of the Service Tenures Ordinance to recover damages in a sum of Rs. 25.40 for the value of services due by them. The position of the 14th defendant was that if the defendants are liable, his company is not liable to pay more than what is proportionate to the share of land owned by his company. Lascelles C.J. did not in my view reject this position on the sole basis that payment of commuted dues is indivisible on principle. His Lordship at page 93 also took into consideration that dividing the commuted dues among several nilakarayas would create practical difficulties for the ninda lord, including the need for surveys and share valuation, the cost of which would outweigh the damages to be recovered:

> In view of these authorities, which represent the view commonly held as to the obligation of the tenants of a panguwa, and on account of the practical difficulty of distributing the liability, I think that the decision in C.R. Ratnapura, No. 284, is one which might properly be reconsidered by a Collective Court when the question comes up in a suitable form. But in the present case it is not necessary to take this course. The action is one for damages under section 25 of Ordinance No. 4 of 1870, a section which clearly enables the proprietor to sue the holders of the panguwa collectively. I fail to see that under this section it is open for one of the tenants to claim that his liability should be restricted to an amount of damages which is proportionate to his holding in the panguwa. To allow this claim would be inequitable to the proprietor, for the proportionate share of each tenant could not be ascertained without a survey and probably a valuation, the costs of which, in cases like the present, would far exceed the whole amount of damages. Whatever may be the law as to the divisibility of the liability to render services, or to pay the commutation for services, I think that when it comes to recovering damages, in a case where the liability has not been apportioned, the damages are recoverable from the tenants jointly.

I think the concept of indivisibility of service and commuted dues should not be promoted or retained on the basis of convenience to the ninda lord or on the basis of potential litigation costs to the ninda lord. Such considerations are typical in any litigation, and there is no need for preferential treatment for the ninda lord.

In Appuhamy v. Menike the unanimous view of the Court was that the service of a paraveni nilakaraya is indivisible and on that ground paraveni nilakarayas cannot institute a partition action in respect of a paraveni panguwa. Ennis J. at page 363 states "In my opinion a paraveni nilakaraya holds all the rights which, under Maarsdorp's definition, constitute ownership, but he, nevertheless, does not possess the full ownership, in that the ninda lord holds a perpetual right to service, the obligation to perform which attaches to the land."

If the obligation to perform service is tied to the land, it is questionable as to how it would pose a difficulty for the partition of the land as the obligation can naturally transfer with the land and attach to the separate lots upon partition. This is how constructive or charitable trusts, leases at will, or those for periods not exceeding one month continue to exist after the partition decree, even if they are not specifically included in the decree.

The feudal system has long gone. The ninda lord, if interested, should work towards finding a mechanism to obtain services from nilakarayas after partition rather than merely echoing what was said centuries ago that service is inherently indivisible.

Even assuming that the services to be rendered in their nature are indivisible, after the enactment of the Service Tenures Ordinance, such services can be commuted to a quantifiable monetary payment recoverable in accordance with the procedure laid down in sections 24 and 25 of the Ordinance. Hence there is no justifiable reason to deny partition in respect of pangu land on the basis that service is indivisible.

It must be noted that under section 48(1) of the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977, the partition decree "shall be free from all encumbrances whatsoever other than those specified in that decree." Thus, the Court can specify in the partition decree the encumbrances attached to the allotments.

Section 48(1) of the Partition Law No. 21 of 1977 further states that the term "encumbrance" means "any mortgage, lease, usufruct, servitude, life interest, trust, or any interest whatsoever howsoever arising except a constructive or charitable trust, a lease at will or for period not exceeding one month." Constructive or charitable trusts, leases at will or for period not exceeding one month will continue to remain as encumbrances whether or not specified in the decree.

In the repealed Partition Ordinance, No. 10 of 1863, section 9 dealt with the conclusive effect of a partition decree, and sections 12 and 13 explicitly preserved the status of mortgages and leases, indicating that they would not be affected by the partition decree, regardless of whether they were included in it. However, unlike mortgages and leases, there was no express provision protecting constructive trusts or fidei commissa after a decree for partition was entered.

Nevertheless, the Full Bench of the Supreme Court in Marikar v. Marikar (1920) 22 NLR 137, having reviewed the conflicting previous decisions authoritatively held:

> A trust, express or constructive, is not extinguished by a decree for partition, and attaches to the divided portion, which on the partition is assigned to the trustee.

In the Privy Council decision of Nadesan v. Ramasamy (1961) 63 NLR 49 it was held:

> Where property burdened with a fidei commissum under a deed of gift has been partitioned under the Partition Ordinance No. 10 of 1863, such partition has not the effect of destroying the fidei commissum which thereafter attaches to the land allotted in severalty to the fiduciaries or his successor in title, even though no mention has been made of his capacity in the partition decree. Section 9 of the Ordinance has no bearing upon the rights of fidei commissaries who have no present right or interest in the land which is being partitioned. They are not owners or co-owners to whom Section 2 can apply.

These decisions illustrate that, in suitable cases, the Court is not precluded from introducing encumbrances that are not explicitly specified by the statute.

Therefore, once a paraveni pangu is partitioned, the District Court can specify in the decree that partition is subject to service. However, the failure to mention it should not prevent the ninda lord from exercising his rights under the Service Tenures Ordinance and Buddhist Temporalities Ordinance. The perpetual rights of the ninda lord in respect of paraveni pangu shall in no way extinguish or affect, regardless of whether they are explicitly mentioned in the partition decree since his rights are attached to the land (as opposed to a personal service) and carry with it even after the partition.

Human dignity

Both ancient and contemporary historical authorities unequivocally support the view that the rajakariya system was fundamentally rooted in the caste system. (Robert Knox, An Historical Relation of the Island Ceylon

(2nd ed, Tisara prakashakayo, 1989) 139-140; John D'Oyly, A Sketch of the Constitution of the Kandyan Kingdom (2nd ed, Tisara prakashakayo, 1975) 67-68; M.U. De Silva, Land tenure, Caste System and the Rājakāriya, under Foreign Rule: A Review of Change in Sri Lanka under Western Powers, 1597-1832, (1992) Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Sri Lanka 5)

Sri Lankan society has undergone significant transformations since the era of monarchy, and the preservation of vestiges of the feudal system, particularly regarding the role of paraveni nilakarayas, practically based on caste, may no longer be necessary. The question of the ninda lord's rights now warrants the exploration of novel approaches.

Caste-based discrimination is an outright violation of human rights. Human rights are the rights we have simply because we exist as human beings. They are inherent to all of us, regardless of caste, class, colour, race, gender, religion or any other status. Human rights spring from human dignity. In all the religious doctrines, such as Buddhism, Hinduism, Christianity, Islam, human dignity is revered as a fundamental and sacred principle.

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1948, stands as the first legal document to delineate the fundamental human rights to be universally protected. This is the foundation of international human rights law including human rights conventions, treaties and other legal instruments. Article 1 thereof states "All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights." Article 2(1) states "Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status." Article 7 states "All are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law. All are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of this Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination."

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights, along with the two covenants, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights, adopted by the United Nations in 1966, collectively form a comprehensive body of human rights.

While international law instruments may not be directly used to modify the domestic law, the importance of interpreting the law in light of the international standards has been stressed in several cases. I am reminded of the dictum of Amarasinghe J. in the landmark judgment of Bulankuluma and Others v. Secretary, Ministry of Industrial Development and Others [2000] 3 Sri LR 243 at 274-275, where His Lordship, in reference to the U.N. Stockholm Declaration (1972) and the U.N. Rio De Janeiro Declaration (1992), stated:

> Admittedly, the principles set out in the Stockholm and Rio De Janeiro Declarations are not legally binding in the way in which an Act of our Parliament would be. It may be. It may be regarded merely as 'soft law'. Nevertheless, as a Member of the United Nations, they could hardly be ignored by Sri Lanka. Moreover, they would, in my view, be binding if they have been either expressly enacted or become a part of the domestic law by adoption by the superior Courts of record and by the Supreme Court in particular, in their decisions.

Although this is not a fundamental right application, Article 4(d) of the Constitution states "The fundamental rights which are by the Constitution declared and recognized shall be respected, secured and advanced by all the organs of government and shall not be abridged, restricted or denied, save in the manner and to the extent hereinafter provided." One of the three organs of the government is the judiciary, the other two being the legislature and the executive.

The Svasti of our Constitution inter alia assures "equality" and "fundamental human rights" that guarantees "the dignity" of the People of Sri Lanka. Fundamental rights spring from human rights. Article 3 of our Constitution states that sovereignty includes fundamental rights. Fundamental rights include equality and non-discrimination. Article 12(1) of the Constitution states "All persons are equal before the law and are entitled to the equal protection of the law." Article 12(2) states "No citizen shall be discriminated against on the grounds of race, religion, language, caste, sex, political opinion, place of birth or any one of such grounds".

Under directive principles of state policy, Article 27(2)(a) states that the State is devoted to establishing a democratic socialist society with one of its objectives being "the full realization of the fundamental rights and freedoms of all persons". Article 27(6) states "The State shall ensure equality of opportunity to citizens, so that no citizen shall suffer any disability on the ground of race, religion, language, caste, sex, political opinion or occupation." Article 27(7) states "The State shall eliminate economic and social privilege and disparity and the exploitation of man by man or by the State."

In this backdrop, where both the international and domestic law strongly condemn and discourage the discriminatory practices in society, it is timely to reconsider whether remnants of the rajakariya system constitutes an infringement upon human dignity. If a partition action can be instituted by an owner of a land and a paraveni nilakaraya is considered an owner of the land, why he should be prevented from instituting a partition action on the notion that rajakariya is indivisible?

Conclusion

The questions of law upon which leave has been granted and the answers are as follows:

(a) Was section 54(1) of the Partition Act No. 16 of 1951 necessitated due to judicial opinions expressed in judgments that paraveni nilakaraya is not the owner of the lands appurtenant to his paraveni panguwa?
That may have been one of the reasons.

(b) Was this judicial opinion reversed by the Privy Council in Attorney General v. Herath reported in 62 NLR 145?
Yes.

(c) In view of that, was there any need for section 54(1) to continue in the statute book?
Whether or not there is express provision, the Court can interpret the law.

(d) If (a) and (b) above are answered in the affirmative and (c) is answered in the negative, has the Court of Appeal erred in dismissing the appeal?
The Court of Appeal erred in dismissing the appeal.

(e) If so, are the appellants entitled to the reliefs prayed for in the Petition of Appeal to the Court of Appeal?
The appellants are entitled to continue with the action in the District Court.

The Partition Law does not restrict institution of partition actions by persons who have full ownership in the land. The paraveni nilakaraya is an “owner” within the meaning of the term imposed upon it by the context of the Partition Law. A partition action can be instituted by a nilakaraya in respect of a land subject to rajakariya.

The obligation to perform services attaches to the land. Therefore, such obligation, upon partition, shall attach to the separate lots in severalty.

The perpetual rights of the ninda lord in respect of paraveni pangu will in no way extinguish or affect whether or not specified in the partition decree.

The impugned order of the District Court and the judgment of the Court of Appeal are set aside and the appeal is allowed with costs in all three Courts.

The learned District Judge is directed to procced with the trial and deliver the judgment according to the law.

Samayawardhena, J.

In accordance with the written settlement dated 07.12.2010, the dispute was settled before the Debt Conciliation Board between the 2nd respondent-appellant (appellant) as the creditor and the two petitioners-respondents (respondents) as the debtors, in terms of which the respondents agreed to pay Rs. 900,000 to the appellants on or before 06.06.2011 in order for the appellant to retransfer the property to the respondents. This did not happen.

The respondents filed action against the appellant in the District Court (more than five years after that date) on 08.09.2016 under summary procedure in terms of section 43(1) of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance, No. 39 of 1941, as amended, seeking enforcement of the settlement. One of the objections taken up by the appellant creditor against the maintainability of the action was that the respondent debtors cannot file action in the District Court under section 43(1) of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance as that section can only be invoked by a creditor, not by a debtor.

Both the District Court and the High Court overruled this objection and granted relief to the respondents. The High Court stated that the term "creditor" in section 43(1) could include "debtor" as well. This Court granted leave to appeal on the question whether the High Court erred in law by interpreting section 43(1) of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance in that manner.

Section 43 of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance reads as follows:

> 43(1). Where the debtor fails to comply with the terms of any settlement under this Ordinance, any creditor may, except in a case where a deed or instrument has been executed in accordance with the provisions of section 34 for the purpose of giving effect to those terms of that settlement, apply to a court of competent jurisdiction, at any time after the expiry of three months from the date on which such settlement was countersigned by the Chairman of the Board, that a certified copy of such settlement be filed in court and that a decree be entered in his favour in terms of such settlement. The application shall be by petition in the way of summary procedure, and the parties to the settlement, other than the petitioner shall be named respondents, and the petitioner shall aver in the petition that the debtor has failed to comply with the terms of the settlement.

(2) If the court is satisfied, after such inquiry as it may deem necessary, that the petitioner is prima facie entitled to the decree in his favour, the court shall enter a decree nisi in the petitioner's favour in terms of the settlement. The court shall also appoint a date, notice of which shall be served in the prescribed manner on the debtor, on or before which the debtor may show cause as hereinafter provided against the decree nisi being made absolute.

(3) In this section "court of competent jurisdiction" means any court in which the creditor could have filed action for the recovery of his debt, if the cause of action in respect of that debt had not been merged in the settlement; "summary procedure" has the same meaning as in Chapter XXIV of the Civil Procedure Code.

Learned counsel for the respondents accepts that upon a plain reading of this section it is clear that this section can only be invoked by a creditor, not by a debtor. The respondents are debtors. However, learned counsel submits thus: The Debt Conciliation Ordinance was originally enacted to cover only simple loan transactions between a creditor and a debtor, and therefore section 43(1) was intended to cover only a situation where the debtor violates the settlement since in a simple loan transaction there is no way the creditor can violate the settlement. The Ordinance was amended by Act No. 20 of 1983 and Act No. 29 of 1999, which extended its scope to include conditional transfers and outright transfers under the purview of the Debt Conciliation Board. Once these amendments were made, there should be a provision for the debtor also to file an action in the District Court to have the settlement enforced when the creditor violates the agreement; for instance, if the debtor pays the money to the creditor in terms of the settlement but the creditor does not retransfer the property.

Learned counsel submits that unless section 43(1) is interpreted allowing the debtor also to file action in the District Court, it would result in great injustice to the debtor because in the event the settlement is violated by the creditor, the debtor will have to file a regular action in the District Court to enforce the settlement whereas if the settlement is violated by the debtor, the creditor can file action in the District Court under section 43(1) following summary procedure to have the settlement enforced. He says this cannot be the intention of the legislature.

When the language of a material provision of a statute is plain, clear, unambiguous and explicit and admits only one meaning, the question of interpretation of the provision does not arise. The intention of the legislature shall be deduced from the language used in the statute. In such circumstances, the statute speaks for itself and no addition, subtraction or extension to the text is necessary. It is only when words are unclear, ambiguous and open to more than one construction, the Court needs to go after the intention of the legislature. This is the first canon of construction of statutes, which is known as the literal rule.

When section 43(1) clearly states that any “creditor” may apply to the District Court in terms of that section, how can the District Court and the High Court read into that section the word “debtor” to say that any creditor or debtor may apply to the District Court in terms of that section. It cannot be an oversight as learned counsel for the respondents sought to suggest. For instance, section 14 specifically refers to both the debtor and creditor when it comes to making an application to the Debt Conciliation Board to effect a settlement of the debts. Suffice it to say that creditor and debtor cannot be treated alike. However, the debtor is not without a remedy. The debtor can file a regular action to have the settlement enforced, if he so desires.

I cannot agree with learned counsel for the respondents when he states that when the Ordinance was enacted in 1941 the legislature contemplated only simple loan transactions between the creditor and the debtor without any collaterals, but complicated loan transactions were permitted to be entertained by the Debt Conciliation Board only after the Debt Conciliation Ordinance Amendment Acts No. 20 of 1983 and No. 29 of 1999. Section 19 of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance was first amended as far back as 1959 by Act No. 5 of 1959 whereby applications in respect of debts purporting to be secured by conditional transfers of immovable property were also allowed to be entertained. Thus, at least since 1959, the Debt Conciliation Board has been entertaining applications other than applications relating to simple loan transactions, but the legislature did not think it fit or necessary to amend section 43(1) to include the debtor in addition to the creditor. If the legislature thinks that, not only the creditor but also the debtor should be allowed to make an application under section 43(1), it is up to the legislature to amend the law.

I answer the question of law upon which leave to appeal was granted in the affirmative and hold that only the creditor can file an action in the District Court under section 43(1) of the Debt Conciliation Ordinance as the law stands today. I set aside the judgment of the District Court and the judgment of the High Court. The action of the respondents in the District Court shall stand dismissed. The appeal of the 2nd defendant appellant is allowed. I make no order as to costs.

JUDGEMENT

Aluwihare PC. J,

The Present appeals are concerned with the termination of employment of two brothers who were employed by the Batticaloa Branch of the Bank of Ceylon. The brothers were recruited by an oral agreement during the time of the armed conflict, partly in consideration of their father being a minor employee of the bank. After the end of the hostilities, on or about 02nd June 2011, the Appellants were informed that their services were no longer necessary as the Bank had recruited other persons to fill their positions. At the time both the Appellants were in their mid-twenties.

Each of them had filed separate applications before the Labour Tribunal, however, their appeals to the High were consolidated and a common judgment was delivered by the learned High Court judge as the facts and circumstances relating to the cases were identical. As such, this court too considered both appeals together and are dealt with in a single judgement.

Being aggrieved by the loss of their employment, the Appellants filed applications in the Labour Tribunal of Batticaloa seeking reinstatement and other benefits on the basis that the Appellants' services were wrongfully and unlawfully terminated. The Labour Tribunal by order dated 15th October 2012 ordered reinstatement with back wages amounting to Rs. 170,100/- and that the Appellants be made permanent in their posts. The Respondents appealed to the High Court of the Eastern Province, which by order dated 6th June 2014, set aside the order for reinstatement, and converted the back wages of Rs, 170,100/- to compensation. The present appeals arise from the said judgement of the High Court.

The Appellants claim that they were permanent employees and therefore entitled to reinstatement. The Respondent bank maintains that the Appellants were casual employees who were employed "on an ad-hoc casual basis without any contract to carry out 'odd-jobs' " during the period of the hostilities that prevailed in that part of the country because they were children of a minor employee at the bank. The Respondent bank claims that it was unable to regularize the Appellants' recruitment after the end of the war as they had been recruited outside the normal channels. The Respondents argue that compensation of 18 months' salary i.e., one and a half years' salary is reasonable and in view of the present economic situation, has agreed to increase the amount to Rs. 800,000/- which amounts to more than 76 months' salary.

Special leave was granted on the following questions of law;

Paragraph 9

a) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in considering the law related to casual employment?
b) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in failing to consider that the usual reliefs for wrongful termination are reinstatement with back wages?
c) Did the Learned High Court Judge err in failing to consider that the absence of a written contract in Industrial Law does not warrant a definite conclusion that employment was casual in nature?

The Question of Type of Employment

The central question in this matter is whether the Appellants were casual employees, thereby not being entitled to the right to reinstatement. In determining the type of employment, rather than relying on the label given to the type of employment, the Court must evaluate the nature of the actual work carried out. A person labelled as a casual employee may very well be carrying out more responsibilities than that characteristic of a casual employee and be expected to function in a regular capacity. In Superintendent of Pussella State Plantation, Parakaduwa v. Sri Lanka Nidahas Sevaka Sangamaya (1997) 1 SLR 108 the Supreme Court highlighted that a "mere label is not sufficient to classify a workman as a 'casual employee'; if the real character of the employment is that of a permanent employee." In National Water Supply and Drainage Board, Regional Office, Peradeniya v. DP David and Others CA 1787/93 decided on 02.02.1993 it was specified that it is the duty of the court to decide the type of the employment based on the facts rather than the label given.

The Appellants had worked at the Batticaloa Head Office, the Branch Office at Mamangam and the Branch Office at the Railway Station. Their main duties were those required for the orderly maintenance of the respective branches. The learned Deputy Solicitor General appearing for the Respondent Bank, submitted a table containing the applicable facts; the enumeration of the tasks carried out by the Appellants as well as the chronology of the events tabulated therein, which was useful in evaluating the employment of the Appellants to determine the type of employment.

The Appellant in SC Appeal 85/2016 was usually tasked with cleaning the branch office, cleaning the toilets at the Station Road Branch, preparing tea and watering the garden etc. The Appellant was further tasked with delivering cheques from one bank to another, depositing cash in the locker in the presence of the cashier and the Manager, arranging the cash once it arrives every month from Colombo, and pasting damaged currency notes. His brother [SC Appeal 86/2016] similarly, was required to clean the branch offices including the toilets and the office furniture, prepare tea, cleaning the Manager's quarters, do shopping and buying provisions needed by the Manager and the bank staff , attending to matters connected with posting of letters by attending to the post office. It is noteworthy that the Appellant in SC Appeal 86/2016 too, like his brother, carried out the tasks of searching for voucher bundles, checking forms and scanning receipts of pawned jewellery which were related to the integral activities of the bank.

The Appellants were not employed under a contract of employment nor were they recruited through a formal process. They had been recruited during the turbulent times due to their father being a minor employee of the bank. The Appellants position was that they were made to understand that they would be made permanent employees at some point in the future. The Appellants were not required sign a register or mark attendance and were paid by voucher signed by the Manager and the Chief Clerk as opposed to the salary being deposited in a bank account which is the practice for permanent employees of the bank. The Appellants were not considered for EPF or ETF benefits. At one point the Appellants had submitted letters to the Respondent bank requesting that they be made permanent employees.

While the abovementioned factors indicate that the Appellants were not originally employed on a permanent basis there are several factors that support the Appellants' proposition that they were in fact not merely casual employees. The Appellants were paid once a week, for each day they had worked, through a voucher signed by both the Manager and the Chief Clerk which was forwarded to the Cashier who would pay their salaries. One of the Appellants would collect the cheques signed by the Manager. The Appellants had reported to work regularly for a period in excess of 5 years, had been in the practice of formally requesting for leave from the Manager by letter, had been issued bank ID cards, had been assigned chairs to sit, were under the supervision of the Manager and Chief Clerk when going to other banks for official purposes and had received certificates for participating at sports events organized by the bank for its employees. Furthermore, the former Manager had in his evidence stated that he considered the Appellants to be essential for the smooth functioning of the bank.

When considering the nature of the responsibilities fulfilled by the Appellants and certain practices related to the management of their employment relationship with the bank, a considerable degree of regularity and permanence can be observed. The Appellants reported to work daily and were paid their salary on a weekly basis. As demonstrated by judicial precedent, uninterrupted service and a payment method other than a daily wage payment are characteristic of the non-casual nature of the work. This was illustrated in All Ceylon Commercial and Industrial Workers Union v. Pieris ID 44 and 58 CGG 11, 471 of 05.08.1958 where the work of the employees in question was held to be of a non-casual nature as they were paid at the end of each week and their names kept in the check-roll unless they did not come to work for a long period. That the workmen had come to work regularly for several years was also considered to be a factor supporting the non-casual nature of the work.

Furthermore, in terms of obtaining leave the petitioner has been in the practice of obtaining prior permission for leave through a letter addressed to the Bank Manager. The Petitioner had also been required to report to work at a set time every day in order to open the doors of the building. These practices negate the primary attribute of casual employment that the employee is not mandatorily expected to report to work every day and can take leave without prior approval as the wage is paid on a daily basis or according to the tasks completed.

The Appellants' salaries were increased from Rs. 300 per day to Rs. 350 per day. On March 2010 a further application was made by the Manager to increase their salaries to Rs. 450 per day. An increase in salary was considered to be an indication of non-casual employment. In Ceylon Ceramics Corporation v. Weerasinghe SC 24-25/76 SCM 2507.78 (unrep) the Supreme Court held that the increase of the employee's salary was a factor that her employment was of a permanent nature, regardless of the fact that in evidence she had admitted that she was employed on a casual basis as informed by the employer.

Although the Appellants themselves had at the earlier stages considered that they were not permanent employees, it cannot be held to militate against a finding that over time the employment has assumed a permanent character. Here I quote with approval, Justice R. K. S. Suresh Chandra in 'The Employment Relationship (scope) in Sri Lanka';

> "The description or designation on a document where the workman may have agreed to be designated as a casual employee is not conclusive. The actual relationship between the parties must be examined and if it is revealed that the employer had treated the employee as a person with a permanent character, then he will not be treated as a casual employee."

The impression to be had from the sum of the evidence is that the Appellants carried out their work diligently and conscientiously and were able to handle increasing responsibilities, which was appreciated by the bank Manager as well. Although not tasks integral and indispensable to the principal activities of the bank, the Appellants were held in a level of regard as to be trusted with several tasks related to the transactional activities of the bank such as delivering cheques from one bank to another. The work carried out by the Appellants enabled the smooth functioning of the activities of the bank without any discomfort or inconvenience to the officers and the customers.

The foregoing evaluation leads to the conclusion that although the Petitioners may have been employed as casual employees, over time the nature of the employment underwent such changes as to make it take a permanent form. The absence of a written contract in itself does not warrant a definite conclusion that employment was casual in nature.

Reinstatement or Compensation

In Meril Fernando & Co v. Deiman Singho (1988) 2 SLR 242 the rationale for reinstatement not being available to a casual employee was explained thus;

> "The word 'casual' denotes such employment as is subject to, resulting from or occurring by chance and without regularity. By its very nature, such employment cannot confer upon a workman a right to reinstatement as there is no former position in which he can be placed again or a previous state to which he can be restored, as in the case of a permanent employee."

Although the Appellants cannot be classified as casual employees, after considering the circumstances particular to this case the court should be cautious in ordering reinstatement. The Respondent being a financial institution, the recruitment to various positions in all probability must be tied to requisite qualifications that commensurate with the position. There is no material before us to say that the Appellants possessed the requisite qualifications to join the Respondent Bank as permanent employees. The court is mindful that the trajectory of their employment at the bank was such as to reasonably create an expectation of being formally employed as permanent employees in the minds of the Appellants. Furthermore, the nature of their work was such as to transform their employment into a regular and permanent character. However, I am of the view that the passage of more than 10 years since the dismissal from work, and the age of the Appellants being not so advanced as to make it impossible to find other employment, as well as the work carried out by the Appellants not being of a highly specialized nature which militates against finding employment elsewhere, are practical consideration that warrant attention in this particular case.

While the usual relief for wrongful termination is reinstatement with back wages, compensation in lieu of reinstatement can be granted as equitable relief. Labour Tribunals are endowed with discretion to make just and equitable orders. Justice Kulatunga in Saleem v. Hatton National Bank [1994] 3 Sri LR 409 at page 415 identified three cardinal principles the Court has used to decide whether the order of payment of compensation by the Labour Tribunal is possible. Those grounds which map the parameters of the just and equitable jurisdiction of the Labour Tribunal are;

> "…the jurisdiction of the Labour Tribunal is wide; relief under the Industrial Disputes Act is not limited to granting benefits which are legally due; and the duty of the tribunal is to make the order which may appear to it to be just and equitable."

It is in the exercise of this discretion that the Labour Tribunal of Batticaloa has found in favour of the Appellants and ordered reinstatement and back wages. Therefore, the Learned High Court Judge did not err in failing to consider that the usual reliefs for wrongful termination are reinstatement with back wages.

In fairness to the Appellants, I am of the view that the compensation in the sum of 170,000/- ordered by the High Court does not sufficiently compensate for the diligence and loyalty of the Appellants especially during the turbulent period of the war, they had consistently and conscientiously worked and made a noteworthy contribution enabling the Respondent to provide banking services to the public without an interruption during that period.

Albeit on a justification other than that of the Learned Judge of the High Court of the Eastern Province, I am inclined to uphold the grant of redress in the nature of compensation. The compensation that was ordered in a sum of Rs.170,000/- by the High Court is hereby varied and the Respondent is directed to pay a sum of Rs. 800,000/-[Rupees eight hundred thousand] to each of the Appellants. Subject to the above variation the Appeal is dismissed.

The Petitioner-Petitioner-Appellant-Appellant (Hatton National Bank Limited), (hereinafter referred to as HNB), filed petition (case No. 17/99 CO) in the District Court of Colombo praying for the winding up by Court, the company by the name of Lanka Tractors Limited which stands in the caption of this judgment as the Respondent-

Respondent- Respondent. The said winding up application was filed in the District Court on 02nd June 1999.

The learned District Judge, by order dated 14th March 2000, had dismissed the said petition (filed by HNB which prayed for the winding up of Lanka Tractors Limited).

Being aggrieved by the said order of the learned District Judge (order dated 14th March 2000), HNB filed the application bearing No. CA LA 83/2000 in the Court of Appeal seeking Leave to Appeal against the said order of the learned District Judge. The Court of Appeal on 02nd November 2000, granted Leave to Appeal as prayed for, in that application.

Thereafter, the Court of Appeal having concluded the arguments of that case, by its judgment dated 28th June 2001 -, set aside the order of the learned District Judge dated 14th March 2000 and sent the case back to the District Court of Colombo to consider and make an order relating to the preliminary issue of publication.

Thereafter, the learned District Judge by her order delivered on 13th June 2002-, permitted the publication of the Petitioner's claim in three newspapers. Pursuant to the said order, a notice was published in the said papers after which creditors including the Party Respondent - Respondent- Respondent, Seylan Bank PLC, (hereinafter referred to as the Seylan Bank), filed their statements of claim. The claim put forward by Seylan Bank as at 31st August 2002 was for Rs. 44,677,226/92.

In the meantime, during the period between the time of dismissal of the petition filed by HNB praying for winding up Lanka Tractors Limited by the learned District Judge on 14th March 2000, and the setting aside of the said order of dismissal by the Court of Appeal on 28th June 2001, Lanka Tractors Limited, by way of Mortgage Bond No. 475 dated 12th May 2001 had mortgaged some of its properties and obtained credit facilities from Seylan Bank.

As Lanka Tractors Limited had defaulted the re-payment of the aforesaid credit facilities, Seylan Bank had taken steps to auction the property relevant to the said Mortgage Bond by way of Parate Execution. When Seylan Bank published the resolution of its board of directors which exercised its powers of Parate Execution in the newspaper on 10th March 2006-, HNB had made the application dated 21st March 2006 to the District Court of Colombo in terms of Sections 260, 261, 348, 359 and 352 of the Companies Act No. 17 of 1982 (hereinafter sometimes also referred to as the Companies Act), seeking an order to stay the said execution on the basis that the said execution proceedings had commenced after the winding up of Lanka Tractors Limited and hence would have the effect of nullifying the liquidation proceedings. This was on the basis that the said auction, if held, and the properties thereby sold, would cause an irreparable damage and irremediable loss to HNB and all other creditors (other than Seylan Bank) in the liquidation proceedings resulting in nullifying the effect of the liquidation proceedings. In the said application, HNB had also prayed that the Mortgage Bond relevant to the pending execution be set aside on the basis that it is a fraudulent preference under Section 348 of the Companies Act and/or in terms of Section 350 of the Companies Act. This application by HNB was on the basis that in terms of Section 352 of the Companies Act, Seylan Bank had no right to proceed with such execution of the property of Lanka Tractors Limited after the commencement of its winding up proceedings.

Having considered the submissions of the parties, the learned District Judge by his order dated 05th March 2007, restrained Seylan Bank from continuing with the Parate Execution of the relevant property. The learned District Judge in the same order had further held that the Mortgage Bond in question could not be declared null and void as there was insufficient material in that regard. In other words, the learned District Judge by its order dated 05th March 2007, though restrained Seylan Bank from carrying out the said Parate Execution, refused to declare that the relevant Mortgage was void.

Being aggrieved by the said order of the learned District Judge (dated 05th March 2007), HNB sought leave to appeal from the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province in order to have the said order set aside and obtain a declaration that the relevant Parate Execution proceeding is null void.

HNB in its petition before this Court states that: the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province on 30th July 2007 granted Leave to Appeal against the learned District Judge's order dated 05th March 2007and the matter was fixed for argument; when the case was taken up for argument on 15th November 2007 Counsel for Lanka Tractors Limited took up a series of preliminary objections; arguments relating to the preliminary objections were concluded on the 3rd and 21st February 2008; High Court reserved its order on the preliminary objections for the 10th March 2008; thereafter the order had to be put off for number of dates as one of the Judges of the bench was elevated to the Court of Appeal; subsequently on 3rd February 2009, the judgement was delivered on the whole case despite the fact that the High Court had reserved its order only on the preliminary objections raised by Lanka Tractors Limited.

HNB complains before this Court that the learned Judges of the Provincial High Court of the Civil Appeal by their Judgment dated 3rd February 2009, wrongly dismissed the whole appeal.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal, HNB sought Leave to Appeal from this Court and accordingly, on 30th June 2009, this Court granted Leave to Appeal on the questions of law set out in paragraphs 28 (1), 28 (2), 28 (4) and 28 (5), of the petition dated 16th March 2009. At the time the Court decided to grant Leave to Appeal to the afore-stated four questions of law, at the instance of Seylan Bank, two more questions of law (No. 5 and 6 below) were also framed. It was thereafter that HNB framed another question of law (No. 7 below) as a consequential question of law. The said questions of law being renumbered by me as 1-7 respectively, are to the following effect.

1) In the light of the conclusion that the disposition of property after a winding up application has been filed, is void and such disposition includes a mortgage as well, whether the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal has erred in law when it held that the mortgage was in order as it was executed after the original petition was dismissed and prior to its restoration by the Court of Appeal, when in fact all claims against Lanka Tractors Limited are fixed as at the commencement of the winding up;

2) Whether the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal has erred in law when they failed to take into account the fact that the Court of Appeal by its order dated 28-06-2001 had restored the HNB's application for winding up of Lanka Tractors Limited which resulted in the winding up of Lanka Tractors Limited deeming to have commenced at the time of the filing of the application for winding up which was 02-06-1999 which was prior to the mortgage in question;

3) Whether the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal has erred in law when they had failed to take into account the fact that the said disposition of the property by Lanka Tractors Limited was done with the sole object of defrauding the creditors of Lanka Tractors Limited thereby creating a diminution of the assets of Lanka Tractors Limited which was not an act done honestly and in the ordinary course of business.

4) Whether the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal has failed to consider the fact that Lanka Tractors Limited had knowledge that Leave to Appeal was granted in the aforesaid application No. CA / LA 83 / 2000 when Lanka Tractors Limited executed the Mortgage Bond in favour of Seylan Bank after the order of dismissal of the application for winding up by the HNB on 14-03-2000;

5) Whether a Mortgage Bond is a disposition within the meaning of Section 260 of the Companies Act;

6) Whether the HNB's application to the High Court of the Western Province was correct; in that it was a Leave to Appeal application whereas in fact it should have been a final appeal.

7) Is the Seylan Bank entitled in law to raise the question of law No. (6) at this stage?

It would be appropriate to deal with the question of law No. (6) and (7) at the beginning itself. The question of law No. (6) has been formulated by Seylan Bank on the premise that HNB's petition to the High Court of Western Province should have been a petition of a final appeal. While this can be gathered from the wordings of the question of law No. (6) itself, Seylan Bank in its written submissions[1] also has confirmed its position by stating therein that "the correct application if at all is for revision and in any event, it is a final appeal". However, what Seylan Bank had sought to advance in the same written submission is the argument that an appeal is only possible when an act specifically gives permission to appeal. It is Seylan Bank's argument that there is no provision in law to permit an appeal against an order made in terms of sections 260 and 261 of the Companies Act. In support of the above position Seylan Bank has relied on authorities: Gunaratne vs. Thambinayagam and others,[2] Bakmeewewa vs. Raja,[3] Martin vs. Wijewardane,[4] People's Bank vs. Perera,[5] Dassenayake vs. Sampath Bank.[6]

In my view, the question whether a party has a right of appeal is different to the question whether an aggrieved party should file an appeal or a leave to appeal application against an order with which such party is dissatisfied with. In these circumstances, I find that Seylan Bank has made no submission regarding the question of law No. (6) in respect of which this Court has granted leave to appeal. This leads me to form the view that Seylan Bank has abandoned pursuing the question of law No. (6). In view of such abandonment of the question of law No. (6), the consequential question of law (question of law No. (7)) raised by HNB does not arise. Hence, I would not proceed any further to deal with both the questions of law No. (6) and (7).

The question of law No. (4) raises the issue whether Lanka Tractors Limited had knowledge of leave to appeal being granted to HNB's application No. CA / LA 83 / 2000 when it executed the relevant Mortgage Bond in favour of the Seylan Bank. Let me next consider this question.

HNB filed the winding up application[9] in the District Court on 02nd June 1999. The learned District Judge dismissed the petition on 14th March 2000. HNB filed the application No. CA LA 83/2000 in the Court of Appeal seeking Leave to Appeal against the said order of the learned District Judge dated 14th March 2000. The Court of Appeal granted leave to appeal on 02nd November 2000.-. It was on 12th May 2001 that Lanka Tractors Limited, by way of Mortgage Bond No. 475 had mortgaged the relevant properties to obtain credit facilities from Seylan Bank. Thus, it is clear that Lanka Tractors Limited, had executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475 to mortgage the relevant properties to Seylan Bank, more than 06 months after the Court of Appeal had granted Leave to Appeal against the order of the learned District Judge dismissing the petition for winding up.

Seylan Bank, neither in the statement of objections dated 27th June 2006 nor in the affidavit dated 22nd June 2006 filed by the Chief Manager, Foreign Currency Banking Unit of Seylan Bank T Jegatheeswaran has taken up any position that it was not aware of the fact that the Court of Appeal, on 02nd November 2000, had granted Leave to Appeal against the order of the learned District Judge dismissing the petition for winding up.

Moreover, the fact whether Lanka Tractors Limited was or was not aware that the Court of Appeal, on 02nd November 2000, had granted leave to appeal against the order of the learned District Judge is a matter exclusively within the knowledge of Lanka Tractors Limited. While no party has addressed this issue, I have to proceed on the basis that the said fact was well within the knowledge of Lanka Tractors Limited which was a party to the said proceedings in the Court of Appeal. I have no basis to hold the contrary. Section 106 of the Evidence Ordinance reads thus: "When any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him." Lanka Tractors Limited, has not taken up the position that it was not aware of such fact. Thus, I hold that Lanka Tractors Limited has failed to discharge its burden that it did not have any knowledge of Court of Appeal, granting leave to appeal against the order of the learned District Judge on 02nd November 2000 dismissing the petition for winding up. In those circumstances, I hold that at the time Lanka Tractors Limited executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475, it did so with full knowledge that the winding up process was still alive as the Court of Appeal by that time had granted Leave to Appeal against the order of the learned District Judge dismissing the petition for winding up. Perusal of the judgment of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal shows clearly that it had not at all considered this aspect of the case.

Let me now proceed to consider the question of law No. 02. That revolves around the question whether the winding up of Lanka Tractors Limited should be deemed to have commenced at the time of filing of the application for winding up which was 02nd June 1999.

Section 262 of the Companies Act No. 17 of 1982 is relevant in this regard and is as follows:

> "(1) Where, before the presentation of a petition for the winding up of a company by the court, a resolution has been passed by the company for voluntary winding up, the winding up of the company shall be deemed to have commenced at the time of the passing of the resolution, and unless the court, on proof of fraud or mistake, thinks fit otherwise to direct, all proceedings taken in the voluntary winding up shall be deemed to have been validly taken.
> (2) In any other case, the winding up of a company by the court shall be deemed to commence at the time of the presentation of the petition for the winding up."

Thus, the plain reading of the above section clearly shows that the date of commencement of the winding up of a company by Court must be taken as the date of filing of the application for winding up. Legislature in its wisdom has mentioned it as a deeming provision for good reasons. It is because the actual winding up order is made after the petition praying for winding up is filed. What happens if the date of commencement of the winding up of a company is taken as the date of the actual order of Court that the company be wound up? In such event, the company under winding up is able to alienate its property leaving nothing for its creditors. If that be the case, any application for winding up would not achieve any practical result. Thus, it is clear that the legislature has intended to restrain (indirectly) the company under winding up from making any disposition after any petition for winding up of that company has been filed. This is the mischief the legislature has intended to suppress. This view is further supported by section 261 which states thus: "Where any Company is being wound up by court, any attachment, sequestration, distress, or execution put in force against the estate or effects of the company after the commencement of the winding up shall be void to all intents." This means that the company under winding up has an obligation to stop such dispositions of its property after any petition for winding up of that company has been filed.

Following quotations would show that the above position is consonant with English law principles set out in various legal literature.

Sarah Worthington in Sealy & Worthington's Text, Cases & Materials in Company Law,[10] states the following.

> "For many statutory purposes, a winding up takes effect from its 'commencement', which may involve some backdating. IA 1986 s 86[11] provides that a voluntary winding up is deemed to commence at the time of the passing of the resolution for winding up. In the case of a compulsory winding up, the liquidation is deemed to commence at the time of the presentation of the petition (and not the making of the order itself), but if the company is already in voluntary liquidation when the petition is presented, the relevant time is when the winding-up resolution was passed (s 129)."

Gower Principles of Modern Company Law[12] comments on the above as follows.

> "On the making of a winding up order the winding up is deemed to have commenced as from the date of the presentation of the petition (or, indeed, if the order is made in respect of a company already in voluntary winding up, as from the date of the resolution to wind up voluntarily). This dating back is important since it can have the effect of invalidating property dispositions and executions of judgments lawfully undertaken during the period between the presentation of the petition and the order, and of affecting the duration of the periods prior to "the onset of insolvency" in which, if certain transactions are undertaken, they are liable to adjustment or avoidance in the event of winding up or administration."

[11] Section 86 of the United Kingdom's Insolvency Act 1986 states that "A voluntary winding up is deemed to commence at the time of the passing of the resolution for voluntary winding up."

[12] Paul L. Davies and Sarah Worthington in Gower – principles of modern company law 10th edition p. 1157.

Thus, as the winding up application by the petitioner was presented to the District Court on 3rd June 1999, in terms of section 262 of the Companies Act, if an order to wind up has been made, the winding up must stand as having commenced from the date of presentation of the petition to Court.

The Court of Appeal by its order dated 28th June 2001restored HNB's application for winding up of Lanka Tractors Limited. After its restoration, there is winding up proceedings before Court to which section 262 of the Companies Act must apply. Thus, the effect of the restoration of HNB's application for winding up of Lanka Tractors Limited is that Lanka Tractors Limited must stand as having commenced its winding up proceedings from 02nd June 1999-i.e., the date of presentation of the petition to Court. Therefore, winding up of Lanka Tractors Limited is deemed to have commenced on 02nd June 1999 (at the time of filing of the application in Court for winding up). The Provincial High Court has failed to appreciate that aspect of the case.

It is now time to turn to the question of law No. 05. That is the question whether the Mortgage Bond executed by Lanka Tractors Limited is a disposition within the meaning of section 260 of the Companies Act. At the outset, it has to be noted that the original application dated 21st March 2006 relevant to this proceeding made in the District Court by HNB had been filed in terms of sections 260, 261, 348, 350 and 352 of the Companies Act No. 17 of 1982.

HNB argues that the Mortgage Bond No. 475 dated 12th May 2001 executed by Lanka Tractors Limited to obtain credit facilities from Seylan Bank is a "disposition of the property of the company, made after the commencement of the winding up", and therefore falls within the meaning of section 260 of the Companies Act. HNB therefore argues that the said Mortgage Bond shall be void as per the said section.

In contradiction to the above argument, Seylan Bank argues that the Mortgage Bond No. 475 dated 12th May 2001 is not a disposition within the meaning of section 260 of the Companies Act. It is the above issue that I have to decide in the question of law No. (5) which I would now proceed to consider.

Section 260 of the Companies Act No. 17 of 1982 is as follows:

> "In a winding up by the court, any disposition of the property of the company, including things in action, and any transfer of shares, or alteration in the status of the members of the company, made after the commencement of the winding up, shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be void."

Section 260 unambiguously states that any disposition of the property of the company made after the commencement of the winding up, shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be void. The several items specified in that section i.e., any transfer of shares, or alteration in the status of the members of the company are merely some of such dispositions and hence are not exhaustive. Therefore, what has been declared void by that section is any disposition. Thus, I need to now examine the meaning of the term 'disposition' set out in section 260.

As per Black's Law Dictionary,[13] the term 'disposition' is defined as follows:

> The act of transferring something to another's care or possession, esp. by deed or will; the relinquishing of property .

The District Judge in his order has held that the execution of Mortgage Bond No. 475 dated 12th May 2001 by Lanka Tractors Limited, to mortgage some of its properties to obtain credit facilities from Seylan Bank cannot be considered a disposition within the meaning of section 260 of the Companies Act No. 17 of 1982. However, on appeal, the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal had held that the said execution of Mortgage Bond No. 475 dated 12th May 2001 is a disposition within the meaning of section 260 of the Companies Act No. 17 of 1982. Neither Lanka Tractors Limited nor Seylan Bank has canvassed the said conclusion by the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal. However, in the instant appeal HNB had prayed inter alia in its Leave to Appeal application the followings:

i. to set aside the order of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province dated 3rd February 2009 and the order of the District Court dated 5th March 2007;

ii. to declare that the said Mortgage Bond No. 475 dated 12th May 2001 executed in favour of the Party Respondent (Seylan Bank) is null and void;

iii. to set aside and/ or rescind the said Mortgage Bond No 475 dated 12th May 2001 executed in favour of the Party Respondent (Seylan Bank).

It is the position of Seylan Bank that mortgages would not be considered as disposition as ownership is retained in the Mortgagor in the case of a mortgage. To the contrary, HNB argues that such mortgage is:

a) contrary to sections 260 and 261 of the Companies Act in light of the order made by their Lordships in the Court of Appeal reviving this case;

b) an act done to defraud the creditors of the company in the liquidation proceedings causing diminution of the Company assets; and

c) would render the liquidation proceedings a mere technicality and the entire purpose of those proceedings made nugatory.

In considering the above arguments, it would be relevant to refer to the following passage taken from Akers and others vs. Samba Financial Group[14] where Lord Mance observed the following regard to section 127 of the Insolvency Act 1986 of the United Kingdom which is similar to aforementioned section 260 of the Companies Act.

> "However, it is fair to say that the word "disposition" is linguistically capable of applying to a transaction which involves the destruction or termination of an interest…
>
> And it is possible to claim support for such a view in relation to section 127 from respected authors. Thus, Professor Sir Roy Goode in Principles of Corporate Insolvency Law, 4th ed (2011) at para 13-127 states that "[s]ection 127 bites on beneficial ownership, not necessarily on the legal title". And at para 13-128, he says that "[t]he word 'disposition' ... must be given a wide meaning if the purpose of the section is to be achieved, particularly in view of the fact that there is no exception in favour of transfers > for full value"; particularly relevantly for present purposes, this passage continues: "'[d]isposition' should therefore be considered to include not only any dealing in the company's ... assets by sale, exchange, lease, charge, gift or loan but also ... any other act which in reducing or extinguishing the company's rights in an asset, transfers value to another person". Sir Roy then explains that on this basis "'disposition' includes an agreement whereby the company surrenders a lease or gives up contractual rights". And McPherson's Law of Company Liquidation, 3rd ed (2013), para 7-015, states that section 127 "only [applies to] property which belongs in equity to the company" and "is confined to the company's beneficial interest in property"

Further in Re Leslie engineers Co. Ltd.[15] Oliver J had observed that,

> "on the true construction of section 227 of the Act of 1948, the term "dispositions" included dispositions of a company's property whether made by the company or by a third party or whether made directly or indirectly;…"

Accordingly, it is apparent that in the context of winding up, the term disposition covers a wide range of transactions which diminish the value of the company's assets while transferring the same to another.

A mortgage bond in general is executed in such a way that it binds a property taken as a security for the repayment of a debt. In the instant case, Lanka Tractors Limited executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475 dated 12th May 2001 in regard to some of its properties in return for credit facilities from the Seylan Bank. Accordingly, by mortgaging the said properties to Seylan Bank, Lanka Tractors Limited has authorized Seylan Bank to sell it by public auction and recover its dues in case of a failure to settle credit facilities.

In the Australian case of Re Dittmer Gold Mines Ltd.[16] the Supreme Court of Brisbane reached the same conclusion holding that the memorandum of mortgage, although executed after the order for winding-up, was nevertheless a disposition of the property of the company made after the commencement of the winding-up within section 178 of The Companies Acts, 1931 – 1942, and was void unless the court otherwise ordered.

It would be relevant to note that the above decision (Re Dittmer Gold Mines Ltd.) was given in regard to section 178 of their Companies Acts, 1931 – 1942 which is in fact identical to section 260 of our Companies Act where the provision reads,

> "In a winding-up by the court, any disposition of the property of the company, including things in action, and any transfer of shares or alteration in the status of the members of the company made after the commencement of the winding-up shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be void."

Therefore, I find no reason to oppose the afore stated general consensus of courts which have observed the wide interpretation of the term 'disposition'. Moreover, section 352 of the Companies Act would also confirm the position that the legislature has placed expressed restriction on the rights of creditors as to execution attachment in relation to properties of a company under winding up. The said section is reproduced below for easy reference.

> (1) Where a creditor has issued execution against the goods or lands of a company or has attached any debt due to the company, and the company is subsequently wound up, he shall not be entitled to retain the benefit of the execution or attachment against the liquidator in the winding up of the company unless he has completed the execution or attachment before the date of commencement of the winding up.
> Provided that
>
> (a) where any creditor has had notice of a meeting having been called at which a resolution for voluntary winding up is to be proposed, the date on which the creditor so had notice shall for the purposes of the preceding provisions be substituted for the date of commencement of the winding up;
> (b) a person who purchases in good faith under a sale by order of court any goods of a company on which an execution has been levied shall in all cases acquire a good title to them against the liquidator;

(c) the rights conferred by the provisions of this sub- section on the liquidator may be set aside by the court in favour of the creditor to such extent and subject to such terms as the court may think fit.

(2) For the purposes of this section, an execution against goods shall be taken to be completed by seizure and sale, and an attachment of a debt shall be deemed to be completed by receipt of the debt, and an execution against land shall be deemed to be completed by seizure and, in the case of an equitable interest, by the appointment of a receiver.

(3) In this section the expression " goods " includes all movable property. "

Thus, in light of the wide interpretation given to the term 'disposition' and the intention of the legislature to restrict the rights of creditors as to the execution of attachments in relation to properties of a company under winding up it can be stated that even the question of ownership would not be of strict relevance in interpreting whether a particular act could be regarded as a disposition. Therefore, the position taken up by Seylan Bank that mortgages would not be considered as disposition as ownership is still retained in the Mortgagor, cannot be accepted.

As has been clarified above, the term 'disposition' should be given a wider meaning than the 'transfer', which is used to interpret a change of title. This is why the legislature in its wisdom has used the term 'disposition' instead of the term 'transfer'.

What has happened in this case is that Lanka Tractors Limited has mortgaged the relevant properties to Seylan Bank just few months before the pronouncement of the judgment in the Court of Appeal and defaulted the repayment. The resultant position of this act is the commencement of Parate Execution proceedings by Seylan Bank to auction the property and recover its dues. Therefore, there is no doubt that the cumulative effect of the entire process of the execution of Mortgage Bond No. 475 by Lanka Tractors Limited and the subsequent default of repayment thereof which led Seylan Bank to commence Parate Execution of the property, has amounted to an act of transferring the beneficial interest of the relevant property to Seylan bank to enable it to become the owner through Parate Execution. That is the way Lanka Tractors Limited had chosen to relinquish its beneficial interest in the relevant property.

It would be only Lanka Tractors Limited which would know if it had any other purpose/intention other than that mentioned above. But Lanka Tractors Limited had not even attempted to explain why it decided to execute the Mortgage Bond No. 475. In light of the above, it would be absurd to hold that the Mortgage Bond No. 475 executed by Lanka Tractors Limited in favour of Seylan Bank cannot be invalidated on the mere fact that it is only a mortgage. The purpose of this section is clear and wide enough to bring the Mortgage Bond No. 475 under section 260 despite the word mortgage is not found in its list of items. In these circumstances, I have no hesitation to hold that irrespective of the fact that the title does not pass in a mortgage, the Mortgage Bond No. 475 is a disposition within the meaning of section 260 of the Companies Act.

I would now deal with the question of law No. (3). The primary issue raised in question of law No. (3) is whether the said disposition of the property by Lanka Tractors Limited was done with the sole object of defrauding its creditors. Section 348 of the Companies Act which describes about Fraudulent reference would be relevant in this regard. It is as follows:

> (1) Any conveyance, mortgage, delivery of goods, payment, execution, or other act relating to property which would, if made or done by or against an individual, be deemed in his insolvency a fraudulent preference, shall if made or done by or against a company, be deemed, in the event of its being wound up, a fraudulent preference of its creditors, and be invalid accordingly.
> (2) For the purposes of this section, the commencement of the winding up shall be deemed to correspond with the act of insolvency in the case of an individual.
> (3) Any conveyance or assignment by a company of all its property to trustees for the benefit of all its creditors shall be void to all intents."

Having considered the arguments in relation to the question of law No. (4), I have already held that Lanka Tractors Limited had executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475 with full knowledge that the winding up process was still alive as the Court of Appeal by that time had granted Leave to Appeal against the order of the learned District Judge dismissing the petition for winding up.

There can be two inferences from the above conclusion. One is that the disposition of the property relevant to the issue at hand by Lanka Tractors Limited was done with the sole object of defrauding its creditors. The other is that the said disposition of the property was done by Lanka Tractors Limited without any object of defrauding its creditors. As to which object Lanka Tractors Limited had when it had executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475 is only within the exclusive knowledge of Lanka Tractors Limited itself.

I have already mentioned about the rule of evidence that would be applicable in situations of this nature. The said rule is contained in section 106 of the Evidence Ordinance which I have already reproduced before.

The first illustration mentioned under the section of the Evidence Ordinance states thus:

> "When a person does an act with some intention other than that which the character and circumstances of the act suggest, the burden of proving that intention is upon him."

Thus, when taking into the character and the circumstances under which the Mortgage Bond No. 475 has been executed coupled with the fact that it is Lanka Tractors Limited which has the exclusive knowledge of the relevant facts, Lanka Tractors Limited has a legal obligation to prove that it acted with some intention other than that which the character and circumstances of the aforesaid execution suggests. Lanka Tractors Limited, has not taken up any position in relation to the question whether the disposition of the relevant property was done with or without the object of defrauding its creditors. Thus, I hold that Lanka Tractors Limited has failed to discharge its burden that it did not have the object of defrauding its creditors when it executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475 with full knowledge that the winding up process was still alive as the Court of Appeal by that time had granted leave to appeal against the order of the learned District Judge dismissing the petition for winding up.

Learned Counsel drew our attention to the views expressed by the Court of Appeal in the unreported case of L. M. Apparels (Pvt) Ltd. vs. E. H. Cooray & others.[17] In that case, S. N. Silva J. (as he was then) stated as follows:

> "Submissions of learned President's Counsel relate to the ambit and effect of the provisions contained in section 260 of the Companies Act and the procedure to be adopted in a matter where the provisions of the section are sought to be applied…….
>
> The provision is identical with section 227 of the Companies Act of England. The ambit of operation of this provision may be more readily comprehended by reference to the commentary in Palmer's Company Law, 23rd ed. vol 1. page 1185. The commentary based on cases decided in England is as follows:
>
> > "A disposition of the property of the Company, including things in action and a transfer of shares or alteration in the status of the members of the company, made after the commencement of the winding up, is void unless the Court otherwise orders (1948 Act. 'S 227): but the practice of the Court is to allow such payments or dispositions, pending the petition, if made honestly and in the ordinary course of business. The exercise of the discretion of the Court under this section is controlled only by the general principles of justice and fairness. Such an order may be made prior to the hearing of the winding up order."
>
> The foregoing commentary, made with reference to the practice of court, reveals that the provision is not to be construed as it were a guillotine which indiscriminately strikes down every disposition of property of the company made after the commencement of its winding up, with a reserved power vested in the Court to validate any such disposition. The words "unless the Court otherwise orders, be void" should be understood as subjecting every disposition of property of the company made after the commencement of the winding up, to the scrutiny of Court with a

overriding discretion vested in the Court to permit such disposition to stand….." [18]

I have held that Lanka Tractors Limited has failed to discharge its burden that it did not have the object of defrauding its creditors when it executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475 when it had the full knowledge that the winding up process was still alive as the Court of Appeal by that time had granted Leave to Appeal against the order of the learned District Judge dismissing the petition for winding up. Although the above conclusion is a sufficient answer to the question of law under consideration, in view of the fact that the above case was cited before us, I would briefly mention about the question whether it would be just and fair in the circumstances of this case for Court to permit this disposition to stand.

Lanka Tractors Limited was fully aware at the time they mortgaged the property to Seylan Bank Limited on or about 12th May 2001 the fact that HNB had sought Leave to Appeal from the Court of Appeal against the dismissal of the winding up petition. In fact, Leave to Appeal had already been granted on 2nd November 2000 by the time the mortgage bond was executed on or about 12th May 2001. Thus, Lanka Tractors Limited has not adduced any basis/material upon which I can hold that the said disposition was made honestly in its ordinary course of business.

The attention of court was also drawn to the case of Express Electrical Ltd v Beavis and Ors.[19] The case concerned with a validation order in a situation where a person had delivered goods to a company at the time when a winding up petition had been filed. The object of a validation order in that a case was to validate the payment made by the company for goods supplied. In that case Lord Justice Sales observed:

The true position is that, save in exceptional circumstances, a validation order should only be made in relation to dispositions occurring after presentation of winding up petition if there is some special circumstance which shows that the disposition in question will be (in a prospective application case) or has been (in a retrospective application case) for the benefit of the general body of unsecured creditors, such that it is appropriate to disapply the usual pari passu principle.

I have already cited above, section 348 (1) of the Companies Act. That section specifically encompasses mortgages. I have no difficulty in holding that the execution of mortgage bond on 12th May 2001 i.e., the property relevant to the instant case if executed by or against an individual, would, be deemed in his insolvency a fraudulent preference. If that is so, then such mortgage if made or done by or against a company, shall be deemed, in the event of its being wound up, a fraudulent preference of its creditors, and be invalid accordingly. (The commencement of the winding up shall be deemed to correspond with the act of insolvency in the case of an individual (section 348(2)).

Attention of the Court was also drawn in this regard to Re Kushler Ltd.[20] In that case, the appellant was the liquidator of the company and the respondents were the company's bankers. The appellant sought a declaration of fraudulent preference in respect of all payments made to the respondents between 23rd of February and 23rd of May 1941 which was the date of the resolution for voluntary winding up. The company had an overdraft at the bank which overdraft was guaranteed by a director of the company and secured by the deposit of certain policies belonging to him. Payments were made into the Bank as the result of which the overdraft was extinguished. The liquidator claimed that the payments to the bank constituted a fraudulent preference. In the above circumstances, it was held in that case, that the proper inference to be drawn was that the payments to the bank after May 10th May 1941, were made with a view of giving the bank a preference over the other creditors by so discharging the guarantee.

The sections 260, 261, 348, 350 and 352 of the Companies Act No. 17 of 1982 which HNB has referred to in the caption of its petition filed in the District Court are sections found under the PART IX of the Companies Act No. 17 of 1982. Section 348 thereof covers a mortgage as well. Cumulative effect of those provisions is to prevent the company under winding up, disposing its assets by some means in order to deprive its creditors, the value of those properties. In the instant case, Lanka Tractors Limited was well aware that the winding up proceedings against it was in progress. In these circumstances, there is a heavy burden on Lanka Tractors Limited to satisfy court that it did not intend to defraud the creditors by executing the relevant mortgage. However, as I have mentioned before, Lanka Tractors Limited has failed to place any acceptable material to satisfy court that its action was one that was in the course of the ordinary business.

In the above circumstances, I hold that Lanka Tractors Limited had executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475 with the sole object of defrauding its creditors.

What is now left for me is only to consider the question of law No. (1).

I have held that at the time Lanka Tractors Limited executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475, it did so with full knowledge that the winding up process was still alive as the Court of Appeal by that time had granted leave to appeal against the order of the learned District Judge dismissing the petition for winding up. [vide discussion relating to Question of law No. (4)]

I have also held that winding up of Lanka Tractors Limited is deemed to have commenced on 02nd June 1999(at the time of the filing of application in Court for winding up). [vide discussion relating to Question of law No. (2)]

I have further held that the Mortgage Bond No. 475 is a disposition within the meaning of section 260 of the Companies Act. [vide discussion relating to Question of law No. (5)]

I have also held that Lanka Tractors Limited executed the Mortgage Bond No. 475 with the sole object of defrauding its creditors. [vide discussion relating to Question of law No. (3)]

In the light of the above conclusions, I hold that that the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal has erred in law when it held that the Mortgage Bond No. 475 was in order as it was executed after the original Petition was dismissed and prior to its restoration by the Court of Appeal, when in fact all claims against Lanka Tractors Limited are fixed as at the commencement of the winding up.

Thus, I proceed to set aside the judgment of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province dated 3rd February 2009 and the order of the District Court dated 5th March 2007. I hold that the Mortgage Bond No 475 dated 12th May 2001 executed in favour of the Party Respondent (Seylan Bank) is null and void and has no force or avail in law.

Hatton National Bank is entitled to the costs of litigation in both Courts.

Samayawardhena, J.

The plaintiff filed this action in the District Court of Kuliyapitiya naming 10 defendants as parties to partition the land described in the schedule to the plaint among them. The 11th-14th defendants were added later. All the parties are members of the same family, except for the 13th defendant (Land Reform Commission) and the 14th defendant (Divisional Secretary of Ududbaddawa). The 13th defendant filed a statement of claim seeking dismissal of the action on the basis that the land had been vested in the Land Reform Commission by operation of law and was conveyed to the 14th defendant. What the 13th defendant meant by alleging such conveyance is not clear. There is no deed of transfer or other document before Court to that effect.

At the trial, the Preliminary Plan was marked X and the 13th defendant's Plan 13V1. Both Plans were prepared by the same Court Commissioner and both were tendered by the plaintiff (page 153 of the brief). Both Plans depict parts of Final Village Plan No. 2022. The Preliminary Plan depicts a part of Lot 75 in Final Village Plan No. 2022 and Plan 13V1 depicts parts of Lot 235 in the same Final Village Plan. Lot 1 in Preliminary Plan X is Lot 1 in Plan 13V1. The extracts of Lots 52 and 75 in Final Village Plan No. 2022 were marked 7V3. The Court Commissioner was not called to give evidence by the plaintiff or defendants or Court.

It seems that the land depicted in the Preliminary Plan is State land/Land Reform Commission land. This is made clear from the evidence of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's pedigree commences from his father, namely Pina. The Plaintiff says his father was the original owner of the land but he does not know how his father obtained title to the land (page 162 of the brief). He also says his father did not live on the land. The defendants are the wife and seven children of Pina. Can a partition action be maintained on such a pedigree? In my view, it cannot.

At the trial, two deeds were marked. Deed No. 4260 dated 16.01.1992 (P1) executed two weeks before the institution of the partition action whereby the plaintiff's mother has transferred 1/7 share to the plaintiff, and deed No. 1929 dated 01.07.1991 (7V1) executed about seven months before the institution of the partition action whereby a sister of the plaintiff has transferred 1/7 share to her two children. Title is claimed on inheritance, not by prescription. This is perhaps because a claim of prescription requires adverse possession and the plaintiff would be required to identify the owner against whom he and his siblings maintained adverse possession. The deeds P1 and 7V1 have not been produced to the District Court and were not available in the case record when the District Judge wrote the judgment. The learned District Judge, without calling for the marked documents prior to writing the judgment, makes a bare reference only to the deed 7V1 and disregards that deed stating it was executed shortly before the institution of the action. There is no mention of P1. I find that those deeds have been produced to the High Court for the first time. The learned District Judge says the right of inheritance to the land by Pina and upon his death by his heirs, has not been disproved by the 13th and 14th defendants by acceptable evidence. But there is no proof that Pina was the owner of the land by inheritance in the first place.

The District Judge has decided to partition the land on the basis that the 13th and 14th defendants did not lead evidence to contradict the evidence of the plaintiff. But counsel for the 13th defendant raised issues and cross-examined the witnesses.

On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal of Kurunagala dismissed the 13th defendant's appeal upholding the preliminary objection raised by counsel for the plaintiff and the 7th defendant that the 13th defendant has no locus standi to prefer an appeal against the judgment of the District Court in view the position taken by the 13th defendant in the statement of claim that the land subject to partition was vested in the 13th defendant and later transferred to the 14th defendant. The High Court did not consider the merits of the appeal.

The procedure adopted by the learned District Judge and the learned High Court Judge is completely obnoxious to the well-established principles of law governing partition actions. A partition trial is not an inter partes trial between the plaintiff on the one hand and the defendants on the other. It is an action in rem. The decree entered in a partition action binds not only parties to the action but also non-parties who may have had interests in the land. For practical purposes, there are no permanent plaintiffs and defendants in a partition case in that all parties play a dual role of plaintiff and defendant at different stages of the case. Vide inter alia sections 19(2) and 70 of the Partition Law, No. 21 of 1977.

The defendant today can be the plaintiff tomorrow to prosecute the partition action to a finality. The judgment in a partition action is the collective effort of the plaintiffs, the defendants and the District Judge. Hence there is a special sanctity attached to a partition decree.

However, this does not mean that in a partition action the burden is on the District Judge to successfully prosecute the case on behalf of the parties whilst the parties take no interest in the case. There is no such obligation. The District Judge need not go after the parties pleading with them in earnest for help to identify the land and then investigate title to the land. Vide Priyanthi v. Gamage Uma (SC/APPEAL/2/2019, SC Minutes of 15.10.2021). Having emphasised this in no uncertain terms, I must also underscore that the overall duty cast upon the District Judge in hearing a partition action is greater than in an ordinary civil action.

Section 25(1) of the Partition Law reads as follows:

> On the date fixed for the trial of a partition action or on any other date to which the trial may be postponed or adjourned, the court shall examine the title of each party and shall hear and receive evidence in support thereof and shall try and determine all questions of law and fact arising in that action in regard to the right, share, or interest of each party to, of, or in the land to which the action relates, and shall consider and decide which of the orders mentioned in section 26 should be made.

This section mandates a District Judge trying a partition action to examine the title of each party to the land to be partitioned. He must do this quite independently of what the parties may or may not say. This is the fundamental difference between the duty of a Judge trying a partition action and any other civil action. This is because of the binding nature of partition actions as actions in rem.

The duty of the Judge is not perfunctory. A District Judge trying a partition action cannot be found fault with for being overly cautious or jealous in investigating title to the land and looking beyond what has been presented before the Court by way of pleadings, evidence or otherwise, in order to be absolutely satisfied inter alia that all the necessary parties are before Court and there is no collusion among the parties. This paramount duty cast upon the District Judge in partition actions has been repeatedly stressed by the superior Courts from time immemorial.

In Peris v. Perera decided 123 years ago and reported in (1896) 1 NLR 362, the Full Bench of the Supreme Court presided over by Chief Justice Bonser held:

> The Court should not regard a partition suit as one to be decided merely on issues raised by and between the parties, and it ought not to make a decree, unless it is perfectly satisfied that the persons in whose favour the decree is asked for are entitled to the property sought to be partitioned.

The Full Bench of the Supreme Court presided over by Chief Justice Layard in the case of Mather v. Tamotharam Pillai 6 NLR 246, decided as far back as in 1908, held:

> A partition suit is not a mere proceeding inter partes to be settled of consent, or by the opinion of the Court upon such points as they choose to submit to it in the shape of issues. It is a matter in which the Court must satisfy itself that the plaintiff has made out his title, and unless he makes out his title his suit for partition must be dismissed.
>
> In partition proceedings the paramount duty is cast by the Ordinance upon the District Judge himself to ascertain who are the actual > owners of the land. As collusion between the parties is always possible, and as they get their title from the decree of the Court, which is made good and conclusive as against the world, no loopholes should be allowed for avoiding the performance of the duty so cast upon the Judge.

In Juliana Hamine v. Don Thomas (1957) 59 NLR 546 at 549, L.W de Silva A.J. observed:

> A partition decree cannot be the subject of a private arrangement between parties on matters of title which the Court is bound by law to examine. While it is indeed essential for parties to a partition action to state to the Court the points of contest inter se and to obtain a determination on them, the obligations of the Court are not discharged unless the provisions of section 25 of the Act are complied with quite independently of what parties may or may not do.

This has been consistently followed up to now. (Vide for instance: Gooneratne v. Bishop of Colombo (1931) 32 NLR 337, Cooray v. Wijesuriya (1958) 62 NLR 158, Gunathillake v. Muriel Silva (1974) 79(1) NLR 481, Gnanapandithen v. Balanayagam [1998] 1 Sri LR 391, Piyaseeli v. Mendis [2003] 3 Sri LR 273, Sumanawathie v. Andreas [2003] 3 Sri LR 324, Somasiri v. Faleela [2005] 2 Sri LR 121, Basnayake v. Peter [2005] 3 Sri LR 197, Karunaratne Banda v. Dassanayake [2006] 2 Sri LR 87, Silva v. Dayaratne [2008] BLR 284, Abeysinghe v. Kumarasinghe [2008] BLR 300, Sopinona v. Pitipanaarachchi [2010] 1 Sri LR 87.)

In Cynthia de Alwis v. Marjorie D'Alwis [1997] 3 Sri LR 113, F.N.D. Jayasuriya J. remarked:

> A District Judge trying a partition action is under a sacred duty to investigate into title on all material that is forthcoming at the > commencement of the trial. In the exercise of this sacred duty to investigate title a trial Judge cannot be found fault with for being too careful in his investigation. He has every right even to call for evidence after the parties have closed their cases.

In the case of Godagampala v. Peter Fernando [2016] BLR 139 at 140, Chithrasiri J. held:

> It is trite law that the examination of such title of the parties in a partition action is the duty of the trial judge though we follow the adversarial system in this jurisdiction.

In Wijesundera v. Herath Appuhamy (1964) 67 CLW 63 at 64, T.S. Fernando J. stated:

> Presence or absence of Counsel makes no difference to the duty of the learned trial judge to examine both oral and documentary evidence in a partition case to satisfy himself on the question of title.

In the instant case, it is manifest that both the District Court and the High Court failed to appreciate the special duty cast upon the District Judge in a partition case. If the plaintiff's pedigree is ex facie incomplete or unacceptable or doubtful, the District Judge shall not enter judgment merely because the supposed contesting parties did not vigorously challenge the evidence of the plaintiff. The general principle that uncontroverted evidence is regarded as admitted (vide Edrick de Silva v. Chandradasa de Silva (1967) 70 NLR 169 at 174) is inapplicable in partition actions.

In my considered view, the plaintiff has not unfolded a proper pedigree acceptable to Court in order for the Court to enter a partition decree. Although in a partition case the plaintiff need not and in fact cannot start the pedigree from the very first owner, as it is well-nigh impossible, the plaintiff certainly cannot start the pedigree from his father as the original owner.

I hold that there is no proper investigation of title. The judgment of the District Court cannot be allowed to stand. I set aside the judgments of the District Court and the High Court and allow the appeal but without costs. The plaintiff's action shall stand dismissed.

Murdu N.B. Fernando, PC. J.,

The Plaintiff-Appellant-Appellant ("the plaintiff") preferred this appeal against the judgement of the Court of Appeal dated 28th January, 2013 and obtained leave from this Court on four questions of law.

This appeal stems from an action instituted by the plaintiff in the District Court of Horana in terms of the Partition Act No 21 of 1977 as amended.

The plaintiff in her plaint to the District Court, named eight defendants. Whilst the trial was proceeding seven others were added on as defendants totaling fifteen defendants. On 27th August, 1996 the learned District Judge delivered Judgement and allotted shares to the plaintiff and some of the defendants and further granted relief by way of entitlement to the cultivation for the plaintiff and certain defendants as morefully stated in the judgement.

Being aggrieved by the District Court judgement, the plaintiff and the 13th defendant preferred appeals to the Court of Appeal.

The Court of Appeal upheld the judgment of the District Court and dismissed the appeal of the plaintiff and a variation of allotment of shares were made regarding the appeal of the 13th defendant.

Being aggrieved by the aforesaid judgement of the Court of Appeal, the plaintiff came before this Court, naming only the 8A defendant-respondent-respondent ("the 8A defendant") as a party to this appeal.

Its observed that the 8A defendant was substituted in the room and place of the deceased 8th defendant whilst the trial was pending. In the plaint filed in 1985 the plaintiff categorically avers that the 8th defendant is only made a party to the partition action, as he has been disputing the possession of the plaintiff and has no entitlement to the land to be partitioned, namely 'Pathagewatta' alias 'Nikaketiyawatta', in extent approximately four acres, as more fully referred to in the schedule to the plaint.

Contrary to the said assertion of the plaintiff, the 8A defendant in his statement of claim took up the position that the 8th defendant is entitled to 4/35 shares of the land in issue, having purchased a portion of the said land at a fiscal sale in the year 1937 and obtained the fiscal conveyance in 1958 and has been in possession of the said land, in extent of approximately one acre (lot 2 of the preliminary plan) independent and undisturbed for a period in excess of 10 years against the plaintiff and others and also claimed prescriptive title to the said extent of land.

It is observed that by the plaint, the plaintiff in addition to partitioning of the land [prayer (a)], moved for injunctive relief against the 8th defendant [prayer (b)], preventing him from felling down trees and removing trees already cut down in the land in dispute and also an interim injunction and an enjoining order. Thus, the plaintiff's main grievance is against the 8th defendant, though the plaintiff failed to disclose in the plaint, that a portion of the land (lot 2) was mortgaged to a 3rd party and subsequently sold by way of a fiscal sale to the 8th defendant. Nevertheless, the plaintiff in her evidence-in-chief admitted such fact.

Upon reading of the judgement of the learned District Judge, it is apparent, that the learned judge has considered the evidence led at the trial, examined the title in detail and made order allotting shares to the plaintiff, the 8th defendant and some of the other defendants.

Regarding the bone of contention between the plaintiff and the 8th defendant, the learned judge at the commencement of the judgement itself, had considered the events that led to the fiscal sale i.e., one of the co-owners, Dinoris had mortgaged the property in issue (lot 2 of the preliminary plan) and on his failure to redeem the mortgage, the mortgagor instituted an action in the District Court of Kalutara, consequent to which the said allotment was sold by fiscal sale.

Thus, the District Court has come to the finding that the plaintiff who claims intestate title from Dinoris is not entitled to any right or title to such allotment of land, subsequent to the fiscal conveyance and exiting from the property vis-â-vis the 8th defendant, the purchaser of the allotment of land at the fiscal sale in 1937 and the subsequent fiscal conveyance executed in 1958.

It was also the finding of the District Court, firstly, that the plaintiff is entitled to the cultivation on the said allotment together with the other co-owners for the trees that are older than 35 years (standing on the land as well as the trees felled and disposed of and the money deposited in court) and secondly, the plaintiff has purchased the rights of other co-owners subsequent to a preliminary survey of the land in 1992 and has made improvements by way of an unauthorized construction (whilst the trial was pending and defying the order of court) and thus the plaintiff is not entitled to claim compensation for the two buildings standing on the disputed land. Nevertheless, the court directed, when partitioning the land to endeavor to allot land where the said buildings stand to the plaintiff.

Further, it was the finding of the District Court, that the plaintiffs entitlement to allocation of shares is based upon subsequent purchase of allotment of shares of the disputed land, i.e., after 1992, but not on intestate succession of her ancestor Dinoris, who lost his right and title to the disputed land, consequent to the fiscal sale.

In determining the relevant date for the change of status between the plaintiff and the 8th defendant, and the payment of compensation for the cultivation, the learned Judge correctly considered the date of execution of the fiscal conveyance i.e., December 1958 and not the date of the fiscal sale in July 1937. It is observed that there had been a delay of approximately 21 years to obtain the fiscal conveyance, consequent to the fiscal sale and the learned judge has correctly added the said period to the entitlement of the plaintiff for the cultivation, by determining the age of trees to be older than 35 years.

The plaintiff appealed to the Court of Appeal against the judgement of the District Court on two grounds, namely, allocation of shares to the 8th defendant based upon the fiscal conveyance and entitlement to the cultivation for the trees which were younger than 35 years. The Court of Appeal dismissed the said appeal and upheld the findings of the District Court, subject to a minor varion in allotment of shares to the 13th defendant, based upon the 13th defendant's appeal to the Court of Appeal.

The plaintiff came before this Court against the judgement of the Court of Appeal and obtained leave on the following questions of law:-

a) that the Court of Appeal failed to make a determination in respect of the prescriptive title of Dinorishamy, which was claimed by the appellant and thereby misdirected in law;
b) that the Court of Appeal erred in law by affirming the judgement of the District Judge who held "that Dinorishamy had not acquired a valid prescriptive title to the undivided share that was the subject of mortgage", when the learned District Judge had failed to consider the oral evidence led at the trial, and specially the documentary evidence placed before court which affirmatively established that Dinorishamy had prescribed to the land;
c) that the Court of Appeal failed to consider the failure of the learned District Judge to determine that the transferee had no preferential rights over the judgement debtor who possessed the land until his death and thereafter his children when during the period July 1937 (mortgage sale) to 1965 the land had been possessed by Dinorishamy and his children and prescribed to 4/35 shares of the land; and

d) that the Court of Appeal failed to consider the failure of the District Court to hold that mandated provisions regarding delivery of possession in a hypothecary action had not been complied by the fiscal of court, thereby a distinct portion of the land was not given to the 8th defendant-respondent.

From the foregoing questions of law it is apparent, that the plaintiff/appellant's main contention is that the appellant's entitlement to the disputed land (lot 2) is based upon prescription against the 8th defendant/respondent, notwithstanding the fiscal conveyance, and in any event the delivery of possession of the land in dispute to the 8th defendant by the fiscal is not in compliance with the law governing hypothecary action.

Nevertheless, when this appeal was taken up for hearing before this Bench, the appellant's principle and only contention was that the judgement of the District Court was per se bad in law, as the learned District Judge failed to answer the issues raised before the District Court. The learned President's Counsel relied upon the judgements of Shirani Bandaranayake, J. (as she then was) and Marsoof, J. in the case of Sopinona V. Pitipanaarachchi and two others reported in 2010(1) Sri LR 87 to substantiate its argument.

In response the contention of the learned Counsel for the Respondent was, if in the judgement, the learned District Judge has explained his determination in detail then answering of the issues in the affirmative or negative is immaterial since the purpose of an issue is to come to a finding regarding the matter in issue or the point of contest.

Thus, I wish to consider the afore said submission raised before this Court, in the first instance. Namely, the failure of the learned judge to answer the issues raised before the District Court in its judgement.

Let me begin by examining the proceedings before the District Court.

The trial began on 03-03-1993 by calling the plaintiff to give evidence [vide-pages 155 to 167 of the brief] It is seen that no admissions were marked nor issues raised prior to the leading of evidence of the plaintiff. The title deeds, P1 to P14, 1D 1 to 1D 8, 13D 1, 2D 1 to 2D 4 and 8D 1 to 8D 6 were all led through the plaintiff to establish the title of all parties, to the land to be partitioned. Thus, there was no contest as far as the title was concerned, between the plaintiff and the 8th defendant. The plaintiff by specifically admitting the fiscal conveyance in her evidence- in-chief (though not referred to in the plaint), accepted that the 8th defendant obtained title to the land in issue, i.e., lot 2, in 1958.

The 2nd date of trial was 13-05-1993 [vide-pages 169 to 178 of the brief] on which date the plaintiff's evidence-in-chief was continued. Midway through leading of evidence, it is seen that the Counsels for the plaintiff and the 8th defendant moved court to raise issues or points of contest in relation to the cultivation and the improvements (i.e., the construction of the two buildings) made to the disputed land and the court permitted raising of such issues at that juncture.

Whilst the plaintiff by way of three issues, claimed exclusive right to the cultivation and the improvements, i.e., the trees and buildings standing on lot 2, the 8A defendant's five points of contest were that the 1st defendant, 8A defendant and heirs of another co-owner were entitled to the cultivation on the disputed land in equal shares; the two buildings on lot 2 should be demolished without payment of compensation; the 8th defendant is entitled to the money deposited in court in respect of the sale of felled trees; and the 8th defendant is entitled to the entire cultivation on lot 2 consequent to the fiscal sale.

Upon reading of the judgement of the District Court, it is apparent that the issues raised by the plaintiff and the 8A defendant have not been answered individually i.e., one by one, by stating 'yes' or 'no' or 'does not arise' by the learned District Judge.

Nevertheless, the learned District Judge has considered in detail, the said points of contest in relation to the cultivation and the improvements i.e., trees and buildings, and categorically held, firstly, that the buildings are unauthorized constructions put up defying a court order and therefore the plaintiff is not entitled to the said buildings and secondly, that the plaintiff is entitled only to the cultivation, namely the trees standing on the land and trees felled (and disposed off and money deposited in court) in so far as the trees are older than 35 years.

The learned judge has come to the finding on the age of the trees, having reckoned that the plaintiff was entitled to possess the land until 1958, at which point the fiscal conveyance was executed. Thus, the learned judge has not given credence to the year in which the fiscal sale took place but correctly considered the date of the execution of the fiscal conveyance and determined the age of the trees.

If I may digress at this juncture, the questions of law raised before this Court (which will be considered later in this judgement) revolves around the plaintiff and her ancestors rights and title to the disputed land upon prescription, vis-â-vis the rights and title of the 8th defendant based upon a fiscal sale. There is no contest between the parties relating to the final allotment of shares between the plaintiff and the 8th defendant.

Coming back to the one and only point of contest put forward at the hearing, viz., the learned judge's failure to answer the issues raised individually, in the affirmative or in the negative, I now wish to consider the legal provisions relating to same.

Firstly, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

Section 187 of the Civil Procedure Code reads thus:-

"187. The judgement shall contain a concise statement of the case, the points for determination, the decision thereon, and the reasons for such decision …."

In my view, the judgement of the District Court is in conformity with the above provision. The criteria and ingredients referred to therein are complied with. The judgement contains a concise statement of the case, the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for such decision. The eight issues raised during the plaintiff's evidence-in-chief regarding the plaintiff's entitlement to cultivation and the improvements (consequent to the plaintiff's admission of the title) in my view, are the points for determination which have been examined and answered in detail in the body of the judgement. Moreover, it is apparent that the finding of the learned judge is substantiated with reasons.

Secondly, it is a matter of interest, that the main contention relied upon by the appellant before us i.e., failure to answer issues, was neither taken up in the Court of Appeal nor challenged or referred to in the petition of appeal filed in the Court of Appeal or in this Court and appears to be an after thought.

The learned President's Counsel for the appellant, in formulating the primary contention pertaining to the learned District Judge's failure to answer issues, relied upon the pronouncements of this court in Sopinona's case referred to earlier. Thus, I wish to consider the said case now.

Sopinona's case was a partition action where the District Judge answered only the 1st issue raised by the plaintiff based on the pedigree tendered in her favour and refrained from answering any of the other 13 issues raised by the defendants upon the basis that they 'do not arise'. The defendants therein, being aggrieved by the said judgement appealed to the Court of Appeal. The appellate court set aside the said judgement and sent the case back for re-trial. Against the said Order, the plaintiff therein, appealed to this court and obtained special leave on three questions of law. The said questions of law are reproduced in verbatim below, as it would enable us to understand Sopinona's judgement in its correct perspective.

i) Whether in law, there was sufficient investigation of title of the parties by the original court;

ii) Whether all issues need be answered by the District Judge when the answer to one issue alone sufficiently determines the title of the parties to the land both on deeds and prescription; and

iii) Whether, if the answer to a single issue, in effect is a complete answer to all the contents in the action, whether it is necessary and incumbent on the District Judge to give specific answers to the other issues, specially, if in arriving at the answer to the issue the learned District Judge has considered and dealt with the matters raised in the other issues. (emphasis added)

Thus, it is apparent the matter in issue or the points of contest as referred to in the said Sopinona's case, was in respect of the 'rights and title to the land' sought to be partitioned.

> "Accordingly, in a partition action, it would be the primary duty of the trial judge to carefully examine and investigate the actual rights and titles to the land, sought to be partitioned. In that process it would be essential for the trial judge to consider the evidence led on points of contest and answer all of them, stating as to why they are accepted or rejected"
>
> "..... it would be necessary for the District Court to take up this matter de novo to carefully examine the devolution of title on the basis of oral and documentary evidence on the allocation of shares and take steps to answer all the points of contest raised as issues, as otherwise there could be a miscarriage of justice." (emphasis added)

Marsoof J., too, in a separate judgement in the very same case, regarding, the 'duty to answer all issues' opined,

> "The learned District Judge in this case has totally failed to discharge this duty by failing to even attempt answering all of the very material issues raised on behalf of the Respondents, and has also failed to explain why, in her view, it was not necessary to answer the other very important issues*."* (page 125) (emphasis added)

The learned Counsel for the appellant also drew our attention to the judgement of Juliana Hamine v. Don Thomas 59 NLR 121 to justify the importance of answering issues in a partition case by quoting the observations of L.W. de Silva J., in the following manner:-

> "While it is indeed essential for parties to a partition action to state to the court the points of contest inter se and to obtain a determination on them, the obligation of the courts are not discharged unless the provisions of section 25 of the Act are complied with quite independently of what parties may or may not do"

Whilst appreciating the aforesaid judicial dicta in respect of a partition action, which recognise the bounden duty of an original court judge to answer the issues raised before court and to investigate title in accordance with the provisions of section 25 of the Partition Act, I am of the view, that the facts of the instant case can be distinguished from the facts in the Sopinona's case and Juliana Hamine's case referred to above.

In the case in issue, the appellant has no qualms about the learned judge's determination relating to examining and investigation of the rights and title to the land and/or the allocation of shares between the parties and specifically between the plaintiff and the 8A defendant. The appellant's only grievance is regarding her entitlement to the cultivation and the learned judge's failure to give credit for the period 1958 onwards, i.e., the appellant should have been given an exclusive entitlement or a preferential right to the cultivation, the trees which are even younger than 35 years standing on lot 2, as the appellant had prescribed to the property at a earlier point of time vis-â-vis the 8th defendant, whose claim to the cultivation is based only on the 1958 fiscal conveyance.

In the instant case the devolution of rights and title is not the point of contest. The allocation of shares is also not the point of contest. The point of contest is only in respect of the cultivation and the improvements.

Therefore, in my view the judicial dicta relied upon by the appellant, which pronouncements opine, that the primary duty of the trial judge is to carefully examine and investigate the 'actual right and title to the land' sought to be partitioned and in the process, to consider the 'evidence led on points of contest' and answer them stating as to why they are accepted or rejected, is distinct to the matter in issue in the instant case. Thus, the said dicta cannot be applied in toto to this appeal and the said judicial dicta has to be considered in relation to the facts of the said cases.

In the appeal under consideration, no issues or points of contest were raised with regard to rights or title to the land to be partitioned nor devolution of rights on the plaintiff and the 8th defendant. Hence, it is apparent that the dicta in Sopinona's case and Juliana Hamines case (supra) cannot be blindly followed in this instance.

In the appeal under consideration, the eight issues or the points of contest were limited to appellant's entitlement to cultivation and to the buildings. In order to examine, whether the learned trial judge evaluated the core issues before the trial court, the issues raised in the District Court in verbatim are re-produced below:-

Upon reading of the District Court judgement, it is pertinent to note that the learned judge had considered the said issues with regard to the cultivation and the improvements, examined the oral and documentary evidence led and had come to a correct finding on the points of contest. The learned District Judge may not have answered each and every issue individually and separately, but in the body of the judgement has given reasons as to why he arrived at the said findings.

Therefore, though it would have been prudent to have answered each and every issue individually, I am of the view, in the instant matter no miscarriage of justice has taken place. The finding of the learned judge is legally sound and is in accordance with the provisions of the law and specifically the law relating to improvements and cultivation.

In the said circumstances, the judgement of the learned District Judge upheld by the Court of Appeal, cannot be challenged merely on the dicta in Sopinona's case. In my view Sopinona's case has no relevance to the instant appeal and can be distinguished.

Thus, I see no merit in the argument of the learned President's Counsel for the appellant, that based on the judicial pronouncements in Sopinona's case alone, this appeal should be allowed. I am of the view that the appellant has failed to convince this Court, that the judgment of the District Court is per se bad in law, only for the reason that the learned judge has failed to answer the issues raised individually.

As stated earlier in this judgement, the above discussed contention i.e., the failure to answer issues, was the only argument put forword by the Appellant, at the hearing of this appeal before this Court to challenge the findings of the District Court. The said judgment was upheld by the Court of Appeal and the plaintiff's appeal was dismissed.

Therefore, I am of the view that the appellant has failed to establish that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be set aside based upon the aforesaid contention. Hence, this appeal should stand dismissed on the said ground alone.

Nevertheless, in the interest of justice, I wish to consider the questions of law for which special leave was granted by this Court.

Questions (a) and (b) are in respect of prescriptive title of Dinoris which was claimed by the appellant. The specific question raised is that Dinoris acquired a valid prescriptive title to the undivided share that was subject to a mortgage.

Whilst highlighting that the plaintiff in her plaint, failed to indicate that a portion of the land to be partitioned was mortgaged in the year 1925 which subsequently led to a hypothecation action, a fiscal sale in 1937 and a fiscal conveyance in 1958, it's some what ironic that the appellant has now come before this Court claiming prescriptive title to the undivided share that was subject to a mortgage.

Furthermore, the appellant in the preliminary written submissions filed before this Court, refers to Section 289 of the Civil Procedure Code and contends "that although Dinoris did not have title from 1937 to the disputed land, that he and his successors i.e., the appellant, had acquired prescriptive title to lot 2 having possessed the said land for a period of 30 years uninterruptedly from 1937 to 1967 until the appellant left the land".

The appellant further contends in the said written submissions that "the learned district judge has not considered the evidence relating to prescriptive possession of Dinoris and his successors, on the mistaken belief that the fiscal conveyance confers an absolute title to the purchaser, the deceased 8th defendant, completely ignoring that there was no bar to Dinoris and his successors to prescribe to lot 2 against the purchaser and other co-owners from 1937 to 1958"

The appellant did not pursue this argument at the hearing before us and possibly abandoned same. However, since the 1st and 2nd questions of law are based upon prescription, the submissions of the appellant in verbatim are quoted above, in order to appraise the questions of law raised.

As discussed earlier in this judgement, the plaintiff failed to aver in the plaint, that the land in issue i.e., lot 2, was mortgaged by the plaintiff's predecessor and upon failure to redeem same, a hypothecalry action was filed which resulted in an auction and a fiscal sale and thereafter execution of a fiscal conveyance.

The plaintiff is now claiming prescriptive title for the said time period, when the disputed land was subjected to a mortgage. In my view, the plaintiff is approbating and reprobating.

Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance unequivocally contemplates an 'overt act' for undisturbed and uninterrupted possession to begin to run. The plaintiff has failed to establish such a fact or lead any evidence in respect of an 'overt act' at the trial court. Without an overt act, a claim on prescription cannot stand.

In my view, the aforestated contention of the appellant referred to in the written submissions, is flawed and is against the rudiments of law. I do not wish to go into an academic exercise to discuss the pros and cons of such argument relating to prescription at this stage. Suffice is to state, that the contention of the appellant relating to the 1st and 2nd questions of law have no merit and therefore has to be answered in the negative.

The 3rd question of law raised before this Court is a consequential question to the 1st and 2nd questions and should also be answered in the negative.

The 4th question of law, pertaining to delivery of possession is a new proposition taken up before this Court. However, no submissions were made before us relating to such contention. Thus, the said question of law too, in my view has no merit and should be answered in the negative.

In the aforesaid circumstances, I answer all four questions of law for which leave was granted by this Court in the negative and dismiss the appeal.

Further, I see no merit whatsoever, in the principal contention of the appellant placed before this Court at the stage of the hearing, namely that the judgement of the District Court is per se bad in law.

The failure of the learned District Judge to answer the issues raised before the trial court in my view, does not create a miscarriage of justice when the overall picture of the case in issue is taken into account. The learned District Judge has discharged his duty holistically with regard to the material points of contest, correctly and fairly and in accordance with the law. Thus the said judgement cannot be challenged, whatsoever, on the aforesaid ground alone.

Hence, for reasons more fully adumbrated in this judgment, I uphold the judgement of the Court of Appeal dated 28th January, 2013 and dismiss the appeal of the Plaintiff-Appellant-Appellant with costs fixed at Rs. 25,000.

Appeal is dismissed with costs.

P. Padman Surasena, J:

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Plaintiff) instituted action against the 1st Defendant-Petitioner-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 1st Defendant) and the 2nd Defendant-Respondent-Respondent-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the 2nd Defendant) in the District Court of Kandy. The Plaintiff in his Plaint had prayed inter alia for:

(i) a declaration that the he is the owner of the property morefully described in the schedule to the Plaint.
(ii) ejectment of the 1st Defendant and her assigns and for restoration of the premises for his benefit
(iii) damages payable for the alleged illegal occupation of the said premises by the 1st Defendant

The 1st Defendant filed the answer to the Plaint (document produced marked X2) praying inter alia :

(i) for a declaration that the Plaintiff has no right to claim the relevant property as the Plaintiff must hold the relevant property as a trust in favour of the 1st Defendant;
(ii) for a declaration that the 1st Defendant is the lawful owner of the property relevant to the case;
(iii) for dismissal of the Plaint.

Thus, it must be stressed at this commencing point itself that the 1st Defendant in her answer has not prayed for anything against the 2nd Defendant.

The 2nd Defendant has not filed an answer. This is understandable because neither the Plaintiff nor the 1st Defendant has prayed for anything against the 2nd Defendant.

Thereafter the 1st Defendant has filed the Petition and affidavit dated 16-12-2015 in the District Court praying inter alia for following reliefs:

(i) An enjoining order to prevent the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant from selling or disposing or alienating the relevant property,

(ii) An order issuing the notice of interim injunction; and

(iii) An interim injunction to prevent the Plaintiff and the 2nd Defendant from selling or disposing or alienating the property relevant to this action.

The learned District Judge having considered the material in the said Petition and affidavit dated 16-12-2015, by his order dated 23-12-2015, had decided to refuse to issue both the enjoining order and the notice of interim injunction.

Being aggrieved by the said order dated 23-12-2015 pronounced by the learned District Judge of Kandy, the 1st Defendant has filed a Leave to Appeal application in the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals holden in Kandy. The Provincial High Court having granted Leave to Appeal, had thereafter concluded the argument thereof which led to the pronouncement of its judgment dated 17-01-2018.

By the judgement dated 17-01-2018, the Provincial High Court has set aside the order dated 23-12-2015 pronounced by the learned District Judge of Kandy refusing to grant the enjoining order and the notice of interim injunction. The Provincial High Court had directed the learned District Judge to issue an interim injunction as prayed for, under paragraph (ඊ) of the prayers of the petition dated 16-12-2015 filed in the District Court by the 1st Defendant.

It is against that order that the 2nd Defendant has filed the Leave to Appeal application relevant to the instant appeal in this Court. This Court having heard the submissions of the learned Counsel for the relevant parties, had granted Leave to Appeal by its order dated 23-05-2019 on the following questions of law:

1) Did their Lordships of the High Court of Civil Appeals err in directing the learned Trial Judge to issue an Interim Injunction ex facie in the absence of a prima facie case against the 2nd Defendant?
2) Have their Lordships of the High Court of Civil Appeals erred in setting aside the Order of the learned Trial Judge dated 23.12.2015 marked X7 with the Petition in the absence of any evidence to prove a grave and irremediable injustice which may be caused to the 1st Defendant in the event the purported application for the Interim Injunction is refused?

3) Have their Lordships of the High Court of Civil Appeal erred in law in failing to take into consideration the principles governing the grant of interim relief, in delivering the said impugned judgment?

Before I proceed to consider the above questions of law, it would be pertinent at this stage, to set out briefly, the facts of the case at hand. The original owner of the relevant property at the time of transactions pertaining to this case, was the 1st Defendant. The 1st Defendant by Deed of Transfer No. 12, attested on 14-10-2011 by D.S. Perera Notary Public, had transferred its title to the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff on the same date, had mortgaged the said property to the 2nd Defendant Bank by Mortgage Bond No. 1482 attested on 14-10-2011 by C.P. Rajaratne Notary Public. According to the said Mortgage Bond, the Plaintiff had tendered the said property as security to obtain a loan amounting to a sum of Rs. 7,500,000/= from the 2nd Defendant Bank. It is the case for the Plaintiff that the Plaintiff after purchasing the property from the 1st Defendant had permitted the 1st Defendant to remain in occupation of the property as the 1st Defendant was planning to leave the country shortly after selling her property to the Plaintiff. According to the Plaintiff, the present dispute had arisen when the 1st Defendant had thereafter refused to hand over the possession of the property to the Plaintiff. This had led the Plaintiff filing the instant action to recover the vacant possession of the property from the 1st Defendant.

Having narrated the facts of the case let me now introduce briefly, the law that must be applied to answer the above questions of law which revolve around the question whether the Provincial High Court had failed to consider the principles governing the grant of interim injunctions. Interim injunction is an equitable remedy and is not available as of a right. Such injunctions will be granted at the discretion of the Court. The effect and the purpose of such injunction is to preserve the status quo of the subject matter of the action until the final judgment is delivered. The Civil Procedure Code has dedicated its Chapter XLVIII for the procedure relating to applications for injunctions.

Section 662 is followed by few other sections in that Chapter of the Civil Procedure Code and they form the procedure to be followed when an application for an injunction (for any of the purposes mentioned in section 54 of the Judicature Act), is made. As has been clearly stated in section 662, the 'purposes' for which such injunction may be obtained are set out in section 54 of the Judicature Act. The corollary of the above, is that a Court can only grant such an injunction for the purposes set out in section 54 of the Judicature Act. This means that it is this section which vests Courts with jurisdiction to grant such injunctions.

In the case of Alubhay Vs Mohideen,[1] a case relating to an issuance of an interim injunction, De Sampayo J stated that it was section 87 of the Courts Ordinance No. 1 of 1889 which creates the jurisdiction of the Court to grant injunctions, and one must look to the Civil Procedure Code for the relevant procedure. Looking back at the recent legal history of the country, one could observe that the Courts Ordinance No. 1 of 1889 was replaced by the Administration of Justice Law No. 44 of 1973,[2] and the latter was in turn replaced by the Judicature Act No. 2 of 1978. This is why in Felix Dias Bandaranayake Vs. State Film Corporation and another,[3] Justice Soza stated that 'generally speaking section 54 of the Judicature Act No. 2 of 1978 is the jurisdictional section while sections 662, 664 and 666 of the Civil Procedure Code set out the procedure' for granting of injunctions. This concept has been long followed by our Courts. Thus, section 54 of the Judicature Act states the substantive law relating to injunctions in the following manner:

Section 54:

(1) Where in any action instituted in a High Court, District Court or a Small Claims Court, it appears-

(a) from the plaint that the plaintiff demands and is entitled to a judgment against the defendant, restraining the commission or continuance of an act or nuisance, the commission or continuance of which would produce injury to the plaintiff; or

(b) that the defendant during the pendency of the action is doing or committing or procuring or suffering to be done or committed, or threatens or is about to do or procure or suffer to be done or committed, an act or nuisance in violation of the plaintiffs rights in respect of the subject matter of the action and tending to render the judgment ineffectual, or

(c) that the defendant during the pendency of the action threatens or is about to remove or dispose of his property with intent to defraud the plaintiff, the Court may, on its appearing by the affidavit of the plaintiff or any other person that sufficient grounds exist therefor, grant an injunction restraining any such defendant from

[2] Jurisdiction to grant interim injunctions was in section 42 therein.

(i) committing or continuing any such act or nuisance;

(ii) doing or committing any such act or nuisance

(iii) removing or disposing of such property.

(2) For the purposes of this section, any defendant who shall have by his answer set up any claim in reconvention and shall thereupon demand an affirmative judgment against the plaintiff shall be deemed a plaintiff, and shall have the same right to an injunction as he would have in an action brought by him against the plaintiff for the cause of action stated in the claim in reconvention, and the plaintiff shall be deemed the defendant and the claim in reconvention the plaint.

(3) Such injunctions may be granted at any time after the commencement of the action and before final judgment after notice to the defendant, where the object of granting an injunction will be defeated by delay, the court may enjoin the defendant until the hearing and decision of the application for an injunction but for periods not exceeding fourteen days at a time.

Since it is section 54 of the Judicature Act which grants jurisdiction to court to issue injunctions any party gets its entitlement to agitate for such injunction only to the extent to which section 54 of the Judicature Act has permitted. This is because the Court has to derive its jurisdiction from that section before it could consider granting the requested injunction. On the face of it section 54 has primarily conferred jurisdiction on court to issue such injunction against the Defendant named in the plaint on the application of the Plaintiff. This can be clearly seen from Section 54(1) as what has been mentioned throughout that section, is only about issuance of an injunction against a defendant. However, in terms of section 54(2) of the Judicature Act, any Defendant falling under the categories set out in section 54(2) would also get the same entitlement if he had set up a claim in reconvention against the plaintiff praying for an affirmative judgment against the Plaintiff. For further clarity requirement which must be fulfilled by a defendant to get the same entitlement to agitate for such injunction in terms of section 54(2) can be identified in the following manner:

I. the defendant concerned shall have by his answer set up any claim in reconvention against the plaintiff, and
II. such defendant shall thereupon have demanded an affirmative judgment against the plaintiff

For the purposes of that section, it is then only that a defendant could be deemed to be a plaintiff. It is only such party who can have the same right to an injunction as if he had brought an action against the plaintiff for the cause of action stated in the claim in reconvention. It is only in such a situation that the plaintiff can be deemed to be the defendant as far as the claim in reconvention is concerned. It is then only that such defendant can file petition and affidavit in terms of section 662 of the Civil Procedure Code to pray for an interim injunction. Further, such defendant must also bear in mind that such interim injunction can be asked for, only in relation to the cause of action stated in the claim in reconvention.

Thus, section 54(2) has permitted only a defendant falling under the above category to apply for an injunction. In other words, the section has set out the above two pre-requisites which such defendant must fulfill before such defendant could request Court to issue an injunction.

Another important feature which can be seen from the above two requirements found in section 54(2) of the Judicature Act is that the entitlement of the defendant is to pray for an injunction only against the plaintiff of the case. This is because of the wordings in section 54(2) of the Judicature Act which has specifically stated "set up any claim in reconvention against the plaintiff" and "demanded an affirmative judgment against the plaintiff". In the instant case it is the 1st Defendant who had obtained an interim injunction against the 2nd Defendant of the case and not against the Plaintiff of the case. This is not permitted by section 54 of the Judicature Act.

The above section shows that a court may grant an injunction for one or more of the purposes set out in section 54 (1) under three limbs namely (a), (b) and (c). While the aforesaid three limbs [(a), (b) and (c)] set out the purposes for which injunctions may be granted, limbs (i), (ii) and (iii) appearing at the end of section 54 (1), set out what a Court can restrain by issuance of an injunction. It is not accidentally that the same wordings found in the aforesaid three limbs [(a), (b), (c)] have been incorporated in verbatim, in limbs (i), (ii) and (iii) appearing at the end of that section. This is why Justice Soza in Felix Dias Bandaranayake case,[4] has stated that the person requesting the Court to issue an injunction must have a clear legal right which is being infringed or about to be infringed. This is reflected in the following passage quoted from that judgment.

> "It is necessary first of all to have a clear picture of the legal principles that are applicable to the question before us. The jurisdictional provisions have already been noted. This is an action instituted in the District Court and the application for an interim injunction was made at the time the plaint was filed. So section 54(1) (a) and (i) of the Judicature Act No. 2 of 1978 and sections 662 and 664 of the Civil Procedure Code apply. If it appears from the plaint that the plaintiff demands and is entitled to a judgment against the defendants, restraining the commission of an act or nuisance, which would produce injury to him the Court may, on its appearing by the affidavit of the plaintiff or any other person (and that would include the defendants as I have already pointed out) that sufficient grounds exist therefor, grant an interim injunction restraining the defendants from committing any such act or nuisance. The plaintiff must therefore have a clear legal right which is being infringed or about to be infringed*.[5] …"*

I have already held above that it is not open for the 1st Defendant to obtain an injunction against the 2nd Defendant of the case. Although this is sufficient to dispose this matter I would proceed to consider another important aspect which can be seen in this case.

As has been mentioned above, the 1stDefendant in his answer has not set up any claim in reconvention against the 2nd Defendant. The 1st Defendant has also not prayed for any affirmative judgment against the 2nd Defendant. Thus, according to section 54(2) the 1st Defendant is not qualified to ask for an injunction against the 2nd Defendant. Thus, the 1st Defendant cannot be deemed to be a Plaintiff in terms of section 54(2) of the Judicature Act because the 1st Defendant had not set up any claim in reconvention against the 2nd Defendant. The Provincial High Court has fallen into error as it had totally missed this point. Although the Provincial High Court has held that the 1st Defendant has established a prima facie case, I fail to understand how it could be so when the 1st Defendant had not even claimed anything against the 2nd Defendant. I must add a caution that the position may be different in partition cases for the reason that every statement of claim in a partition case is generally considered as a plaint and every party in a partition case is generally considered as a plaintiff. The record shows that the District Judge by his Order dated 23-12-2015 had refused to issue the enjoining order prayed for and also refused to issue notice of injunction. This means that no inquiry to decide whether the interim injunction prayed for should be granted or not, had ever been conducted in the District Court. The Civil Appeals High Court has lost sight of this fact when they had directed the District Judge to issue an interim injunction. To the contrary, the prayer (අ) of the Petition dated 16-12-2015 is as follows:

[5] Emphasis is mine.

ඈ) මුල් අවස්තාවේදීම අතුරු තහනම් නෝතිසි සමග මෙහි පහත උපලේඛනයේ වඩාත් සවිස්තරව දක්වා ඇති විෂය ගත දේපල විකිණීම හා/හෝ බැහැර කරලීම හා/හෝ අන්සතු කිරීම හා/හෝ වෙනති පිළිබැඳීමකට විෂය ගත දේපල යටත්කිරීම 02 වන විත්ත්කාර-වගඋත්තරකරුට තහනම් කරනු ලබන වාරණ නියුගයක් නිකුත් කරන ලෙසත්

Therefore, it is clear the prayer (ඈ) of the Petition dated 16-12-2015 is not a prayer for interim injunction although the Civil Appeals High Court by its judgment has directed the District Judge to issue an interim injunction as per that prayer.

The procedure one has to follow with regard to obtaining/granting an interim injunction is set out in Chapter XLVIII of the Civil Procedure Code. This position was accepted by Soza, J in Felix Dias Bandaranaike vs. State Film Corporation and another[6]. According to section 664 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is mandatory for the court to issue notice of injunction before it decides to grant an injunction. This is unambiguous in the wordings used in section 664 which is as follows:

Section 664:

(1) The court shall before granting an injunction cause the petition of application for the same together with the accompanying affidavit to be served on the opposite party.

(2) Where it appears to court that the object of granting an injunction would be defeated by delay, it may until the hearing and decision of the application for an injunction, enjoin the defendant for a period not exceeding fourteen days in the first Instance, and the court may for good and sufficient reasons, which shall be recorded, extend for periods not exceeding fourteen days at the time, the operation of such order. An enjoining order made under these provisions, shall lapse upon the hearing and decision of the application for the grant of an injunction.

(3) The court may, of its own motion, or on an application made by any party suspend the operation of an enjoining order issued under subsection (2), if it is satisfied that such order was obtained by suppression, or misrepresentation, of any material facts.

[6] supra

Thus, it is clear that the High Court had directed the District judge to grant the interim injunction prayed for by the 1st Defendant even in the absence of not only an inquiry in that regard but also an order issuing notice of injunction in the first place.

As has been shown above, there is no legal basis for the Provincial High Court to have directed the learned District Judge to issue an interim injunction as prayed for by the 1st Defendant in terms of paragraph (ඇ) or to issue an enjoining order or the notice of interim injunction as prayed for by the 1st Defendant in terms of paragraph (ඈ) of the prayers of the Petition dated 16-12-2015 filed in the District Court against the 2nd Defendant.

For the foregoing reasons, I answer the questions of law in respect of which this Court has granted Leave to Appeal in the affirmative. I proceed to set aside the judgment dated 17-01-2018 pronounced by the Provincial High Court. I restore the order dated 23-12-2015 of the learned District Judge of Kandy. The Petition dated 16-12-2015 praying for the enjoining order and interim injunction must stand dismissed. The 1st Defendant-Petitioner-Appellant-Respondent must pay to the 2nd Defendant-Respondent-Respondent-Appellant a cost of Rs. 100,000/=.

The Petitioner-1st Respondent-Respondent (1st Respondent) filed this application in the District Court of Colombo to wind up the 1st Respondent-Appellant-Petitioner (Petitioner). This application was made on 19th March 2003 in terms of the Companies Act No. 17 of 1982 (Companies Act 1982).

By order dated 16th January 2009 the learned District Judge ordered the winding up of the Petitioner. The Petitioner preferred an appeal to the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal of the Western Province (Holden in Colombo) (High Court). When this appeal was taken up for hearing, the Intervenient-Petitioner-2nd Respondent (2nd Respondent) raised a preliminary objection that no right of appeal has been given to the Petitioner by Companies Act No. 7 of 2007 (Companies Act 2007) to appeal against the winding up order.

The High Court ruled that the issue must be decided by reference to section 532(1) of the Companies Act 2007. It concluded that the provisions of the Companies Act 1982 were applicable to the present case only for the purposes of winding up and that section 307 of the Companies Act 1982, which conferred a right of appeal against any order or decision made up in winding up proceedings, was not open to the Petitioner. Accordingly, the High Court upheld the preliminary objection and dismissed the appeal. The Petitioner appealed.

Leave to appeal was granted on the following questions of law:

(1) Whether the impugned order is erroneous and incorrect in that, the conclusion that no appeal would lie against a winding up order in the particular circumstances of this case?

(2) Whether the impugned order is erroneous and incorrect in that, the conclusion that no appeal would lie against a winding up order in the particular circumstances of this case on the basis that the Company law is a special law?

During the hearing, a further question of law was raised, namely:

(3) Assuming that the winding up "order" dated 16th January 2009 is appealable, is the proper remedy a Leave to Appeal application?

Questions of Law No. 1 and 2

Learned counsel for the Petitioner submitted that section 532(1) of the Companies Act 2007 preserved the application of section 307 of the Companies Act 1982 to winding up proceedings commenced under the said Act. Therefore, any order or decision made in such winding up proceedings was subject to appeal.

In response, the learned counsel for the 1st Respondent and the Intervenient Petitioner-2nd Respondent-Respondent (2nd Respondent) submitted that an appeal is a statutory right and must be expressly created. Reliance was placed on the decisions in Martin v. Wijewardena [(1989) 2 Sri.L.R. 409], Dassanayake v. Sampath Bank [(2002) 3 Sri.L.R. 268], Sangarapillai v. Chairman, Municipal Council of Colombo (32 NLR 92), Vanderpoorten et al. v. The Settlement Officer (43 NLR 230), Kanagasunderam v. Podihamine (42 NLR 97), Bakmeewewa, Authorized Officer of People's Bank v. Konarage Raja [(1989) 1 Sri.L.R. 231],Gunaratne v. Thambinayagam and Others [(1993) 2 Sri.L.R. 355]. It was further contended that the Companies Law is a special law and that any right of appeal should have been granted by the same law. In support of this proposition reliance was placed upon the decision in Sirisena Perera and another v. Vinson Perera [(2005) 1 Sri.L.R. 270]. It was contended that section 532(1) of the Companies Act 2007 did not keep alive all sections in the Companies Act 1982 and in particular did not provide for the application of section 307 therein to the present case.

There is no dispute that these winding up proceedings commenced in terms of the Companies Act 1982 which provided a right of appeal against any order or decision made in a winding up proceeding. The dispute is over the legal effect of the repeal of the Companies Act 1982 by the Companies Act 2007.

The analysis must first take into account paragraph 6(3)(c) of the Interpretation Ordinance, which reads as follows:

> "6(3)Whenever any written law repeals either in whole or part a former written law, such repeal shall not, in the absence of any express provision to that effect, affect or be deemed to have affected –
>
> (c) any action, proceeding, or thing pending or incompleted when the repealing written law comes into operation, but every such action, proceeding, or thing may be carried on and completed as if there had been no such repeal."

The interpretation of this section raises two questions. First, we have to determine what is meant by an action, procedure or thing, and whether winding up proceedings falls under these words.

There is a divergence of opinion in some jurisdictions on whether a winding up proceeding is an action in the context of the relevant legal provisions even though the same legal provision was the subject of interpretation.

Section 4(4) of the Limitation Ordinance, Cap. 347 of Hong Kong provided that:

> "An action shall not be brought upon any judgment after the expiration of 12 years from the date on which the judgment became enforceable, and no arrears of interest in respect of any judgment debt shall be recovered after the expiration of 6 years from the date on which the interest became due"

"Action" is defined in section 2 of the said Ordinance as including "any proceeding in a court of law". In Re: Li Man Hoo [2013] 4 HKLRD 247 the Hong Kong Court of Appeal held that a winding up petition falls within this definition. However, in England and Australia, which has similar provisions, a more restrictive meaning has been adopted and it has been held that the relevant limitation provision does not bar the presentation of a winding-up petition. [See Ridgeway Motors (Isleworth) Ltd v ALTS Ltd [2005] 1 WLR 2871, Dennehy v Reasonable Endeavours Pty Ltd (2003) 130 FCR 494, O'Mara Constructions Pty Ltd v Avery (2006) 230 ALR 581].

In Collett v. Priest [(1931) A. D. 290 at 298] De Villers, C. J., held that that the essential feature of a 'suit or action' under section 50 of the Charter of Justice or under section 39 of Transvaal Proclamation 14 of 1902, or of a 'suit ' under section 24 of Cape Act 35 of 1896, is that it is a proceeding in which one party sues for or claims something from another, and that no proceeding which lacks this feature, such as sequestration proceedings, an application for winding up of a company etc., can be properly described as a 'suit or action' or as a 'suit' under any of these sections.

The Interpretation Ordinance does not define what constitutes an action. According to section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code, an action is a proceeding for the prevention or redress of a wrong. One may ask whether this definition should be used to define the word action in the Interpretation Ordinance.

However, I do not believe there are any such difficulties in interpreting the word proceeding in paragraph 6(3)(c) of the Interpretation Order, which is broader in scope. In Perumawasam Silva et al. v. Balasingham (A. G. A., Kalutara) (53 NLR 421 at 423) it was held that this section must be read in a wider sense. Hence, I hold that the present winding up application falls within the word proceeding in section 6(3)(c) of the Interpretation Ordinance.

The second issue is the meaning to be attributed to the words may be carried on and completed as if there had been no such repeal. We must examine whether these words are to be read, as meaning the culmination of the action, proceeding or thing in the original court or as encompassing appellate proceedings as well.

Here, it is important to examine whether an appeal and the original action, proceeding or thing are the same. An examination of the papers filed in this appeal reflects that as the action advanced through different forums, both original and appellate, the caption filed in the original court has been suitably adopted based on the respective petitioner or respondent. This indicates that it is accepted in practice that an appeal is a continuation of the initial action rather than a new proceeding or action.

Indeed, the common law position is that an appeal is not a fresh action but only a continuation of the original proceedings and a stage in that action itself [See Garikapati Veeraya v. Subbiah Choudhary and others (AIR 1957 SC 540), Shiv Shakti Co-op. Housing Sociedty, Nagpur v. M/s Swaraj Developers and Others [AIR 2003 SC 2434],Malluru Mallappa (D) THR. LRS. v. Kuruvathappa & Ors. (Civil Appeal 1485 of 2020)]. This view has been adopted in Sudharman De Silva v Attorney General [(1986) 1 Sri LR 9 at 13], W.L.M.N. Accordingly, a reading of section 6(3)(c) of the Interpretation Ordinance in harmony with this position in common law means that any repeal of any existing law shall not, in the absence of any express provision to that effect, affect or be deemed to have affected any action, proceeding or thing pending or incompleted when the repealing written law comes into operation, and such action may be carried on and completed up to the conclusion of the appeal as provided in the repealed law.

Therefore, I hold that in the absence of any express provision to that effect in the Companies Act 2007, the repealing of the Companies Act 1982 by the Companies Act 2007 should not be interpreted to affect or be deemed to have affected the right of appeal granted under section 307 of the Companies Act 1982.

There is another reason to require the express removal by the Companies Act 2007 of the right of appeal provided by section 307 of the Companies Act 1982. The learned counsel for the 1st and 2nd Respondents submitted that such right of appeal is procedural in nature and not a vested right. Hence, it was contended that such a procedural right can be taken away retrospectively. The following extract from Maxwell on "The Interpretation of Statute" (12th ed., page 222) was cited in support:

> "No person has a vested right in any course of procedure, but only the right of prosecution or defence in the manner prescribed for the time being, by or for the court in which he sues, and if an Act of Parliament alters that mode of procedure, he can only proceed according to the altered mode. Alteration in the form of procedure are always retrospective, unless there is some good reason or other why they should not be."

However, a statutory right of appeal is not a mere procedural right but is a vested right. An intention to interfere with or to impair or imperil such a vested right cannot be presumed unless such intention be clearly manifested by express words or necessary implication. [Messrs. Hoosein Kasam Dada (India) Ltd. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others (AIR 1953 SC 221), Garikapati Veeraya v. Subbiah Choudhary and others (supra), Shiv Shakti Co-op. Housing Sociedty, Nagpur v. M/s Swaraj Developers and Others (AIR 2003 SC 2434)].

In Akilandanayaki v. Sothinagaratnam (53 NLR 385 at 400) where Rose, C. J. held:

> "The combined effect of sections 6(3)(b) and 6(3)(c) of the Interpretation Ordinance is that if a party had already instituted proceedings to vindicate a vested right, the subsequent repeal of the enactment under which that right was acquired cannot be regarded as operating retrospectively unless there are express words satisfying both sub-sections."

In summary, there are two reasons to require that the right of appeal under section 307 of the Companies Act 1982 be expressly removed. One is the requirement in section 6(3)(c) of the Interpretation Ordinance. Second, a right of appeal is a vested right, and therefore there must be explicit language to clearly express the intention to take away that right of appeal.

Let me now examine whether such express taking away is seen in the Companies Act 2007. Section 532(1) therein reads:

> "Subject to the provisions of subsection (2), the provisions of this Act with respect to winding up shall not apply to any company of which the winding up has commenced before the appointed date. Every such company shall be wound up in the same manner and with the same incidents*, as if this Act had not been enacted, and* for the purpose of the winding up*, the written law under which the winding up commenced shall be deemed to remain in full force."* (Emphasis added)

The learned counsel for the 1st and 2nd Respondents drew our attention to the words for the purpose of the winding up and submitted that all what has been kept alive are the provisions providing for the winding up in the Companies Act 1982. It was contended that the right of appeal in section 307 of the Companies Act 1982 is not part of such provisions and is not caught up within the words for the purpose of the winding up.

On the contrary, the learned counsel for the Petitioner submitted that such an interpretation would lead to grave and manifest injustice and absurdity as it would take away a right of appeal from a party.

In this context it is interesting to observe the same formulation in section 532(1) of the Companies Act 2007, section 452 of the Companies Act 1982 and section 366 of the Companies Ordinance No. 51 of 1938 as amended. All these three Acts repealed the previous applicable law. The words and for the purpose of the winding up are found in all three sections.

Nevertheless, section 307 of the Companies Act 1982 provided for a right of appeal. I am of the view that in these circumstances, those words cannot be used to interpret that they expressly exclude the right of appeal in section 307 of the Companies Act. Moreover, when an appeal is in law a continuation of the original proceedings as explained earlier, such an interpretation is not possible.

Accordingly, I hold that the right of appeal recognized in terms of section 307 of the Companies Act 1982 was not taken away in relation to the impugned winding up proceedings that were to be continued in terms of section 532(1) of the Companies Act 2007.

Questions of law Nos. 1 and 2 are answered in the affirmative.

Question of Law No. 3

Learned Counsel for the 1st and 2nd Respondent submitted that assuming a right of appeal is available against the winding up order issued in the present case, it is not a final order but only an interlocutory order. It was contended that section 307 of the Companies Act 1982 must be read with sections 754(1), (2) and (5) of the Civil Procedure Code and that the remedy available to the Petitioner was to make a leave to appeal application and not a final appeal. Reliance was placed on the decision in Chettiar v. Chettiar [(2011) BLR 25] and H.B. Ajith Ariyadasa v. Paranawithana and another [C.A. (Rev.) 1695/06, C.A.M. 2.6.2009].

Section 307 of the Companies Act 1982 reads:

> "An appeal from any order or decision made or given in the winding up of a company by the court under this Act shall lie to the Court of Appeal in the same manner and subject to the same conditions, as an appeal from any order or decision of the court made or given in the exercise of its ordinary civil jurisdiction."

The right of appeal is granted against any order or decision (if I may use that word generically) made in a winding up of a company. It does not refer to a winding up order per se. Nevertheless, the use of the word any therein makes it possible to give a wide interpretation to catch all orders or decisions including an order for the winding up of a company.

However, the learned counsel for the 1st and 2nd Respondents contended that the analysis does not stop there and must go on to consider the provisions in sections 754(1), (2) and (5) of the Civil Procedure Code. The words in the same manner and subject to the same conditions in section 307 of the Companies Act 1982 was contended to be a reference to the conditions specified in those sections. In particular, it was submitted that a right of appeal is available only in relation to a judgment whereas if it is an order, a leave to appeal application is the only remedy.

I agree that section 307 of the Companies Act 1982 must be read with subsections 754(1), (2) and (5) of the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, we must consider whether the impugned winding up order is a judgment or order within the meaning of these sections.

The 1st and 2nd Respondents cited the decision in H.B. Ajith Ariyadasa v. Paranawithana and another (supra) where it was held that the proper application to be made was a leave to appeal application in terms of section 754(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. However, the order impugned in that matter was not an order of winding up. It was an order directing the petitioner to hand over goods listed in the inventory submitted by the liquidator.

In Chettiar v. Chettiar (supra. 31) it was held:

> "Therefore, to ascertain the nature of the decision made by a Civil Court as to whether it is final or not, in keeping with the provisions of section 754(5) of the Civil Procedure Code, it would be necessary to follow the test offered by Lord Esher MR in Standard Discount Co. v. La Grange (supra) and as stated in Salaman v. Warner (supra) which reads as follows:
>
> > "The question must depend on what would be the result of the decision of the Divisional Court assuming it to be given in favour of either of the parties. If their decision, whichever way it is given, will, if it stands, finally dispose of the matter in dispute, I think that for the purposes of these rules it is final. On the other hand, if their decision, if given in one way, will finally dispose of the matter in dispute, but if given in the other, will allow the action to go on, then I think it is not final, but interlocutory."

The Court adopted the application test adopted by English courts in determining whether an order or decision is a final judgment. Therefore, the characterization of a winding up order by the English courts must be examined.

In Re Reliance Properties Ltd Waygood, Otis and Co Ltd v Reliance Properties Ltd [(1951) 2 All ER 327] Evershed MR in placing a winding up order in its proper perspective held (at 327):

> "It would be difficult to think of any order made by the court which in substance or character was more final than a winding up order".

Moreover, Halsbury's The Laws of England, 3rd edition (1954) Vol. 6 at 712, states:

> "an appeal from a winding up order maybe brought without leave of the court, as the order is a final order and not a interlocutory judgment"

This appears to have been the position in English common law even at the time the 4th edition of this work was published in 1974 [See Halsbury's The Laws of England, 4th edition (1974) Vol. 7 at 789. Nevertheless, Halsbury's Laws of England, 5th edition (2011) Vol (17) at 255, state:

> "An appeal from a winding-up order made by a district judge or circuit judge of the High Court or a registrar of the High Court requires permission of the first instance judge or registrar or a High Court Judge, and permission is required from the judge or the Court of Appeal from appeals from a High Court judge; the Court of Appeal alone can grant permission where the decision of the High Court judge is itself made on appeal"

The difference in approach appears to be based on the English rules of civil procedure, which explicitly state the circumstances in which an application for leave to appeal should be made. Therefore, the present position of English common law cannot be adopted here. A more detailed analysis of the effect of a winding up order in terms of the Companies Act 1982 should be undertaken.

Winding up proceedings are sui generis in nature. It is distinct and different from an ordinary action based on a cause of action. The impugned winding up proceedings have been instituted on the basis that the Petitioner is unable to pay its debts. The District Court decided to wind up the Petitioner. The appeal to the High Court was made by the Petitioner against the that winding up order.

With respect to section 265 of the Companies Act 1982, such an order to wind up works in favour of all of the Petitioner's creditors and contributors. It is thus clear that the impugned winding up proceedings are a remedy provided to all creditors and contributors. The substantive issue to be resolved in this winding up proceedings is whether the Petitioner is unable to pay its debts. The impugned winding up order was made by the Court after determining that central issue. In fact, it is an issue which goes to the jurisdiction of the Court.

Moreover, the effect of a winding up order cannot be overlooked in determining whether it is a final judgment within the meaning of sections 754(1) and (5) of the Civil Procedure Code. When a winding up order is made, the servants of the company are ipso facto dismissed [Chapman's case (1886) L.R. 1 Eq. 346, Measures Bros. Ltd. v. Measures (1910) 2 Ch. 248, Gosling v. Gaskell (1897) AC 575] and results in the dismissal of the directors and the cessation of their powers [Re Union Accident Insurance Co Ltd* (1972) 1 All ER 1105, Fowler v. Broad's Patent Night Light Co (1893) 1 Ch 724].

There is no doubt that significant steps need to be taken thereafter to complete the winding up proceedings, such as the appointment of liquidators. Nevertheless, as Williams LJ held in In Re Herbert Reeves & Co. [(1902) 1 Ch. 29 at 31]:

> "…the mere fact that there may be inquiries to be carried out after the order or after the judgment has been delivered does not prevent the order or the judgment from being a final order or final judgment. After you have got an order for winding up a company, there are obviously an enormous quantity of questions which may be raised…"

However, learned counsel for the Respondents drew our attention to several sections of the Companies Act 1982 and contended that a winding up order is not a final judgment. Section 287 grants power to the same court which issued the winding up order to stay the winding up proceedings altogether or for a limited time on such terms and conditions as the court thinks fit. Section 372 gives the Court the power to declare the dissolution of the company void. It was contended that the final judgment is when the Court dissolves a company consequent to an application made by the liquidator under section 304.

I am not convinced that any one of these sections negate a finding that the impugned winding up order is a final judgment within the meaning of sections 754(1) and (5) of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 287 empowers the Court only to stay the winding up proceedings in given circumstances. It does not grant power to the Court to vary a winding up order. In fact, in Re Intermain Properties Ltd. [(1986) BCLC 265 Ch D.] it was held that the Court has no jurisdiction to rescind a perfected winding up order.

No doubt, section 372 empowers the Court to declare the dissolution void. But there is a clear distinction between an order for winding up and an order for dissolution. A winding up order does not result in the extinction of the company [See Employers Liability Assurance and Corpn. v. Sedgwick Collins Co. [(1927) AC 95]. A company ceases to exist only upon an order made for dissolution in terms of section 304(1) of the Companies Act 1982.

For the foregoing reasons, I hold that the impugned winding up order is a final judgment within the meaning of sections 754(1) and (5) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Question of law No. 3 is answered in the negative.

For avoidance of any doubt and to ensure clarity, I have only made a finding that a winding up order made by the Court in terms of the Companies Act 1982 in any winding up proceedings instituted against a company due to its failure to pay its debts is a judgment within the meaning of sections 754(1) and (5) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Accordingly, I set aside the judgment of the High Court dated 7th June 2011. I direct the High Court to hear and dispose of the Petitioner's appeal on the merits expeditiously. The High Court shall make every reasonable endeavour to conclude the appeal by the Petitioner within a reasonable time. The High Court shall give priority to this matter with a view to concluding it expeditiously.

The Petitioner is entitled to the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Judgement

Aluwihare, P.C., J,

This is an appeal against the Judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of the Kandy dated 22.07.2022. The Defendant-Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the 'Defendant') failed to file an Answer before the District Court of Gampola in an action filed against him for declaration of title by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 'Plaintiff'). An exposition of the factual narrative relating to this case is necessary to comprehend the questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted.

Factual Background

The Plaintiff instituted a land case in the District Court bearing case No. L51/2006 against the Defendant for declaration of title. The subject matter is the property originally owned by 'Parama Vingartha Buddhist Society' [Buddhist Theosophical Society] started by Col. Henry Olcott. The building was used to run the Olcott Buddhist School in Gampola which was vested by the government in 1961. In the year 2005, however, after the school was shifted to a new building, the property was re-vested with the Society by virtue of a Gazette notice and the President of the Society had taken over possession of the building in 2006. Subsequently a dispute had arisen between the Society officials and the Defendant which had been settled with the intervention of the Police. Both parties had agreed to keep the premises under lock and key. Subsequently, however, the Plaintiff alleges that the Defendant had forcibly entered into the premises and had taken over possession of the building. The Action before the District Court was filed by the Society to recover possession of the property in addition to a declaration of title.

Summons were served and the case was fixed for filing of an Answer of the Defendant for 23.04.2007. On the said date, the Defendant failed to appear, no Proxy or Answer was filed either. The learned District Judge therefore fixed the case for ex- parte hearing on the same day and the Plaintiff was heard. At the conclusion of the ex-parte trial, on 15.05.2007 the learned District Judge delivered the ex parte judgement (marked 'A4') in favour of the Plaintiff. It must be noted that the Defendant had made no appearance in, or representation on his behalf before the District Court.

Thereafter, subsequent to being served notice of the ex parte judgement, the Defendant had filed papers to purge the ex parte judgement, and an inquiry was held on the same. The learned District Judge who conducted the inquiry affirmed the ex parte judgement referred to above by his Order dated 13.01.2015.

Aggrieved by the said Order, the Defendant moved by way of revision to the High Court of Civil Appeal pleading inter alia for the vacation of the said Order. The learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal dismissed the revision application by its order dated 22.07.2016 (marked 'A2').
Aggrieved by the said order of the High Court of Civil Appeal, the Defendant moved this court by way of an application for leave to appeal and this Court granted leave on the following questions.

i) Had the learned District Court Judge erred in fixing the case instituted by the Plaintiff for an ex parte hearing?
ii) Is the Judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy dated 22.07.2016 bad in law?

Having heard the Defendant -Appellant (who appeared in person), and the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff- Respondent, this Court directed both parties to file further written submissions on the following issues.

1. Whether the High Court of Civil Appeal, having requested the parties to file written submissions in relation to the preliminary objections raised by the Respondent, without considering the preliminary objection, delivered the order with regard to the substantive relief prayed in the revision application.
2. Whether the Appellant could have moved the High Court of Civil Appeal by way of revision to set aside the judgement of the District Court without first having canvassed the adverse order made against the Appellant in refusing the application to purge default.

Having possessed the set of facts and circumstances, as well as the legal issues relating to this appeal in greater detail, I am of the opinion that the aforementioned questions could be answered once the following questions are addressed.

1. On what basis may a case be fixed for ex-parte hearing and an ex-parte judgement be delivered when a Defendant fails to file Answer?
2. What are the steps to be taken in order to purge default? Has the Appellant taken such steps and been successful in that endeavour?
3. Where a person fails to purge default and set aside an adverse ex-parte judgement, does an appeal or application for revision lie from any Order affirming an adverse ex-parte judgement?
4. Does any Court exercising Revisionary jurisdiction possess the competence to determine the process of adjudication of the matter?

1. On what basis may a case be fixed for ex-parte hearing and an ex-parte judgement be delivered?

Section 84 of the Civil Procedure Code states as follows.

"If the defendant fails to file his answer on or before the day fixed for the filing of the answer, or on or before the day fixed for the subsequent filing of the answer or having filed his answer, if he fails to appear on the day fixed (or the hearing of the action, and if the court is satisfied that the defendant has been duly served with summons, or has received due notice of the day fixed for the subsequent filing of the answer, or of the day fixed for the hearing of the action, as the case may be, and if, on the occasion of such default of the defendant, the plaintiff appears, then the court shall proceed to hear the case ex-parte forthwith, or on such other day as the court may fix." [emphasis added].

That the Defendant failed to file his Answer on the day fixed for filing of Answer is admitted. The Defendant and the Plaintiff are in agreement that filing of the Answer was fixed for 23.04.2007 and that the Defendant failed to file his Answer, appear or make any representation to Court on the said date. Regarding the serving of summons, the Defendant claimed that he was served summons in open Court on 29.01.2007 by the learned District Judge when he was in court in connection with some other case [vide evidence of the Defendant on 20.03.2012 before the DC]. The Defendant further claimed that the District Judge did so upon being notified by Counsel for the Plaintiff (now Respondent) that the Defendant was present in Court. Therefore, there can be no doubt that the present case falls within the ambit of Section 84.

Nothing prevents the Court from fixing a date for trial on the day of default itself and the in the present instance, the learned District Judge considered it expeditious to do so as the Defendant was neither present nor had there been any representation on his behalf indicating his intention to contest the Plaint. By his judgement dated 15.05.2007 (at p. 165 of the Original Court Record marked 'A4'), the learned District Judge entered judgement in favour of the Plaintiff and stated that such judgment is entered upon the merit of evidence led by the Plaintiff, and that the Defendant may vacate the ex-parte judgment within 14 days. Therefore, although the learned District Judge makes no reference to Section 84 in his judgement, there can be no question of illegality regarding the conduct of an ex-parte trial or the delivery of ex-parte judgement where the Defendant fails to file Answer and/or appear.

2. What are the steps to be taken in order to purge default? Has the Defendant taken such steps and been successful in that endeavour?

Section 86 of the Civil Procedure Code details how default may be purged or how a judgement entered in default may be set aside. I have reproduced the Section below for convenience.

"(2) Where, within fourteen days of the service of the decree entered against him for default, the defendant with notice to the plaintiff makes application to and thereafter satisfies court, that he had reasonable grounds for such default, the court shall set aside the judgment and decree and permit the defendant to proceed with his defence as from the stage of default upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as to the court shall appear proper.

(2A) At any time prior to the entering of judgment against a defendant for default, the court may, if the plaintiff consents, but not otherwise, set aside any order made on the basis of the default of the defendant and permit him to proceed with his defence as from the stage of default upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as to the court shall appear fit." [emphasis added].

The Defendant had made an application under Section 86(2) to have the ex-parte judgement vacated. The Order of the learned District Judge dated 13.01.2015 (at pg. 225 of the Original Court Record marked 'A4') states that an inquiry into the matter was conducted and written submissions were submitted by both parties. This Order too observes that the Defendant had been served summons in open court, that 23.04.2007 had been fixed for filing of answer and that on the said date, he had failed to file such answer. The Order also states that the Defendant contended that the reason he could not file Answer on the said date is due sustained illness, resulting in his hospitalization from 02.04.2007 to 10.04.2007 and subsequent time to recuperate till 02.05.2007. Having noted that per the Defendant's submissions, the he was ill from 28.03.2007, that the medical report obtained on 10.04.2007 recommends a period of rest till 24.04.2007, and that consequently, the Appellant would have been cognizant of the impending difficulty to appear in Court or file his Answer by 23.04.2007, the learned District Court Judge concluded that the Appellant could have made the Court aware of this difficulty by way of Counsel, agent or relation. Based on the aforementioned reasoning, the learned District Court Judge concluded that the Defendant had not satisfied Court that he had "reasonable grounds for such default" per Section 86(2) to vacate the ex-parte judgement. The Appellant's application under Section 86(2) was refused and affirmed the ex-parte judgement dated 15.05.2007. It would be pertinent to note that 'Dr Doluweera' who issued the medical certificate to the Defendant, had noted under 'Medical Officer's opinion' that the Defendant was 'moderately ill', and the Defendants' ailment was a backpain.

Accordingly, it is evident that although the Appellant had sought the vacation of the ex-parte judgement via the appropriate statutory remedy, he had not been successful and therefore, the ex-parte judgement was affirmed at the end of the inquiry.

3. Where a person fails to purge default and set aside an adverse ex-parte judgement, does an appeal or an application for revision lie from any Order affirming an adverse ex-parte judgement?

This question relates to the second question upon which parties were directed to tender written submissions. In my opinion, Section 88 of the Civil Procedure Code read in conjunction with the scope and extent of the Revisionary Jurisdiction exercised by the High Court of Civil Appeals comprehensively addresses this question.

Sections 88(1) and 88(2) are as follows:

"(1) No appeal shall lie against any judgment entered upon default.

(2) The order setting aside or refusing to set aside the judgment entered upon default shall accompany the facts upon which it is adjudicated and specify the grounds upon which it is made, and shall be liable to an appeal to the relevant High Court established by Article 154P of the Constitution, with leave first had and obtained from such High Court." [emphasis added]

Accordingly, per Section 88(2), the Defendant could have sought to leave to appeal from the High Court Civil Appeal against the Order of the learned District Court Judge dated 13.01.2015 (at pg. 225 of the Original Court Record marked 'A4'). The Defendant avers, in his Petition to this Court that he filed an application seeking leave to appeal in terms of Section 88(2), as well as an application seeking revision of the Order of the learned District Court Judge dated 13.01.2015 in the High Court of Civil Appeal. However, no mention is made of any progress or result of the application which sought leave to appeal. Nevertheless, the High Court of Civil Appeal entertained the Appellant's Revision application, and it is the resultant order of the High Court of Civil Appeal on the Revision application that is being canvassed against before this Court.

In any case, the application which sought leave to appeal could have had no effect on the maintainability of the Revision application as it is well settled that the powers of revision bestowed on Appellate Courts are discretionary, and very wide in that they may be exercised regardless of whether an appeal has been taken against the impugned Order of the Original Court [vide Rustom Vs. Hapangama & Co. [1978/79] 2 SLR 225; Attorney General v. Podisingho [1950] 51 NLR 385; Wijesiri Gunawardene & Others Vs. Chandrasena Muthukumarana & Others, SC Appeal No. 111/2015 with SC Appeal No. 113/2015 and SC Appeal No. 114/2015, S.C Minutes 27.05.2020]. For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the Appellant could have moved the High Court of Civil Appeal by way of revision to set aside the order of the District Court even if he had not first sought to appeal against the adverse order made against the Defendant when the District Court, by Order dated13.01.2015 refused to vacate the ex-parte judgement.

4. Does any Court exercising Revisionary jurisdiction possess the competence to determine the procedure of adjudication?

This question relates to the first question upon which parties were directed to tender written submissions. I must begin addressing this question by setting out the parameters, scope and appropriate fora in which the Revisionary jurisdiction may be invoked in this Island.

Article 138 of the Constitution bestows the Court of Appeal the power to revise any judgement, decree or order of any Original Court where any error, defect or irregularity in such judgement, decree or order of any Original Court has prejudiced the substantial rights of parties or has occasioned a failure of justice. Article 154P(3)(b) of the Constitution read with Section 5A of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act, No. 19 0f 1990 provide that any High Court established by Article 154P of the Constitution for a Province, shall have and exercise revisionary jurisdiction in respect of judgments, decrees and orders delivered and made by any District Court within such Province, where any error, defect or irregularity in such judgement, decree or order of any Original Court has prejudiced the substantial rights of parties or has occasioned a failure of justice. Accordingly, the High Court of Civil Appeal of Kandy was well-possessed of the jurisdiction to hear and determine the Defendant's Revision Application.

The Defendant's central grievance over the order of the High Court of Civil Appeal dated 22.07.2016 is that the order is conclusive of the merits of the Defendant's revision application and dismisses the application despite the Defendant not being granted a hearing for substantive submissions on the merits of the application. The Defendant contended that at the point at which the order was given, both parties had only addressed a preliminary objection regarding the application. Explaining his argument, the Defendant contended that consideration of the preliminary objection alone cannot be grounds for adjudication of the merits of his application, and that a final order cannot be given when the parties had only argued on a preliminary objection.

At this point, I find it prudent to advert to the Judgement and Proceedings of the High Court of Civil Appeal dated 22.07.2016 (marked 'A1'). I observe the following:

- Having supported his application for revision, the Defendant raised a preliminary objection regarding the standing of the Plaintiff before the High Court. Court allowed parties to tender written submissions on the objection [vide proceedings dated 07.09.2015].
- The aforesaid Preliminary Objection was that the Proxy tendered on behalf of the Plaintiff was defective in that it did not bear the signature of the Secretary of the Respondent Society and that it did not bear the Common Seal [vide p. 4 of the A1].
- On 17.11.2015 the Defendant filed written submissions [vide proceedings dated 17.11.2015].
- On 10.12.2015 the Plaintiff filed written submissions [vide proceedings dated 14.12.2015].
- On 22.07.2016. the Order was delivered in open courts, the Preliminary Objection was overruled, and the Revision application was dismissed without costs." [vide proceedings dated 22.07.2016].

Therefore, it is evident that no dedicated submissions on the merits of the revision application were made. The question which warrants determination is therefore whether the learned Judges of the High Court erred in only permitting submissions to be made on the preliminary objection before delivering its order on the entire application.

The Revisionary Jurisdiction is fundamentally a discretionary one. The essence of this statement is that it is exercised purely at the discretion of the learned Appellate Judges while paying due regard to immutable principles of natural justice and legislation. This court has, on several occasions, deemed it fit to lay out the scope of the revisionary power of our appellate courts and note how it may be exercised.

To reach the crucial element of this question in this appeal, I will refer to the judgement in Rasheed Ali Vs. Mohamed Ali and Others [1981] 1 SLR 262 where His Lordship Justice R.S. Wanasundera (with Justice Weeraratne agreeing) held that the powers of revision vested in the Court of Appeal, flowing from Article 138 of the Constitution, are very wide and the Court can in a fit case, exercise that power whether or not an appeal lies, but it should do so only in exceptional circumstances. The learned Counsel for the Plaintiff as well as the Defendant himself referred to this judgement to substantiate their arguments. Relying on the aforementioned judgement, the Defendant contended that his case was one that warranted revision due to a set of circumstances which he believed to be exceptional, due to alleged errors in fact and law in the Order of the learned District Court Judge. Learned Counsel for the Plaintiff contended that the learned Judges of the High Court rightly concluded that the revision application presented no exceptional circumstances, or any errors, omissions or irregularities which occasioned a failure of justice.

Regarding the manner in which the revisionary jurisdiction may be exercised, five Justices of this Court observed in Attorney General Vs. Gunawardena [1996] 2 SLR 149 that "in exercising the powers of Revision this Court is not trammelled by technical rules of pleading and procedure" [at p. 150]. Although the jurisprudence of this Court has now advanced to the point where it is settled that this Court does not have an inherent power of revision, it is my view that the above holding would apply without derogation to the revisionary jurisdiction exercised by the Court of Appeal, or a High Court established by Article 154P of the Constitution. From the aforementioned observation, it could also be established that the High Court of Civil Appeal would not have been bound to entertain the revision application any further than the learned Judges felt it necessary.

Regarding the preliminary objection raised by the Defendant, the Order of the High Court notes [at pages 4 and 5] that the alleged defect is a mere technical objection which could be readily remedied and that such objection cannot in any circumstances be grounds for quashing an Order of the District Court or setting aside the ex-parte judgement. The Appellant contended before this Court that the learned Judges of the High Court have not paid consideration to material facts and circumstances relating to the Revision application before dismissing it. However, in my opinion, the Petition and affidavit of the Defendant presented to the High Court provide a comprehensive narration of the facts and circumstances of his application. It is evident in the order of the High Court that the learned Judges were well-possessed of the facts and circumstances of the application as correct references are made to the documents tendered, as well as the original case record of the District Court.

Upon further observation, I note that the learned Judges of the High Court have paid ample consideration to the grievance averred to by the Defendant. Having done so, the learned Judges have found no credible elements constituting 'exceptional circumstances' to exist in the Defendant's application for the court to exercise its revisionary powers. The order of the High Court states [at pages 6 and 7] that it is evident that the Defendant was in derogation of Section 86(2) and Section 753 of the Civil Procedure Code in seeking revision of the Order of the learned District Court Judge as the Defendant had failed to provide any grounds which justified his default or served to indicate an error of law or fact committed by the learned District Court Judge, and that the lack of such elements constitute sufficient reason for the dismissal of the Appellant's Application for Revision. Having considered the facts and circumstances of this case and the matters urged before the High Court of Civil Appeal, I am of the view that the learned judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal could not have arrived at any other conclusion and as such I hold that the decision of the learned Hogh Court Judges cannot be faulted.

For the reasons mentioned above, I answer the questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted as follows.

i) Had the learned District Court Judge erred in fixing the case instituted by the Plaintiff for an ex parte hearing?
Answer: No.

ii) Is the Judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy dated 22.07.2016 bad in law?
Answer: No.

Judgement

Aluwihare, P.C., J,

This is an appeal against the Judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of the Kandy dated 22.07.2022. The Defendant-Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the 'Defendant') failed to file an Answer before the District Court of Gampola in an action filed against him for declaration of title by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 'Plaintiff'). An exposition of the factual narrative relating to this case is necessary to comprehend the questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted.

Factual Background

The Plaintiff instituted a land case in the District Court bearing case No. L51/2006 against the Defendant for declaration of title. The subject matter is the property originally owned by 'Parama Vingartha Buddhist Society' [Buddhist Theosophical Society] started by Col. Henry Olcott. The building was used to run the Olcott Buddhist School in Gampola which was vested by the government in 1961. In the year 2005, however, after the school was shifted to a new building, the property was re-vested with the Society by virtue of a Gazette notice and the President of the Society had taken over possession of the building in 2006. Subsequently a dispute had arisen between the Society officials and the Defendant which had been settled with the intervention of the Police. Both parties had agreed to keep the premises under lock and key. Subsequently, however, the Plaintiff alleges that the Defendant had forcibly entered into the premises and had taken over possession of the building. The Action before the District Court was filed by the Society to recover possession of the property in addition to a declaration of title.

Summons were served and the case was fixed for filing of an Answer of the Defendant for 23.04.2007. On the said date, the Defendant failed to appear, no Proxy or Answer was filed either. The learned District Judge therefore fixed the case for ex- parte hearing on the same day and the Plaintiff was heard. At the conclusion of the ex-parte trial, on 15.05.2007 the learned District Judge delivered the ex parte judgement (marked 'A4') in favour of the Plaintiff. It must be noted that the Defendant had made no appearance in, or representation on his behalf before the District Court.

Thereafter, subsequent to being served notice of the ex parte judgement, the Defendant had filed papers to purge the ex parte judgement, and an inquiry was held on the same. The learned District Judge who conducted the inquiry affirmed the ex parte judgement referred to above by his Order dated 13.01.2015.

Aggrieved by the said Order, the Defendant moved by way of revision to the High Court of Civil Appeal pleading inter alia for the vacation of the said Order. The learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal dismissed the revision application by its order dated 22.07.2016 (marked 'A2').

Aggrieved by the said order of the High Court of Civil Appeal, the Defendant moved this court by way of an application for leave to appeal and this Court granted leave on the following questions.

i) Had the learned District Court Judge erred in fixing the case instituted by the Plaintiff for an ex parte hearing?

ii) Is the Judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy dated 22.07.2016 bad in law?

Having heard the Defendant -Appellant (who appeared in person), and the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff- Respondent, this Court directed both parties to file further written submissions on the following issues.

1. Whether the High Court of Civil Appeal, having requested the parties to file written submissions in relation to the preliminary objections raised by the Respondent, without considering the preliminary objection, delivered the order with regard to the substantive relief prayed in the revision application.

2. Whether the Appellant could have moved the High Court of Civil Appeal by way of revision to set aside the judgement of the District Court without first having canvassed the adverse order made against the Appellant in refusing the application to purge default.

Having possessed the set of facts and circumstances, as well as the legal issues relating to this appeal in greater detail, I am of the opinion that the aforementioned questions could be answered once the following questions are addressed.

1. On what basis may a case be fixed for ex-parte hearing and an ex-parte judgement be delivered when a Defendant fails to file Answer?
2. What are the steps to be taken in order to purge default? Has the Appellant taken such steps and been successful in that endeavour?
3. Where a person fails to purge default and set aside an adverse ex-parte judgement, does an appeal or application for revision lie from any Order affirming an adverse ex-parte judgement?
4. Does any Court exercising Revisionary jurisdiction possess the competence to determine the process of adjudication of the matter?

1. On what basis may a case be fixed for ex-parte hearing and an ex-parte judgement be delivered?

Section 84 of the Civil Procedure Code states as follows.

"If the defendant fails to file his answer on or before the day fixed for the filing of the answer, or on or before the day fixed for the subsequent filing of the answer or having filed his answer, if he fails to appear on the day fixed (or the hearing of the action, and if the court is satisfied that the defendant has been duly served with summons, or has received due notice of the day fixed for the subsequent filing of the answer, or of the day fixed for the hearing of the action, as the case may be, and if, on the occasion of such default of the defendant, the plaintiff appears, then the court shall proceed to hear the case ex-parte forthwith, or on such other day as the court may fix." [emphasis added].

That the Defendant failed to file his Answer on the day fixed for filing of Answer is admitted. The Defendant and the Plaintiff are in agreement that filing of the Answer was fixed for 23.04.2007 and that the Defendant failed to file his Answer, appear or make any representation to Court on the said date. Regarding the serving of summons, the Defendant claimed that he was served summons in open Court on 29.01.2007 by the learned District Judge when he was in court in connection with some other case [vide evidence of the Defendant on 20.03.2012 before the DC]. The Defendant further claimed that the District Judge did so upon being notified by Counsel for the Plaintiff (now Respondent) that the Defendant was present in Court. Therefore, there can be no doubt that the present case falls within the ambit of Section 84.

Nothing prevents the Court from fixing a date for trial on the day of default itself and the in the present instance, the learned District Judge considered it expeditious to do so as the Defendant was neither present nor had there been any representation on his behalf indicating his intention to contest the Plaint. By his judgement dated 15.05.2007 (at p. 165 of the Original Court Record marked 'A4'), the learned District Judge entered judgement in favour of the Plaintiff and stated that such judgment is entered upon the merit of evidence led by the Plaintiff, and that the Defendant may vacate the ex-parte judgment within 14 days. Therefore, although the learned District Judge makes no reference to Section 84 in his judgement, there can be no question of illegality regarding the conduct of an ex-parte trial or the delivery of ex-parte judgement where the Defendant fails to file Answer and/or appear.

2. What are the steps to be taken in order to purge default? Has the Defendant taken such steps and been successful in that endeavour?

Section 86 of the Civil Procedure Code details how default may be purged or how a judgement entered in default may be set aside. I have reproduced the Section below for convenience.

"(2) Where, within fourteen days of the service of the decree entered against him for default, the defendant with notice to the plaintiff makes application to and thereafter satisfies court, that he had reasonable grounds for such default, the court shall set aside the judgment and decree and permit the defendant to proceed with his defence as from the stage of default upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as to the court shall appear proper.

(2A) At any time prior to the entering of judgment against a defendant for default, the court may, if the plaintiff consents, but not otherwise, set aside any order made on the basis of the default of the defendant and permit him to proceed with his defence as from the stage of default upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as to the court shall appear fit." [emphasis added].

The Defendant had made an application under Section 86(2) to have the ex-parte judgement vacated. The Order of the learned District Judge dated 13.01.2015 (at pg. 225 of the Original Court Record marked 'A4') states that an inquiry into the matter was conducted and written submissions were submitted by both parties. This Order too observes that the Defendant had been served summons in open court, that 23.04.2007 had been fixed for filing of answer and that on the said date, he had failed to file such answer. The Order also states that the Defendant contended that the reason he could not file Answer on the said date is due sustained illness, resulting in his hospitalization from 02.04.2007 to 10.04.2007 and subsequent time to recuperate till 02.05.2007. Having noted that per the Defendant's submissions, the he was ill from 28.03.2007, that the medical report obtained on 10.04.2007 recommends a period of rest till 24.04.2007, and that consequently, the Appellant would have been cognizant of the impending difficulty to appear in Court or file his Answer by 23.04.2007, the learned District Court Judge concluded that the Appellant could have made the Court aware of this difficulty by way of Counsel, agent or relation. Based on the aforementioned reasoning, the learned District Court Judge concluded that the Defendant had not satisfied Court that he had "reasonable grounds for such default" per Section 86(2) to vacate the ex-parte judgement. The Appellant's application under Section 86(2) was refused and affirmed the ex-parte judgement dated 15.05.2007. It would be pertinent to note that 'Dr Doluweera' who issued the medical certificate to the Defendant, had noted under 'Medical Officer's opinion' that the Defendant was 'moderately ill', and the Defendants' ailment was a backpain.

Accordingly, it is evident that although the Appellant had sought the vacation of the ex-parte judgement via the appropriate statutory remedy, he had not been successful and therefore, the ex-parte judgement was affirmed at the end of the inquiry.

3. Where a person fails to purge default and set aside an adverse ex-parte judgement, does an appeal or an application for revision lie from any Order affirming an adverse ex-parte judgement?

This question relates to the second question upon which parties were directed to tender written submissions. In my opinion, Section 88 of the Civil Procedure Code read in conjunction with the scope and extent of the Revisionary Jurisdiction exercised by the High Court of Civil Appeals comprehensively addresses this question.

Sections 88(1) and 88(2) are as follows:

"(1) No appeal shall lie against any judgment entered upon default.

(2) The order setting aside or refusing to set aside the judgment entered upon default shall accompany the facts upon which it is adjudicated and specify the grounds upon which it is made, and shall be liable to an appeal to the relevant High Court established by Article 154P of the Constitution, with leave first had and obtained from such High Court." [emphasis added]

Accordingly, per Section 88(2), the Defendant could have sought to leave to appeal from the High Court Civil Appeal against the Order of the learned District Court Judge dated 13.01.2015 (at pg. 225 of the Original Court Record marked 'A4'). The Defendant avers, in his Petition to this Court that he filed an application seeking leave to appeal in terms of Section 88(2), as well as an application seeking revision of the Order of the learned District Court Judge dated 13.01.2015 in the High Court of Civil Appeal. However, no mention is made of any progress or result of the application which sought leave to appeal. Nevertheless, the High Court of Civil Appeal entertained the Appellant's Revision application, and it is the resultant order of the High Court of Civil Appeal on the Revision application that is being canvassed against before this Court.

In any case, the application which sought leave to appeal could have had no effect on the maintainability of the Revision application as it is well settled that the powers of revision bestowed on Appellate Courts are discretionary, and very wide in that they may be exercised regardless of whether an appeal has been taken against the impugned Order of the Original Court [vide Rustom Vs. Hapangama & Co. [1978/79] 2 SLR 225; Attorney General v. Podisingho [1950] 51 NLR 385; Wijesiri Gunawardene & Others Vs. Chandrasena Muthukumarana & Others, SC Appeal No. 111/2015 with SC Appeal No. 113/2015 and SC Appeal No. 114/2015, S.C Minutes 27.05.2020]. For these reasons, I am of the opinion that the Appellant could have moved the High Court of Civil Appeal by way of revision to set aside the order of the District Court even if he had not first sought to appeal against the adverse order made against the Defendant when the District Court, by Order dated13.01.2015 refused to vacate the ex-parte judgement.

4. Does any Court exercising Revisionary jurisdiction possess the competence to determine the procedure of adjudication?

This question relates to the first question upon which parties were directed to tender written submissions. I must begin addressing this question by setting out the parameters, scope and appropriate fora in which the Revisionary jurisdiction may be invoked in this Island.

Article 138 of the Constitution bestows the Court of Appeal the power to revise any judgement, decree or order of any Original Court where any error, defect or irregularity in such judgement, decree or order of any Original Court has prejudiced the substantial rights of parties or has occasioned a failure of justice. Article 154P(3)(b) of the Constitution read with Section 5A of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act, No. 19 0f 1990 provide that any High Court established by Article 154P of the Constitution for a Province, shall have and exercise revisionary jurisdiction in respect of judgments, decrees and orders delivered and made by any District Court within such Province, where any error, defect or irregularity in such judgement, decree or order of any Original Court has prejudiced the substantial rights of parties or has occasioned a failure of justice. Accordingly, the High Court of Civil Appeal of Kandy was well-possessed of the jurisdiction to hear and determine the Defendant's Revision Application.

The Defendant's central grievance over the order of the High Court of Civil Appeal dated 22.07.2016 is that the order is conclusive of the merits of the Defendant's revision application and dismisses the application despite the Defendant not being granted a hearing for substantive submissions on the merits of the application. The Defendant contended that at the point at which the order was given, both parties had only addressed a preliminary objection regarding the application. Explaining his argument, the Defendant contended that consideration of the preliminary objection alone cannot be grounds for adjudication of the merits of his application, and that a final order cannot be given when the parties had only argued on a preliminary objection.

At this point, I find it prudent to advert to the Judgement and Proceedings of the High Court of Civil Appeal dated 22.07.2016 (marked 'A1'). I observe the following:

- Having supported his application for revision, the Defendant raised a preliminary objection regarding the standing of the Plaintiff before the High Court. Court allowed parties to tender written submissions on the objection [vide proceedings dated 07.09.2015].
- The aforesaid Preliminary Objection was that the Proxy tendered on behalf of the Plaintiff was defective in that it did not bear the signature of the Secretary of the Respondent Society and that it did not bear the Common Seal [vide p. 4 of the A1].
- On 17.11.2015 the Defendant filed written submissions [vide proceedings dated 17.11.2015].
- On 10.12.2015 the Plaintiff filed written submissions [vide proceedings dated 14.12.2015].
- On 22.07.2016. the Order was delivered in open courts, the Preliminary Objection was overruled, and the Revision application was dismissed without costs." [vide proceedings dated 22.07.2016].

Therefore, it is evident that no dedicated submissions on the merits of the revision application were made. The question which warrants determination is therefore whether the learned Judges of the High Court erred in only permitting submissions to be made on the preliminary objection before delivering its order on the entire application.

The Revisionary Jurisdiction is fundamentally a discretionary one. The essence of this statement is that it is exercised purely at the discretion of the learned Appellate Judges while paying due regard to immutable principles of natural justice and legislation. This court has, on several occasions, deemed it fit to lay out the scope of the revisionary power of our appellate courts and note how it may be exercised.

To reach the crucial element of this question in this appeal, I will refer to the judgement in Rasheed Ali Vs. Mohamed Ali and Others [1981] 1 SLR 262 where His Lordship Justice R.S. Wanasundera (with Justice Weeraratne agreeing) held that the powers of revision vested in the Court of Appeal, flowing from Article 138 of the Constitution, are very wide and the Court can in a fit case, exercise that power whether or not an appeal lies, but it should do so only in exceptional circumstances. The learned Counsel for the Plaintiff as well as the Defendant himself referred to this judgement to substantiate their arguments. Relying on the aforementioned judgement, the Defendant contended that his case was one that warranted revision due to a set of circumstances which he believed to be exceptional, due to alleged errors in fact and law in the Order of the learned District Court Judge. Learned Counsel for the Plaintiff contended that the learned Judges of the High Court rightly concluded that the revision application presented no exceptional circumstances, or any errors, omissions or irregularities which occasioned a failure of justice.

Regarding the manner in which the revisionary jurisdiction may be exercised, five Justices of this Court observed in Attorney General Vs. Gunawardena [1996] 2 SLR 149 that "in exercising the powers of Revision this Court is not trammelled by technical rules of pleading and procedure" [at p. 150]. Although the jurisprudence of this Court has now advanced to the point where it is settled that this Court does not have an inherent power of revision, it is my view that the above holding would apply without derogation to the revisionary jurisdiction exercised by the Court of Appeal, or a High Court established by Article 154P of the Constitution. From the aforementioned observation, it could also be established that the High Court of Civil Appeal would not have been bound to entertain the revision application any further than the learned Judges felt it necessary.

Regarding the preliminary objection raised by the Defendant, the Order of the High Court notes [at pages 4 and 5] that the alleged defect is a mere technical objection which could be readily remedied and that such objection cannot in any circumstances be grounds for quashing an Order of the District Court or setting aside the ex-parte judgement. The Appellant contended before this Court that the learned Judges of the High Court have not paid consideration to material facts and circumstances relating to the Revision application before dismissing it. However, in my opinion, the Petition and affidavit of the Defendant presented to the High Court provide a comprehensive narration of the facts and circumstances of his application. It is evident in the order of the High Court that the learned Judges were well-possessed of the facts and circumstances of the application as correct references are made to the documents tendered, as well as the original case record of the District Court.

Upon further observation, I note that the learned Judges of the High Court have paid ample consideration to the grievance averred to by the Defendant. Having done so, the learned Judges have found no credible elements constituting 'exceptional circumstances' to exist in the Defendant's application for the court to exercise its revisionary powers. The order of the High Court states [at pages 6 and 7] that it is evident that the Defendant was in derogation of Section 86(2) and Section 753 of the Civil Procedure Code in seeking revision of the Order of the learned District Court Judge as the Defendant had failed to provide any grounds which justified his default or served to indicate an error of law or fact committed by the learned District Court Judge, and that the lack of such elements constitute sufficient reason for the dismissal of the Appellant's Application for Revision. Having considered the facts and circumstances of this case and the matters urged before the High Court of Civil Appeal, I am of the view that the learned judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal could not have arrived at any other conclusion and as such I hold that the decision of the learned Hogh Court Judges cannot be faulted.

For the reasons mentioned above, I answer the questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted as follows.

The Respondents-Respondents-Appellants (hereinafter referred to as Respondents-Appellants) had initiated the instant appeal against the order of the High Court of Avissawella in a Labour Tribunal Appeal Pending before the said High Court.

As revealed before us the Applicant-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Applicant-Respondent) who was employed by the Respondents-Appellants as a "Field Officer", filed an application before the Labour Tribunal of Avissawella against the unlawful termination of him by the said employer.

When the Labour Tribunal dismissed his application by order dated 23rd October 2014, and being dissatisfied with the said order the Applicant-Respondent appealed against the said order to the High Court of Avissawella. The learned High Court Judge by his order dated 27th November 2017 allowed the appeal and reinstated the Applicant-Respondent with back wages.

Against the said order the Respondents-Appellants had sought special leave from the Supreme Court and this Court on 28th May 2019 granted special leave on the following questions of law.

d) Has the learned High Court Judge erred in law in failing to consider that the Labour Tribunal is the best judge of the facts and or by replacing the Tribunal's findings with his own view of the facts?

e) Has the learned High Court Judge erred in law in failing to consider the past record of the Respondent and or its impact in differentiating the respondent from other employees in the taking of disciplinary action for misconduct?

f) Has the learned High Court Judge erred in law in giving undue weight to the non-production of the Domestic Inquiry Report when, in any event, the burden is on the Petitioners to justify termination of employment before the honourable Labour Tribunal?

l) In any event, has the learned High Court Judge erred in law in granting reinstatement to the Respondent and failing to take cognizance of the fact that the Petitioners cannot repose any confidence in the Respondent and or that reinstatement would, in these circumstances, disrupt discipline and or industrial harmony in the Petitioner company?

The Applicant-Respondent who was recruited as a Junior Assistant Field Officer in the year 1997 to Udabage Estate was working as a Field Officer of Woodend Estate -Dehiovita at the time his services were terminated by the Respondents-Appellants. Prior to his termination, the Applicant-Respondent was served with two charge sheets by his employer and a domestic inquiry was held against him. Consequent to the said inquiry his services were terminated with effect from 18th December 2011. The Applicant-Respondent who went before the Labour Tribunal of Avissawella against the said termination had prayed inter-alia a reinstatement from the date of suspension from the service, back wages, and compensation for illegal, unfair, and unlawful termination of his service. He has further complained to the Labour Tribunal that there was no proper evidence led against him at the domestic inquiry and therefore the employer could not establish charges against him.

As revealed before us two sets of charges were framed against the Applicant-Respondent at the Domestic Inquiry. The first charge sheet dated 01.11.2010 was produced at the inquiry before the Labour Tribunal marked R41A and the second charge sheet dated 22.03.2011 was produced marked R9A. The first set of charges was based on the alteration of entries in the books maintained by the Applicant-Respondent. The other charges were based on the duties entrusted to a casual labourer as against the rubber tappers.

The extent to which the facts that were revealed before the Labour Tribunal should be considered by an Appellate Court and whether the High Court had analyzed the evidence placed before the Labour Tribunal in its correct perspective was the basis for the questions of law that were to be considered by me in the instant judgment.

Section 31 D (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act No. 43 of 1950 (as amended- hereinafter referred to as the Act) does not permit an appeal from the Labour Tribunal on the questions of facts. However, in the case of Ceylon Transport Board Vs. N. M. J. Abdeen 70 NLR 407, it was held by the Supreme Court that,

> "Where the President of a Labour Tribunal misdirects himself on the facts, such misdirection amounts to a question of law within the meaning of section 31D (2) of the Act.

In the case of Ceylon Transport Board Vs. W.A.D. Gunasinghe 72 NLR 76 it was also held that,

> "Where a Labour Tribunal makes a finding of fact for which there is no evidence – a finding which is both inconsistent with the evidence and contradictory of it – the restrictions of the > right of the Supreme Court to review questions of law does not prevent it from examining and interfering with the order based on such findings if the Labour Tribunal is under a duty to act judicially."

In the case of The Caledonian (Ceylon) Tea and Rubber Estates Ltd Vs. J.S. Hillman, it was held that,

> "Inasmuch as an appeal lies from an order of a Labor Tribunal only on a question of law an Appellant who seeks to have a determination of facts by the Tribunal set aside must satisfy the Appellate Court that there was no legal evidence to support the conclusion of facts reached by the Tribunal, or that the finding is not rationally possible and is perverse even with regard to the evidence on record"

In the above circumstances, it is clear that an Appellate Court will not simply interfere with the findings of a Labour Tribunal unless the order made by the Labour Tribunal is perverse, the evidence is not supportive of the conclusion reached, the evidence is inconsistent or contradictory with the finding.

Even if the Appellate Court takes a different view, regarding an appeal before such Court, the evidence supports the view taken by the Labour Tribunal, in such a situation the role of the Appellate Court was discussed in the case of Ceylon Cinema and Films Studio Employees' Union V. Liberty Cinema (1994) 3 Sri LR 121 as follows;

> "The question of assessment of the evidence is within the province of the Labour Tribunal and if there is evidence on record to support its findings, the Appellate Court cannot review those findings even though on its own perception to the evidence it may be inclined to come to a different conclusion."

When the Applicant-Respondent appealed against the findings of the Labour Tribunal to the High Court, the High Court by its order dated 27th November 2017 allowed the Appeal and made an order to reinstate the Applicant with back wages. Since the High Court decided to interfere with the finding of the Labour Tribunal in appeal, this Court will consider the legality of the said order, and in the said circumstances this Court will be considering the evidence led before the Labour Tribunal and the matters that were considered by the High Court when reversing the finding of the Labour Tribunal.

During the inquiry before the Labour Tribunal the Respondents (Respondents-Appellants before this Court) led the evidence of three witnesses including the General Manager of Mahaoya Group Thilakarathne, two Managers from Pinkanda Estate, Cristopher Senevirathne, and Rangajeewa Alahakoon. During their evidence, it was revealed that when the Applicant (Applicant-Respondent before this Court) was working as a field officer at Woodend Division of Mahaoya Estate he was served with a letter dated 20.07.2010 calling his explanation for discrepancies observed between the latex weighing register and the daily progress report both prepared by the Applicant. The above discrepancy was further observed on the name cards of the Rubber Tappers. According to the witnesses, these figures should be the same, and the wages of the tappers were prepared on the information contained in those documents. The name cards carried by the tapper will indicate the quantity of latex collected by the tapper and the said figure cannot be different from the entries made in the weighing register. The above discrepancies were further observed in the daily wages form on which the salaries were paid to the Rubber Tappers.

Since the explanation provided by the Applicant was unsatisfactory, the management of Mahaoya Group decided to inquire into the said matter and a charge sheet was issued to the Applicant with two charges (R41A)

Whilst the above inquiry was pending against the Applicant another charge sheet was served on the Applicant-Respondent which contained 4 charges for including a casual Labourer by the name of Somawathi into the check roll of rubber tappers and allowing her to work in his division as a tapper without obtaining approval from the management (R-9A). There was evidence led before the tribunal to the effect that in three months, i.e., in the months of July, August, and September her name was included as a Tapper while she worked as a casual Labourer. According to the witnesses Applicant being the most senior field officer of the Woodend division it was his responsibility to maintain records correctly and allowing one Labourer to get an advantage against the Tappers employed by the estate is illegal as per the instructions issued to the Field Officers (R-33). As per the domestic inquiry proceedings which were produced marked R-11, evidence had been led at the inquiry that when the employees attached to a division is insufficient, the field officers are permitted to use casual Labourers with the permission of the management but no such permission had been obtained by the Applicant-Respondent to obtain the services of casual laborer Somawathi as a tapper. However, on several occasions, the Applicant-Respondent had obtained the services of Somawathi as a Tapper.

As observed by me, the President of the Labour Tribunal had correctly analyzed the evidence placed before the Labour Tribunal by the above witnesses in detail and had concluded that the employer had established the charges leveled against the Applicant-Respondent except for charge 2 in R-41A and charge 3 in R-9A where the Applicant was found not guilty at the domestic inquiry.

When analyzing the evidence placed before the tribunal, the President was mindful of the matters elicited by the Applicant in cross-examination of the witnesses, especially with regard to four instances where field assistants namely Kamalaraj and Sureka entered the name of Somawathi as a Tapper.

In his order, the President Labour Tribunal had considered this issue as follows;

> "ඒ අනුව ඉල්ලුම්කාර පාර්ශවය අවධාරනය කර තිබෙන්නේ තමන් සේවයට වාර්තා නොකරන ඉහත දිනවල ද සිල්ලර වැඩට යොදවන ලද ටී. සෝමාවතී යන ස්ත්‍රිය කිරි කම්කරුවකු වශයෙන් වෙක් රෝලයට ඇතුලත් කර ඇති බවත් එහෙත් ඔවුන් සම්බන්ධයෙන් කිසිදු විනය ක්‍රියා මාර්ගයක් ගෙන නොමැති බවයි. වගඋත්තරකරු ඔවුන් සම්බන්ධයෙන් එවැනි විනය ක්‍රියා මාර්ගයක් නොගත්තත් ඔවුන්ට ඒ සම්බන්ධයෙන් අවවාද කර ඇති බවත් ඉල්ලුම්කරු මීට පෙර ද මෙවැනි වරදවල් සිදුකර තිබීම නිසා ඔහු සම්බන්ධයෙන් විනය ක්‍රියා මාර්ගයක් ගැනීමට තීරණය කල බව අවධාරනය කර ඇත. එසේම ඉල්ලුම්කරු Woodend කෙටසේ ක්ෂේත්‍රනිලධාරි බැවින් ඔහු යටතේ සිටින අනිකුත් ක්ෂේත්‍රනිලධාරීන්ගේ අකටයුතුකම් පිලිබඳ සොයා බැලීමේ වගකීමක් ඉල්ලුම්කරුට ඇති බව වගඋත්තරකරු පෙන්වා දී ඇත."`

As further observed by me, the President of the Labour Tribunal was mindful of the domestic inquiry held against the Applicant-Respondent and had referred to the Domestic Inquiry proceedings produced before him marked R-11 in his order. However, when concluding that the Applicant-Respondent was guilty of the charges level against him except for charge 2 in R41A and charge 3 in R-9A he had analyzed the evidence placed before him by the Respondents-Appellants at the Trial. He has not considered evidence given by the witnesses with regard to two charges where the Applicant-Respondent was discharged at the Domestic Inquiry. Therefore, it is clear that the President of the Labour Tribunal was mindful that the Applicant-Respondent was found not guilty of two charges at the Domestic Inquiry.

When the matter was appealed to the High Court by the Applicant, the learned High Court Judge had analyzed the evidence placed before the Labour Tribunal and observed the following; (page11)

..... “ඒ අනුව ඉල්ලුම්කාර අභියාචක විසින් මෙම ලේඛනය සකස් කොට නොමැති බවක් ද, එම සාක්ෂිය අනුව තහවුරු වන අතර කමල්රාජ් වැනි සෙසු සහකාර ක්ෂේත්‍ර නිලධාරීන් විසින් සකස් කරන ලේඛන බවට එකී ලිඛිත දේශනය මෙම අධිකරණයට තහවුරු වේ. නමුත් උගත් කම්කරු විනිශ්චය සභාවේ සභාපති වරයා එකී තත්වය සැලකිල්ලට නොගෙන ස්වකීය තීන්දුව දී ඇත. එය නීතිමය වශයෙන් වරදකි.”

The learned High Court Judge had observed a failure by the Labour Tribunal President to consider the conduct of the Respondents-Appellants when the Respondent decided not to charge sheet the Field assistants as follows; (page13)

“ඉල්ලුම්කාර අභියාචක කරන ලද එකී ක්‍රියාව කළමණාකාරීත්වය විෂමාචාර ක්‍රියාවක් ලෙස සලකන්නේ නම් ඉල්ලුම්කාර සේවකයාට අමතරව එම ක්‍රියාව සිදු කර ඇති අනෙක් සේවකයන් සම්බන්ධයෙන් ද වගඋත්තරකාර පාර්ශවය, ඉල්ලුම්කාර සේවකයා සම්බන්ධයෙන් ගෙන ඇති විනය ක්‍රියාමාර්ගය අනුගමනය නොකිරීම ඔවුන් සම්බන්ධයෙන් ලිහිල් ප්‍රතිපත්තියකිනුත් ඉල්ලුම්කාර සේවකයා වෙනුවෙන් දැඩි ප්‍රතිපත්තියකිනුත් කටයුතු කිරීම ඉල්ලුම්කාර අභියාචක සම්බන්ධයෙන් වගඋත්තරකරු වෙනස් ලෙස ක්‍රියාකර ඇති බවත්, එය අසාධාරණ, අයුක්ති සහගත ක්‍රියාවක් බවත්, අභියාචක විසින් ඔහුගේ ලිඛිත දේශන වලදී ප්‍රකාශ කොට ඇති අතර, මෙම සාක්ෂිය පිළිබඳව විශ්ලේෂණය කරන විටද එම තත්වය මෙම අධිකරණයට ද තහවුරු වේ. නමුත් එකී තත්වය කිසිසේත්ම නොසලකා කම්කරු විනිශ්චය සභාවේ සභාපතිවරයා ස්වකීය තීන්දුව වැරදි සහගත ලෙස නිකුත් කොට තිබේ.”

The learned High Court Judge had once again considered the same issue in his order as follows; (pages 14-15)

“එසේ ආර් 29 ඒ ලේඛනයේ සඳහන් තොරතුරු සුරේඛා නැමති සහකාර ක්ෂේත්‍ර නිලධාරීවරිය විසින් සටහන් කර තිබෙන බවද, අභියාචකගේ අත්සන එහි නොමැති බවද, වගඋත්තරකරුවන් වෙනුවෙන්ම සාක්ෂි දුන් සමානාධිකාරීවරයාගේ සාක්ෂියේ දී ම පිළිගෙන තිබේ. ඒ අනුව එකී ලේඛණය සම්බන්ධයෙන් ද, ඉල්ලුම්කාර අභියාචක විසින් වංචනික ලෙස සකස් කරන ලද ලේඛණ යනුවෙන් තහවුරු වී ඇති අතර, එම ලේඛණ සුරේඛා නැමති සහකාර ක්ෂේත්‍ර නිලධාරීවරිය අත්සන් කොට ඇති බවත්, කමල්රාජ් නැමැති සහකාර ක්ෂේත්‍ර නිලධාරී විසින් ආර් 29 බී ලේඛණය සටහන් කොට අත්සන් කොට ඇති බවත්, මෙම සමානාධිකාරීවරයා පිළිගෙන ඇත. ඒ පිළිබඳව ආර් 29 පී. ආර් 29 ඒ, ආර් 29 බී, ආර් 29 ඩී, ආර් 29 එෆ් ලේඛණවල වුඩ්එන්ඩ් කොටසේ සහකාර ක්ෂේත්‍ර නිලධාරී වශයෙන් සුරේඛා නැමැත්තිය සහ කමල්රාජ් නැමැත්තා සටහන් ලියා තිබෙන හෙයින් ඔවුන්ට වගකීම පැවරෙන කටයුත්තක් බව ද, ඉල්ලුම්කාර අභියාචක වෙනුවෙන් කම්කරු විනිශ්චය සභාවේ දී සහකාර සමානාධිකාරීවරයාගෙන් ප්‍රශ්නකොට ඇති අතර, එම සමානාධිකාරීවරයා එම තත්වය පිළිගෙන ඇත. ඔහු ප්‍රකාශ කොට ඇත්තේ, ඔවුන් පුද්ගලිකවම වගකිවයුතු බවත්, සියලුම නිලධාරීන් තමන් අතින් ලියන ලද ලේඛණ සම්බන්ධයෙන් වගකිව යුතු බවය. එසේ වුවද, එම නිලධාරීන්

In a plain reading of the Judgment of the learned High Court Judge, it appears that he had restricted his judgment to a few issues. As observed by me the main issue he considered was the different treatment given to the Applicant as against two of his subordinates Kamalraj and Sureka. As already referred to by me, the President of the Labour Tribunal had analyzed the evidence given by the witnesses for the Respondents-Appellants in cross-examination, the documents produced in this regard, and the evidence given by the Applicant on this issue and given his reasons for his conclusion.

In his judgment, the High Court Judge has further gone into the answers given by the key witnesses with regard to the domestic inquiry. In this regard the High Court had further observed;

“කෙසේ වෙතත් ගෘහස්ථ විනය පරීක්ෂක නිලධාරීන්ගේ වාර්තාව වගඋත්තරකරුවන් විසින් තමන් වෙත ඉදිරිපත් කර නොමැති බවය. ඒ අනුව වගඋත්තරකරුවන් විසින් විනය පරීක්ෂණයේ පරීක්ෂණ වාර්තාව උගත් කම්කරු විනිශ්චය සභාවේ සභාපති වරයා වෙත ඉදිරිපත් නොකර එකී වාර්තාවේ කරුණු වසන් කිරීමක් සිදුකොට ඇති ආකාරයක්ද මෙම අධිකරණයට නිරීක්ෂණය වේ.”

As already referred to by me, Labour Tribunal was mindful of the proceedings of the Domestic Inquiry but, mainly relied on the evidence placed before the Labour Tribunal during the trial by both parties with regard to the charges on which the Applicant was found guilty at the Domestic Inquiry.

The President of the Labour Tribunal when deciding the above issues, was guided by the evidence and the documents placed before him. He had the advantage of observing the demeanor and the deportment of the witnesses who testified before him. Therefore, he is the best judge who can decide on the evidence placed before him Kotagala Plantations Ltd and another Vs. Ceylon Plantations Society 2010 (2) Sri LR 299.

In appeal, our Courts are reluctant to interfere with the finding of the Trial Judge (including the findings before the Labour Tribunal) unless the order is not supported by the evidence. The learned High Court Judge is free to hold his view but, he needs to justify his findings. Jayasuriya Vs. Sri Lanka State Plantation Corporation 1995 (2) Sri LR 379

As observed by this Court, High Court had overlooked the evidence led against the Applicant-Respondent which was analyzed in detail by the Labour Tribunal but come to a different conclusion based on matters that had been correctly analyzed by the Labour Tribunal as already referred to in this Judgment.

For the reasons I have already referred to in this Judgment, I answer the first three questions of law in the affirmative and it is sufficient to allow the appeal before this Court.

The appeal is allowed. I make no order with regard to costs.

Judgement

Aluwihare PC. J

(1) The Plaintiff-Appellant-Petitioner-Appellant sought leave to appeal against the judgement of the Court of Appeal dated 17.06.2010 and this court on 08.09.2010, granted leave on the questions of law referred to in subparagraphs (a) and (b) of paragraph 18 of the Petition of the Plaintiff-Appellant-Petitioner-Appellant [hereinafter referred to as the 'Plaintiff']. The said questions are reproduced below;

(a) Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the contesting Defendants have acquired a prescriptive title by possession from the date of the final decree in 1965, because in terms of the last will of Andoris Gunasekera and also in terms of the final decree, from the date of the final decree in 1965 the undivided 471/480 share of Andoris Gunasekera was subject to the life interest of Metaramba Liyanage Rosa who conveyed same by deed 2D1 in 1975 to the 2nd Defendant and she (Rosa) thereafter died only in October 1979:; This action was instituted in 1984, so that, ten years had not lapsed since even the execution of Rosa (and two others) of Deed 2D1 in 1975 and this action was instituted in 1984;

(b) Did the Court of Appeal err in law in failing to apply the proviso to Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance(as interpreted in Lesin V. Karunarathne 61 NLR 138) to the facts of this case, in that, as a matter of law, during the lifetime of the life interest holder it is not possible for anyone to acquire a prescriptive title to the land as against its owner; as a matter of law, no one could have begun to acquire a prescriptive title as against the Plaintiff until the death of Rosa in 1979;

The Factual background

(2) The Plaintiff instituted a partition action before the District Court seeking to partition a land called 'Haputantrigewatte' consisting of three contiguous allotments. The said lands are depicted in the preliminary plan bearing No. 1206 as lots 'A', 'B' and 'C'. The aggregate extent of these three lots is, 2 acres 2 roods and 17 perches. The Plaintiff cited two defendants, namely David Silva [1st Defendant- Respondent-Respondent] and Baby Nona Gunasekera [2nd Defendant]. Subsequently, however, on an application for intervention, 4 other defendants [3rd to 6th] were added on 08th June 1990. On 15th October 1991, the 7th Defendant was also permitted to intervene. The 3rd to the 6th Defendants happened to be the children of the 2nd Defendant whereas the 7th Defendant happened to be the husband of the 2nd Defendant. Finally, the 5th child of the 2nd Defendant was added as the 8th Defendant. The case proceeded to trial on that basis.

(3) The learned District Judge by her judgement dated 26.01.1995, dismissed the Plaint subject to costs. Aggrieved by the said judgement the plaintiff moved the Court of Appeal by way of appeal and the Court of Appeal too dismissed the appeal.

(4) There is no dispute as to the identity of the corpus. To put it in a nutshell, the Plaintiff claimed the corpus on the strength of the Last Will of his father Adonis Gunasekera (also called 'Andoris'), whereas the 2nd to the 7th Defendants moved for dismissal of action based on the ouster by virtue of undisturbed and uninterrupted possession for over ten years.

(5) The learned District Judge held with the Defendants and had come to a finding that the said Defendants have proved ouster and had gained prescriptive title to the corpus and the Court of Appeal upon analysing the evidence held that the learned District Judge had arrived at the correct finding and accordingly dismissed the appeal.

(6) The thrust of the learned President's Counsel's argument on behalf of the Plaintiff was that this is a case where the proviso to Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance [hereinafter the 'Ordinance'] ought to have been applied by both the District Court as well as the Court of Appeal. It was argued, however, that both the learned District judge as well as the Court of Appeal erred in not doing so. It was contended by the learned President's Counsel that if the proviso was applied, the Defendants would not have been able to satisfy the court that there was an ouster and that they were in possession of the impugned property for a period of over 10 years, two of the requisites that need to be established to succeed in a claim for prescription.

(7) According to the Plaintiff, his father Adonis Gunasekera [hereinafter referred to as Adonis] was allotted 471/480th share of the corpus under the final decree entered in a partition action bearing No. P/2261 of the District Court of Galle. There was no dispute among the parties of this fact. Adonis died in 1962 and his executor Metaramba Liyanage Elgin was substituted in the room and place of Adonis in the said partition case. The final decree of the District Court was delivered in 1965.

(8) Adonis had executed a Last Will in 1948 [No 1722; marked and produced as 'P2' at the trial] which had been admitted to probate in case No. 8851 of the District Court of Galle. In terms of the said Last Will, the rights of Adonis accrued to his three children namely; (i) Therabhaya Gunasekera [Plaintiff in the instant case] (ii) Harishchandra Gunasekera and (iii) Asoka Gunasekera. The three children of Adonis referred to above, however, got their rights subject to the life interest of their mother Metaramba Liyanage Rosa [herein after referred to as Rosa].

(9) It is also in evidence that one of Adonis' children, Asoka Gunasekera passed away unmarried and issueless and Asoka's interest devolved on their mother Rosa and the two remaining children Therabhaya [Plaintiff] and Harishchandra.

(10) The final decree of the partition action in P/2261 had been marked and produced as 'P1'. It appears that the 2nd to the 7th Defendants were not parties to the said partition action. What is more significant is that no steps had been taken to execute the decree of the said partition action.

(11) In 1975, Rosa along with Elgin and Gnanathilaka Gunasekera executed a deed of transfer No. 31409 which was marked and produced as '2V1', by which the said three persons had transferred whatever rights they had over the corpus, to the 2nd Defendant, Baby Nona Gunasekera. Thus, it appears whatever rights Rosa had over the corpus; she had given them up in 1975. Rosa passed away four years later in 1979.

Evidence of Prescription

(12) For the ease of following the devolution of title, it would be pertinent to place the relationships between the parties in a perspective. It appears that prior to his involvement with Rosa, Adonis was married to one Cecilia De Silva, and sired three children by that marriage. The 7th Defendant, Gnanathilaka Gunasekera happened to be one of those three children. Subsequently Adonis had lived with Rosa, who was his mistress. He states in his Last Will; "I do hereby direct that my Mistress Metaramba Liyanage Rosa of …shall be entitled to life interest over all my property…". Baby Nona Gunasekera [the 2nd Defendant] is the wife of Gnanathilaka Gunasekara, the 7th Defendant. It was to Baby Nona whom Rosa and two others conveyed their rights in 1975 by Deed No. 31409 as referred to earlier.

(13) According to the Plaintiff himself, his stepbrother Gnanathilaka the 7th Defendant and his wife Baby Nona, 2nd Defendant were living in Haputantrigewatte [the corpus] since about 1954. At that time the Plaintiff had been living with his mother Rosa, at No. 80, Halls Road, Galle. In the year 1962, his father Adonis had died. He has said that after the father's death he was not permitted to go to the corpus and that he was abused and chased away by the 7th Defendant. He had also admitted that, after 1954, the Defendants improved the buildings that were standing on the corpus and engaged in cultivation. Subsequently, the children of the 2nd and the 7th defendants had put up houses on the corpus.

(14) The 7th Defendant in his evidence had said that the land in question was given to him by his father [Adonis] even before the decision of the partition action in P/2261 was delivered, and he continued to possess it even after the judgement. According to him, he had requested his father for a block of land, and he was asked to take over the land [corpus] and had been promised a deed in respect of the same. He had been in possession ever since. The 7th Defendant also had said that they mortgaged the property and obtained a loan from the Co-operative Society ['2V3']. He had further said that they had possessed the land for more than 40 years at the point he gave evidence in 1992.

(15) The learned District Judge had acted on the evidence given by the 7th Defendant plus the evidence of the Plaintiff who admitted in the course of his evidence that the 7th Defendant and Baby Nona have been in possession of the land in question since about 1954. Based on this evidence the learned District Judge held that the Defendants had acquired title by prescription.

The application of the proviso to Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance;

(16) The learned President's Counsel contended that, during the lifetime of the life interest holder it is not possible for anyone to acquire prescriptive title to land, as against the owner. As far as the corpus is concerned, by virtue of the testamentary decree, the Plaintiff and his siblings became the owners of the corpus, however, subject to the life interest of their mother Rosa. The position taken up on behalf of the Plaintiff was, that for the purpose of prescription, the relevant date is either 1975 [the year in which Rosa gave up her rights over the corpus by the execution of the Deed no. 3361] or 1979, the year she died.

It was pointed out that the children of Rosa acquired the right of possession to the property in dispute only after Rosa executed the deed 3361 in 1975 or in the alternative after the death of Rosa [in 1979] who was the life interest holder. The partition action was filed by the Plaintiff in 1984 and therefore the Defendants were short of the required ten-year period of possession to prescribe to the corpus.

(17) In this regard the Plaintiff relied on the decision of Lesin v. Karunaratne 61 NLR 138, where Sansoni J. held that under the proviso to Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, "prescription begins to run against parties claiming estates in remainder or reversion only from the time when such parties acquire a right of possession to the property in dispute." (Emphasis added). Lesin (supra), a case with facts similar to that in the instant case was relied upon to explain the above mentioned position; the operation of life interest against the running of prescription. It was observed in Lesin [supra] that, "The proviso was to be found even in the earlier Prescription Ordinance No. 8 of 1834 and it has been applied in numerous cases. In one of the earliest reported cases (1842 Morg. Diy. 323) the plaintiff and the defendant were children of a deceased proprietor who also left his widow surviving him. The widow had a life interest which only ceased on her death within 10 years of the filing of the action. As the plaintiff acquired the right of possession only on her death, it was held that the defendant could not acquire a prescriptive title against the plaintiff." [Emphasis added]

(18) The proviso to Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance reads thus;
"Provided that the said period of ten years shall only begin to run against parties claiming estates in remainder or reversion from the time when the parties so claiming acquired a right of possession to the property in dispute."
[Emphasis is mine]

(19) As will be made evident in a latter portion of this judgement, the consequence of conveying a property subject to life interest is most peculiar in effect for the purposes of prescription. 'Life Interest' is a unique in that it creates a legal endowment whereby a person who is bestowed such interest is legally entitled to enjoy the property. Therefore, the application of the proviso to Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance also takes a unique form.

(20) This court is inclined to agree with the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff that the proviso to the Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, as propounded in Lesin v. Karaunaratne (supra) should apply to the present case. By the application of the ratio in Lesin v. Karaunaratne (supra), prescription cannot run during the period in which Rosa enjoyed life interest over the property as against her children. The life interest would have come to a termination upon the death of the life interest holder Rosa in 1979 or in the alternative on the transfer of her rights to the 1st Defendant in 1975 by deed 3361. For the purpose of resolving the question of law, it is immaterial whether we take into account the year 1975 or 1979 as the terminal point of Rosa's life interest. However, as it would be more beneficial from the stand point of the Plaintiff to take the date as 1979, [in which case the proviso to Section 3 of the Ordinance would be applicable for a greater period] and for the ease of explaining the rationale for the conclusions reached in this judgement, the terminal point of Rosa's life interest would be considered as the year 1979, the year in which she died.

(21) In view of the proviso to Section 3 of the Ordinance, by operation of law, the period Rosa enjoyed life interest over the corpus has to be discounted from the period of possession as far as the claim for prescription is concerned. However, there are a number of factors that this court needs to consider in deciding whether the learned District Judge was correct in coming to the finding that the Defendants have established all requisites in Section 3 of the Ordinance to satisfy that they [in particular the 7th Defendant] had acquired prescriptive rights to the impugned property. In the circumstances it would be relevant to iterate them here;

(a) There is no dispute that the 7th Defendant had come into possession of the property in 1954.

(b) It is also common ground that the 7th Defendant and his family continued to possess the property since then without an interruption, a period of 30 years up to the date of action in the District Court.

(c) It is the position of the 7th Defendant that the land was 'given' to him by his father with the promise of executing a deed which never materialised up to his father's death in 1962.

(d) It is clear from the evidence that the possession that was given to the 7th Defendant was not mere 'permission' to possess but with a declared intention of conveying its ownership to him by Adonis.

(e) It is in evidence that the 7th Defendant possessed the land, developed it, constructed buildings and there was corporeal occupation of the land attendant with manifest to hold and continue it. The fact that the plaintiff was chased away when he attempted to disturb the 7th Defendant's possession after the death of the father, only makes it more certain that he held the corpus adversely to those who disputed his rights.

(22) I am also mindful of the fact that the issues involved in the proof of prescriptive title are mainly questions of fact and in the absence of compelling considerations, sitting in appeal this court should not disturb the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge. Based on the facts referred to in the previous paragraph, we cannot see any flaw in the findings of the learned District judge, save for the application of the proviso to Section 3 of the Ordinance.

(23) This brings us to the question as to whether the non-application of the proviso to Section 3 of the Ordinance to the facts of the instant case has caused prejudice to the Plaintiff and if so whether it is sufficiently grave to grant relief as prayed for by the Plaintiff. In this regard the only issue that this court is called upon to consider is whether the Defendants have satisfied the requirement of the 'uninterrupted possession' of the corpus for ten years.

(24) It was argued that Rosa died in the year 1979, the point at which the Plaintiff acquired the right to possess the land and the action before the District Court was filed in 1984 and as such the Defendants did not have a ten-year period of possession, thus, their claim for prescription is bound to fail.

(25) To my mind the issue does not appear to be that straightforward. As referred to earlier the Defendants were in possession since 1954. The period that must be discounted by virtue of the proviso to Section 3 of the Ordinance is the period from 1962 [The year in which Adonis died] to 1979 [The year in which Rosa died] for the purpose of considering the period that the Defendants were in possession, in determining whether the Defendants have acquired prescriptive rights.

(26) The main issues that would be required to address by this court is whether;

(a) The period from 1954 to 1962 [7 years] can be 'tacked' onto the period from 1979 to 1984 [6 years] in computing the period the Defendants were in possession for the purpose of prescription.

(b) Whether the application of the proviso to Section 3 of the Ordinance arrests the progress of prescription.

(27) In the case of Carolis Appu v. Anagihamy 51 NLR 355, the court held that the period of possession of an intestate person can be "tacked on" to the possession of his heirs for the purpose of computing the period of ten years. Although the ratio in the decision in Carolis (supra) is not directly applicable to the case before us, the fact remains our courts have recognised in principle the 'tacking on' of time periods. Balasingham [Laws of Ceylon Volume 3, Part 2] has expressed the view that, "for the purpose of computing this period of prescription the possession of the deceased person and his executor or heir and of a person and his particular successor whether legatee or purchaser, will be reckoned together".

(28) If not for the supervening factor of Rosa having life interest, prescriptive rights of the Defendants would have extended as against the Plaintiff without an interruption. Assuming that Adonis had died 9 years and 11 months after the 7th Defendant had enjoyed uninterrupted and undisturbed possession of the property, to argue that the 7th Defendant has to prove that he had the requisite possession for ten years, commencing from the death of Rosa would seem unreasonable.

(29) In the case of Casie Chetty v. Perera (1886) 8 S.S.C 31, dealing with the construction of the Ordinance relating to the phrase "... ten years previous to the bringing of such action", Berwick D. J. expressed the view; "The law is always reasonable, or at least must be worked into reason when possible."

(30) The fact remains that the 7th Defendant had exercised uninterrupted possession of the corpus until the date of institution of the action. The life interest vested in Rosa impeded his adverse possession only from the date of such conveyance till Rosa's demise. Therefore, in my view, it would be more appropriate to state that his possession was suspended by operation of law, and not 'interrupted'.

(31) I take this view in consideration of the overall scheme of the Prescription Ordinance and what it appears to have contemplated, as evident in the words of the Ordinance.

(32) Although it may not be directly relevant, a parallel can be drawn to the application of Section 13 of the Ordinance which operates as an exception to Section 3 of the Ordinance. Section 13 operates as a proviso in the case of disabilities such as infancy, idiocy, unsoundness of mind, lunacy and absence beyond seas. The crux of the principle is that as long as such disability continues, possession of such immovable property by any other person shall not be taken as giving that person the rights under the Ordinance.

(33) One important aspect that needs consideration is, what would be the effect of prescription already commenced before the disability arose [as akin to the situation in the present case]. The case referred to in Sinnatamby v. Meera Levvai 6 NLR 50, was an action for vindication of various parcels of land by the children of one Naina Mohamadu. Naina Mohamadu was the owner of the property in question under a Fiscal's sale which took place in 1879. The conveyance was obtained in 1882. In 1892 Naina Mohamadu went to India, and apparently never returned. He died there six or seven years before the action was filed, which was in1901. Sometime after his death his children returned to Ceylon in 1902 and proceeded to claim this land. They were met by the defendants, who have apparently been in possession of the land for a long time. The Commissioner has found that the plaintiffs had admitted that the land was in fact in the possession of the defendants independently of, and adversely to, the rights of Naina Mohamadu. The Commissioner, however, had said that, although the title was in the plaintiffs, and although the defendants have had what may be called adverse possession for more than ten years, the period of prescription has been interrupted by the fact that during the earlier part of the defendants' occupation Naina Mohamadu was beyond seas, and that until recently the plaintiffs have been minors, and therefore were protected by the provisions of the Prescription Ordinance (Section 14 of Ordinance No. 22 of 1871 and Section 13 of the Ordinance No. 2 of 1889). The Commissioner thereupon gave judgment for the plaintiffs. Moncrieff A.C.J., observed that the Commissioner had overlooked the principle which was laid down in the case of Sinnatamby v. Vairavy (1 S. C. C. 14) in which it was held by a Court of three Judges that, where prescription had run and the matter had not been, taken out of the Ordinance by any act or other incident, the objection was not sound that the minority of the heir had defeated the Ordinance. Once the Ordinance had begun to run against a party and that its progress was not arrested by the fact that the child of the party (the plaintiff) was at the time of the death of that party a minor. The decision was given under the Prescription Ordinance No. 8 of 1834, section 10, the terms of which are very much the same as those of section 13 of Ordinance No. 2 of 1889. The Court held in Sinnatamby v. Vairavy (supra), that they could not read the clause so as to stop the running of prescription already commenced by reason of the disability of a person succeeding to the right of the obligor.

(34) In the case of Meera Levavi (supra) Naina Mohamadu did not leave the country until 1892, and the Ordinance had begun to run against him for some time at all events; and, relying on the principle enunciated in Sinnatamby, Moncreiff A.C.J. held that; "the mere fact that his succession passed to the plaintiffs on his death, and that they were minors at the time, cannot arrest the progress of prescription." He went on to observe that "It being admitted, therefore, that the defendants have been in adverse possession for more than ten years, the progress of the Prescription Ordinance has not been arrested by the minority of the plaintiffs, or the absence of their father [Naina Mohamadu] beyond the seas. On the reasoning referred to above Moncreiff A.C.J. held that the Commissioner's decision was wrong and reversed it.

(35) Moreover, in our kindred jurisdiction of South Africa, it is now settled that prescriptive possession previously halted may be 'tagged on' to, and resume when a natural or civil disability disappears or expires, and that absolute continuity is not required to establish uninterrupted possession. Wille's Principles of South African Law, citing Voet 41.3.17, states that:

"Traditionally, the course of prescription could be interrupted or suspended. If interrupted, the running of prescription was, subject to certain qualifications, completely halted and had to start de novo. Suspension of prescription, on the other hand, suspended prescription only temporarily and once the suspending circumstance disappeared, the running of prescription was resumed." [page 514]

(36) Considering the statutory provisions and the weight of the judicial authority referred to above, I am of the view that; As far as this case is concerned, the period from 1954 to 1962 [7 years] can be 'tacked' onto the period from 1979 to 1984 [6 years] in computing the period the Defendants were in possession for the purpose of term of prescription and regarding the application of the proviso to Section 3 of the Ordinance the progress of prescription is not arrested subject, however, to discounting the period Rosa enjoyed life interest to the corpus.

(37) As far as the instant case is concerned, I do not think that this court needs to go to the extent of the decisions in either Meera Levavi (supra) or Sinnatamby (supra). The commencement date of the period of prescription was 1954 when Adonis gave the land to the 7th Defendant. By operation of law, the clock stopped ticking as against the Plaintiff in 1962 when Adonis died and Rosa accrued life interest and again time started running from 1979 upon the death of Rosa. The Plaintiff knew very well that the 7th Defendant had resisted when the Plaintiff approached him regarding the land in 1962, hence he had every opportunity to challenge the Defendants' claim soon after the death of Rosa which the Plaintiff failed and when action was eventually filed, even after discounting the period Rosa enjoyed life interest, still the Defendants had enjoyed adverse possession for more than 10 years when the two periods; Prior to Adonis's death and subsequent to Rosa's death are tacked on.

On the reasoning referred to above, both questions of law on which leave was granted are answered in the negative.

Accordingly, the judgements, both of the District Court and the Court of Appeal are affirmed and the appeal is dismissed.

The Defendants would be entitled to costs of this court as well as the courts below.

E. A. G. R. Amarasekara, J.

The leave to appeal application relevant to this appeal was filed by the Plaintiff Appellant Petitioner (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Plaintiff) against the order dated 01.03.2011 made by the learned High Court Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court of the Western Province after the hearing of a revision application made to that Court. Being aggrieved by the order dated 11.12.2009 made by the learned Additional District Judge of Kalutara in case no. 5350/L, the Plaintiff made the aforesaid revision application to the said High Court. The learned District Judge made the said order refusing to accept a land registry folio G /63/221 which had also not been listed in terms of the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, when the Plaintiff attempted to mark the said folio in evidence as P7 (marked as P10 with the Petition) during re-examination of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff had argued before the learned Additional District Judge that, since there is a reference to this G/63/221 in the folio marked as V2, no harm would be caused to the Defendant Respondent Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Defendant) by allowing to produce this document in evidence during re-examination and producing it in evidence would help to answer the matters in issue. The Defendant objected to the document as neither was it listed in terms of the law nor was shown during cross- examination. It was further stated on behalf of the Defendant before the District Court that documents cannot be marked during the re-examination; perhaps counsel for the Defendant would have meant that new evidence contained in documents cannot be allowed through re-examination- vide proceedings dated 11.12.2009 before the District Court).

As per the order made, the learned Additional District Judge has refused to allow the Plaintiff to mark the document stating that as per the provisions of Section 138(3) of the Evidence Ordinance, a document cannot be marked without permission, therefore, P7 (P10 with the Petition) was not allowed to be marked as evidence. I must state that what the learned Additional District Judge meant by "without permission' is not clear as the objection was raised when the permission was asked by the lawyer for the Plaintiff. Perhaps, what he meant would have been that there was no proper application due to the fact that when permission was sought it was not revealed that it was not listed in terms of section 175(2) of the Civil Procedure Code or it contains new evidence as contemplated in section 138(3) of the Evidence Ordinance. It must be noted here that a document cannot be produced in evidence without leave in terms of section 175(2) of the Civil Procedure Code if it was not included in a list filed in terms of section 121(2) of the Civil Procedure Code and that new matters cannot be introduced during re-examination without permission in terms of section 138(3) of the Evidence Ordinance.

As per the section 138(3) of the Evidence Ordinance, re-examination shall be directed to the explanation of matters referred to in the cross-examination and if new matters are introduced with the permission of court, the adverse party may further cross-examine. Thus, before obtaining permission, it may be necessary to enlighten the Court regarding the nature of the evidence and any lapse by the party requesting permission in order to evaluate whether introducing new evidence at that stage can be countered without harm only by further cross examination. When such permission is sought the Court shall see whether allowing it would prejudice the rights of the adverse party.

However, if dissatisfied by the order made by the learned Additional District Judge in the matter at hand, the Plaintiff could have taken steps to file a leave to appeal application, but without taking such a step, the Plaintiff, on the same day, had closed his case. Thereafter, the Defendant also had closed his case without calling any evidence. The learned Additional District Judge has given time till 20.01.2010 to file written submissions. It appears that when the District Court case was pending for filing of the written submissions before judgment, on 18.01.2010, the Plaintiff has filed the aforesaid revision application before the Civil Appellate High Court praying to set aside the said order dated 11.12.2009 and for an order directing the District Court to accept the said folio G/63/221 and a deed bearing number 3060 attested by Kuintos Cory [Sic] Notary Public- vide X1. It must be noted that no permission was asked from the District Court to tender deed no. 3060 attested by Quintus Cooray, Notary Public in evidence. Thus, the revision application before the High Court focused not only in correcting the order made by the learned District Judge if there was any miscarriage of justice, but it also contained a prayer to allow a deed to be produced in evidence which application was never made before the District Court. In my view, the Plaintiff should not have asked any relief from the High Court in relation to the tendering of deed no.3060 as there was no application made in that regard to the original court nor a decision made on that aspect. However, there was no relief contained in the petition to the High Court praying to set aside all proceedings held after the said order was made by the District Court on 11.12.2009. Anyhow, in the leave to appeal application made to this court over the dismissal of the said revision application, other than for a direction on the District Court to accept the said folio G/63/221, there is no relief prayed in relation to the said deed no.3060, but it contains a new relief praying to set aside the proceedings that was held after the making of the said order dated 11.12.2009 by the District Court; a new relief that was not there before the High Court. Thus, other than correcting any errors in the order made by the learned High Court Judges, this application made to this Court is intended to get more relief which was not within the scope of the prayer made to the High Court. I do not think that it is proper for this Court to consider a relief which was not canvassed before the High Court in an appeal made against the order of the High Court.

Even the Plaintiff admits that the said Folio G/63/221 was not included in a list tendered in accordance with section 121(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 138 of the Evidence Ordinance provides for clarifications which may be needed after cross-examination. If new evidence is led during such clarification with the permission of Court, the adverse party is entitled to cross examine again. Thus, it is necessary to see whether marking of the Folio G63/221 was necessary to clarify matters revealed through cross-examination or rather the application to produce the said folio was to cure the lapses made by the Plaintiff in preparing for the Trial and leading evidence. In this regard, it is pertinent to refer to the facts relevant to the case at hand.

The Plaintiff instituted the action by the plaint dated 31.01.2005 in the District Court of Kalutara against the Defendant for a declaration of title to a divided and defined allotment of land called Lot 3E of Lot 3 of Horagasmulla more fully described in the 2nd schedule to the plaint which was 2.73 perches in extent as per the plan no.4972A made by W. Seneviratne L.S., and sought a decree be entered in her favour, if necessary to evict the Defendant and place her in possession. She further prayed for recovery of damages from the Defendant for wrongfully removing the gate fixed by the Plaintiff.

The Plaintiff in her plaint averred;

- That she purchased Lots 3C and 3D of plan no 4972A of the same land upon deed No.1667 (marked P2 with the Petition) dated 06/05/1991 and used it as her place of residence along with her family.
- That she possessed the aforesaid Lot 3E of plan no.4972A along with aforesaid Lots 3C & 3D and later acquired title to the aforesaid Lot 3E by right of purchase of the same on deed of transfer No. 6794 dated 30/01/2003. (As per the said deed marked as P6 with the petition, the vendor is Alliance Finance Company Limited.)
- That she had acquired prescriptive title to the aforesaid lots 3E,3C and 3D.
- That the dispute arose when the Defendant who was residing in Lot 3B, on 15/11/2005, removed the wooden gate fixed up at the western boundary of the subject matter, Lot 3E.

The Defendant filed answer dated 25.04.2007 while denying the claims of the Plaintiff and stated that he bought his land Lot 3B by virtue of Deed No.33 dated 02/11/1992 attested by S. Abeyweera, Notary Public and used the aforesaid Lot 3E as part of vehicular access to his land and later bought the right of way over Lot 3E on 26.02.2002 by deed no.283 attested by said S. Abeyweera, Notary Public. As per the land registry folio marked P8 with the petition, which was marked at the trial as V2 before the learned Additional District Judge, the deed of the Defendant bears a prior date but the Vendor is one L.D. Henry Jayawardane. The Defendant, in his answer, denied any cause of action accrued to the Plaintiff against him and admits that he objected to a gate being fixed in November 2004 and states that on one occasion the Pradeshiya Sabha got the gate removed in January 2004. The Defendant claimed damages for malicious prosecution by the Plaintiff.

The Plaintiff filed a replication denying the claims of the Defendant and his counter claim. Even though the Defendant pleaded deed no.283 in his answer which was executed prior to the Plaintiff's deed no. 6794, other than refuting Defendant's cross claim, the Plaintiff had not taken any interest to state in the replication that the vendor in Defendant's deed had executed a deed conveying his rights to the vendor of his deed no.6794 prior to the execution of deed no.283 by deed no.3060 for which he tried to get permission from the High Court through revision application without making any application in that regard before the District Judge to produce the same. The Plaintiff's move to produce the folio marked P10, Folio G/63/221 (P7 at the trial) appears to be in support with this contention to indicate that the vendor in the Defendant's deed had transferred his rights to the vendor in Plaintiff's deed. Even if the Plaintiff did not aver those facts in the replication for some reason, the Plaintiff and his lawyers should have been vigilant to list those documents in the list that was to be tendered in accordance with section 121(2) of the Civil Procedure Code as those were vital to meet the case presented through the answer. It appears that they neglected to list them. Further, they have not asked permission to submit those documents as unlisted documents during the evidence-in-chief of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff moved to tender folio marked P10, Folio G/63/221 (P7 at the trial) which was refused by the District Court only after the Defendant tendered folio marked V2 in cross-examination which has a cross reference to Folio marked P10 with the petition. V2 has been marked to show that the Defendant has an older deed when compared to the Plaintiff's deed. In my view, there is nothing to clarify in that evidence. The attempt to mark P10, Folio G/63/221 (P7 at the trial) by the Plaintiff was to cover her lapses and bring new evidence to indicate that the vendor of the Defendant's deed had no title at the time he executed deed no. 283 which issue was there from the time the answer was filed. As mentioned above, the Plaintiff could have taken steps to present such a position from her replication, or take steps to give notice of her intention to produce such evidence at the trial by filing list of documents as contemplated by the Civil Procedure Code etc., which was neglected. If the plaintiff was vigilant enough to reveal her position while filing replication or to list the necessary documents in her list of documents, the Defendant could have listed what would have been necessary for him to meet the stance to be taken up by the Plaintiff in reply to his answer or he could have used the provisions in the Civil Procedure Code under chapter XVI including interrogatories and inspection and production of documents for the benefit of his case. This court also observes that P10, Folio G/63/221, the folio which is expected to be tendered in evidence, describes the Lot 3 with reference to a plan no.375 made by a surveyor named E.P. Gunawardane, and that plan has not been used in this case in evidence or to superimpose the plan used for this case. Since the prayer in the revision application to the High Court includes a prayer to accept deed no.3060 which was not moved in the original court, it is clear that the intention of the Plaintiff is to submit more documents other than the folio G/63/221(P10) which were not listed as per the provisions of the Civil procedure Code. This approach of the Plaintiff is further fortified, since the Plaintiff has prayed to set aside all the proceedings after the impugned order of the learned District judge which proceedings is resulted in consequence of closing of her case by the Plaintiff herself without resorting to the legal remedy available by filing leave to appeal application. It appears that the Plaintiff has not tendered a copy of the said deed no. 3060 along with the petition to the High Court, for the High Court, or now, for this Court to appreciate what it contains and to see the nature and contents of the evidence that the Plaintiff intends to lead. Thus, if the intention to use the said folio marked P10 and any document arising out of that was revealed through the replication or the list of documents, as said before, the Defendant could have used the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code for his benefit and could have included further documents (if any) in his list to meet the case intended to be presented by the Plaintiff. Further he could have asked for a commission to superimpose plans referred to in those documents. In the backdrop explained above, I am not inclined to accept the position that allowing this new evidence contained in P10 will not prejudice the rights of the Defendant even though he was not represented to present his case before this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that the paramount consideration for a judge is the ascertainment of truth and not the desire of a litigant to be placed at an advantage by some technicality and it is also said that the Court can use its discretion, if special circumstances appear to it to render such a course advisable in the interest of justice, to permit those documents to be marked. In this regard the Plaintiff has brought this court's attention to the decided cases in Girantha et al. V Maria et al. 50 N L R 519 and Casie Chetty V Senanayake (1999) 3 Sri L R 11. In Girantha et al V Maria et al the Court was interpreting the repealed section 121 where there was no stipulation to file list of witnesses and documents 15 days before the date fixed for trial. By stating that I do not intend to say that ascertainment of truth or interest of justice are not matters of concern. They are indeed, but the Court must consider why this condition to file the list 15 days prior to date fixed for trial was introduced. One reason may be to avoid delays due to applications of this nature being made during the trial. On the other hand, listing of documents and witnesses was always there to avoid the element of surprise being caused to the opposite party by introducing new documents and witnesses during the course of the trial. In my view, by introducing this condition to file it 15 days before the date fixed for trial has caused a party to make the other party or parties to the action know the nature and extent of its evidence before the trial so that the other party or parties could take steps to properly meet the case presented by that party. For obvious reasons, in terms of proviso to section 175(2) of the Civil Procedure Code, the documents to refresh memory and documents intended to be shown during the cross examination are the only documents that need not be listed. For the interest of justice and ascertainment of truth, it is necessary for each party to know the scope of and nature of evidence of each other's case. If one acts in a prejudicial manner affecting the opposite party's rights or entitlements by not listing an important document, he or she cannot be allowed to ask permission to produce the same for interest of justice. In Kandiah V Wisvanathan and Another (1991) 1 Sri L R 269, it was stated that the precedents indicate that leave may be granted for documents that are not listed;

- Where it is in the interest of Justice
- Where it is necessary for the ascertainment of truth
- Where there is no doubt about the authenticity of documents (as for instance certified copies of public documents or records of judicial proceedings)
- Where sufficient reasons are adduced for the failure to list the document (as for instance where the party was ignorant of its existence at the trial)

It was further held in that case that leave may not be granted if the other party would be placed at a distinct disadvantage.

In the matter at hand, no acceptable reason has been given before the District Judge as to why the documents were not listed even when the Defendant revealed his stance through his answer. On the other hand, as explained before, P10, Folio G/63/221, which was refused by the District Court refers to a Plan in describing the land relevant to that folio and such plan has not been used for the purposes of this case as stated before. As per the application before the High Court, it appears that the Plaintiff intends to mark at least another deed after getting the impugned order vacated, for which no application was made before the District Court. That deed also may contain reference to plans etc. Without producing that deed before this Court, even this court cannot decide whether it affects the substantial rights of the Defendant. This also indicates that the Plaintiff did not apprise the District Court fully regarding the new documents which she intended to produce in evidence during re-examination. If it was revealed before the learned Additional District Judge, the Additional District Judge would have referred to that deed too in his order. If these documents were revealed through a list and the Defendant was put on notice of the Plaintiff's intention to produce them, the Defendant could have taken steps to meet such evidence as explained above. Thus, in my view if the folio G/63/221 marked P10 was allowed to be produced during re-examination, it would have placed the Defendant at a distinct disadvantage. As said before, even if the decision of the learned Additional District Judge lacks clarity, his decision not to accept the document is correct.

On the other hand, without taking steps to file an application for leave to appeal against the impugned order of the learned District Judge, the Plaintiff closed her case on her own and the Defendant also closed his case without calling any evidence. It must be noted here, as per the surveyor's evidence led on behalf of the Plaintiff, there are discrepancies between the true copy of plan 4972A (marked as V1 at the trial) and the tracing (P2 at the trial) that was used to make his plan (P1 at the trial).

Just 2 days before the date of filing the final written submissions, the Plaintiff has filed the revision application dated 18.01.2010. In the said revision application, the Plaintiff has;

- Not revealed any reason for not using his right to file a leave to appeal application.
- Not revealed any reason for not listing relevant document/s in his list of documents even when the Defendant has revealed his position in his answer.
- Not revealed that she closed her case and accordingly the Defendant closed his case and matter was pending for written submissions prior to judgment.
- Not revealed the discrepancies revealed through evidence between the tracing his surveyor used and the certified copy of the same plan marked V1 at the trial and V1 was not even referred to in the Petition.
- Not revealed that even though she has asked relief in the revision application directing the District Court to accept the deed number 3060, she did not move the District Court to accept the same.
- Not prayed for an order to set aside the proceedings that took place after the closing of her case by her lawyer on her behalf.

It is expected from a party to reveal all material and relevant facts when praying for relief from a court. In Wijesinghe V Tharmaratnam, Srikantha's L R (IV) at page 47, it was held that revision is a discretionary remedy and will not be available unless the application discloses circumstances which shocks the conscience of Court. It is not proper for a court to come to a conclusion that the circumstances disclosed in a petition shocks its conscience when the petition does not reveal certain facts that may give different complexion to the application before the court. As per the decision in Perera V People's Bank (1995) 2 Sri L R 84, revision is a discretionary remedy and the conduct of the party making the application is intensively relevant.

It is settled law that the exercise of the revisionary power is limited to instances where exceptional circumstances exist warranting the intervention of the court- vide Hotel Galaxy (Pvt.) Ltd. V Mercantile Hotels Managements Ltd. (1987) 1 Sri L R 5 and Rustom V Hapangama & Co. (1978/79) 2 Sri L R 225. Cadaramanpulle V Ceylon Paper Sacks Ltd. (2001) 3 Sri L R 112. Not allowing to produce the said Folio G63/221, P10 and a deed contained therein may be prejudicial to the Plaintiff's case but it was a result of her and her lawyer's being not vigilant, since if they were vigilant, they could have taken steps to reply referring to them in their replication or by listing them in their list of documents while giving notice to the Defendant to take steps to meet the case going to be presented against him through such evidence. Now, the Defendant cannot list any documents including plans or get commissions to execute superimpositions of the plans referred to in the said documents or if necessary, use provisions under chapter XVI etc. and that may cause unfairness to the Defendant. The result of the harm caused to the Plaintiff is part of her or her lawyer's negligence or a result of them being non-vigilant but the Defendant need not be allowed to suffer for that. Such a situation should not be considered as an existence of exceptional circumstances for the benefit of the Plaintiff even if not allowing the relief may cause harm to the Plaintiff's case.

It is true that even if there is an alternative remedy, when exceptional circumstances exist, the appellate court can exercise its revisionary jurisdiction but no reason has been elucidated to state why the Plaintiff closed her case without taking steps to file a leave to appeal application. After the impugned order in the District Court, the Plaintiff and her lawyer has not asked time to take necessary steps but proceeded to further re-examine and close her case. If such step was taken to file a leave to appeal application and leave was granted proceedings would have been stayed in the lower court. The Plaintiff's own conduct has made the opposite party and the court to proceed further and conclude the proceedings and allow the parties to file written submissions prior to judgment. In such a background, it is not proper to set aside the proceedings made after the impugned order made by the District Court and in fact, there is no such order prayed before the High Court. Even though, it is prayed before this court to set aside those proceedings, in my view, this court is not empowered in appeal to grant relief exceeding the relief prayed in the Court below, namely the High Court. In Surangi v Rodrigo [2003] 3SLR 35 it was held that no court is entitled to or has jurisdiction to grant reliefs which is not prayed for in the prayers. Thus, the High Court could not vacate the proceedings taken up after the impugned order as there was no such relief prayed for and as said before, such part of the proceedings was not revealed by the petition to the High Court. By praying for a such relief in this Court, the Plaintiff is trying to cover his lapses in the application for revision to the High Court. If any harm is caused to the Plaintiff, it is due to her lapses from filing of the replication and listing of documents and so forth.

The Learned High Court judges has refused the application on the following grounds,

1. That the refusal of permission to mark folio G/63/221 has not caused any prejudice to the rights of the Plaintiff, as she was well aware that she had to prove how the title derived and that if she had a better title than the Defendant, she should have listed the relevant prior registration extract of G/63/221 in her list of witnesses and documents whereas she has totally failed to do so, and therefore it is not correct to produce P7(P7 at the trial which is P10 with the Petition to this Court) during re-examination.

2. That the Plaintiff has failed to established the existence of exceptional circumstances.

3. That, as the revision application has been filed only after the closing of the case by both parties, it was not proper for the High Court to exercise its powers of revision at that stage.

4. That, no new evidence may be introduced in re-examination without the leave of court.

As per the item 1, 2 and 4 above, as explained before in this judgment, not allowing the relevant Folio may have caused some harm to the case of the Plaintiff and the Plaintiff may also need to mark at least another deed for which there was no application before the District Judge. However, this harm is caused by the lack of vigilance by the Plaintiff and her lawyers but allowing those documents in re-examination may cause prejudice to the Defendant. As such, circumstances relevant to this case do not establish exceptional circumstances other than a negligence or fault by the Plaintiff or her Lawyers. It was not proper to introduce new evidence at that stage that may cause harm to the Defendant. I have already dealt sufficiently above in relation to the revision application being filed after the conclusion of the cases of both parties without any prayer to vacate those proceedings taken up after the making of the impugned order by the learned Additional District Judge which resulted due to the close of her case by the Plaintiff.

Therefore, I answer the questions of law allowed by this Court when granting leave as follows,

Q. a) Whether the High Court erred in holding that no prejudice has been caused by the refusal of the application to mark P7 folio G/63/221 (P10 with the petition)?

A. The harm, if any, caused by the refusal is a result of the fault of the Plaintiff but allowing the application to mark Folio G/63/221 is prejudicial to the Defendant. Thus, the refusal is correct and this question has to be answered in favour of the Defendant.

Q. b) Whether the High Court erred in holding that it is not proper for the High Court to exercise its revisionary jurisdiction because the cases for both parties had been closed before the revision application was filed?

A. Answered in the Negative.

Q. c) Whether the High Court erred in holding that this application for revision cannot succeed because there were no exceptional circumstances involved in this matter for the exercise of revisionary jurisdiction?

A. Answered in the Negative.

Q. d) Whether the contents of folio G/63/221 arose directly out of the cross-examination; it was also relevant in respect of issues Nos 26 and 28 namely, whether it was the Petitioner 's (Plaintiff's) deed or the Respondent's (Defendant's) deed which passed the title?

A. It did not directly arise from the cross-examination but was in issue from the moment the answer was filed. Raising of issues no.26 and 28 itself indicates that the Plaintiff was aware about what she has to prove to be successful in the case filed but for some reason did not list the documents in terms of section 121(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. The Plaintiff could have taken steps to list necessary documents and indicate the scope of his evidence for the Defendant to take notice to prepare for his case and take necessary steps to present his case in relation to those documents. The question has to be answered in favour of the Defendant.

Q. e) Whether the order of the learned trial judge was ex facie and palpably incorrect in as much as the petitioner (Plaintiff) in fact sought the permission of court to produce p7(P10 with the petition), a copy of the said folio G/63/221, and that itself constituted a ground for the exercise of revisionary jurisdiction?

A. Even if the permission was sought to mark it during evidence in re-examination, no acceptable reason was given why it was not listed in term of section 121(2) of the Civil Procedure Code and why it was not moved to produce in examination-in-chief. Since allowing of the document at that stage could have caused prejudice to the Defendant, even if such request was considered as properly made, refusal to accept the document is correct and Revision being a discretionary remedy it should not have been used by the High Court. Hence this Court need not interfere with the decision. The question has to be answered in favour of the Defendant.

For the reasons given above this appeal is dismissed. No costs.

JUDGMENT

Aluwihare PC. J,

(1) The Accused-Appellant-Petitioner-Appellant [Hereinafter referred to as the 'Accused'] was indicted along with another before the High Court for the murder of one Kodagodage Sunil Jayaweera [Hereinafter referred to as the 'Deceased'] on or about 9th May 1998.

(2) The trial before the High Court had proceeded only against the Accused as the Attorney-General withdrew the indictment against the other accused who was indicted along with the Accused-Appellant in the present case.

(3) At the conclusion of the trial, the learned High Court judge found the Accused guilty as indicted, and accordingly the death sentence was imposed on him. The Accused, aggrieved by the said judgement, moved by way of an appeal to the Court of Appeal. By its judgement dated 14.02.2012, the Court of Appeal dismissed the appeal, affirming the conviction and sentence imposed on the Accused.

(4) The instant appeal arises out of the said judgement of the Court of Appeal. This court granted special leave to appeal on the questions of law which are referred to in sub-paragraphs (b), (e), (h), (j) and (k) of Paragraph 11 of the Petition of the Accused-Appellant which are reproduced below;

(b) Whether their Lordships in the Court of Appeal have failed to consider that in rejecting the evidence of the defence and accepting the version of the prosecution witness, the learned High Court judge had required of the defence the same burden of proof as required by the prosecution?

(e) Whether their Lordships in the Court of Appeal and the learned High Court Judge have failed to fairly and properly evaluate the Defence evidence?

(h) Whether their Lordships in the Court of Appeal and the learned High Court Judge have failed to consider the inconsistencies of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses?

(J) Whether their Lordships in the Court of Appeal and the learned High Court judge have failed to consider the evidence of the existence of a sudden fight?

(k) Whether in all the circumstances of the case the petitioner should have been acquitted of the count of murder or have been convicted of the lesser offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder?

(5) Before the legal issues raised are addressed, it would be pertinent to lay down the factual background to the incident that resulted in the death of the deceased.

(6) In the course of the evidence led at the trial, it transpired that the deceased, was living as a tenant, with his family in a small wattle and daub house belonging to the father of the Accused.

(7) Sometime before the incident, the accused had got married and he had wanted the deceased to vacate the premises as the accused intended to move in there with his wife. It appears that the deceased had wanted three months to find alternative accommodation.

(8) The deceased had not, however, moved out and on the day prior to the incident on which the deceased died, the Accused had come to the house of the deceased accompanied by another person and had caused damage to the structure of the house when the deceased was out at work.

(9) Consequently, the deceased had complained to the police and who had inquired into the Complaint. As no settlement could be reached between the parties, the police had referred the matter to the Mediation Board but had permitted the deceased to attend to the necessary repairs to damaged house.

(10) On the day following, whilst the deceased was engaged in attending to the re-building of the damaged house, the Accused had arrived at the scene and had attacked the deceased with a 'Manna' knife and as a result he had succumbed to the injuries.

(11) According to Dr. Dahanayake who carried out the autopsy, he had observed a deep cut injury on the back of the neck, 25 cm in length which had completely severed the brain stem and the Atlas vertebra, and the injury had been 10cm in depth. The doctor has expressed the opinion that the injury referred to is one that is necessarily fatal.

The Version of the Accused

(12) The Accused testifying under oath, in his examination-in-chief itself, admitted that he attacked the deceased with a knife and that the deceased sustained an injury as a result. According to the Accused, the deceased had been residing there for about 13 years and about a year prior to the incident, he had asked the deceased to vacate the house as he wished to move in there after his marriage, however, the deceased had not acceded to his request.

(13) The accused also had admitted that, on the day before the incident he visited the deceased and demanded vacant possession of the house. However, the deceased again was not agreeable. Infuriated by this response the accused had kicked the walls of the house, and as a result the walls had collapsed. Then, both parties had gone to the police. As the police could not resolve the dispute, they had referred the matter to the Mediation Board and had told the feuding parties that the deceased should be permitted to continue occupying the premises until such time the matter is inquired into by the Mediation Board. It is also significant to note that the deceased had sought permission to re-erect the walls and the accused said in his evidence that he agreed to allow the deceased to repair the damage.

(14) In switching to an incident out of sequence, the Accused had said in his testimony that the deceased suddenly grabbed a mamoty and as he got frightened, in order to protect himself he picked a knife that was kept on the roof of a nearby chicken coop and attacked the deceased. Then he says he fled the area through fear and later surrendered to the police through his relatives.

(15) Under cross examination it was elicited, that the Accused had gone in the direction where the deceased was living the day after the parties went to the police over the housing dispute. The Accused had said that he saw the deceased engaged in the process of re-building the house but had observed that the new construction was larger than the one that existed, and he questioned the deceased why so, having walked up to him. The deceased had been kneading clay at the time. The accused, in his examination-in-chief, had said that the deceased grabbed the mamoty and due to fear, he picked the knife and attacked the deceased.

(16) The daughter of the deceased, Nilusha who had been a girl of 13 years at the time had testified to the effect that both the Accused and another person had come to their house on the previous day and toppled the posts that supported the structure of the house and it collapsed. Her father had been out at work at the time. On the day her father died, the family members were engaged in the process of rebuilding. At one point, after kneading clay, her father had squatted complaining that he is exhausted. She had also seen the Accused hovering in the vicinity looking in the direction of the construction that was going on. At one point, the accused had approached her father from behind and having pulled out a knife which was tucked under his shirt, had dealt a blow on the neck of her father. Apart from a solitary omission highlighted by the defence, Nilusha's testimony is free from any contradictions or any other infirmities.

(17) The wife of the deceased Vinitha had also testified, but she had not witnessed the attack on her husband as she had gone to fetch water and only had rushed to the scene on hearing the cries of distress of her daughter Nilusha.

The Issues raised on Behalf of the Accused

(18) It was contended on behalf of the Accused that both the learned High Court Judge as well as the Court of Appeal failed to consider the applicability of special exceptions to the Section 294 of the Penal Code, namely grave and sudden provocation and/or sudden fight. It was the contention of the learned President's Counsel that there was evidence emanating from the testimony of the prosecution witnesses of a sudden fight.

(19) It was further contended that the learned High Court Judge failed to consider the omission in the testimony of the sole eyewitness, Nilusha, who testified on behalf of the prosecution. It was pointed out that, although Nilusha in her evidence had stated that the accused pulled out a knife that was tucked behind his shirt, she had not stated this fact either in her statement to the police or the depositions she made at the non-summery inquiry.

(20) Considering the fact that the witness [Nilusha] was a child of 13 years at the time she made the statements, it is possible that due to her tender age, she may not have been mature enough to appreciate the significance of that fact, at the time she made the statements. In addition, she would have been a distressed child having lost her father. In this context, I am of the view that the omission referred to is not of such gravity to discredit the testimony of Nilusha. As referred to earlier, other than this omission, her evidence had been consistent and remains un-impugned.

The Questions of Law

(21) Before dealing with the questions of law, it is necessary to bear in mind the Constitutional provision embodied in the proviso to Article 138(1) which reads;

"Provided that no judgement decree or order of any court shall be reversed or varied on account of any error, defect or irregularity, which has not prejudiced the substantial rights of the parties or occasioned a failure of justice". [Emphasis added]

(22) In view of the constitutional provision referred to, which is in mandatory terms, the duty cast on the Court of Appeal would be to consider the appeal within the scope of the proviso and, this court in turn, would be required to consider whether the Court of Appeal and/or the High Court were in error in coming to the conclusions, notwithstanding that the Accused had satisfied that his substantial rights have been prejudiced or the error or the defect relied on by the Accused had occasioned a failure of justice.

(23) Similar thresholds are found in the proviso to Section 334(1) and Section 436 of the Code of Criminal procedure Act No.15 of 1979 which stipulate that notwithstanding the fact that the point raised in appeal might be decided in favour of the Appellant, the court can dismiss the appeal if it is of the opinion that "no substantial miscarriage/failure of justice" has in fact occurred.

(24) The legal effect of these two provisions which are applicable to criminal appeals, in my opinion, would be that, in order to succeed in his appeal, it is not sufficient for an accused to merely impress upon court that the issue raised might be decided in favour of the Accused. The accused must also satisfy court that a substantial miscarriage of justice has in fact occurred or that the decision had occasioned a failure of justice.

(25) In relation to the question of law referred to in sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph 11 of the Petition of the Accused, it was submitted that the Court of Appeal failed to consider the fact that the learned High Court judge had placed the same burden of proof on both the prosecution as well as the defence. It was pointed out that the burden on the prosecution to establish the charges is beyond reasonable doubt whereas as it is not so in case of the defence.

(26) In explaining the conduct of the Accused, in the course of the submissions, it was pointed out that the situation was such that the Accused acted in self-defence. In considering the defence raised on behalf of the Accused, the learned trial judge had referred to the applicable legal principles on the burden of proof cast on an accused in a criminal case in relation to establishing a 'defence' [Page 8 of the judgement]. The Trial Judge had gone on to state that the burden [on an accused] is on a 'balance of probability' and also had referred to the fact that even in instances where the defence raised fails to reach that threshold, if a reasonable doubt arises from the prosecution case, the accused would be entitled to the benefit of the doubt. The learned trial judge had also referred to the fact that, even if the defence version is totally rejected, still the prosecution cannot succeed, unless it proves the case beyond reasonable doubt.

(27) The relevant portion is produced in verbatim below;

"මෙහි ඉදිරිපත් වූ සාක්ෂි අනුව මෙම නඩුවේ චූදිත විසින් සුනිල් ජයවීර ඔහු හට උදැල්ලකින් පහර දීමට තැත් කළ නිසා තම ආත්මාරක්ෂාව මත එම ස්ථානයේ තිබූ මන්නා පිහියකින් පහර දුන් බවට සාක්ෂියක් විත්තිය වෙනුවෙන් ලබා දී ඇත. විත්තියට එම කරුණ ඔප්පු කිරීමට වගකීම ඇත්තේ වැඩි බර සාක්ෂි මත වන අතර, එම කරුණ ඔප්පු කිරීමට නොහැකි වන අවස්ථාවක දී වුවද, සැකයක් මතුවන්නේ නම් එහි සැකයේ වාසිය විත්තියට ලබා දිය යුතු අතර, විත්තියේ ස්ථාවරය ප්‍රතික්ෂේප කරනු ලැබූවද පැමිණිල්ල විසින් නඟා ඇති චෝදනාව සාධාරණ සැකයෙන් ඔබ්බට ඔප්පු කිරීමේ වගකීම සෑම විටම පැමිණිල්ල මත රඳා පවතී."

(28) The passage in the judgement referred to above not only demonstrates that the learned trial judge had been alive to the relevant principles on burden of proof and this court wishes to observe that the learned trial judge had not erred in that regard, particularly in relation to the burden of proof cast on an accused in establishing a special exception under Section 294 of the Penal Code.

(29) Considering the above, it cannot be said that the learned High Court Judge had placed the same burden of proof on both the prosecution and the defence. When the question of law raised on behalf of the Accused is viewed in the light of the observations made by the learned High Court Judge referred to above, I answer the question of law referred to in sub-paragraph (b) of paragraph 11 of the petition in the negative.

(30) The next question of law [sub paragraph (e) of paragraph 11] on which special leave was granted was whether the Court of Appeal and the High Court failed to evaluate the defence version 'properly and fairly'.

(31) As referred to earlier, there is no dispute that the injury that resulted in the death of the deceased was inflicted by the Accused. The only question that this court has to address is whether the injury was caused at a time the accused was deprived of the power of self-control due to grave and sudden provocation offered by the deceased.

(32) From the evidence led in the course of the trial, it is quite evident that the deceased had acted with considerable restraint throughout the incident, in the context of what he faced at the hands of the Accused. In his absence, his house where he lived with his young family was demolished by the accused and another. This was not denied by the Accused either.

(33) The only action the Deceased took was to seek the assistance of the law enforcement by lodging a complaint with the police, an action any law-abiding citizen would resort to in the face of an adversary of this nature. At the police inquiry he requested that he be given permission to rebuild his house, the request which the Accused acceded to.

(34) The following day, the deceased with the help of his family members were engaged in the process of rebuilding the damaged house, and even when they saw the Accused hovering in the vicinity, there is nothing to say that the deceased acted in any manner that would have provoked the Accused.

(35) According to the Accused's own evidence, it was he who approached the Deceased and questioned him. The fact remains that the deceased had had no dealings with the Accused, the reason being it was the father of the Accused who was the landlord, he had not interfered with the peaceful occupation of the premises.

(36) In the backdrop of the events that took place on the previous day, which ended with the Deceased and the Accused having to attend the police station, the Accused ought not to have disturbed the deceased who was in the process of rebuilding his house and if he had any issue with the way the house was being put up by the deceased, the Accused could easily have lodged a complaint with the police rather than confronting him.

(37) The gravamen of the argument of the learned President's Counsel was that the learned Trial Judge failed to consider whether the Accused acted under grave and sudden provocation and in addition, the Trial Judge ought to have considered whether the deceased sustained the injury in the course of a sudden fight.

(38) The Accused did say in his evidence that when he questioned the Deceased as to why he was putting up a building that was larger than the one that was destroyed, the deceased became abusive and he supposed to have retorted;

"I do not do things the way you want. I will build the house the way I want."

[කොට ඕනෑ විදිහට මම වැඩ කරන්නේ නැහැ. මට ඕනෑ විදිහට මම ගෙය හදනවා].

(39) In addition to the mitigatory exception of grave and sudden provocation, the learned President's Counsel also argued that both the learned High Court Judge and the Court of Appeal failed to consider the special exception 4 of Section 294 of the Penal code, namely whether the act of causing the fatal injury was committed in a sudden fight. The President's Counsel argued that the evidence unfolded in the course of the trial provided the existence of circumstances to bring the case within the ambit of the two exceptions referred to.

(40) In view of the contrasting versions of the prosecution and the defence, as to how the attack on the deceased took place, it would be necessary to consider the 'legal burden' cast on the accused to establish his version, if he is to succeed in his mitigatory defences referred to above.

(41) Section 105 of the Evidence Ordinance delineates the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing a case within the ambit of special exceptions of the Penal Code and states;

"When a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the general exceptions in the Penal Code, or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law defining the offence, is upon him, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances."

The illustration (b) of that section sheds further light as to the burden of proof and reads;

"A, accused of murder, alleges that, by grave and sudden provocation, he was deprived of the power of self-control. The burden of proof is on A."

(42) In the case of James Chandrasekera v. The King 44 NLR 97, seven judges of the Court of Criminal Appeal considered this issue in depth and held,

"Where, in a case in which any general or special exception under the Penal Code is pleaded by an accused person and the evidence relied upon by such accused person fails to satisfy the Jury affirmatively of the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exception pleaded, the accused is not entitled to be acquitted if, upon a consideration of the evidence as a whole, a reasonable doubt is created in the minds of the Jury as to whether he is entitled to the benefit of the exception pleaded."

(43) The majority of the judges, [de Kretser J dissenting], in the case of Chandrasekera [supra] held that, in a case where a general or special exception under the Penal Code is pleaded, a reasonable doubt being created in the minds of the jury, as to the applicability of the exception, does not render the accused entitled to its benefit. Dr. G.L. Peiris expresses the view that "the relevant provisions of the Evidence Ordinance, read with the majority judgment in James Chandrasekera [supra] have the effect that the plea of grave and sudden provocation is required to be established by the accused on a balance of probability" [Offences under the Penal Code of Ceylon, first edition at pgs., 102-103].

(44) Thus, the law as it stands today is that, where in a case in which any general or special exception under the Penal Code is pleaded by an accused person and the evidence relied upon by such accused person fails to satisfy the court affirmatively of the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exception pleaded, the accused is not entitled to relief if, upon a consideration of the evidence as a whole, a reasonable doubt is created as to whether he is entitled to the benefit of the exception pleaded.

(45) Along with the decisions of King v. Coomaraswamy 41 NLR 289, King v. Kirigoris 48 NLR 407 and Regina v. Piyasena 57 NLR 226 relied on by the learned President's Counsel, the decision in the case of James v. The Queen 53 NLR 401 was also considered. The main issue that confronts us in the instant case is, even if the version of the accused is believed [which the learned High Court Judge had rejected] would the alleged provocation, satisfy the objective norms postulated by the law. In the case of James [supra] the Court observed that;

> "He [accused] must in addition, establish that such provocation, objectively assessed, was "grave and sudden enough to prevent the offence from amounting to murder". That depends upon the actual effect of the provocation upon the person provoked and upon the probability of its producing a similar effect upon other persons".
> In the same case Justice Gratiaen went on to state;
> "On grounds of public policy, the Legislature which enacted Exception 1 to section 294 designedly denies the mitigatory plea of "grave and sudden provocation" to a prisoner whose reaction to provocation in any particular case falls short of the minimum standard of self-control which can reasonably be expected from an average person of ordinary habits, placed in a similar situation, who belongs to the same class of society as the prisoner does".

(46) In the context of the case, I find the Accused cannot benefit from the mitigatory defence of provocation due to two reasons;

Firstly, even assuming the deceased uttered the alleged provocative words, still they do not meet the objective norms of the exception.

Secondly, the benefit of the exception is denied to a person who seeks provocation or where the offender voluntarily provokes, as an excuse for the retaliation.

(47) The facts of the case, in my view did not warrant the consideration of either the exception of provocation or sudden fight and in the circumstances the questions of law referred to in sub-paragraph (e) [evaluation of defence evidence], sub-paragraph (j) [failure to consider evidence of the existence of a sudden fight] and the consequential question of whether in the circumstances of the case the accused should have been convicted of the lesser offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, referred to in sub-paragraph (k) of paragraph 11 of the Petition are also answered in the negative.

(48) The learned President's Counsel also argued that the learned High Court Judge had failed to consider the inconsistencies of the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. [Question of law referred to in sub paragraph (b) of Paragraph 11 of the Petition]. Apart from the omission relating to the act of the Accused pulling out the knife tucked under his shirt, there are no major inconsistencies in the testimony of the sole eyewitness Nilusha. I have dealt with the testimony of Nilusha in detail in paragraphs (19) and (20) of this judgement and I do not wish to refer to my findings again.

(49) It was pointed out on behalf of the Accused that the wife of the deceased was contradicted by a statement she made at the inquest which was indicative of a sudden fight which was not considered by the learned Trial judge. Witness Vinitha was categorical in her evidence that she saw the Accused in the vicinity, but she did not see the Accused speaking to the deceased. She also rejected the suggestion put to her that her husband spoke to the Accused in a provocative manner. It was pointed out, however, that at the inquest proceedings she had said "then he [meaning the accused] was talking to my husband". The eyewitness Nilusha was also cross examined as to whether there was an exchange of words between the Accused and the deceased to which she answered in the negative. I am of the view that when the contradictory statement referred to is considered with the rest of the evidence, it would not be possible to draw the inference that there was an exchange of words that led to a sudden fight. Accordingly, I answer this question of law [Sub paragraph (b)] also in the negative.

(50) Having considered the evidence led at the trial, I am of the view that the learned High Court Judge was justified in accepting the evidence of witness Nilusha and acting on the same. When one considers the totality of the evidence of this case, the accused had failed to discharge the evidentiary burden cast on him in terms of Section 105 of the Evidence Ordinance to bring his case within the ambit of the special exceptions to Section 294 of the Penal Code and the learned High Court Judge cannot be faulted for not acting on the evidence of the Accused.

(51) I am further of the view that the grounds urged on behalf of the Accused are not sufficient to mitigate the conviction of murder to that of culpable homicide not amounting to murder, and I hold that neither the learned High Court Judge nor the Court of Appeal erred in arriving at the conclusion that the accused was guilty of the offence of murder.

Accordingly, the conviction and the sentence imposed on the Accused is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Facts of the case

This is an appeal to set aside the judgment of the Provincial High Court holden in Chilaw [hereinafter referred to as the "High Court"], dismissing an appeal preferred against an Order that forfeited a lorry transporting gravel without a valid licence by the Magistrate's Court.

The claimant-appellant-appellant [hereinafter referred to as the "appellant"] is the registered owner of the lorry bearing registration number SG GM-1178, which was forfeited to the State by the learned Magistrate.

The driver of the said lorry was arrested by the Police while transporting gravel without a valid licence and proceedings were instituted against the driver in the Magistrate's Court of Marawila in terms of section 136(1)(b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, Act No. 15 of 1979, as amended [hereinafter referred to as the Code of Criminal Procedure]. Further, the said lorry, along with the gravel, was produced in the Magistrate's Court by the Police.

Subsequently, the learned Magistrate had framed a charge against the said driver under section 182(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure for transporting two cubes of gravel in a vehicle bearing registration number SG GM-1178 without a valid licence issued in that behalf by the Competent Authority, and that the said driver committed an offence by violating section 28(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992, punishable under section 63(1) of the said Act.

The driver of the lorry had pleaded guilty to the said charge. Accordingly, he was convicted and imposed a fine of Rs. 60,000/-, which was paid by him on the same day. Further, the two cubes of gravel that were being transported were forfeited by the learned Magistrate and ordered to be released to the State Engineering Corporation.

On an application made by the appellant, who is the owner of the lorry, the said lorry was released to the appellant on a bond of Rs. 1,500,000/-, pending the inquiry in terms of section 63A(2) of the Mines and Minerals Act as amended by Act No. 66 of 2009. At the said inquiry, only the appellant had given evidence.

After the conclusion of the said inquiry, the learned Magistrate delivered the Order holding that the appellant had failed to take the necessary precautions to prevent the driver of the said lorry from illegally transporting gravel without a valid licence, and therefore, the said lorry was forfeited in terms of section 63(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992.

Being aggrieved by the Order of the learned Magistrate forfeiting the said lorry, the appellant had preferred an appeal to the High Court to set aside the said Order.

After the hearing of the said appeal, the High Court held that the appellant had no right to appeal against the Order of the Magistrate's Court to forfeit the lorry used for the offence in terms of the Mines and Minerals Act, and affirmed the Order of the learned Magistrate dated 22nd of December, 2010.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment, the appellant had moved the High Court to grant leave to appeal to the Supreme Court in terms of section 9(a) of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No. 19 of 1990, and leave to appeal was granted on the following questions of law:

"i. Was the charge framed in this case legal and valid when it did not contain the mandatory requirement prescribed by section 164(4) of the Code of Criminal Procedure No. 15 of 1979 to mention in it the law and the section of the law under which the said confiscation/forfeiture, being a punishment, could be made?

ii. Did this Provincial High Court err in law in dismissing Appeal No. HCA 11/2011 filed against the confiscation/forfeiture of lorry No. SGGM 1178 based upon the conviction of the accused-respondent-respondent of such an illegal and invalid charge?

iii. Did this Provincial High Court err in law when it upheld the confiscation/forfeiture of the said lorry based on a conviction of a charge punishable under section 63(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992 neither which nor any amending act thereof had provided for the confiscation/forfeiture of a vehicle?

iv. Did the Provincial High Court err in law when it refused Appeal No. HCA 11/2011 filed by the petitioner based on a preliminary objection raised by the learned State Counsel of the said High Court which was not tenable in law?"

When the instant appeal was taken up for hearing, the parties to the appeal submitted that, even though the learned High Court Judge dismissed the appeal on the premise that the appellant had no right to appeal against an Order made under section 63B(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act No. 34 of 1992, as amended by Act No. 66 of 2009 [hereinafter referred to as the "Mines and Minerals Act"] section 63B(3) of the said Act provides for an appeal against an order made for forfeiture. Hence, both counsel appearing for the appellant and the respondent submitted that they will confine themselves only to the third question of law set out above.

Submissions of the appellant

The learned counsel for the appellant submitted that section 63B(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act, as amended, confers power on the Magistrate to forfeit any mineral, machinery, equipment or material used in or in connection with the commission of an offence under the said Act.

However, the aforesaid section does not specifically refer to vehicles and therefore, the said section does not confer power on the Magistrate's Court to forfeit vehicles. Further, similar Acts such as section 40(1) of the Forest Conservation Ordinance, section 3A of the Animals Act, and section 79 of the Poisons, Opium and Dangerous Drugs Act expressly provide for the "vehicle" used in the commission of an offence to be forfeited to the State.

Furthermore, the learned counsel contended that if the words in an Act are clear, the court does not need to interpret the words and cited the Court of Appeal judgment delivered by Justice Salam in Nishantha and 3 others v State [2014] 1 SLR 105 in support of said contention.

Moreover, the learned counsel cited the case of P.S. Priyantha Rajapakshe v Hon. Attorney General (CA/PHC No. 72/2012) CA Minutes 27th of October, 2012, where the Court of Appeal had released the vehicle to the registered owner following the aforementioned judgment (Nishantha and 3 others v State [2014] 1 SLR 105).

In the circumstances, the learned counsel for the appellants stated that the Order of the learned Magistrate and the learned High Court Judge erred in law and therefore, the said judgments should be set aside.

Submissions of the respondent

The learned Deputy Solicitor General for the respondent submitted that the purpose of the Mines and Minerals Act is to regulate, inter alia, the transportation of minerals. In this regard, the learned Deputy Solicitor General drew the attention of the court to the long title of the Mines and Minerals Act and submitted that if the intention of the legislature was to regulate the transportation of minerals, it is necessary for the forfeiture of the vehicle being used to illegally transport the gravel to achieve the intention of the said Act.

Further, it was contended that if the submissions of the appellant that the language of section 63B(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act as amended, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction is accepted, that would lead to absurdity. Thus, the said section cannot be interpreted to mean that only mineral, machinery, equipment or material used in or in connection with the commission of the offence or the proceeds of the sale of any such mineral or material deposited in court under the proviso to section 63A can be forfeited to the State, as the offence of transportation of gravel cannot be committed without the use of a vehicle. Therefore, the said Act requires the forfeiture of vehicles involved in the commission of an offence under section 63(1) of the Act.

Hence, it is necessary to adhere to the ordinary meaning of the words used in the statute and to the grammatical construction, unless that is at variance with the intention of the legislature. However, if the language of the statute leads to any manifest absurdity, the language may be varied or modified so as to avoid such absurdity.

I shall now consider the following question of law where leave to appeal was granted by the High Court.

Did the Provincial High Court err in law when it upheld the forfeiture of the lorry under consideration based on a conviction of a charge punishable under section 63(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992?

The issue that needs to be considered in the instant appeal is whether the lorry used to transport gravel could be forfeited to the State after an inquiry held under section 63B(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992, as amended by Act No. 66 of 2009.

In order to consider the above, the provisions of the Mines and Minerals Act and the purpose of enacting the Act would be considered first. Thereafter, the effects of the Mines and Minerals Act (Amendment) No. 66 of 2009 will be considered.

Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992

The long title of the said Act states as follows;

> "An Act to provide for the establishment of the geological survey and mines bureau to regulate the exploration for, mining, transportation, processing, trading in or export of, minerals for the transfer to such bureau of the functions of the department of geological survey for the repeal of the salt ordinance (chapter 211) the radioactive minerals act, No. 46 of 1968, and the mines and minerals law, No. 4 of 1973; and to provide for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto."

Upon a careful consideration of the long title of the Mines and Minerals Act, it is evident that the Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992 repealed the Salt Ordinance (chapter 211), Radioactive Minerals Act, No. 46 of 1968, and the Mines and Minerals Law, No. 4 of 1973 and established the Geological Survey and Mines Bureau to regulate the exploration for, mining, transportation, processing, trading in or export of, minerals and to provide for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto with the view to having a more efficient and effective framework to regulate the exploration of mining in the country.

Thus, repealing the previous legislation and enacting the new Act, which consolidated the important provisions contained in the repealed legislation and introducing new provisions, shows the intention of Parliament and the importance placed by the legislature in revising the laws at that time.

However, the Principal Act did not provide sufficient stringent provisions to regulate the exploration for mining, transportation, processing, trading in or export of minerals. Particularly, there were no provisions to detect and forfeit to the State the machinery, equipment, material or vehicles used in or in connection with the commission of an offence under the Mines and Minerals Act. Moreover, the punishments stipulated in the Principal Act were not sufficient deterrents to prevent violations under the said Act from occurring again.

Mines and Minerals (Amendment) Act No. 66 of 2009

Therefore, as the State could not achieve the intention of the Parliament in enacting the Principal Act due to lack of sufficient provisions in it, the legislature amended sections 4, 5, 6, 8, 12, 13, 20A, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 35, 37, 42, 46, 46A, 47, 48, 49, 51, 55, 57, 58, 61, 63, 64, 68, and 70 of the Principal Act by enacting the Mines and Minerals (Amendment) Act No. 66 of 2009.

Thus, a careful consideration of the said amendments to the Principal Act fortifies the said observation made with regard to the intention of the legislature in enacting the Principal Act. Thus, the intention of the Parliament in enacting and amending the Principal Act is a necessary factor that should be taken into consideration in interpreting the provisions of the said Act.

In this regard, N S Bindra's Interpretation of Statutes, Tenth Edition at page 492 to 493 states;

> "Turner LJ observed in the case of Hawkins v Gathercole (1855) 6 DM & G1, 'Regard must be had to the intent and meaning of the legislature'. The rule upon this subject is well expressed in the case of Stradling v Morgan 75 ER 308."

Further, Lord Blackburn cited the said judgment with approval in Charles Bradlaugh v Henry Lewis Clark Appeal [1893] 8 AC 354 at 373, which held as follows:

> "…. where a statute was passed for the purpose of repealing and in part re-enacting former statutes in pari materia are to be considered in order to see what it was that the legislature intended to enact in lieu of the repealed enactments. It may appear from the language used that the legislature intended to enact something quite different from the previous law, and where that is the case effect must be given to the intention."

Ownership and Discovery of Minerals

Section 26 of the Mines and Minerals Act, as amended, states that the ownership of minerals is vested with the State notwithstanding any right of ownership that any person may have to the soil where the minerals are found or situated.

Mining to be under the authority of a licence

Section 28(1) of the said Act states:

> "No person shall explore for, mine, transport*, process, store, trade in or export any mineral* except under the authority of, or otherwise than in accordance with, a licence issued in that behalf under the provisions of this Act and the regulations made thereunder:
>
> Provided ……" [emphasis added]

Thus, section 28(1) of the said Act imposes restrictions, inter alia, on the transportation of minerals without a valid license.

Offences

Section 63(1) of the said Act states:

> "(1) Any person who-
>
> (a) Explores for, or mines, processes, stores, transports*, trades in or exports, any mineral* without a licence in that behalf issued under this Act*;*
> (d) being the holder of a licence issued under this Act, fails to notify the Bureau of the discovery of any mineral discovered by him in the carrying out of the activities authorized by the licence, shall be guilty of an offence under this Act and shall on conviction after summary trial before a Magistrate be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred thousand rupees and in the case of a second or subsequent offence, to a fine not exceeding one million rupees or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year or to both such fine and imprisonment." [emphasis added]

Thus, in terms of section 63(1)(a) of the Mines and Minerals Act as amended, any person who explores or mines minerals, processes, stores, transports, trades in or exports any minerals without a valid license in that behalf issued under the Act commits an offence under the Act. It is important to note that exploration or mining, storing, transporting, trading or exporting of any minerals are separate and distinct offences under the said section.

Further, as stated above, the Principal Act was amended by inserting sections 63A and 63B along with several other sections to achieve the object of the Principal Act by conferring power on Police Officers to seize and then forfeit to the State, any machinery, equipment or materials used in or in connection with the commission of an offence when an offence has been committed under this Act.

Power to seize any mineral, machinery, equipment or material

Section 63A of the Mines and Minerals Act states as follows:

> "(1) A police officer who has reasonable grounds to believe that an offence has been committed under this Act may, with or without a warrant, seize any mined mineral quantity of mineral which has been mined, or any machinery, equipment or material used in or in connection with, the commission of that offence.
>
> (2) Where any mineral, machinery, equipment or material is seized by a police officer in pursuance of the powers conferred on him by this section, he shall forthwith produce such mineral, machinery, equipmen*t or material before, or make it available for inspection by, a Magistrate, who shall make such order as he thinks fit relating to the detention or custody of such mineral, machinery,* equipment or material, pending the conclusion of a prosecution instituted in respect of such mineral, machinery, equipment or material.
> Provided however, that where any minerals, machinery, equipment or material so seized is subject to speedy decay, the Magistrate may order that such minerals, machinery, equipment or material be sold and the proceeds of such sale be deposited in Court." [emphasis added]

Thus, section 63A confers power on Police Officers to seize any machinery, equipment, or materials used in or in connection with the commission of an offence under the said Act and produce them in the Magistrate's Court.

Power to forfeit to the State

Section 63B of the said Act reads as follows:

> "(1) Where any person is convicted of an offence under this Act, the Magistrate may make order that any mineral, machinery, equipment or material used in, or in connection with, the commission of that offence or the proceeds of the sale of any such minerals, or material deposited in court under the proviso to section 63A, be forfeited to the State."
>
> (2) Any mineral, machinery, equipment or material forfeited by an order under subsection (1), shall vest absolutely in the State upon the making of such order.
> (3) ……
> (4) The Court shall cause any mineral, machinery, equipment or material which has been vested in the State under subsection (2) to be sold and the proceeds of such sale to be deposited in Court." [emphasis added]

Thus, section 63B(1) of the Act confers power on the learned Magistrate to forfeit to the State any minerals, machinery, equipment or material produced in court under section 63A of the said Act where any person is convicted of an offence under the Act.

However, the Mines and Minerals Act does not provide for an interpretation of the words "minerals, machinery, equipment, or material" referred to in the Act.

Does the Magistrate's Court have jurisdiction to forfeit to the State a vehicle under section 63B(1) of the Act?

Thus, it is necessary to consider whether a vehicle (lorry, tractor, tipper, boat, ship, etc.) that is used to transport minerals contravening the provisions of the Act could be forfeited to the State by a Magistrate after a conviction for committing an offence under the Act, when section 63B(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act has not specifically referred to the forfeiture of 'vehicles'.

A cursory glance at sections 63A and 63B shows that a 'vehicle' is not specifically included in the said sections. Thus, it is necessary to consider whether the words "any", "machinery" and/or "equipment" "used or in connection with the commission of an offence" in the said section comes within the scope of sections 63A and 63B, notwithstanding the fact that a 'vehicle' is not specifically referred to in the said sections.

In interpreting a provision of law, it is necessary not only to look at the words of the section on the face of the provision but also to consider the real meaning of it. Further, the legal meaning shall prevail over a mere literal meaning on the face of a word or a phrase in an Act. Particularly, the real meaning of a word should be considered when the meaning on the face of a word does not lead to achieving the object of the Act or leads to absurdity over the real intended meaning by enacting the legislation.

Further, if the plain meaning of the words used in an Act would lead to absurdity or be contrary to the very purpose for which the legislation has been enacted, the intention of the legislature should be ascertained and taken into consideration not only in considering a particular section but also the entire Act and its amendments.

Furthermore, an interpretation of an Act shall not curtail the effect of the intended purpose of the Act or restrict the results that it would otherwise achieve. Hence, it is necessary to adopt a construction that would not result in futility, lead to difficulties in implementing an Act or cause hardships to the public at large.

In the circumstances, a question will arise as to whether a "machinery" or "equipment" can be used to transport the minerals. In this regard, it is necessary to give a purposive interpretation to the words "machinery" or 'equipment" in order to achieve a logical and rational meaning. Moreover, giving an interpretation confined to these words will make the said part of the section futile.

Hence, taking into consideration the rapid development in the technology of the equipment and machinery used in the mining industry, the aforementioned words should be given an interpretation that would be applicable to include the modern equipment and machinery used at present.

Therefore, the dictionary meaning of the word equipment will be considered to ascertain the real meaning and the intended purpose of using the word "equipment" referred in the said Act.

Dictionary meaning

"equipment"

Black's Law Dictionary (2nd edition) defines the word 'equipment' as:

> "Tools, be they devices, machines/vehicles. Assist a person in achieving an action beyond the normal capabilities of a human. Tangible property that is not land/buildings, but facilitates business operation. [emphasis added]

Further, Stroud's Judicial Dictionary (6th edition) defines the word "equipment" as:

> "Equipment for the purposes of s.1(1)(a) of the Employer's Liability (Defective Equipment) Act 1969 (c.37) was held to be wide enough to include a ship of whatever size, notwithstanding that ships are not specifically mentioned in the definition of "equipment" in subsection (3), whereas vehicles and aircrafts are (Coltman v Bibbly Tankers [1987] 3 (3) W.L.R. 1181)." [emphasis added]

Furthermore, in Coltman v Bibbly Tankers (supra), it was held that the term "ship" should be included in the term "equipment" to achieve the intention of Parliament by making employers liable for the injury or death of employees.

Longman Dictionary defines "equipment" as:

> "the tools, machines etc. that you need to do a particular job or activity."
>
> [emphasis added]

Thus, the dictionary meaning of the word 'equipment' shows that the word "equipment" includes a vehicle used in or in connection with the commission of that offence under Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992.

Applicability of Article 27(14) of the Constitution

Article 27(14) of the Constitution states:

> "The State shall respect, preserve and improve the environment for the benefit of the community."

Hence, Article 27(14) requires the court to interpret the provisions of Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992, as amended, to harmonise with the said Article, as the Constitution is the Supreme Law of the country. Further, no Act should be interpreted contrary to the provisions of the Constitution. Thus, as mining has a direct impact on the environment, the provisions of the Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992 should be interpreted in harmony with Article 27(14) of the Constitution. Further, in this instance, such an interpretation is necessary in order to preserve and improve the environment for the benefit of the community.

A similar view was observed in the case of Bulankulama and others v Secretary, Ministry of Industrial Development and others [2000] 3 SLR 243, where it was held:

> "Article 27(14) states that "The State shall protect, preserve and improve the environment for the benefit of the community." Article 28(f) states that the exercise and enjoyment of rights and freedoms (such as the 5th and 7th respondents claimed in learned counsel's submissions on their behalf to protection under Article 12 of the Constitution relating to equal protection of the law) "is inseparable from the performance of duties and obligations, and accordingly it is the duty of every person in Sri Lanka to protect nature and conserve its riches.""

Consideration of the word "any" in section 63B

Section 63B of the Mines and Minerals Act also provides for any mineral, machinery, equipment or material used in or in connection with the commission of that offence to be forfeited to the State by the Magistrate. Taking into consideration the intention of the legislature and the scheme of the Act, the said amendment to the Principal Act shows that the legislature has used the word "any", as it is not practical to specify all the minerals, machinery, equipment or materials that may be used for exploration of minerals. Thus, the word "any" referred to in the said section shows that the said word has been intentionally used to include any mineral, machinery, equipment or material that has been used in connection with an offence committed under the said Act.

Applicability of section 28

Further, section 63B(1) should be considered along with the other provisions of the said Act. Particularly, section 28(1) of the Act which prohibits inter alia the transportation of minerals without a licence. Accordingly, any person transporting minerals without a valid licence commits an offence under the Act. Thus, such a person is liable to be convicted under section 63(1) of the said Act.

Furthermore, as stated above, section 63B(1) has conferred power on the learned Magistrate to forfeit to the State any mineral, machinery, equipment or material used in or in connection with the commission of an offence under the Act. Moreover, as the transportation of minerals without a valid licence issued under the Act is an offence under the said Act, the equipment used to transport minerals falls within the scope of section 63B(1). In this regard, it is pertinent to note that any machinery, equipment or material used not only directly for exploration of mining but also anything that would facilitate mining and transportation are subject to the scope of the said section.

Thus, having considered the aforesaid dictionary meaning and the context where the word "equipment" is used in the Mines and Minerals Act, I am of the opinion that the word "equipment" used in the Act should be taken to include a 'vehicle' (lorry, tipper or even a bullock cart) used to transport minerals without a valid license issued under the said Act.

Therefore, I am of the view that the High Court did not err in law when it upheld the forfeiture of the said lorry, which was transporting gravel contrary to the provisions of the said Act, based on a conviction of a charge punishable under section 63B(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act as amended.

Further, the judgment delivered in Nishantha and 3 others v State (supra) has not considered section 63B(1) of the said Act, as amended in the above context. Furthermore, in the said judgment, the aforementioned amendments to the Principal Act were not considered in the context of sections 26, 28(1), 63(1), 63A and 63B of the Act and in the light of the object of enacting the Principal Act. As a result, the said interpretation defeats the object of the said amendments made to the Principal Act. Moreover, I am of the opinion that the interpretation given to the word "equipment" in the said judgment is repugnant to Article 27(14) of the Constitution. Thus, I am of the view that the said judgment is per in curium though it was cited by the appellants.

In light of the above, the following question of law should be answered as follows:

Did this Provincial High Court err in law when it upheld the confiscation/forfeiture of the said lorry based on a conviction of a charge punishable under section 63(1) of the Mines and Minerals Act No. 33 of 1992 neither which nor any amending act thereof had provided for the confiscation/forfeiture of a vehicle?

No

The appeal is dismissed. I order no costs.

ARGUED ON: 11.02.2020

DECIDED ON: 11.01.2023

E A G R Amarasekara, J.

The partition action relevant to this appeal was filed by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Plaintiff) in the District Court of Kuliyapitiya to partition the land called "Ambagahamulawatte" of A: 0 R: 1 P: 30 in extent which was more fully described in the scheduled to the plaint dated 12.03.2001. Admittedly, the original owner of the said land was one Nissanka Appuhamilage Don Daniel Nissanka who died leaving as his heirs, his daughter the 2nd Defendant-Respondent-Respondent, Khema Senehelatha Nissanka (hereinafter referred to as the 2nd Defendant) and his son, Sisira Siriwimal Nissanka. The original owner was the grandfather of the Plaintiff and the 3rd Defendant-Respondent-

Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 3rd Defendant). He was also the father-in-law of the 1st Defendant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the 1st Defendant). The Plaintiff is the daughter of the 1st Defendant and 1st Defendant was married to Sisira Siriwimal Nissanka, the son of the original owner who died leaving the 1st Defendant (his wife) and the Plaintiff (his daughter) as his heirs. The 3rd Defendant is the son of the 2nd Defendant. Upon the demise of the original owner a testamentary case was filed in the District Court of Kuliyapitiya and the 2nd Defendant has been appointed as the administrator. The above facts were not disputed. No dispute has arisen as to the identity of the corpus. Thus, under the normal course of events, with demise of the original owner, the property which belonged to the original owner should devolve on his daughter (2nd Defendant) and his son, Sisira Siriwimal Nissanka in equal shares, namely undivided ½ of the property to each of them, and with the demise of Sisira Siriwimal Nissanka his ½ share should devolve equally on the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant giving each of them ¼ share of the property. Since the 2nd Defendant has executed the deed of gift no.3085 dated 05.11.1999, 2nd Defendant's share should go to the 3rd Defendant subject to the life interest of the 2nd Defendant.

As against the position taken up by the Plaintiff which is compatible with the devolution of title described above, the 2nd and 3rd Defendants have claimed prescriptive title to the entire property described in the schedule to the plaint. The position taken up by the 2nd and 3rd Defendants is that there was an agreement between the children of the original owner, namely the 2nd Defendant and Sisira Siriwimal Nissanka. As per the agreement they say that the 2nd Defendant and her brother agreed;

a) to sell the property called "Mahamaligashena" which was at Puttalam to settle the debts of the original owner, especially the debts to the Agricultural and Industrial Credit Corporation of Ceylon and
b) after such sale, to give the rest of the property at Puttalam to Sisira Sriwimal Nissanka and to give the property in dispute to the 2nd Defendant to retain as her own.
c) the balance to be shared by the 2nd Defendant and her brother Sisira Siriwimal Nissanka.

The evidence led at the trial shows that other than the subject matter of the partition action related to this appeal and the land at Puttalam mentioned above, there had been another property called Veehena that belonged to the original owner which has been partitioned through an action filed in the district court of Marawila.

The decisions of the courts below indicate that the learned judges of those courts, namely the judge of the District Court of Kuliyapitiya and the learned High Court Judges of the Provincial High Court of Kurunegala hearing Civil Appeals, have come to the conclusion that exchange of property as described above has not been proved by the 2nd and 3rd Defendants. Thus, the District Court has decided to partition the land in dispute by refusing to accept the stance taken by the 2nd and 3rd Defendants and the said decision of the District Court has not been interfered with by the learned High Court Judges sitting in appeal over the said decision of the District Court.

Being aggrieved by the decision of the Provincial High Court of Kurunegala, the 2nd and 3rd Defendants have come before this court and leave has been granted on the questions of law mentioned in paragraph 26(a) and (f) of the petition dated 07.11.2014. The said questions of law are mentioned below;

> "a) Did the learned District Judge disregarded or ignore his own findings of facts in coming to his conclusion of law on the question of prescription of the 2nd and 3rd Defendants?
> f) Did the learned High Court make a serious error regarding the law of ouster when they held that the presumption of prescription would not arise in this case?"

It is true that the evidence led at the trial indicates that the 2nd and 3rd Defendants were in possession of the land in dispute after the death of the original owner for about 27 years. As per the pedigree which is not in dispute, the 2nd Defendant became a co-owner. In law the possession of a co-owner is the possession of the other co-owners. It is not possible for one co-owner to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster is needed to prove the commencement of an adverse possession against the other co-owners- Vide Corea V Appuhamy 15 NLR 65. Thus, it is necessary for a co-owner who comes to possess a land as a co-owner to prove how his possession became adverse to the possession of the other co-owners. In this regard, the co-owner who claims prescription must place evidence to prove the commencement of adverse possession by proving ouster or something equivalent to ouster or place evidence sufficient to presume that ouster has taken place 10 years prior to filing the action. If it is a very long possession that has commenced prior to the time that is within the knowledge of the available witnesses, and if the nature of the possession indicates that the relevant party has been in possession as sole owner, it is reasonable for a court to presume the existence of an adverse possession. However, in the case at hand, the 2nd Defendant became a co-owner after the death of her father, the original owner. Then if anything similar to ouster took place it has to be within her knowledge and, if she intends to claim prescriptive title to the co-owned land, she should prove ouster or circumstances similar to ouster. This is especially so, when one considers the family relationship between the parties and the fact that one party resided at Puttalam considerably away from the disputed land. Unless ouster or something similar to that is proved, such facts may encourage a court to presume that the possession is permissive or that the possession of the 2nd and 3rd Defendant is also the possession of the other co-owners who resided at Puttalam. As held in Sideris V Simon 46 NLR 273, in an action between co-owners the question whether a presumption of ouster may be made from long and undisturbed and uninterrupted possession is one of fact, which depends on the circumstances of each case. As per Abdul Majeed V Ummu Zaneera 61 NLR 361, among other things, the relationship of the co-owners and where they reside in relation to the situation of the property are relevant matters that should be considered in whether a presumption of ouster should be drawn or not. It is natural in our culture if co-owners reside in different places, one co-owner or few of them to enjoy the co-owned property till the co-ownership is terminated.

As mentioned above, the 2nd Defendant, after the death of her father, started possession as a co-owner and it should be within her knowledge if she started to possess adversely. Thus, she should be able to prove ouster or something similar to ouster if such an event took place. Coupled with that, the relationship between the parties and the distance of residence of the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant to the situation of the property in issue make it difficult to presume ouster or a commencement of an adverse possession merely because of the 2nd and 3rd Defendants are in possession for a period of 27 years or so.

Hence, I now consider whether the 2nd and 3rd Defendants were able to establish ouster or the commencement of adverse possession against the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant through the other evidence led before the trial judge. In this regard the 2nd Defendant and the 3rd

Defendant rely on the purported agreement mentioned above between Sisira Siriwimal Nissanka who was the father of the Plaintiff and the husband of the 1st Defendant. If such an agreement to exchange the balance of the Puttalam land with the land in issue was in existence, 2nd Defendant should have started adverse possession prior to the death of the said Sisira Siriwimal Nissanka. However, the evidence given by the 2nd Defendant on 26.02.2008 at pages 3 and 4 of the District Court proceedings (pages 159 and 160 of the brief) stands against the stance taken up by the 2nd Defendant. There she admits that after the death of her brother the ½ share of the land in question devolved upon his daughter and wife, namely the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant. If, she and her brother terminated the co-ownership by an agreement with her brother to exchange the properties after settling the loans of her father, the property in question cannot be a co-owned property to be inherited by the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant. She further admits in her evidence that there was no written agreement (See page 160 of the brief which is page 4 of the District Court proceedings of 26.02.2008). If there was no agreement attested by a Notary relating to exchange of land, it cannot be a valid agreement. On the other hand, if her position is that she commenced adverse possession after an oral agreement with her brother that cannot stand as she admits the title of the wife and the child of the brother after his death. While admitting title of another at a given time one cannot maintain that her/his possession was adverse to them at that time. Thus, her own evidence is contrary to the position that she commenced adverse possession following the agreement with her deceased brother to exchange lands of Puttalam and Kuliyapitiya.

The 2nd Defendant in her evidence has also stated that she and the heirs of Sisira Sriwimal Nissanka, namely the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant became the co-owners of the entirety of the land in Puttalam which was 100 acres in extent excluding the 2 acres acquired by the State (see pages 122 and 135 of the brief). Though, there was an agreement entered between heirs of the original owner and one Joseph M Perera to sell some land and settle the loans of their father, they could not sell property as agreed by the said agreement- vide pages 126, 135 to138 of the brief. Thereafter, she states that 50 acres were sold to settle the loans due from the estate of the deceased father and she and her brother became the heirs to the balance 50 acres - vide pages 138 and 139. She has further stated that after the death of her brother, his wife the 1st Defendant possessed the balance 50 acres at Puttalam and 1st Defendant has sold those 50 acres by two deeds and she did not take any steps against that even though she had lawful right to 25 acres since she had completely handed over the said property to her brother vide pages 138 to 144 of the brief. It must be noted that if she says that she had a lawful right to 25 acres of land in Puttalam after the death of her brother it is contrary to her original stand which was to indicate that her adverse possession commenced following an agreement with her deceased brother by exchanging properties at Puttalam and Kuliyapitiya. As mentioned earlier, such an agreement is not valid unless executed in writing before a notary. The above position taken up while giving evidence by the 2nd Defendant indicates that her purported adverse possession did not commence even based on an oral agreement when her brother was among the living by giving him balance 50 acres in Puttalam and she taking the possession of Kuliyapitiya land as her own. Her version indicated through evidence states that she became an owner of 25 acres of the land in Puttalam after the death of her brother but relinquished her rights to that property to own the property in Kuliyapituya as her own, owing to the agreement with her brother which is invalid before law in terms of section 2 of the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance. If she had commenced adverse possession after the heirs of her brother became co-owners based on an agreement that adverse possession has to be based on an agreement between her and the heirs of her brother. Otherwise, she has to prove some other overt act from which she commenced her adverse possession. There is no such agreement between her and the heirs of her brother produced before court. A party cannot commence adverse possession with a secret intention. Other than the purported agreement between the 2nd Defendant and her brother, no other overt act has been referred as the commencement of adverse possession.

On the other hand, the deed no.169 dated 18.08.77 executed by her to sell 50 acres of the land in Puttalam does not indicate that she sold it as the administrator of the estate of the father to settle the loans due from the estate of the deceased father. She has sold her rights as the owner of a divided 50 acres of the Puttalam land for a consideration of Rs.33000.00.

In the schedule of the said deed, boundary to the east has been described as the land belonging to the heirs of Sisira Siriwimal Nissanka which means the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant. As per the attestation, out of said consideration, Rs.24000.00 has been paid to her and only Rs.9000.00 has been retained by the vendee to pay the installment due to Agricultural and Industrial Credit Corporation loan. As per the evidence led at the trial, the estate of the deceased father of the 2nd Defendant had cash worth of Rs.12798.00 while there were liabilities of Rs 68,048/- as payment due to the State and Rs. 26250/- as payment due to Agricultural and industrial development Corporation- vide page 172 of the brief. Further, as per the evidence at pages 173 and 176 of the brief, on 10.06.1982, the 2nd Defendant had stated before the judge in the testamentary proceedings that she had already paid Rs.23126/- of the above mentioned Rs.26250/-. She has further undertaken to pay the balance without burdening the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant of the present action. As per the evidence at pages 174 and 175, it appears that the testamentary case is not yet concluded and devolution properties of the estate has not been yet tendered to the said court. Even the Attorney-at-Law and Notary public who attested the said deed has stated in evidence that he was not aware about any testamentary case pending- vide page 116 of the brief. Thus, it is clear, the 2nd Defendant sold the 50 acres not as the administrator but as the owner of a divided 50 acres of the land in Puttalam and paid only a portion of the loan by selling it.

Similarly, as per the evidence led at the trial, balance 50 acres of the land in Puttalam has been sold by the heirs of the said Sisira Sriwimal Nissanka- vide evidence at pages 104,105, 140,141,142,143 and 144 of the brief. Deed no.175 dated 26.04.1978 is the deed by which the 1st Defendant sold her rights in 25 acres in the land in Puttalam. As per the attestation, out of the consideration of Rs.18000/-, Rs.13153/- has been paid to the Agricultural and Industrial Corporation. Thus, it is clear that even the heirs of the brother of the 2nd Defendant took part in paying the loan of the estate of the deceased father of the 2nd Defendant. Further it appears that, when the 2nd Defendant stated to the District Court hearing the testamentary action that she has paid Rs.23126/- of the loan to the Agricultural and Industrial Corporation, the sum paid by the 1st Defendant is also included in that sum.

However, the evidence referred to above indicates that the 2nd Defendant and the heirs of her brother dealt with their entitlement in the Property in Puttalam separately and the 2nd Defendant treated her portion of land as a divided portion even when executing the deed of sale for her portion and she executed the said deed as the owner of the 50 acres and not as the administrator to sell part of the estate to settle a loan. It is also evinced that both parties have contributed to settle the loan to Agricultural and Industrial Corporation. The said evidence is not compatible with the position that the 2nd Defendant sold 50 acres to settle the loans of the deceased father and she gave her 25 acres that should come to her from the land in Puttalam in lieu of the land in Kuliyapitiya, the subject matter of the partition action related to this appeal. Thus, the 2nd Defendant's stance regarding such exchange of lands and selling of 50 acres from the estate to settle the loan is not reliable. The 3rd Defendant was not a party to such agreement if there was any, and he cannot speak to the truth of it and he in his evidence-in-chief itself has said that he knows nothing about the testamentary case.

On the other hand, as per the evidence referred to above, it appears still the testamentary action is not concluded. The 2nd Defendant is the administrator who holds responsibilities as a fiduciary towards all the heirs. As far as she remains the administrator of the estate of the deceased father, she has to manage the properties belonging to the estate of the deceased for the benefit of the heirs subject to her duties as the administrator. Thus, not only as a co-owner but also as a fiduciary she must prove ouster or something similar to that to claim prescriptive rights against other heirs to a property belonging to the estate of the deceased. As explained above she has failed in proving such ouster or commencement of adverse possession from some event similar to ouster.

The 2nd and 3rd Defendants in their written submissions have referred to certain answers given by the Plaintiff while giving evidence. At page 103 of the proceedings, when it was suggested to the Plaintiff that 2 acres of the land in Puttalam was acquired by the State and 50 acres of it were sold to settle the loans of her grandfather, she has answered admitting that, and learned District Judge has referred to that admission in his judgment-vide page 192 of the brief. At page 105 of the brief the Plaintiff has stated that after the death of her father the land was possessed by them after a division caused through the intervention of court. The learned District Judge has referred to this statement of the Plaintiff at page193 of the brief. For the following reasons, this court or a court below cannot rely on those answers.

- Even the father of the Plaintiff was a minor when the testamentary case was filed and the Plaintiff was only 2 years when her father died. Thus, she cannot give evidence with first-hand knowledge of such facts relating to any agreement to sell 50 acres to settle loans of her grandfather. She must have come to know about that from another source and such source is not before court to test the truth of it. On the other hand, as explained above the deeds executed by the 2nd Defendant and the 1st Defendant and the other evidence before this court do not support that there was such settlement but indicate that the parties have dealt separately with regard to their rights in the land in Puttalam. Moreover, both parties had paid the loan and it appears that it was the mother of the Plaintiff (1st Defendant) who contributed more towards paying the loan.

- If there was any decision to divide the properties among the parties through a court, it has to be in writing and no such decision, permission or direction is placed as evidence at the trial. No oral evidence of the Plaintiff who seems to have no personal knowledge can be accepted for what should have been in writing unless it is proved that primary evidence is destroyed or not available and the Plaintiff has first-hand knowledge of such decision, permission or direction.
- It is not uncommon in Sri Lanka that co-owners amicably possess different parts of the co-owned property for convenience without terminating their co-ownership. The Plaintiff through whatever the admissions or statements made as above has not admitted such division was with the intention of terminating the co-ownership to give exclusive ownership to separated parts of the estate of the deceased grandfather.

The 2nd and 3rd Defendants try to fault the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant for not calling the 1st Defendant to give evidence. There is no evidence to say that she was a party to or she witnessed the purported oral agreement between the 2nd Defendant and her brother. On the other hand, as elaborated above the evidence including the documentary evidence make the version of the 2nd and 3rd Defendants unacceptable. Moreover, the burden of proving prescriptive title is on the 2nd and 3rd Defendants who claim prescriptive title. Besides, the presumptions such as;

- A co-owner's possession is the possession of other co-owners,
- When a possession of a person may be referable to a lawful title, that person is presumed to possess by virtue of his/her lawful title,
- A person who has entered into possession of land in one capacity is presumed to continue to possess it in the same capacity, stands for the benefit of the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant. As such, the 2nd and 3rd Defendants should have proved ouster or something equivalent to ouster to prove the change of their status in relation to the subject matter of the partition action related to this appeal and to prove their adverse possession. As explained above, the 2nd and 3rd Defendants have not placed reliable and sufficient evidence to prove or presume ouster. Evidence led at the trial indicates that it is more probable that there had been an amicable partition of the land at Puttalam but not an exchange of lands between parties. Thus, I cannot find fault with the conclusions reached by the learned High Court Judges or the learned District Judge.

Hence, the questions of law quoted above have to be answered in the negative and in favour of the Plaintiff and the 1st Defendant.

Therefore, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

P Padman Surasena J:

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Plaintiffs) instituted action relevant to this case on 14.08.2013 in the District Court of Jaffna against the 1st Defendant-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 1st Defendant) and the 2nd Defendant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 2nd Defendant) seeking a declaration of title to the land described in the schedule to the plaint and the ejectment of the said Defendants from the said land.

As per the first journal entry of the District Court record, upon the Plaintiff filing the plaint along with summons, the learned District Judge had taken steps to issue summons on the Defendants returnable on 11.09.2013. Thereafter, the learned District Judge had taken further steps on several dates when the case was called in Court. This was with a view of having the summons served on the Defendants. As the 1st Defendant had not responded to summons, the learned District Judge on 20.11.2013 had fixed the case for ex parte trial against the 1st Defendant.

Upon the Fiscal of the District Court reporting his failure to serve summons on the 2nd Defendant on multiple occasions, the learned District Judge had ordered summons to be served on the 2nd Defendant by way of substituted service. i.e., by pasting the summons on the door of the house where the 2nd Defendant had last resided. Consequent to the above order, the Fiscal had reported on 05.02.2014, that the summons had been served on the 2nd Defendant by way of substituted service. It is also to be noted that on the same day, i.e., on 05.02.2014, an Attorney-at-Law also had appeared on behalf of the 2nd Defendant in Court (Journal Entry No. 5) and the Court had ordered the case to be called in Court on 12.02.2014. When the case was called on 12.02.2014, neither the 2nd Defendant nor her agent had appeared in Court. The learned District Judge had then fixed the case for ex parte trial against the 2nd Defendant as well.

Accordingly, the ex parte trial against both Defendants commenced, concluded and the ex parte decree was entered on 26.02.2014. Thereafter, the ex parte decree was served on the 1st Defendant on 22.05.2014 and on the 2nd Defendant by way of substituted service on 07.05.2014. Upon the ex parte decree being served on the Defendants, the 1st Defendant on 28.04.2014, had filed proxy, petition and affidavit, seeking to purge his default and prayed inter alia that the ex parte decree be vacated. This was sought to be done under Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Subsequent to the filing of the above application, when the Court took up the matter for inquiry, the Plaintiffs had raised a preliminary objection to the maintainability of the said application on the basis that the said application was time barred. Thereafter, the parties had filed written submissions on the afore-mentioned preliminary objection. It was thereafter that the learned District judge, by his order dated 19.11.2014, had upheld the afore-stated preliminary objection raised by the Plaintiffs and proceeded to dismiss the afore-stated application of the 1st Defendant. The dismissal of the application of the 1st Defendant by the learned District Judge was on the basis that he is obliged to strictly calculate the 14 days set out in Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. The learned District Judge had adopted this course of action based on the case of The Ceylon Brewery Limited vs Jax Fernando, Proprietor, Maradana Wine Stores.[1] The learned District Judge upon that conclusion had proceeded to hold that the District Court had no jurisdiction to inquire into the application of the 1st Defendant as he had not complied with the provisions in Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Being aggrieved by the above decision of the District Court, the 1st Defendant appealed to the Provincial Appellate High Court of the Northern Province praying inter alia that the said order dated 19.11.2014 of the District Court be set aside.

Accordingly, the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals after the argument of the said appeal, by its judgment dated 27.01.2016 had decided in favour of the 1st Defendant. Accordingly, the Provincial High Court of Civil appeal had set aside the order of the District Court dated 19.11.2014 which upheld the preliminary objection raised by the Plaintiffs and dismissed the application of the 1st Defendant made under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. It had also set aside the ex parte decree. The decision of the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court was on the basis that section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code does not specify a limitation on the computation of the 14-day period and therefore when calculating the said 14 days, one must exclude Sundays and public holidays as per section 754(4) of the Civil Procedure Code which applies for similar computations of time. It was on that basis that the Provincial High Court had proceeded to conclude that the application made by the 1st Defendant under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code was not time barred. Accordingly, the Provincial High Court had taken the view that the District Court had the jurisdiction to consider the application of the 1st Defendant made under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Being aggrieved by the afore-stated judgment of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeal, the Plaintiffs sought Leave to Appeal from this Court. After hearing counsel for both parties, this Court by its order dated 30.05.2017 had granted Leave to Appeal on the following questions of law.

(a) Have Their Lordships of the Provincial Civil Appellate High Court of the Northern Province (Holden in Jaffna) erred in law when they failed to appreciate that the 1st Defendant-Appellant-Respondent has not filed a valid and proper application within the time limit in terms of Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code?

(b) Have Their Lordships of the Provincial Civil Appellate High Court of the Northern Province (Holden in Jaffna) erred in law when they failed to appreciate that Sundays and Public Holidays are not to be excluded in calculating the period under Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code?

(c) Have Their Lordships of the Provincial Civil Appellate High Court of the Northern Province (Holden in Jaffna) erred in law when they failed to appreciate that the provision of [section] 754 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application to the period specified in Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code in calculating the period?

(d) Have Their Lordships of the Provincial Civil Appellate High Court of the Northern Province (Holden in Jaffna) erred in law when they failed to follow the judgment of the Supreme Court in The Ceylon Brewery Limited Vs. Jax Fernando 2001 (1) SLR 270?

(e) Have Their Lordships of the Provincial Civil Appellate High Court of the Northern Province (Holden in Jaffna) erred in law when they failed to give due consideration to the Written Submissions filed by the Plaintiffs-Respondents-Petitioners in the Provincial Civil Appellate High Court of the Northern Province (Holden in Jaffna) wherein specific reference was made to the said judgment reported in 2001 (1) SLR 270?

A closer look at the above questions of law shows clearly that the central question that this Court must resolve in the instant appeal is as to how a judge should calculate the period of 14 days stipulated in section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. For convenience of further discussion on this point, I would reproduce below, section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code which reads as follows:

> "Where, within fourteen days of the service of the decree entered against him for default, the defendant with notice to the plaintiff makes application to and thereafter satisfies Court, that he had reasonable grounds for such default, the Court shall set aside the judgment and decree and permit the defendant to proceed with his defence as from the stage of default upon such terms as to cost or otherwise as to the Court shall appear proper"

At the outset let me refer to the case of The Ceylon Brewery Limited vs Jax Fernando, Proprietor, Maradana Wine Stores,[2] in which the Supreme Court was called upon to consider exactly the same issue. In the afore-mentioned Ceylon Brewery's case, the defendant had been served with the ex parte decree on 03.02.1997 and the application under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the same had been filed on 18.02.1997. This meant that the application under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code had been filed on the 15th day (late by one day on strict calculation of number of days within that period). Thus, the question before the Supreme Court in Ceylon Brewery's case was whether the period of 14-days provided in section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code for filing an application to purge the default and set aside an ex parte decree, must be strictly complied with. When deciding the afore-mentioned question, the Supreme Court, in that case, also addressed the question as to how the said 14-days under section 86(2) should be calculated. Indeed, that was the main issue, this Court had to address in that case, the facts of which I will briefly set out below.[3]

The learned Additional District Judge in the case of Ceylon Brewery had vacated the ex parte judgment and decree granted against the defendants in that case (due to their default in filing an answer) and had then proceeded to permit the said defendants to file an answer. This was despite the fact that the application under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code was filed in that case after the lapse of 14 days. This was done by the learned Additional District Judge in that case by excluding Sundays and public holidays when calculating the period of 14-days. The Plaintiff in that case had challenged the said decision of the learned Additional District Judge in the Court of Appeal.

The Court of Appeal in the Ceylon Brewery's case having dealt with several questions, had held that the learned Additional District Judge could not have lawfully excluded Sundays and public holidays when calculating the 14-days set out in section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. In arriving at this conclusion, the Court of Appeal examined the provisions of law in sections 754(4) and 757(1) of the Civil Procedure Code which also contain identical time-limit (14-day period), but had expressly excluded Sundays and public holidays (unlike section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code). The Court of Appeal then proceeded to hold that Sundays and public holidays should not be excluded when calculating the said period of 14 days referred to in section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code.

[2] Supra.
[3] The facts of the Ceylon Brewery's case has been more fully set out in its Court of Appeal judgment which is reported in (1998) 3 Sri. L. R. 61.

However, the Court of Appeal in the Ceylon Brewery's case held that the requirement of 14-days in section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code for an application to set aside a default decree was merely directory and not mandatory. It was on that basis that the Court of Appeal proceeded in its judgment to affirm the learned Additional District Judge's order allowing the defendants in that case to file an answer and proceed with an inter-parte trial despite the application under section 86(2) having been delayed by one day than the stipulated 14-day period.

Being aggrieved by the afore-stated judgment of the Court of Appeal, the Plaintiffs of the Ceylon Brewery's Case appealed to the Supreme Court. Thus, the Supreme Court in that case was called upon to consider the question whether or not the requirement under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code to make such an application within 14 days is merely directory as held by the Court of Appeal. Having considered the said question, Justice Mark Fernando in that case stated as follows:

> "We are of the view that Section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code is the provision which confers jurisdiction on the District Court to set aside a default decree. That jurisdiction depends on two conditions being satisfied. One condition is that the application should be made within 14 days of the service of the default decree on the defendant."
> It is settled law that provisions which go to the jurisdiction must be strictly complied with. See Sri Lanka General Workers Union vs Samaranayake.[4]

Having stated so, Justice Mark Fernando in the above case, set aside both the judgment of the Court of Appeal and the order of the District Court and affirmed the ex parte decree previously entered by the Additional District Judge.

In arriving at the decision that section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code is mandatory and requires strict compliance, Justice Mark Fernando proceeded to hold as follows:

> "The learned District Judge entertained the application to set aside the default decree after the period of 14 days had expired, on the ground that intervening holidays had to be excluded. The Court of Appeal held, correctly, that the learned District Judge was in error, because intervening holidays cannot be excluded in computing a period exceeding six days."

Justice Mark Fernando decided the Ceylon Brewery's case in the year 1999. Then again in SC Appeal No. 153/2014 decided on 10.06.2016, Justice Anil Gooneratne also reiterated the view that the compliance of the requirement under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code is mandatory as it has been the intention of the Legislature to stipulate strictly the 14-day time limit to enable the District Court to assume jurisdiction to inquire into such applications. This Court has been consistent in taking that view. Justice Anil Gooneratne in SC Appeal No. 153/2014, followed the afore-mentioned dicta of Justice Mark Fernando in Ceylon Brewery's case.

I observe that the learned Judge of the Civil Appeal High Court in his judgment has made a reference to the Plaintiff's written submissions[5] and that the said written submissions had contained a specific reference to the judgement of the Ceylon Brewery's Case reported in 2001 (1) SLR 270. However, unfortunately, the learned Judge of the Civil Appeal High Court had failed to give due recognition and apply the said ratio decidendi when he decided the instant case.

Although the above analysis would sufficiently dispose of the instant case, for the sake of completeness, let me set out below the applicability of section 8(1) of the Interpretation Ordinance in respect of calculating the 14-day period referred to in section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code. In doing so, I would first reproduce below, section 8(1) of the Interpretation Ordinance:

> "Where a limited time from any date or from the happening of any event is appointed or allowed by any written law for the doing of any act or the taking of any proceeding in a court or office, and the last day of the limited time is a > day on which the court or office is closed, then the act or proceeding shall be considered as done or taken in due time if it is done or taken on the next day thereafter on which the court or office is open."

The Supreme Court dealt with the question whether section 8(1) of the Interpretation Ordinance would be applicable for the calculation of 14-day period referred to in section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code in the case of Flexport (Pvt) Limited & two others vs. Commercial Bank of Ceylon Limited.[6] In that Case, Priyasath Dep PC J[7] holding that that section 8(1) of the Interpretation Ordinance is applicable when making an application to purge the default under section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code stated as follows:

> "I am inclined to follow the Supreme Court judgments in State Trading Corporation V. Dharmadasa,[8] Nirmala de Mel V. Seneviratne and others,[9] Selenchina v. Mohomad Marikkar,[10] which held that if the last date of filing falls on a public holiday or on a day the court house was closed, the act of filing of papers could be done or taken on the next date thereafter, the day the court or office is open. I hold that section 8(1) of the Interpretation Ordinance applies to section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code"

In the instant case, the ex parte decree was served on the 1st Defendant on 22.05.2014.[11] The 1st Defendant had made the application to set aside the said ex parte decree on 09.06.2014. The 14-day period as per section 86(2) of the Civil Procedure Code did not fall on a public holiday. Accordingly, the application of section 8(1) of the Interpretation Ordinance would not arise in the instant case. Therefore, I would not endeavour to engage in any further discussion on that aspect than what has already been mentioned above.

For the foregoing reasons, I answer all the above questions of law in respect of which this Court has granted Leave to Appeal in the affirmative. I proceed to set aside the

This appeal arises from a judgment delivered by the Provincial High Court of the Southern Province holden in Galle [the High Court] on 17th March 2014, by which the High Court upheld the judgment of the District Court of Galle [the District Court] dated 22nd February 2006 dismissing the plaint. Aggrieved by the said judgment, the Plaintiff – Appellant – Appellant [the Plaintiff] filed a petition of appeal before this Court on 4th April 2014 seeking leave to appeal from the said judgment. On 28th January 2015, leave to appeal was granted on the questions of law set out in paragraph 14(b) – (m) of the said petition and one question of law raised on behalf of the Defendant – Respondent – Respondent [the Defendant].

Facts in brief

The Plaintiff's father, the late Justin De Silva Warnakulasuriya Goonewardena was the owner of two agricultural lands in Galle. One was Manomani Estate in extent of 145 acres and part of which is the subject matter of this appeal. The other was Upper Langsland Estate in extent of 317 acres.

The following matters were recorded as admissions at the commencement of the District Court trial on 24th January 1992:

a) The Plaintiff's father had mortgaged Manomani Estate by way of Mortgage Bond No. 3514 executed on 1st February 1948 to Sumanawathie Weerapperuma and Don Frederick Subasinghe [the mortgagees] as a security for a loan given by the mortgagees;

b) Upon the Plaintiff's father defaulting on the payment of the moneys borrowed, the mortgagees had filed Case No. MB 1218 in the District Court of Galle against the Plaintiff's father [the MB action]. After trial, judgment had been entered in favour of the mortgagees on 25th October 1963 and decree had accordingly been entered on 18th December 1963;

c) The appeal preferred against the said judgment of the District Court by the Plaintiff's father had been dismissed by this Court on 5th July 1974;

d) The Plaintiff's father [mortgagor] had objected to the mortgagees' application for the enforcement of the decree but the said objection had been overruled by the District Court by its Order delivered on 22nd November 1983;

e) On 24th November 1983, the said decree had been executed and Manomani Estate which was the subject matter of the MB action, had been sold by public auction, with it being purchased by the mortgagees. Manomani Estate had accordingly been transferred to the mortgagees by a Fiscal conveyance on 27th June 1984 by Deed of Transfer No. 1339 and on the same day, the mortgagees had transferred the same to the Defendant by Deed of Transfer No. 1341.

Although it had been admitted that Manomani Estate had been transferred in its entirety to the Defendant, the evidence led at the trial was that pursuant to the sale, the mortgagees had sub-divided the land into several lots and what had been transferred to the Defendant was only a part thereof, as described in the schedule to Deed No. 1341. Be that as it may, on the face of it, with the execution of the decree and the Fiscal's conveyance as aforesaid, neither the Plaintiff nor her father could have claimed any ownership to Manomani Estate or any part thereof.

The Land Reform Law

I say on the face of it for the reason that the primary issue that needs to be determined in this appeal is whether the Plaintiff has title to that part of Manomani Estate referred to in the schedule to the plaint, in spite of the execution of the decree in the MB action and the Fiscal's conveyance. This issue arose due to the fact that while the appeal from the District Court in the MB action was pending, the Land Reform Law No. 1 of 1972 was introduced, and as a result of the application of certain provisions of the said Law and steps taken in terms of the said Law, an extent of 25 acres from Manomani Estate was gifted to the Plaintiff by her father in 1980, thus conferring the Plaintiff title in respect of such portion of Manomani Estate.

The Land Reform Law [the Law] is the first law enacted under the First Republican Constitution of 1972 by the National State Assembly, and came into operation on 26th August 1972. In its long title, the said Law was stated to be, "A Law to establish a Land Reform Commission, to fix a ceiling on the extent of agricultural land that may be owned by persons, to provide for the vesting of lands owned in excess of such ceiling in the Land Reform Commission, and for such land to be held by the former owners on a statutory lease from the Commission, to prescribe the purposes and the manner of disposition by the Commission of agricultural lands vested in the Commission so as to increase productivity and employment, to provide for the payment of compensation to persons deprived of their lands under this Law and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto."

Section 2 of the said Law provides that the objects of the Land Reform Commission [the Commission] was inter alia to ensure that no person shall own agricultural land in excess of the ceiling set out in Section 3(1), which Section reads as follows:

> "On and after the date of commencement of this Law the maximum extent of agricultural land which may be owned by any person*, in this Law referred to as the "ceiling", shall:*
>
> (a) if such land consists exclusively of paddy land, be twenty-five acres; or
>
> (b) if such land does not consist exclusively of paddy land, be fifty acres, so however that the total extent of any paddy land, if any, comprised in such fifty acres shall not exceed the ceiling on paddy land specified in paragraph (a)." [emphasis added]

Section 3(2) provides further as follows:

> "Any agricultural land owned by any person in excess of the ceiling on the date of commencement of this Law shall as from that date –
>
> (a) be deemed to vest in the Commission; and

(b) be deemed to be held by such person under a statutory lease from the Commission." [emphasis added]

In terms of Section 6 of the Law, "Where any agricultural land is vested in the Commission under this Law, such vesting shall have the effect of giving the Commission absolute title to such land as from the date of such vesting*, and* free from all encumbrances." [emphasis added]

Determination of the land that is to vest in the Commission

The cumulative effect of Sections 3 and 6 is that from the date of commencement of the Law, the maximum extent of agricultural land that could be owned by an individual is 50 acres with any land in excess of this ceiling being deemed vested in the Commission. The exact land area amounting to 50 acres of agricultural land that a person is permitted to own and in turn, the exact metes and bounds of the remaining agricultural land that was deemed to vest in the Commission was to be determined in terms of the Law. In other words, although in terms of Section 3(2), all agricultural lands owned by an individual over and above the ceiling were deemed to vest in the Commission, until the procedure stipulated in the Law for determining the exact land area forming the 50 acres that a person was entitled to elect to keep for himself was completed, it was not possible to determine exactly which land portion overshot the 50 acre ceiling and had therefore vested in the Commission.

The legal fiction of introducing a deemed concept in Section 3 was to ensure that (a) any person who owned more land than the 50 acre ceiling could not alienate such agricultural land pending a determination in terms of the Law of the precise land that was to be retained by such person, and (b) until such time, the entire land was deemed to vest in the Commission.

The concept of 'deemed vested' was considered by a bench of five Judges of this Court in Jinawathie and Others v Emalin Perera [(1986) 2 Sri LR 121] where Parinda Ranasinghe, J [as he then was] stated as follows:

"A careful consideration of the provisions of the Land Reform Law … , in their proper sequence shows that, with the coming into operation of the said provisions, on 26.8.1972, the entirety of the agricultural land owned by a person, who is entitled to more than fifty acres, has to be deemed to vest immediately in the Commission; that what is so deemed to vest, vests absolutely free from all encumbrances; that thenceforth the person who owned such land is deemed to be a statutory lessee of the Commission upon the terms and conditions set out; … " [page 126]

"As has been set out above, where an agricultural land becomes subject to the provisions of this Law in consequence of its owner being one who is entitled to land over and above the ceiling, such agricultural land is "deemed" to vest in the Commission, and its owner is "deemed" to be a statutory lessee of such land. It is, therefore, necessary to examine the nature and scope, in law, of such a deeming provision as section 3(2) of this Law. In statutes the expression "deemed" is commonly used for the purpose of creating a statutory function so that the meaning of a term is extended to a subject matter which it properly does not designate. Thus where a person is "deemed to be something" it only means that whereas he is not in reality that something the Act of Parliament requires him to be treated as if he were. When a thing is deemed to be something, it does not mean that it is that which it is deemed to be, but it is rather an admission that it is not what it is deemed to be, and that notwithstanding it is not that particular thing it is nevertheless deemed to be that thing. Where a statute declares that a person or thing shall be deemed to be or shall be treated as something which in reality it is not, it shall have to be treated as so during the entire course of the proceeding-vide Bindra: Interpretation of Statutes (6th Ed.) pp. 912-914." [page 130]

Keeping in mind one of the questions of law that needs to be determined in this appeal, I should perhaps mention at this stage that the Law further provided for any person who became a statutory lessee to make an application in terms of Section 14 seeking the return to such statutory lessee [i.e., to the owner], agricultural land that was over and above the ceiling stipulated in Section 3(1) in order that the said land be transferred to such persons children who were over eighteen years of age or such persons parents.

Therefore, (a) until the exact 50 acre parcel of agricultural land that a person could retain was determined in terms of the Law, and (b) where an application had been made in terms of Section 14, until the process stipulated thereunder was completed, it was not possible to say which exact portion of the excess agricultural land held by an individual would in fact vest in the Commission, despite the law providing that all lands in excess of the ceiling were deemed to vest in the Commission from the date of commencement of the said Law.

The role of the statutory lessee

In terms of Sections 15 of the Law, while the land remained vested with the Commission pending the above, the owner of the land, who in terms of the Law had transformed into the role of a statutory lessee, was responsible for the management of the agricultural land once owned by him. The so created statutory lease was to continue for one year from the date of vesting, with provision for the extension of such period for a further one year at the discretion of the Commission. However, no such statutory lease could be continued for any further period by the Commission, except with the express approval of the Minister.

Thus, in terms of the Law, until such time a determination was made with regard to the 50 acres of agricultural land that a person could retain and the exclusion of any land that an owner would be allowed to transfer to children or parents pursuant to an application under Section 14, the agricultural land belonging to an individual to whom Section 3 applied, was deemed vested with the Commission. Furthermore, until such time a suitable entity was identified to manage the said lands, which period was limited to two years, the management was to remain with the individual or company that owned such land, on the basis of a statutory lease. The role of the Commission was that of a repository of lands that were deemed vested in the Commission in terms of the Law from the date of commencement of the Law until inter alia the land was returned to the owner or suitable persons were identified to manage the said lands or the lands were alienated or otherwise allocated in accordance with the Law.

I shall now consider three important provisions of the Law which are directly referable to the questions of law to be determined in this appeal, namely (a) the requirement for an owner of agricultural land above the ceiling to submit a "statutory declaration", (b) the option available to such an owner to seek land over and above the ceiling for children over the age of eighteen, and (c) the "statutory determination" that is made by the Commission pursuant to the submission of the said statutory declaration.

The statutory declaration

The mechanism to decide which 50 acres of agricultural land a person who owned more than the ceiling was entitled to retain, has been set out in Section 18(1), which reads as follows:

> "The Commission may, by Order published in the Gazette and in such other form as it may deem desirable to give publicity to such Order, direct that every person who becomes the statutory lessee of any agricultural land shall, within a month from the date of the publication of the Order, or of becoming a statutory lessee under this Law make a declaration*, in this Law referred to as a " statutory declaration ", in the prescribed form of the total extent of the agricultural land so held by him on such lease*."

While Section 18(2) stipulates the matters that a declaration under Section 18(1) shall contain, in terms of paragraph (f) thereof, the statutory lessee was required to "specify the preference or preferences, if any, of the declarant as to the particular portion or portions of each such land which he should be allowed to retain." Thus began the process of identifying the land that was to ultimately vest in the Commission, once all exemptions and permitted transfers under the Law had been entertained.

It is admitted that the Plaintiff's father made two statutory declarations on 20th November 1972 in which he declared Manomani Estate and Upper Langsland Estate as being agricultural lands owned by him. In the said declarations, the Plaintiff's father had declared that, (a) he wishes to retain as his entitlement in terms of the Law, land from the Upper Langsland Estate, and (b) there existed a mortgage in respect of Manomani Estate which was subject to the MB action. He had however failed to mention that decree had already been entered in the MB action.

Section 14 of the Law

It is admitted that the Plaintiff was one of several children of Justin De Silva Warnakulasuriya Goonewardena.

Section 14(1) provides that, "Any person who becomes a statutory lessee of any agricultural land under this Law may within three months from such date make an application to the Commission in the prescribed form for the transfer by way of sale, gift, exchange or otherwise of the entirety or portion of such agricultural land to any child who is eighteen years of age or over or to a parent of such person." [emphasis added]

Acting in terms of the above Section, the Plaintiff's father had made an application that he be permitted to transfer out of the two Estates, 50 acres per child to each of his children who by then were all between the ages of 19 and 32.

In terms of Section 14(2), "The Commission may by order made under its hand grant or refuse to grant approval for such transfer*. Such order shall be made within one year of the date of application under subsection (1). Every such order shall be sent by registered post to the applicant under subsection (1). Any such applicant aggrieved by the order may appeal to the Minister within three weeks of the receipt of such order. The receipt of the order shall be deemed to be effected at the time at which letters would be delivered in the ordinary course of post*." [emphasis added]

Although the said application had initially been rejected, pursuant to an appeal to the Minister, the Commission, by its letter dated 31st December 1973 had informed the Plaintiff's father that approval had been granted to transfer 25 acres each, to each of his children. This included two 25 acre lots from Manomani Estate, which by then formed part of the subject matter of the decree issued in the MB action, but which fact (i.e., of the decree) had not been disclosed to the Commission. It must perhaps be noted that in terms of Section 18(5), making a declaration knowing such declaration to be false is an offence and the Commission was empowered to forfeit the compensation payable under the Law.

The formal Order of the Commission granting its approval was conveyed to the Plaintiff's father by letter dated 10th June 1974. The said Order contained the steps to be followed by the Plaintiff's father in transferring the land to the Plaintiff and her sister, including the requirement to have a survey plan prepared and to submit to the Commission a copy of the deed of transfer upon its execution.

In terms of Section 14(3), "Any transfer effected in accordance with the provisions of an order made under subsection (2) or such order as amended, varied or modified on appeal shall have the effect of transferring right, title or interest in property so transferred free of the statutory lease." [emphasis added]

Thus, once the approval of the Commission was received, the transfer was to be effected by the applicant in favour of his or her child, and not by the Commission. In the process, the applicant ceased to be a statutory lessee of such land that was to be transferred. Accordingly, by Deed of Transfer No. 2085 dated 16th August 1980 executed by the Plaintiff's father, 25 acres each from Manomani Estate were transferred to the Plaintiff and her sister. This is borne out by the contents of the said Deed which clearly state that the Plaintiff is receiving the title of her father.

While I shall elaborate later on in this judgment, I must state at this point that:

(a) it is not the Commission that transferred the impugned land to the Plaintiff but her own father; and

(b) what was transferred to the Plaintiff was the title that the Plaintiff's father had in the said land at the time the Law came into force, and therefore free of the statutory lease to which the Plaintiff's father's rights over the land had been reduced to in terms of Section 3 of the Law.

Thus, although the Plaintiff's father was only entitled to 50 acres in terms of the Law, the Commission had granted him approval to transfer a further 175 acres to his children, obviously not as a statutory lessee but as the owner who was capable of such dispositions. The Plaintiff thus acquired title over that part of Manomani Estate referred to in Deed No. 2085, and morefully set out in the schedule to the plaint, subject to the encumbrances that existed over her father's title to the said land.

Statutory Determination

It is only thereafter that the Commission, acting in terms of Section 19 of the Law, published its Statutory Determination in Extraordinary Gazette No. 196/2 dated 29th December 1975 declaring that the Plaintiff's father is allowed to retain 50 acres of land from Upper Langsland Estate.

The effect of a statutory determination is set out in Section 20 in the following manner:

> "Every statutory determination published in the Gazette under section 19 shall come into operation on the date of such publication and the Commission shall have no right, title or interest in the agricultural land specified in the statutory determination from the date of such publication." [emphasis added]

In Jinawathie and Others v Emalin Perera [supra; at page 139] this Court had held that:

> "P6 the statutory determination in this case states, as set out earlier, that the plaintiff-respondent "shall be allowed to retain" the said extent of land referred to in the schedule to P6, and also fully described in the schedule to the plaint in this case. The effect of such a statutory determination, upon its publication in the Gazette, is set out in this Law itself, in Section 20. All that is stated therein is that "the Commission shall have no right, title or interest in the agricultural land specified in the statutory determination from the date of such publication". It is merely a renunciation of all interests on the part of the Commission. There is, in P6, no express vesting or conferment of title in the plaintiff*-respondent, who is referred to in P6 as the statutory lessee, in respect of the Land referred to in P6 and described in P6 as "the portion of agricultural land owned" by the statutory lessee and which she shall be allowed to retain.*

What then is the effect, in law, of the plaintiff-respondent being "allowed to retain" the land described in the schedule to P6-which is also, as set out already, the land more fully described in the schedule to the plaint-and further referred to as a portion of agricultural land "owned" by the statutory lessee? The order embodied in P6 is made as the final act in the process of "ensuring that no person (plaintiff-respondent) shall own agricultural land in excess of the ceiling (50 acres)" – vide Section 2(a)." [emphasis added]

It was further stated [at page 141] that:

"… the person, in whose favour a statutory determination … is made, would, upon the making of such a determination, become possessed of those attributes – viz: the right to possess, to take the income, and to deal with it in any way, including alienation and even destruction, so long as it is not illegal, which are, in law, the essence of ownership."

It must be emphasised that by the time the aforesaid Deed No. 2085 was executed, the appeal in the MB action had been dismissed by this Court, but this fact had not been disclosed to the Commission. Accordingly, the said inter-family transfer pertained to a portion of a land which, in terms of Section 2 of the Mortgage Act No. 6 of 1949, was bound by an order of Court and liable to judicial sale to enforce payment due upon the mortgage. Be that as it may, the decree in the MB action was executed and Manomani Estate was sold at a public auction in November 1983, with it being purchased by the mortgagees themselves, who in turn sold part of the said land to the Defendant, with Deed of Transfer No. 1341 being executed in June 1984.

Action in the District Court

Thus, by June 1984, the Plaintiff had a deed in her favour in respect of 25 acres of Manomani Estate, namely Deed No. 2085 executed in 1980 in terms of the Law, while the Defendant too held Deed No. 1341 in respect of a part of Manomani Estate pursuant to a Fiscal's conveyance executed in 1984. Having purchased part of Manomani Estate, the Defendant had soon thereafter taken possession of the land she had purchased.

It is in this background that by plaint dated 13th June 1985, the Plaintiff instituted a rei vindicatio action against the Defendant in respect of the 25 acres transferred to her by her father, relying on Deed No. 2085 to establish her title. The Plaintiff had pleaded in the alternative that she has acquired prescriptive title to the said land. In terms of the amended plaint filed on 5th May 1991, the Plaintiff had sought a declaration of title to Lot 'R' in Plan No. 148 which is the portion of land purchased by the Defendant and for an order ejecting the Defendant from the said land.

Answer having been filed, the matter proceeded to trial on 24th January 1992. While I have already referred to the admissions, the issues raised by the parties are set out below.

Issues proposed by the Plaintiff:

(1) පැමිණිලි පතුයේ සඳහන් පරිදි ඩී.ජේ.එස්. වර්ණකුලසුරිය ගුණවර්ධනට හිමිව තිබූ මනෝමනී වත්ත නැමැති අක්කර 145 කින් යුත් මෙම නඩුවට අදාල වන 1 වෙනි සහ 2 වෙනි උපලේඛනයෙහි සඳහන් ඉඩම් ඇතුලුව එම අක්කර 145 මගින් 1972 අංක 1 දරණ ඉඩම් ප්‍රතිසංස්කරණ පනත යටතේ ඉඩම් ප්‍රතිසංස්කරණ සභාවට සියළුම බැදීම් වලින් තොරව හිමිවිද?

Order on Issue Nos. 11–15

The parties had thereafter moved that Issue Nos. 11–15 be determined as preliminary issues of law. The order on the said issues had been delivered on 15th December 1992, with the District Court answering the said issues in the affirmative. In essence, the District Court had held that, (a) the mortgage subsists until the decree is executed; (b) a decree is an encumbrance for the purposes of the Law; and (c) Section 27B of the Law applies with retrospective effect.

Aggrieved by the said judgment, the Plaintiff had filed an appeal in the Court of Appeal [CA Case No. 57/1993], By its judgment delivered on 16th July 1993, the Court of Appeal had held as follows:

> "This is an application for leave to appeal notwithstanding lapse of time from the order dated 15.12.92. By that order learned District Judge answered preliminary legal issues 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 in favour of the Defendant. These issues relate to the vesting of the land in the Land Reform Commission and the operation of the amendment to the Land Reform Commission Law done by Act No. 39 of 1981. The trial has to now proceed in the District Court with regard to the issues of fact on the competing claims based upon prescription. We are of the view that the order of the learned District Judge on the preliminary issues may be canvassed in the final appeal in the event of a final appeal being filed by the Plaintiff. The application is dismissed subject to the foregoing reservation."

Further trial

Further trial before the District Court proceeded on Issue Nos. 1 – 10, with an officer from the Tea Control Department, an officer from the Commission and the Plaintiff's brother giving evidence on behalf of the Plaintiff while the Defendant gave evidence on her own behalf. During the trial, each party had raised a further issue on prescription. By its judgment delivered on 22nd February 2006, the District Court answered Issue Nos. 1-10 against the Plaintiff and dismissed the action. The appeal that was filed by the Plaintiff against the said judgment of the District Court too had been dismissed by the High Court, resulting in this appeal.

I must perhaps mention that the sister of the Plaintiff who received 25 acres of land from Manomani Estate under the same circumstances as the Plaintiff instituted Case No. 10911/L in the District Court of Galle against another person who had purchased land from the mortgagees following the Fiscal's conveyance. That case was decided in favour of the sister of the Plaintiff. The appeal preferred to the High Court had been dismissed and this Court had refused leave to appeal against the said judgment of the High Court.

Questions of Law

This Court has granted leave to appeal on thirteen questions of law, with the first twelve being raised by the Plaintiff, and the thirteenth by the Defendant. The said questions of law are reproduced below:

(1) The learned Judges of the High Court erred by not taking into consideration the decisions of the High Court made in SP/HCCA/GA/09/2001 marked A1 and the Supreme Court made in SC/HCCA/LA 546/2011 marked A2;

(2) The learned Judges of the High Court erred by holding that the Defendant obtained title to the property in suit (by Deed 1341 dated 27th June 1984) prior to the Plaintiff whose deed No. 2085 is dated 16th August 1980;

(3) The learned Judges of the High Court erred by holding that the Defendant's title based on Deed 1341 dated 27th June 1984 is valid;

(4) The learned High Court Judges failed to consider that the decree dated 18th December 1963, being only a decree entered in a hypothecary action "for the payment of money due upon the mortgage and to enforce such payment by a judicial sale of the mortgage property," did not pass title to the judgment creditor upon such decree being entered and therefore the Defendant did not derive title prior to the Plaintiff;

(5) The learned High Court Judges failed to consider that when the property was vested in the Land Reform Commission in 1972 i.e., prior to the Fiscal sale in MB/1218, the same vested in the Land Reform Commission free from all encumbrances in terms of Section 6 of the Land Reform Law;

(6) The learned High Court Judges failed to consider that with the enactment of the Land Reform Law in 1972, absolute title to the property vested in the Land Reform Commission free from all encumbrances and accordingly by operation of law, right title and interest of the property got transferred to the Land Reform Commission;

(7) The learned High Court Judges failed to consider the provisions of Section 3, 6 and 14 of the Land Reform Law which grants absolute title in the Plaintiff from the Land Reform Commission free from all encumbrances;

(8) The learned High Court Judges failed to consider the provisions of Section 12 of the Land Reform Law;

(9) The learned High Court Judges failed to consider that it is only upon the sale of the property at the auction that the purchaser will acquire title to the property, until then the mortgagor continues to hold title to the property;

(10) The learned High Court Judges failed to consider that the Fiscal sale was in 1984, that is, much after absolute title free from all encumbrances vested in the Land Reform Commission 1973 which transferred title to the Plaintiff on 16th August 1980 by Deed No. 2085;

(11) In the circumstances the learned High Court Judges erred in not considering the correct legal effect of Fiscal sale effected under the Mortgage decree in Case No. MB/1218 in 1984 vis-a-vis the Plaintiff's title derived from Deed No. 2085 of 16th August 1980 executed under the provisions of Section 14(2) of the Land Reform Law No. 1 of 1972;

(12) The learned High Court Judges have erred by holding that the Plaintiff has failed to prove that she has prescribed to the land;

(13) Is the mortgage decree entered into in District Court of Galle Case No. 1218/MB on 25th October 1963 an encumbrance under Section 6 of the Land Reform Law?

I must state that the High Court has failed to consider the matters set out in questions of law Nos. 5 – 11, thus necessitating this Court to consider such matters in detail.

I shall commence by considering questions of law Nos. 1 and 12.

Issue Nos. 1 and 12

Although a copy of the plaint in Case No. 10911/L filed by the Plaintiff's sister has not been produced, there is agreement among the parties that the principal legal issue raised in this appeal is identical to that raised in the aforementioned case. Be that as it may, the fact that the High Court in HC Case No. SP/HCCA/GA/09/2001(F) upheld the judgment of the District Court in Case No. 10911/L is irrelevant when one considers the fact that the said judgment of the High Court is not binding on the High Court that heard the appeal from the judgment of the District Court in this case.

This Court refused to grant leave to appeal from the said judgment by its Order dated 10th September 2012 made in SC/HC/CALA No. 546/2011. In The Commissioner General of Inland Revenue v. Janashakthi General Insurance [CA (TAX) No. 14/2013; CA Minutes of 20th May 2020] my brother, Justice Janak De Silva responding to an argument that refusal by the Supreme Court to grant special leave to appeal is binding in other cases, cited with approval the finding in B.M. Karunadasa, Assistant Commissioner of Labour vs W. Balasuriya, Sports of Kings [CA (PHC) APN No. 97/2010; CA minutes of 17th July 2013] that it is a misconception to come to the conclusion that the refusal of leave by the Supreme Court constitutes the affirmation of the judgment of the lower court, and held that such an order cannot be considered as creating a precedent. I am of the view that the refusal on the part of this Court to grant leave to appeal would only be binding between the same parties, and therefore is not a consideration that weighs in the mind of this Court today.

In these circumstances, it cannot be said that the learned Judges of the High Court erred in law when they proceeded to hear the appeal before them [i.e., the appeal that has given rise to this appeal] on its merits and made an independent determination. Question of law No.1 is therefore answered in the negative.

With regard to question of law No. 12, it was in evidence that Manomani Estate was a neglected and abandoned property, that the Plaintiff went into possession of the impugned 25 acres of Manomani Estate only after Deed No. 2085 was executed in her favour in 1980, and that she was dispossessed by the Defendant after she purchased the land in 1984 resulting in action being filed in the District Court in 1985. Thus, the question of prescription does not arise and the said question of law is answered in the negative.

Title to the land

One of the primary issues that needs to be decided in a rei vindicatio action is whether the plaintiff has established that he or she has title to the land from which the ejection of the defendant is sought. If I were to very briefly summarise the contentions of the parties, then they would be as follows. The position of the Plaintiff was that, (a) the mortgage executed by her father was wiped out as a result of Manomani Estate being vested in the Commission free of encumbrances, and (b) she derived her title from the Commission, and therefore free of any encumbrance. The position of the Defendant was four-fold. The first was that with the decree in the MB action being entered in 1963, the Plaintiff's father did not have title to the land thereafter. The second was that a decree is not an encumbrance for the purposes of the Law. The third was that the land is free of encumbrances only while it remains vested in the Commission. The fourth was that Section 27B of the Law applies with retrospective effect and therefore the mortgage has been revived, with the result that the Plaintiff derives her title subject to the mortgage.

The above arguments presented by the learned Presidents Counsel in order to support their respective position that title to the land referred to in the schedule to the plaint is with the party they represent, are reflective of the issues that were raised before the District Court. I shall therefore consider these arguments under six heads in addressing questions of law Nos. 2 – 11 and 13.

Does a mortgagor lose title to the land once the decree is entered?

The learned President's Counsel for the Defendant submitted that the Plaintiff's father lost his title to Manomani Estate upon the decree in the MB action being entered in 1963. If this Court were to agree with the said submission, it would mean that the Plaintiff's father did not have title to the land at the time the Law was enacted and hence, Manomani Estate could not be deemed to have vested with the Commission.

There is no dispute that the MB action filed in 1956 by the mortgagees was only a hypothecary action in which title to Manomani Estate was not in issue. A hypothecary action has been defined in Section 2 of the Mortgage Act to mean, "an action to obtain an order declaring the mortgaged property to be bound and executable for the payment of the money due upon the mortgage and to enforce such payment by a judicial sale of the mortgaged property;".

It was the position of the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff that the decree entered in the MB action on 18th December 1963 was only for the payment of money due upon the mortgage, and that, while no title passed to the judgment creditor upon such decree being entered, it is only when the property is sold in a public auction that the purchaser acquires title to the land purchased and the mortgagor simultaneously loses title to the same.

This position is reflected in Section 289 of the Civil Procedure Code, in terms of which, "The right and title of the judgment- debtor or of any person holding under him or deriving title through him to immovable property sold by virtue of an execution is not divested by the sale until the confirmation of the sale by the Court and the execution of the Fiscal's conveyance. But if the sale is confirmed by the Court and the conveyance is executed in pursuance of the sale, the grantee in the conveyance is deemed to have been vested with the legal estate from the time of the sale." This provision is made applicable to mortgaged land directed to be sold in execution of a decree by Section 61(1)(a) of the Mortgage Act.

The learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff buttressed his argument by stating further that an argument to the contrary, namely that title passes upon the decree being entered, is not tenable for the reason that the mortgagee may not be the person who purchases the property at the public auction.

A similar question arose for consideration in M S Perera (Assistant Government Agent, Kandy) v Unantenna and Others [54 NLR 457] where Chief Justice Alan Rose while observing [at pages 459 and 460], that R W Lee in An Introduction to Roman Dutch Law [(1953) 5th ed. Oxford University Press] makes no mention of a transformation or change of nature on the part of a mortgage after decree, stated as follows:

> "Wille in Principles of South African Law (1937 edition, page 192) does not support the contention that a decree entered in a mortgage action has the effect of extinguishing the mortgage. According to him a sale in execution must follow the decree in order that the mortgage may be extinguished. In dealing with the law as to how by a decree of court a mortgage may be extinguished the learned author does not even suggest that the bare entering up of a decree in an action to enforce the mortgage has the effect of terminating it."

Accordingly, the Plaintiff's father was free to dispose of Manomani Estate subject to the mortgage and the decree until such time as the decree was executed, at which point the purchaser at the public auction acquired title to the land upon the Fiscal's conveyance. I am therefore in agreement with the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff, and take the view that the entering of the decree in 1963 in the MB action did not take away the title that the Plaintiff's father had to Manomani Estate. Thus, when the Law came into force, title to Manomani Estate remained with the Plaintiff's father, subject to the mortgage and the decree.

Is a decree entered in a hypothecary action an encumbrance for the purposes of the Law?

Even though the issue whether a decree entered in a mortgage action is an encumbrance for the purposes of the Law was raised by the Defendant as Issue No. 11 and has been answered by the District Court in favour of the Plaintiff, the said issue has not been addressed by the High Court.

I have already referred to Section 3(2) of the Law in terms of which all agricultural land in excess of the ceiling was deemed to vest in the Commission. The effect of such vesting is reflected in Section 6 which provides that, "Where any agricultural land is vested in the Commission under this Law, such vesting shall have the effect of giving the Commission absolute title to such land as from the date of such vesting*, and* free from all encumbrances." [emphasis added]

What existed at the time the Law came into force was the mortgage, and the decree in the MB action filed to enforce the mortgage, but with an appeal made in respect of the judgment from which the decree arose.

The learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff submitted that, (a) on the date that the Law came into operation [26th August 1972], the legal owner of Manomani Estate was the Plaintiff's father, although encumbered by the mortgage which was the subject matter of the hypothecary action, (b) the Plaintiff's father was therefore required by the Law to declare his ownership in Manomani Estate, and (c) in view of Section 6, Manomani Estate vested in the Commission free of all encumbrances, including the mortgage and the decree entered in the MB action. It was therefore his position that although decree had been entered, given the fact that the MB action was only a hypothecary action, the mortgage was very much alive at the time the Law came into force, and that the mortgage and the decree are encumbrances for the purposes of Section 6.

The view that the mortgage as well as the decree are encumbrances over the land is supported by the meaning attached to "incumbrance" in Misso v Hadjear [19 NLR 277 at page 278] where De Sampayo, J stated that, "In the largest sense it means any kind of burden on or diminution of the title, and in a narrower sense it is generally employed to indicate a mortgage or charge upon the property."

In Sarvanamuttu v Solamuttu [26 NLR 385; at page 389] Bertram, CJ stated that a mortgage decree does 'affect the land' in the sense of it investing a person with an interest in the land or imposing or creating some charge, interest, or liability which would operate prejudicially to the title of any subsequent purchaser.

I am in agreement with the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff that as the MB action was only a hypothecary action, the mortgage retained its character without any transformation, even though decree had been entered, and that as at the date of the Law coming into force, the mortgage was very much in existence, although subject to the decree. I am therefore of the view that the aforementioned mortgage and decree are encumbrances on Manomani Estate and were subject to the provisions of the Law.

Does Section 6 of the Law apply only while land is deemed vested in the Commission?

Referring to Section 6, the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff submitted that the title to Manomani Estate vested in the Commission free of encumbrances and that Section 6 had the effect of completely wiping out the mortgage and the decree. He therefore submitted that with the mortgage and decree having been wiped out, Manomani Estate could not have been sold at a public auction in satisfaction of a decree which no longer had any legal validity and therefore no title could have passed to the person who bought Manomani Estate at the auction [in this case the mortgagees] and consequently no title passed to the Defendant.

I agree that with the application of Section 6, title to Manomani Estate vested in the Commission free of the mortgage suit and the decree, but subject to the caveat that it would continue to be so only so far as the land remained vested in the Commission or where the Commission alienated the land to a third party in terms of the Law. In other words, if Manomani Estate which was deemed vested in the Commission was to revert back to the owner, either in its entirety or in part, such as for example upon the making of the statutory determination in terms of Section 19 or an Order in terms of Section 14(2), it would revert back to the owner with the mortgage and the decree that Manomani Estate was encumbered with on the day the Law came into operation. Thus, in such circumstances there is no wiping out of the mortgage. What takes place is that in terms of Section 6, Manomani Estate was deemed vested in the Commission free of all encumbrances and would continue to be so, with the encumbrance floating over Manomani Estate, only for it to be attached to the land once again in the event of Manomani Estate or part thereof being returned to the Plaintiff's father. This is clearly further borne out by the provisions of Section 27B introduced by the Land Reform (Special Provisions) Act, No. 39 of 1981, to which I will advert to later in this judgment.

Did the Plaintiff derive the title of her father or that of the Commission?

The learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff submitted that with the coming into operation of the Law and with land over and above the ceiling deemed to have been vested in the Commission free of any encumbrance, the Plaintiff's father lost his title to the mortgaged property and was transformed into a statutory lessee. He therefore submitted that when the Plaintiff's father executed Deed No. 2085, he did so not as the owner of Manomani Estate which was subject to a mortgage but as the statutory lessee of a land that was no longer encumbered. He submitted further that with Manomani Estate being deemed vested in the Commission in 1972, the Plaintiff derived her title to 25 acres of Manomani Estate not from her father but from the Commission, and most importantly, free of any encumbrance.

I am unable to agree with this argument of the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff. Although in terms of Section 3(2), all agricultural lands in excess of the ceiling are deemed to have vested in the Commission on the day the Law came into operation by way of a legal fiction, as I have already stated, for the purposes of this case, that vesting is subject to:

(a) a statutory determination of the land area amounting to 50 acres that an owner would be allowed to retain as his entitlement in terms of the Law; and

(b) the release to the owner of land in excess of the ceiling in order that the said land be gifted to his children who are over the age of eighteen.

What the Commission did in terms of the Order made under Section 14(2) was grant approval to the owner to transfer land to his children, which is a further manifestation of the concept of the land being merely deemed vested in the Commission. In doing so, the Commission revived the title of the owner to that portion of land for which approval was being granted, while simultaneously removing his status as statutory lessee, thereby enabling the land be transferred to his children. This is reflected in the wording of Section 14(3), as well as by the fact that the Deed of Gift was executed by the Plaintiff's father and not by the Commission. Thus, I am of the view that the Plaintiff in this case derived her title from her father and not from the Commission.

Having said so, I must reiterate that the benefit of title vesting free of any encumbrances, as provided by Section 6, has only been conferred upon the Commission, and that when the Commission grants approval in terms of Section 14(2) for an inter-family transfer, the title that the beneficiaries of such transfer receive is not the unencumbered title of the Commission but the title of the person who owned the land at the time the Law came into force, including any encumbrance that may have existed at the time in respect of such land. Indeed, this is the process of 're-attachment' of an encumbrance that I have discussed earlier.

In other words, the Plaintiff derived her title to 25 acres of Manomani Estate from her father subject to the mortgage executed by her father and the decree in the MB action. To hold otherwise would mean that an encumbered title can be cleared of such encumbrances via the Law for the benefit of its owner, who could thereby evade his or her obligations and liabilities under a mortgage or any other encumbrance. This certainly would not have been the intention of the legislature when the Law was enacted, in spite of the apparent consensus that landowners losing vast tracts of land overnight be given certain concessions such as inter-family transfers of land over the stipulated ceiling.

The above position is confirmed by:

(a) the latter part of Section 12 of the Law, to which I shall advert; and

(b) Section 21(c) of the Law, in terms of which, "Every statutory determination published in the Gazette under Section 19 shall inter alia specify any servitude or encumbrance attaching to such agricultural land." [emphasis added], which means that when the Commission makes a statutory determination, any encumbrance that existed over such land referred to in the statutory determination at the time the said land vested in the Commission, continues to hang over the owner.

Section 12(1)

The learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff, whilst conceding that an injustice would be caused to mortgagees from the blanket suppression of all encumbrances on land vested in the Commission through the operation of Section 6, submitted that a mortgagee has been provided a solution by way of Section 12(1) of the Law and that the mortgagees ought to have pursued relief under this section.

Section 12(1) reads as follows:

> "Where any agricultural land subject to a mortgage, … vests in the Commission under the provisions of this Law the mortgagee, … shall have a lien to the extent of his interest in such agricultural land on the compensation payable to the owner thereof and where such compensation is not sufficient to meet his claim, such mortgagee, … shall be entitled to enforce his rights against any land subject to such mortgage, … in the hands of the owner of the agricultural land vested in the Commission after the ceiling of agricultural land is applied to him."

It is clear that in terms of Section 12(1), a mortgagee has a claim on the compensation that is payable to the mortgagor. However, this was not in issue before the District Court and therefore there is no evidence before this Court indicating whether compensation was in fact paid to the Plaintiff's father for the balance part of Manomani Estate that vested with the Commission. Although the said Section further provides that where such amount of compensation is not sufficient to meet the mortgagee's claim, the mortgagee can enforce his or her rights over the 50 acres of land that is released to the owner from the mortgaged land, this will not apply in the present case as no part of Manomani Estate remained with the Plaintiff's father.

I am in agreement with the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff that the mortgagees could have made a claim on the compensation paid to the Plaintiff's father but differ in holding that they were not obliged to do so, especially in view of the subsequent Order made in terms of Section 14(2) which had the effect of restoring the mortgage and the decree, and thereby the rights of the mortgagees over Manomani Estate.

Did Section 27B(1) apply with retrospective effect?

The necessity to consider the application of Section 27B, introduced by Section 8 of Act No. 39 of 1981, and forming the basis of the question of law raised by the learned President's Counsel for the Defendant, does not arise in view of the above conclusion that the title of the Plaintiff is subject to the mortgage and the decree. I shall nonetheless refer to the arguments of the parties not only for the sake of completeness but also because it reflects the intention of the legislature with regard to encumbrances where an Order is made under Section 14.

Section 27B(1) reads as follows:

> "Where any agricultural land is transferred to any person in consequence of an order under section 14 or is alienated, or vested in, any person under paragraph (f) of section 22 or where any person is allowed to retain any agricultural land in consequence of a determination made under section 19, such order*, alienation, vesting or determination, as the case may be,* shall have the effect of reviving, with effect from the date of such order*, alienation, vesting or determination, as the case may be,* any encumbrance which subsisted over that land on the day immediately preceding the date on which that land was vested in the Commission." [emphasis added]

Section 27B(1) thus makes it clear that all encumbrances that existed on the day immediately preceding the day the Law came into operation, shall be revived in respect of lands to which an Order under Section 14 would apply, with effect from the date of such Order. Section 27B(1) supports my previous finding that any agricultural land over which there exists an encumbrance continues to be so encumbered when returned to the hands of the owner to be retained or transferred to a child or parent, and is free of the encumbrance only when such land is in the hands of the Commission or is alienated by the Commission to a third party in terms of the Law.

It was the position of the learned President's Counsel for the Defendant that in terms of Section 27B(1) the mortgage that was executed over Manomani Estate on 1st February 1948 by Mortgage Bond No. 3514, and which mortgage stood suppressed while the land was deemed vested in the Commission, was revived when the Commission made its Order under Section 14(2) on 10th June 1974, with effect from such date. The learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff however submitted that Section 27B(1) applies only in respect of an order made after Act No. 39 of 1981 was enacted into law and that Section 27B(1) does not apply with retrospective effect. He accordingly submitted that as the Order under Section 14(2) was made in June 1974 and Deed No. 2085, by which the Plaintiff derived her title, was executed in 1980, prior to Act No. 39 of 1981, the provisions of Section 27B has no application in this case.

I am attracted by the submission of the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff for two reasons. The first is that Act No. 39 of 1981 introduced detailed provisions that permitted land owners to make applications seeking approval to effect further inter-family transfers, in spite of the 3 month time limit imposed by the principal enactment for such applications. The second is that while Section 27B has been introduced by Section 8 of Act No. 39 of 1981, Section 16 of that Act only provides that, "The amendments made to the principal enactment by section 2 (a), 12 and 15 of this Act shall be deemed for all purposes to have come into operation on the date of commencement of the principal enactment."

I am however mindful that in Jinawathie [supra; at page 139] it was held that, "… an encumbrance which subsisted over and in respect of the plaintiff-respondent's undivided shares in the larger land would, from and after the date on which P6 came into operation, be revived and attach to the land described in P6."

P6 is the statutory determination in Jinawathie and was dated 25th September 1974, and so it seems that the five Judge Bench of this Court in Jinawathie has considered, despite not explicitly spelling it out, that Section 27B does have retrospective operation. However, this is not a matter that I wish to pronounce on today, as, for the purposes of the present case, I have already arrived at the conclusion that, independent of Section 27B, the Plaintiff derived her title from her father subject to the encumbrances attaching thereto.

Conclusion

Thus, the mortgage over Manomani Estate, effected in 1948, which was sought to be enforced through the MB action from 1956, which continued following the entering of the decree in 1963 until the introduction of the Law in 1972, and which stood suppressed while Manomani Estate was vested in the Commission, completed its full circle when the Order under Section 14(2) was made in 1974 in favour of the Plaintiff's father, thereby reviving the mortgage and the decree.

I am of the view that the title the Plaintiff acquired in terms of Deed No. 2085 was that of her father's and was therefore subject to the mortgage and the decree. With this Court having dismissed the appeal against the MB action in July 1974, and part of the land having been returned to the Plaintiff's father to be transferred to the Plaintiff and her sister, the mortgagees had every right to enforce the decree in respect of that part of the land, which was duly done in November 1983. Upon such execution of the decree, the Plaintiff lost her title to the 25 acres of land in Manomani Estate referred to in Deed No. 2085 and the Defendant simultaneously acquired title to a part of Manomani Estate, through Deed No. 1341.

I am therefore of the view that the Plaintiff had no title to the land referred to in the plaint when she instituted District Court Case No. 10650/L, while the Defendant had title to such land by virtue of Deed No. 1341. The Plaintiff is therefore not entitled to the relief prayed for in the plaint.

The questions of law are answered as follows:

(1) No.

(2) Even though the finding of the High Court that the Defendant acquired title prior to the Plaintiff is erroneous, the said finding has no bearing on the principal issues in this case.

(3) No.

(4) Even though the High Court has failed to consider this issue, the finding of the District Court on this question of law was in favour of the Plaintiff and regardless, such finding has no bearing on the principal issues to be decided.

(5) – (11) Even though the High Court has failed to examine the provisions of the Law, it has no bearing on the final outcome of this case for the reasons set out in this judgment.

(12) No.

(13) Yes.

The judgment of the District Court and the High Court are affirmed. This appeal is dismissed, without costs.

The plaintiff company filed this action in the District Court of Mount Lavinia against the two defendants seeking to recover a sum of Rs. 809,991.13 with interest arising out of the Lease Agreement marked P4. The defendants filed answer seeking dismissal of the plaintiff's action and made a claim in reconvention for a sum of Rs. 428,684 on unjust enrichment. After trial, the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action as well as the defendants' claim in reconvention. Being dissatisfied with the judgment of the District Court, the plaintiff appealed to the High Court of Civil Appeal of Mount Lavinia. The High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the judgment of the District Court and entered judgment for the plaintiff. Hence this appeal by the defendants. This Court granted leave to appeal on the question whether the plaintiff is legally entitled to recover the balance due arising out of the Lease Agreement after its termination.

There is no dispute that the defendants entered into the Lease Agreement P4 dated 24.10.1997 with the plaintiff company. Under the terms of the Lease Agreement the defendant-lessees agreed to pay the plaintiff-lessor 48 monthly lease rentals of Rs. 48,219 each and take the Minor Passenger Bus on lease. Although the leased vehicle was in the possession of the defendants for 29 months, they only paid a total of Rs.

977,035 as rental fees. The defendants were admittedly in default (as seen from paragraph 14 of the answer and P8).

If there is a default, 4% monthly overdue interest is added to the amount due (as stated in item 5 of the schedule to the Lease Agreement).

Since arrears were not settled, the Lease Agreement was terminated by the plaintiff by P9 dated 27.03.2000 and the leased vehicle was repossessed and thereafter sold for a sum of Rs. 850,000 on 05.04.2000.

The position of the plaintiff is that as at 15.08.2000, the defendants were obliged to pay the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 809,991.13 (as seen from the statement of account marked P14).

The contention of learned counsel for the defendants before this Court is that, once the Lease Agreement is terminated, the plaintiff cannot recover future rentals but can only seek damages for the breach of contract. This is the crux of the matter.

In my view, this contention is unsustainable in view of the terms of the Lease Agreement the parties have agreed upon. Let me explain.

In terms of Article 5(1)(a) of the Lease Agreement, "if Lessee fails to make due and effective payment of any rent as and when it falls due or of any other sum payable by Lessee as provided for in this Agreement after such sum becomes due and payable", he is considered as a defaulter.

Article 5(2) reads as follows:

"In the event of Lessee being in breach of this Agreement as aforesaid Lessor shall have the right to exercise one or more or all the following remedies without having to give any prior notice or demand to Lessee:-*

(a) the Lessor to receive immediate payment from Lessee of a part or the entire amount of the total rent payable under this Lease Agreement for the full term of the lease and all other costs and expenses incurred by Lessor in this connection together with interest thereon at the rate specified in item (11) of the Schedule to this Agreement from the date of default less the amount of the rent paid by Lessee and duly received by Lessor under this Lease Agreement.

(b) to make a written demand to Lessee for the return of Property and to take possession of Property and to sell any or all of the said Property by public auction or private treaty without notice to Lessee or hold, use, operate, lease or otherwise dispose of or deal with such property as Lessor pleases. Lessee agrees that within 7 days of receipt of such written demand from Lessor for the return of Property, Lessee will return Property to Lessor in accordance with the provisions of Article 23 and if Lessee fails to return Property as aforesaid the provisions of Article 23 shall become applicable immediately.

Lessee further agrees that should Lessee fail to return Property to Lessor within 7 days of receipt of a written demand from Lessor for the return of Property, in the same condition Lessee received it, fair wear and tear excepted, Lessee will pay and will be liable to pay Lessor the market value of Property in fair and marketable condition.

(c) To terminate the Lease hereby created and to receive from Lessee compensation for all indirect and consequential damages including loss of profits and in particular loss of profits in the event of Lessor consequent to the termination of the Lease Agreement suffering loss as a result of being unable to re-let Property at a rental equivalent to the rental payable under this Lease Agreement.

(d) to exercise any other right or remedy available to Lessor in Law.

This is repeated in the schedule to the Lease Agreement (which includes the payment plan) where it states: "Failure to comply with any of the above provisions shall entitle Lessor to all or any of the remedies provided for in Article 5 hereof [quoted above]."

Learned counsel for the defendants relies on Article 5(2)(c) quoted above to contend that, after the plaintiff terminated the Lease Agreement, the plaintiff can only seek compensation/damages for loss of profit, and the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the balance due amount in terms of the Lease Agreement. This argument presupposes that the balance due amount in terms of the Lease Agreement (a sum of Rs. 809,991.13 as at 15.08.2000) comprises only profit, but this has not been established.

In terms of Article 5(2)(a) quoted above, when there is a default in payment of any rent as and when it falls due or any other sum payable by the lessee, the lessor shall have the right to receive immediate payment from the lessee the entire amount of the total rent payable under the Lease Agreement for the full term of the lease. The lessor has the right to do it without terminating the Lease Agreement.

In terms of Article 5(2)(c), if the lessor terminates the Lease Agreement, the lessor shall have the right to claim compensation for all indirect and consequential damages including loss of profits. Indirect and consequential damages would not include damages which arise naturally upon the breach of the Agreement. Loss of future rentals to my mind is a natural consequence of the breach of the Lease Agreement. The issue of whether future rentals include profits, and what proportion of future rentals is attributable to profits, has not been, as I stated earlier, clarified before this Court.

Article 5(2)(5) is also relevant in this regard. It reads: "Even if the remedies provided for in sub-paragraphs 2(a) and 2(b) of this Article have been taken by Lessor, Lessee shall not be relieved from any other liability under this Lease Agreement including liability for damages." This goes to show that, when there is a breach, a claim for damages has no direct bearing on the right of the lessor to claim the total rent payable under the Lease Agreement for the full term of the lease. It may be noted that, in the instant case, although the plaintiff has terminated the Lease Agreement, the plaintiff does not seek compensation or damages from the defendants.

Let us assume that the plaintiff seeks damages upon termination. Then Article 5(3) also becomes relevant. It reads: "Lessee agrees that the sums due under this Article to Lessor are provided as liquidated damages for breach of contract and not as a penalty." Liquidated damages are pre-determined damages set at the time of entering into the contract upon reasonable prior estimation of the damage which is likely to occur to the injured party. Liquidated damages are meant to be compensatory rather than punitive. Learned counsel for the defendant does not say that this Article is a spurious one intended to disguise its true nature and purpose. Instead, learned counsel accepts that "unconditionally accrued rights, fixed sums payable under the contract in respect of performance rendered prior to breach, and causes of action which have accrued because of a breach, are also unaffected by termination." As I stated earlier, in terms of Article 5(2)(a), a cause of action accrues to the lessor, before the termination of the Lease Agreement, to receive immediate payment from the lessee the entire amount of the total rent payable under the Lease Agreement for the full term of the lease when there is a default in payment of any rent as and when it falls due.

Let me re-emphasise that at the time of entering into the Lease Agreement, the parties have agreed to these terms. Although I accept that freedom of contract is not absolute and enforcement is subject to countervailing reasons of public policy, illegality etc., the general rule is that, the parties must have the freedom to incorporate remedies into their terms of contract, and general principles would apply only in the event there are gaps.

Before I part with this judgment, let me explain the position taken up by the defendant in his answer when he claimed Rs. 428,684 from the plaintiff as a claim in reconvention. He admits that according to the Lease Agreement he had to pay 48 monthly instalments of Rs. 48,219 each and the total amount payable was Rs. 2,314,512 (Rs. 48,219 X 48=Rs. 2,314,512). He says he kept the vehicle 29 months and therefore he had to pay Rs. 1,398,351 (Rs. 48,219 X 29=Rs. 1,398,351) but paid only Rs. 977,035 and therefore the balance due at the end of 29 instalments was Rs. 421,316 (Rs. 1,398,351-Rs.977,035=Rs.421,316). Then he says the vehicle was sold for Rs. 850,000 and when Rs. 421,316 is deducted from that amount, the balance money of Rs. 428,684 should be returned by the plaintiff to him. It is on this basis the defendant makes a claim in reconvention for a sum of Rs. 428,684. At the trial, the defendant raised issues and the plaintiff's witnesses were cross-examined on this basis. This is a layman's approach and definitely not an approach to be adopted in the interpretation of a Commercial Lease Agreement, to say the least.

Defaults on Lease Agreements can have a detrimental effect on finance companies, as they may result in a loss of revenue and potentially impact the company's ability to make further investments. In order to ensure the financial stability of such companies, it is important to uphold the terms of Lease Agreements and permit finance companies to recover balance dues to the extent legally possible in the Agreement. This also supports the broader economic goals of maintaining a stable and prosperous financial sector.

For the aforesaid reasons, on the facts and circumstances of the case, I hold that the termination of the Lease Agreement does not prevent the plaintiff from claiming the defendants the total rent payable under the Lease Agreement for the full term of the lease.

I answer the question of law on which leave to appeal was granted in the affirmative and dismiss the appeal without costs.

However, since it has taken a very long time to see a finality of this matter from the date of the High Court judgment, for which the defendants are not singularly responsible, on the facts and circumstances of this particular case, I think, it is fit and proper and equitable to limit the reliefs of the plaintiff to the date of the High Court Judgment. I am persuaded to adopt this approach by following the observations made by Prasanna Jayawardena J. in Seylan Bank Limited v. Epasinghe (SC/CHC/39/06, SC Minutes of 01.08.2017). Let the District Court enter judgment accordingly.

The Plaintiff – Respondent – Petitioner (hereinafter referred to as Plaintiff) instituted the partition action No. 18509/P in the District Court of Ratnapura on 13/01/2003 to partition a land called "Nugagahadeniya Godella" in extent of 120 perches, which is described in the schedule to the plaint.

As averred in the plaint, the Plaintiff's position is that;

i. The original owner of the undivided 1/3rd of the corpus was Nalla Gamage Albert. The said Nalla Gamage Albert purchased said undivided 1/3rd share upon deed No. 5903 dated 25/8/1924. Thereafter, through deeds No. 17634, dated 26/09/1929, 15362 dated 26/2/1931 and 2342 dated 15/5/1974 executed by predecessors in title referred to in the pedigree of the Plaintiff, the Plaintiff became entitled to the said 1/3rd share. As per the said deeds said Albert had conveyed his rights to M.A. Richard Senaviratne and M.M. Don Andiris and said Senaviratne had conveyed his rights to said Andiris and at the end said Andrias has conveyed his rights to the Plaintiff.

ii. Plaintiff is not aware of the original owners of the remaining 2/3rd share or how that share devolved upon other co-owners.

iii. 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants were made parties as they are in occupation of the land claiming that they have rights to it, but the Plaintiff is unaware as to how they gained such rights.

iv. Though it was revealed through a search in the land registry that certain deeds have been executed in relation to the corpus, he could not ascertain how the rights in the corpus devolved on the executants of those deeds or their heirs.

Thus, the Plaintiff prayed for a partition decree to get his 1/3rd share partitioned.

1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendant Appellant Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the 1st,2nd and 3rd Defendants) filed their statement of claim and stated inter alia that;

I. Tepulangoda Mudiyanselage Oushadahamy was the original owner of the land by virtue of his possession for a long period.

II. As aforesaid Tepulangoda Mudiyanselage Oushadahamy died intestate leaving his estate requiring no administration, his son Tepulangoda Mudiyanselage Ratranhamy became the sole owner.

III. As said Tepulangoda Mudiyanselage Ratranhamy died leaving his estate requiring no administration, his son T.M. Kirimudiyanse became the owner of the entire corpus.

IV. As aforesaid T.M. Kirimudiyanse died intestate leaving his estate requiring no administration, his children Tepulangoda Mudiyanselage Ariyapala, Sumanawathie, Dayawathie, Karunadasa, Sumanapala, Leelawathie, Karunawathie, Seelawathie and Dharmadasa became the heirs but by a settlement among the family members, siblings of aforesaid Ariyapala renounced their rights for the benefit of said Ariyapala. Thus, said Ariyapala became the sole owner.

V. Aforesaid Tepulangoda Mudiyanselage Ariyapala died intestate leaving his estate requiring no administration and his wife 1st defendant Kandegedara Ralalage Podimenike and children Sudesh Prasanna (2nd Defendant) and Sujith Prasanna (3rd Defendant) became his heirs.

Thereby 2nd and 3rd Defendants became entitled to undivided ½ share of the corpus subject to the life interest of the 1st Defendant.

VI. Aforesaid Defendants and their predecessors have possessed the corpus undisturbed and uninterrupted for more than 10 years and they have got prescriptive rights in terms of Prescription Ordinance and they own the structure and plantation depicted in the plan No. 437.

1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants prayed for the dismissal of the action or to partition the land between 2nd and 3rd Defendants subject to the life interest of the 1st Defendant.

A.G Kusumawathie, 1st Defendant Respondent Respondent who was the 4th Defendant before the District Court (hereinafter referred to as the 4th Defendant) filed her amended statement of claim on 29/10/2015 and stated inter alia that;

I. Tepulangoda Mudiyanselage Punchirala was the original owner of the land and he died intestate leaving his estate requiring no administration. Thus, his son Tepulangoda Mudiyanselage Mudalihamy alias Mudiyanse became the owner.

II. Aforesaid Mudalihamy alias Mudiyanse died intestate leaving his estate requiring no administration and his children Tepulangoda Mudiyanselage Punchimahaththaya, Mohottihamy, Appuhamy, Dingiri Menike and Podimenike each became entitled to undivided 1/5th share.

III. Aforesaid Appuhamy, out of his 1/5th conveyed 1/20th of the corpus to T.A. Haramanis Appu, W.A. Luis Appuhamy and to aforesaid Podimenike by deed No.11642 dated 22.06.1927.

Thereafter, the 4th Defendant in her amended statement of claim proceeded to describe her pedigree while referring to some family arrangements to indicate that she is entitled 23/30 of the corpus. This Court observes that the 4th Defendant originally filled her statement of claim along with 5th to 8th Defendants in the original Court who are the 2nd to 5th Defendant Respondent before this Court. In the said original statement of claim, there was no reference to the aforesaid Deed No.11642.

Action proceeded to trial on one admission and 13 points of contest recorded on 02.06.2009. The only admission so recorded clearly indicates that there was no dispute as to the identity of the corpus and the corpus is depicted in plan no.437 made by S.N. Senaratne L.S.

The Plaintiff gave evidence and marked all the deeds referred to in his pedigree in evidence as P1, P2, P3 and P4. Those deeds were marked without any objection. As per section 68 of the Partition Law, formal proof of the execution of any deed is not necessary where the genuineness of such deed is not impeached.

As per the decision in Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another V Jugolinija Boal East (1981) 1 Sri L R 18, the documents for which the objections were not reiterated at the close of the opponent's case become evidence for all the purposes of the case. Moreover, section 3 of the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act No.17 of 2022 confirms that such deeds not objected by the opposite party shall be admitted as evidence without further proof. The oldest deed P4 was executed in 1924. As per the evidence given by the Plaintiff, it appears his position is that even though he does not occupy the corpus he has enjoyed his rights by getting his share through produce of the corpus as well as when trees were sold taking the money according to his share. The Plaintiff has further stated that Ariyapala, father of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants, when putting up his house, cut Jak trees and due to his close friendship, he gave permission to cut those trees. The four boundaries found in the Schedules of the said deeds tally with the Corpus of this case. Thus, it is clear that the Plaintiff had placed sufficient evidence to show his paper title to 1/3rd of the Corpus through the evidence given before the District Judge.

The Position of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants as per their statement of claim seems to be that one Oushadahamy, the person they claimed as the original owner acquired title by long possession, in other words by prescription, and thereafter, others in their pedigree got title through succession. Section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance is the section that enables a party to an action get a decree on his prescriptive rights. Thus, a Plaintiff, a Defendant or an Intervenient may get a decree on his or her prescriptive title but it is questionable whether a Court can decree that a person who was not a party acquired prescriptive title somewhere in the past. [see Punchi Rala V Andris Appuhami 3 SCR 149, K.D. Edwin Peeris V Kirilamaya 71 N L R 52, Terunnanse V Menike 1 N L R 200, Timothy David V Ibrahim 13 N L R 318, Kirihamy Muhandirama V Dingiri Appu 6 N L R 197, Raman Chetty et al V Mohideen 18 N L R 478]. However, I do not intend to say that a party cannot tag on to the possession of his predecessors to claim prescriptive title. In fact, a party can. [see Terunnanse v Menike 1 N L R 200, Wijesundara and others V Constantine Dasa and Another (1987) 2 Sri L R 66, Kirihamy Muhandirama V Dingiri Appu 6 N L R 197]. What I wish to say is that it is doubtful, whether in terms of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, a Court can decree that the so-called original owner, Oushadahamy acquired title by prescription as part of its decree. Anyway, this Court need not go deep into this issue as there was no evidence acceptable before the learned District Judge to say that Oushadahamy was the sole original owner and his grandson Kirimudiyanse became the sole owner through inheritance after Rathranhamy, the son of Oushadahamy, as per the pedigree stated by the 1st to 3rd Defendants.

As per the statement of claim of the 1st to 3rd Defendants, Kirimudiyanse was the grandfather of 2nd and 3rd Defendants and father-in-law of the 1st Defendant. Dangaswela Pathirannehalage Piyasena and Nissanka Arachchilage Dhanapala, (the sons – in – law of aforesaid Kirimudiyanse) and 2nd Defendant, Sudesh Prasanne had given evidence on behalf of 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants. Dangaswela Pathirannehalage Piyasena in his evidence has clearly stated that aforesaid Kirimudiyanse was entitled only to 1/5th share of the corpus and that he does not know who is entitled to the balance 4/5th share. He was 80 years old when giving evidence and was the eldest among the witnesses for the 1st to 3rd Defendants. The 2nd Defendant was only 37 years when he was giving evidence. Though he has stated that said Piyasena, his own witness, had given false evidence (at page 143 of the brief), he admits that Piyasena had a better knowledge than him regarding the entitlements to the Corpus and what Piyasena had stated may be correct as he is elder than him- vide page 149 of the brief. The 2nd Defendant further states in his evidence that the Plaintiff and his father, Ariyapala had a relationship and he does not have knowledge regarding any arrangements with regard to property and transactions between them- vide pages 151 - 153 of the brief. Aforesaid Dhanapala while giving evidence admits that he knows only about the possession and not about the pedigree- vide page 164 of the brief, and he does not know regarding the rights of Kirimudiyanse. None of these witnesses of the 1st to 3rd Defendant has placed any acceptable evidence regarding the sole original ownership of Oushadahamy or thereafter of his son Ratharanhamy. In fact, due to the evidence of aforesaid Piyasena with regard to the ownership of 1/5th share of Kirimudiyanse, which is contrary to sole ownership of Kirimudiyanse at one time, it is difficult to accept the purported pedigree starting from original sole ownership of Oushadahamy as presented by the 1st to 3rd Defendants in their statement of claim as true. Even though, there is evidence to show that 1st to 3rd Defendants have occupied the corpus, due to the evidence relating to 1/5th share of Kirimudiyanse and lack of knowledge with regard to the relationship between Plaintiff and the father of the 2nd and 3rd Defendants regarding the property, it is difficult establish adverse possession to prove prescriptive title as claimed by the 1st to 3rd Defendants, where there is no evidence to show that there is something similar to ouster in relation to the other co-owners. The 1st to 3rd Defendants cannot claim prescriptive title in the abstract, it must be by possession adverse to the true ownership [see Fernando V Wijesooriya et al. 48 N L R 320 and I. De Silva V Commissioner General of Inland Revenue 80 N L R 292]. True ownership revealed through evidence is the paper title of the Plaintiff and the co-ownership claimed by the 4th Defendant through a deed and inheritance which will be referred to later in this judgment. Now it seems that the 1st -3rd Defendants attempt to argue before this court that there was no proof of co-ownership by the Plaintiff. If they challenge the Co-ownership established through paper title, it is questionable against whose true ownership they claimed prescriptive title. As per section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance it has to be through adverse possession to the title claimed by the opposite party. It must be further observed that the 2nd Defendant while giving evidence before the District Court, first had tried to avoid admitting that 4th Defendant Kusumawathie is a relative but later has admitted that 4th Defendant Kusumawathie belongs to the same Family indicating close relationship – vide page 141 of the brief. Perhaps, his attempt to hide the relationship may be an attempt to hide coownership. The learned District Judge has given the 1st to 3rd Defendants shares from the 1/5 share which was once belonged to Kirimudiyanse as revealed by their own witness Piyasena. As they are physically occupying the corpus, their possession must relate to a lawful right. Only lawful right that is seen from the evidence is the inheritance to the rights of said Kirimudiyanse.

The 4th Defendant giving evidence, has stated that the Plaintiff and she are co-owners and she has no objection for allotting 1/3rd share to the Plaintiff. She has also stated that the predecessors in title of the Plaintiff had rights in the corpus – vide pages 241 and 242 of the brief. She in her evidence refers to occasions where parts of produce were given to her and also to a dispute arose between 1st,2nd and 3rd Defendants and her regarding cutting of coconut trees- vide page 194 of the brief. The 4th Defendant has attempted in his evidence to establish a pedigree commencing from one Thepulangoda Mudiyanselage Punchirala and has marked a deed no.11642 dated 22.06.1927 relating to a share of 1/20th of the corpus. While giving evidence 4th Defendant has stated that Podimenike and Appuhamy in her pedigree had 1/5th each at one time.

The learned District Judge after the conclusion of the trial has delivered the judgment on 29/03/2017, allotting shares to the Plaintiff, 1st,2nd ,3rd and 4th Defendants as follows;

The Plaintiff -	1/3	=	60/180
1st Defendant -	1/90	=	2/180
2nd Defendant-	1/180	=	1/180
3rd Defendant-	1/180	=	1/180
4th Defendant-	13/60	=	39/180
Unallotted Shares;
For Kirimudiyanse's children except Ariyapala	8/45	=	32/180

For two vendees in deed No.11642, namely Dingiri Menike(Sic) and Louis Appuhamy 2/60 = 6/180

Not proved for anyone 39/180

In her judgment, the learned District judge has found that;

- There is no dispute with regard to the identification of the corpus among the parties and it is depicted as Lot 1 in plan No.437 made by S.N. Senaratne, marked X.
- As per the contents of P4 which is a very old deed, at one time 1/3rd of the Corpus belonged to one Kukule Kankamalage Arnold Hamine and the said 1/3rd share devolved on the original owner mentioned in the pedigree of the Plaintiff, namely Nallagamage Albert due to the execution of deed marked P4. Thereafter, due to the execution of deeds marked P1, P2 and P3 said 1/3rd share now belongs to the Plaintiff.
- There is no evidence to establish that the original owner as described in the plaint, namely Oushadahamy had sole ownership to the corpus.
- Although 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants claimed that they have prescriptive rights to the entire corpus, witness Piyasena who gave evidence on behalf of them has stated that Kirimudiyanse who was the grandfather of 2nd and 3rd Defendants was entitled only to 1/5th share and the evidence clearly establishes that 4/5th share of the corpus belongs to others. They have not established that they have prescriptive rights to the corpus in entirety since there is no evidence of 10 years possession in terms of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance after something similar to ouster regarding the other co-owners. Deeds No. 39617 and deed no. 31 establishes that Kirimudiyanse the predecessor of 1st to 3rd Defendants had a title to the corpus. Hence 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants are co-owners of the corpus and they get the 1/9th from the 1/5th share of Kirimudiyanse which was devolved on Ariyapala who was one of the 9 children Kirimudiyanse had. The balance 8/9th of the 1/5th of Kirimudiyanse's entitlement has to be kept unallotted for the other siblings of Ariyapala.
- There is a lack of acceptable evidence to come to a decision that at one time, Punchirala who has been described as the original owner by the statement of claim of the 4th Defendant was the sole owner of the corpus. However, Podimenike and Appuhamy in the said pedigree of the 4th Defendant had 1/5th each and Said Appuhamy had transferred 1/20th of the corpus to said Podimenike by deed No. 11642 marked 4V2. Hence, said Podimenike is entitled to 13/60th share of the corpus which at the end has devolved on the 4th Defendant. The 2/60th conveyed to other two donees of 4V2, namely, Haramanis and Louis Appuhamy has to be unallotted for them or people who claims under them. (It appears that the name of Haramanis has been incorrectly mentioned in the share list contained in the Judgment as "Dingiri Menike")

- The balance 39/180th share has to be kept unallotted as entitlement of that share was not proved in favour of anyone.

Being aggrieved by the said Judgment, the 1st, 2nd, 3rd Defendants appealed to the Civil Appellate High Court of Rathnapura stating inter alia that:

- The learned District Judge has not investigated the title properly,
- Learned District Judge has not considered the evidence which established that 1st to 3rd Defendants have prescribe to the entire land.
- Learned District Judge has not evaluated the evidence properly,
- Learned District Judge has not considered the fact that when the pedigrees are different and when the parties claim on different original owners, possession by one owner cannot be considered as the possession by the other owners.

The 1st to 3rd Defendants prayed for to set aside the judgment dated 29/3/2017 and to grant the relief prayed for by them in their statement of claim or alternatively to order trial de novo.

The Civil Appellate High Court of Rathnapura delivered its judgment on 25/07/2018 setting aside the judgment of the learned District Judge dated 29/03/2018 and dismissed the partition action. Honourable High Court Judges have stated in his judgement inter alia that;

- It is clear that the Plaintiff, 1st to 3rd Defendants and 4th Defendant have claimed title to the Corpus in three separate pedigrees.
- The plaintiff has not disclosed who the original owner of the corpus was and a devolution of title from the Original Owner. He has shown a pedigree only for 1/3rd share of the Corpus. He has failed to show the common ownership among the Plaintiff and the Defendants.
- The Plaint has not complied with the sections 2,4, and 5 of the Partition Act and therefore, plaint should be rejected in limine in terms of section 7 of the Partition Act.
- Acceptance of 3 different pedigrees by the learned District Judge to order partitioning of the corpus is erroneous.

Further, the High Court held as follows;

"The 1st, 2nd, 3rd Defendants and 4th Defendant have shown a relationship up to the Defendants but they were unable to establish their relationship and its connection to the land in partition by evidence. Although they stated that they were in possession it is uncertain whether it is permissive or prescriptive".

As a result, the High Court decided that this land cannot be partitioned in accordance to the partition law and set aside the District Court judgment dated 29/03/2017 and dismissed the partition action but refused to grant reliefs "b" and "c" of the petition of appeal of the 1st to 3rd Defendants which prayed for a re-trial and relief as prayed for in their statement of claim.

Being aggrieved by the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court, the Plaintiff sought leave to appeal from the Supreme Court and, on 25.06.2019 leave was granted on the four questions of law. The said questions of law will be mentioned in the latter part of this Judgment.

Even the learned High Court Judges have come to the conclusion that it is uncertain whether the possession of 1st to 3rd Defendants is permissive or prescriptive. In other words, they also have come to the conclusion that 1st to 3rd Defendants failed in proving prescriptive possession. 1st to 3rd Defendants have not appealed against this finding. On the other hand, as mentioned before, evidence given by their own witness has shown that Kirimudiyanse, the grandfather of the 2nd and 3rd Defendants, under whom they claim title to the whole land, had only 1/5th share in the corpus. No acceptable evidence has been placed to show that there was ouster or something similar to ouster in relation to the other co-owners who held the other 4/5th of the Corpus or in relation to the Plaintiff and the 4th Defendant who had shown common ownership through deeds, and thereafter, 1st to 3rd Defendants or their predecessors had commenced adverse possession and continued it for ten years. Neither have they shown that they or their predecessors came to the land in a subordinate character and through an overt act change the nature of their possession and commenced adverse possession and continued it for ten years. Thus, it is clear that the claim of title to the corpus through prescription by the 1st to 3rd Defendants cannot hold water.

Among the grounds given by the learned High Court Judges to set aside the Judgment of the District Court and dismiss the partition action, it is stated that the Plaint has not complied with the section 2,4 and 5 of the Partition Act and the Plaintiff has failed to reveal an original owner and devolution of title that flows from the original owner. Even the counsel for the 1st to 3rd Defendants in his written submissions has stated that it seems that the Plaintiff has complied with the said sections- vide paragraph 8 of the written submissions dated 14.12.202021. Thus, I need not elaborate much on those grounds. However, it is worthwhile to make few observations on those grounds. It appears that no challenge has been made before the District Court on the ground that the Plaint was defective -vide points of contests raised on 02.06.2009. In K. Vethavanam and Two Others V J Retnam 60 N L R 20, which refers to a similar provision in a previous Partition Act, it was held that once a plaint is accepted and it is not exfacie defective, the Court has no power to reject it subsequently under section 7, read with section 4 of the Partition Act No.16 of 1951. It must be observed that in the present Partition Act, even when the Plaintiff does not show due diligence to prosecute the action, the Court may endeavour to compel the parties to bring the action to a termination and even permit a Defendant to prosecute the action as the Plaintiff- vide section 70(1). It shows that the scheme contemplated in the Act is to reach a finality whenever possible once an action is filed without dismissing based on the failures of the Plaintiff. As admitted by the Counsel for the 1st to 3rd Defendants' Counsel in his written submissions, there does not seem to be any exfacie defects in the plaint.

Section 2 of the Partition Act states that where any land belongs in common to two or more owners, any one or more of them, may institute an action for partition or sale of the land in accordance with the provisions of Law. Thus, any co-owner of a land can institute a partition action. The Plaintiff in his plaint has referred to the chain of deeds by which he claims 1/3rd of the land showing that he has only a share in the land and he has not revealed the entitlement to the balance 2/3rd of the land. He has made the Defendants who are there in the land parties to the action. The contents of the plaint clearly indicate that the Plaintiff claims him to be a co-owner but he does not know how the balance 2/3rd devolve on the other co-owners. I do not see any defect as far as section 2 is concerned.

Section 4(1)(c) of the Partition Act requires the Plaintiff to include in the plaint the names and addresses of all persons who are entitled to or claim to be entitled to any right, share, or interest to, of, or in that land or to any improvements made or effected on or to that land and the nature and extent of any such right, share or improvements, so far as such particulars are known to the plaintiff or can be ascertained by him. Section 4(1)(d) requires the Plaintiff to include in the plaint a statement setting out the devolution of title of the Plaintiff, and, where possible, the devolution of title of every other person disclosed in the plaint as a person entitled or claiming to be entitled to the land, or to any right, share or interest to, of, or in that land. Section 5 requires the Plaintiff to include in his plaint as parties to the action all persons who to his knowledge are entitled or claim to be entitled to any right, share, or interest to, of or in the land or to any improvement. The phrases that I have highlighted above indicate that what is expected from the Plaintiff is to reveal what he knows or what he can ascertain. The sections referred to above do not require the Plaintiff to include in the plaint a devolution of title that commences from an original owner who had the sole ownership to the corpus or from original owners who had ownership to the entire corpus. It must be mentioned here that it is impractical and impossible to mention an original owner/ original owners who held the property in its entirety many generations ago unless such facts can be found on documents such as deeds or land registry entries because any other reference to such an original owner or original owners has to be depend on hearsay evidence and not on personal knowledge of the fact, and as such, on such occasions the Plaintiff may face difficulties in proving his pedigree. With regard to what is discussed above it is pertinent to note that Law does not compel one to do impossible things (Lex non cogit ad impossiblia). If one applies the said principle to the case at hand, law does not expect the Plaintiff to reveal what the Plaintiff does not know or cannot ascertain. Now I would prefer to refer to some case laws that has some relevancy to what was discussed above even though some of them were decided in terms of the Partition Ordinance which had similar provisions.

In Sinchi Appu V Wijegunasekara 6 N L R 1, it was held that a person claiming to be the owner of an undivided share of a land and to be therefore entitled to possession of it, is competent to maintain an action to have that partitioned. Gunawardene V Baby Nona 47 N L R 31 also have expressed the same view. In Appuhamy V Samaranayaka 19 N L R 403 at 405, Sampayo J has expressed that section 2 of the Ordinance which requires the Plaintiff or Plaintiffs to state certain particulars in the plaint, including the names and residences of all the co-owners and mortgagees, expressly provides that this shall be done so far as the said matters or things or any of them shall be known to him or them.

It is important to state what was expressed in Magilin Perera V Abraham Perera (1986) 2 Sri L R 208 at 210.

"When a partition action is instituted, the plaintiff must perforce indicate an original owner or owners of the land. A Plaintiff having to commence at some point, such owner or owners need not necessarily be the very first owner or owners and, even if it be so claimed, such claim need not necessarily and in every instance be correct because when such an original owner is shown it could theoretically and actually be possible to go back to still and earlier owner. Such questions being rooted in antiquity it would be correct to say as a general statement that it could be well nigh impossible to trace back the very first owner of the land. The fact that there was or may have been an original owner or owners in the same chain of title, prior to the one shown by the plaintiff if it be so established need not necessarily result in the case of the plaintiff failing. In like manner if it be seen that original owner is in point of fact someone lower down in the chain of title than the one shown by the plaintiff that again by itself need not ordinarily defeat the plaintiff's action. Therefore, in actual practice it is the usual, and in my view sensible, attitude of the Courts that it would not be reasonable to expect proof within very high degrees of probability on question such as those relating to the original ownership of land. Courts by and large countenance infirmities in this regard, if infirmities they be, in approach which is realistic rather than legalistic, as to do otherwise would be to put the relief given by partition decrees outside the reach of very many persons seeking to end their co-ownership."

The above show that with regard to matters relating to original ownership, Courts have to take a sensible and realistic approach. In the matter at hand, the Plaintiff has shown an original ownership for the 1/3rd he claims. It is not realistic to expect him to reveal what he does not know. He has made the 1st to 3rd Defendants who occupy the corpus as they may have a claim. The claim presented by the said 1st to 3rd Defendants is based on inheritance and prescription. Reasonable Court cannot expect that the Plaintiff could have ascertained the pedigree that gives them rights as it is not recorded anywhere. It must be noted that the partition Act provides for registration of lis pendens, public notice of institution of the action and notices for the claimants before the surveyor etc. to give notice of the action for anyone who has an interest in the corpus to come and present his claim.

In that backdrop, I do not find that said grounds that the plaint is not in accordance with the section 2,4 and 5 of the Partition Act and the Plaintiff has failed to disclose an original owner and devolution of title from the said original owner cannot be considered as viable grounds to hold that the decision of the High Court is correct. Partition action is intended to terminate the co-ownership. If the Plaintiff can prove that he is a co-owner and his share in the corpus through a pedigree presented to court, it is sufficient to get his share partitioned. It is not necessary to prove that co-ownership exist among Plaintiff and all the Defendants.

It is true that as learned High Court Judges have stated in their judgment that the Plaintiff,1st to 3rd Defendants and the 4th Defendants have claimed title to the corpus through three separate pedigrees but the finding of the learned High Court Judges that the learned District Judge accepted three different pedigrees cannot be considered as correct because the learned District judge has not accepted a pedigree commencing from the Oushadahamy or Punchirala who are the original owners in 1st to 3rd Defendants' pedigree and 4th Defendant's pedigree respectively. If the pedigree as presented by the 1st to 3rd Defendant and 4th Defendant were accepted then there could have been a conflict between pedigrees. Learned District Judge has accepted the pedigree of the Plaintiff for 1/3rd share which is based on title passed through deeds marked P1 to P4, which deeds were not challenged when tendered in evidence.

Thus, the learned District Judge has accepted the complete pedigree of the Plaintiff for the 1/3rd share he claims and found that Plaintiff is a co-owner in the corpus. Thus, there is a balance of another 2/3rd share in the corpus. Moreover, the learned District Judge, while denying the pedigree commencing from Oushadahamy to the whole land and prescriptive rights claimed by the 1st to 3rd Defendants, on the evidence before the court, has found that at one time, Kirimudiyanse was an owner for 1/5th share of the corpus as a co-owner. Aforesaid 1/5th share belongs to Kirimudiyanse could be accommodated within the aforesaid balance 2/3rd share. Considering the evidence placed before the District Court, similarly learned District Judge has not accepted the original ownership of Punchirala as per the pedigree of the 4th Defendant. Instead, the learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that at one time, Appuhamy and Podimenike mentioned in the pedigree of the 4th Defendant were entitled to 1/5th share each and at one time, they were co-owners. Aforesaid 2/5th share belonged to Appuhamy and Podimenike could be accommodated within the aforesaid balance 2/3rd share along with the 1/5th share belonged to Kirimudiyanse as a co-owner at one time. After considering the evidence placed before the District Court learned District Judge has decided that 1st to 3rd Defendants have inherited certain shares as mentioned in the District Court judgment. Thus, Part of the entitlement of Kirimudiyanse have devolved on the 1st to 3rd Defendants through Ariyapala, one of the children of Kirimudiyanse and rest of the share of Kirimudiyanse has been kept unallotted for the other children of Kirimudiyanse to be claimed by them or people who gain rights through them. Similarly, while taking into considering of the execution of deed marked 4V2 by Appuhamy, the learned District Judge has decided that 1/60 from the Corpus has been devolved on aforesaid Podimenike making her share entitlement 1/5+1/60= 13/60. The learned District Judge has decided that said 3/60th has devolved on the 4th Defendant through inheritance. The learned District Judge has kept the shares that should go to the other vendees in 4V2 unallotted in their name to be claimed later by them or people who gain rights through them. The learned District Judge has kept 39/180 share unallotted which includes the balance belonged to aforesaid Appuhamy after executing 4V2 and the share for which no original co-owner was proved. Thus, in my view, it is incorrect to say that the Learned District Judge has accepted three separate Pedigrees. What the learned District Judge has done was to allot shares as per the proved co-ownership and proved entitlements. In other words, the learned District Judge has accepted the original ownership for 1/3rd of one Arnoldhamine who was the predecessor in title to the original owner mentioned in the plaint and also accepted the Plaintiff's pedigree through which co-ownership for that 1/3rd share devolve on the Plaintiff. Further, it appears that the learned District Judge has considered on evidence before him that, at one time, Kirimudiyanse, Appuhamy and Podimenike had 1/5th each as original co-owners. Thus, the learned District Judge has decided to allocate shares in the manner described in the Judgment of the District Court based on the proved co-ownership and share entitlements. This cannot be interpreted as acceptance of three different pedigrees as stated in the Judgment of the High Court.

The 1st to 3rd Respondents in their written submissions taken up the position that the Plaintiff failed to prove common ownership of the land. As mentioned before in this judgment, the Plaintiff has proved his pedigree and paper title to the corpus. The deeds (P1 to P4) he marked in that regard were not objected. As explained before in this judgment these deeds become evidence for all the purposes of this case and the said deeds establish that the Plaintiff has paper title to the corpus. As explained above, the prescriptive claim of the 1st to 3rd Defendants should fail. Thus, the Plaintiff's entitlement to the undivided 1/3rd has been established and hence his right to possess is also established – see Leisha and another V Simon and another (2002) 1 Sri L R 148. This evidence is sufficient to prove that the Plaintiff is a co-owner. It is not the task of the Plaintiff to prove who are the other co-owners, because by proving his entitlement is only to an undivided 1/3rd , the facts itself indicates that he is a co-owner with owners of other undivided 2/3rd of the corpus. However, the learned District Judge based on evidence has found that 1st to 3rd and 4th Defendants are co-owners to the Corpus.

For the reasons given above, the questions of law allowed by this Court on 25.06.2019, namely questions of law as mentioned in paragraph 16 (a)(e)(f) and (g) of the Petition dated 30.08.2018 can be answered as follows.

a) Is the determination of the High Court that the plaint should have been rejected in limina as Plaintiff has not complied with sections 2,4,5 and 7 of the Partition Act, is perverse and erroneous in law?

A. Answered in the affirmative.

e) Have the High Court Judges erred in law and in facts when the court decided that "the land cannot be partitioned as the Plaintiff has not disclosed the original owner of the land sought to be partitioned and devolution of title from the original owner?

A. Answered in the affirmative.

f) Have the High Court Judges erred in law and facts when they decided that learned District Judge erroneously accepted all three different devolutions of title to partition the land?

A. Answered in the Affirmative.

g) Has the High Court erred in law and facts when they decided that Plaintiff cannot maintain this action, in spite of the fact that Plaintiff has established that he has dominium to undivided 1/3rd share?

A. Answered in the Affirmative.

Hence, this Court decides to set aside the Judgment dated 25.07.2018 of the Civil Appellate High Court of Ratnapura while restoring the Judgment of the District Court.

This appeal is allowed with costs.

The Complainant – Respondent – Respondent – Appellant (hereinafter referred to as "the Appellant") instituted proceedings by filing a Certificate under Section 3 (D) (2) read with Section 53 and 63 of the Wages Board Ordinance No. 27 of 1941, as amended (hereinafter referred to as the Ordinance) before the Magistrate's Court of Chilaw, against the Respondent – Petitioner – Appellant – Respondent (hereinafter referred to as "the Respondent") in order to recover a sum of Rs. 300,000.51, as unpaid salaries of two workmen for the period from 01/06/2009 to 31/08/2011. After an inquiry, by permitting the Respondent to file objections as well as written submissions the learned Magistrate delivered the Order dated 18/12/2004 directing to recover the said amount from the Respondent as a fine.

Being aggrieved by the said Order, the Respondent made a revision application before the High Court of North Western Province, holden at Chilaw. The learned High Court Judge delivered his order dated 11.03.2015 refusing to issue Notices on the Respondent and affirming the order of the learned Magistrate of Chilaw.

The Respondent appealed against the said order to the Court of Appeal seeking to set aside the said High Court Order. In this particular application made to the Court of Appeal, the main argument of the Appellant was that the certificate filed by the Respondent is not a valid certificate within the meaning of the Section 3D (2) of the Ordinance, as it does not contain necessary details of the workmen and does not identify the type of work done by the workmen which is an imperative requirement of the law. Based on this argument and upon the perusal of the certificate filed in terms of Section 3D (2) of the Ordinance, the Court of Appeal held that the alleged certificate which is in the appeal brief at page 463 does not provide particulars as required under the Ordinance. Accordingly, the court observed that the said certificate cannot be considered as a certificate valid in law. Thus, the court allowed the appeal and set aside the Order of the learned High Court Judge and the Order of the learned Magistrate.

Being aggrieve by the said Judgment of the Court of Appeal, the Appellant made this application to the Supreme Court on 02/08/2019, seeking special leave from this Court.

When this matter was supported on 15/12/2021 for granting of special leave, this Court was inclined to grant Special Leave on the questions of law appeared in Paragraph 13 (a), (b) and (f) of the Petition dated 02/08/2019, which states as follows:

(a) Has the Court of Appeal erred in law when referring to a Certificate at page 7 of the Judgment, filed under Section3D (2) of the Wages Boards Ordinance in another case bearing No. 49888 in the Magistrate's Court of Chilaw, to the facts of this case where the certificate was filed in case No. 59666 in Magistrate's Court of Chilaw?

(b) Has the Court of Appeal failed to consider and/or completely overlooked that the certificate and the Notice filed in terms of Section 3D (2) and 46 (2) of the Wages Boards Ordinance in the Magistrates Court bearing No. 59666 in the Appeal brief at pages 54, 55, 56, 36, 37 and 38 which set out the particulars as required by law?

(f) Has the Court of Appeal failed to consider and/or completely overlooked the fact that the Respondent never raised any objection before the learned Magistrate or the Honourable High Court Judge that the certificate contains no particulars/ or insufficient particulars of the sum claimed allegedly due?

As observed by this Court, the Court of Appeal Judgement was solely based on the Certificate filed against the Respondent. In their order the Court of Appeal held;

"The Certificate filed in terms of Section 3D (2) in the appeal brief at page 463 does not give particulars as required, constitutes sufficient reason to prevent the execution of the certificate. Therefore, the said certificate cannot be considered as a certificate valid in law" (Volume 1, Page 95-97).

However, in the present case, the main argument of the Appellant is that, although the Court of Appeal relied on the certificate at Page 463 of the brief, the said certificate is in respect of another case which is No. 49888 filed in Magistrate's Court of Chilaw. The learned Counsel for the Appellant argued that this is not the correct certificate, since the correct certificates are at pages 36, 37 and 38 as well as 54, 55 and 56 of the brief. On perusal of those documents filed relating to the Magistrate's Court of Chilaw Case No. 59666, which is the number allocated to the main case, it is revealed that the correct documents have been filed accordingly and it provides all the necessary details including the number of employees as well as the individual amounts due and the basis therefor.

It is clear that, the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal has arrived at its decision by oversight. Therefore, it can be concluded that the certificate referred to in the Court of Appeal Judgment at page 7 does not relate to the present case, as it was in another case bearing No 49888 in the Magistrate's Court of Chilaw. It is also observed that the learned Judges in the Court of Appeal has failed to consider the correct Certificate and the Notice filed in terms of Section 3D (2) and 46 (2) of the Wages Board Ordinance in the Magistrate's Court Case bearing No. 59666 which is available in the Appeal brief which set out the particulars as required by law.

On the other hand, when scrutinizing the issues raised before the lower Courts, it is also revealed that the Respondent did not even raise the question of inadequacy of details in the certificate before the Magistrate's Courts or even before the High Court. This is because the main objection of the Respondent was totally based on the non-existence of a Wages Board for the steel industry. It is clear that this question on the necessary details of the said certificate was raised for the first time before the Court of Appeal and the learned Judges in the Court of Appeal have overlooked the fact that the Respondent never raised the said objection before the Magistrate's Court or the High Court.

I therefore answer all three questions of law raised in the instant case in the affirmative. For the reasons given in this Judgment we allow the appeal and set aside the Order made by the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal. We affirm the Order made by the learned Magistrate and the learned Judge of the High Court of the North Western Province holden in Chilaw.

Appeal allowed.

Jayantha Jayasuriya, PC, CJ.

The applicant-appellant-respondent (hereinafter referred to as the respondent) filed an application in the labour tribunal alleging that the employer-respondent-appellant (hereinafter referred to as the appellant) constructively terminated her services. The respondent sought inter alia re-employment with back wages or reasonable compensation if re-employment is not granted. The appellant pleaded that no relief should be granted to the respondent as no termination of services had taken place. Therefore, it was further pleaded that the respondent is not entitled to any of the reliefs prayed for and moved that the application be dismissed.

The labour tribunal after an inquiry, by its order dated 15 January 2013 dismissed the application on the basis that the tribunal lacks jurisdiction as the respondent failed to establish termination of services. The president of the labour tribunal held that proof of termination, either actual or constructive is necessary for an application under section 31B (1)(a) of the Industrial Disputes Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act), to succeed. Being dissatisfied with the aforesaid order, the respondent invoked the appellate jurisdiction of the Provincial High Court under section 31D of the Act and the High Court pronounced its Order on 14 September 2015. The learned High Court judge in his order interalia held that the respondent should be accorded with an opportunity to report for work with half wages for the period of absence.

The appellant is impugning the aforesaid order of the High Court.

This Court granted special leave to appeal on the following two questions:

(a) Has the learned High Court judge erred and / or misdirected himself in law by proceeding to hold that the respondent be reinstated in the employment of the petitioner with half wages, after having correctly concluded that the employment of the respondent has not been terminated, and that the said Application of the respondent could not have been maintained due to a patent lack of jurisdiction?

(b) After having correctly arrived at the conclusion that there is no reason to interfere with the decision of the learned president of the labour tribunal, has the learned High Court judge erred and / or misdirected himself in law by proceeding to award the respondent the relief of reinstatement with half wages, without dismissing and / or disallowing the aforesaid appeal filed by the respondent?

The learned High Court judge in his impugned judgment had initially reached the conclusion that the appellant has not terminated the services of the respondent and therefore the labour tribunal lacks patent jurisdiction. Accordingly, the learned High Court judge had further decided that there is no reason to interfere with the order of the labour tribunal.

Both the president of the labour tribunal as well as the learned High Court had examined in detail, all the evidence pertaining to the issue whether the initial suspension of work followed by interdiction of the respondent pending the disciplinary inquiry amounts to a 'constructive termination' in the given situation. Sequence of events commencing from 11 October 2008 up to the date on which the respondent made her application to the labour tribunal namely 29 January 2009 had been considered in the context of the evidence of the witnesses and correspondence between the appellant and the respondent. Such evidence reveal that the refusal of the respondent to comply with certain directions of the management had taken place on 11 October 2008 and the respondent has been placed on interdiction on 29 October 2008, initially being temporally suspended on 15 October 2008. There had been a series of correspondence between the two parties and the respondent made the application to the labour tribunal on 29 January 2009, while the disciplinary inquiry was scheduled for 10 February 2009. The respondent in her evidence at the labour tribunal in the cross-examination had admitted that failure to attend the disciplinary inquiry was a grave error on her part.

However, the learned High Court judge having concurred with the decision of the labour tribunal that no constructive termination had taken place and therefore there is no reason to interfere with the decision of the labour tribunal had thereafter proceeded to hold that the respondent should be accorded with an opportunity to report for work with half wages for the period of absence. In arriving at this decision the learned Judge had observed that the respondent would lose an opportunity to obtain any relief, as she is not reporting for work. The learned Judge had observed that such pronouncement is warranted when all surrounding facts and circumstances are examined in a just and equitable manner.

The learned President's Counsel for the appellant contended that there is no legal basis for the High Court to have made this order after holding that the labour tribunal lacks patent jurisdiction.

However, the learned counsel for the respondent contended that the impugned order of the High Court is within the purview of sections 31B(4) and 31C(1) of the Act.

Section 31B(4) reads:

"Any relief or redress may be granted by a labour tribunal to a workman upon an application made under subsection (1) notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any contract of service between him and his employer"

Section 31C reads:

"Where an application under section 31B is made to a labour tribunal, it shall be the duty of the tribunal to make all such inquiries into that application and hear all such evidence as the tribunal may consider necessary, and thereafter make such order as may appear to the tribunal to be just and equitable".

Examination of both these sections clearly reflect that the exercise of powers vested on the labour tribunal by those provisions are restricted to situations where its jurisdiction is invoked by an application made under section 31B of the Act. The three matters for which relief or redress from a labour tribunal can be sought on an application made to a labour tribunal are stipulated in section 31B(1). The instance which is relevant to this appeal namely that termination of services of a workman by the employer is set out in Section 31B(1)(a). Therefore, proof of 'termination of services by the employer' is a necessary pre-requisite for a labour tribunal to grant any relief or redress to a workman who has made an application made under section 31B(1)(a).

In the instant matter, the learned president of the labour tribunal after careful analysis of the evidence placed at the inquiry had arrived at a finding of fact that the respondent failed to establish termination of her services. The learned High Court judge had neither found fault with this finding nor has set aside it. To the contrary he concurred with the finding of the learned president of the labour tribunal. Thus, both the president of the labour tribunal and the learned High Court judge found that the services of the respondent were not terminated. Under these circumstances, the respondent is not entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of the labour tribunal, in terms of section 31B(1)(a) of the Industrial Disputes Act.

Therefore, the learned president of the labour tribunal had correctly proceeded to dismiss the application of the respondent after holding that the respondent failed to establish termination of employment. However, the learned judge of the High Court had erred when he proceeded to hold that the respondent should be accorded with an opportunity to report for work with half wages for the period of absence, while holding that the respondent had no right to maintain the application and therefore there is no reason to interfere with the order of the learned president of the labour tribunal.

The Supreme Court in Arnolda v Gopalan 64 NLR 153, in reference to jurisdiction of labour tribunals under the Act, had observed that the "powers as well as its jurisdiction has to be looked for within the four corners of this statute…." (at 156-157). When a labour tribunal granting any relief or redress to a workman under section 31C of the Act, the just and equitable order must be fair to all parties (People's Bank v Gilbert Weerasinghe [2008] BLR 133 at 135) and that the labour tribunal does not have 'the freedom of the wild ass' in exercising powers vested on it under section 31C of the Act (Walker sons & Co Ltd v Fry, 68 NLR 73 at 99). Furthermore court had agreed with the view that "justice and equity can be measured not according to the urgings of a kind heart but only within the framework of the law" (Richard Peiris & Co Ltd v Wijesiriwardane, 62 NLR 233 at 235).

Hence, I am of the view that the relief granted in the order of the learned High Court Judge while exercising appellate jurisdiction, exceeded the original jurisdiction of the Labour Tribunal.

In view of my findings above I proceed to answer both questions of law on which Special Leave to Appeal was granted in the affirmative and allow the appeal. The Order of the Labour Tribunal is affirmed and the Judgment of the High Court is accordingly set aside.

Argued On : 17th January, 2019

Decided On : 4th October, 2023

Priyantha Jayawardena PC, J

This is an appeal filed by the defendant-respondent-appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "appellant") to set aside the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy (hereinafter referred to as the "High Court"), which allowed the appeal filed by the plaintiff-appellant-respondent (hereinafter referred to as the "respondent") against the judgment of the District Court refusing to grant a divorce to the plaintiff.

Facts

The appellant stated that she got married to the respondent on the 27th of November, 1980. However, both of them were living in their parents' houses. Nonetheless, the respondent frequently visited the appellant at her parents' house, and both of them considered the said house as their matrimonial home.

It was further stated that in 1990, the appellant and the respondent shifted to a new house built by them (however, this fact was disputed by the respondent) on a land owned by his parents, and thereafter, they considered the said house as their matrimonial home. Two daughters and a son were born to them.

The appellant stated that the respondent instituted action in the District Court of Matale on the 15th of May, 2006 praying for a divorce on the ground that she was guilty of constructive malicious desertion. The appellant further stated that the respondent had pleaded in his plaint that her behaviour towards him changed after some time and she had started quarrelling with the respondent for no apparent reason. The respondent in his plaint further stated that he tolerated the hostile conduct of the appellant with great difficulty as he wanted to continue with the marriage.

Furthermore, the respondent stated that a land dispute arose between his father and the appellant's mother, and a case was filed in the District Court of Matale. Due to the aforesaid land dispute, the situation became worse as the appellant frequently quarrelled with the respondent and treated him in a cruel manner.

Moreover, being unable to tolerate the ill-treatment any further, the respondent left the matrimonial home on or around the 11th of July, 2004 and shifted to a house built by him on a land owned by his parents. Thereafter, he took steps to divorce the appellant. However, as a result of the intervention of his relatives and friends once again, both of them started living in the same house.

The respondent further stated that after some time the appellant started to ill-treat him and neglected her duties as a wife. Being unable to bear the ill-treatment, he left the matrimonial home on or around the 5th of January, 2006 leaving some of his belongings in the said home.

The respondent stated that thereafter, he had been living at his brother's house, which is 500 meters away from where the appellant was residing. Further, since his belongings were still in the matrimonial home where the appellant was residing, he visited the said house from time to time to get his belongings when necessary. Moreover, the appellant earns an income from selling paddy and other crops owned by him and has no other source of income.

In the circumstances, the respondent prayed inter alia;

(a) for a divorce on the ground of constructive malicious desertion on the part of the appellant, and
(b) to evict the appellant from the respondent's property.

The appellant further stated that thereafter, she filed an answer denying the allegations made by the respondent in his plaint. The appellant pleaded in her answer that the matrimonial home was built with the income earned by both the respondent and herself. Further, the appellant stated that it was the respondent who abused her and their children and took steps to chase them from the matrimonial home.

Furthermore, she stated that on or around the 9th of July, 2006 the respondent had assaulted the younger daughter and the appellant and chased them out of the matrimonial home. Moreover, the respondent had given their matrimonial home to his brother and his wife and had rented out two of the rooms in the said house.

The appellant further pleaded that the respondent owned several properties and possesses a fixed deposit amounting to Rs. 1,000,000/-. In addition to those, he earns a monthly income of Rs. 30,000/- from farming. Moreover, she had no intention of divorcing the respondent and wishes to continue with their marriage. In the circumstances, the appellant in her answer prayed, inter alia;

(a) to grant an Order directing the respondent to lead to a good family life with the appellant
(b) to grant the divorce on the basis that the respondent had constructively deserted the appellant if the court is granting a divorce,
(c) to order the respondent to pay permanent alimony amounting to Rs. 1,000,000/-,
(d) to give the matrimonial home to the appellant and their children.

Judgment of the District Court

The trial proceeded inter parte, and upon the conclusion of the trial, the learned District Judge delivered the judgment holding that the respondent has failed to prove any of the allegations made by him against the appellant. Further, it was held that in the complaint made by the appellant to the police on the 14th of July, 2006 the respondent had admitted that he evicted the appellant and their children from the matrimonial home. Furthermore, at the trial, the respondent admitted that he had given the said house to his brother and had rented out a few rooms of the said house. Moreover, at the trial, it was proved that the respondent was guilty of constructive malicious desertion. In the circumstances, the learned District Judge dismissed the plaint filed by the respondent.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the learned District Judge, the respondent appealed to the High Court on the following grounds;

(i) the evidence led at the trial had not been evaluated properly by the learned District Judge, and
(ii) the judgment is contrary to law.

Judgment of the High Court

Having considered the said appeal, the learned judges of the High Court allowed the appeal and set aside the judgment of the District Court on the basis that there was sufficient evidence to prove that the respondent had to leave the matrimonial home due to the conduct of the appellant. It was held that the respondent has been very specific in stating to court how the appellant had been abusive towards the respondent and that the appellant had failed to perform her duties as a wife. Moreover, even though the trial judge held that the appellant was not cross-examined on the alleged harassment caused to the respondent, the evidence shows that the appellant was cross examined on this point. Hence, the appellant is not entitled to alimony on the basis that the desertion was not due to the fault of the respondent.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the High Court, the appellant sought Leave to Appeal from this court, and this court granted Leave to Appeal on the following questions of law;

(i) Is the judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy wrong in law?
(ii) Did the Honourable Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy err in law in failing to analyze and evaluate and ascribe the relevant probative values to the evidence lead in the instant District Court case and in overturning the Learned District Judge’s judgment?
(iii) Did the Honourable Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy err in law in holding that the defendant is guilty of the matrimonial fault of constructive malicious desertion of the plaintiff?

(iv) Did the Honourable Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy err in law in failing to appreciate that the plaintiff's evidence was ipse dixit evidence?

(v) Did the Honourable Civil Appellate High Court err in law in erroneously holding that the defendant had admitted that the plaintiff was compelled to leave the matrimonial home due to the behavior of the defendant?

(vi) Did the Honorable Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy err in law in holding that the defendant is guilty of matrimonial fault of constructive malicious desertion of the plaintiff when there was no clear cogent evidence to evince such?"

During the course of the submissions of the learned counsel for the appellant, he informed the court that the court need not consider the 1st and 5th questions of law stated above.

Did the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy err in law in holding that the defendant is guilty of the matrimonial fault of constructive malicious desertion?

In the instant appeal, both parties claim that their spouses maliciously deserted them. Hence, it is necessary to consider the evidence led at the trial to ascertain;

(a) whether there is evidence to prove the malicious desertion, and
(b) if there is evidence to prove malicious desertion, which party had deserted the spouse.

Evidence at the trial

At the trial, the respondent admitted that the appellant left the matrimonial home because she was assaulted by him.

"ප්‍ර: තමුන්ට යෝජනා කරනවා විත්තිකාරිය නිවසින් ගිහින් තිබෙන්නේ තමන් පහර දුන්න නිසා කියලා?

උ: එහෙමයි"

Moreover, in the Police complaint made by the respondent on the 14th of July, 2006 he stated that he had chased the appellant and the children from their matrimonial home.

"මම එයාලා ගෙදරින් එලවලා ඉන්නේ"

The above admission of the respondent was corroborated by the evidence given by their daughter and son at the trial.

The evidence of Sandhya Kumari Ratnayake, the daughter is as follows:

"ප්‍ර: මා තමුන්ට යෝජනා කරනවා තමුන්ගේ පියාට වෛවාහික නිවසින් පිටවීමට සිදු වුනා කියලා?

පි: නැහැ ස්වාමීනි අපිව එලවලා තාත්තා ජීවත් වෙනවා."

Dinesh Prasanna Kumara Ratnayake, the son, gave evidence and stated:

"37/ඒ ගෙදරින් මගේ සහෝදරියට, මට සහ මගේ මවට පිටවන්න සිදු වුනා. එහෙම සිදු වුනේ පියා ගහලා පැන්නුවා."

Furthermore, the appellant stated in her evidence at the trial that it was the respondent who harassed her and the children and evicted them from the matrimonial home. The above position was admitted by the respondent under cross examination;

"ප්‍ර: තමුන්ට යෝජනා කරනවා විත්තිකාරිය නිවසින් ගිහින් තියෙන්නේ තමුන් පහර දුන්න නිසා කියලා

උ: එහෙමයි"

The appellant further stated that on the 9th of July, 2007 the respondent assaulted their daughter, Sandhya Kumari, with a mamoty. A complaint was made regarding the said incident to the Dambulla Police Station on the 10th of July, 2006. Thereafter, on the 4th of October, 2006 the Police instituted proceedings at the Magistrate's Court of Dambulla against the respondent. This incident was also corroborated by both the son and the daughter. Furthermore, the respondent admitted going to the Mediation Board for assaulting their daughter.

"ප්‍ර: එහෙම නම් මම මතක් කර දෙන්නම්, සමත මණ්ඩලයට ගියාද දෙවෙනි දුවට ගහලා

උ: එහෙමයි ස්වාමීනි"

Although the respondent alleged that he left the matrimonial home because of the constructive malicious desertion on the part of the appellant, the evidence led at the trial proves that the respondent continued to live in the said home. In fact, the respondent admitted in his evidence that at the time of instituting action in the District Court, he was residing in the matrimonial home.

ප්‍ර: තමුන් පදිංචි වෙලා සිටිය තැන ලිපිනය මොකද්ද?

උ: එහෙමයි ස්වාමිනි

The answer by the appellant and her evidence led at the trial shows that she refused to grant a divorce to the respondent as she wants to resume cohabitation. At the trial, the appellant stated that she cannot afford to get a divorce as she has two children who are of marriageable age.

"මට දික්කාසාද වෙන්න බැහැ. ළමයින් දෙදෙනෙකු ඉන්නවා කසාද බඳින වයසේ."

It is pertinent to note that desertion is a continuing offence and thus, may be terminated at any time on proof of change of animus or factum. In this context, the respondent has to prove that the appellant conducted herself with the intention of bringing the conjugal life to an end.

Malicious Desertion

The grounds for divorce are set out in section 19 of the Marriage Registration Ordinance No. 19 of 1907, as amended, sets out the grounds for divorce. It reads thus;

> "(1) No marriage shall be dissolved during the lifetime of the parties except by judgment of divorce a vinculo matrimonii pronounced in some competent court.
>
> (2) Such judgment shall be founded either on the ground of adultery subsequent to marriage, or of malicious desertion*, or of incurable impotence at the time of such marriage.*
>
> (3) Every court in Sri Lanka having matrimonial jurisdiction is hereby declared competent to dissolve a marriage on any such ground."
>
> [emphasis added]

In addition to the above, section 608(2) of the Civil Procedure Code states;

> "Either spouse may—

(a) after the expiry of a period of two years from the entering of a decree of separation under subsection (1) by a Family Court, whether entered before or after the 15th day of December, 1977, or

(b) notwithstanding that no application has been made under subsection (1) but where there has been a separation a mensa et thoro for a period of seven years, apply to the Family Court by way of summary procedure for a decree of dissolution of marriage, and the court may, upon being satisfied that the spouses have not resumed cohabitation in any case referred to in paragraph (a), or upon the proof of the matters stated in an application made under the circumstances referred to in paragraph (b), enter judgment accordingly:

Provided that no application under this subsection shall be entertained by the court pending the determination of any appeal taken from such decree of separation. The provisions of sections 604 and 605 shall apply to such a judgment."

In the instant appeal, the respondent alleged that he had to leave the matrimonial home as he was treated in an inhumane and derogatory manner by the appellant. He further alleged that the appellant failed to perform her duties as a wife. Accordingly, the respondent relied on section 19(2) of the Marriage Registration Ordinance to obtain a divorce on the basis of constructive malicious desertion.

Malicious desertion may be either 'direct' or 'constructive' desertion. The difference between these two grounds depend on the factum element of the offence. In the case of 'direct' malicious desertion, the deserting spouse leaves the matrimonial home, while in 'constructive' malicious desertion, the innocent spouse is forced to leave the matrimonial home due to the expulsive acts of the other.

Desertion has been defined in the case of Silva v Missinona 26 NLR 116 as:

"deliberate and unconscientious, definite and final repudiation of the obligations of the marriage state… and it clearly implies something in the nature of a wicked mind."

It is pertinent to note that the factum of desertion has an important bearing on the burden of proof for desertion. Particularly when a spouse leaves the matrimonial home, there is a prima facie inference that the spouse had the required animus deserendi. The onus is then shifted to the spouse to rebut the said presumption by proof of justa causa, in the absence of which the actual desertion will be established. On the other hand, in the case of constructive malicious desertion, the spouse who is out of the matrimonial home must show that the other spouse has acted with the intention of putting an end to the marriage.

Cruelty by one spouse compels the other to leave the matrimonial home

The respondent stated in his evidence that the appellant frequently quarrelled with him and ill-treated him, which resulted in him leaving the matrimonial home.

Cruelty by one spouse, which renders cohabitation intolerable for the other, amounts to constructive malicious desertion by the offending spouse. A similar view was expressed in Somawathie Dias v Alwis* 66 CLW 30, where it was held as follows:

> "cruelty need not necessarily be physical cruelty inflicted personally by the defendant on the applicant. It may be physical or mental cruelty caused by persons whom the defendant has the power to remove from the matrimonial home."

However, there is no evidence to prove that the appellant treated the respondent in a cruel manner which compelled him to leave the matrimonial home. On the contrary, the aforementioned evidence led at the trial show that the respondent had chased the appellant and their children from the matrimonial home.

Termination of Desertion

Conclusive evidence of a settled intention to terminate the conjugal relationship is best illustrated by proof of abortive efforts for reconciliation. Further, if the offer to reconcile made by the deserting spouse is rejected by the other spouse, the tables will be turned and the opposing spouse will be held liable for desertion. A genuine offer of reconciliation was described in Canekeratne v Canekeratne (supra) as follows:

> "It is only genuine if there is a fixed and settled intention to offer a resumption of marital life under reasonable conditions, and it will not be fixed and settled intention if it is a mere fluctuating desire to resume cohabitation."

In the instant appeal, the appellant had not sought a decree of divorce in her answer filed in the District Court. Further, she had prayed the Court to direct the respondent to commence the married life with her. Furthermore, the evidence of the appellant shows that she did not want to divorce the respondent and wanted to continue with the marriage. Moreover, when the maintenance application filed by the appellant in the Magistrate's Court of Dambulla was taken up, she had informed her wish to resume the marriage, which was refused by the respondent. Further, at the trial, the appellant categorically stated that she does not want a divorce as she has children of marriageable age. This position was discussed in Muthukumarasamy v Parameshwary* 78 NLR 493, where it was held as follows:

> "termination of desertion can take place by a supervening animus revertendi, coupled with a bona fide approach to the deserted spouse with a view to resumption of life together; and that a deserted spouse must always, until presentation of his or her plaint*, affirm the marriage and be ready to take back the deserting spouse."*

In the instant appeal, the plaint was filed on the 15th of May, 2006 while the appellant had made the offer to reconcile the disputes among them on the 9th of May, 2007 when the maintenance application was taken up in the Magistrate's Court. Further, the evidence led at the trial shows that the respondent had not left the matrimonial home even at the time he gave evidence at the trial. On the contrary, it was revealed that he chased the appellant and their children from the matrimonial home.

Did the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy err in law in failing to analyse and evaluate the evidence led in the District Court case?

The learned judge of the High Court set aside the judgment of the District Court on the basis that there was sufficient evidence to prove that the respondent had to leave the matrimonial home due to the conduct of the appellant.

In evaluation of the evidence given by a witness at a trial, the evidence should be considered as a whole, and the answers given to certain questions either in evidence in chief or in cross examination shall not be considered in isolation. Further, a careful consideration of the totality of the evidence led at the trial shows that there is overwhelming evidence before the District Court to prove that the appellant was not responsible for the offence of committing the matrimonial offence of constructive desertion. On the contrary, the respondent admitted in his evidence that he chased the appellant and the children from the matrimonial house.

The trial judges have the benefit of seeing the witnesses giving evidence and it facilitates observing the demeanour of the witnesses which is useful in evaluating the evidence. In fact, the demeanour of a witness is one of the matters taken into consideration in accepting or rejecting the evidence of a witness. However, the appellate courts do not have the opportunity of seeing the witnesses giving evidence when hearing appeals. Thus, as a practice the appellate courts do not interfere with the findings of facts of the trial judges unless such findings are perverse.

The above view was expressed by the Privy Council in Fradd v Brown & Co., Ltd.,* 20 NLR 282, where it was held that where the controversy is about the veracity of witnesses, immense importance attaches, not only to the demeanour of the witnesses, but also to the course of the trial, and the general impression left on the mind of the judge of the first instance, who saw and noted everything that took place in regard to what was said by one or other witnesses. It is rare that a decision of a judge of first instance on a point of fact purely is overruled by an appellate court. Further, a similar view was expressed in Shaik Alli v Jafferjee* 3 NLR 368.

Moreover, in Oberholzer v Oberholzer (1921) South African Law Reports Appellate Division 274, Innes CJ held:

> "These matrimonial cases throw a great responsibility upon a judge of the first instance; with the exercise of which we should be slow to interfere. He is able not only to estimate the credibility of the parties but to judge of their temperament and character. And we, who have not had the advantage of seeing and hearing them must be careful not to interfere, unless we are certain, on firm grounds, that he is wrong."

The learned High Court Judge held that there was sufficient evidence to prove that the respondent had to leave the matrimonial home due to the conduct of the appellant. As stated above, at every point, the appellant was refusing to give a divorce to the respondent and repeatedly requested the respondent to start cohabiting with her. However, the respondent did not heed to any of those requests made by the appellant.

In N.J.Canekaratne v Mrs. R.M.D. Canekeratne 66 NLR 380, it was held:

> ".... it is correct to say that the conduct of the parties up to and including the time of the trial is relevant when the court has to decide who is to blame. Certainly up to the stage of entering decree nisi it is the duty of each party to provide a reasonable opportunity for a resumption of married life, and the party who deliberately and unreasonably refuses to accept that opportunity will be guilty of malicious desertion."
>
> [emphasis added]

Further, in N.J.Canekaratne v Mrs. R.M.D. Canekeratne (supra), it was held:

> "a wife who has been deserted by her husband is not liable to be ejected by her husband from the matrimonial home. (unless alternative accommodation or substantial maintenance to go and live elsewhere is offered to her)."
>
> [emphasis added]

A careful consideration of the evidence led at the trial shows that the appellant was not guilty of committing the matrimonial offence of constructive malicious desertion. Further, at the trial, it was proved that the respondent was guilty of constructive desertion of his spouse. In such circumstances, it is not possible to invoke section 19(2) of the Marriage Registration Ordinance against a spouse who is not guilty of matrimonial fault.

Hence, I am of the opinion that the respondent has failed to establish that the appellant was guilty of constructive malicious desertion.

I am also of the opinion that the High Court has failed to analyse and evaluate the evidence lead in the District Court and erred in setting aside the judgment of the learned District Judge and allowing the appeal filed by the respondent.

Conclusion

In the light of the above, I am of the opinion that the questions of law posed to this court should be answered as follows:

Did the Honourable Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy err in law in holding that the defendant is guilty of the matrimonial fault of constructive malicious desertion of the plaintiff?

Yes

Did the Honourable Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy err in law in failing to analyse and evaluate the evidence lead in the instant District Court case and in overturning the judgment of the learned District Judge?

Yes

In view of the foregoing answers, it is not necessary to consider the other questions of law stated above.

Therefore, the appeal is allowed. I set aside the judgment of the Civil Appellant High Court of Kandy in Appal No. CP/HCCA/81/2009 (FA) dated 20th of May, 2014 and affirm the judgment of the District Court of Matale delivered in D/38/41 dated 31st March, 2009.

I order no costs.

K.KUMUDINI WICKREMASINGHE J.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Provincial High Court holden in Galle dated 31.01.2019 affirming the decision of the Agrarian Board of Review dated 06.10.2016 pertaining to the recovery of rent due from an alleged tenant (ande) cultivator.

I will briefly set out the factual background of the case as follows:

The Complainant- Appellant- Respondent- Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the "Respondent") instituted action before the Agrarian Tribunal holden in Galle against one K. G. Piyadasa, the predecessor of the Substituted Respondent- Respondent- Appellant- Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the ""Appellant). The Respondent instituted two complaints in 2002 and 2003 under and by virtue of Section 10 (1) of the Agrarian Development Act, No. 46 of 2000 as amended by Act No. 46 of 2011, contending that he is the owner of the paddy land in question, of which the aforesaid K. G. Piyadasa, the husband of the Appellant, is the tenant cultivator who has failed to pay rent due to him. The said K. G. Piyadasa rejected the Respondent's contention of being the owner of the aforesaid land, and argued that the land was possessed and cultivated by his predecessors over a long period, and as such, that he is not a tenant cultivator of the land and therefore is not bound by law to pay rent to the Respondent.

This matter was initially called up to be heard before the Office of the Deputy Commissioner of Agrarian Development of Galle. Following the establishment of the Agrarian Tribunal both complaints of the Respondent which were of a similar nature were taken up for inquiry before the Tribunal as one matter.

Afterwards, an inquiry was held and the Agrarian Tribunal pronounced its decision dated 20.01.2016 dismissing the Respondent's complaint holding that the Respondent had failed to establish the fact that the said K. G. Piyadasa was a tenant cultivator of the land. Being aggrieved by the decision of the Tribunal, the Respondent preferred an appeal on 29.01.2016 to the Agrarian Board of Review. When the matter was in progress before the Board of Review, K. G. Piyadasa passed away, after which his wife, the Appellant, was substituted for him in the action.

The Board of Review pronounced its decision on 06.10.2016 allowing the Respondent's appeal and setting aside the Agrarian Tribunal decision. The aggrieved Appellant preferred an appeal against said decision to the High Court of the Southern Province holden in Galle praying to set aside the decision of the Board of Review. After both parties filed their written submissions, the Learned High Court Judge pronounced the judgment dated 31.01.2019 affirming the Board's decision and dismissing the Appellant's appeal without costs.
The Appellant now appeals to the Supreme Court seeking to set aside the judgment of the High Court.

This Court on 02/07/2019, has granted leave only on the following question of law referred to in the paragraph 28(1) (i) of the Petition, namely;

1) Whether the learned High Court judge in his judgment dated 31.01.2019 failed to consider that the Respondent failed in proving in the inquiry before the Agrarian Tribunal that the K.G Piyadasa was the Tennent Cultivator of the paddy land in dispute

This being a civil dispute there is a grave error and a misdirection in the decision of the Agrarian Tribunal, as the tribunal in its order at several places had considered that the dispute before it was one that had to be proved beyond reasonable doubt- vide pages 3 and 4 of the said decision. The learned High Court Judge has correctly identified this error and misdirection of the original order and has stated as follows;

"Having perused the record, it is found that the Agrarian Tribunal misdirected itself by seeking the standards of proof of the matter as of a criminal case i.e. beyond reasonable doubt. Where in an inquiry before an Agrarian Tribunal, matter before it need not be established by proof beyond reasonable doubt. Even where in an inquiry before a Labour Tribunal when it was alleged the reason for termination of employment was that the workman was guilty of criminal act involving moral turpitude, the allegation need not be established by proof beyond reasonable doubt. (Associated Battery Manufacturers Ceylon Ltd. Vs United Engineering Workers Union && N L R 451)
It gives a strong inference that the matters to be decided in an inquiry need not be proved beyond reasonable doubt. Agrarian Disputes are civil in nature and the complainant must establish the respondent's liability only according to the preponderance of evidence."

After finding the said misdirection relating to the standard of proof, the learned High Court judge has confirmed the finding of the Agrarian Board of Review as the learned Judge was of the view that the Appellant had never denied during the inquiry that he was an Ande Cultivator and Respondent's stand point on the Appellant had remained unchallenged.
To sustain the judgment of the learned High Court judge and to answer the aforementioned question of law, it is not sufficient to find a misdirection or error in relation to the standard of proof by the Agrarian Tribunal but it is necessary to see whether there were sufficient materials before the Agrarian Tribunal for the proof of the stance of the Respondent that the Appellant was the Tenant Cultivator of the paddy field in dispute. The Question of law allowed by this court when granting leave does not contemplate the validity of the paper title of the Respondent to the paddy land in dispute.

However, it is the contention of the Respondent that the Respondent holds good title to the land in question, named as "Walapalle Liyadda", situated in Thelikada, Galle. The Respondent had produced Deed of Transfer bearing No. 258 dated 19.01.1980, attested by P. D. G. Wimalarathne Notary Public, in support of his position that he had purchased the aforesaid property. He has produced the original of this deed which was more than 30 years old at the time of producing in evidence along with a photocopy for the perusal of the Tribunal. As per the order of the Tribunal even the extract of the folios of the land registry have been produced as P9. As per the said deed and the land registry folios the name of the paddy land is mentioned as "Walapalle Liyadde" and the extent is described as fifteen vee kurinis. Agricultural land register marked as P2 also confirm the existence of a paddy land named "Wallapalle Liyadde" of which the Respondent is the registered land owner. Through the deed marked P1 the Respondent has bought $1/10^{th}$ and $9/10^{th}$ (whole land) from 2 people. No evidence was placed before the Agrarian tribunal by the Appellant at least to say that the land in the deed and P2 is not the land Piyadasa and the Appellant enjoyed. It must be noted that the entries in the agricultural land register can be treated as prima facie proof of the facts stated therein- vide section 53(6) of the Agrarian Development Act No 46 of 2000. When P1 and P2 were marked, they were not challenged to indicate that the Respondent should further summon other witnesses to prove the authenticity of those documents. Even though, in P2 extent is described as 3 roods 30 perches, the boundaries described there in P2 tally with the boundaries found in the deed. It is true that there is no reference in P2 as to the time the said entries were made but the register is maintained by the officers of the relevant department, the respondent cannot be penalized for their lapses. P2 contains prima facie proof as to the paddy land and its owner even though it does not contain materials for the prima facie proof of that the Appellant's predecessor was the tenant cultivator.

The Respondent further has stated in evidence that K. G. Piyadasa, was his tenant cultivator, who had duly given the Respondent his share of the cultivation until the year 2001. In the aftermath of the failure of K. G. Piyadasa to pay the share due to him since the Maha cultivation season (කන්නය) of 2001, the Respondent instituted action before the Agrarian Tribunal.

The Respondent has further tendered a document marked P4, extract of the diary of the agrarian officer, Sugathadasa Ralahamy, to indicate that the rent was received for the years 1985 and 1986 from the Tenant cultivator Martin who was the father of said K G Piyadasa. This document also was not objected when it was produced. The diary of the former Agrarian officer would have been kept in the official custody of the Grama Niladari who certified photocopies of those entries and issued it to the Respondent. It is true some questions have been asked during cross examination to create some doubt or suspicion over these documents. This was not a criminal case to decide against the Respondent who was the complainant before the Agrarian Tribunal on certain doubts created through cross examination. As explained above this is where the Agrarian Tribunal misdirected itself and erred in deciding. The Respondent, as mentioned before, has placed sufficient material to show by prima facie evidence that he is the owner of the paddy land in dispute and along with the aforesaid documents has given oral evidence to say that that aforesaid Piyadasa was his tenant cultivator. It is common ground that the Appellant enjoys Property. If the Respondent is prima facie the owner and if there is nothing placed in evidence before the Tribunal against that, the Appellant and his predecessors must be trespassers, if not they must be licensees or Tenant Cultivators etc. under the Respondent. Respondent by marking certain documents, though some doubts were created through cross examination, and by giving oral evidence has taken up the position that Piyadasa and his predecessors were tenant cultivators.

The Respondent has also submitted extensive accounts of complaints made to officials attached to the Department of Agrarian Development on the grounds of irregular cultivation and non-payment of rent by Piyadasa. This shows that this is not a new stance taken up by the Respondent. The Respondent alleges that the Appellant was informed at numerous instances to participate at inquiries into the matter, which the Appellant had repeatedly refrained from doing. In particular, the Respondent submits a letter dated 21.05.2011 (marked ඇ8) issued following an ex-parte inquiry conducted before an official of the Agrarian Service Centre of Keradewala, Galle, which identified K. G. Piyadasa as the Respondent's tenant cultivator and ordered him to pay the owner's share due to the latter. Even though, the Appellant, in her written submissions dated 09.08.2019 vigorously denies the contents and credibility of the aforesaid letter, written submission is not evidence.

At the inquiry before the tribunal, the appellant has not placed anything or given at least oral evidence to deny the stance of the Respondent. In my view mere doubts created through cross examination or denials through written submissions do not suffice. Against the evidence placed by the Respondent, the Appellant should have explained how they possess the paddy land. If the Appellant has a paper title or she is a licensee or a person who holds the property on the strength of some other relationship she should have naturally placed that evidence before the tribunal. If the Appellant has become the owner of the property by prescription, she should have placed such evidence before the tribunal. The silence shown without placing evidence against the documentary and oral evidence placed before the tribunal on behalf of the Respondent, indicates that the Appellant had nothing to place against the said evidence led before the tribunal. In my view the balance should tilt in favour of the Respondent.

Upon perusing the evidence submitted at the inquiry before the Tribunal, it appears that the Respondent had succeeded in validly proving his paper title to the land in question by preponderance of evidence.

Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, it can conclusively be determined that the Complainant- Appellant- Respondent- Respondent had succeeded in proving, on a balance of probabilities, that, firstly, he is the lawful owner of the land in question, secondly, that the predecessor of the Appellant, K. G. Piyadasa, had cultivated the land as a tenant cultivator, and thirdly, that the aforesaid K. G. Piyadasa had defaulted in paying the rents due since the maha season of 2001.

Thereby, it is noted that both the Agricultural Board of Review, by order dated 06.10.2016, and the High Court of the Southern Province holden in Galle, by judgment dated 31.01.2019 had correctly determined that the Appellant owes an arrears of rent to the Respondent.

Under these circumstances and for reasons elucidated in my judgment, I see no reason to interfere with the finding of the learned High Court Judge. This appeal is accordingly dismissed. The Court orders no costs.

COUNSEL: Anil Silva, PC with Amaan Bandara for the 3rd Accused-Appellant-Appellant.

Ms. Lakmali Karunanayake DSG for the Complainant-Respondents-Respondents.

WRITTEN SUBMISSIONS: 3rd Accused-Appellant-Appellant on 21st December 2010.

Complainant-Respondents-Respondents on 30th April 2013 and 28th July 2016.

ARGUED ON: 16th May 2023.

DECIDED ON: 23rd November 2023.

S. THURAIRAJA, PC, J.

The 3rd Accused-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "Appellant") preferred this appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Badulla (hereinafter referred to as the "High Court") dated 15th July 2010. The matter was taken up for Argument on 16th May 2023, and the Counsel for the Appellant submitted that he will be confining this appeal to two questions of law stated as follows:

(i) Whether the evidence of witnesses was led contrary to Section 192 of the Criminal Procedure Act No.15 of 1979?

(ii) Whether all Accused were acquitted on Counts No. 2, 3 and 4, and can the Appellant be convicted on Count No.1, namely under Section 140 of the Penal Code?

I find it pertinent to set out the material facts of the case prior to addressing the question of law before us.

The 3rd Accused-Appellant-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the "Appellant") and two others were charged in the Magistrates Court of Badulla on four counts, namely,

1. At Mahathanna Division, Kandegedara within the jurisdiction of this court on 23rd December 1999 you being a member of an unlawful assembly with the common intention of causing unjust harm or other criminal act to Marimuttu Tirruppan of No. 13/1, Mhathenna Division, Sarniya Estate, Kandegedara committed an offence punishable under Section 140 of the Penal Code.
2. In the same transaction you with some other people being members of the unlawful assembly described in charge 1 to carry out the common intention or intentions of the said unlawful assembly did cause hurt by assaulting with hands, stones and sticks and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 146 of the Penal Code.

3. In the same transaction you did commit robbery of the properties worth Rs. 92700/- belonging to Marimuttu Tirupathy and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 382 read with Section 146 of the Penal Code.
4. In the same transaction you with the common intention of causing unjust harm or loss to the properties of Marimuttu Thirupathy and knowing the same will happen did pelt stones to the house of Marimuttu Thirupathy and thereby committed mischief to the properties of the said house worth Rs. 500/- an offence punishable under Section 140 read with Section 146 of the Penal Code.

The 1st and 2nd Accused and the Appellant pleaded not guilty, and the case proceeded to trial. On 18th September 2002, the prosecution concluded the evidence in chief of prosecution witness No. 1 Marimuttu Murugayya. In giving evidence the witness stated that, on 23rd December 1999 the 1st and 2nd Accused and the Appellant arrived at his house with several others and attacked his house with clubs; that he ran outside and hid in the vegetable plot and watched the activities of the mob; that he identified the 1st and 2nd Accused and the Appellant as they were previously known to him; that after the crowd left he went inside the house and realised that some jewellery and few household items were missing; and that he informed the police that night itself and the police arrived and commenced investigations. On this day of the trial, the 1st and 2nd Accused and the Appellant were present and represented and moved for a date to cross-examine the witness. As a result, Court re-fixed the matter for cross-examination and further trial was on 22nd January 2003.

When this case was called on 22nd January 2003 for trial, only the 1st Accused was present in court, and the 2nd Accused and the Appellant were absent, and as such, warrants were issued on them, and their sureties were noticed. The matter was re-fixed for trial on 2nd December 2003 and then again on 24th February 2004. However, on 24th February 2004, the 2nd Accused and the Appellant were absent again, and warrants were re-issued.

On 27th February 2004, the Appellant appeared in court and got the warrant recalled. However, as the 2nd Accused was absent, the matter was fixed for steps under Section 192 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act on 13th July 2004. On 13th July 2004, the 1st Accused and Appellant appeared in Court and were represented. The police had led evidence under Section 192(1) of the Criminal Procedure Code and had informed the court that the 2nd Accused was not found in his village, and the same was confirmed by the Gramasevaka of the said village. After this evidence was led, the court permitted evidence to be led in the absence of the 2nd Accused, and the matter was fixed for trial on 9th December 2004.

On 9th December 2004, only the 1st Accused was present before the Court, and the Appellant was absent. Court observed that although the Appellant was present before the Court on 27th February 2004, he had been absent on 22nd January 2003, 24th February 2004 and 9th of December 2004. Therefore, the learned Magistrate issued a warrant on the Appellant and his sureties were noticed of the same. The matter was re-fixed to be tried on 21st April 2005, and on that date, too, only the 1st Accused had appeared, and the Appellant had neither been present nor represented. Therefore, the learned Magistrate had decided to proceed against the Appellant in absentia as provided under S.192(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act.

After making this observation, the Learned Magistrate had called witness No. 1, and he had been cross-examined by the counsel for the 1st Accused. On the same day, witness No. 2 had given evidence, and he had identified the 2nd Accused as a person who came and mobbed Marimuttu's house. The trial had been concluded on this day with the evidence of witness No. 9, who was a police officer. The case was then fixed for judgment on 23rd June 2005. On 23rd June 2005, the case was re-fixed for judgment on 02nd September 2005. On 02nd September 2005, only the 1st Accused was present and the matter was re-fixed for judgment on 18th November 2005. However, as the Presidential Election was held on 18th November 2005, the case was not called on the said day and was called again on 25th November 2005 and fixed for judgment on 10th February 2006. The matter was called against on 10th February 2006, and the judgment was pronounced: the 1st and 2nd Accused and the Appellant were convicted for all 4 counts. On this day also, the 2nd Accused and Appellant were absent and unrepresented. The matter was called again on 10th March 2006 and on 21st April 2006 for sentencing, but still, the 2nd Accused and the Appellant were absent and unrepresented on all of these days. Since the 2nd Accused and the Appellant were absent court issued warrants on them. After these days, this matter was called on several days, namely, 25th April 2006, 30th May 2006, 25th July 2006, 30th July 2006, 11th August 2006, 15th August 2006 and 12th September 2006, but no application was made on behalf of the Appellant.

On 26th September 2006, the 1st and 2nd Accused and the Appellant were present in court, and an application was made under Section 192 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act. The counsel informed Court that the Appellant came to Court on 18th November 2005 and as the case was not taken up due to the Presidential Election being held, he had no notice of the next date of this case. He had stated that on 29th November 2005, the case had been taken up for trial in the absence of his client.

Having heard this application, the learned Judge had fixed the matter for order on the said application and for sentencing on 28th November 2006. On this day, the 1st and 2nd Accused and the Appellant were present in Court, and the matter was re-fixed for sentencing on 30th January 2007. The 1st and 2nd Accused and the Appellant were absent on 30th January 2007, and the learned Magistrate, who had been specially appointed by the Judicial Services Commission to sentence the 1st and 2nd Accused and the Appellant, had observed their absence, and had proceeded to convict all three Accused on each count in the following manner. For the first count, imposed a sentence of 6 months Rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 1500/- and in default of the said payment, 6 months Rigorous Imprisonment. For the second count, imposed a sentence of 6 months Rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 1500/- and in default of the said payment, 6 months Rigorous Imprisonment. For the third count, imposed a sentence of 24 months Rigorous imprisonment for each accused with a fine of Rs. 1500/- and in default of the said payment, 6 months Rigorous Imprisonment. In addition to the above, directed to pay a compensation of Rs. 100,000/- to the victim by each Accused and in default of the said payment, 6 months Rigorous Imprisonment. For the fourth count, imposed a sentence of 6 months Rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 1500/- and in default of the said payment, 6 months Rigorous Imprisonment.

Being aggrieved by the said conviction and sentence, the Appellant appealed to the Provincial High Court of the Uva Province holden at Badulla. The Learned High Court Judge, having considered the said appeal, delivered her judgment on 15th July 2010. The High Court judgment set aside the convictions and sentence imposed on the Appellant on charges 2, 3 and 4 but affirmed the conviction and sentence imposed on Count 1 and suspended the term of imprisonment imposed on Count 1 for five years. Subject to this variation, the appeal of the Appellant was dismissed.

Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the Learned High Court Judge, the Appellant filed a Leave to Appeal application, and this Court granted Leave to Appeal on 16th September 2010. As mentioned above, the first question of law is as follows: whether the evidence of witnesses was led contrary to Section 192 of the Criminal Procedure Act. Section 192(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act No.15 of 1979 reads as follows:

"Section 192 (1) Where the accused-

(a) is absconding or has left the island; or

(b) is unable to attend or remain in court by reason of illness and either had consented to the commencement or continuance of the trial in his absence of such trial may commence and proceed or continue in his absence without prejudice to him; or

(c) by reason of his conduct in court is obstructing or impeding the progress of the trial, the Magistrate may, if satisfied of these facts, commence and proceed with the trial in the absence of the accused."

(Emphasis added)

In the present case, the Appellant was present at the initial stage in Court when the trial proceeded against him but was absent during the latter stages of the trial. Therefore, the relevant part of the provision is Section 192 (1)(a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act. This Section only requires the learned Magistrate to be satisfied with the situation and it does not specify the course of action that must be adopted by the Magistrate to satisfy himself. This Section has given the discretion to the Magistrate to proceed with the trial if he is satisfied that the accused is absconding. As discussed earlier, in the present case, the Appellant was present at the time of the trial commenced on 18th September 2002. After the evidence in chief of PW1 concluded, the Counsel for the Appellant had moved for a date for cross-examination and based on this application Court re-fixed the matter for cross-examination on 22nd January 2003. However, on this date and on several subsequent dates, namely 2nd December 2003, 24th February 2004 and 9th December 2004, the Appellant was absent and unrepresented. On 21st April 2005, the learned Magistrate had proceeded on the basis that the Appellant was knowingly absconding and observed (page 124 of the appeal brief) as follows;

"3 වන විත්තිකරු අද දින අධිකරණය මග හැර විභාගයට පෙනී සිටීමෙන් වැලකී ඇත. ඔහු මීට පෙරද අවස්ථාවන් කීපයකදී විටින් විට අධිකරණය මග හැර ඇත. අවසන් විභාග දිනය වන අද දින 3වන විත්තනිකරු නොපැමිණීමෙන් ඔහු මෙම නඩු විභාගයට පෙනී සිටීමෙන් වැලකී මෙම අධිකරණය මගහැර තිබෙන බවට

මම සැහීමකට පත්වෙමි. එබැවින් අපරාධ නඩු විධාන සංග්‍රහ පනතේ 192(1) විධිවිධාන පරිදි ඔහු නොමැතිවද ඔහුට විරුද්ධව සාක්ෂි ඉදිරිපත් කිරීමට පැමිණිල්ලට අවසර දෙමි. මෙම නඩුව මෙම අධිකරණයේ පවතින ඉතා පැරණි නඩුවකි. මෙම නඩුව 1999 වරෂයේ පවරා ඇති නඩුවක්ද වේ. "

An approximate translation would read as follows;

"The 3rd Accused has avoided appearing in court today. He has missed Court on several occasions before. I have observed that the 3rd Accused has avoided the Court by not appearing today too, which is the last day of hearing. Therefore, I allow the prosecution to adduce evidence against him without him as per the provisions of 192(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act. This case is a very old case in this court. This case is also a case assigned in 1999."

Section 192 is there to proceed in the absence of an accused, and it empowers the Magistrate to continue the trial in the absence of an accused. If the Magistrate is satisfied that the accused is absconding, Section 192, as discussed earlier, empowers the Magistrate to commence and proceed with the trial in the absence of the accused. The learned Counsel for the Appellant submits that, there was no inquiry was held under Section 192(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act therefore, in terms of the law, the learned Magistrate had caused a fundamental error by this. I am of the view that although an inquiry was not held under Section 192(1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act, a determination was made under the said section. There were sufficient reasons for the Learned Magistrate to satisfy himself that the Appellant was absconding from the Court Proceedings for a considerable period of time. Further, as I observed, the Appellant was present before the learned Magistrate on 6th April 2001, and from 17th July 2001, he was absent in several instances and not represented by an Attorney-at-Law. Section 192(1) procedure is applicable to those suspects/accused who did not have prior knowledge about the next dates and/or steps of the Court proceedings. I am of the view that due to the abovementioned facts, the Appellant possessed prior knowledge of the next dates and/or steps of the Court proceedings. Further, as he was occasionally present before the Court, the Appellant is not entitled to claim any relief under section 192 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Act.

The second question of law in this matter is, whether all Accused were acquitted on Count No. 2, 3 and 4 and can the Appellant be convicted on Count No.1, namely under Section 140 of the Penal Code. The learned High Court Judge, in her judgment, stated that there was no evidence to prove charges 3 and 4 with regard to the Appellant. The learned High Court Judge also stated that the second charge was defective. On those grounds, the learned High Court Judge has acquitted the Appellant on charges 2, 3 and 4. The only charge which was affirmed was the first charge, which was a charge of unlawful assembly. Section 138 of the Penal Code defines unlawful assembly while the substantive offence of being a member of an unlawful assembly is constituted by Section 139, the punishment for this offence is prescribed by Section 140.

As it was submitted in the present case, the learned High Court Judge has set aside the conviction of the 3rd and 4th counts of the Appellant, mainly based on the statement of evidence of the two main eyewitnesses namely Marimuttu Murugayya (P.W.1) and Muththusamy Sundaram (P.W.2) that, the Appellant arrived at the scene of the crime but have failed to clearly describe the individual acts they committed. But, witness Marimuththu Murugayya (P.W.1) in his evidence clearly stated that a mob had attacked the house and he was able to identify only three accused out of the others, and among them the Appellant (Gunathilake) was there, stated as follows;

> "සුමින් සහ ගුණතිලක මහත්තයා බැහැලා ආවා.... තව කට්ටියක් කලු පාට පට්ටලින් මුහුණ බැඳලා සිටියා. 4,5 දෙනෙක් මගේ ගෙදරට ගොඩ වුනා. ඊට පස්සේ මම දොර වහගත්තා. මම දොර ඇරියේ නැහැ, ඔවුන් දොරට තට්ටු කරලා පොලු වලින් ගැහුවා. ඊට පස්සේ පිටිපස්සෙන් ආවා. ජනේලය ඔක්කොම කැඩුවා. කට්ටිය ඉස්සරහ ඉඳලා කෑ ගැහුවා. දොර කැඩුවා කියලා.... මගේ නිවසට

An approximate translation would read as follows;

"Mr. Sumit and Mr. Gunathilaka came down…. Others had their faces tied with black bands. 4,5 people boarded my house. Then I closed the door. I didn't open the door. They knocked on the door and beat with sticks. Then came from behind. All the windows were broken. The group shouted from the front. That the door was broken... The people who attacked my house are in court today. Chandare is the first one, Sumith is the second one, they both came inside. The third is Gunathilake."

Unlawful assembly is a legal term to describe a group of people, five or more, with the common object of deliberate disturbance of the peace. All the members of an unlawful assembly are liable to acts of any member in furtherance of a common object. In terms of Section 138 and Section 140 of the Penal Code, the prosecution has to prove the presence of a common object. The concept of common object may apply to two or more persons, and by definition, an unlawful assembly should have been formed for one or more of the six purposes enumerated in section 138. One can define a "common object" as the shared intention entertained by each of the members of an unlawful assembly, and the existence of this intention is sufficient for the purpose of section 146. Further, in the context of a common object, it is sufficient that each accused person joined the unlawful assembly with knowledge of its character and objects, even though no further act was done by some of them. Furthermore, the offence envisaged by section 146 is one committed in the prosecution of the common object of the assembly, or such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in the prosecution of the common object of the assembly.

With the above understandings, I am of the view that Section 140 of the Penal Code only requires the presence of a common object. Hence, for the above reasons, I answer the first and second questions of law negatively.

Decision

After careful consideration of the submissions made, facts and circumstances of the instant case as discussed above, there is no basis to interfere with the decision of the learned Provincial High Court Judge of the Uva Province holden at Badulla. I hereby dismiss this Appeal, by answering the first and second questions of law negatively. I affirm the judgment of the Provincial High Court of the Uva Province holden at Badulla dated 15th July 2010.

S. THURAIRAJA, PC, J.

The instant case concerns the termination of the employment of the Employee Applicant-Respondent-Petitioner namely Lushantha Karunarathna (hereinafter and sometimes referred to as the "Applicant") by the Employer Respondent-Appellant-Respondent Company namely Asia Broadcasting Corporation (Pvt) Ltd (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Respondent") based on the alleged charges levelled against him in relation to a hoarding site situated on Maya Avenue, Wellawatte, on grounds of gross misconduct in the form of negligence in executing his obligations as the Senior Manager of Promotions of Shaa FM. Upon application to the Labour Tribunal by the Applicant, the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal by Order dated 16th March 2018 pronounced the aforesaid termination by the Respondent to be unjustifiable and inequitable, whereby the Applicant was awarded Rs. 936,000 as compensation. This decision was overturned by the High Court by Order dated 31st May 2019, where the Learned High Court Judge held in favour of the Respondent company. Being aggrieved by the decision of the High Court, the Applicant has now preferred this appeal by way of Petition dated 28th June 2019 praying that the Order dated 31st May 2019 of the High Court be set aside and the Order of the Labour Tribunal dated 16th March 2018 be restored.

When the instant case was considered for leave to appeal before the Supreme Court on 13th December 2021, the Court granted special leave to appeal on the following two questions of law.

> "(i) Did the High Court consider whether the findings of the Labour Tribunal were perverse?
>
> (ii) If the findings of the Labour Tribunal were not perverse, did the High Court err in law by allowing the appeal preferred by the Employer Respondent?"

Facts

The Respondent company is the owner and the operator of several media channels in Sri Lanka including Hiru TV, Hiru FM, Shaa FM, Suriyan FM, Gold FM and Sun FM. The Applicant first joined the Respondent company as a Junior Executive Officer of Promotions on or around 09th August 1999, and, on or around 09th June 2008 while holding the position of Assistant Manager of Promotions, the Applicant had resigned to be employed elsewhere. More recently, the Applicant was re-employed at Shaa FM on 18th September 2012, and was thereafter promoted to the position of Senior Manager of Promotions, which was the position the Applicant held at the time of the termination of employment. As the Senior Manager of Promotions, the Applicant was required to attend to all promotional activities of the Respondent Company, including the installation and maintenance of hoarding sites of the Respondent Company. The hoardings were owned by the third-party advertising companies, and the Respondent would obtain such hoarding on the basis of an annually renewable contract.

The instant case concerns a hoarding site installed at Maya Avenue, Wellawatta upon the instructions of the Chairman of the Respondent company on or around 19th October 2012, in respect of which the Respondent entered into a contract with Regee Advertising (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "advertising company"), which was overseen by the Applicant. The Respondent company had an established standard practice in respect of the installation and maintenance of hoarding sites which has been acknowledged by both parties during the cross examination and has been summarised by the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal in the following manner. (vide pg.227 of the High Court brief).

> "..... එම පරිචය නම් advertising ආයතන තමා සතු ප්‍රචාරණ අවස්ථා ආයතනයට දැන්වීමෙන් පසු ආයතනයේ අවශ්‍යතාවය මත එකී ස්ථාන මිලදී ගන්නවා ද යන්න තීරණය කිරීමට පෙර ඒ පිළිබඳව යම් ගවේෂණයක් සිදු කර ඉන්පසු මිල ගණන් කැඳවා ස්ථානීය පරීක්ෂණයෙන් පසුව ප්‍රවර්ධන නිලධාරියා පත්වන අවස්ථාවක එය සභාපතිතුමාගේ අවධානයට යොමු කර මිලදි ගැනීම සිදු කරයි. එසේත් නැත්නම්, තව ප්‍රචාරක දැන්වීම් පුවරුවක් සවි කිරීම සිදුකරයි."

I have provided an approximate and unofficial translation of the above extract below.

> "The practice is that after the advertising agency informs the Respondent Company of its advertising opportunities, and before deciding whether to buy the site, the Respondent company conducts some research to determine whether it would suit the needs of the company, and thereafter calls for quotations, after which, an on-site inspection takes place allowing the relevant manager of the Respondent company to present it to the Chairman of the Respondent company for approval for purchase. If approval is received, the parties proceed with the purchase. If not, other hoarding sites will be considered."

Witness for the Respondent company, namely Dilanka de Soysa (hereinafter referred to as the "Witness for the Respondent") gave evidence and during the cross-examination, stated that he was asked by the Chairman of the Respondent company to inspect the hoarding site in question. Having inspected the same, the Witness for the Respondent had not taken photographs of the site, although he had admitted that generally when conducting routine inspections, he would take photographs of the respective sites. In respect of the hoarding site in question, he was asked to inspect the site for the purpose of affirming whether any disturbances were caused to the hoarding site, and he had been given pictures by the Human Resources Department for comparison purposes (vide pg.41-42 of the High Court Brief.)

Though the usual practice was to take photographs during inspections, he had not done on that occasion, but instead, used the photographs provided by the Human Resources Department of the Respondent Company to ascertain whether there was an obstacle caused to the hoarding site. Upon arrival at the site, he observed minor disturbances to the hoarding site caused by buildings and trees. The witness also stated that any disturbance resulting from overgrown vegetation could be removed by informing the relevant advertising agency. Further, he states that, as the person who inspected the alleged disturbance to the hoarding, he was not asked to testify before the domestic inquiry held within the Respondent company in relation to this matter.

The Applicant testified before the Labour Tribunal stating that the said hoarding site was selected by the Chairman of the Respondent Company and was instructed to obtain it for advertising and was done so having followed the established standard practice followed by the Respondent company. The hoarding site was initially obtained in the year 2012 and subsequently the contract was extended for another year with the approval of the Chairman of the Respondent Company. In the two years that the hoarding site was in use, there were no concerns raised either by the Respondent Company, or its chairman regarding the visibility of the hoarding site. The issue with the visibility of the hoarding site was raised for the first time when the contract was scheduled to be extended for a second time, and further questions arose as to another hoarding board at the vicinity of the hoarding site in question. The Applicant stated that he had tried to convince the Chairman by using photographs taken from time to time that the so-called new hoarding board had always been there and that it was not a newly erected one. Not being convinced by the explanation of the Applicant, the Respondent had issued the Petitioner with a Charge sheet, and after having conducted a domestic inquiry, the employment of the Applicant was terminated.

At the end of the inquiry before the Labour Tribunal, both parties filed their respective written submissions together with marked documents. The Learned President of the Labour Tribunal pronouncing the order on 16th March 2018, ordered the Respondent company to pay 12-months' salary as compensation based on the findings that the Respondent Company had unreasonably terminated the services of the Applicant. Among such other findings, the Labour Tribunal stated that though the Chairman of the Respondent company had made such allegations against the Applicant, the Chairman was not available as a witness before the Labour Tribunal, that the witness who testified on behalf of the Respondent before the Labour Tribunal had not been called to testify at the domestic inquiry, that the witness had failed to submit a report with photographs thereby failing to adhere to the standard practice followed when conducting such inspections, that as admitted by the Respondent witness, any disturbances caused by the overgrowth of vegetation could have been cured by informing the advertising company as it was a matter beyond the control of the Applicant.

The Respondent in challenging the Order made by the Labour Tribunal, preferred an appeal before the Provincial High Court of the Western Province holden in Colombo. The Respondent states that the Chairman had merely suggested to the Applicant that there should be a hoarding site in the area and that it was the Applicant's duty to go and inspect the site and determine whether a hoarding would be suitable for advertising, and if so, to proceed to install such a hoarding. It thereafter had come to the attention of the Respondent that the said hoarding was partially obstructed by trees growing from a private property and a light pole, and the Applicant without having considered these obstructions and without notifying the Chairman, has renewed the contract with Regee Advertising up until 10th January 2015.

The matter was argued before the Learned High Court Judge on 26th April 2019, and the question of law arose as to whether the Respondent Company has proved to the satisfaction of the court the negligence of the Applicant with regard to the renewal of the contract of the hoarding site in question. By Order dated 31st May 2019, the Learned High Court Judge found that in light of the facts and circumstances of the instant case the Respondent was right to have terminated the employment of the Applicant, giving emphasis to the importance of a hoarding site to a company such as the Respondent company, and also noted that the Applicant had failed to inspect and maintain the site after its installation which fell within the ambit of the Applicant's scope of the work as the Senior Manager of Promotions. The Learned High Court Judge also observed that the Applicant had failed to disclose in the show cause letter dated 27th January 2015, and failed to tender evidence before the Labour Tribunal as to what he ought to have done to rectify the issue of visibility caused by the overgrowth of vegetation. It was further held that the Labour Tribunal when exercising its just and equitable jurisdiction must ensure that such an order rendered is just and equitable to both parties to the application.

Therefore, the Learned High Court Judge found that in light of the facts and circumstances of the instant case the Respondent was right to have terminated the employment the Applicant, setting aside the Order of the Labour Tribunal.

Being aggrieved by the decision of the Learned High Court judge, the Applicant by Petition dated 28th June 2019 has made an application before this Court praying that the Order of the Labour Tribunal dated 16th March 2019 be restored and the Order of the High Court dated 31st May 2019 be set aside. On 13th December 2021, the Supreme Court granted special leave to appeal on the two questions of law as stated above.

Analysing the existing legal position relevant to the instant case

As statutorily encapsulated within the Industrial Disputes Act No. 43 of 1950 as amended (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Industrial Disputes Act"), s.31D (2) provides as follows.

"An order of a labour tribunal shall be final and shall not be called in question in any court."

[Emphasis added]

However, s.31D(2) does not render is impossible for an aggrieved party to prefer an appeal to another court, as this rule is subject to s.31D(3) of the Industrial Disputes Act which reads as follows.

"Where the workman who, or the trade union which, makes an application to a labour tribunal, or the employer to whom that application relates is dissatisfied with the order of the tribunal on that application, such workman, trade union or employer may, by written petition in which the other party is mentioned as the respondent, appeal from that order on a question of law, to the High Court established under Article 154P of the Constitution, for the Province within which such Labour Tribunal is situated"

[Emphasis added]

In Kotagala Plantations Ltd. and Lankem Tea and Rubber Plantations (Pvt) Ltd. v Ceylon Planters Society [(2010) 2 Sri LR 299] by Chief Justice J.A.N de Silva as to what would constitute a question of law for the purposes of s.31D of the Industrial Disputes Act, whereby His Lordship held at page 303 as follow:

"An appeal lies from an order of a Labour Tribunal only on [a] question of law. A finding on facts by the Labour Tribunal is not disturbed in appeal by an Appellate Court unless the decision reached by the Tribunal can be considered to be perverse. It has been well established that for an order to be perverse the finding must be inconsistent with the evidence led or that the finding could not be supported by the evidence led (vide Caledonian Estates Ltd. v. Hillman 79 (1) NLR 421)"

[Emphasis added]

Further, in Jayasuriya vs Sri Lanka State Plantations Corporation, (1995) 2 SLR 379 Justice Amarasinghe held that being "perverse" in this context can have a broader meaning than its natural meaning. His lordship held;

> ""Perverse" is an unfortunate term, for one may suppose obstinacy in what is wrong, and one thinks of Milton and how Satan in the Serpent had corrupted Eve, and of diversions to improper use, and even of subversion and ruinously turning things upside down, and, generally, of wickedness. Yet, in my view, in the context of the principle that the Court of Appeal will not interfere with a decision of a Labour Tribunal unless it is "perverse", it means no more than that the court may intervene if it is of the view that, having regard to the weight of evidence in relation to the matters in issue, the tribunal has turned away arbitrarily or capriciously from what is true and right and fair in dealing even handedly with the rights and interests of the workman, employer and, in certain circumstances, the public. The Tribunal must make an order in equity and good conscience, acting judicially, based on legal evidence rather than on beliefs that are fanciful or irrationally imagined notions or whims. Due account must be taken of the evidence in relation to the issues in the matter before the Tribunal. Otherwise, the order of the Tribunal must be set aside as being perverse."

Justice Amarasinghe went on to recognise several grounds on which the appellate courts have intervened with the orders of the labour tribunal and set them aside, which demonstrate the scope of the concept of perversity. These grounds were summarized by Justice Arjuna Obeysekara in the recent unreported case of R.A. Dharmadasa v Board of Investment of Sri Lanka, (SC Appeal No 13/2019 decided on 16th June 2022) whereby the findings of a Labour Tribunal were subject to review if it was,

[Emphasis added]

It has come to my attention that several facts which were admitted by the witness on behalf of the Respondent during the cross-examination have not been taken into consideration by the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal in his Order, which have been summarized below. First, the charges against the Applicant were raised by the Chairman of the Respondent Company, who was not called as a witness before the Labour Tribunal to testify on behalf of the Respondent. Second, the witness who did testify on behalf of the Respondent was not called to testify at the domestic inquiry held by the Respondent. Third, in determining whether the termination of the Applicant was justifiable, what ideally should have been considered was whether termination was the right course of action on the part of the Respondent instead of construing whether the Applicant was at fault. Even so, the President of the Labour Tribunal held that the Applicant was not negligent in his duties and thereby his termination of employment was unjustified and inequitable.

I am in agreement with the decision of the Labour Tribunal to compensate the Applicant for the termination of employment. However, I do not agree with the finding that the Applicant was not negligent. Had the aforementioned facts been taken into consideration and had the Chairman of the Respondent Company been called to testify before the Labour Tribunal, the Labour Tribunal would have found the Applicant's failure to rectify any disturbances caused to the hoardings to amount to negligence of his part. On this factual point alone, I agree with the findings of the Learned High Court Judge. However, I do not agree with the final decision of the High Court to not compensate the Applicant. Thus, the findings of the Labour Tribunal would be construed as partially perverse on this particular fact on the grounds that the Labour Tribunal has misconstrued the question at issue and had failed to consider the views of the Respondent Company, which falls within the meaning of perversity as summarized by my brother Judge in R.A. Dharmadasa v Board of Investment of Sri Lanka, (supra).

Yet, the length and breadth of the two questions of law cannot be answered if one was to limit the instant case to the question of the alleged perversity of the findings of the Labour Tribunal. Thus, it is my view that the questions of law in instant case can be addressed in light of the following two factual observations which provides a larger and clearer picture to the issues at hand. First, I find that the Applicant has in fact acted negligently in executing his duties as the Senior Manager of Promotions, since advertising is vital to a company operating in the media industry, and this falls directly within the Applicant's scope of work, which has been to a certain extent identified and elaborated by the Learned High Court Judge. Secondly, I am also of the view that despite the Applicant being negligent, termination of his employment is far too disproportionate a punishment considering the circumstances of the instant case, thereby agreeing with the final decision of the Labour Tribunal that the Applicant should be compensated. The above two factual observations have been expounded on below.

A. Negligence on the part of the Applicant

For the purposes of clarity, I wish to reiterate that the charge of negligence against the Applicant is that the Applicant had failed to properly inspect the hoarding site in question prior to the renewal of the contract with the advertising company to extend the same until 10th January 2015 which has allegedly caused the Respondent company a loss of Rupees Three-hundred thousand (Rs.300,000/-). If the Applicant had in adhering to his obligations as the Senior Manager of Promotions had gone to inspect the hoarding site prior to the renewal, the Respondent states that he would have observed the disturbances caused to the hoarding site in question by the overgrowth of vegetation, and ideally should have notified the advertising company to rectify this issue, which the Applicant had also failed to do.

The facts of the instant case indicate that the Applicant was responsible for ensuring that the hoarding sites within Colombo were installed and maintained, including the hoarding site in question, and further, to ensure that the said sites were visible to passers-by without any disturbance. This has been testified by the Applicant himself during the cross examination on 08th February 2018 (vide pg. 139 of the High Court Brief)

උ: ඔව්. "

In lieu of this, I draw attention to pg.4-5 of the High Court Order of the instant case dated 31st May 2019 (vide pg.236-237 of the High Court brief), whereby the Learned High Court Judge held as follows.

"The Respondent Company needs people's attraction. Therefore, object of installing of hoardings is to attract more viewers. The Applicant who was the Senior Manager (Promotions) has a duty cast on him to promote the business of the institution, which include installing and maintaining of hoardings and monthly inspections. When the Chairman informed him with regard to the visibility of the hoardings what are the steps taken by the Applicant should be consider. For this purpose, this Court has to peruse the evidence of the Applicant and the document marked A1. Though the place was recommended by the Chairman in 2012, 2 years later chairman informed him that the said hoarding did not have the proper visibility at the location where it was installed. As a Senior Manager, has he taken steps to inform the relevant authority to ensure the proper visible condition of the hoardings.

This could have been avoided if the Applicant had visited the seen regularly This is his main duty. Before I analyse the evidence of the Applicant, I am mindful of this following judgment.

In Gilbert Weerasinghe Vs. People's Bank - S.C Appeal No. 81/2006 , Decided On:- 31st July 2008 J.A.N. De Silva.- held that

"The Labour Tribunal should act in a just and equitable manner to both parties and not award any relief on the basis of sympathy. Just and equitable order must be fair to all parties. It never means the safeguarding of the interest of the workman alone. Legislature has not given a free licence to a President of a Labour Tribunal to make award as he may please." "

I am in agreement with the above finding of the Learned High Court Judge. As observed above, the Chairman had suggested a hoarding should be installed down Maya Avenue, and it was the responsibility of the Applicant to suggest to the Chairman of a suitable site, whether it be the hoarding site in question or another site down Maya Avenue. The standard procedure within the Company is for the Senior Manager of Promotions to analyse the location of the hoarding sites and to consider several options prior to making a final decision of the most suitable hoarding site, after taking into account the approval or disapproval of the Respondent's Management. The Respondent claims that if it had been notified of the disturbances prior to initially entering into the contract with Regee Advertising or even at the point of renewal, it would have given instructions to not proceed with the contract, or even if they did proceed with the contract, to discontinue the contract, depending on the circumstances. Furthermore, the primary charge against the Applicant in respect of the hoarding site in question is that as the Chairman has raised the issues of visibility and the disturbances caused by the overgrowth of vegetation, the Applicant should have in the least attempted to rectify the issue by notifying Regee Advertising instead of attempting to justify that there are no such disturbances. This was within his ambit of duties as the Senior Manager of Promotions.

Therefore, in considering the first factual observation, the Applicant has been negligent in executing his duties as the Senior Manager of Promotions. However, this does not justify the termination of his employment as will be elaborated further under the second factual observation.

B. Termination of employment was too disproportionate in the given circumstances.

In framing the allegations against the Applicant, the Respondent had failed to take note of the fact that this is an isolated act of negligence, and while it does concern advertising which is of importance to the Respondent, it is not something which ought to be construed as misconduct which would require termination of the employment of the Applicant.

In the Indian case of Hind Construction & Engineering co. Ltd v Their Workmen [1965] (1) LLJ 462 the employer used to grant a holiday on the next day where a holiday fell on a Sunday. In this case the employer refused to grant a holiday due to pressure of work but promised to do on a later date. Certain workmen who were absent on the day following that Sunday in question were dismissed, and the punishment imposed was held to be one which no reasonable employer would have imposed. S. Egalahewa in 'Labour Law' [Second edition (2020)] states that the courts in fact have jurisdiction to intervene where the termination of the employment is disproportionate to the conduct of the employee, whereby at page. 640 it reads as follows.

> "Where the punishment awarded by the employer is shockingly disproportionate in the light of the particular conduct and the workman's past record or is such that no reasonable employer would impose in similar circumstances, a court would be justified in drawing an inference of victimization by the employer."

Thus, in Sri Lakshmi Saraswathi Motor Transport co. v Labour Court [1966-67] 31 FJR 54 a workman with seventeen years of service and a clean record was dismissed as he was guilty of one day's delay in transmitting a parcel of documents from a branch office to the head office of the employer. The workman was an office bearer of the union. He admitted the lapse but pleaded forgetfulness in mitigation. It was held that his dismissal was so grossly disproportionate to the offence that the tribunal was justified in concluding that the employer had made the incident a pretext to dismiss the workman in view of his union activities.

Further, in the Sri Lankan Shop and Office Employees Act No. 19 of 1954 gives a list of misconducts in a different context. In terms of the Shop and Office Employees (Regulations of Employment and Remuneration) Regulations 1954, under Regulation 18, employers are authorized to deduct any fines imposed on employees for certain acts of misconduct and these acts of misconduct are listed in the said Regulation, which includes inter alia absence from and late attendance at work without reasonable excuse, causing damage to, or causing the loss of goods or articles belonging to the employer, such damage or loss being directly attributable to negligence, wilfulness or default of the employee, Slacking or negligence at work, Wilful failure on the part of the employee to comply with any lawful order given to him in relation to his work. This provides an understanding of what the Sri Lankan legal jurisdiction construes as misconduct, all the while bearing in mind that even the aforementioned acts are not acts which warrant termination of employment. S. R. De Silva in 'Law of Dismissal' [The Employers' Federation of Ceylon, Monograph No. 8, Revised Edition 2004] commenting on the necessity of considering the negligence in light of the relevant context states as follows.

> "It is not every act of negligence, or even one act of negligence, which would always justify termination. The negligence must either be habitual (vide Andhra Scientific Co. Ltd. vs. Heshagiri Rao, 1961 (2) LLJ 117), or else sufficiently grave (vide Jupiter General Insurance Co., Lid. vs. Shroff, (1937) 3 All ER 67*)."*

[Emphasis added]

It must be noted that the Applicant was issued a Letter of Suspension dated 12th January 2015, whereby several charges were levelled against him, and the Applicant was required by letter dated 19th January 2015 to submit a Show Cause letter, which in fact the Applicant has complied with by submitting the Letter dated 27th January 2015 (vide pg. 210-212 of the High Court brief). It must also be noted that there were no deductions to his salary or other monetary benefits in lieu of the charges levelled against the Applicant nor was his monthly salary discontinued during the term of suspension from 12th January 2015 to the date of termination 12th June 2015.

At present, it is my view that the questions of whether the domestic inquiry was held in a proper manner or what alternative action could have been taken by the Respondent is not relevant to the instant case. The instant case is framed to determine whether the termination of the Applicant could be justified in light of this isolated incident of negligence, and if not, whether the Applicant could be compensated for such a termination. For the purposes of clarity, I wish to emphasize that this Court is not disregarding the negligent conduct of the Applicant as has been previously established but is construing only whether the reparation of termination is too disproportionate in the instant case.

Thus, in answering the second factual observation, I conclude that the termination of the employment of the Applicant is unjustified on the grounds that it was disproportionate in light of the circumstances of the instant case as it was an isolated incident of negligence, and the Applicant could have been reprimanded in a different way such as suspension and/deduction to his salary. It is my view that the termination being the first course of action was unwarranted for.

Decision

In having regard to the facts and the law discussed above, I now turn to consider the questions of law to which leave has been granted by the Supreme Court on 13th December 2021 which have been cited above. In considering the circumstances of the instant case, these questions cannot be answered with a simple yes or no.

In answering the first question of law, pursuant to the definition of "perverse" as set out by Justice Amarasinghe in Jayasuriya vs Sri Lanka State Plantations Corporation (supra), the finding of the Labour Tribunal that the Applicant was not negligent thereby his termination was unjustified and inequitable, would amount to being perverse in the present context. While I agree that the Employee Applicant should be awarded compensation as held by the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal, the reasoning for awarding the same should have ideally been that the termination of the employment of the Employee Applicant was disproportionate to the conduct of the Applicant, thereby amounting to an unjustifiable and inequitable termination of employment. Therefore, only part of the order of the Labour Tribunal would be perverse. It must also be noted that while it has not been provided for under the first question of law, the decision of the High Court judge not to compensate the Applicant would amount to being perverse, and therefore, it can be said that part of the High Court Judgement also can be construed as perverse.

In answering the second question of law, as it is only a single factual finding that the Labour Tribunal has failed to identify, thereby making the Order only partially perverse, an appeal should have been allowed only in relation to this single finding and not the case in its entirety. Even having considered the entire case, the Learned High Court Judge having identified that the Applicant to be negligent, has rectified the lapse in the Labour Tribunal order. Thus, I accept the finding of the Learned High Court Judge that the Applicant was negligent. However, the final decision arrived at by the High Court not to compensate the Applicant is what would render the High Court judgement as perverse. Therefore, while I understand that the second question of law requires this Court to consider whether the High Court erred in allowing this appeal, in the present context, the High Court did not err in allowing an appeal of the factual finding regarding the negligence of the Applicant but has erred in dismissing the instant case without awarding the Applicant any compensation.

In conclusion, I set aside the Judgement of the Learned High Court Judge and restore the decision of the Labour Tribunal subject to alterations. I am in agreement with the quantum of compensation which has been awarded by the Labour Tribunal. Therefore, the total amount of Nine hundred and thirty-six thousand Rupees (Rs. 936,000.00) is awarded as compensation payable to the Applicant by the Respondent within three months of this Judgement. If money is already deposited at the Labour Tribunal, this amount along with accrued interest, if any, is to be released to the Applicant. If not, the total amount of Nine hundred and thirty-six thousand Rupees (Rs. 936,000.00) plus legal interest applicable is payable to the Applicant.

Appeal Allowed subject to alterations.

K. PRIYANTHA FERNANDO, J

1. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Petitioner (hereinafter referred to as the appellant) in this case, was aggrieved by the judgment of the Provincial High Court of Sabaragamuwa holden at Kegalle No. SP/HCCA/KAG/388/2007 dated 27.04.2011 and preferred an appeal to this Court against the 1st and the 2nd Defendants-Appellants-Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the 1st and the 2nd respondents) praying that the judgment of the learned Judges of the Provincial High Court be set aside, that the judgment of the learned Judge of the District Court be affirmed and for further costs and relief.

Facts in brief

2. The appellant in this case has been the owner of the land in question. The appellant has mortgaged the said land to the State Mortgage Bank by Mortgage Bond No. 3025. On 31.10.1986, the appellant has entered into a hand written agreement [P-1] with the 1st and the 2nd respondents, upon which the 1st respondent agreed to pay a sum of Rs. 160,000 to the appellant, and in exchange, the appellant has agreed to transfer the said land to the 1st respondent. According to the agreement, of the agreed sum of Rs. 160, 000, a sum of Rs. 110,000 was to be paid to the State Mortgage Bank (hereinafter referred to as the bank). This sum was owed by the appellant to the bank. The remaining sum of Rs. 50,000 was to be paid to the appellant.

3. The appellant states that, the 1st and /or the 2nd respondents have paid the sum of Rs. 110,000 to the bank. However, no further sum has been paid to the bank or the appellant. Further, the respondents have also cut down several trees on the said land causing a damage amounting to Rs. 300,000 to the appellant.

4. The appellant states that, as a result of non-payment of the monies due to the bank, the bank has informed the appellant that the land would be put up for auction to recover the monies due. The appellant further states that the bank has not gone ahead with the auction. Thereafter, the appellant has paid it off and settled all the money and interests due to the bank.

5. It is the position of the respondents that, the appellant has mortgaged the said land to the bank and has obtained a loan facility. Upon failure to pay the monies due, the bank has decided to auction the land. Thereafter, the bank had entered into a contract to sell the land to one Gamini Neththikumara for Rs. 100,250.

6. According to the respondents, the appellant has informed the respondents that a sum of Rs. 160,000 as previously agreed according to the first agreement [P-1] is not sufficient and demanded that a sum of Rs. 200,000 in total be paid instead. The appellant and the 2nd respondent entered into a further agreement on 19.12.1987 [P-2] according to which the respondents were to pay a sum of Rs. 200,000 in total in exchange of the land in question.

7. The respondents state that, according to the terms of the second agreement, in addition to the Rs. 110,000 which was already paid to the bank, a sum of Rs. 75,000 has been paid to the appellant and thereafter, possession of the said land has been handed over to the 2nd respondent. The 1st and the 2nd respondents state that, the possession of the said land has been handed over in 1986 and they have prescribed to the said land.

Previous proceedings

8. The appellant in this case instituted action bearing No. 97/M in the District Court of Mawanella, praying for a decree that the 1st and the 2nd respondents have breached the contract between the appellant and the 1st and the 2nd respondents referred to in paragraph no. 9 of the plaint, a declaration that the appellant is the owner of the premises in suit, and an order restoring the appellant in possession of the same.

9. The respondents failed to file the answer and appear on the date that was provided. Thereafter, the case was decided exparte on 31.07.1997. The exparte order was vacated in the Court of Appeal. An amended plaint was filed by the appellant in the District Court and subsequently an answer was filed by the respondents.

10. The learned District Judge by judgment dated 28.04.2006 held in favour of the appellant. At the trial, three admissions have been recorded by the 1st and the 2nd respondents, one of which is regarding the title of the appellant to the land in suit.

11. Being aggrieved by the judgment of the learned District Judge, the respondents appealed to the Provincial High Court of Sabaragamuwa holden in Kegalle. By judgment dated 27.04.2011, the High Court held in favour of the respondents.

12. Being aggrieved by the judgment of the Provincial High Court, the appellant preferred the instant appeal to this Court. At the hearing of this appeal, leave was granted on the following questions of law.

Questions of law raised on behalf of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Petitioner.

a) Was the High Court correct in holding that the petitioner failed to prove title when the title was admitted by all parties?

b) Did the High Court err in setting aside the Judgment entered in favour of the plaintiff in the District Court on the basis that parties have admitted title to the corpus and that they had not complied with the terms of the agreement?

c) Did the High Court err in admitting and considering document A2 which was not produced at the trial and which has been tendered to Court without proper notice to parties?

Questions of law raised on behalf of the 1st and the 2nd Defendants-Appellants-Respondents.

d) Has the petitioner fully set out the title to the property in the plaint and if not, can the plaintiff rely on the admission of paragraphs 2 to 8 in the plaint to establish his alleged title?

e) In any event can the plaintiff have and maintain this action in view of the certificate of sale issued in favour of Neththikumara as evidenced by document marked A2?

Written submissions on behalf of the appellant.

13. The learned President's Counsel for the appellant submitted that, the appellant who filed a declaration of title case need not prove title, especially where title has been admitted. It was submitted that the appellant has title to the land and was in possession thereof. Thereafter, the appellant has entered into an informal agreement with the 1st respondent upon which the 1st respondent has entered into possession of the land. However, the respondents have failed to pay part of the consideration that was agreed upon. The appellant being unable to seek specific performance on an informal agreement which was not notarially executed, filed a case for declaration of title and ejectment.

14. It was the submission of the learned President's Counsel that, unlike in a rei vindicatio action where the cause of action is based on the sole ground of violation of the right of ownership, in an action for declaration of title, the appellant need not strictly prove title but sues on the right of possession and ouster. The learned President's Counsel in bringing out the distinction between the burden of proof in a rei vindicatio action and a case for declaration of title, relied on the case of Luwis Singho and Others v. Ponnamperuma [1996] 2 S.L.R. 320 and the case of Pathirana v. Jayasundara [1955] 58 N.L.R. 169 and stated that, in the instant case, where the appellant has filed action for a declaration of title and for ejectment, the appellant need not strictly prove his title.

15. The learned President's Counsel for the appellant further submitted that, in any event, the 1st and the 2nd respondents have admitted the appellant's title to the land. It was submitted that, in paragraphs 2 to 8 of the amended plaint, the appellant has set out the manner in which he became entitled to the land in question by deed No. 3024 dated 16.02.1983 and deed No. 422 dated 27.10.1978. The 1st and the 2nd respondents have admitted the same.

16. The learned President's Counsel for the appellant, by relying on the case of Jayasinghe v. Kiriwanegedara Tikiri Banda [1988] 2 CALR 24 submitted that, even in a rei vindicatio action, if the defendant admits the title of the plaintiff, the plaintiff is absolved of the duty to prove his title. Further, in the case of Hameed v. Weerasinghe [1989] 1 S.L.R. 217 it was held that, in a vindicatory action, it is necessary to aver and prove title, but where title is not disputed, a plaintiff may sue for ejectment. It was submitted that, in the instant case, in a circumstance where the appellant's title has been admitted by the respondents, there is no requirement for the appellant to prove title and that he is entitled to an order ejecting the respondents.

17. It was further submitted that, in accordance with the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance, facts that are admitted need not be proved. As the admission in the instant case relates to a question of fact and not law, the tile which is admitted need not be proved.

18. It was submitted that the learned Judges of the High Court have failed to consider that, in an action for declaration of title and ejectment, the plaintiff (appellant) sues on the right of possession and ouster and need not prove title.

19. The 1st and the 2nd respondents in their appeal to the High Court have produced a document marked [A-2] which is an extract from the Land Registry, which purports to indicate that the State Mortgage and Investment Bank has auctioned the land in question to one Gamini Neththikumara. It was the submission of the learned President's Counsel that, the High Court could not have considered the document [A-2] as it was produced for the first time in appeal by the 1st and the 2nd respondents, without proper notice to the appellant or proper application made to Court. The respondents ought to have made an application for submitting fresh evidence under section 773 of the Civil Procedure Code read with Article 139(2) of the Constitution. The Honorable Judges of the High Court have failed to consider this fact and erroneously relied on the document marked [A-2] and held that, as at the date of filing this action, the appellant in this case was not the owner of the property.

20. It was further submitted by the learned President's Counsel that, the High Court misdirected itself and has fallen to error in applying the test of accepting fresh evidence in appeal as laid down in the case of Ratwatte v. Bandara [1966] 70 N.L.R. 231. In the circumstances of this case, the 1st limb of the test laid down in Ratwatte(supra) is not satisfied, as the document [A-2] could have been obtained by the respondents with reasonable diligence for use at the trial, especially because the respondents were well aware of the previous volume/folio it carries forward to. The Counsel contended that, the second limb of the test laid down in the case of Ratwatte(supra) is also not satisfied, as the document [A-2] would not have an important influence on the result of the case as subsequently the land has been transferred to the bank and in turn the bank has retransferred to the appellant as the monies due has been paid.

Written submissions on behalf of the Respondents.

21. The learned Counsel for the respondents submitted in his written submissions that, this action cannot be categorized as a mere action for declaration of title, because the prime requisite in a declaratory action is the ouster of the appellant. In the instant case, the possession has been voluntarily handed over to the respondents.

22. The learned Counsel further submitted that, if it is a rei vindicatio action, even though the respondents had admitted title, if it is transpired during the evidence that the appellant had no title at the time of filing action, the action has to fail.

23. The devolution of title on the appellant as pleaded in paragraphs 2 to 8 of the said amended plaint is not disputed. If the appellant did not have title, the respondents could get no title. It was the submission of the learned Counsel that, conceding to the devolution of title on the appellant, does not preclude the respondents from showing that subsequently the appellant has parted with such title.

24. The learned Counsel further submitted that, the position of the Honorable High Court Judges and as it was submitted in the case of Ahamadulevve Kaddubawa v. Sanmugam [1953] 54 N.L.R. 467, the plaintiff in a rei vindicatio action must show that he had title at the time of the institution of the action. As revealed at the hearing before the High Court, as at the date of institution of this action, the owner of the said property was not the appellant but one Chandrathilaka Gamini Neththikumara. This has been clearly set out in the document marked [A-2] which has been produced and received at the hearing of the appeal in terms of section 733 of the Civil Procedure Code and Article 139 (2) of the Constitution. The High Court of Civil Appeal has properly received the document marked [A-2] as fresh evidence as it touches the main issue in the case, has an important bearing on the result of this case, and is of a decisive nature.

25. At the argument of this appeal, the main contentions were based on the difference in the standard of burden of proof with regard to a claim for a declaration of title and the admissibility of the document marked [A-2], and based on this document, whether the appellant had title to the land in question at the time action was filed and also on the grounds of estoppel.

26. The questions of law (a) and (b) will be answered together.

It was the position of the appellant that, where an action has been filed in respect of declaration of title, the appellant is not strictly required to prove title but sues on the right of possession and ouster. At the argument of this appeal, the distinction between a rei vindicatio action and a case for declaration of title in respect of the burden of proof each has to satisfy was discussed at length.

27. In the case of Luwis Singho and Others v. Ponnamperuma [1996] 2 S.L.R. 320 at page 324 it was stated by Wigneswaran J. that,

> "No doubt actions for declaration of title and ejectment (as is the present case) and vindicatory actions are brought for the same purpose of recovery of property. But in a rei vindicatio action, the cause of action is based on the sole ground of violation of the right of ownership. In such an action proof is required that ;
>
> (i) the Plaintiff is the owner of the land in question i.e. he has the dominium and,
>
> (ii) that the land is in the possession of the Defendant (Voet 6:1:34)
>
> Thus even if an owner never had possession of a land in question it would not be a bar to a vindicatory action.

In Punchihamy v. Arnolis[6] it was held that a purchaser who had not been placed in possession may bring a vindicatory action. Even a person who had a mere "nuda proprietas" (bare legal title) was recognized as a person entitled to file a vindicatory action. Allis Appu v. Endiris Hamy (supra).

But in an action for declaration of title and ejectment the proof that a Plaintiff had enjoyed an earlier peaceful possession of the land and that subsequently he was ousted by the Defendant would give rise to a rebuttable presumption of title in favour of the Plaintiff and thus could be classified as an action where dominium need not be proved strictly. It would appear therefore that law permits a person who has possessed peacefully but cannot establish clear title or ownership to be restored to possession and be quieted in possession. This development of the law appears to have arisen due to the need to protect de facto possession. It is different from the right of an owner recovering his possession through a vindicatory action. Our courts have always emphasized that the plaintiff who institutes a vindicatory action must prove title. (Vide Wanigaratne v. Juwanis Appuhamy.[7])

Withers, J., in Allis Appu v. Endiris Hamy (supra) when he referred to jus terttii as a defence to a rei vindicatio action, he no doubt took into consideration the fact that ownership or dominium is the essence of a vindicatory action and title being in the hands of a third party could be relevant in such cases.

But in an action for declaration of title and ejectment as in the present case, the Plaintiff need not sue by right of ownership but could do so by right of possession and ouster*. In fact in such cases the Plaintiff is claiming a possessory remedy rather than the relief of vindication of ownership."*

[Emphasis mine]

28. When considering the above extract, it can be observed that, it does not strictly say that a plaintiff in every action for a declaration of title need not prove title. It simply says that in an action for a declaration of title and ejectment, where a plaintiff has proved that he enjoyed previous peaceful possession and that he was later ousted by the defendant, it would give rise to a presumption of title in favour of the plaintiff. One should be mindful that this presumption is rebuttable as well. In such an instance dominium, that is absolute ownership, need not strictly be proved.

29. It was pointed out by the Counsel for the respondents that, in the instant case, the possession has been voluntarily handed over to the respondents by the appellant and there is no ouster of the appellant. Therefore, whether a presumption of title would arise in favour of the appellant in the instant case is questionable.

30. However, in the case of Pathirana v. Jayasundara [1955] 58 N.L.R. 169 which was a proceeding instituted against an overholding tenant where it was held that, a plaintiff was not entitled to amend the plaint so as to cause prejudice to the defendant's plea of prescriptive possession. In Pathirana(supra) it was stated that,

"... but the question of difficulty arises is whether the action thereby becomes a rei vindicatio for which strict proof of the plaintiffs title would be required, or else is one for a declaration (without strict proof) of title which the tenant by law precluded from denying."

31. When considering the above extract, I am in agreement with the position that, in an action for declaration of title, strict proof of title need not be established. Therefore, the appellant in the instant case need not strictly prove title as it relates to an action for declaration of title and ejectment.

32. It was the position of the learned President's Counsel for the appellant that, the 1st and the 2nd respondents have admitted the appellant's title to the land. It was his position that, in accordance with the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance, where the fact of title is admitted it need not be proved and the appellant is entitled to an order ejecting the respondents. However, the learned Counsel for the respondents contended that, merely conceding to the devolution of title on the appellant does not preclude the respondents from stating that subsequently, the appellant has parted with such title.

33. When considering the amended plaint dated 2001.02.12, paragraphs 2 to 8 of the plaint describe how the appellant became the absolute owner of the land in question. In paragraph 3 of the answer of the 1st and 2nd respondents dated 05.09.2003 (at page 144 of the brief) the 1st and the 2nd respondents have admitted that the appellant became the sole owner of the land in question.

34. Section 58 of the Evidence Ordinance of Sri Lanka sets out that,

> "No fact need be proved in any proceeding which the parties thereto or their agents agree to admit at the hearing, or which, before the hearing, they agree to admit by any writing under their hands, or which by any rule of pleading in force at the time they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings;
> Provided that the court may, in its discretion, require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions."

35. Section 58 of the Evidence Ordinance clearly sets out that, facts that are admitted need not be proved. I am in agreement that an admission as to title does in fact qualify as a question of fact. However, I am unable to agree with the appellant's position that what has been admitted by the respondents in their answer is an admission as to title. It is my position that, what has been admitted by the respondents in their amended answer is the devolution of title on the appellant. It is pertinent to note that, admitting that the land in question was devolved on the appellant in a particular manner by particular deeds is something completely different to admitting title. An admission such as this would not hinder the respondents from stating that subsequently the appellant parted with such title.

36. As I have found that the admission in the amended answer of the respondents does not qualify as an admission as to title, the position advanced by relying on the cases of Jayasinghe v. Kiriwanegedara Tikiri Banda [1988] 2 CALR 24 and Hameed v. Weerasinghe [1989] 1 SLR 217 are futile with regard to the instant case, and therefore will not be addressed.

37. In answering the question of law (a), it is my position that, the High Court has erred in stating that the title was admitted by the parties as the respondents merely conceded to the devolution of title and not to the title itself.

38. In answering the question of law (b), the District Court judgment has not been set aside by the High Court on the basis that parties have admitted title.

39. Now I will answer the question of law (c) that has been raised on behalf of the appellant.

This question of law is in reference to the admissibility of fresh evidence in the High Court. The appellant took the position that, the High Court could not have considered the document [A-2] as it was produced for the first time in appeal by the 1st and the 2nd respondents and was also tendered to Court without proper notice to parties or proper application made to Court.

40. It was the position of the appellant that, the High Court has erred in relying on the document [A-2] as it was produced contrary to section 773 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with Article 139(2) of the Constitution and without proper notice to the appellant or proper application made to Court. Further, that the High Court has erred in applying the test of accepting fresh evidence in appeal as laid down in the case of Ratwatte v. Bandara [1966] 70 N.L.R. 231. The respondents on the other hand contended that the High Court has not acted contrary to the provisions laid down in section 773 of the Code of Civil Procedure and Article 139 of the Constitution and has correctly applied the test laid down in Ratwatte(supra) and properly received the document [A-2] in fresh evidence.

41. Section 773 of the Code of Civil Procedure sets out that,

> "Upon hearing the appeal, it shall be competent to the Court of Appeal to affirm, reverse, correct or modify any judgment, decree, or order therein between and as regards the parties, or to give such direction to the Court below, or to order a new trial or a further hearing upon such terms as the Court of Appeal shall think fit, or, if need be, to receive and admit new evidence additional to, or supplementary of, the evidence already taken in the Court of first instance, touching the matters at issue in any original cause, suit or action, as justice may require or to order a new or further trial on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence subsequent to the trial "

42. Article 139(2) of the Constitution sets out that,

> "The Court of Appeal may further receive and admit new evidence additional to, or supplementary of, the evidence already taken in Court of First Instance touching the matters at issue in any original case, suit, prosecution or action, as the justice of the case may require."

43. In the case of Ratwatte v. Bandara [1966] 70 N.L.R. 231 reference was made to the case of Ramasamy v. Fonseka [1958] 62 N.L.R. 90 where Weerasooriya J. held that,

> " fresh evidence would not be permitted to be adduced in appeal unless it is of a decisive nature; it must be such that, on a new trial being ordered, it would almost prove that an erroneous decision had been given."

44. Further, reference was also made to the case of Ladd v. Marshall [1954] 3 All ER 745 where Denning L.J. said that,

> " In order to justify the reception of fresh evidence or a new trial, three conditions must be fulfilled: first, it must be shown that the evidence could not have been obtained with reasonable diligence for use at the trial: second, the evidence must be such that, if given, it would probably have an important influence on the result of the case, although, it need not be decisive : third, the evidence must be such as is presumably to be believed or, in other words, it must be apparently credible, although it need not be incontrovertible."

45. When considering the test laid down in Ratwatte(supra) in reference to the facts and circumstances of the instant case, it is clear that the first requirement of the test is patently not satisfied as the document marked [A-2] which is an extract from the Land Registry, which indicates that the State Mortgage and Investment Bank has auctioned the land to one Gamini Neththikumara, could have been obtained and produced at the trial, if reasonable diligence had been used.

46. When considering the second requirement in the test laid down in Ratwatte(supra), I am in agreement with the position taken by the learned President's Counsel for the appellant. When considering the evidence of witness Thamara Kumari who is a clerk at the State Mortgage and Investment Bank (page 240 of the brief) in her evidence has said that, although the land in suit was auctioned, it was subsequently transferred to the bank and that the monies due has been paid to retransfer the land to the appellant. Therefore, in this light, the document [A-2] would not have had an important influence on the result of the case, as the appellant has been the owner of the property as at the date of filing this action. Therefore, the second requirement in the test laid down in Ratwatte(supra) is also not satisfied.

47. The general rule is that, fresh evidence is not admitted in appeal. However, in exceptional situations, it has been allowed as provided under section 773 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with Article 139(2) of the Constitution . The test in Ratwatte(supra) serves as a filtering mechanism to allow parties to submit fresh evidence where the test has been satisfied. This test must be strictly adhered to. If this is not followed, it would have the effect of transgressing the general rule.

48. In answering the question of law (c), as the test laid down in Ratwatte(supra) has not been satisfied, the document [A-2] could not have been accepted in evidence at the High Court. The learned Judges of the High Court have erred in admitting and considering the document [A-2] which was not produced at the trial.

49. Now I will answer the question of law (d) that has been raised by the respondents.

    The respondents in their amended answer dated 05.09.2003 have admitted paragraphs 2 to 8 of the plaint. It is my position that, at the time the respondents entered into the informal agreement, they have accepted the title of the appellant. They have signed the agreement and accepted possession from the appellant on the basis that the appellant has title to the land.

50. Section 116 of the Evidence Ordinance sets out that,

    "… no person who came upon any immovable property by the licence of the person in possession thereof shall be permitted to deny that such person had a title to such possession at the time when such licence was given"

51. In the case of Ruberu and Another v. Wijesooriya [1998] 1 Sri.L.R. 58, U.DE.Z. it was stated that,

> "…But whether it is a licensee or a lessee, the question of title is foreign to a suit in ejectment against either. The licensee (the defendant-respondent) obtaining possession is deemed to obtain it upon the terms that he will not dispute the title of him, i.e. the plaintiff-appellant without whose permission, he (the defendant-respondent) would not have got it. The effect of the operation of section 116 of the Evidence Ordinance is that if a licensee desires to challenge the title under which he is in occupation he must, first, quit the land. The fact that the licensee or the lessee obtained possession from the plaintiff-appellant is perforce an admission of the fact that the title resides in the plaintiff. No question of title can possibly arise on the pleadings in this case, because, as the defendant-respondent has stated in his answer that he is a lessee under the plaintiff-appellant, he is estopped from denying the title of the plaintiff-appellant. It is an inflexible rule of law that no lessee or licensee will ever be permitted either to question the title of the person who gave him the lease or the licence or the permission to occupy or possess the land or to set up want of title in that person, i.e. of the person who gave the licence or the lease. That being so, it is superfluous, in this action, framed as it is on the basis that the defendant-respondent is a licensee, to seek a declaration of title."

52. The appellant has duly set out how the title was derived on him. However, as it has been elaborated in this judgment, para 2-8 of the plaint in itself will not establish that the appellant had title to the land in question at the time the action was instituted. However, by operation of section 116 of the Evidence Ordinance, the respondents are estopped from denying the title of the appellant.

53. Finally, I will answer the question of law (e) that has been raised by the respondents.

    According to the findings in paragraphs 39-48 of my judgment, it is my view that the document [A-2] has been wrongly admitted in the High Court.

54. For the reasons that I have elaborated in this judgment, the appellant in the instant case is entitled to a declaration of title for the land is question and an order ejecting the respondents from the land. The Judgment of the High Court is set aside. The Final determination of the District Court is affirmed. The appellant is entitled to costs in the cause.

The appeal is allowed.

ARGUED & DECIDED ON : 04th October 2023

P. PADMAN SURASENA J.

Court heard the submissions of the learned President's Counsel for the 3rd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant as well as the submissions of the learned Counsel for the Defendants-Appellants-Respondents and concluded the argument.

The Plaintiffs filed their plaint initially against the 1st and 2nd Defendants praying inter alia:

(i) for a declaration that the 1st-3rd Plaintiffs are the owners of the lands more fully set out in the schedules to the plaint;

(ii) for an order cancelling the Deed No. 3607 attested on 11-06-2001 by D.M.M. Dissanayake, Notary Public transferring the land described in schedule 1 to the 1st Defendant.

(iii) for an order cancelling the Deed No. 2147 attested on 15-07-2003 by P.A.C. Wijesinghe, Notary Public transferring the land in the 2nd schedule to the 2nd Defendant.

(iv) for ejectment of the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Defendants from the relevant lands.

1st and 2nd Defendants filed a joint answer admitting that the 1st and 2nd Defendants had no title to the paddy land relevant to this case. The 1st and 2nd Defendants also averred that Mahara Mohottalalage Herath Banda was the tenant cultivator of the paddy land relevant to the instant action. The material prayer in the joint answer filed by the 1st and 2nd Defendants is only a prayer to add said Mahara Mohottalalage Herath Banda as a Defendant to the case. This is because the 1st and 2nd Defendants in their joint answer itself had categorically averred the fact that neither of them has any title to the paddy land relevant to the action but their role is limited only to assisting said Mahara Mohottalalage Herath Banda who is the tenant cultivator of the said paddy land. It was on that basis that the learned District Judge had taken steps to add said Mahara Mohottalalage Herath Banda as the 3rd Defendant of the case.

After adding said Mahara Mohottalalage Herath Banda as the 3rd Defendant, he (the 3rd Defendant) also had filed an answer admitting that Menuhamy had been the tenant cultivator under Amarasinghe Arachchige Don Albanu Appuhamy. He also has stated in his answer that after the demise of said Menuhamy, he continued as the tenant cultivator. There is no dispute that Menuhamy is the father of the 3rd Defendant (Herath Banda).

The above facts show that the 1st and 2nd Defendants had not claimed anything in their favour as far as either the possession or the ownership of the properties relevant to this case are concerned.

The 3rd Defendant had taken up two main issues. Firstly, he has not admitted that Piyasiri Amarasinghe is the son of Isabela Hamine. Secondly, the 3rd Defendant has also raised the issue that the title to this property has not devolved on said Piyasiri Amarasinghe as he was not entitled to receive a letter of administration in respect of this property after the demise of Isabela Hamine. In respect of the prayers for cancellation of the two deeds, the 3rd Respondent has taken up the position that the execution of those two deeds was a mistake on his part. We observe that there exists only one material prayer in the 3rd Defendant's answer. That is a prayer for a declaration that the 3rd Defendant is the tenant cultivator in case the Court grants the declaration that the Plaintiffs are the owners of the relevant land. As pointed out by the learned President's Counsel for the Appellant, we observe that there are two material admissions made in the trial. They are as follows:

(1) Menuhamy had functioned as a tenant cultivator under Amarasinghe Arachchige Don Albanu Appuhamy.

(2) The 3rd Defendant had functioned as a tenant cultivator under 1st, 2nd and 3rd Plaintiffs.

After the trial, the learned District Judge by his judgement dated 05-06-2007, having analyzed the evidence produced in the case before the District Court, had proceeded to grant reliefs prayed for, by the Plaintiffs in their plaint.

Being aggrieved by the judgement of the District Court, the Defendants had appealed to the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals. The Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals for the reasons set out in the judgement dated 27-10-2010, has set aside the judgement of the District Court. Perusal of the judgement of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals shows that the sole ground for setting aside the judgement of the District Court is the alleged failure of the Plaintiffs to prove the fact that their father, Piyasiri Amarasinghe was a child of Dona Isabela Hamine.

The learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals had taken the view that the documents produced by the Plaintiffs marked P4, P5, P6, P7, P8, P9, P10 and P11 are not sufficient to prove the fact that the Plaintiffs' father Piyasiri Amarasinghe is the only child of Isabela Hamine. It is in that background that this Court is now called upon to decide the following two central issues that had arisen in the course of the argument of this case in this Court.

i. Have the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeals erred in holding that the documents produced by the Plaintiffs do not establish that Piyasiri Amarasinghe is the son of Dona Isabela Hamine;
ii. Has the High Court of Civil Appeals erred in not considering the legal effect of the admission No. 3 wherein the 3rd Defendant had admitted that at sometimes prior to filing of this case, he was a tenant cultivator under the Plaintiffs and Plaintiff's mother.

Let me consider whether the Plaintiffs in the instant case, through the documents produced by them, had established the fact that Piyasiri Amarasinghe is the son of Dona Isabela Hamine. The 01st Plaintiff in her evidence had produced her father's school leaving certificate marked P4. Although her father's name has been written in P4 as Peter Singho, the 01st Plaintiff in her evidence had clarified that her father used his name as Piyasiri Amarasinghe. The 01st Plaintiff in her evidence had also produced two obituary notices marked P5 and P6. According to these two obituary notices (P5 and P6), the death of A. D.A. Appuhamy was announced by his son Piyasiri Amarasinghe.

The 01st Plaintiff in her evidence had also produced her father's and mother's wedding invitation card marked P7. This wedding invitation card has identified Piyasiri as the son of Don Albanu Amerasinghe Appuhamy and Dona Isabela Perera Palihawadana Arachchi Hamine. The 01st Plaintiff in her evidence had testified to the fact that said Piyasiri is her father. The 01st Plaintiff had also testified in her evidence that the bride mentioned in the Wedding invitation card (P7) Rathnawali is her mother.

The 01st Plaintiff had also produced the Marriage certificate of her father and mother marked P8. According to P8, the 01st Plaintiff's father who stood as the bride groom in that wedding has been named as Amerasinghe Arachchige Piyasiri Amerasinghe. The bride groom's father's name has been mentioned in P8 as Amerasinghe Arachchige Don Albanu Appuhamy whom the 01st Plaintiff has asserted in her evidence as her paternal grandfather.

Another document produced by the 01st Plaintiff in her evidence is a permit issued by Narammala Village Council which had permitted her father to bury the body of her grandmother whose name has been mentioned therein as P A. D. Isabela Perera. This burial permit has been produced marked P9.

The 01st Plaintiff had also produced two receipts issued by Wijesinghe Florists which are invoices issued in relation to the expenses borne with regard to a funeral. It is the 01st Plaintiff's evidence that these invoices marked P10 and P11 are receipts issued to her father Piyasiri Amerasinghe for the payment of funeral expenses to Wijesinghe Florists in relation to the funeral of Palihawadana Arachchige Dona Isabela Perera Hamine who is her grand mother.

Thus, the Plaintiffs had relied on the following documents namely: P7 the copy of the wedding invitation of Piyasiri Amarasinghe where it is stated that he was the only child of Don Albanu Amarasinghe Appuhamy and Dona Isabela Perera Palihawadana Arachchi Hamine; the marriage certificate of Piyasiri Amarasinghe P8 which shows that he is the son of Amrasinghe Arachchige Don Albanu Appuhamy; P9, P10 and P11 which are receipts for payments made by Piyasiri Amarasinghe to the Narammala Village Committee and to the funeral undertakers for the burial and other funeral arrangements of Isabela Hamine, to establish the fact that Piyasiri Amarasinghe is the son of Dona Isabela Hamine. Perusal of the questions asked on behalf of the Defendants during the cross examination of the 01st Plaintiff shows clearly that the Defendants had not been successful in assailing the above evidence adduced by the 01st Plaintiff. The Defendants in the cross examination had been content only to highlight the fact that the 01st Plaintiff had not produced her father's (Piyasiri Amarasinghe's) birth certificate to prove that said Piyasiri Amarasinghe is the son of said Isabela Hamine. Having considered the above documentary as well as the oral evidence, we are satisfied that the Plaintiffs have sufficiently proved that their father Piyasiri Amarasinghe is the son of Dona Isabela Hamine.

The learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals had taken the view that the three receipts marked P9, P10 and P11 cannot be construed as evidence relevant, under section 32(5) of the Evidence Ordinance, to the matter in issue. He had proceeded to hold that the documents produced marked P3 to P12 cannot also be held to be relevant under section 32(5) of the Evidence Ordinance.

Let me reproduce below, Section 32(5) of the Evidence Ordinance:

> S. 32: Statements, written or verbal, of relevant facts made by a person who is dead, or who cannot be found, or who has become incapable of giving evidence, or whose attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay or expense which, under the circumstances of the case, appears to the court unreasonable, are themselves relevant facts in the following cases :—
> 1) .....
> 2) ..
> 3) ..
> 5) When the statement relates to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption between persons as to whose relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption the person making the statement had special means of knowledge, and when the statement was made before the question in dispute was raised.

6) When the statement relates to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage, or adoption between persons deceased, and is made in any will or deed relating to the affairs of the family to which any such deceased person belonged, or in any family pedigree, or upon any tombstone, family portrait, or other thing on which such statements are usually made, and when such statement was made before the question in dispute was raised.
7) …
8) …

Section 50 of the Evidence Ordinance is also relevant in that regard and hence is reproduced below:

> S.50: When the court has to form an opinion as to the relationship of one person to another, the opinion, expressed by conduct, as to the existence of such relationship of any person who, as a member of the family or otherwise, has special means of knowledge on the subject, is a relevant fact:
>
> Provided that such opinion shall not be sufficient to prove a marriage in proceedings for divorce, or in prosecutions under sections 362B, 362C, and 362D of the Penal Code.

Learned President's Counsel for the 3rd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant relied inter alia on the judgment in the case of Maniapillai and others Vs. Sivasamy.[1] In Maniapillai's case, the issue arose was whether a person was born of a lawful wedlock. In other words, the resolution of the dispute that arose in that case, was dependent on the answer to the question whether Sinnapodi Velupillai married one Annaletchumi and had a child Kailasapillai by her. In that case, there was neither the birth certificate of Kailasapillai nor the marriage certificate of Sinnapodi Velupillai and Annaletchumi had been produced. However, the deed No. 3873 (marked D3 in that case) of 20th May 1907 whereby Sinnapodi Velupillai and his father Vyravi Sinnapodi had donated a land to Kailasapillai who was described as the son of Velupillai and grandson of Sinnapodi had been produced as evidence in that case. There was also the certificate of marriage (marked D4 in that case) of Kailasapillai where his father's name had been given as Sinnapodi Velupillai. Soza, J relying on the strength of the contents in those documents adduced as evidence in that case, held that the declarations regarding the relationship found in the documents marked D3 and D4 produced in that case, were relevant and admissible to find an answer to the question whether Sinnapodi Velupillai had indeed married one Annaletchumi and had a child Kailasapillai by her.

Soza J, in Maniapillai's case, in relation to sections 32(5) 32(6) and 50 of the Evidence Ordinance, proceeded to state as follows:

> "Under the provisions of section 32(6) of the Evidence Ordinance when a statement of the deceased person relates to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage or adoption between deceased persons it will be admissible provided-
>
> 1. it is made in any will or deed relating to the affairs of the family to which any such deceased person belonged, or in any family pedigree, or upon any tombstone, family portrait or other thing on which such statements are usually made, and
> 2. it was made before the question in dispute was raised.
>
> Section 50 of the Evidence Ordinance makes relevant the opinion expressed by conduct, as to the existence of relationship of any person who as a member of the family or otherwise has special means of knowledge of such relationship.
>
> It is under these provisions, to wit, section 32(5) and (6) and section 50 of the Evidence Ordinance that it is possible to admit evidence, otherwise hearsay, of deceased persons figuring in a genealogical tree such as one often comes across in a partition case. - see Cooray v Wijesuriya.[2] It should be observed that these provisions deal not with presumptions but only with relevance. There is no doubt that the declarations regarding relationship found in D3 and D4 are relevant and admissible. But these declarations

> must be assessed and evaluated in the context of the other evidence in the case".[3]

Thus, for the above reasons, I hold that the view taken by the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals that the three receipts marked P9, P10 and P11 cannot be construed as evidence relevant under section 32(5) of the Evidence Ordinance to the matter in issue and the documents produced marked P3 to P12 cannot be held to be relevant under section 32(5) of the Evidence Ordinance is erroneous. I have already adverted to the fact that the above documentary evidence taken in to consideration along with the oral evidence adduced on behalf of the Plaintiffs, have sufficiently proved that the father of the Plaintiffs Piyasiri Amarasinghe is the son of Dona Isabela Hamine. Therefore, the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals has erred in arriving at the conclusion that the Plaintiffs had failed to prove the fact that their father, Piyasiri Amarasinghe was a child of Dona Isabela Hamine.

We observe that the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals had required strict proof of the afore-said relationship. H.N.G. Fernando, J in the case of Pathirana V. Jayasundara, 58 NLR 169, had the following to say in relation to the requirement of strict proof in vindicatory actions -:

> "I have no doubt that it is open to a lessor in an action for ejectment to ask for a declaration of title, but the question of difficulty which arises is whether the action thereby becomes a rei vindicatio for which strict proof of the Plaintiff's title would be required, or else is merely one for a declaration (without strict proof) of a title which the tenant is by law precluded from denying. If the essential element of a rei vindicatio is that the right of ownership must be strictly proved, it is difficult to accept the proposition that an action in which the Plaintiff can automatically obtain a declaration of title through the operation of a rule of estoppel should be regarded as a vindicatory action"

In the same case, Gratiaen, J. in his judgment while agreeing with H.N.G. Fernando, J had further elaborated on this in the following manner:

> "A decree for a declaration of title may, of course, be obtained by way of additional relief either in a rei vindicatio action proper (which is in truth an action in rem) or in a lessor's action against his overholding tenant (which is an action in personam). But in the former case, the declaration is based on proof of ownership; in the latter, on proof of the contractual relationship which forbids a denial that the lessor is the true owner"

We observe that there is no specific mention in the judgement of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals that the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals had specifically treated this case as a rei vindicatio action when deciding this case. However, from the fact that the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals had required strict proof of the afore-said relationship, could be an indication that the learned Judges of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals may have been confused on this aspect of the case.

Be that as it may, in view of the admission made by the 3rd Defendant that he functioned as the tenant cultivator under the Plaintiffs, we see no necessity for the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals to require strict proof of the afore-said relationship. In those circumstances, we hold that the learned Judge of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals had erred in totally disregarding the presence of the aforesaid admission made by the Defendants. Therefore, we decide to set aside the judgment dated 27-10-2010 pronounced by the learned Judges of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals. We proceed to restore the judgment dated 05-06-2007 pronounced by the learned District Judge.

Appeal is allowed.

COUNSEL : M.C.Jayaratne PC with M.D.J. Bandara, Nishani H. Hettiarachchi for the 2nd Defendant-Petitioner-Appellant.
Ranjan Suwandaratne PC with Anil Rajakaruna for the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent.

ARGUED &
DECIDED ON : 02.10.2023.

P. PADMAN SURASENA J.

Court heard the submissions of the learned Counsel for the 2nd Defendant-Petitioner-Appellant and also the submissions of the learned President's Counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent and concluded the Argument.

The Plaintiff had filed in the District Court, the Plaint in the instant case against the 1st Defendant and the 2nd Defendant praying inter alia for:

i. a declaration that the Plaintiff is the owner of the property morefully set out in the schedule to the Plaint;
ii. a declaration that the 1st and/or the 2nd defendant hold that property as a constructive trust in favour of the Plaintiff.

The Plaintiff in the Plaint itself has prayed for an enjoining order in the first place and then for an interim injunction against the 2nd Defendant, to compel the 2nd Defendant to maintain the Status Quo relating to the relevant land.

Having considered the material adduced before Court, the learned District Judge by his order dated 17.09.2018, has granted the interim injunction as prayed for in the Plaint against the 2nd Defendant.

Turning albeit briefly to the facts of the case, the land relevant to this action was originally owned by the mother of the Plaintiff. The said mother had subsequently transferred it to her daughter (the Plaintiff). The 1st Defendant is the husband of the Plaintiff.

The Plaintiff had subsequently transferred this land to her husband (the 1st Defendant). Later, the 1st Defendant (Plaintiff's husband) had transferred it to the 2nd Defendant.

This Court has granted Leave to Appeal on the following two questions, i. Did the Civil Appellate High Court err in Law by not taking into account, the fact that the Power of Attorney of the Plaintiff has no locus standi to institute the present action?

ii. Were the learned Civil Appellate High Court Judges in error by not taking into consideration, the specific purposes contained in the said Power of Attorney when the learned High Court Judges determined the question pertaining to the institution of this action on the said Power of Attorney against the Defendants?

The central question to be decided by this Court as per the said two questions of law is whether the Plaintiff was entitled to institute this action on the strength of the Power of Attorney given by the Plaintiff to her mother.

When this question was raised on behalf of the 2nd Defendant in the course of the inquiry pertaining to the issuance of the interim injunction before the District Court, after considering the material adduced before Court, the learned District Judge had not accepted that as a ground to refuse the interim injunction prayed for by the Plaintiff.

The Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals, when considering the appeal lodged by the 2nd Defendant against the said order of the District Court, also had not accepted the said ground raised by the 2nd Defendant as a ground not to issue the interim injunction prayed for by the Plaintiff.

In the course of the argument, it was revealed before this Court that the Defendants have not yet filed their answers before the District Court.

Mr. Ranjan Suwadarathne PC appearing for the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent agreed that there is no bar for the Defendants to raise this point as an issue in the course of the trial in which case, the learned District Judge would be able to fully consider and decide this issue according to law.

We have taken into consideration the fact that whatever the views mentioned in the orders of Court have been mentioned in the course of an inquiry pertaining to the issuance of the interim injunction at a very early stage of this case. This has been done at a stage where the Defendants had not filed their answers. Thus, issues to be decided by the District Court are yet to be framed. It would be thereafter that the District Court would fully go into the matter and decide the relevant issues. Depending on whether the decision pertaining to the issue would depend on facts, the District Court would decide the proper stage to decide the issue.

In view of the above, we are of the view that this Court should best avoid deciding this issue at this stage because, issues are yet to be framed and the trial is yet to be conducted before the District Court.

In view of the factual positions already set out above, we are of the view that there was material before the learned District Judge to justify granting the interim injunction at that stage.

For those reasons, we decide not to interfere with the impugned judgment of the Provincial High Court of Civil Appeals at this stage.

For those reasons, we are of the view that it is best not to consider this question at this stage. This question must be left for the District Court to decide in the trial. We decide to dismiss this appeal without costs.

Samayawardhena, J.

The plaintiff company filed this action against the defendant employee in the District Court of Colombo seeking an order for the return of the share certificate for 11,606 bonus shares in the plaintiff company and the sum of Rs. 7,776.02 paid as dividends on those shares on the basis that the share certificate was delivered and the dividend payment made by mistake. The defendant filed answer denying the plaintiff's claim and made a claim in reconvention seeking an order against the plaintiff for delivery of the original share certificate and damages in a sum of Rs. 1 million for failure to allot bonus shares and dividends after 1993.

After trial, the District Court answered the issues raised by the plaintiff against the plaintiff and the issues raised by the defendant in favour of the defendant and dismissed the plaintiff's action. The District Judge states in several places of the judgment that the defendant is entitled to bonus shares and dividends.

The District Judge answered inter alia the following issues in favour of the defendant:

10) Has the plaintiff any legal right or status to

(I) refuse to allot the 11606 shares allotted to the defendant by the Secretary to the Treasury?

(II) recall the 11606 Bonus Share Certificate No. 035411 issued to the defendant?

(III) recall the dividend of Rs. 7776/02 paid to the defendant in 1992?

(IV) instruct the Central Depository System that the Bonus Share Certificate No. 03541 for 11606 shares had been lost or stolen?

11) If issue No.10 is answered in favour of the defendant, is the act of the plaintiff wrongful and illegal?

12) If issues 10 and 11 are answered in favour of the defendant is the defendant entitled to

(i) an order of Court directing the plaintiff to issue the original share certificate in respect of the 11606 shares issued by the Secretary to the Treasury?

(II) an order of Court directing the plaintiff to withdraw the instructions given to the Central Depository System that the 11606 Bonus Share Certificate issued to the defendant was lost or stolen?

(III) an order of Court directing the plaintiff to issue to the defendant all dividends, bonus shares and rights issued by the plaintiff after 1993?

Having answered the above issues in favour of the defendant, the District Judge, at last, states thus:

This means the plaintiff need not pay dividends on those shares from 1993 until the date of the judgment. The District Judge is silent on damages although she answered that issue (issue No. 12 quoted above) in favour of the defendant.

Both parties appealed to the High Court of Civil Appeal against the judgment.

In the petition of appeal, the defendant sought the following reliefs from the High Court:

(i) to vary that part of the judgment to entitle the defendant-appellant to obtain all rights and dividends from the inception of the action without limiting it to after the date of judgment,

(ii) to award damages in a sum of rupees one million (Rs.1,000,000) being damages suffered by him for not being able to sell or deal with his shares,

(iii) to award costs and such other reliefs as to the Court shall seem meet.

The High Court dismissed the appeal of the plaintiff. In respect of the appeal of the defendant, the High Court says counsel for the defendant informed Court at the argument that he does not pursue the claim for damages. Therefore the High Court has rightly not considered the claim for damages. I quoted above the reliefs sought by the defendant before the High Court. The claim for damages is the second relief sought by the defendant. That is the claim not pursued by the defendant at the argument. The High Court judgment is silent about the first relief – the dividend issue – which the District Court denied from 1993 till the date of the judgment.

The plaintiff did not appeal against the judgment of the High Court to this Court but the defendant did. Although this Court granted leave to appeal on all three questions of law stated in paragraph 17(a), (b) and (c), at the argument before this Court, learned counsel for the defendant informed Court that the defendant confines himself to the question of law stated in 17(b), which reads as follows:

> Have the Judges of Civil Appeal High Court erred in law in holding that the petitioner is entitled to all shares under the two share certificates but failing and or not giving a decision whether or not the petitioner is entitled to the declared dividends attached to the said shares?

The defendant claims that dividends were given to all other shareholders but denied to him, except for the year 1993. It is not the contention of the plaintiff at the trial or before this Court that dividends were not approved by the Board of Directors and shareholders at the annual general meetings and therefore the defendant is disentitled to them. The only submission made by learned counsel for the plaintiff at the argument was that the defendant in the prayer to the answer sought damages instead of dividends and the defendant withdrew that claim before the High Court and therefore the defendant is not entitled to dividends. I am unable to agree with that line of argument.

A judgment has to be understood holistically, not piecemeal. The defendant sought dividends for his shares by way of issues and the Court answered those issues in the affirmative. Therefore the plaintiff cannot say that the defendant did not claim dividends but only damages. The District Court held that the defendant can retain paid dividends in a sum of Rs. 7776.02 until 1993 and that the defendant is entitled to dividends after the date of the judgment but not entitled to dividends from 1993 until the date of the judgment. No basis or reason whatsoever was given for this by the District Court. A Court cannot come to such a conclusion without giving reasons. The High Court failed to address that issue in the judgment possibly by oversight. I set aside the finding of the District Court which denies dividends for a specified period and answer the question of law above-quoted in the affirmative.

The District Court shall enter decree recognising the defendants' entitlement not only to shares but also to dividends on those shares, without limiting it to take effect from the date of the judgment. The defendant is not entitled to damages but entitled to costs in all three courts.

The judgments of the District Court and the High Court are varied to that extent. The appeal is allowed with costs.

Judgement

Aluwihare, PC, J

The 1st Accused-Appellant-Appellant in SC Appeal No. 129/2018 and the 2nd Accused-Appellant-Appellant in SC Appeal No. 128/2018 (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the 'Appellants') were indicted in the High Court of Kalutara on the following Counts:

1. That on or about 26.03.2000 the two accused along with one Edirisinghe Arachchige Gemunu Ranjith who is now deceased, committed the offence of Robbery of Rs. 37,579/- from the Pelpola Co-Operative Rural Bank, an offence punishable under Section 4 of the Offences Against Public Property Act, No. 12 of 1982 read with Section 32 of the Penal Code; and
2. In the course of the same transaction in the aforementioned count, the two accused along with the said Edirisinghe Arachchige Gemunu Ranjith Possessed a Firearm without a license, and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 22(1) read with Section 22(3) of the Firearms Ordinance as amended by Act, No. 22 of 1996; and
3. In the course of the same transaction in the aforementioned count, the two accused along with said Edirisinghe Arachchige Gemunu Ranjith Possessed a Hand Grenade without lawful authority and thereby committed an offence punishable under Section 2(1)(b) of the Offensive Weapons Act, No. 18 of 1996.

At the conclusion of the trial, the two Appellants were convicted of all counts referred to above and accordingly were imposed the following sentences.

Count 1: 20 Years of rigorous imprisonment with a Fine of Rs. 112, 737/= with a default term of 6 months.

Count 2: Imprisonment for life.

Count 3: 10 Years rigorous imprisonment with a Fine of Rs. 10,000 with a default term of 3 months.

In consideration of the Appellants' commendable services in the Army during a time of war, and the fact that the 1st Accused-Appellant-Appellant is disabled, the learned High Court Judge ordered that the terms of imprisonment imposed to run concurrently.

Being aggrieved by the Judgement of the High Court, the two Appellants appealed to the Court of Appeal against the same. In the Court of Appeal, the learned Counsel for the Appellants submitted that they would confine their challenge in relation to the conviction and the sentence imposed in respect of Count 2, [possession of the firearm] and the Judgement of the Court of Appeal therefore addresses matters relating to Count 2 alone. By its judgement dated 17.03.2017, the Court of Appeal affirmed the judgement of the High Court. Being aggrieved by the said Judgement, the Appellants sought special leave to appeal from this Court and special leave was granted on the following question of Law in respect of both appeals.

Did the Court of Appeal err in holding that the Petitioner was guilty of the offence of 'possessing a firearm' under the provisions of the Firearms Ordinance without it being established that what was possessed by the Petitioner was a 'firearm' within the meaning of the Firearms Ordinance?

This judgement shall apply to both appeals, that is SC Appeal No. 128/2018 as well as SC Appeal No. 129/2018. Before addressing the question of law, I will briefly state the factual narrative relating to the 2nd count in both appeals.

The version of the Prosecution, per the evidence adduced at the trial was that the Police had recovered a Pistol from the trouser pocket of the 1st Appellant at the time of his arrest. The Officer-in-Charge [Rex Jensen] gave evidence to the effect that after taking the pistol into custody, it was handed over to the Police reserve but had then been misplaced, and that an inquiry regarding the misplacement was pending. The prosecution stated that the gun could not be located and as such it was not sent to the Government Analyst for examination and report, and that therefore, the Government Analyst's report could not be produced at the trial. The non-production of the Pistol and the Government Analyst's Report forms the crux of this appeal.

Submission of the Appellants

The learned President's Counsel for the 1st Accused-Appellant-Appellant in SC Appeal No. 129/2018 contended that the convictions were bad in law as the said Pistol (alleged by the Prosecution to have been possessed by the Appellants without license), and the Government Analyst's Report which would have affirmed possession were not produced at the trial. Essentially, the Counsel argued that a prosecution for an offence of possession of a firearm under the Firearms Ordinance could not succeed without the production of the supposed Firearm, and the Government Analyst's Report on the said Firearm as it could not be proven beyond reasonable doubt that what was possessed was actually a 'Firearm' within the meaning of the Ordinance. Learned Counsel for the 2nd Accused-Appellant-Appellant in SC Appeal No. 128/2018 took up a similar position and associated himself with the submissions made by the learned President's Counsel.

Section 2 of the Firearms Ordinance as amended defines an 'Automatic Gun' as "a gun which repeatedly ejects an empty cartridge shell, and introduces new cartridge on the firing of the gun". Since the pistol was not produced, the learned Counsel for the Appellants argued that the prosecution had necessarily failed to prove that the item which was possessed by the Appellants was in fact a Firearm, and an 'automatic gun' within the meaning of Section 2 of the Ordinance, and that it follows therefore that the prosecution had failed to prove that the Appellants were in possession of a Firearm without a license punishable under Section 22(1) read with Section 22(3) of the Firearms Ordinance as amended by Act, No. 22 of 1996. The learned President's Counsel also noted that the High Court relied on the proviso to Section 22 of the Ordinance as amended and argued that as the count 2 on the indictment does not allege possession of "an automatic gun or a repeater shotgun" but merely refers to "a gun", even if the prosecution had succeeded in establishing that the Appellants possessed a firearm, the Appellants could not have been sentenced to Life Imprisonment upon conviction of said count.

The proviso to Section 22(3) stipulates that "Provided that where the offence consists of having the custody or possession of, or of using, an automatic gun or repeater shotgun, the offender shall be punished with imprisonment for life".

Submission of the Prosecution

The learned DSG contended that the facts of the case are of a distinct nature in that the mere absence of the Pistol or the Government Analyst's Report in evidence should not defeat the conviction. At the High Court, and the Court of Appeal, the learned DSG sought to prove that the evidence led at the trial by way of Witnesses, particularly the evidence of Captain Bandara of the Ganemulla Army camp was sufficient to prove possession of the pistol, and that it was a Firearm within the meaning of the Ordinance. The fact that specific oral evidence in relation to the recovery of the Pistol was only provided by the arresting officers is significant.

Drawing attention of the court to Section 47 of the Evidence Ordinance which makes the opinions of persons who are not experts relevant when it comes to identification of hand writing, the learned DSG submitted that the evidence of Captain Bandara should be considered with regard to the firearm in issue. In my view, the application of Section 47 of the Evidence Ordinance relates to handwriting and handwriting alone and by any stretch of imagination Section 47 cannot be applied to other fields where expert opinion is required.

Judgement of the Court of Appeal

Their Lordships of the Court of Appeal have relied on the judgements in Sudubanda v. The Attorney General [1998] 3 SLR 375 and Suduweli Kondage Sarath and Another v. The Attorney General (decided on 26.10.1998) to hold that the non-production of a material object is not necessarily fatal to a conviction and that a conviction can be sustained upon the description of instruments in the hands of the accused by lay witnesses respectively.

I will now consider the question of law upon which submissions were made by Counsel.

Determination

In my opinion, while the non-production of material in the prosecution of offences which only require a literal understanding of certain words or phrases may not be essential, it is only logical that material which are provided specific interpretations by legislation and form the pith and substance of the offence is sine qua non. The rationale for this view lies in the fact that the nonproduction is merely a symptom of the larger defect of the lack of evidence to prove the allegation that the pistol claimed to have been possessed by the Appellants was of a nature, make, model and function as that of an 'automatic gun' or a 'repeater shotgun' within the meaning of the Firearms Ordinance. Their Lordships in the Court of Appeal have therefore been remiss in failing to note this glaring defect of the impugned conviction.

The judgement of Sudubanda v. The Attorney General [1998] 3 SLR 375 merely discusses the non-production of a material object in respect of an offence which did not require the object to conform to a particular interpretation. For example, in Sudubanda's case [supra], the accused was prosecuted for Attempted Murder. The Court drew a distinction between 'real evidence' and oral evidence which may serve to establish the use of such real evidence in the commission of the offence. In fact, the Court referred to the rationale for the exclusion of 'real evidence' from our evidentiary regime as explained by Sir Fitzgerald Stephen, the author of our Evidence Ordinance. "Sir Fitzgerald Stephen …in his speech in the Indian Parliament, in introducing the Act, has stated categorically that he did not, in defining evidence, include real evidence as part of the definition of evidence. He has said that omission was deliberate and intentional so that the law in India would be different to the law in Great Britain... However, in proviso 2 to section 60 of the Evidence Ordinance he has made provision for the adduction of real evidence subject to a condition. Section 60 proviso 2 sets out thus: Provided also that if oral evidence refers to the existence or condition of any material thing other than a document, the court may, if it thinks fit, require the production of such material thing for its inspection" [at pages 377-378].

The proviso referred to in the above extract merely provides the Court the discretion to call for a production, i.e.: 'real evidence', when it deems it necessary. The prosecution in relation to Count 2 in the present case is for the possession of a firearm without license whereby the specific firearm alleged to have been possessed by the two accused is an 'automatic gun' as defined by the Firearms Ordinance. Thus, the consideration in Sudubanda is manifestly different to the consideration before this Court. As stated before, what is crucially lacking in the present conviction is evidence to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the pistol claimed to have been possessed by the Appellants was of a nature, make, model and function as that of an 'automatic gun' or a 'repeater shotgun' within the meaning of the Firearms Ordinance, which is a fact- in- issue in the case, as opposed to the weapon used to cause the injury in a case of attempted murder as referred to in Sudubanda [supra] . Therefore, the conclusions drawn above are consonant with the views of Sir Fitzgerald Stephen.

Material which bears a literal meaning for the operation of law do not require the establishment of their use by specific evidence are wholly distinctive from material with a specific legal meaning-such as a 'gun' as defined in the Firearms Ordinance. Crucially, what both the learned High Court Judge and their Lordships in the Court of Appeal have failed to note is that the Firearms Ordinance imposes what may be referred to as the 'Straw Board Test' to determine whether an ordnance is in fact 'a gun'. Per Section 2 of the Ordinance as amended, 'a gun' is only 'a gun' "if any barrelled weapon of any description from which any shot, pellet or other missile can be discharged with sufficient force to penetrate not less than eight straw boards, each of three-sixty-fourth of an inch thickness placed one-half of an inch apart, the first such straw board being at a distance of fifty feet from the muzzle of the weapon, the plane of the straw boards being perpendicular to the line of fire". Accordingly, if the projectile fired from a weapon is not capable of penetrating the straw boards in the manner set out above, the weapon would not fall within the types of Ordnances regulated by the Firearms Ordinance. The evidence that a weapon so alleged to have been possessed was in fact a weapon which falls within the definition of 'a gun' as aforesaid must be presented from an expert, who in cases such as these is ballistic expert.

The aforementioned distinction does not have to be established, for instance, where a person alleges that he was robbed at gun point and charged under Section 383 of the Penal Code for Robbery with attempt to cause death or grievous hurt. Even if the firearm is not produced, or no evidence is led to establish the make, model, function or other specification of the firearm, the suspect may be convicted since the Penal Code does not impose a specific interpretation for the word 'gun' and therefore the word only bears a literal meaning and does not carry a specific legal meaning.

It is to be noted that the Court of Appeal made the cardinal error in misdirecting itself by failure to appreciate the distinction of the non-production of a 'material object' with that of "lack of proof" to establish a fact-in-issue. The failure on the part of the prosecution here is not the non-production of the pistol alleged to have been recovered from the Accused before court per se, but the lack of evidence to establish that, what was recovered from the accused falls within the meaning of a 'a gun' under the Firearms Ordinance. Assuming that, as in the instant case, the firearm was misplaced after it was forwarded and examined by the Government Analyst, yet the prosecution could have proceeded, as then expert evidence would have been available to ascertain this fact.

For the reasons stated above, I am of the view that the absence of evidence of a ballistic expert [Government Analyst] is fatal to the conviction in respect of Count No. 2 and that it was not proven beyond a reasonable doubt that the 1st Accused-Appellant-Appellant in SC Appeal No. 129/2018 and the 2nd Accused-Appellant-Appellant in SC Appeal No. 128/2018 committed the offence of Possessing a Firearm without a license punishable under Section 22(1) read with Section 22(3) of the Firearms Ordinance as amended by Act, No. 22 of 1996. Accordingly, the conviction of the Appellants on Count No. 2 of the indictment and the term of life imprisonment imposed on them by the learned High Court judge are hereby set aside. The convictions entered and sentences imposed on the other Counts are to remain intact.

K. PRIYANTHA FERNANDO, J

1. The Plaintiff-Appellant-Petitioner (hereinafter referred to as the appellant) in this case, preferred an appeal from the judgment of the learned High Court Judge of Avissawella dated 18.11.2010 which was given in favour of the Defendants-Respondents-Respondents (hereinafter referred to as the respondents). The appellant alleges that, he is the owner of the land to which the dispute relates to, and that the respondents should not be given a right of way by way of a servitude over the appellant's land.

2. This Court granted leave to appeal on the questions of law stated in (b),(d),(f) and (g) in averment No.11 of the petition dated 28.12.2009.

The facts in brief.

3. The appellant became the owner of the land described in the schedule to the plaint by deed No. 17714 dated 08.11.1987 attested by P.M. Srimathie Suriapperuma, Notary Public. The appellant has bought the said land from one Thilakarathne in 1987. As per the appellant, the appellant and his predecessors in title has had over 10 years of uninterrupted and undisturbed possession of the said land, and has also had prescriptive title to the same and further, there has been no servitudes over the said land. According to the Survey Plan No. 28/L, in District Court Case No. 33004/L drawn by surveyor Mayadunne, the land to which the dispute relates to is seven perches in extent.

4. The land which belongs to the appellant is situated facing the Pepiliyawala-Dangalla Road. The land belonging to the respondents in this case has been situated behind the land of the appellant, adjacent to the appellants' land towards the north-west. The respondents' land is far larger in extent than that of the appellant.

5. In March 1989, the appellant has started constructing a boutique in his land. Following this, a dispute has arisen between the appellant and the respondents. The respondents have lodged a complaint at the Pugoda police station on 10.06.1989, alleging that the said boutique blocks the footpath over the appellant's land that leads the respondents to the Pepiliyawala-Dangalla road. The footpath has been claimed from the right side of the building which rests on the appellant's land.

6. Consequent to this complaint, the case bearing No. 445/L has been instituted in the Magistrate's Court of Pugoda, under section 66 of the Primary Courts Procedure Act, and after inquiry, the respondents were permitted to use a 3 feet wide footpath over the southern end of the appellant's land.

7. Thereafter, the appellant has instituted action No. 33004/L in the District Court of Gampaha stating that the respondents were not entitled to a footpath over his land. However, as the appellant has not referred this dispute to the Mediation Board in the first instance, the appellant has withdrawn the action No. 33004/L, reserving the right to file a fresh action. After referring the case to the Mediation Board, a certificate of non-settlement was obtained.

8. Thereafter, the appellant has instituted action in the District Court of Pugoda bearing Case No. 331/L [the appeal brief is marked as 'X'] seeking a declaration that he is the owner of the land described in the schedule to the plaint, a declaration that the defendants have no right to use a foot path by way of a servitude over the plaintiff's (appellant) land, a permanent injunction preventing the defendants from using a roadway over the said land, compensation and costs.

9. The appellant claimed that the disputed footpath was a new roadway which was demarcated on his land on 25.01.1990 by the Primary Court, and the respondents have no right of way over his land.

10. The respondents in their answer ['A-2' of 'X'] took up the position that, the respondents and their predecessors in title have been using the roadway over the appellant's land for about 18 years, that they have obtained prescriptive title over it, and that the roadway after being blocked by the appellant was reopened consequent to filing of the Case No. 445/L in the Magistrate's Court of Pugoda. It was also averred that the said roadway was the only way to reach the Dangalla-Pepiliyawala road and was the shortest way to reach the said road. Further, the respondents claimed that they have a right to claim a 10 feet wide roadway by way of necessity and prescription.

11. Mayadunne, Licensed Surveyor has prepared the Survey Plan No. 28/L dated 08.04.1991, on a commission taken by the appellant and this has been marked and produced in the District Court as ['P-2']. K. G. Hubert Perera, Licensed Surveyor has prepared the Survey Plan No. 4905/L on a commission taken by the respondents and this has been marked and produced in the District Court as ['V-1'].

12. The learned District Judge, by judgment dated 07.10.2002 ['A-4' of 'X'] dismissed the appellant's action and also dismissed the respondents' claim to a right of way by necessity. The learned Judge of the District Court held in favour of the respondents stating that, the respondents are entitled to a use of a 3 feet wide foot path by prescription.

13. Being aggrieved by the judgment of the learned District Judge, the appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal. Consequently, the case was transferred to the Provincial High Court of Gampaha and subsequently, to the Civil Appellate High Court of Avissawella bearing Case No. WP/HCCA/AV/858/2008(F).

14. The appellant in his submissions has taken up the position that the learned District Judge has failed to evaluate the evidence led at the trial, in granting a 3 feet wide roadway despite there being no prescriptive acquisition proved by the respondents. By judgment dated 18.11.2010 ['Z'] the learned High Court Judge dismissed the appellant's appeal and held for the respondents.

15. Being aggrieved by the decision of the learned Judges of the Civil Appellate High Court, the appellant preferred the instant appeal to this Court. Although eight questions of law were averred in the petition of appeal, the Court granted leave on the following questions of law,

    (b) The learned Judges of the High Court failed to duly consider the evidence led by the plaintiff (appellant).

    (d) The learned Judges of the High Court erred in holding that the defendants have acquired prescriptive title to the footpath.

    (f) The High Court failed to consider the evidence of Thilakaratne who is the plaintiff's (appellant) predecessor in title who stated that there was no foot path at the time he sold the land in suit for the plaintiff (appellant) in 1987.

    (g) The High Court failed to consider that the defendants have failed to prove physical use of the footpath for over 10 years.

Written submissions for the appellant

16. It was the position of the learned President's Counsel for the appellant that, the learned Judges of the High Court erred in holding that the defendants (respondents) have acquired prescriptive title to the footpath.

17. The learned President's Counsel for the appellant submitted that, the learned Judges of the High Court, by relying on the case of Mercin v. Edwin and Others [1984] 1 Sri.L.R. 224, which in turn relied on the South African case of Head v. Toit S.A.L.R [1932] C.P.D. 287 and stating that, the mere enjoyment of the right of way for the prescriptive period is proof of adverse user in relation to a claim for a servitude based on prescription, and holding that the respondents have acquired prescriptive title to the footpath in question, has decided this case based on principles of Roman Dutch Law, ignoring the decisions of this Court and the Prescription Ordinance. It is his position that, as the Roman Dutch Law is no longer the law governing prescription in Sri Lanka, the learned Judges of the High Court have erred in their decision.

18. The learned President's Counsel further submitted that, the High Court, in arriving at the finding that the respondents have used the footpath in question for over 10 years, has placed heavy reliance on the Survey Plan No. 4905/L drawn by Hubert Perera ['V-1' at page 216 of 'X'] and the observations made by the learned Magistrate of Pugoda in Case No. 445/L. It is the position of the learned President's Counsel for the appellant that the said plan demarcating a footpath over the appellant's land, was drawn in the year 1992, which was after the order of the learned Magistrate of Pugoda dated 25.01.1990. It is his position that the footpath which was demarcated in the said plan came into existence after the order of the learned Magistrate of Pugoda. Therefore, it has been submitted that the High Court misdirected itself by relying on the Survey Plan drawn by Hubert Perera, and failed to consider the evidence led by the appellant to show that footpath did not exist prior to the order of the learned Magistrate of Pugoda.

19. It was further submitted that, unlike the duty of a Magistrate under section 66 of the Primary Courts Procedure Act, the duty of a District Judge in a civil case is to determine the rights of the parties by examining whether there has been undisturbed and uninterrupted use of the footpath for over 10 years, and whether such use has been adverse to the rights of the owner of the land. It was the submission of the learned President's Counsel that, the learned Judges of the High Court have misdirected themselves in relying on the observation of the learned Magistrate in determining the rights of the parties.

20. The learned President's Counsel further submitted that, the respondents have failed to prove undisturbed, uninterrupted, and adverse physical use of the footpath for over 10 years. The learned Judges of the High Court in reaching their decision, in addition to the plan drawn by Hubert Perera and the order of the learned Magistrate, also relied on the evidence of Sarath Wijesinghe and G. Piyasiri. It was the submission of the learned President's Counsel that the testimony of the witnesses aforementioned were not specific, and that their testimony was limited to the fact that they themselves used the footpath across the appellant's land to reach the respondents' house, there is nothing to suggest that the respondents used the footpath to gain access to the respondents' land.

21. It was further submitted that, although both the witnesses said that they have been residents of the area since their childhood and know the area well, they both took up the position that they were unaware of another road to gain access to the respondents' land. However, the Survey Plan drawn by Mayadunne in 1991 ['P-2'] clearly shows two other access roads to the respondents' land [marked 'B' and 'C' in 'P-2']. Therefore, it was the submission of the learned

President's Counsel that, the evidence of the two witnesses, Sarath Wijesinghe and G. Piyasiri cannot be relied upon to establish that the respondents have physical user of the footpath for the prescriptive period.

22. It was also submitted that, there existed no clear and well-defined track as required by law. The purported right of way runs over the apron of a public well which has been in existence since 1942. Further, a telephone post has also been erected in the middle of the said footpath.

23. It was further submitted by the learned President's Counsel for the appellant that, the burden of proof of prescriptive title is on the party invoking the same, and that the respondents of this case failed to discharge the burden of proof that the use of the said footpath was for 10 years, undisturbed, uninterrupted and was adverse to the title of the appellant.

24. It was also submitted by the learned President's Counsel that, the High Court failed to duly consider the evidence led by the appellant, when the appellant led evidence of his predecessor in title Thilakaratne [pages 83 to 97 of 'X'] to the effect that the appellant and his predecessors in title has had over 10 years of uninterrupted and undisturbed possession of the land, and also have prescriptive title to the same and that there had been no servitudes over the said land. Further, at the time the said Thilakaratne sold the land to the appellant in 1987, there had been no right of way over the said land. The learned President's Counsel further submitted that, as there were two alternate roads to the respondents' land as depicted in plan ['P-2'] drawn by Surveyor Mayadunne, the respondents should not be entitled to the footpath in question.

Written submissions for the respondents

25. The learned Counsel for the respondents contended that, the learned Judges of the High Court have accurately considered the requirements to acquire a servitude of right of way, and that the learned Judges of the High Court have not erred in law in considering Mercin(supra), as the said case was decided well after the enactment of the Prescription Ordinance. Further, that their Lordships of the High Court have taken into consideration and satisfied the requirements of the Prescription Ordinance as there was no leave or license in using the said footpath, the use was adverse. The learned Counsel further submitted that, principles of Roman Dutch law can be harmoniously used with the Prescription Ordinance and relied on the case of M.S. Perera v. M.N. Gunasiri Perera [S.C. Appeal No. 59/2012] decided on 18/01/2018.

26. It was submitted by the learned Counsel for the respondents that, the learned Judges of the High Court were correct in concluding that the footpath in dispute was not a new footpath which came into existence after the order of the learned Magistrate. The witness Ruparatne Weerakkody (who was the Grama Seva Niladhari of the area) called by the appellant stated in his cross examination that, there was no dispute as to the footpath in his period of service, which was from 1978 – 1985. Therefore, as there was also no argument by the appellant for disapproving the above contention, this negates the appellant's assertion as to the said footpath being a new footpath. It was further submitted that, the survey plan drawn by surveyor Hubert Perera cannot be dismissed on the basis that it was drawn after the observation of the learned Magistrate. The said plan was drawn in order to have it recorded in evidence, the said footpath did exist over a period of time and after the observation of the learned Magistrate of Pugoda, the respondents thought it wise to have the said right of way drawn by a surveyor to avoid any disputes in the future.

27. It was further submitted by the learned Counsel for the respondents that, the learned Judges of the High Court were correct in finding that the respondents have proved undisturbed, uninterrupted, and adverse physical use of the footpath for over ten years. When considering the evidence of the witnesses that were called by both the appellant and the respondents, it is clear that the respondents have established by cogent evidence, the physical user of the footpath for over the full prescriptive period. Ruparatne Weerakkody in his evidence said that, there was no dispute relating to the said footpath during his period of service in the years 1978-1985 and the witness Nimal Wijesiri in his evidence revealed that, there was an amicable partition of the land adjoining the respondent's land in 1986 and thereafter the co-owners of the said land granted a roadway to the respondents. Further, witness Sarath Wijesinghe who was called by the respondents stated that he used the said footpath in 1989-1990 to gain access to the respondents' land. This position was confirmed by witness G. Piyasiri.

28. It was further submitted by the learned Counsel for the respondents that, the respondents have adduced cogent evidence through the evidence of the witnesses which makes reference to dates and facts which are undeniably relevant material to the said right of way, and discharged the burden of proof required by law.

29. It was the submission of the learned Counsel for the respondents that, the evidence of the witness Thilakaratne (the previous owner of the land belonging to the appellant) should be given minimal value. The learned Counsel made reference to the Indian Evidence Act, where Stephen classified the grounds for believing or disbelieving particular statements made by particular persons in particular circumstances. Referring to the 'Law of Evidence' by E.R.S.R. Coomaraswamy Volume II, Book 2, Page 1049 the learned Counsel submitted that, one must consider certain attributes which affects the power of the witness to speak the truth, those which affect his will to speak the truth, and those which depend on the probability or improbability of the statement.

30. I will first resort to answer the question of law (d) and consider whether the learned Judges of the High Court erred in holding that the defendants(respondents) have acquired prescriptive title to the footpath.

31. At the hearing of this appeal, the main point in contention was that of prescription. The appellant urged that, after the enactment of the Prescription Ordinance in Sri Lanka, the Roman Dutch Law was no longer in force. However, the respondents took the position that principles of Roman Dutch law can be harmoniously used with the Prescription Ordinance.

32. I will now consider the applicability of Roman Dutch Law on prescription after the enactment of the Prescription Ordinance in Sri Lanka.

33. The appellant in his evidence has strenuously asserted that no footpath existed in his land which provided the respondents access to the Pepiliyawala-Dangalla road. The witness Thilakaratne who was the predecessor in title to the appellant's land in his evidence also takes a similar position. However, when considering the evidence of the witnesses Ruparatne Weerakkody (the Grama Seva Niladhari of the area), Nimal Wijesinghe, Sarath Wijesinghe and G. Piyasiri it is clear that a footpath has been in existence and it has in fact been used. Be that as it may, the mere physical user of the footpath is not sufficient to discharge the burden of proof and establish a claim for a servitude based on prescription. There exist certain other requirements that needs to be satisfied.

34. The respondents in their written submissions stated that, principles of Roman Dutch Law can be harmoniously used with the Prescription Ordinance and relied on the case of M.S. Perera(supra) where it was stated that,

> "It seems to me that, the aforesaid requirements of use nec vi, nec clam and nec precario of the Roman Dutch Law, when taken in their totality, can be related to the requirements under section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance…"

35. In the case of M.S. Perera(supra) the requirements of use nec vi, nec clam and nec precario were defined.

> "… .The occupation or use must be peaceable (nec vi), for if it be in the face of opposition and the opposition be on good grounds the party endeavouring the establish prescription will be in the same position at the end as he was at the beginning of his enjoyment (Gale, pp. 204 and 205). It must be openly exercised (nec clam) and during the entire period of 30 years the person asserting the right must have suffered no interference at the hands of the true owner, nor must he by any act have acknowledged anyone as the owner (Paarl Municipality v. Colonial Govt., 23 S.C., pp.527 and 528). Finally, the occupation or use must take place without the consent of the true owner (nec precario); it must not be by leave and license or on sufferance and thus liable to cancellation at any time (Uitenhage Divisional Council v. Bowen 1907 E.D.C.,p.80; S.A.Hotels v. Cape Town City Council, 1932 C.P.D., p.236). It must be adverse, i.e., the exercise of a right contrary to the owner's rights of ownership."

36. Further, in M.S. Perera(supra) it was stated that,

> "Thus, if the plaintiff in the present case was to prove that he was entitled to a right of way by prescription over the defendant's land, he had to establish that, the plaintiff had possessed and used a right of way over the specific and defined area of land described in the Second Schedule to the plaint, for a minimum period of ten years, in the manner stipulated in section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance*."*
>
> [Emphasis Mine]

37. His Lordship Prasanna Jayawardene, J. in M.S. Perera(supra) has clearly said that,

> "…a plaintiff who claims a right of way by prescription must establish the requisites stipulated in section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance. This means that, as set out in section 3, the plaintiff had to prove that: he has had undisturbed and uninterrupted possession and use of the right of way for a minimum of ten years and that such possession and user of the right of way has been adverse to or independent of the owner of the land and without acknowledging any right of the owner of the land over the use of that right of way."

38. Therefore, it is clear that, even in the above case, even though it is primarily acknowledged that the principles of Roman Dutch Law can be related to the requirements under section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, when considering the above position, it is clear that finally the Prescription Ordinance is what needs to be applied when considering the law relating to Prescription in Sri Lanka. It has been decided since as far back as in 1918 by Bertram CJ in Tillekeratne et al. v. Bastian et al. [1918] 21 N.L.R. 12 that our Prescription Ordinance is a complete code. This position is furthered by His Lordship Prasanna Jayawardene, J. in M.S. Perera(supra).

39. Bertram CJ in case of Tillekeratne(supra) said that,

"These are the principles of the Roman and Roman-Dutch law. They are, however, only of historical interest, as it is recognized that our Prescription Ordinance constitutes a complete code; and though no doubt we have to consider any statutory enactments in the light of the principles of the common law, it will be seen that the terms of our own Ordinance are so positive that the principles of the common law do not require to be taken into account. Let us, therefore, consider the terms of our own Ordinance."

40. In case of Perera V Ranatunge [1964] 66 NLR 337 Basnayake C.J. said that,

"It is common ground that the Roman Dutch Law of acquisitive prescription ceased to be in force after Regulation 13 of 1882 and that the rights of the parties fall to be determined in accordance with the provisions of the Prescription Ordinance. It is now settled law that the Prescription Ordinance is the sole law governing the acquisition of rights by virtue of adverse possession, and that the common law of acquisitive prescription is no longer in force except as respects the Crown."

41. Further, in case of Therunnanse v. Menike [1895] 1 NLR 200 it was stated that,

"It has been laid down and constantly acted upon by this Court that the governing Ordinance No. 22 of 1871, and the previous Ordinance No. 8 of 1834, kept alive the repeal by regulation No. 13 of 1822 of " all laws heretofore enacted or customs existing" with respect to the acquiring of rights and the barring of civil "actions by prescription," and that the consequence of that regulation and those Ordinances was to sweep away all the Roman-Dutch Law relating to the acquisition of title in immovable property (including positive and negative servitudes) by prescription, except as regards the property of the Crown. Hence the only law relating to the acquisition of private immovable property by prescription is to be found in the 3rd section of the Ordinance No. 22 of 1871…"

42. The Prescription Ordinance No. 22 of 1871 as amended by Ordinance No. 2 of 1889 (Prescription Ordinance) provides that,

Section 2

"In this Ordinance, unless the context otherwise requires - "immovable property" shall be taken to include all shares and interests in such property, and all rights, easements, and servitudes thereunto belonging or appertaining."

Section 3

"Proof of the undisturbed and uninterrupted possession by a defendant in any action, or by those under whom he claims, of lands or immovable property, by a title adverse to or independent of that of the claimant or plaintiff in such action (that is to say, a possession unaccompanied by payment of rent or produce, or performance of service or duty, or by any other act by the possessor, from which an acknowledgment of a right existing in another person would fairly and naturally be inferred) for ten years previous to the bringing of such action, shall entitle the defendant to a decree in his favour with costs. And in like manner, when any plaintiff shall bring his action, or any third party shall intervene in any action for the purpose of being quieted in his possession of lands or other immovable property, or to prevent encroachment or usurpation thereof, or to establish his claim in any other manner to such land or other property, proof of such undisturbed and uninterrupted possession as herein before explained, by such plaintiff or intervenient, or by those under whom he claims, shall entitle such plaintiff or intervenient to a decree in his favour with costs …"

43. The above provisions clearly set out that after the implementation of the Prescription Ordinance, any person asserting a servitude as to right of way must essentially prove the requirements of undisturbed and uninterrupted physical use of the right of way, for a minimum period of ten years and must also show such use of the right of way was adverse.

44. When considering the evidence before court, as explained in paragraph No. 33 of this judgment, it is clear that the respondents have established physical use of the footpath in question. However, although physical use is established, there is no evidence to show that the use of the right of way was adverse to the rights of the appellant.

45. The learned President's Counsel for the appellant took the position that, the learned Judges of the High Court have erred in holding that the mere enjoyment of the right of way for the period of prescription is proof of adverse user with regard to a servitude based on prescription. It was asserted that, the learned Judges of the High Court in relying on the case of Mercin v. Edwin and Others [1984] 1 Sri.L.R. 224 which in turn relied on the South African case of Head v. Toit S.A.L.R 1932 C.P.D. 287 have decided the instant case based on principles of Roman Dutch Law. However, it was the position of the learned Counsel for the respondents that, the learned Judges of the High Court have not erred in law in considering Mercin(supra) as it was decided after the enactment of the Prescription Ordinance.

46. Athukorale J in case of Mercin(supra) referring to what was said in Head v. Toit S.A.L.R 1932 C.P.D. 287 said,

> "… .In Head V Toit (1) it was urged that the plaintiff in a claim for a servitude based on prescription must prove not only user for the prescriptive period but must also establish that the user was adverse for which purpose the plaintiff must show positively that the user was not with the permission of the owner of the servient tenement. This contention was rejected by Sutton, J. who adopted the following statement of the law laid down by Maasdorp in Institutes of Cape Law (Vol. 1, p. 226). …
>
> > "in the case of an affirmative servitude… the mere enjoyment of the right in question is in itself an adverse act."
>
> I hold that on the facts in the instant case the plaintiff has proved adverse user of the right of way claimed by him for over the prescriptive period."

47. The entirety of the above statement adopted by Sutton J. in the case of Head v. Toit S.A.L.R 1932 C.P.D. 287 has been laid down in Maasdorp in Institutes of Cape Law (Vol. 2, p.216).

> "It is above all things necessary that the enjoyment be adverse. In the case of an affirmative servitude, that is, one by which the owner of a dominant tenement is entitled to do something upon or with respect to the property or real rights of another, the mere enjoyment of the right in question is in itself an adverse act, that is an act conflicting with the rights of the owner of the servient tenement. Thus, where a person has used a certain road or a dam constructed upon his neighbor's land or has cut wood upon the same for the period of prescription, or where an upper riparian proprietor has for the same periods used the whole or a fixed quantity of the water of a public stream to the exclusion of a lower proprietor, the enjoyment is patently adverse, and a prescriptive servitude will by these means have been acquired by the person exercising these respective rights. …"

48. It seems to me that, the statement that, "the mere enjoyment of the right in question is in itself an adverse act, that is an act conflicting with the rights of the owner of the servient tenement" should be understood in its context.

49. The above extract clearly stipulates that, "It is above all things necessary that the enjoyment be adverse". Thus, it must nevertheless have the underlying requirement of an adverse act "that is an act conflicting with the rights of the owner of the servient tenement". I am unable to see how merely walking on a footpath for the period of prescription in this instance would in any sense be adverse. Thus, considering the facts and circumstances of this case, I am of the view that, mere use in the absence of an adverse act, is insufficient to establish a servitude of right of way by prescription as per section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance.

50. Merely walking on a footpath does not make it an adverse act conflicting with the rights of the owner. If prescription is allowed to be established merely by walking through someone's land, it would pave the way for countless claims to be levelled against owners of land. It would give rise to drastic consequences in village settings where people casually walk through the lands of each other as a practice. If all persons casually exercising physical use of footpaths across neighboring lands were to bring their claims stating that each such footpath constitutes a right of way by prescription simply by physical use, the doctrine of prescription would have far reaching and drastic consequences which were never intended by its proponents.

51. Therefore, as an essential element required under section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance has not been satisfied in the instant case, it is my position that the respondents have not aptly discharged the burden of proof in establishing prescriptive title to the footpath in question. It is also my position that, after the enactment of the Prescription Ordinance in Sri Lanka, the sole governing law with regard to establishing a claim by prescription is the Prescription Ordinance. Any claim under prescription should follow nothing but the Ordinance itself.

52. Thus, in answering the question of law (d), it is my view that the learned Judges of the High Court have erred in holding that the respondents have acquired prescriptive title to the footpath.

53. Finally, I will answer the questions of law (b),(f) and (g). These questions of law will be answered together. When considering the evidence presented in the testimony of witnesses, it is clear that sufficient and cogent evidence has been adduced in the District Court to show that the respondents have in fact used the said footpath for over a period of time. The High Court has duly considered the evidence of the witnesses and has also proved physical use of the footpath for over 10 years.

54. However, for the reasons that I have stated from paragraph No. 33 to 52 of my judgment, even if the questions of law (b),(f) and (g) are answered in the negative, the appellant will succeed in the appeal.

55. Thus, I set aside the Judgment of the Provincial High Court in Case No. WP/HCCA/AV/858/2008(F) dated 18.11.2010. I also set aside the judgment of the District Court of Pugoda in Case No. 331/L dated 07.10.2002. I make no order with regard to costs.

The appeal is allowed.

COUNSEL : Chanaka Kulatunga instructed by R. Thennakoon for the Substituted-Applicant-Respondent-Petitioner.

WRITTEN SUBMISSIONS: Substituted Applicant-Respondent-Appellant on 10th August 2017.

ARGUED ON : 02nd November 2022

DECIDED ON : 06th October 2023

S. THURAIRAJA, PC, J.

The husband of the Substituted Applicant-Respondent-Appellant filed an application in the Labour Tribunal of Kandy (hereinafter referred to as the "Labour Tribunal") against the Respondent-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the "Respondent bank") for unlawful termination of his services. After an Inquiry, the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal held that, the termination of the services of the Applicant was unjust and inequitable and awarded compensation of Rs.1610105.20 (equivalent to 6 years salary and Rs. 250,000/- which was deducted from the Applicant's gratuity by the Respondent Bank after the domestic inquiry alleging that the Appellant has defraud of Rs. 250,000/-) to the Applicant. Being aggrieved by the order of the Labour Tribunal, the Respondent Bank appealed to the Provincial High Court of the Central Province (hereinafter referred to as the 'High Court') seeking inter alia, to set aside the order of the Labour Tribunal. The Learned High Court Judge by her judgment had set aside the order of the Labour Tribunal. Being unsatisfied with the said order, the Substituted Applicant had preferred this appeal before us, special leave to appeal was granted on 29th June 2017, on the issues set out in paragraph '15 (i), (ii), (iii) and (iv)' of the petition dated 28th November 2016. When this matter was taken on 2nd November 2022, both parties have agreed to confine their arguments on the questions of law referred to in paragraph '15 (i) and (ii) of the petition dated 28th November 2016 reads as follows;

> "(i) Is the Order of the Honourable Judge of the High Court of the Central Province against the weight of the evidence led at the inquiry before the Labour Tribunal.
>
> (ii) Is the Order of the Honourable Judge of the High Court of the Central Province bad in law so far as coming into conclusion that there is no specific procedure for substitution soon after the death of the Applicant in the original Court."

Substituted Applicant-Respondent-Appellant filed her written submissions on 10th August 2017 and both parties have advanced their oral submissions.

I find it pertinent to set out the material facts of the case prior to addressing the question of law before us.

Iddamalgoda Arachchige Sunil Neksil Premalal (now deceased) (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Applicant") was an employee of the People's Bank (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Respondent Bank") from 1st August 1978 as a Grade VI-Clerk. The Applicant gradually rose in rank and was appointed as a Staff Assistant-Grade I of the Respondent Bank. In the material time relevant to this application, Applicant worked as a Staff Assistant-Grade I at Peradeniya Branch of the Respondent Bank and is alleged for defraud of Rs. 250,000/- and this was considered as a serious misconduct. The Applicant was served with a charge sheet on 25th July 2002 setting out three charges namely,

(1) On or about 6th September 2001 the applicant had committed theft and dishonestly misappropriating the said sum of money Rs. 250000/- from the 'cash bag' of another employee namely Wijesundera who was on leave;
(2) Reporting for work on or about 19th September 2001 without the approval or the authority of any superior officer and leaving the office without placing the signature on the attendance register;
(3) As a result of the two acts referred to above failure to uphold the trust and confidence the Respondent Bank had placed on the Applicant.

After this incident the Respondent Bank considered the past record of the Applicant, there it was found that he had been warned, cautioned, punished with suspension of increments and promotions. Further he was punished for gross acts of discipline. Consequently, a domestic inquiry was conducted by the Respondent Bank against the Applicant and was found guilty of serious misconduct and Applicant was dismissed from his service by letter dated 19th December 2003. The Applicant filed an application on 20th January 2004 before Labour Tribunal against the Respondent Bank for unlawful termination of his services seeking, inter alia, re-instatement in his service and/ or reasonable compensation.

The Respondent Bank filed its answer dated 20th February 2004 denying the position taken up by the Applicant and fixed the matter for inquiry on 6th April 2004. Since the Respondent Bank admitted the termination of service of the Applicant, the Respondent Bank was directed to commence the inquiry on 6th April 2004. However, upon a personal difficulty of the Counsel of the Respondent Bank, matter has been re-fixed for 7th July 2004 and 19th July 2004. When the matter was taken up for inquiry on the 19th July 2004, the Counsel for the Respondent Bank moved the Labour Tribunal that there is a criminal case regarding this issue is pending before the Magistrate Court and moved to lay by the matter until final determination at the Magistrate Court, with the consent of both parties the Labour Tribunal had laid by the case. This case was not taken up for more than 2 ½ years, then the Applicant filed a motion on 31st of January 2007 to re-open the inquiry. It was revealed that, the Honourable Attorney General has instructed the learned Magistrate by letter dated 19th June 2006, that there is no evidence against the Applicant, therefore that he be discharged from the charges against him. Accordingly, the learned Magistrate had discharged the suspect (Applicant).

The learned president of the Labour Tribunal has fixed this matter for inquiry for 25th of April 2007 and evidence of Kalutharage Harreld Lal Fernando, the Deputy Manager-Human Resource Management Department of the Respondent Bank was lead and marked documents R-1 to R-7. Further inquiry was fixed for 6th May 2008. On that date the Applicant was absent and his wife Badulpe Ramani Sepalika Pathirana appeared before Labour Tribunal and informed that her husband had passed away on 1st of April 2008 and moved to substitute herself on behalf of her husband (Vide Journal entry dated 6th May 2008 at page 30 of the High Court brief). The details of the substitution will be discussed latter part of this judgment.

Thereafter, evidence of K. Surendra Premathilake- Retired Bank Officer, P. Premaratne Rajapakse- Retired Bank Officer, S.M. Bandula Lal Kumara- Deputy Manager, Senarath Palihawadana- Manager, W. M. Wijesundera- Retired Bank Officer, R.M. Nawarathna-

Retired Bank Officer, Indrani Harischandra- Retired Bank Officer and W.M. Karunawathie Menike- Retired Bank Officer were lead on behalf of the Respondent Bank. There was no evidence lead by the Applicant nor the Substituted Applicant. After both parties closed their case, they filed their written submissions.

On 30th November 2015, the Learned President of the Labour Tribunal delivered her Order and held that the termination of the Applicant's service by the Respondent Bank was unjustifiable and inequitable, and thus ordered the Respondent Bank to pay the Appellant a sum of Rs. 1,610,105.20 being a sum equivalent to 06 years' salary and Rs. 250,000/- (which was deducted from the Applicant's gratuity) as compensation.

Being aggrieved by the order of the Labour Tribunal, the Respondent Bank appealed to the High Court seeking inter alia, to set aside the order of the Labour Tribunal. The Learned High Court Judge by her judgment had set aside the order of the Labour Tribunal. Being aggrieved with the said Judgment, the Substituted Applicant had preferred this appeal.

Now I wish to deal with the second question of law which deals with substitution at the Labour Tribunal.

The learned High Court Judge decided in her judgment and says that,

> "කෙසේ වෙතත් කම්කරු විනිශ්චය සභා නීතිය යටතේ ඉල්ලුම්කරු වගඋත්තරකරු මිය යෑමෙන් පසුව ඒ වෙනුවට ඔහුගේ උරුමකරුවෙකු ආදේශ කිරීමට නීතියේ කුමන ප්‍රතිපාදනයක් අදාළ කර ගත්තාද යන්න පිළිබඳව මෙම අධිකරණයට වටහාගත නොහැක.''
>
> "However, this Court is unable to understand as to what provision of law relating to Labour Tribunals applied to substitute an heir of the in room of the Applicant -Respondent after his death."

I perused the petition submitted to the Provincial High Court of Kandy dated 29th December 2015 by the Respondent Bank under CP/HCLTA 23/2015, and found that the questions of law raised by referring to paragraph 10 of the Petition does not raised any issue about the substitution procedure which was made before the learned President of the Labour Tribunal. I am puzzled to understand how the learned Judge of the High Court discussed and decided an issue about the substitution procedure which was not raised by the said petition of appeal nor in the written submissions filed by the parties.

As I stated above, on 6th of May 2008, the wife of the Applicant was present before the Labour Tribunal and she was informed of the procedure to be followed by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal in the presence of the Respondent Bank officials and the Substituted Applicant adhered to those instructions and filed an Affidavit, Death Certificate of the deceased Applicant and Marriage Certificate of the deceased Applicant and copy of her National Identity Card.

It is evident in the brief that she had filed an Affidavit, Death Certificate of the deceased Applicant and Marriage Certificate of the deceased Applicant and copy of her National Identity Card and same were served on the Respondent Bank.

On 28th July 2008 matter was called before the Labour Tribunal and Respondent Bank was absent and unrepresented. The learned President of the Labour Tribunal ordered the Assistant Secretary to send copies of the records to the Respondent Bank which was sufficiently complied with.

The matter was fixed for 9th October 2008, on that date, both parties were present and the Substituted Applicant supported for substitution. The Respondent Bank not only not raised any objections but also agreed to continue with the proceedings before the Labour Tribunal. The relevant portion of the proceedings dated 9th October 2008, reproduced as follows; (vide page---- High Court appeal brief)

> "මෙම නඩුවේ ඉල්ලුම්කරු මියගොස් ඇති හෙයින් ඔහු වෙනුවෙන් ඔහුගේ බිරිඳ ආදේශ කිරීම සඳහා ඉල්ලුම්කළ පක්ශවය විසින් කර ඇති ඉල්ලීම

The above Sinhala proceedings were unofficially translated for the purpose of understanding as follows:

Since the Applicant in this case died, his wife had made an application to substitute her. Respondents had no objections regarding the said application, and prepared to continue with the case further, Hence I am taking it for inquiry

After the substitution of Badulpe Ramani Sepalika Pathirana in the room and place of the Applicant I.A.S.N. Premalal, the inquiry proceeded and the Respondent Bank lead the evidence of seven witnesses which were recorded and appears in the high court brief from page no.39 to 520.

As discussed above there is no objection raised at the time of substitution. As per the law, which I wished to discuss later, I do not see any illegality of the procedure adopted by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal. The Respondent Bank is estopped raising the issue of substitution before the High Court. Anyhow, I do not see that the parties have raised an issue of substitution before the High Court. Since the matter was mentioned in the judgment of the High Court and raised as a question of law before this Court, I wish to analyse the legality of the provisions for substitution.

Section 31 C (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act (Amended) No.43 of 1950 reads as follows;

"31 C (2) - A labour tribunal conducting an inquiry shall observe the procedure prescribed under section 31A, in respect of the conduct of proceedings before the tribunal."

In numerous cases this Court held that there is no procedure prescribed in the Industrial Disputes Act. But the President of the Labour Tribunal is empowered to make provisions for substitution, subject to rules of natural justice. In Amerajeewa v University of Colombo (1993) 2 SLR 327 (Five Judges Divisional Bench) Justice Mark Fernando in agreement with all other Judges held as follows (at page 331),

> "While it is correct that the Industrial Disputes Act does not prescribe the procedure to be followed in such a situation, yet section 31C (2) confers powers upon the Labour Tribunal to devise a suitable procedure*. It was therefore incumbent upon the Tribunal to have taken some appropriate steps to give notice to interested persons so as to satisfy the basic requirements of Natural Justice."*
> (Emphasis added)

In the present case as I stated in detail above, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had asked the Substituted Applicant to file an Affidavit, Marriage Certificate and Death Certificate and support the matter which is similar to the requirements stated in the Civil Procedure Code for substitution. Considering the above judgement, the President of the Labour Tribunal had complied with and proceeded for adoption. With regret, the learned High Court Judge had not taken note of the judgment of the Divisional Bench above mentioned. Considering all I am convinced that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had followed the proper procedure hence the adoption is legal and compatible.

Now I see the learned Judge of the High Court dismissed the order of the President of the Labour Tribunal at the stroke of a pen without giving reasons.

> "කෙසේ වෙතත් කම්කරු විනිශ්චය සභාව විසින් ඉල්ලුම්කාර වගඋත්තරකරුට සිය ඉල්ලීම සඳහා සහන ලබා දී ඇත. නමුත් මෙහිදී වග-උත්තරකාර අභියාවක සඳහන් කර සිටින්නේ ඉල්ලුම්කාර වගඋත්තරකරුගේ මෙම හැසිරීම සාක්ෂිකරුවන්ගේ සාක්ෂි සහ ලේඛන මගින් කම්කරු විනිශ්චය සභාව විසින් එය සිය අවධානයට යොමුකර නොමැති බවය. කම්කරු

An approximate unofficial translation of the above has been provided below for ease of reference.

> “Regardless, the Labour Tribunal granted relief to the Applicant-Respondent in his claim. However, the Respondent-Appellant states that this conduct of the Applicant-Respondent has not been brought to its notice by the Labour Tribunal through the evidence of witnesses and documents. This conduct has, however, come to the attention of this Court upon perusing the judgment passed by the Labour Tribunal.”

Considering the evidence led before the Labour Tribunal which commenced from page no. 14 to 720 and the order of the Labour Tribunal which consists of 23 pages., I find I find there are contradictions per se and inter se in the evidence led by the Respondent Bank. The judgment of the High Court Judge runs into four pages (actual content of four pages in double space typed) has not analysed the evidence, corroborations and nor contradictions. It is not a healthier practice to turn down a judgment of the original court without giving adequate reasons. Superior Courts time and again insisted that order/judgment made based on facts and evidence will not be rejected without giving proper and satisfactory reasons hence the judgment of the learned High Court Judge cannot be accepted of dismissing the order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal without giving reasons.

With the reasons mentioned above, I answer the first question of law affirmatively. After careful consideration, I answer the second question of law affirmatively.

I find that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal has awarded a compensation equivalent to 6 years of Applicant’s salary. I find that, the calculation was done from the date of interdiction up to the date retirement. The President of the Labour Tribunal slipped in her mind that the Applicant had died before reaching the age of retirement.

That is 4 years and 3 months from the date of interdiction and he had passed away. But the President of the Labour Tribunal computed compensation up to the age of retirement.

There is no scheme of calculating compensation in the Industrial Dispute Act. The calculation of compensation is very subjective and it depends on several factors, to name a few; type and nature of employment, period he had served, past conduct of the employee, contribution to the employer/establishment, future prospects, type of the offence committed or the reason for termination etc. Further, when computing the compensation, the tribunal should be mindful the age of the Applicant, the service he had rendered and the future capability of doing a job etc., A person cannot stay at home and say that, he should be paid for not being employed. The employee should find a suitable job either equivalent or less salary, within a reasonable period of time and he cannot be unemployed without acceptable reasons.

In Ceylon Transport Board v A.H. Wijeratne (1975) 77 NLR 481, at page 487 Vythialingam. J held that,

> "The President also said that the workman was 51 years old and that he had not been able to obtain employment elsewhere. At the time that he gave evidence the workman said he was fifty-one years old. But nowhere in his evidence did he say that he was unemployed or that he had not been able to secure employment elsewhere. He did not produce any evidence that he had tried to obtain alternative employment and was unsuccessful or that having regard to his qualifications, his aptitude and his special suitability for any particular type of work it was not possible to him to secure alternative employment. He did not even say so. So that the President's statement in regard to this matter is based on pure conjecture and is based on no evidence at all. Except for the bald statements the President has also given no reasons for the acceptance of the workman's position that he has lost his pension rights and other benefits and the President has also based his findings that the workman has not been able to secure employment elsewhere on no evidence at all. There was no warrant therefore to award compensation on the basis that he would continue to be Unemployed for the rest of his life..."

As Weeramantry, J. pointed out in the case of The Ceylon Transport Board Vs. Gunasinghe (72 N. L. R. 76) at page 83,

''Proper findings of fact are a necessary basis for the exercise by Labour Tribunals of that wide jurisdiction given to them by statute of making such orders as they consider to be just and equitable. Where there is no such proper finding of fact the order that ensues would not be one which is just and equitable upon the evidence placed before the Tribunal, for justice and equity cannot be administered in a particular case apart from its own particular facts. "

In Ceylon Transport Board v A.H. Wijeratne (supra) at page 498, Vythialingam J. after carefully analysing the law and the just and equitable concept held as follows,

"The Labour Tribunal should normally be concerned to compensate the employee for the damages he has suffered in the loss of his employment and legitimate expectations for the future in that employment, in the injury caused to his reputation in the prejudicing of further employment opportunities. Punitive considerations should not enter into its assessment except perhaps in those rare cases where very serious acts of discrimination are clearly proved. Account should be taken of such circumstances as the nature of the employer's business and his capacity to pay, the employee's age. the nature of his employment, length of service, seniority, present salary, future prospects, opportunities for obtaining similar alternative employment, his past conduct, the circumstances and the manner of the dismissal including the nature of the charge levelled against the workman, the extent to which the employee's actions were blameworthy and the effect of the dismissal on future pension rights and any other relevant considerations. Account should also be taken of any sums paid or actually earned or which should also have been earned since the dismissal took place. The amount however should not mechanically be calculated on the basis of the salary he would have earned till he reached the age of superannuation and should seldom if not never exceed a maximum of three years' salary."

In Caledonian Tea & Rubber Estate Ltd. V Hillman (1977) 79(1) NLR 421, Justice Sharvananda stated that he was unable to subscribe to Justice Vythialingam's proposition of 3 year's salary and states that flexibility is essential and pointed out that circumstances may vary in each case and the weight to be attached to any particular factor depending on the context of each case, and accordingly, an amount equivalent to 7 years of monthly salary was granted as compensation. In Cyril Anthony v Ceylon Fisheries Corporation [S.C. 57/85 - SC Minutes dated 06. 03. 1986], the Supreme Court awarded 7 years' salary as compensation to a dismissed workman. In exercising such a flexibility of determining the quantum of compensation, it was noted by Hon. Justice Dr. Amerasinghe in Jayasooriya v Sri Lanka State Plantation Corporation (1995) 2 SLR 379 as follows;

"In determining compensation what is expected is that after a weighing together of the evidence and probabilities in the case, the Tribunal must form an opinion of the nature and extent of the loss, arriving in the end at an amount that a sensible person would not regard as mean or extravagant but would rather consider to be just and equitable in all the circumstances of the case. There must eventually be an even balance of which the scales of justice are meant to remind us."

After careful consideration, I find that the Applicant has not provided any evidence before the Labour Tribunal therefore, the calculation and awarding 6 years' salary as compensation by the President of the Labour Tribunal is arbitrary. After due consideration of the dictum pronounced by Justice Vythialingam in Ceylon Transport Board v A.H. Wijeratne (supra), I am in agreement with his Lordship, hence I decide to award compensation equivalent to 3 years' salary to be paid to the Substituted Applicant. While affirming the findings other than the computation of the compensation, of the President of the Labour Tribunal, I am hereby varying the order made regarding the compensation.

For the purposes of clarity, Two hundred and fifty thousand Rupees (Rs. 250,000/-) which was deducted from the gratuity payable to the Applicant, and Applicant's salary for 3 years as compensation, the calculation for which has been provided below.

Gratuity deducted, now to be returned = Rs. 250,000.00

Applicant's salary (monthly as November 2003) = Rs. 18,890.35

Applicant's salary (3 years = 36 months) = Rs. 18,890.35 x 36

= Rs. 680,052.6

= Rs. 250,000.00

Total amount payable to Applicant's Wife = Rs. 680,052.60

= Rs. 930,052.60

Therefore, the total amount of Nine hundred and thirty thousand fifty-two Rupees and sixty cents (Rs. 930,052.60) is to be paid to the wife of the Applicant by the Respondent Bank as Compensation within three months of this Judgement. If the money is deposited at the Labour Tribunal, this amount plus proportionate portion of interest is to be paid to the Substituted Applicant from the said deposit, and the balance money and interest to be released to the Respondent-Bank.

Appeal Allowed subject to limitations.

Background facts

This case has a chequered history spanning over 34 years. If I may highlight only significant milestones of the case relevant to the present appeal, the original three plaintiffs filed this action in the District Court of Kalutara by plaint dated 06.10.1988 seeking a declaration of title to the land described in the schedule to the plaint, ejectment of the two defendants therefrom and damages. The defendants filed answer seeking dismissal of the action and a declaration that the 1st defendant is entitled to a 2/3 share of the land. After trial, the learned District Judge by judgment dated 08.12.1993 granted the reliefs as prayed for in the plaint. Being dissatisfied with the judgment of the District Court, the two defendants appealed to the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal by judgment dated 27.06.2003 dismissed the appeal with costs, subject to the condition that the declaration of title granted to the three plaintiffs would be limited to the 2/3 share of the 1st and 3rd plaintiffs because the 2nd plaintiff (owner of 1/3 share) had died during the pendency of the case and no steps had been taken for substitution. The Court of Appeal citing Hewawitarane v. Dungan Rubber Co. Ltd. (1913) 17 NLR 49 stated "However the right of the other co-owners [1st and 3rd defendants] to pray for ejectment of the defendants from the entirety of the corpus remains unchanged." The application for leave to appeal against the judgment of the Court of Appeal was refused by the Supreme Court.

In terms of section 325 of the Civil Procedure Code, the 1st plaintiff judgment-creditor filed the petition dated 05.08.2004 stating inter alia that the fiscal had delivered possession of the property to him on 24.05.2004 removing the two defendants and all others holding under them, but on 16.07.2004 the 3rd respondent (the 1st defendant's son who is also the 2nd defendant's brother) forcibly ejected him from the property at the instigation of the 1st and 2nd defendant-respondents. He sought restoration to possession and punishment of the respondents in terms of section 326. It appears that the 4th-8th respondents later intervened and all the respondents filed objections to this application. The learned District Judge held an inquiry into the matter.

Whilst the inquiry was in progress, the original case record went missing and, after police investigations, criminal proceedings were initiated against an employee of the Court who was remanded and interdicted. The case record seems to have been destroyed. The case record was thereafter reconstructed with the available documents but, among other things, the fiscal's report in respect of delivery of possession on 24.05.2004 was not found.

At the inquiry, after the closure of the petitioner's case, the respondents took up the objection that the petitioner's application under section 325 cannot be maintained without the fiscal's report. This was accepted by the Attorney-at-Law for the petitioner and withdrew the application seeking the permission of Court to issue a fresh writ of possession. The District Judge made order dated 23.02.2012 dismissing the pending application and allowing the petitioner to make a proper application to execute the decree.

It is thereafter that the petitioner filed the petition dated 09.03.2012 in terms of sections 323 and 337 read with section 839 of the Civil Procedure Code to execute the writ. All the respondents filed objections to this application. The succeeding District Judge dismissed the application by order dated 15.01.2013. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal of Kalutara affirmed the order of the District Court and dismissed the appeal. This appeal by the petitioner is against the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal.

Before I address the particular issues of the instant appeal, let me refer to the relevant provisions of the Civil Procedure Code for a better understanding of the findings of the High Court and the arguments presented before this Court in support of those findings.

Complexity of the law relating to execution of writ

The law relating to the execution of writ is complex and complicated.

Although the procedure has been somewhat simplified in respect of certain types of cases filed under special statutes, such as section 16 of the Recovery of Loans by Banks (Special Provisions) Act No. 4 of 1990, the Small Claims Courts' Procedure Act No. 33 of 2022, and sections 22-24 of the Recovery of Possession of Premises Given on Lease Act No. 1 of 2023, the convoluted provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are still applicable in the execution of writ for the delivery of possession of immovable property.

These provisions are mainly found in Chapter XXII of the Civil Procedure Code from sections 217-354. There are also several other sections scattered across the Code dealing with the execution of decrees. For instance, sections 355-372 primarily deal with service of process in the execution of writ; sections 761-764 deal with execution of writ pending appeal; sections 653-661 deal with sequestration before judgment and section 658 therein states that any claim preferred to the property sequestrated shall be investigated in the manner provided for claims to property seized in execution of a money decree. The fact that more than 150 sections are dedicated to the subject of execution of writ in itself underscores the complexity and magnitude of the issue. These sections have been interpreted by the superior Courts in many decisions. Some decisions have interpreted the aforesaid provisions in favour of the judgment-creditor whereas the same provisions have been interpreted in other decisions against the judgment-creditor. In the result, there are seemingly contradictory decisions, posing a challenge in the application of these sections to judges as well as lawyers. However, it is important to bear in mind that a judgment of the Court and the principles laid down therein must be understood according to the law applicable at that time and on the unique facts and circumstances of that particular case.

Another significant factor to be remembered is that the law relating to execution proceedings has been subject to radical amendments over the years and we must be sensitive to that fact in endeavouring to understand the present provisions in the light of past decisions. The Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Law No. 20 of 1977 made substantial changes to execution proceedings whereby sections 218, 255-257, 296, 297, 301, 325-330, 338, 350, 355, 356, 358, 360-362, 365, 761 and 762 were repealed or replaced or amended. By the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act No. 53 of 1980, sections 222, 325, 326, 330, 337 and 763 were replaced or amended. Several amendments were also brought in by the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act Nos. 53 of 1980, 79 of 1988, 6 of 1993, 14 of 1993 and 11 of 2010. Hence it is a mistake to interpret the sections relating to execution proceedings as they stand today in line with judgments delivered in the past when the law was different.

Decrees for the possession of immovable property

Decrees are broadly classified in section 217 of the Civil Procedure Code. A decree can command, for instance, payment of money-section 217(a); delivery of movable property-section 217(b); yielding up possession of immovable property-section 217(c). This judgment considers decrees classified under section 217(c).

An action can be filed seeking declaration of title and recovery of possession of immovable property, such as rei vindicatio, where if the plaintiff succeeds the decree itself directs the defendant judgment-debtor to yield or deliver up possession to the plaintiff judgment-creditor. Conversely, an action can be filed for the recovery of money, for instance, a financial facility provided to the defendant. If the plaintiff succeeds, he will get a money decree, and the fiscal in the execution of the decree may proceed to seize and sell the immovable property of the judgment-debtor. In such an event, the procedure to be adopted in respect of delivery of possession of the immovable property to the purchaser will be the same. Section 287 provides for this.

> 287. (1) When the property sold is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor or of some person on his behalf, or of some person claiming under a title created by the judgment-debtor subsequently to the seizure of such property, and a conveyance in respect thereof has been made to the purchaser under section 286, the court shall on application by the purchaser, order delivery to be made by putting the purchaser or any person whom he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf in possession of the property, and, if need be, by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the same.
> (2) An order for delivery of possession made under this section may be enforced as an order falling under head (c) section 217, the purchaser being considered as judgment-creditor.

In terms of section 188 of the Civil Procedure Code, once the judgment is delivered, a decree shall be drawn up by the Court in Form 41 in the First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. The date of the decree (subject to some exceptions) shall be the date of the judgment and signed by the judge. Drawing up the decree and signing it is a ministerial act, not a judicial act. As was held in Fernando v. The Syndicate Boat Company Limited (1896) 2 NLR 206 "The decree in a case is merely the formal expression of the results arrived at by the judgment, and it is not necessary that it should be drawn up and signed by the Judge who pronounced the judgment. That may be done by any Judge of the Court." Vide also Sidoris Silva v. Palaniappa Chetty (1902) 5 NLR 289.

In terms of section 190 of the Civil Procedure Code "Where the decree relates to immovable property, the property affected thereby shall be described therein by the boundaries and in such other manner by reference to surveys or otherwise as may secure, as far as possible, correctness of identification; and the description shall be in such form as to enable such decree to be registered under the Registration of Documents Ordinance."

Application for execution of the decree

Section 224 of the Civil Procedure Code provides what constitutes the application for execution of the decree. The relevant Form in the First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code is Form 42.

> 224. The application for execution of the decree shall be in writing, signed by the applicant or his registered attorney, and shall contain the following particulars:-
>
> (a) the number of the action;
> (b) the names of the parties;
> (c) the date of the decree;
> (d) whether any appeal has been preferred from the decree;
> (e) whether any, and what, adjustment of the matter in dispute has been made between the parties subsequently to the decree;
> (f) whether any, and what previous applications have been made for execution of the decree, and with what result, including the dates and amounts of previous levies, if any;

(g) the amount of the debt or compensation, with the interest, if any, due upon the decree, or other relief granted thereby;
(h) the amount of costs, if any, awarded;
(i) the name of the person against whom the enforcement of the decree is sought;
(j) the mode in which the assistance of the court is required, whether by the delivery of property specifically decreed, by the arrest and imprisonment of the person named in the application, or by the attachment of his property, or otherwise as the nature of the relief sought may require.

Once an application for execution of the decree is made, the Court shall satisfy itself of the validity and conformity of the application. If the Court is not satisfied, the Court shall refuse to entertain the application. If the Court is satisfied, a writ of execution shall be issued to the fiscal in the particular Form relevant to the application as set out in the First Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. Several Forms are found in the First Schedule in relation to the execution of writs.

Section 323 is a general provision which relates to decrees for possession of immovable property (section 217(c) – decrees commanding the person to yield up possession of immovable property). If the Court is satisfied with the application made in Form 42 of the First Schedule, it shall issue a writ of execution in Form 63.

323. If the decree or order is for the recovery of possession of immovable property or any share thereof by the judgment-creditor, or if it directs the judgment-debtor to yield or deliver up possession thereof to the judgment-creditor, application to the court for execution of the decree may be made by the judgment-creditor in the manner, and according to the rules, prescribed for execution of decrees under head (A), so far as the same are applicable; and if the court on such application is satisfied that the judgment-creditor is entitled to obtain execution of the decree, it shall direct a writ of execution to issue to the Fiscal in the form No. 63 in the First Schedule.

Duty of fiscal in the execution of writ

Section 324 is an important section, but it is often misinterpreted to mean that the section allows anybody to resist or object to the execution of the decree on the basis that he is not bound by the decree and, in that event, it is the duty of the fiscal to report such resistance or objection to Court with the writ unexecuted. This is a misconception. Section 324 reads as follows:

324. (1) Upon receiving the writ the Fiscal or his officer shall as soon as reasonably may be repair to the ground, and there deliver over possession of the property described in the writ to the judgment-creditor or to some person appointed by him to receive delivery on his behalf, and if need be by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property:

Provided that as to so much of the property, if any, as is in the occupancy of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same as against the judgment-debtor, and not bound by the decree to relinquish such occupancy, the Fiscal or his officer shall give delivery by affixing a copy of the writ in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of tom-tom, or in such other mode as is customary, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree in regard to the property; and Provided also that if the occupant can be found, a notice in writing containing the substance of such decree shall be served upon him, and in such case no proclamation need be made.

(2) The cost (to be fixed by the court) of such proclamation shall in every case be prepaid by the judgment-creditor.

Once the Court issues the writ of execution to the fiscal, section 324(1) authorises the fiscal to deliver possession either to the judgment-creditor or his nominee "if need be by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property". However, if there is "a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same as against the judgment-debtor", the fiscal can deliver constructive or symbolic possession. An empty claim or a mere objection to the execution of the writ shall not prevent the fiscal from executing the writ. The objection shall be well-founded and the fiscal shall be prima facie satisfied that there is a bona fide claim and that it is not a sham to frustrate the execution of the writ by the judgment-debtor or another at the instigation or on behalf of the judgment-debtor.

It may also be relevant to note that section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code defines "judgment-creditor" and "decree holder" as "any person in whose favor a decree or order capable of execution has been made, and include any transferee of such decree or order", and "judgment-debtor" as "any person against whom a decree or order capable of execution has been made".

In the Supreme Court case of Weliwitigoda v. U.D.B. De Silva and Others [1997] 1 Sri LR 51, at the time of execution of the writ, the 1st respondent made a claim to tenancy but did not support his claim with documentary evidence. The fiscal executed the writ and delivered possession of the premises to the appellant. The Court of Appeal quashed the writ of execution. On appeal to the Supreme Court, whilst setting aside the judgment of the Court of Appeal, Kulatunga J. (with G.P.S. De Silva C.J. and Ramanathan J. concurring) held at page 55:

The powers of Fiscal in executing a writ are set out in S.324 of the Code which requires him to deliver possession of the property to the judgment creditor "if need be by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property". However, if there is a tenant or other person "entitled to occupy the same as against the judgment-debtor, and not bound by the decree to relinquish such occupancy" the Fiscal can only give symbolic possession viz. by affixing a copy of the writ on the property and taking other steps, required by the proviso to S.324.

As regards the requirement to give symbolic possession, it does not appear that the Fiscal is bound to do so on the basis of a mere claim of tenancy, which is not in any way supported by facts. Such a claimant may become liable to removal as an agent, servant or other person, bound by the decree. The 1st respondent was not residing on the premises in dispute. His claim was that he was a sub-tenant under the judgment debtor and in that capacity used some of the buildings on the premises to conduct a school. However, he has not placed any material before the Fiscal to support that claim. If so, he became liable to be removed, in view of his empty claim subject, however, to his right to make an application under S.328 of the Code.

It seems to me that the 1st respondent acted in the belief that if he merely claimed to be a tenant the Fiscal was ipso facto barred from giving the appellant vacant possession of the property; and that if the fiscal then attempted to remove him, he was entitled to resist, whereupon the Fiscal ought to have reported such resistance to Court. If this were the law and the occupants have such a "right" to resist execution, effective execution of writs would indeed be impeded. I am of the view that a claim under the proviso to S.324 cannot be entertained unless it is prima facie tenable.

I am in total agreement with these dicta of Kulatunga J.

Obstruction to the fiscal and judgment-creditor

Section 325 of the Civil Procedure Code deals with obstruction to the fiscal and the judgment-creditor in the course of and after the execution of the writ.

The present section 325 has been amended by Act Nos. 20 of 1977, 53 of 1980 and 79 of 1988. I quote below the old section to fortify my previous observation that cases decided prior to the amendment of this section cannot be relied upon to interpret the present section, notwithstanding that the section number has remained the same.

> 325. If in the execution of a decree for the possession of property under heads (B) and (C) the officer charged with the execution of the writ is resisted or obstructed by any person, or if after the officer has delivered possession the judgment-creditor is hindered by any person in taking complete and effectual possession, the judgment-creditor may at any time within one month from the time of such resistance or obstruction complain thereof to the court by a petition in which the judgment-debtor and the person resisting and obstructing shall be named respondents, and which shall be dealt with by the court in accordance with the alternative (b) of section 377.

Section 325 as it stands today reads as follows:

> 325. (1) Where in the execution of a decree for the possession of movable or immovable property the Fiscal is resisted or obstructed by the judgment-debtor or any other person, or where after the officer has delivered possession, the judgment-creditor is hindered or ousted by the judgment-debtor or any other person in taking complete and effectual possession thereof, and in the case of immovable property, where the judgment-creditor has been so hindered or ousted within a period of one year and one day, the judgment-creditor may at any time within one month from the date of such resistance or obstruction or hindrance or ouster, complain thereof to the court by a petition in which the judgment-debtor and the person, if any, resisting or obstructing or hindering or ousting shall be named respondents. The court shall thereupon serve a copy of such petition on the parties named therein as respondents and require such respondents to file objections, if any, within such time as they may be directed by court.

(2) When a petition under subsection (1) is presented, the court may, upon the application of the judgment-creditor made by motion ex parte, direct the Fiscal to publish a notice announcing that the Fiscal has been resisted or obstructed in delivering possession of such property, or that the judgment-creditor has been hindered in taking complete and effectual possession thereof or ousted therefrom, as the case may be, by the judgment-debtor or other person, and calling upon all persons claiming to be in possession of the whole or any part of such property by virtue of any right or interest and who object to possession being delivered to the judgment-creditor to notify their claims to court within fifteen days of the publication of the notice.

(3) The Fiscal shall make publication by affixing a copy of the notice in the language of the court, and, where the language of the court is also Tamil, in that language, in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaiming in the customary mode or in such manner as the court may direct, the contents of the notice. A copy of such notice shall be affixed to the court-house and if the court so orders shall also be published in any daily newspaper as the court may direct.

(4) Any person claiming to be in possession of the whole of the property or part thereof as against the judgment-creditor may file a written statement of his claim within fifteen days of the publication of the notice on such property, setting out his right or interest entitling him to the present possession of the whole property or part thereof and shall serve a copy of such statement on the judgment-creditor. The investigation into such claim shall be taken up along with the inquiry into the petition in respect of the resistance, obstruction, hindrance or ouster complained of, after due notice of the date of such investigation and inquiry has been given to all persons concerned. Every such investigation and inquiry shall be concluded within sixty days of the publication of the notice referred to in subsection (2).

Section 325(1) warrants closer scrutiny. It has two main limbs:

According to section 325(1)

(a) where in the execution of a decree for the possession of immovable or movable property the fiscal is resisted or obstructed by the judgment-debtor or any other person, or
(b) where after the fiscal has delivered possession of immovable or movable property the judgment-creditor is hindered or ousted in taking complete and effectual possession by the judgment-debtor or any other person the judgment-creditor may at any time within one month from the date of such resistance or obstruction or hindrance or ouster complain to the District Court by way of a petition.

The first limb of section 325(1) contemplates a situation where the fiscal is totally prevented by the judgment-debtor or any other person from delivering possession to the judgment-creditor by resistance or obstruction.

The second limb of section 325(1) contemplates two situations:

(i) after the fiscal had delivered possession of the property, the judgment-creditor has been hindered in taking complete and effectual possession thereof; or
(ii) ousted therefrom.

The difference between constructive or symbolic delivery of possession by the fiscal and hindrance to the judgment-creditor in taking complete and effectual possession after the delivery of possession needs to be clearly understood. Both need not necessarily happen at the same time. Quite often, judges and lawyers fail to appreciate this distinction and fall into error. It has so happened even in this case.

Even if there is no resistance, obstruction, hindrance or opposition, if the property comprises, for instance, a large land with several buildings, the fiscal cannot traverse the entirety of the land and buildings and completely and effectually deliver every part of the land and buildings and every grain of sand to the judgment-creditor. He can only effect constructive or symbolic delivery of possession.

It may further be observed on a careful reading of section 325(1) that, in a situation of (a) above, the judgment-creditor shall come to Court within one month from the date of resistance or obstruction to the fiscal, but in a situation of (b) above where possession has been delivered, if it is immovable property, in addition to the one month restriction from the date of the hindrance or ouster, such hindrance or ouster shall also fall within one year and one day from the date of delivery of possession. In other words, the one year and one day restriction is applicable only in respect of immovable property.

Procedural steps after the application under section 325(1)

Once an application under section 325(1) is filed against the judgment-debtor and/or any other person naming them as respondents, the Court shall serve a copy of the application on each of the respondents requiring them to file statements of objections, if any, within such time as may be directed by Court bearing in mind the period of time within which the inquiry shall be concluded.

In terms of section 325(2), (3) and (4), when an application under section 325(1) is made by the judgment-creditor, the Court may direct the fiscal to publish a notice on the property and on the Court-house and in any daily newspaper stating the complaint of the judgment-creditor and calling upon all persons claiming to be in possession of the whole or any part of such property by virtue of any right or interest and who object to possession being delivered to the judgment-creditor to notify their claims to Court and file their written statements of claim within 15 days of the publication of the notice on such property, setting out their right or interest entitling them to the present possession of the whole property or part thereof. The inquiry into the new claims shall be taken up along with the main inquiry initiated in terms of section 325(1).

The inquiry shall be concluded within 60 days of the publication of the notice on the property.

Orders the Court is empowered to make

Section 326 spells out the orders the Court can make after the section 325 inquiry.

326. (1) On the hearing of the matter of the petition and the claim made, if any, the court, if satisfied-

(a) that the resistance, obstruction, hindrance or ouster complained of was occasioned by the judgment-debtor or by some person at his instigation or on his behalf;

(b) that the resistance, obstruction, hindrance or ouster complained of was occasioned by a person other than the judgment-debtor, and that the claim of such person to be in possession of the property, whether on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, is not in good faith; or

(c) that the claim made, if any, has not been established, shall direct the judgment-creditor to be put into or restored to the possession of the property and may, in the case specified in paragraph (a), in addition sentence the judgment-debtor or such other person to imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days.

(3) The court may make such order as to the costs of the application, the charges and expenses incurred in publishing the notice and the hearing and the reissue of writ as the court shall deem meet.

Broadly speaking, at the inquiry under section 325, what is required to be investigated is the claim and not the right of the decree holder. His right to get the decree executed arises from the decree and the burden is on the claimant to support the claim as against that decree. Although the right to commence the section 325 inquiry lies with the judgment-creditor as the petitioner, he cannot be expected to prove the negative.

After the inquiry, the Court shall, if satisfied, direct the judgment-creditor to be put into or restored to (as the case may be) possession of the property.

If the resistance, obstruction, hindrance or ouster was occasioned by the judgment-debtor or by another at his instigation, the Court may summarily sentence the judgment-debtor or such other person for a period not exceeding 30 days. This is different from contempt of court contemplated in section 330 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Affirmation of the claim of the bona fide claimant

Section 327 and 327A read as follows:

> 327. Where the resistance, obstruction, hindrance or ouster is found by court to have been occasioned by any person other than the judgment-debtor, claiming in good faith to be in possession of the whole of such property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor by virtue of any right or interest, or where the claim notified is found by the court to have been made by a person claiming to be in possession of the whole of such property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, by virtue of any right or interest, the court shall make order dismissing the petition, if it finds that such right or interest has been established.
> 327A. Where any claim is established only to a share of any property, it shall be competent for the court in any order made under the preceding sections, to direct that the judgment-creditor be put into, or restored to, possession of the share of the property to which no claim has been established.

In terms of section 327, the Court shall dismiss the petition of the judgment-creditor if the resistance, obstruction, hindrance or ouster is by a bona fide claimant who is in possession independent of the judgment-debtor by virtue of any right or interest established before the Court.

Section 327 is connected to section 326. Whereas section 327 deals with how the judgment-creditor's application shall be dismissed confirming the possession of the claimant, section 326 deals with how the judgment-creditor's application shall be allowed.

The cumulative effect of sections 326 and 327 is that the judgment-debtor has no defence (subject to exceptions such as that he has already satisfied the decree), and the person other than the judgment-debtor shall prove to the satisfaction of Court that, firstly, he is in possession and, secondly, he is in such possession (a) in good faith (b) on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor (c) by virtue of any right or interest. This is more than mere proof of possession but less than proof of title.

Dispossession of the bona fide claimant

What is the procedure where a bona fide claimant happens to be dispossessed by the fiscal in the execution of the writ? The answer is found in section 328.

> 328. Where any person other than the judgment-debtor or a person in occupation under him is dispossessed of any property in execution of a decree, he may, within fifteen days of such dispossession, apply to the court by petition in which the judgment-creditor shall be named respondent complaining of such dispossession. The court shall thereupon serve a copy of such petition on such respondent and require such respondent to file objections, if any, within fifteen days of the service of the petition on him. Upon such objections being filed or after the expiry of the date on which such objections were directed to be filed, the court shall, after notice to all parties concerned, hold an inquiry. Where the court is satisfied that the person dispossessed was in possession of the whole or part of such property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, it shall by order direct that the petitioner be put into possession of the property or part thereof, as the case may be. Every inquiry under this section shall be concluded within sixty days of the date fixed for the filing of objections.

In terms of section 328, where any person other than the judgment-debtor or a person in occupation under him is dispossessed of any property in execution of a decree, he may, within 15 days of such dispossession, apply to Court by way of a petition in which the judgment-creditor shall be named as the respondent, complaining of such dispossession. The Court shall thereupon serve a copy of the petition on the respondent and require such respondent to file objections, if any, within 15 days of service. Upon objections being filed or after the lapse of the period in which objections were directed to be filed, the Court shall hold an inquiry.

The present section is different from the previous one. Section 328 cannot be invoked by the judgment-debtor or a person under him.

According to the literal interpretation of this section, if after the inquiry the Court is satisfied that the person dispossessed was in possession of the whole or part of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, the petitioner shall be restored to possession.

However, this section shall be given purposive interpretation. It may be recalled that under section 324(1), the fiscal can remove any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property.

Mere proof of possession on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor cannot and should not, in my view, entitle such petitioner to be restored to possession. In addition, he shall prove that he was in possession in good faith and by virtue of any right or interest. This is not to say that he shall prove title to such property, which is not possible given the time frame for the conclusion of the inquiry. As I stated earlier, those are the requirements of a claimant who is or claims to be in possession under sections 325-327, and a claimant under section 328 need not or cannot be placed at a more advantageous position. Otherwise, whereas a person who was removed by the fiscal needs only to prove (in order to succeed) that he was in possession on his own account or on account of a person other than the judgment-debtor, a person who was not removed by the fiscal due to obstruction needs to prove that he is in such possession in good faith on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor by virtue of any right or interest. In such event, persons in mala fide possession would volunteer to be dispossessed by the fiscal in the execution of the decree since they can easily secure restoration to possession through Court and consolidate their possession.

Despite marginal notes are not decisive, the marginal note to section 328 which reads "Court shall investigate dispute if bona fide claimant be dispossessed in effecting the execution" also lends support for this view. The claimant shall be a bona fide claimant.

Section 328 shall be understood together with sections 325-327, not in isolation. A provision of law ought to be interpreted contextually, giving effect to the spirit of the law. Maxwell on The Interpretation of Statutes, Twelfth Edition, at page 47 states:

> It was resolved in the case of Lincoln College (1595) 3 Co. Rep. 58b, at p. 59b that the good expositor of an Act of Parliament should make construction on all the parts together, and not of one part only by itself. Every clause of a statue is to be constructed with reference to the context and other clauses of the Act, so as, as far as possible, to make a consistent enactment of the whole statute.

The term possession should not be understood superficially. What needs to be proved is the right to possession. When deciding the right to possession, bearing in mind the summary nature of the inquiry, the Court may (depending on the unique facts of the case and not as a matter of course) go into the question of title to solve the question of right to possession. Although two situations are incomparable, on parity of reasoning, in applications under section 66 of the Primary Courts' Procedure Act No. 44 of 1979, although the matter to be decided between competing parties is possession and not title, the question of title is not altogether an irrelevant consideration. Sharvananda J. in Ramalingam v. Thangarajah [1982] 2 Sri LR 693 at 699 stated "Evidence bearing on title can be considered only when the evidence as to possession is clearly balanced and the presumption of possession which flows from title may tilt the balance in favour of the owner and help in deciding the question of possession."

Every inquiry under this section shall be concluded within 60 days of the date fixed for the filing of objections.

The nature of the inquiry in execution proceedings

Subject to what I stated above, inquiries in execution proceedings held in terms of the provisions of sections 325-328 are not full-blown trials but summary inquiries to provide speedy and inexpensive remedies, to be concluded within 60 days (of the publication of notice inviting any claims or of the date fixed for the filing of objections), having, of course, due regard to the rules of natural justice and fairness.

Although the time period within which a party should make the application to Court is mandatory, the time period within which the inquiry should be concluded may be treated as directory. Nevertheless, this should not be treated as a license to prolong the inquiry to deny the judgment-creditor the fruits of his victory.

The burden of proof in these inquiries is proof to the satisfaction of Court.

In Setunga v. W.M.G. Fernando [1982] 2 Sri LR 584 at 588, Samarakoon C.J. stated "This being an inquiry in terms of section 325 of the Civil Procedure Code, the only question before the Court was whether the resistance to the Fiscal was justified or not and any evidence to justify it was admissible."

In terms of section 329, no appeal lies from the orders made under sections 325-328 against any party other than the judgment-debtor, and such orders shall not bar the right of such party to institute an action to establish his right or title to such property. In the regular action that may be filed, the same Court can arrive at the opposite conclusion after trial.

Contempt of court

In terms of section 330, any subsequent resistance or obstruction to the execution of the writ or hindrance to the possession or ouster of the judgment-creditor within a year and a day of delivery of possession under section 326(1)(c) by the judgment-debtor or any other respondent to the petition under section 325, or by any person whosoever where a notice under section 325(2) has been duly published, shall be punishable as contempt of Court under chapter 65 of the Civil Procedure Code.

> 330. Any subsequent resistance or obstruction to the execution of the writ or hindrance to the possession or ouster of the judgment-creditor within a year and a day of the delivery of possession-
>
> (a) by the judgment-debtor or any other respondent to the petition under section 325, or

(b) where a notice under subsection (2) of section 325 has been duly published, by any person whosoever, shall be punishable as a contempt of court.

Main arguments before the Court

With this background, let me now consider the basis upon which the High Court upheld the order of the District Court and the arguments of learned counsel for the respondents in support of the conclusion of the High Court.

The general contention of learned counsel for the respondents is that once the petitioner judgment-creditor was given complete possession by the fiscal and was thereafter evicted from possession within one year and one day of such delivery of possession, he has no option but to come before the District Court within one month from the date of such dispossession and that an application for a fresh writ in such a situation is misconceived in law. According to the learned High Court Judge, "a fresh writ can be issued till satisfaction of the decree is obtained in terms of section 337(3) of the Civil Procedure Code only when the original writ was unexecuted", but in this case since the original writ was executed, section 337(3) has no application.

Learned counsel for the respondents further contends that the issuance of fresh writ in terms of section 337(3)(b) will gravely prejudice the 3rd-8th respondents, since section 337 does not provide for holding an inquiry and therefore they will be ejected in the execution of the writ without a hearing. The learned High Court Judge confirms this when he says "the respondents who made claims to the corpus will be prejudiced in the event of re-issuing writ under section 337 of the Civil Procedure Code instead of concluding the inquiry under section 325 of the Civil Procedure Code."

Validity period of writ of execution

What is the validity period of a writ of execution? Section 337 provides the answer.

Section 337 as it stood prior to the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act No. 53 of 1980 read as follows:

> 337. (1) Where an application to execute a decree for the payment of money or delivery of other property has been made under this Chapter and granted, no subsequent application to execute the same decree shall be granted unless the court is satisfied that on the last preceding application due diligence was used to procure complete satisfaction of the decree, or that execution was stayed by the decree-holder at the request of the judgment-debtor. Also no such subsequent application shall be granted after the expiration of ten years from any of the following dates, namely-
>
> (a) the date of the decree sought to be enforced, or of the decree, if any, on appeal affirming the same; or
> (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs the payment of money or the delivery of property to be made at a specified date—the date of the default in making the payment or delivering the property in respect of which the applicant seeks to enforce the decree.
>
> (2) Nothing in this section shall prevent the court from granting an application for execution of a decree after the expiration of the said term of ten years, where the judgment-debtor has by fraud or force prevented the execution of the decree at some time within ten years immediately before the date of the application.

This section was substantially amended by the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act No. 53 of 1980 by repealing and replacing sub-section (1) and introducing the new sub-section (3).

Section 337 after the said amendment reads as follows:

> 337. (1) No application (whether it be the first or a subsequent application) to execute a decree, not being a decree granting an injunction, shall be granted after the expiration of ten years from-
>
> (a) the date of the decree sought to be executed or of the decree, if any, on appeal affirming the same; or
> (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs the payment of money or the delivery of property to be made on a specified date or at recurring periods, the date of the default in making the payment or delivering the property in respect of which the applicant seeks to execute decree.
>
> (2) Nothing in this section shall prevent the court from granting an application for execution of a decree after the expiration of the said term of ten years, where the judgment-debtor has by fraud or force prevented the execution of the decree at some time within ten years immediately before the date of the application.
>
> (3) Subject to the provisions contained in subsection (2), a writ of execution, if unexecuted, shall remain in force for one year only from its issue, but-
>
> (a) such writ may at any time, before its expiration, be renewed by the judgment-creditor for one year from the date of such renewal and so on from time to time; or
> (b) a fresh writ may at any time after the expiration of an earlier writ be issued, till satisfaction of the decree is obtained.

It may now be clear that the reported judgments on section 337 prior to the amendment need to be considered with caution in interpreting the present section.

In terms of section 337(1), no application (whether it be the first or a subsequent application) to execute a decree, not being a decree granting an injunction, shall be granted after the expiry of 10 years from the date of the decree sought to be executed or of the decree, if any, on appeal affirming the same; or where the decree or any subsequent order directs the payment of money or the delivery of property on a specified date or at recurring periods, the date of the default in making such payment or delivering such property.

However, as per section 337(2) if the judgment-debtor has by fraud or force prevented the execution of the decree within that period, the rigidity of this rule is relaxed. In such circumstances, the 10 year period begins to run from the date of removal or cessation of such malady or disability. Similar provisions are found in sections 13 and 14 of the Prescription Ordinance No. 22 of 1871 in respect of immovable property where prescription does not run against persons with disabilities such as infancy, idiocy, unsoundness of mind, lunacy or absence beyond the seas.

The 10 year period ought to be interpreted broadly in favour of the decree holder, not against him. If, for instance, the judgment-debtor had held himself fraudulently out of reach of process, it is a matter the Court shall take cognizance of in calculating the 10 year period.

Wood Renton C.J. in Fernando v. Latibu (1914) 18 NLR 95 held that the systematic evasion of service by a judgment-debtor is “fraud” within the meaning of that term as used in section 337.

This judgment was cited with approval by Wanasundara J. in Union Trust Investment Ltd v. Wijesena and Another (SC/APPEAL/91/2012, SC Minutes of 06.03.2015) when the Court allowed the execution of writ 10 years after the date of the decree on the basis of "fraud" in a case where the judgment-debtor had evaded service of notice of writ inter alia by changing his address.

In the Supreme Court case of Mohamed Azar v. Idroos [2008] 1 Sri LR 232 at 241, Amaratunga J. held "The time bar prescribed by section 337(1) commences to operate only from the date on which the judgment creditor becomes entitled to execute the writ, and as such it has no application to a case where the judgment creditor is prevented by a rule of law from executing the writ entered in his favour. The time bar will apply in cases where the judgment creditor after becoming entitled to obtain the writ has slept over his rights for ten years."

When there is a settlement there is no adjudication, and therefore there is no judgment within the meaning of section 187. Accordingly, it was held in Nanayakkara v. Sirisena [2003] 3 Sri LR 60 that until a decree in Form 41 in terms of the settlement is entered and signed by the judge, the 10 year period does not begin to run.

In terms of section 337(3), which is a new sub-section introduced by Act No. 53 of 1980, a writ of execution shall remain in force for only one year from its issue. Before its expiration it can be renewed for another one year from the date of such renewal and so on from time to time. If renewal is not done within the year, fresh writs can be issued until the satisfaction of the decree so long as the application is within the period of 10 years as stated above.

Before the said amendment, once an application to execute a decree had been granted under section 337(1), no subsequent application to execute the same decree was granted unless the Court was satisfied that on the last preceding application "due diligence" had been exercised to procure complete satisfaction of the decree. This was removed by the amendment. Irrespective of due diligence, the judgment-creditor can now make successive applications for writ until satisfaction of the decree.

Can a fresh writ be issued only if the original writ was unexecuted?

Is the learned High Court Judge correct in his finding that in terms of section 337(3)(b), a fresh writ can only be issued if the original writ was unexecuted? The learned High Court Judge does not qualify the word "unexecuted" – fully unexecuted or partly unexecuted.

Quoting Noordeen v. Ismail (1908) 2 Weerekoon Reports 6, learned counsel for the 1st and 2nd respondents has accepted in the District Court that an application under section 337 can be made either where the writ could not be executed or is partly executed.

Learned counsel for the 4th respondent states before this Court that "any application under section 337 for a fresh writ to be issued can only be made where the writ was not executed previously at all." According to learned counsel "once the writ has been executed court has no jurisdiction to issue the writ of execution for the second time under section 337".

I am not inclined to give a restrictive interpretation to the word "unexecuted" found in section 337(3). It must be given a purposive interpretation.

Section 337(3)(b), in my view, does not enact that a fresh writ can only be issued if the original writ is unexecuted. What the section says is, "a writ of execution, if unexecuted, shall remain in force for one year only from its issue, … or a fresh writ may at any time after the expiration of an earlier writ be issued, till satisfaction of the decree is obtained." The word

"unexecuted" refers to the period of one year stated therein and nothing else.

It further says that after the expiration of an earlier writ, a fresh writ may at any time be issued until satisfaction of the decree. This shall be understood as full satisfaction of the decree, not partial satisfaction of the decree. So long as the application is made within 10 years as defined in section 337, fresh writs can be issued until satisfaction of the decree. There is no dispute that the present application for a fresh writ was made within 10 years.

I hold that the finding of the learned High Court Judge that, in terms of section 337(3)(b), a fresh writ can only be issued if the original writ was unexecuted is not correct. Even if the writ is executed, if complete and effectual possession is not delivered, the judgment-creditor can apply for a fresh writ to be issued. Further, even if complete and effectual possession is delivered, if the judgment-creditor is subsequently obstructed or ousted, the judgment-creditor can apply for a fresh writ if the application falls within the 10 year period as described in section 337 subject to section 347 when applicable.

Mala fide* conduct and fraud

I must also add that, in this case, the respondents acted admittedly mala fide when they objected to the continuation of the inquiry under section 325 on the ground that the petitioner cannot proceed with the inquiry without the fiscal's report. The 1st and 2nd respondent judgment-debtors at paragraph 5 of their objections dated 05.06.2012 admit that the petitioner withdrew the former application upon the objection of the respondents that the petitioner cannot proceed with the inquiry under section 325 without the fiscal's report. Learned counsel for the 4th respondent also says "the plaintiff-petitioner merely succumbed to the objection raised by respondents to the fact that the inquiry cannot be proceeded with, without producing the original of the document P1 (Registrar's report on the execution) and made completely erroneous and negligent decision to withdraw the said application." The respondents trapped the petitioner into withdrawing the application. In my view, such conduct on the part of the respondents can even amount to fraud for the purposes of section 337(2) although consideration of this is irrelevant for the present purposes since the second application was filed within ten years.

Withdrawal of the previous application

I quoted earlier the District Judge's orders/observations in this regard verbatim. I find myself unable to subscribe to the view that "the application for writ was withdrawn on 23.02.2012 without any reservation but the plaintiff sought to get an order to re-issue of the writ after the withdrawal." I take the view that, on the facts and circumstances of this case, for all intents and purposes, the District Judge allowed the withdrawal of the application with the liberty to file a fresh application.

Are fresh writs, as a rule, issued without inquiry?

It appears to me that the respondents objected, and the learned High Court Judge upheld the objection, to a fresh writ being issued in the belief that when a fresh writ is issued there will be no inquiry and new claimants are denied a hearing. Learned counsel for the 4th respondent says "3rd to 8th respondents filed their objections/claims within the framework of section 325 application regarding their claims to the property in dispute. When section 325 application was withdrawn 3rd to 8th respondents who were not the parties in the original case were completely prevented from presenting their case which is against the natural justice.

Section 337 does not provide for such an inquiry since it is to be made prior to execution of the writ." This is a misconception.

If I may repeat, a writ is valid for one year. If within the period of one year it is not renewed for another one year and so on from time to time, a fresh writ can be issued after the expiration of the earlier writ. However, if more than one year elapses between the date of the decree and the application for execution, section 347 mandates that a copy of the petition be served on the judgment-debtor. But no such service is necessary if the application is made within one year from the date of any decree passed on appeal or from the date of the last order against the party on any previous application for execution.

> 347. In cases where there is no respondent named in the petition of application for execution, if more than one year has elapsed between the date of the decree and the application for its execution, the court shall cause the petition to be served on the judgment-debtor, and shall proceed thereon as if he were originally named respondent therein:
> Provided that no such service shall be necessary if the application be made within one year from the date of any decree passed on appeal from the decree sought to be executed or from the date of the last order against the party, against whom execution is applied for, passed on any previous application for execution.

This section requires that "the petition" of application for execution be served on the judgment-debtor, if more than one year has elapsed between the date of the decree and the application for its execution. The use of the term "the petition" here maybe misleading if it is the first application for execution. According to section 323, the judgment-creditor is supposed to make the application for execution in terms of section 224 (Form 42 in the First Schedule) and the writ of execution shall be issued to the fiscal in Form 63. There is no requirement or necessity to file a petition with such Form 42 application. The application in Form 42 is equivalent to the petition. What is necessary is to give notice of the application to the judgment-debtor if more than one year has lapsed. This notice can be given by serving a copy of the application in Form 42 or even any other manner acceptable to Court. Vide Nanayakkara v. Sulaiman (1926) 28 NLR 314, Wijewardene v. Raymond (1937) 39 NLR 179, Wijetunga v. Singham Bros. & Co. (1964) 69 NLR 545.

But if more than one year has elapsed between the date of the decree and the application for writ, and the application is for a subsequent writ (as opposed to the original writ), in addition to the judgment-debtor, any other persons in possession of the property whom the judgment-creditor thinks would resist execution can be made respondents to the petition and be served with copies of the petition. If there are objections, the Court needs to hold an inquiry and make a suitable order. This is in fact what the petitioner did in the second application dated 09.03.2012 – i.e. the subject matter of this appeal. Hence the finding of the learned High Court Judge that if a fresh writ is to be issued, execution will take place without an inquiry is misconceived.

On the other hand, even if other potential objectors are not made respondents, such persons can raise their objections at the execution of the writ. If the fiscal thinks inter alia that their claims are bona fide and they are in possession not under the judgment-debtor, the fiscal can deliver constructive possession to the judgment-creditor and report to Court.

In Leelananda v. Mercantile Credit Ltd [1988] 2 Sri LR 417 it was held that the period of one year under section 347 should be calculated from the date of a valid executable decree. Although the ex parte judgment was entered against the judgment-debtor, there was no valid decree until after the lapse of 14 days from the date of service of the ex parte decree in terms of section 85(4) of the Civil Procedure Code. Hence one year begins to run from that date. It was further held at page 419 "In any event provisions of section 347 are directory and not mandatory and the Court ought not to interfere where the party had not shown prejudice or that injustice has been caused to him."

Reason for notice on the judgment-debtor when one year has elapsed

Why should notice be given to the judgment-debtor if more than one year has elapsed between the date of the decree and the application for its execution? Is it to allow the judgment-debtor to contest the case of the judgment-creditor all over again as at the trial? Not at all. It is predominantly to consider whether the judgment-debtor has satisfied the decree. For instance, if the decree is for recovery of money, whether the amount due is well within the capacity of the judgment-debtor to pay without any writ. Vide De Silva v. Upasaka Appu (1919) 6 CWR 227.

To give another example, the judgment-debtor may say that satisfaction of the decree was effected by way of another mutual agreement with the judgment-creditor. In Silva v. Singho (1907) 10 NLR 312 judgment was entered for the plaintiffs to pay a specific sum of money with interest and costs within seven days. When an application was made on execution after three years, (although this defence was later abandoned) the judgment-debtors alleged that they had agreed with the judgment-creditors after the judgment to allow the latter to possess the mortgaged lands for three years, and in that way the decree was fully satisfied.

Before section 337 was amended by the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act No. 53 of 1980, the judgment-debtor could also set up the plea of lack of due diligence to procure complete satisfaction of the decree on the last preceding application for execution of the writ.

In Jayalath v. Abdul Razak (1954) 56 NLR 145 it was held that execution proceedings to enforce a decree are collateral to the judgment, and no inquiry into the regularity or validity of the judgment can be permitted in such proceedings. In execution proceedings the Court is only construing the decree and not considering its merits.

Can an application be made for a new writ after one month of resistance or ouster?

Before I part with this judgment, let me further consider the argument of learned counsel for the respondents that when the fiscal is resisted or obstructed in delivering possession to the judgment-creditor, or when the judgment-creditor is hindered or ousted by the judgment-debtor or any other person after the fiscal has delivered possession, the only remedy available to the judgment-creditor is to make an application under section 325(1). As I stated earlier, in terms of section 325(1), the judgment creditor may at any time within one month from the date of such resistance, obstruction, hindrance or ouster make an application to Court for relief. In addition, if the property is an immovable property, such hindrance or ouster shall fall within one year and one day of such delivery of possession. If the argument of learned counsel for the respondents is accepted, if the judgment-creditor, for instance, is ousted within one year and one day of the delivery of possession but due to some reason he could not complain of it to Court within one month from the date of such ouster or, having complained to Court within one month, if his application is dismissed maybe on a technical ground, he has no option but to institute a fresh action against the judgment-debtor. If such an argument is accepted, it will manifestly result in a travesty of justice.

Section 325(1) accommodates obstruction or ouster within one year and one day. Then what about if the judgment-creditor is ousted one year and two days after the delivery of possession, which is not contemplated in section 325(1)?

In my view, if the judgment-creditor does not make the application within one month, he will not be able to apply under section 325 but his substantive application will not be wiped out for that reason. If the judgment-creditor's complaint does not fall within the time frame in section 325(1), the procedure laid down under section 325 and related sections are not strictly applicable although the District Judge shall dispose of inquiries into the execution of decrees as expeditiously as possible. For instance, if the complaint is not made within one month from the date of ouster which falls within one year and one day after the delivery of possession, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 30 days as contemplated in section 326(1)(c) and contempt of Court proceedings as contemplated in section 330 are not applicable.

As I stated earlier, if the judgment-creditor did not or could not in law make the application under section 325 in case of resistance or obstruction or hindrance or ouster, he can make the application under section 337 within 10 years as provided therein for a fresh writ/re-issue of writ subject to section 347.

In Ummu Zackiya v. Wickramaratne (1963) 64 NLR 575, an application under section 326 of the Civil Procedure Code (seeking punishment for obstruction) was made on the ground that the defendant had obstructed the fiscal. An inquiry into this matter was fixed and later the application under section 326 was dismissed on the ground that it had been made after the expiry of one month from the date of the alleged obstruction. About five months after this dismissal, the plaintiff applied for the re-issue of the writ. The objection by the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff had not come to Court within one month from the date of obstruction was upheld by the trial Court. On appeal to the Supreme Court, H.N.G. Fernando J. (later C.J.) reversed the order of the trial Court stating "there is no provision in section 326 which limits the right of a judgment-creditor to apply more than once in appropriate circumstances for the re-issue of a writ" when there was no want of due diligence on the part of the plaintiff to apply for the re-issue of the writ. In other words, where the judgment-creditor could not complain to Court under section 325(1), he can make an application under section 337 to re-issue the writ/to issue a fresh writ.

Re-issue of writ

The term "re-issue" of the writ is found in section 326(3) of the Civil Procedure Code. In Patheruppillai v. Kandappen (1913) 16 NLR 298 it was held that the re-issue of a writ shall have the same effect as the issue of a fresh writ (for payment of stamp duty). In the Full Bench decision in Andris Appu v. Kolande Asari (1916) 19 NLR 225 it was held "A writ cannot be re-issued, but there is no objection to the term "re-issue" to describe a second or subsequent writ." The reason for this seems to be that the term "re-issue" was not in the Civil Procedure Code at that time.

As the law stands today, a writ can be renewed/reissued within the period of one year for another one year and so on within the 10 year period. If the writ is not renewed within the period of one year, it cannot be renewed thereafter but a fresh writ may be issued.

In the case of De Silva v. Bastian (1936) 38 NLR 277, within half an hour of the judgment-creditor being placed in possession of the property, he was ejected by the judgment-debtors. One month and two days after this dispossession, the judgment-creditor made an application to the District Court for re-issue of the writ of possession. This was objected to by the judgment-debtors inter alia on the basis that the only remedy, if any, is under section 325 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the application should be disallowed as it is out of time, not having been made within one month of the dispossession. The Supreme Court held with the judgment-creditor predominantly on the basis that in execution proceedings the Court should not take a narrow view. The order for re-issue of writ was not disturbed although the Court took the view that the reasons permitting the re-issue of writ by the District Court were unsustainable. Koch J. with Soertsz J. in agreement at pages 278-279 observed:

> The word in this section [325] is "may", not "must", and I feel we are right in interpreting it as permissive only and not imperative, as this is the view that has been taken by the Indian Judges in the corresponding section, viz., 328 of the Indian Procedure Code, which is substantially the same. See Muttrarv v. Appasami (I.L.R. 13 Madras 504) and Balvant v. Babaji (I.L.R. 8 Bombay 602). One clear remedy is by way of regular action. This the plaintiff has not done. Will another be by application to reissue the writ of possession? Section 287 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that there is procedurally no distinction in regard to the steps to be taken by a judgment-creditor who is seeking to enforce his decree obtained under section 217(c), i.e., a decree to yield up possession of immovable property, and those that may be taken under section 287 by a purchaser at a fiscal's sale who has obtained his conveyance. In Suppramaniam Chetty v. Jayewardena (18 N.L.R. 50), de Sampayo J. held, in giving relief to a party seeking to obtain effectual possession, that the District Court should not take a narrow view of its duty and power, and whatever the form of the application, if it reasonably makes clear the position of the applicant, the Court is entitled to cause the party resisting the execution of the writ of possession to be removed and the writ holder to be put in possession, Schneider J. agreed. This view was accepted by Garvin A.J. in Ledera v Babahamy et al. (Times L.R. 259). In the Full Bench case of Silva v. de Mel (18 N.L.R. 164) de Sampayo J. drew attention to the words of section 287 and emphasized that the order for delivery of possession was to be "enforced" and not merely "executed", and decries a narrow view being taken. The contention of Mr. Rajapakse therefore amounts to a subtlety and cannot be accepted by us. A somewhat more extreme case has to be advanced to bring out this subtlety conspicuously. What if the fiscal takes the judgment-creditor right round the boundaries of the land and after placing him formally in possession, enters his car and drives away, and the next minute the judgment-debtor who is skulking behind one of these boundaries enters the land and bundles out the decree holder. Can it be reasonably said that the writ of possession was duly executed? I should certainly say not, for to declare to the contrary would be to introduce a legal fiction which de Sampayo J. has deprecated. The learned District Judge's reasons for permitting a reissue of the writ I agree cannot be sustained, but his order in granting the judgment-creditor this relief can be supported on the grounds I have set out.

Prior to section 325 being repealed and replaced by the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act No. 20 of 1977, if the judgment-creditor was dispossessed after the delivery of complete and effectual possession, section 325 had no applicability because the only word used in section 325 was "hindered" and the word "ousted" was not there. Vide Pereira v. Aboothahir (1935) 37 NLR 163, Rahamath Umma v. Abdul Sameen (1960) 63 NLR 1.

Nagamuttu v. Kumarasegaram (1960) 64 NLR 214 is a case filed under the law prior to the said amendment. Irrespective of the conclusion (arrived at as the law stood at that time), the observations made by Weerasooriya J. are instructive. In that case, two days after the execution of a proprietary decree in respect of a land, the judgment-debtor re-entered the land. Although the Supreme Court held that the subsequent re-entry by the judgment-debtor did not amount to a hindrance offered to the judgment-creditor in taking complete and effectual possession within the meaning of section 325 of the Civil Procedure Code (because the only word used in section 325 was "hindered" and the word "ousted" was not there), Weerasooriya J. at pages 215-216 made the following observation:

> If the plaintiffs-respondents are not entitled to an order under section 326, a question that poses itself is what legal remedy for the recovery of possession of the land is available to them short of filing a regular action against the appellant who, even on the 11th August, 1959, was bound by the decree entered in the case and is still bound by it. In considering a similar question in Menika v. Hamy (1892) 2 C.L. Reports 145, Lawrie, J., expressed the opinion that a Court "ought to have the power to compel complete and lasting obedience to its decree, and that on due proof of dispossession, a fresh writ of possession ought to issue." While I am of the same opinion, and see no reason why a writ under section 323 of the Civil Procedure Code should not be re-issued for the removal of the appellant, the weight of authority seems to be against such a course being adopted – see Queen v. Abraham (1843-55) Ramanathan's Reports 79 and also Pereira v. Aboothahir (supra). Moreover, no application for the re-issue of writ under section 323 has been made by the plaintiffs-respondents.

This legal impediment no longer exists as the words hindrance and ouster are both included in the present section 325.

Technical objections in execution proceedings

It must be understood that the petitioner is the decree holder or the judgment-creditor and by virtue of the decree in his favour, he has every right to have it executed. At the stage of execution of the decree, the judgment-creditor shall not be called upon to prove his case again as if it is a second trial. The Court shall not discourage the judgment-creditor from executing the decree by imposing unnecessary fetters. Instead, the Court shall facilitate the judgment-creditor reaping the fruits of his hard-earned victory. What is necessary is not the mere execution of the decree but the enforcement of the decree. What is the use of having a decree on a piece of paper if the decree holder cannot translate it into reality? Justice should be real, not illusory.

In execution proceedings, there is no room for technical objections. In such proceedings the Court shall look at the substance, not the form. The Court shall interfere with the execution only if substantial or material prejudice has been caused to a party or a claimant by any lapse on the part of the Court or the judgment-creditor resulting in a grave miscarriage of justice.

In Brooke Bond (Ceylon) Ltd v. Gunasekara [1990] 1 Sri LR 71 at 81 it was observed that the provisions relating to execution proceedings should not be construed in such a way as to lightly interfere with a decree-holder's right to reap the fruits of his victory as expeditiously as possible.

In Ekanayake v. Ekanayake [2003] 2 Sri LR 221 at 227, Amaratunga J. held:

> Execution is a process for the enforcement of a decreed right, mere technicalities shall not be allowed to impede the enforcement of such rights in the absence of any prejudice to the judgment debtor.

In Nanayakkara v. Sulaiman (1926) 28 NLR 314 at 315 Dalton J. stated:

> As observed by the Privy Council in Bissesur Lall Sahoo v. Maharajah Luckmessur Singh (6 Indian Appeals 233) in execution proceedings, the Court will look at the substance of the transaction, and will not be disposed to set aside an execution upon merely technical grounds, when the execution has been found to be substantially right.

This view has been emphatically endorsed in an array of decisions including Wijewardene v. Raymond (1937) 39 NLR 179 at 181 per Soertsz J., Latiff v. Seneviratne (1938) 40 NLR 141 at 142 per Hearne J., Wijetunga v. Singham Bros. & Co. (1964) 69 NLR 545 at 546 per Sri Skanda Rajah J.

In Samad v. Zain (1977) 79(2) NLR 557, the plaintiff made five applications for writ and died while the fifth was pending, resulting in the execution being stalled. The substituted judgment-creditor filed a sixth application for writ, which was refused on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to exercise "due diligence" to procure execution in the previous attempts ("due diligence" was a requirement under section 377 before the Amendment by the Civil Procedure Code (Amendment) Act No. 53 of 1980). Whilst setting aside the order of the District Court on the basis that section 337 should not be construed very strictly against the judgment-creditor, Wanasundera J. with the concurrence of Tennekoon C.J. and Rajaratnam J. stated at 563:

> The Supreme Court has always been disposed to overlook technicalities in dealing with execution proceedings. Hearne, J. in Latiff vs. Seneviratne quoted the words of the Privy Council to the effect that-

"In execution proceedings, the Court will look at the substance of the transaction, and will not be disposed to set aside an execution upon merely technical grounds, when the execution has been found to be substantially right."

We would be interpreting the relevant provisions unduly harshly if we were to deny the appellant relief in the circumstances of this case. I would, therefore, allow the appeal with costs both here and below. The petitioner would be entitled to take out writ of execution with a view to obtaining satisfaction of the decree of which he is the assignee.

In Dharmawansa v. People's Bank and Another [2006] 3 Sri LR 45, the Court of Appeal quoted Samad v. Zain in interpreting the provisions of the execution proceedings broadly.

In Leechman & Co. Ltd. v. Rangalla Consolidated Ltd. [1981] 2 Sri LR 373 it was held "It is the Fiscal who must sign the prohibitory notice but even if the Registrar signs it the validity of the notice will not be affected where the Registrar and the Fiscal are one and the same person. Nor will the notice be bad because it was addressed to the Chairman, Land Reform Commission when it should have been addressed to the Land Reform Commission because no prejudice was caused and the objection was not taken at the earliest opportunity." Soza J. declared at page 380:

In the case of Nanayakkara v. Sulaiman (1926) 28 NLR 314 it was held that in execution proceedings the Court will look at the substance of the transaction and will not be disposed to interfere on technical grounds. Especially where no objection has been taken at the earliest possible opportunity technicalities will be allowed only > very exceptionally to prevail in execution proceedings. Accordingly all preliminary steps up to the stage of the garnishee proceedings under section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code must be held to have been duly complied with.

Vide also the judgment of De Sampayo J. in Suppramanium Chetty v. Jayawardene (1922) 24 NLR 50 and the separate judgments of Sirimane J. and Alles J. in Perera v. Thillairajah (1966) 69 NLR 237.

In this case, although the petitioner judgment-creditor stated in his petition that he was given complete possession of the property by the fiscal in the execution of the writ, the 1st-8th respondents in their objections denied the same and stated that although the 1st and 2nd respondents were removed in the execution of the decree, the 3rd-8th respondents who have been in possession of the property were not removed. Vide the joint objections of the 1st and 2nd respondents, the 5th and 6th respondents and the 3rd, 7th and 8th respondents – all dated 05.06.2012. However, the District Court and the High Court disregarded these versions of the respondents and readily accepted the version of the petitioner to hold against him. Given the role of the judge in execution proceedings, as stated above, in my view, the District Court should have accepted the version of the respondents to re-issue the writ. If the respondents' version were to be accepted, the complete and effectual possession of the property had not been given to the petitioner in the execution of the writ.

Questions of law

The questions of law on which leave to appeal was granted and the answers thereto are as follows:

Q. Did the High Court of Civil Appeal err in law in failing to apply the principle that technicalities should not be permitted to prevail in execution proceedings?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the District Court and the High Court of Civil Appeal misdirect themselves by failing to consider whether in the totality of the circumstances, relief was available to the petitioner under section 839 of the Civil Procedure Code?

A. The petitioner filed the application under sections 323 and 337 read with section 839 of the Civil Procedure Code in the District Court, which is the subject matter of this appeal, by petition dated 09.03.2012 (page 337 of the brief). The relief can be granted to the petitioner under section 337. Hence the applicability of section 839 does not arise.

Conclusion

For the aforesaid reasons, I set aside the order of the District Court dated 15.01.2013 and the judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal dated 27.08.2014 and direct the District Judge to hold an inquiry into the petition of the petitioner dated 09.03.2012 and the objections filed by the 1st-8th respondents thereto dated 05.06.2012 and make an order according to the law.

This appeal arises from the judgment of the Commercial High Court of Colombo, dated 10.06.2010. By the said judgment, the learned Commercial High Court Judge rejected the application filed by the Appellant-Petitioner-Plaintiff-Appellant (hereinafter referred to as the Appellant or Petitioner) challenging the decision of the original 1st Respondent-Respondent-Defendant, the predecessor of the present 1st Respondent-Respondent-Defendant, namely the Registrar of Patent and Trademarks (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the Registrar) to register the trademarks bearing no. 47711, 47712, 47713, 47714, 47715, 47716, 47717 and 49305 in the name of the 2nd Respondent-Respondent-Defendant, M. S. Hebtulabhoy & Co. Ltd.(hereinafter referred to as the 2nd Respondent). Originally the action was filed in the District Court of Colombo on 01.03.1991 under and in terms of the Code of Intellectual Property Act No.52 of 1979 and was given the case No. 3263/Spl. Pending the determination in the District Court of Colombo, said Code of Intellectual Property Act was repealed and replaced by the Intellectual Property Act No.36 of 2003 and in terms of the provisions of the said Act, the action filed by the Appellant in the District Court was deemed to be instituted and continued under the said new Act and was transferred to the Commercial High Court of Colombo established under the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) Act No.10 of 1996 and was assigned the No.06/2006(3). The learned High Court Judge delivered the impugned judgment after hearing the parties. The Appellant being aggrieved by the Judgment of the Commercial High Court, instituted a special leave to appeal application in this Court and leave was granted only on the following questions of law referred to in paragraph 17 a, b and d of the petition dated 20.07.2010.

"a) Did the Commercial High Court of Colombo err by failing to consider and/or appreciate that the Registrar of Patents and Trademarks had failed to provide a fair hearing to the Petitioner (Appellant) and had thereby violated the principles of natural justice?

b) Did the Commercial High Court of Colombo err by failing to consider and/or appreciate that the Registrar of patents and Trademarks had, even after the Petitioner (Appellant) had brought it to his notice that he had failed to communicate the grant of extensions of time to file the Petitioner's (Appellant's) Notices of Opposition, wrongfully, arbitrarily, unfairly, and unreasonably refused to afford the Petitioner (Appellant) the due opportunity to its said Notices of Opposition?

d) Did the Commercial High Court of Colombo err by failing to appreciate that the Registrar of Patents and Trademarks had acted in contravention of the provisions contained in Subsections (10), (11) and (14) of Section 107 of the Code of Intellectual Property Act No. 52 of 1979, in not permitting the Petitioner (Appellant) extensions of time to file its Notices of Opposition, and had thereby abused the powers and discretion vested in him by law and/or contrary to the scope and ambit of the said provisions?"

It is pertinent to note that when the Appellant filed the original action in the District Court, it has named itself as the Appellant/Petitioner/Plaintiff and termed its application as Petition of appeal/Petition/Plaint. Further, in the caption it has invoked the jurisdiction of the court in terms of the provisions of the Code of Intellectual Property Act No.52 of 1979 without referring to any specific section or sections. This indicates that the Appellant was not definite about under which provision of the Code of Intellectual Property Act No.52 of 1979, it wanted to invoke the jurisdiction of the District Court and whether its application was an appeal, plaint or an application by way of a petition. The main allegation in the petition/plaint filed in the District Court appears to be based on the fact that the extension of time to file Notice of Opposition was not communicated to the Appellant by the Registrar and thus, the decision to register the said marks were taken without giving an opportunity to place its objections which amounts to breach of the rules of natural justice. Anyway, the said Petition/Plaint filed in the District Court cannot be considered as an application to declare the nullity of registration or for the removal of the mark in terms of section 130 and 132 of the said Code, since there is;

- No prayer for a declaration for nullity of registration and there is no specific or clear reference to section 99 or 100 or grounds mentioned in those sections to indicate that the registration was a nullity on those grounds,
- No allegation based on failure to use the registered marks or on transformation of the mark into generic name.

Further, one may question whether the petition filed before the District Court was an appeal filed in terms of section 182 of the said Code since the power given to the District Court in appeal was to have and exercise the same discretionary powers conferred upon the Registrar and as such, whether the District Court has powers to inquire into the conduct of the Registrar in extending the time given to file Notice of Opposition or communicating the dates as alleged in the petition/plaint in an appeal filed in terms of section 182 is arguable, since one cannot expect the Registrar himself has such discretionary powers to supervise his own conduct. However, as per the averments in paragraph 28 and the prayers of the petition/plaint filed in the District Court, it appears that the application falls under the scope of section 172 (2) of the said Code which gives the power to review any decision of the Registrar and rectify the register.

Whatever the nature of the application is, as per the questions of law allowed by this court, now the matter depends on whether the Registrar violated the rules of natural justice by not permitting a fair hearing by acting in contravention of the provisions contained in Subsections (10), (11) and (14) of Section 107 of the Code of Intellectual Property Act No. 52 of 1979, in not permitting the Appellant extensions of time to file its Notices of Opposition, and had thereby abused the powers and discretion vested in him by law and/or contrary to the scope and ambit of the said provisions or by failing to communicate the grant of extensions of time to file the Appellant's Notices of Opposition, wrongfully, arbitrarily, unfairly, and unreasonably refused to afford the Appellant the due opportunity to its said Notices of Opposition.

However, as per the paragraph 13 of the petition/plaint dated 1st march 1991, tendered to the District Court, the Appellant itself has admitted that there were minutes made giving extension of time but the allegation is that the Registrar failed to reply to its letters and communicate such extension of time to the Appellant. Even in the paragraph 6 of the petition of appeal dated 20.07.2010 tendered to this court, the Appellant has admitted that some of the files that were in the custody of the Registrar contained minutes to the effect that the said extensions were granted. The Appellant has further stated in the same paragraph that it was of the bona fide belief and conviction that the said extensions of time had been duly granted without revealing the time such belief or conviction occurred. If such belief or conviction occurred prior to the expiry of time requested, it should have filed the Notice of Opposition within that time. The allegation in the said paragraph also refers to the failure of the Registrar to communicate the extension of time to the Appellant. As per the affidavit dated 29.10.2008, filed by the present 1st Respondent-Respondent-Defendant (hereinafter referred to as the 1st Respondent) before the Commercial High Court, the 1st Respondent also admits that he granted extensions of time but denies that he has a statutory duty or responsibility to communicate such extensions of time to the Appellant- (vide paragraph 14 and 08 of the said Affidavit). The 3rd question of law [question of law in paragraph 17(d) of the Petition} allowed by this court is based on the premise that the extensions of time were not granted. As it appears that there is no dispute as to the granting of extensions of time now, the matter has to be decided on whether the registrar was duty-bound to communicate the extensions of time and if so, failure to do so had affected the rights of the Appellant denying him a fair hearing.

In this regard, it is important to examine some applicable provisions in the Code of Intellectual Property Act no 52 of 1979 which was in force during the relevant time the application for registration of the impugned marks were made and original plaint/petition was filed in the District Court.

Chapter XXI of the said Code of Intellectual Property Act contains provisions relating to the requirements of applications and the procedure for registration of marks. Section 102 to 105 in that chapter relate to requirements of an application to register marks, temporary protection of marks exhibited at an international exhibition and application fees. Section 106 of the Code provides for examination of application as to the form by the Registrar and in terms of the said section once an application for registration is tendered, the Registrar is duty-bound to examine whether the application complies with the provisions of sections 102 and 105 and where applicable with the provisions of sections 103 and 104. Since the matter at hand as set forth by the questions of law mentioned above does not contemplate Section 103 and 104, it is not necessary to examine provisions relating to those sections at this moment. However, if the application tendered does not comply with sections 102 and 105, the registrar shall refuse to register the mark but prior to such refusal he shall notify the applicant of any defect in the application affording the applicant an opportunity to cure such defects- vide proviso to section 106(2). This provision, though not directly related to the matter in issue it shows that there are certain occasions in the registration procedure of a mark where the Registrar is statutorily bound to give notice to a party involved in the process. However, section 107 of the said Code is more relevant to the matter at hand. As per section 107(1), if the application complies with section 102 and 105, the Registrar shall examine the mark in relation to the provisions of section 99 and 100 as to the admissibility of the mark. Section 107(2) states that if the mark is inadmissible under sections 99 or 100 the Registrar shall notify the applicant of the grounds for refusal. Section 107(2) is another instance where the Registrar is statutorily required to notify the relevant person. Sub Sections 107(3) to (6) provides for the applicant to make submissions to Registrar, after such a refusal to register and for hearing and inquiry in that regard and also provides for the acceptance, refusal or conditional acceptance of the application after such inquiry. It should be noted that even in section 107(4), Registrar is statutorily directed to inform the date and time of hearing to the applicant once the applicant made such submissions.

After examining the application as aforesaid, if the Registrar is of the opinion that the mark is admissible, he has to request the applicant to pay the fee for publication within the prescribed period and if the applicant fails to file the fee within the prescribed period, the Registrar may refuse to register the mark – vide section 107(7) and (8). In this occasion the Code does not require the Registrar to notify the applicant of his refusal. It is understood as the applicant is given a time period by the statute itself to do a certain act and if he fails to do it within the given time, it appears that the intention of the legislature is not to burden the Registrar with the notifying of the outcome of such failure. The Registrar has a discretion to grant reasonable extension of time periods referred to in section 107 including the time period referred to in section 107(7). However, though in certain circumstances the Code requires the Registrar to notify certain decisions made by him to the relevant person, the Code does not statutorily require the Registrar to notify if he grants any reasonable extension of time. It must be understood that a reasonable extension may not be granted arbitrarily but only on an application made requesting such an extension. If such an application is made, it is expected on the part of the applicant who asked for an extension to be vigilant and keep an eye on the progress of his application for the extension. It must be the reason for not requiring the registrar to notify of any extensions made under section 107(14). On the other hand, when an extension of time or date is given whether to notify the relevant party who requested for extension may depend on the practice adopted by relevant institution. For example, if a court grants a date or an extension of time on a request made by a motion it may not notify the relevant party always since the party concerned has access to the registry on his own or through his agent. Thus, when the Appellant challenges the conduct of the Registrar in relation to communication of the extension of time, it must reveal the practice adopted by the Registrar's office in that regard, which it fails to do.

Once the fee for publication is made, the Registrar shall proceed to publish the application setting out the details elaborated in section 107(9) of the Code. It is not among the disputed facts that such publications were done regarding the applications relating to the impugned registrations. This also indicates that the Registrar examined the marks in terms of sections 106 (1) and 107(1) and was of the opinion that marks were admissible under section 99 and 100. As per section 107(10) of the Code, if any person considers that the mark is inadmissible on one or more of the grounds referred to in section 99 or 100, he within three months from the date of publication of the application, using the prescribed form along with the prescribed fees, is required to give the Registrar his Notice of Opposition stating his grounds for opposition. If no Notice of Opposition has been received by the Registrar within the said three months period, Registrar shall register the mark. The Registrar is required to ask for observation from the applicant who tender the application to register, only if he receives a Notice of Opposition in prescribed form along with the fee within the prescribed time- vide section 107(12). Once he receives the observation, the Registrar can consider whether or not the mark may be registered. If he thinks it is necessary, he may hear the parties before making such decision. Once the Registrar decides to register the mark, he must register it in the register maintained in terms of section 109 and issue a certificate to the registered owner of the mark. The Registrar is further requested to publish the registered mark in the Gazette using the prescribed form – vide section 109 and 110 of the Code. It is clear that the Appellant did not file the Notice of Opposition within the three months period given by statute itself in section 107(10). Appellant's position is that it asked for extension of time in relation to each application. The 1st Respondent also admits as explained above that he had granted the extension of time in terms of section 107(14). The Appellant takes up the position that the extension of time in relation to the relevant applications were not communicated to the Appellant by the Registrar and as such it did not have the opportunity to file Notice of Opposition and the Registrar, in breach of the rules of natural justice, has registered the impugned marks. The Appellant further states that once it came to know about the registration, though requested to allow it to file notice of opposition, it was not allowed. The 1st Respondent states that he acted in terms of the provisions of the Code and he is not required to communicate the extensions of time and therefore the registrations of the marks were done according to law. What I observed above in relation to paying the fee for publication within a prescribed time period and the Registrar's ability to extend time under section 107(14) where need to notify the extension is not statutorily made is also relevant to the prescribed time period given to file Notice of Opposition and extension of time by the Registrar.

As mentioned before, even though on certain occasions the Registrar is obliged to notify the relevant person by the Code itself, no such obligation is made by the Code with regard to extension of time in terms of section 104(14). Any reasonable person, who has asked for extension of time after failing to file the Notice of Opposition within the 3 months period granted by section 107(10) of the Code must be vigilant of his application for extension of time. The Appellant has not shown that there was an impossibility to get to know the outcome of his applications for the extensions of time in relation to several applications relating to the impugned marks from the office of the Registrar. Appellant and/or its agents handling matters relating to Intellectual property matters at the office of the Registrar must have been aware of the practices adopted there in relation to application for extension of time but the Appellant does not reveal the practice adopted in the office of Registrar in relation to requests for extension of time. Further, the Appellant does not say that on the other occasions the Registrar used to communicate the grant of extensions of time. As per the document marked A5 by the Appellant, it appears when an application for extension of time is made, registration is stayed for the time requested for expecting the filing of Notice of Opposition. The said document reveals that on an application made by Messrs. Akbar Brothers Limited in relation to the TM 49305, registration was stayed twice for a total period of 6 months. This indicates that there appears to be a practice staying the registration of marks once an extension of time is asked for by an intended opponent. Whatever it is, the Appellant has only asked for extensions for three months period in relation to each application and it appears that it has not asked for further extensions. Any reasonable, vigilant person who has asked for extension of time for 3 months and who has not received any communication from the Registrar, would come to one of the following inferences and acts accordingly to save his rights by the expiration of the requested 3 months period;

- That his application for extension is rejected by not giving the extension. If he thinks it is arbitrary and contrary to law, he would have naturally taken steps to challenge such constructive refusal before the proper forum to get such extension.
- That his application for extension of time is not yet considered. Therefore, he would have tendered the Notices of Opposition within the time period he had asked for as an extension, to be consider by the Registrar once his application for extension of time is granted.
- That since the requested extension has not thus far granted, and as a result he cannot file the Notice of Opposition till it is granted, ask for further extension on that ground.

The Appellant has not acted in such a manner but has waited till the Registrar registered the marks which took place after sometime from the final date of the extension it had asked for. As per its Petition dated 20.07.2010 filed in this court, marks bearing No. 47711,47712,47713,47714,47715,47716,47717 and 49305 were gazetted on 18.12.1987, 01.01.1988, 14.01.1988 and 24.06.1988. The three months periods allowed by section 107(10) had to be over by 18.03.1988, 01.04.1988, 14.04.1988 and 24.09.1988. The extensions asked for by the appellant had to be over by 18.06.1988, 01.07.1988, 14.07.1988 and 24.12.1988. There was no valid application to extend time furthermore. A valid application has to be made prior to the expiry of three months contemplated in section 107(10) or before the expiry of any extended time granted by the Registrar under section 107(14) as the Registrar has no option other than registering the marks unless he receives Notice of Opposition within the prescribed period- vide 107(11). The Appellant should not be allowed to say that it should have been given further time as per the letter marked A4 written on 28.03.1990 which has been written after many months from the expiry of the 3 months extensions it had asked for. The letter marked A5 clearly shows that the marks were registered many months after the expiry of 3 months extensions asked for by the Appellant. As mentioned before, there were no valid applications to extend time that will cover the dates on which the marks were registered. If the Appellant was reasonable and vigilant it would have asked for further extensions prior to the expiry of the 3 months extensions it had asked for or tender the Notices of Opposition prior to the expiry of the said requested 3 months periods. As per section 107(11) of the Code, the Registrar has no other option than registering the mark if there is no Notice of Opposition filed within the prescribed time or within any extended time.

I observe that the Appellant has brought this court's attention to the fact that the 2nd Defendant had agreed to enter the judgment in favour of the Appellant before the Commercial High Court Judge. However, it has not revealed the order dated 17.09.2007 made by the learned Commercial High Court Judge in that regard. In that order, learned High Court Judge has stated that the 2nd Defendant had no status to do so as the 2nd Defendant had assigned all its rights by that time.

Even though, the Appellant attempts to blame the Registrar for not affording a fair hearing, it must be noted the Registrar is not bound to hold an inquiry even if a party files its Notice of Opposition- vide section 107(13). He has to hold an inquiry only if he thinks it is necessary to hold an inquiry after calling for observations from the applicant after serving the Notice of Opposition on the applicant. To give a fair hearing there must be a Notice of Opposition first. As explained above, if there were no Notices of Opposition on time, it was the fault of the Appellant as the Appellant did not act vigilantly to assert his rights, if any. Therefore, the questions of law mentioned above, in respect of which this court has granted leave, have to be answered in the negative and against the Appellant. Thus, this appeal is dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff filed this action against the defendant in the District Court of Avissawella seeking to set aside the deed of gift marked P1 on gross ingratitude. The defendant is a relative of the plaintiff. By this deed the plaintiff donated the property to the defendant subject to her life interest. The defendant filed answer seeking dismissal of the plaintiff's action. After trial, the District Judge entered judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal of Avissawella reversed the judgment and dismissed the plaintiff's action on the ground that gross ingratitude had not been proved. Hence this appeal by the plaintiff.

The general rule is that a deed of gift is absolute and irrevocable. However, under the Roman Dutch law, which is our common law, such a deed of gift can be revoked with the intervention of Court inter alia on ingratitude on the part of the donee. The fact that the term "irrevocable donation" is used in the deed is not decisive.

This is now recognised by statute as well. In terms of sections 2 and 3 of the Revocation of Irrevocable Deeds of Gift on the Ground of Gross Ingratitude Act, No. 5 of 2017, an irrevocable deed of gift may be revoked on the ground of gross ingratitude, only on an order made by a competent court, in an action filed by the donor against the donee within a period of ten years from the date of the execution of the deed and within two years from the date on which the cause of action arose.

Slight ingratitude is not sufficient. There shall be gross ingratitude. No hard and fast rule can be laid down on what constitutes gross ingratitude. It is a question of fact, not of law. A single act or a series of acts can constitute gross ingratitude. An assault on the donor by the donee is a clear instance of gross ingratitude. Depending on the facts and circumstances of each individual case, for instance, threats to cause bodily injury to the donor by the donee, continuous slander and insult, damage to the donor's property, ill-treatment of the donor can constitute gross ingratitude. The onus of proof is on the donor and the standard of proof is on a balance of probabilities. Vide Sinnammah v. Nallanathar (1946) 47 NLR 32, Krishnaswamy v. Thillaiyampalam (1957) 59 NLR 265, Fernando v. Perera (1959) 63 NLR 236, Calendar v. Fernando [2001] 2 Sri LR 355, Ariyawathie Meemaduma v. Jeewani Budhdhika Meemaduma [2011] 1 Si LR 124, De Silva v. De Croos [2002] 2 Sri LR 409, Gunawathie v. Premawathi (SC/APPEAL/31/2013, SC Minutes of 05.04.2019), Wasantha Cooray v. Indrani Cooray [2020] 1 Sri LR 150.

The failure to fulfil the conditions of the gift (such as that the donee shall provide succour and assistance to the donor) is a ground to revoke the gift. This is an incidence of gross ingratitude.

In the leading case of Dona Podi Nona Ranaweera Menike v. Rohini Senanayake [1992] 2 Sri LR 181 at 220, Amarasinghe J. states:

> A donor is entitled to revoke a donation on account of ingratitude (1) if the donee lays manus impias on the donor; (2) if he does him an atrocious injury; (3) if he wilfully causes him great loss of property; (4) if he makes an attempt upon his life; (5) if he does not fulfil the conditions attached to the gift. In addition, a gift may be revoked for other, equally grave, causes.

Has the plaintiff donor in the instant case proved gross ingratitude on the part of the defendant donee? Both gave evidence at the trial. The donor is a widow. She does not have children. Since the death of her husband, the donor has been living in the donated house all alone. The donee in her evidence admits that the donor is a sick lady. (page 81 of the brief) At the time of giving evidence, the donor was 75 years of age and the donee 29 years of age. The donee's mother in her evidence stated that the donor was eating very little, about one spoonful for a meal. (page 87) This itself indicates that the donor was feeble and in need of care and protection. In my view, according to the evidence of the donee herself, she did not look after the donor.

The donor's husband died on 01.01.2003. The deed of gift was executed on 01.09.2003. According to the evidence of the donee, the donee left home for further studies in 2002 and continued to be away from her home till 2007. (pages 71-72) That means, she did not look after the plaintiff for about five years. The defendant got married in 2007.

The donor's evidence is that in April 2008, the donee and her father came to her house and, using abusive language, demanded vacant possession of the house. This was corroborated by the evidence of Dayawathie, a neighbour. The donor further says that the donee and her father told her that she could be sent to a home for elders.

The donor made a police complaint marked P2 dated 20.06.2008 stating that the donee does not look after her. The police have not acted on this complaint. This case has been filed on 17.11.2008.

The donee admits in evidence that the donor gifted this property, her dwelling house, expecting that the donee will look after her until her death but she could not look after the donor properly. (pages 77-78 of the brief)

The District Court held that the plaintiff proved gross ingratitude but the High Court held otherwise. The High Court gives undue prominence to the police complaint marked P2 and concludes that the plaintiff's version is not supported by the police complaint. The High Court did not consider the evidence of the defendant. In my view, on the facts and circumstances of this case, the High Court should not have reversed the judgment of the District Court on the merits, as there is sufficient evidence to prove gross ingratitude on a balance of probabilities.

The questions of law on which leave to appeal was granted and the answers to them are as follows:

> Has the High Court misdirected itself when it failed to consider that the defendant herself admitted that she failed to look after the plaintiff?
>
> Yes.
>
> Has the High Court misdirected itself when it failed to consider that the defendant herself admitted that she knew that the condition of the deed of gift is that the defendant must take care of the defendant for the rest of her life and that such failure constitutes gross ingratitude?
>
> Yes.

I set aside the judgment of the High Court and restore the judgment of the District Court and allow the appeal with costs.

Judgement

Aluwihare PC. J.,

(1) The Applicant-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the (Applicant) filed an application against the Respondent-Appellant-Petitioner (hereinafter referred to as the Appellant) in the Labour Tribunal on the basis that his services were terminated wrongfully. The Applicant prayed for reinstatement and back-wages. The learned President of the Labour Tribunal upheld the application and ordered the reinstatement and payment of back-wages. Aggrieved by the said order, the Appellant appealed against the award to the High Court. The learned High Court Judge affirmed the award of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal and in addition ordered the payment of back-wages to cover the duration of the inquiry. The Appellant is now canvassing the said order of the High Court.

(2) When this matter was supported before this court for Special Leave to Appeal, Special Leave was granted on the following questions of law referred to in sub-paragraphs (b) (c) and (d) of paragraph 18 of the petition of the Appellant:

[I] Have both the President of the Labour Tribunal and the learned High Court Judge overlooked the nature of the employment of the Respondent?

[II] Have both the President of the Labour Tribunal and the learned High Court Judge misdirected themselves in ordering reinstatement of service of the Respondent?

[II] Have both the President of the Labour Tribunal and the learned High Court Judge erred in fact and law in computing the back wages of the Respondent?

(3) It would be apposite to refer to the facts of the case before examining the aforementioned questions of law. The Applicant had joined the Appellant, the Diya-Kithulkanda Co-operative Thrift & Credit society Ltd., as a "Cash Collector" on the 25th of August 2007 and continued in service till July 2009. The Applicant, however, asserts that he had not been paid his salary for the months of May, June, and July in 2009 and had alleged that when he made inquiries about the non- payment which was on the 31st July, the Appellant had stopped providing him with work. According to the Applicant, on the 3rd of August he had again made further inquiries and he was once again refused work. Thereafter, on 3rd September 2009 he had filed an application in the Labour Tribunal claiming relief in the form of reinstatement and back wages for wrongful termination. According to the Applicant he had been paid a monthly salary of Rs.10, 000/-. at the time of dismissal.

(4) The Appellant, in their response to the application filed by the Applicant, maintained that the Applicant, had been recruited on contract basis, initially, for a period of one year, beginning, 1st August 2007 to work in the delivery van as a "Cash Collector" for a Product Distribution Agreement the Appellant had entered into with Nestle Lanka PLC.in May 2007 [R6]. Initially this had been for a period of one year. At the expiry of the said contract period, however, the Applicant was offered an extended contract for the period of one more year beginning, 1st August 2008 and ending on 31st July 2009 [R16 A] for services related to the same project. At the expiry of that contract, the Appellant had decided to extend the contract as a Cash Collector for a further period of 3 months with effect from 1st August 2009. It is in evidence that the reason for obtaining services on a contract basis instead of permanent employment was due to the fact that the services were needed only for the duration of the subsistence of the 'distribution agency' with Nestle Ltd.

(5) It would also be relevant to mention that the Appellant Co-Operative Society at its General Meeting held, decided to offer employment opportunities regarding the Nestle project, only to the members of the Society or their relatives. The Applicant had admitted that, at a General Meeting it was announced that members can apply for the vacancies in the Nestle project and accordingly he had applied. The Applicant had also admitted that at the end the second year, a contract for three months was offered to all employees attached to the 'Nestle project.'

(6) According to the evidence led, by 2009 April, the project had become a failure and all persons employed by the project were put on notice that due to financial issues, the project would be terminated.

(7) The Appellant, in explaining the non-payment of the Applicant's salary for the months of May to August, states that they decided to hold it back till the Applicant signed the fresh contract extending his services by 3 months. The Appellant takes up the position that the Applicant's services were not terminated nor was he dismissed from service, but was treated as having vacated his post, since he did not report for duty after the 1st of August 2009.

(8) Having examined and assessed the evidence produced before the tribunal by both parties, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had focused on the question whether the Appellant had unjustly terminated the services of the Applicant by refusing to employ him on 31st July and 3rd August 2009 or whether the Applicant had vacated his post by not reporting for work from 3rd August 2009. The learned President of the Labour Tribunal observed that the initial recruitment as a Cash Collectors had been on an application made by the Applicant and no evidence had been adduced to establish that a formal contract of employment was initially signed or exchanged to establish a master-servant relationship between the two parties, but the Applicant had continued in service till July 2009, receiving a monthly salary as remuneration for his work as a Cash Collector. The learned President of the Labour Tribunal, by the award dated 31st May 2011, ordered the Appellant to pay, back-wages to the Applicant at the rate Rs.10, 000/- for the months of May, June and July of 2009, [the three months for which the Applicant complained that he was not paid] and to pay wages amounting to Rs. 240,000 (10,000 x 24) up to the date of the Tribunal's decision, and also to reinstate the Applicant with effect from 3rd May 2011.

(9) From the tenor e of the award of the Labour Tribunal, it appears that the learned President of the Labour tribunal had concluded that the Applicant's employment with the Appellant was on a permanent basis for the reason that the Appellant had neither adduced any material as evidence nor elicited in the cross examination, to establish that the form of employment offered to the Applicant was one of a contractual and not of a permanent nature . [Page 5 of the Award]. This observation in my view, however, does not seem to be accurate and later in the judgement I have given reasons for the said conclusion.

(10) Being aggrieved by the said order, the Appellant appealed to the High Court pleading that the orders referred to in the preceding paragraph were erroneous on two grounds. Firstly, that despite being employed on a contract basis for a fixed period of time, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had declared the Applicant to be a permanent employee. Secondly, that despite the Applicant's voluntary termination of services by vacating the post, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had declared that his services had been terminated by the Appellant.

(11) The learned High Court Judge, relying on the decision in the case of Ceylon Cinema and Film Studio Employees Union v. Liberty Cinema Ltd 1994 3 SLR 121 held that the assessment of evidence lies within the province of the Labour Tribunal, and the appellate court cannot review the Labour Tribunal's findings unless the Labour Tribunal had no evidence on record to support its findings. Accordingly, the Appellant was required to satisfy the High Court that there was no cogent evidence to support the conclusion reached by the Tribunal or that the finding was not rationally possible and was perverse having regard to the material placed before the Tribunal. The learned High Court Judge, having observed that the Appellant failed to satisfy Court, upheld the order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal and by its order dated 21st October 2014, ordered back wages amounting to 42 months beginning in May 2011 up to September 2014 amounting to a sum of Rs. 420,000 (10,000 x 42), in addition to the wages ordered by the Labour Tribunal. The learned High Court Judge also affirmed the order of the Labour Tribunal directing the Appellant to reinstate the Applicant with effect from 30th November 2014.

(12) Before addressing the questions of law on which Special Leave was granted, I wish to touch on the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court and this Court as regards appeals from Labour Tribunals. In the case of Kotagala Plantations Ltd and Lankem Tea and Rubber Plantations (Pvt) Ltd v. Ceylon Planters' Society SC Appeal 144/2009 SCM 15.12.2010, Chief Justice, De. Silva, observed that: "... It is not for an Appellate Court to review the evidence and come to a different conclusion regarding the facts of the case unless the findings on the facts by the Tribunal was against the weight of the evidence…". Emphasis is mine]

(13) Therefore, this court does not endeavour to re-assess or re-evaluate any facts unless and otherwise the Appellant has satisfied the court that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal overlooked or reached conclusions which were against the weight of the evidence, or the conclusions reached were rationally impossible or perverse. Therefore, I shall confine my review solely to the order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal, which the Appellant submits was bad in law having regard to the weight of specific evidence placed before the Labour Tribunal.

Nature of Employment [1st question of law]

(14) Learned Counsel for the Appellant submitted that the nature of the Appellant's business as a Co-operative 'thrift society' was such that they would, from time-to-time, engage in various ventures with a view to generating revenue for its membership, and the agreement entered into with Nestle Lanka PLC, [in 2007] to distribute their products in the region, was one such venture. The management of the Society had also taken a decision to offer any available employment in connection with the Nestle venture to its own members as it would be some benefit to them. The Applicant being a member of the Society, was therefore one among many who was contracted for the specific purpose of collecting cash from the retailers to whom the merchandise was supplied. Learned Counsel for the Appellant also noted that the nature of the Applicant's employment was such that it was exclusively confined to the specific venture and the Applicant's admissions before the Labour Tribunal indicate that he too was aware of this fact. The learned Counsel for the Appellant drew the attention of the court to the evidence at the inquiry which reveals that the distribution of products in relation to the Nestle venture was phased out from about April 2009. The learned Counsel's submissions on this matter concluded by noting how the Applicant was provided employment for two subsequent years, each for a fixed term, during which the Appellant was engaged in the venture with Nestle Lanka PLC, and therefore, the Applicant's employment could not have been that of a permanent employee and could only be one of a fixed term employee. It is the Appellant's submission that therefore both the learned President of the Labour Tribunal as well as the learned High Court Judge misdirected themselves in holding that the Applicant was not a fixed term employee. It is the Applicant's position, that he was a permanent employee, that he not working on a contract of employment for a fixed period of time, nor had he entered into any such contract.

(15) As S. R. de Silva notes in 'The Contract of Employment' (1998) para. 179, p. 138, 'permanent employee' refers to persons who serve under a monthly contract or agreement of employment whereby the agreement upon which the master-servant relationship operates is renewed at the end of each month unless it is terminated upon notice by either party.

(16) At the inquiry before the Labour Tribunal, it was revealed that at the stage of recruitment, although the Appellant had decided to employ Cash Collectors on a contract basis for a fixed period, no written contract for the year 2007 - 2008 had been executed. R16 is the written contact drawn in the name of the Applicant signed by the Chairman of the Appellant Co-operative Society for the period 2008 August to 2009, however, its acceptance had not been acknowledged by the Applicant. The Applicant nevertheless had admitted at the inquiry (referenced in pages 13, 28, 29, 31 and 42 in the brief marked 'X') that despite the absence of a written contract of employment for a fixed term, he was aware of the nature of his employment as being exclusively confined to the Nestle venture. When questioned as to whether the Applicant was aware that he was employed to work for a period of one year, the Applicant answered that he had not been provided with notice of such an arrangement. Furthermore, it is the Appellant's submission that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal had not adduced sufficient weight to the documentary evidence (R16) provided to the Tribunal indicating the existence of a fixed-term contract between the Appellant and the Respondent.

(17) As noted by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal, both R16 documents, which appear to be the Applicant's letter of appointment and contract of employment for the period 1st August 2008 to 31st July 2009 do not bear the signature of the Applicant and the Appellant does appears to have not acted in a professional manner when it came to regularising employment. Both, witnesses Somalatha [Accountant] and Withanachchi [Store keeper] of the Co-operative Society had been emphatic that the nature of the employment that was offered to all the employees relating to the Nestle venture were of fixed time contracts. It was the evidence of witness Withanachchi, that they [all those were recruited] were informed that, as the Society would only be acting as agents for Nestle, they were not being recruited on a permanent but only on a contract basis.

(18) When one considers the totality of the evidence led, the explanation of the learned Counsel for the Appellant as to why the Appellant decided to employ persons, whose services were confined to the Nestle venture, on a Fixed Term Contract seems rational. Thus, the learned President of the Labour Tribunal fell into error when he held that " the Respondent [present Appellant] had not placed any evidence either through the cross examination of the Applicant or by other evidence that the Applicant entered into an employment contract with the Appellant on an yearly basis" Accordingly, I answer the first question of law in the affirmative and hold that the nature of employment offered to the applicant was one of a fixed term contract.

Termination of Services

(19) It is established that neither the Appellant nor the Respondent provided notice of termination of services. Any cessation of service, therefore must necessarily have been caused by vacation of post by the Applicant or constructive termination of the Applicant's employment by the Appellant.

(20) It would be pertinent to examine the distinct elements of vacation of post as a means by which an employment is terminated. In a series of cases decided by this court, it has been established that vacation of post refers to a situation in which the employee terminates his employment by not reporting to work over a sustained period of time, with no animus revertendi. I wish to examine the principles enunciated in the cases of Building Materials Corporation v. Jathika Sevaka Sangamaya (1993) 2 Sri LR 316 and Nelson De Silva v. Sri Lanka State Engineering Corporation (1996) 2 Sri LR 342.

(21) In Building Materials Corporation v. Jathika Sevaka Sangamaya, Justice Perera observed that vacation of post occurs as follows: "Where an employee endeavours to keep away from work or refuses or fails to report to work or duty without an acceptable excuse for a reasonably long period of time such conduct would necessarily be a ground which justifies the employer to consider the employee as having vacated service." [At p. 322] (emphasis added). In Nelson De Silva v. Sri Lanka State Engineering Corporation Justice Jayasuriya held that "[the] concept of vacation of post involves two aspects; one is the mental element, that is intention to desert and abandon the employment and the more familiar element of the concept of vacation of post, which is the failure to report at the workplace of the employee. To constitute the first element, it must be established that the Applicant is not reporting at the workplace, was actuated by an intention to voluntarily vacate his employment." [at p. 343] (emphasis added).

(22) It is therefore evident that to constitute vacation of post, the workman must not report to or seek work from the employer. It is in evidence that the Applicant sought work from the Appellant on 31st July and 3rd August 2009. It is also established that the Applicant worked for the Appellant for the months of May, June and July without receiving his salary. The Applicant's position is that he inquired about the salary, but the Appellant refused to offer work to the Applicant, informing him that he would not be provided with work nor be paid the salary for the months of May, June and July until he signed the contract extending his services by 3 months from August 2009.

From the evidence it is clear that there was a standoff between the two parties, the Applicant was not agreeable to the extension of the [employment] contract only for three months, whereas the Appellant was not in a position to offer a contract for a longer period due to the Nestle project coming to an end. The Applicant's repeated attempts to report for work, prior to his absence from work due to the Appellant's manifest refusal to pay his salary leads me to draw the conclusion that the Applicant had not vacated his post.

(23) I wish to now examine whether the Applicant's services were terminated by the Appellant. I find the observations of Gunasekara, J. in the case of Pfizer Limited v. Rasanayagam (1991) 1 Sri LR 290 before the Court of Appeal ad rem in this aspect. The Applicant, in that case, had communicated that although he did not report for work, he was willing to work for the employer and that his absence was a form of protest against the employer's order to report to a colleague who was a junior officer. Gunasekara, J. stated that "The question as to whether a given set of circumstances constitutes a vacation of employment or a constructive termination is a question of fact to be determined by the Tribunal having regard to all the facts and circumstances which transpire in the evidence." [at p. 294].

(24) The case of Warnakulasooriya v. Hotel Developers (Lanka) Ltd, SC Appeal 101/2014 (Decided on 26-07-2018) is helpful in making the aforementioned determination. The employee in that case had been served with a letter terminating her services for vacating her post due to prolonged and sustained absence from employment. It was revealed that the employee had been unable to report to work due to medical reasons and had reported for work at the earliest possible date and submitted a medical certificate confirming the reasons for her absence. This Court, exercising its appellate jurisdiction held that the mental element of abandonment of employment had not been established as the employee had returned to work on the earliest possible day, and for that reason the learned President of the Labour Tribunal and the learned High Court Judge had erred in concluding that the employee had vacated her post. The Court arrived at the said decision having considered the weight of documentary evidence placed before the Tribunal which indicated that the employer had send multiple notices and letters requiring explanation from hr for her absence.

(25) In the present case, as observed by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal, not only did the Appellant fail to provide such notice to the Applicant, but the Appellant had on two occasions expressly denied him work after he had served without receiving a salary for three consecutive months. The Appellant has submitted to the Labour Tribunal that it sought to discuss the Applicant's employment after 3rd August 2009 by inviting the Applicant to attend a discussion by a letter dated 24th August 2009. As observed by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal, however, there is no proof that such a letter was communicated to the Applicant

(26) It is my view, therefore, that by not providing the Applicant his salary for three consecutive months, and thereafter refusing to employ him, the Appellant had unjustly terminated his employment on the 3rd August 2009.

Order of Reinstatement [2nd question of law]

(27) It is the Appellant's submission that the President of the Labour Tribunal and the learned High Court Judge misdirected themselves by ordering reinstatement of service of the Applicant whereas the venture in question had ceased to function. The Applicant maintained that the reinstatement of his service was just and equitable. The Appellant in its written submission before this court referred to the decisions in De Silva v. Ceylon Estate Staff's Union, SC 211/72 SCM 15.05.1974 and United Industrial Local Government and General Workers' Union v. Independent News Papers Ltd 75 NLR 531 to convince the court that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal erred in ordering reinstatement of the Respondent when the Appellant Co-op Society had been compelled to terminate its venture with Nestle PLC due to its failure.

(28) In the case of, United Industrial Local Government and General Workers' Union v. Independent News Papers Ltd. [supra], It was held [at p. 531] that the finding of a workman's termination of service as being unjust does not entitle the workman to demand reinstatement as a right, nor does it confer upon the Labour Tribunal an obligation to order reinstatement, the tribunal is vested with the discretion to determine whether payment of compensation would be a just alternative to reinstatement. I also wish to note the observations of Rajaratnam, J. in De Silva v. Ceylon Estate Staff's Union SC 211/72 SCM 15.05.1974: "…the Tribunal must be mindful of the nature of the applicant's employment, the impact a reinstatement can make on the industry and the employer/ employee relationship. It should also consider whether an order of reinstatement would disrupt and disorganize the management or administration of the business.". [Emphasis added]. Furthermore, it was observed by this court in the case of Jayasuriya vs. Sri Lanka State Plantation Corporation 1995 2 SLR 379, that even where the dismissal is unlawful, reinstatement will not invariably be ordered either where it is inexpedient or where there are unusual features. In such an event, an award of compensation instead of reinstatement would meet the ends of justice. The instant case, in my view, is not an instance where reinstatement of the Applicant is expedient given the nature of the employment the Applicant was engaged in.

(29) It is established that the Appellant's business venture with Nestle Lanka PLC had completely ceased by 2010. Due to the unique utility 'Cash Collectors' offered to the Appellant in its venture with Nestle Lanka PLC, the fact that the venture had ceased due to its financial failure as far as the Appellant was concerned and in particular the nature of employment that was offered to the Applicant, it is my considered view that the learned President of the Labour Tribunal erred in ordering reinstatement of the Applicant's services with effect from 3rd May 2011, and the learned High Court Judge erred in ordering reinstatement of service with effect from 30th November 2014.

(30) Accordingly, I answer the 2nd question of law also in the affirmative.

Payment of Back Wages

(31) It is the Appellant's submission that in the event this court finds that the Respondent's employment was terminated unjustly, the duration for the computation of payment of back wages should not extend beyond the period of employment the Respondent would have enjoyed, had his employment not been terminated. I am mindful of the duty of a Labour Tribunal, and consequently this court, to make such award or order as may appear just and equitable. The Applicant, no doubt, is entitled to compensation for the sudden termination, as he would have had a reasonable expectation of continuing employment within the venture. When computing compensation on the basis of the Applicant's basic salary, the final date of his period of service should be reconciled with the final date of employment of other persons employed as Cash Collectors for the Appellant's venture with Nestle Lanka PLC. Having considered all the facts and circumstances of the case, it is my view that that the compensation ordered by the learned President of the Labour Tribunal is reasonable and cannot be considered as excessive

(32) Accordingly, the order of the learned President of the Labour Tribunal dated 31st May 2011 ordering back wages amounting to Rs. 240,000 is affirmed. In my view the order of learned High Court Judge enhancing the back wages to Rs. 420,000 cannot be justified as the High Court had arrived at the said figure without proper evaluation of the facts relevant to issue of back wages.

(33) In determining this matter the principle laid down in the case of Jayasuriya vs. Sri Lanka State Plantation Corporation [supra] would be relevant. It was held that "In determining compensation what is expected is that after weighing together of the evidence and probabilities in the case, the Tribunal must form an opinion of the nature and extent of the loss, arriving at an amount that a sensible person would not regard as means of extravagant but would rather consider to be just an equitable in all the circumstances of the case'. The Court also observed [in the case of Jayasuriya] "that the burden is on the employee to adduce sufficient evidence to enable the tribunal to assess the loss and ….if the employee had had obtained equally beneficial or financially better alternative employment, he should receive no compensation." In the instant case the Applicant had failed to adduce any evidence as to loss to him.

(34) Accordingly, the order made by the learned High Court Judge enhancing the compensation ordered by the President of the Labour Tribunal is set aside and the order of the Labour Tribunal regarding compensation is affirmed. It is in evidence that the Applicant was not paid by the Appellant for the months of June, July and August 2009. That had not been factored in by the Labour Tribunal when computing the compensation. As such the Appellant is directed to pay the Applicant a sum of Rs.30,000/- in addition to Rs.240,000/- ordered by the Labour Tribunal.

Considering the above the 3rd question of law, which has two parts, is answered in the following manner;

(a) The Labour Tribunal had not erred in fact and law in computing the back wages of the Applicant and that part of the question is answered in the negative

(b) The High Court had erred in fact and law in computing the back wages of the Applicant and that part of the question is answered in the affirmative.

The Court makes the following orders;

(1) The orders made by both the Labour Tribunal and the High Court to reinstate the Applicant [Respondent] are set aside.

(2) The Applicant would be entitled to compensation in a sum Rs 270,000/-and the Appellant is directed to make this payment within two months from today.

(3) The Applicant [Respondent] is also entitled for the cost of this case in a sum of Rs. 40,000/-

Samayawardhena, J.

The Plaintiff instituted this action in the District Court of Walasmulla in 2005 against the 1st Defendant seeking a declaration that he is entitled to have a six-foot wide right of way from Thalawa-Middeniya road to his land (dominant tenement) and for an order to remove the wall erected by the 1st Defendant obstructing the said right of way and damages. The 2nd Defendant who is a co-owner of the dominant tenement was made a party only for notice and no relief was sought against her. She is the sister of the Plaintiff. The 1st Defendant filed answer seeking dismissal of the Plaintiff's action and compensation for harassment. After trial, the District Court dismissed the Plaintiff's action on the basis that the right of way the Plaintiff seeks to establish is not based on (a) any previous Judgment (b) any deed or (c) prescription. The cross-claim of the 1st Defendant for damages was also refused. On appeal, the High Court of Civil Appeal set aside the Judgment of the District Court and granted the reliefs sought by the Plaintiff except for damages. This appeal by the 1st Defendant is against the Judgment of the High Court.

The High Court Judgment is comprehensive. The High Court analyzed the evidence led at the trial in the correct perspective, which the District Court failed to do. There is no necessity to repeat them here. As the High Court has stated in the Judgment, there was clear documentary evidence before the District Court to decide the matter in favour of the Plaintiff although the District Court erroneously dismissed the Plaintiff's action on the ground that there is no basis to grant relief to the Plaintiff.

If I may state the facts briefly, this right of way starts from Middeniya-Talawa road and runs between the 1st defendant's building (a business premises on the left side) and Abeysinghe Stores on the right side. The owner of Abeysinghe Stores is not a party to the case.

There was a previous partition case No. P/52 in the District Court of Walasmulla to partition the dominant tenement. The Preliminary Plan of that case was marked P4 without any objection and without subject to proof. P4 had been prepared in 1986. In P4 this road is shown as the access road to the land to be partitioned. The road was bounded by the two walls of the said two buildings. There were no obstructions on the road at that time. The Final Partition Plan prepared in 1999 was marked P1A without any objections and without subject to proof although the surveyor was called as a witness by the plaintiff. According to the Final Partition Plan and the Report, Lot 1C of the Final Partition Plan, which is six-foot wide, serves as the access road to the land; and this road had been obstructed by the 1st Defendant of the instant case by constructing a wall in the middle of the road (vide pages 157 and 160 of the brief). This is the disputed road which is the subject matter of this action. The surveyor has further stated in the Report that unless the said obstruction is removed, there will be no access to Lots 1A and 1B of the Final Partition Plan. The Final Decree of the partition case was marked P1 without objection and without subject to proof. It inter alia states that Lot 1C is declared as the access road: "තවද එකී බෙදුම් පිඹුර අනුව බෙදා වෙන් කර දෙන්නට යෙදුන ආකාරයට, මෙහි පහත උපලේඛණයේ සඳහන් අංක 1 ඒ දරණ කැබැල්ල මෙම නඩුවේ පැමිණිලිකරුටද, අංක 1 බී දරණ කැබැල්ල 1 වන විත්තියටද, අංක 1 සී දරණ කැබැල්ල අඩි 6 ක් පළල පාරක් ලෙසද, අයිතිකර පවරා හිමිකර තීන්දු කරමි." The plaintiff has purchased Lot 1A from the Plaintiff in the partition case by Deed marked P3 and Lot 1B from the heirs of the 1st defendant in the partition case by Deed marked P2.

How can then the District Judge says that there is no basis for the Plaintiff's action? The 1st Defendant has not challenged this portion of the partition decree in these proceedings or in the partition action itself or in any other proceedings. In any event, the Final Decree of the partition action cannot be interfered with in these proceedings.

According to the 1st Defendant's evidence, he came to Lot A of his Plan marked Y as a lessee in 1984. According to the Lease Agreement marked V1, the northern boundary is the public road and the western boundary is also a road. The 1st defendant says he purchased the leased property in 1987. He further says that he constructed this wall in the middle of the road in 1988. On what basis did he do so? The Plaintiff does not admit that the wall was constructed in 1988. According to the Plaintiff, the wall was constructed in 1999. The person who constructed the wall says that prior to the construction of the wall, the width of the road was 6 feet (page 115 of the brief). The Defendant has no right to construct such a wall obstructing the road which had been there even before the preliminary survey was done in the partition action in 1986. No Plan has been approved to construct this wall. It is an unauthorized construction.

I answer the following questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted in the negative.

Did the High Court err in law (a) in failing to evaluate the case presented before it; (b) in law in holding that the Plaintiff has acquired the right of way by prescription; (c) in failing to appreciate that the Plaintiff has failed to discharge his burden of proof; (d) in failing to appreciate that there should be cogent evidence to establish a claim for right of way; and (e) in substituting its opinion in place of that of the District Court?

The appeal is dismissed with costs. The 1st defendant shall pay the costs in all three Courts and remove the wall constructed by him in the middle of the right of way on his own expense and clear the road within one month of the reading out of the Judgment in the District Court.

ORDER

Aluwihare PC. J,

The present order is concerned with whether the Petitioner, Ven. Aludeniye Subodhi Thero can be substituted in the room and place of the deceased 4th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent, Ven. Munhene Meththarama Thero (hereinafter referred to as the 4th Defendant) in the instant case. The 4th Defendant was the Viharadhipathi (Chief Incumbent) of the Seruwila Mangala Raja Maha Viharaya in Trincomalee until his expiration on 11th May 2021.

The Petitioner is purporting to be the 4th Defendant's successor as the Viharadhipathi, having been appointed by a group of laymen representing the Seruwila Mangala Maha Chaithyawardena Society (hereinafter the 'Chaithyawardena Society'). Whereas the 1st Defendant-Petitioner-Appellant-Respondent (hereinafter the 1st Respondent) claims that he was appointed as the Viharadhipathi by the Chief Prelate of the Kalyanawansa Sect of the Amarapura Chapter as per the powers vested on the Chief Prelate in terms of the Constitution of the Kalyanawansa Sect (as supported by letter of the Commissioner General of Buddhist Affairs marked 'D2A' which states that the appointment of the 1st Respondent was accepted by the Commissioner General).

The main application of the instant matter arises from the following events. When Ven. Seruwila Saranakiththi Thero, in the role of Viharadhipathi, was ill and hospitalized for treatment, the 1st Respondent along with the 2nd and 3rd Defendant-Petitioner-Respondents (hereinafter the 2nd and 3rd Defendants) attempted to interfere in the administration of the Seruwila Mangala Raja Maha Viharaya without a proper appointment to the said Chief Incumbency and regardless of the fact that the Viharadhipathi was alive.

In order to maintain peace within the temple, three key office bearers of the Chaithyawardena Society instituted an action bearing No. SPL/138/16 in the District Court of Muttur praying for permanent injunction, interim injunction and enjoining order. The 1st to 4th Defendants named in the said application were the pupils of Ven. Seruwila Saranakiththi Thero. The now deceased Ven. Munhene Meththarama Thero was named as the 4th Defendant while Ven. Seruwila Saranakiththi Thero was named as the 5th Defendant.

In the said action, the District Court of Muttur issued an enjoining order against the 1st to 4th Defendants restraining them from interfering in the administrative affairs of the Seruwila Mangala Raja Maha Viharaya. Before summons could be served, the Viharadhipathi, Ven. Seruwila Saranakiththi Thero [who was cited as the 5th Defendant] passed away on or about 02nd May 2016 and the Chaithyawardena Society consisting of the 1st and 2nd Plaintiffs appointed the 4th Defendant as the Viharadhipathi and communicated the fact of the appointment to the Chief Prelate of the Kalyanawansa Sect. Although the Plaintiffs had originally sought relief against the 4th Defendant, the Plaintiffs moved to withdraw the enjoining order against the 4th Defendant, facilitating such appointment. The matter proceeded against the rest of the Defendants and an interim injunction was issued against the 1st to 3rd Defendants on 19th October 2016.

Challenging the aforementioned order of the District Court of Muttur, the 1st to 3rd Defendants filed a leave to appeal application in the Civil Appellate High Court of the Eastern Province holden in Trincomalee. The Civil Appellate High Court in turn, affirmed the interim order of the District Court. Being aggrieved thereby, the 1st Respondent filed a leave to appeal application before the Supreme Court. Leave to appeal being granted, the appeal was fixed for hearing. While the appeal was pending the 4th Defendant passed away on or about 11th May 2021 and the current Petitioner, Ven. Aludeniye Subodhi Thero sought to be substituted in the place of the deceased 4th Defendant.

At the time of the delivery of the High Court of Civil Appeal decision on 11th January 2019 the 4th Defendant had acceded to the role of the Viharadhipathi having been appointed in that role by the previous Viharadhipathi, 5th Defendant by virtue of Deed No. 3011 dated 11th September 2006. His appointment as the Viharadhipathi, however, had been subsequently cancelled. Challenging the cancellation, the 4th Defendant had filed action in the District Court of Colombo against the 5th Defendant. (An interim injunction had been issued against the cancellation by the District Court of Colombo.

The substitution of the Petitioner in the room and place of the deceased 4th Defendant in the present matter was objected to by the Respondents alleging that the Petitioner, Ven. Aludeniye Subodhi Thero was attempting to get undue recognition of the Supreme Court as the Viharadhipathi of the Seruwila Mangala Raja Maha Viharaya. The substance of the objections was mainly that there is no need for the substitution of the Petitioner as his appointment as Viharadhipathi is unacceptable being contrary to the existing procedure and, that the Petitioner is not a party that stands to be affected by the interim injunction issued by the District Court of Muttur.

The 1st Respondent stated that the three appointments of Viharadhipathi made in the years 1984, 2016 and 2021 were effected either through a Deed of Appointment or by resorting to the procedure set out in the relevant provisions of the Constitution of the Amarapura Chapter. The 1st Respondent contends that as per the Constitution of the Amarapura Chapter the Chaithyawardena society is merely empowered to make a recommendation to the Chief Prelate of the Kalyanawansa Sect, which can then be considered or disregarded at the discretion of the Chief Prelate. The appointment is at the sole discretion of the Chief Prelate. The 1st Respondent further stated that the purported appointment of the Petitioner has received neither the required administrative recognition nor recognition by the Maha Sangha.

Furthermore, the 1st Respondent submitted that the interim injunctions which are the subject matter of the present appeal were issued against the 1st to 3rd Defendants and that the deceased 4th Defendant has never been a party affected or benefitted by the said order. It was further contended that the 4th Defendant was named in the personal capacity in the actions before the District Court of Muttur and not in the capacity of the Viharadhipathi of the Seruwila Mangala Maha Viharaya and therefore any successor to the office of the Viharadhipathi of the said Viharaya has no right to be substituted.

The Petitioner, on the contrary, stated that he was appointed by the Chaithyawardena Society in accordance with the temple tradition and/or custom of appointing the Viharadhipathi of the Seruwila Mangala Raja Maha Viharaya. The claim of the Petitioner is that the relevant provisions of the Constitution of the Kalyanawansa Sect are such as to allow the Chaithyawardena Society to appoint a Viharadhipathi of their choice.

Furthermore, the Petitioner submitted that as the District Court application principally related to the management, control and decision making of the Chaithyawardena Society in respect of the Seruwila Mangala Raja Maha Viharaya and since the deceased 4th Defendant was the then Viharadhipathi, it is necessary to substitute his successor in office i.e. the Petitioner, as the present Viharadhipathi, for the purpose of prosecuting the present appeal as well as in the interests of justice.

It was further submitted that any order made by the Supreme Court substituting the Petitioner can no way be construed as a judicial pronouncement of the Viharadhipathiship as alleged by the 1st Respondent and that the said question is a different cause of action for a different application. The Petitioner brought to the notice of this court that in fact such an application, bearing no. DSP 145/2021, has been instituted in the District Court of Colombo by the Petitioner. It was emphasized that the present substitution is intended for the limited purpose of prosecuting the appeal.

The context of the matter and the contentions of the parties are such, and what remains to be seen is whether the substitution sought by the Petitioner can be allowed. Section 760A of the Civil Procedure Code read with Rule 38 of the Supreme Court Rules 1990 makes provision for the substitution of parties in appeals in civil matters.

Section 760A of the Civil Procedure Code states that "Where at any time after the lodging of an appeal in any civil action, proceeding or matter, the record becomes defective, by reason of the death or change of status of a party to the appeal, the Court of Appeal may in the manner provided in the rules made by the Supreme Court for that purpose, determine who, in the opinion of the court is the proper person to be substituted or entered on the record in the place of, or in addition to, the party who had died or undergone a change of status, and the name of such person shall thereupon be deemed to be substituted or entered on record as aforesaid."

Rule 38 of the Supreme Court rules states that "The Supreme Court may, on application in that behalf made by any person interested, or ex mero motu, require such applicant or the petitioner or appellant, as the case may be, to place before the Court sufficient materials to establish who is the proper person to be substituted or entered on the record in place of, or in addition to the party who had died or undergone a change of status;…"

Upon a plain reading of Rule 38, it is evident that any person interested can make an application to be substituted in the place of the person who has died, and that determining who the proper person to be substituted is at the discretion of the court. As reiterated in Chandana Hewavitharane v. Urban Development Authority (2005) 2 SLR 107 at page 110, by Rule 38, the court is given the discretion to determine who the proper person to be substituted is. There is no requirement for a person making such application to be a legal heir, administrator, or executor, as the section envisages applications "by any person interested."

Furthermore, substitution is in the interests of the continuation of the case and plays no role in deciding the rights of the parties. In the Court of Appeal decisions of Kusumawathie v. Kanthi (2004) 1 SLR 350, at page 354, and Careem v. Sivasubramaniam and Another (2003) (2) SLR 197 which are relevant to the case at hand, it was observed that substitution is solely for the purpose of ensuring the continuation of the appeal after the change of status and not to decide the rights of the parties. It was submitted on behalf of the 1st Respondent that where there are more Defendants than one and one of them dies and if the cause of action survives against the other Defendants alone, the Plaintiff can continue the action without bringing in the legal representative (vide Duhilanomal and Others v. Mahakanda Housing Company Limited (19 82) 2 SLR 504).

In the present case, the 1st Respondent avers that Rule 38 cannot be applied to make a mandatory substitution since the case record will not become defective by the demise of the 4th Defendant who has been named as a party for the reason of notice, who is neither a beneficiary nor an affected party by the interim injunctions canvassed before the Supreme Court. However, even though the case record does not become defective by the demise of the 4th Defendant it is necessary to consider other reasons that warrant the substitution of the Petitioner in place of the deceased 4th Defendant.

The 1st Respondent submitted that in an action filed in the personal capacity the successor to such person's office need not be substituted. It is pertinent to note, however, that after the death of the 5th Defendant Viharadhipathi Thero, the 4th Defendant has, in fact, been considered in the capacity of the Viharadhipathi rather than in his personal capacity before the Doctrict Court. This was indicated by the Motion dated 15th May 2016 by which the Plaintiffs had informed the District Court that they will not proceed against the 4th Defendant as he had become the Viharadhipathi. Therefore, the Plaintiffs considering it necessary to make the incumbent Viharadhipathi a party to the action, following his demise there is no impediment for his successor to be substituted in the capacity of the Viharadhipathi.

The District Court case DC SPL/138/16 sought to be appealed against, principally relates to the interference in the management and the affairs of the Seruwila Mangala Maha Viharaya. In Dheerananda Thero v. Ratnasara Thero 60 NLR 7 at page 9, it was observed that "the temple and the temporalities,… by operation of law, belong to the Viharadipathi of the temple." As the management, control and administration of the Seruwila Mangala Raja Maha Viharaya and its temporalities vests with the Viharadhipathi, an action relating to the interference with the management and affairs of the temple can hardly be said not to have an impact on the Viharadhipathi in his official capacity.

We are inclined to override the contention of the 1st Respondent that the 4th Defendant has never been a party affected or benefited by the issuance of the interim injunctions against the 1st to 3rd Defendants. For the limited purpose of substitution, we take heed of the fact that, on the face of it, it seems that the Petitioner has de facto discharged certain functions of the Viharadhipathi, following the demise of the 4th Defendant (as per the souvenir issued for the Katina Pinkama 2021 marked 'X1'). The present matter, arising from the said District Court of Muttur cases, will have an impact on the management and the affairs of the Seruwila Mangala Maha Viharaya. Therefore, as the outcome of the appeal before the Supreme Court will affect the Petitioner in the role of purported Viharadhipathi succeeding the 4th Defendant, and in light of the application for substitution made by the Petitioner it will serve the interests of justice to allow the Petitioner to represent his interest in the matter.

While it is not mandatory to make a substitution, whether to make a substitution or not is at the discretion of the court. This is either ex mero motu or by consideration of an application for substitution made by any person interested (vide Rule 38 of the Supreme Court Rules) As set out in Chandana Hewavitharane v. Urban Development Authority (supra) Rule 38 confers on the Court the discretion to determine who the proper person to be substituted is. As there is no identifiable impediment to the continuation of the matter by the impugned substitution, and in view of the application to be substituted made by the Petitioner, it is in the interests of justice to substitute the Petitioner in the place of the deceased 4th Defendant.

It is to be noted that the substitution of the present Petitioner is not in any way a judicial pronouncement on the legality or otherwise of the appointment to Viharadhipathiship of the Petitioner, Ven. Aludeniye Subodhi Thero.

Accordingly, the application for substitution as pleaded in the instant application is allowed and the Petitioner is directed to file an amended caption within 3 weeks from today, with notice to other parties.

ACHALA WENGAPPULI, J.

The Added-Respondent, one Selvarasa Selvarooban, was named and added as a party to the instant appeal by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants by way of an amended petition tendered to this Court, supported by an affidavit along with an amended caption. This amendment was made by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants only after this Court had granted leave on their original petition. Upon being noticed by this Court, the Added -Respondent was represented by the learned President's Counsel, who then moved his client be discharged from these proceedings. In his submissions, learned President's Counsel took up the position that the Added-Respondent was neither a party to the action before the original Court instituted by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, nor to the proceedings before the Civil Appellate High Court holden in Jaffna, initiated by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent, in invoking its revisionary jurisdiction. In these circumstances, it was contended by the Counsel that the Added-Respondent is not bound by either of the two Judgments referred to in the instant appeal. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have resisted the said application.

The three Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have instituted the instant action in 2012, before the District Court of Mallakam, regarding a dispute over the ownership of a passenger bus bearing number NPNA 0226. In their prayer to the Plaint, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have sought a declaration against the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent, who was the registered owner of the said passenger bus at that point of time, that the said passenger bus is held by him "in trust and benefit" of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants. They also sought the following reliefs in their prayer to the Plaint: -

i. an order of Court on the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent to "consent the Route Permit" in favour of the 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant, ii. an order of Court to handover the said passenger bus immediately to the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, and also

iii. an order restraining him from "selling, transferring, mortgaging the bus".

It was averred in the plaint of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants that the said passenger bus was purchased from the funds supplied by the 1st Plaintiff-Respondent- Appellant. The 2nd and 3rd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants are husband and wife respectively. The Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent is the father of the 3rd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant and a sibling of the 1st Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant. On the request of the 2nd and 3rd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, the 1st Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant, who now resides in Canada, had provided a sum of Rs. 3.5 Million on 18.03.2010, to proceed with the purchase of the disputed passenger bus. After the purchase, it was registered in the name of the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent allegedly "in trust". He had obtained a route permit in his name from the National Transport Commission to transport passengers between Kilinochchi and Mulangavil in that bus, while the 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant functioned as its driver.

When the 1st Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant demanded a sum of Rs. 2 Million from the capital he had provided to purchase the said passenger bus at a subsequent point of time, it is claimed by the 2nd and 3rd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants that they have secured a loan from the Commercial Leasing Company, in January 2011 with a view to pay back to the 1st Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant. They also claimed that since then, they themselves paid the monthly instalment of Rs. 60,000.00 to the said Leasing Company. In June 2011, a dispute arose between the 2nd and 3rd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants and the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent over a payment and the route permit of the passenger bus was cancelled by the authorities. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants also alleged that the said cancellation was done by the authorities on the instigation of the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent, and the said cancellation had resulted in depriving them of any income from plying passengers, on which they relied on to service the said loan instalment. After making a complaint to Kilinochchi Police in this regard, the disputing parties were directed to the Mediation Board. Since there was no settlement of the dispute, the instant action was instituted by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants as the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent had kept the bus at an undisclosed location and they feared that the latter might transfer the ownership of the disputed passenger bus to a third party.

In his answer, the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent had denied the claim of a trust and averred that it was on his request that the 1st Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant sent a sum of Rs. 3 Million to a relative in Puttlam as a loan to purchase the passenger bus. He further alleged that it is upon the failure of the 2nd and 3rd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants to repay the loan from the income derived from the bus, the 1st Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant requested him to take possession of same and sell it, in order to recover the capital. The Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent had thereupon pledged the vehicle to the Commercial Leasing Company and obtained a sum of Rs. 2 Million, which he deposited in the account of a relative, who was named by the 1st Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant, by way of a part settlement of the said loan of Rs. 3 Million and he himself had paid several instalments.

The Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent further alleged that the disputed passenger bus had been kept at an undisclosed location by the 2nd Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant and a police complaint was lodged. The bus was later recovered by the Police, concealed in a remote area bordering a forest in Achchipuram, Vavunia.

The parties proceeded to trial and presented evidence with no trial issues settled between them. At the conclusion of the trial, the learned District Judge, after fixing the date for the Judgment, noted that there were no issues settled between the parties. The trial Court had thereafter delivered its Judgment on 10.03.2016, after parties have agreed on the trial issues at that late stage. The Judgment was delivered in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants and the Court granted the declaration that the said passenger bus is held by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent in trust and directed him to consent for the transfer of Route Permit. The Court also ordered the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent to hand over the disputed passenger bus to the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants.

The Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent did not prefer an appeal against the said Judgment, instead he had opted to invoke revisionary jurisdiction of the Civil Appellate High Court in Jaffna, by filing application No. Revision/65/2016, on 23.05.2016. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have resisted the said revision application, and the appellate Court, after an inquiry had delivered its order on 12.10.2016 setting aside the Judgment of the District Court. The interference to the Judgment of the trial Court by the appellate Court was made on the basis that the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have averred in their Plaint of a repayment of Rs. 2 Million made by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent to the 1st Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant and therefore the disputed vehicle is not a trust property. The appellate Court also ruled that since the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent had mortgaged the passenger bus to the Commercial Leasing Company, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants should have added that Company as a necessary party to their action. However, there was no attempt made by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants to name that party to the proceedings before this Court.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have thereafter sought Leave to Appeal from this Court against the said order of the Civil Appellate High Court, by way of a petition and affidavit tendered to the Registry on 24.11.2016. This Court, having heard the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants as well as the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent on 05.10.2018, had decided to grant Leave to Appeal to the questions of Law, as set out in paragraphs 39(i), (ii), (iii) and (iv) of the said Petition, which have been formulated mainly on the existence of a trust. The determination on these several questions of Law will have to be made only after hearing the parties on them at a subsequent stage and at this point of time, this Court concerns itself only with the application of the Added-Respondent.

The reason attributed by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, in adding the Added-Respondent to these proceedings, was provided by way of a motion tendered to this Court for the first time on 11.10.2017. It was stated therein that the Added-Respondent, being the "current owner of the bus", should be added as a party. They sought permission to amend the petition and as well as its caption and also moved to bring the "fraudulent" act committed by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent to the notice of this Court, in transferring his ownership to the Added-Respondent, pending appeal. They also claimed in the said motion that if the present owner is not added as a Respondent, an "irremediable loss" would be caused to them, as instituting a fresh action against the said Added-Respondent is not feasible.

It is only on 11.10.2017, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have brought the fact of transferring the ownership of the disputed passenger bus by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent to the Added-Respondent to the notice of this Court for the first time, and that too by way of a motion. In the said motion, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants alleged that the ownership of the passenger bus had been transferred in favour of Selvarasa Selvarooban by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent on 25.11.2016 and therefore sought permission of Court to add him as a "necessary party" to the appeal, in order to "effectually and completely adjudicate the dispute". The application of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants was repeated in the 2nd motion filed on 03.05.2018, filing of which apparently was necessitated as the 1st motion was misplaced. The 3rd motion by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants was also on the same lines. It had been tendered to Court on 10.10.2018. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, for the fourth time filed a similar motion dated 26.11.2018, and this time, in addition to the motion, they have tendered an amended petition and an affidavit, along with an amended caption with the said Selvarasa Selvarooban named therein as an Added-Respondent, in relation to their appeal.

This Court, having heard submissions of the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff- Respondent-Appellants in support of her said 4th motion and, in the absence of any objections by the Defendant-Petitioner-

Respondent, had issued notice on the Added-Respondent, upon acceptance of the said amended petition and caption. The Added-Respondent was represented by his Counsel on the notice returnable date i.e. 22.05.2019. He resisted being added as a party to the instant appeal and sought to discharge him from the proceedings. The inquiry on the application of the Added-Respondent seeking to discharge himself was taken up by this Court on 22.02.2022.

It was contended on behalf of the Added-Respondent by the learned President's Counsel that Selvarasa Selvarooban is not a party to the action before the District Court or to the proceedings before the Civil Appellate High Court and hence he had not been heard by any of the Courts below. It was also contended that, in the absence of a provision enabling an addition of a party during pendency of an appeal, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have no legal basis to add the Added-Respondent as a party at this late stage of the proceedings. The Learned President's Counsel relied on the reasoning of the Judgment of Fernando v De Silva & Others (2000) 3 Sri L.R. 29, in support of his contention that even at the stage of execution of a decree of the original Court, an application to add a party would not be entertained.

In her reply, learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants had submitted that her clients have lost their only source of income derived by plying passengers for the last five years, primarily due to fraudulent act of the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent and therefore if the Added-Respondent is not made a party to the instant appeal, the purpose of seeking a determination of their appeal by this Court would be rendered futile. She alleged that the Defendant-

Petitioner-Respondent did not execute decree in the original Court and did not even make an application to this Court for writ pending appeal in his failure to deposit of cost. As such, it was contended that the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent is in clear violation of the applicable procedural Laws and guilty of abuse of process to the extent of committing contempt of Court. She had cited a long string of judicial precedents as found in Sarkar* on *Code of Civil Procedure, 12th Ed, which dealt with judicial decisions that were pronounced in relation to addition of parties in that jurisdiction and particularly invited our attention to the following text, which states (at p. 306):

> " Where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate or that it is necessary to base the decision of the Court on the later circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties , it is incumbent on the Court to take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and to mold its decree according to the circumstances as they stand at the time the decree is made."

She also invited this Court to exercise its inherent powers, citing Sarkar, where it is stated (at p. 900) "section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code is an enabling provision by virtue of which inherent powers have been vested with the Court not to feel helpless in such circumstances. But to administer substantial justice, Court can use its own inherent power to fill up the lacunae left by the legislature while enacting law or where the Legislature is unable to foresee any circumstances which may arise in a particular case."

In view of the above contentions, I shall now proceed to consider the application of the learned President's Counsel for the Added-Respondent.

Admittedly the Added-Respondent is named as a party for the first-time pending determination of the appeal of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants and after leave was granted. He was not a party to the litigation before the District Court nor to the proceedings held before the Civil Appellate High Court, as correctly highlighted by the learned President's Counsel.

The submissions of the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, in resisting the application of the Added-Respondent, was primarily presented on the principles that are embodied in the statutory provisions contained in section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code. Of the several local judicial precedents that were referred to in her submissions, I find that all of them have been decided on the principles of Law that contain in the said statutory provision. The long list of quotations cited from Sarkar too relates to a similar statutory provision that govern the procedure of addition of parties before the original Courts, in the neighbouring jurisdiction of India.

Of course, the relevant statutory provision that provided for addition of a party to a civil dispute, pending adjudication before the District Court, is found in section 18 of our Civil Procedure Code. Purpose of such an addition of a party, as stated in the section, is to enable the Court to effectually and completely adjudicate upon all the questions involved in that action. A considerable body of judicial precedents that is available on this topic indicate that the superior Courts have considered the statutory provisions contained in the said section in a multitude of factual situations and had laid down applicable principles that govern the discretion of a Court, when such an application is made. The oft quoted Judgment of this Court, Arumugam Coomaraswamy v Andiris Appuhamy and Others (1985) 2 Sri L.R. 219, where Ranasinghe J (as he was then) favoured the wider construction of the statutory provisions of the applicable Law, in addition of parties. But the application of these principles is limited to addition of parties in the original Courts and that too before the Judgment is pronounced.

The Judgment of Fernando v De Silva & Others (2000) 3 Sri L.R. 29 considered the objection raised by an added respondent Company, when it was named as a party to the appeal by the Plaintiff. The appeal was preferred by the plaintiff in seeking to challenge the trial Court's decision, by which it had refused to add the said respondent Company as an added party at the stage of execution of writ. In delivering the judgment, de Z Gunawardene J stated (at p. 32) that "… no one can be added as a party to the action after Judgment had been entered, one way or the other. Nothing more need be said in regard to this question as it is so well known." A similar view was taken in the Judgment of Ameen v Salahudeen & Others (1998) 3 Sri L.R. 185, where Wigneswaran J had determined the validity of an order made under section 18 by the District Court, in which an outsider was admitted as an intervenient party, after the said Court had entered its decree. His Lordship, following the ratio of the judgments of Cooray v Gaffar – (CA 92/80 DC Panadura (552) CAM 18.2.1983), Pitisinghe v. Ratnaweera 62 NLR 572, Norris v. Charles 63 NLR 510 and Richford Trading Company v. The Miyanawita Estates Co., Ltd. and another (CA 790/84 DC Colombo 47303RE - CAM 13.9.1985) stated (at p. 190) "… allowing the addition of the petitioner-respondent as a necessary party after decree was entered, was ex facie bad in law and therefore set it aside and declare void all steps taken by Court based on that order as from the time of such order."

It is relevant to note that the Added-Respondent was added as a party by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants not at the time filing of the application in this Court seeking Leave to Appeal, but at the hearing stage of the appeal of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, and even after the question of granting of leave was decided. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, in seeking Leave to Appeal against the Judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court, have invoked the provisions of section 5C (1) of the High Court of the Provinces (Special Provisions) (Amendment) Act No. 54 of 2006, which enables a party to appeal to this Court directly against any Judgment, decree or order pronounced or entered by a High Court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction granted by section 5A of the said Act.

Once its jurisdiction is invoked, proceedings before this Court are governed by the procedure as set out in the Rules of the Supreme Court 1990. In setting out the procedure in which a party could seek Special Leave as well as Leave to Appeal from this Court, both Rules 4 and 25(8) impose a mandatory requirement by insisting on the requirement that "all parties in whose favour the Judgment or order complained against was delivered, or adversely to whom such appeal is preferred" shall be named as respondents.

It appears from the wording of both these Rules that naming of respondents should be made at the time of lodgment of such an application, notice of appeal or the petition of appeal, as the case may be. Rule 4 refers to "every such application", indicating that it relates to applications seeking Special Leave to Appeal as contemplated by Rule No. 2, while Rule 28(5) also indicates that "every such petition of appeal and notice of appeal" and thus relates to the appeals and notices of appeal as referred to in Rule 28(2). In my view, both these Rules, in addition to imposing a requirement of naming of "all parties in whose favour the Judgment or order complained against was delivered, or adversely to whom such appeal is preferred" as respondents at the time of invocation of appellate jurisdiction of this Court, have also included another description of respondents, when it stated that such appeal or application shall also name parties "whose interest may be adversely affected by the success of the appeal".

This Court in the Judgment of Ibrahim v Nadarajah (1991) 1 Sri L.R. 131, held that "It has always, therefore, been the law that it is necessary for the proper constitution of an appeal that all parties who may be adversely affected by the result of the appeal should be made parties and, unless they are, the petition of appeal should be rejected." This was an instance where the appellant had failed to name a party to the proceedings before lower Court as a respondent in the appellate proceedings before this Court. It should be noted that Amerasinghe J had used the description "all parties who may be adversely affected by the result of the appeal" whereas the Rules refer to the description of such a party "whose interest may be adversely affected by the success of the appeal." In view of this description, it is doubtful whether the Added-Respondent could be termed as such a party.

The said pronouncement by Amerasinghe J was re-affirmed in Senanayake v Attorney General & Another (2010) 1 Sri L.R. 149 as it was stated by Bandaranayake J (as she then was) that "In terms of the Supreme Court Rules, for the purpose of proper constitution of an appeal, it is vital that all parties, who may be adversely affected by the result of the appeal should be made parties." Thus, the said pronouncement implies that the party who may be adversely affected by the result of the appeal, should be named as a party to the proceedings before this Court, at the stage of invocation of its appellate jurisdiction. In Senanayake v Attorney General & Another (ibid), this Court held that the Appellant had failed to name the Director-General of the Commission to Investigate Allegations of Bribery and Corruption, who is a necessary party to the appeal, since it was he who had instituted proceedings in the original Court as the complainant. The Court then proceeded to dismiss the said appeal for non-compliance of the Supreme Court Rules.

In the instant appeal, as already noted, the addition was made by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants while their appeal was pending before this Court, and after a determination of their rights was made by the High Court of Civil Appeal in the exercise of its revisionary jurisdiction. It is also noted that there is no express provision of Law or a Rule which enables an applicant or an appellant to name a total stranger as a party, particularly in mid-stream of the appellate proceedings that are already instituted and continuing before this Court. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have sought to justify their action of naming a party in mid-stream by advancing the contention that, in the absence of a specific provision of Law that prohibits addition of parties pending appeal before this Court, it should not refuse to make the proposed addition of a party necessary in order to facilitate a complete adjudication of the dispute presented before the District Court.

A similar contention was advanced before this Court by Counsel in Ramasamy v Soundarajan & Others (SC Appeal No. 199/17 – decided on 24.02.2022) to defend the decision of the Civil Appellate High Court in Kandy, allowing an intervention of a party during appellate proceedings before that Court. Rejecting the said contention, Amarasekera J stated in view of the statutory provisions contained in section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code, "it must be stated here that what is expressly stated excluded others".

In relation to the instant appeal, it is relevant to note that in the absence of a direct appeal that had been preferred by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent there was no continuation of the litigation process that had proceeded before the District Court beyond the delivery of the Judgment by that Court in favour of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants. Instead, he had opted to invoke supervisory jurisdiction conferred on the High Court of Civil Appeal seeking its intervention to set aside that Judgment. In these circumstances, the continuality of the process of litigation was interrupted. Thereupon, with the invocation of revisionary jurisdiction, it had assumed the character of different process of litigation between the parties named therein. The revisionary jurisdiction of the High Court of Civil Appeal is a discretionary remedy as opposed to a right to appeal and there must be exceptional circumstances, in order to trigger in the process of supervisory jurisdiction of the High Court of Civil Appeal. Thus, in such circumstances the question of addition of parties to the original action does not arise and the statutory provisions, namely section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code, as referred to by the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants on that point does not provide any assistance to the determination of the contentious issue raised before this Court.

Even the question is whether the added party as a necessary party to the revision application filed before the High Court of Civil Appeal, the outcome of which is now being challenged in the instant appeal should be answered in the negative since the complaint of the illegality and the irregularity of the Judgment of the original Court by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent had nothing to do with the Added-Respondent and therefore he is not a necessary party to be named in the said revision application. This is because as far as the Judgment of this Court (which will have to be pronounced only after hearing the appeal) is concerned the Added -Respondent cannot be considered as a party in whose favour the Judgment or order complained against was delivered, or adversely to whom such appeal is preferred.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, in fact made no endeavour to justify their naming of the Added-Respondent in mid-stream in the instant appeal by referring to any statutory provision of Law or a Rule. They also made no endeavour to impress this Court that the addition of the Added-Respondent was necessary because he qualifies to be treated as a party "whose interest may be adversely affected by the success of the appeal". Instead, the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants had chosen to harp on the complaint that if the Added-Respondent is not added, even if their appeal ended up in success, it is their interests that would be adversely affected and not that of the Added-Respondent.

It was already noted that the learned President's Counsel's contention is that the Added-Respondent was not a party to the proceedings before the District Court and the Civil Appellate High Court. The Added-Respondent had acquired ownership to the disputed passenger bus from its duly registered owner, the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent, who had a Judgment of an appellate Court in his favour at that point of time. There was no prohibition, lien, caveat, or stay order preventing the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent to transfer ownership of that bus, he held in his name. This particular transaction had taken place on 25.11.2016. The delivery of the Judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court was made on 12.10.2016. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have sought leave from this Court against the said Judgment by their petition dated 21.11.2016 and this Court issued notice on the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent, that the said application is listed for support on 13.02.2017.

The said Notice was dispatched to the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent on 28.11.2016 informing that the matter is listed for support on 13.02.2017. By then, the said transfer of the ownership of the disputed passenger bus in favour of the Added-Respondent had already been completed. Since, this transfer had taken place on 25.11.2016, it is doubtful whether the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent was aware of the fact that the instant application was pending before this Court before making the said transfer. Thus, I am unable to accept the claim that there had been an abuse of process by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent. It also must be noted that the previous owner of the said passenger bus, as per the Certificate of Registration ("X"), was Commercial Leasing and Finance PLC and not the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent. There was no explanation as to this change of ownership from the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent to that Company. However, the explanation for the delayed inclusion of the said Added-Respondent to the instant proceedings by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants is that they learnt about this transfer only around June 2017 and therefore have not "reasonably foreseen" such a turn of events. This claim cannot be accepted. In their Plaint filed before the District Court, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants averred that "… there are possibilities of transferring the bus to another person" by the Defendant-Petitioner- Respondent. This averment clearly indicates that the Plaintiff- Respondent-Appellants had already foreseen the adoption of such a course of action by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent when they instituted the original action and in fact they prayed for, in the interim, an order of Court to prevent such a transfer taking place.

This is not a situation in which the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants had failed to name a necessary party to the action they instituted against the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent or to have failed to add the Added-Respondent as a party, in compliance of section 18 of the Civil Procedure Code, before the trial Court pronounced its Judgment. The inclusion of Added-Respondent as a party in mid-stream of the appeal proceedings in this Court is a direct consequence of him acquiring ownership of the passenger bus, over which the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants and the Defendant-Petitioner- Respondent are currently engaged in a process of litigation that had reached its final phase. It is settled Law that the rights of the parties are decided as at the date of action. When the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants instituted action, the registered owner was the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent and he is bound by the Judgment delivered against him by the trial Court, until it was set aside by the Civil Appellate High Court. The entitlement of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants will finally be decided by this Court after hearing of their appeal, where the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent is a party.

The inherent powers of a Court should not be used to deny the Added Respondent's right to defend against allegation of fraud made by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants before an original Court, as the allegation of fraud is based on facts and the former had no opportunity to challenge such allegations and to place his side of the narration. If the actions of the Added-Respondent are violative of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellant's rights, they could sue the former on that cause of action.

In the absence of any specific Rule in the Supreme Court Rules as to make an addition of a party in mid-stream of appellate proceedings before this Court, a question necessarily arises whether cannot this Court hear a party, who is not originally a party to the proceedings, under any circumstances, even if it is of the view that such a party should be afforded an opportunity to be heard.

The judgment of Bandaranaike v Jagathsena & Others (1984) 2 Sri L.R. 397, is an instance where this Court, in addition to dealing with several other important areas of Law, also dealt with a situation where a party, who was originally not a party to the appellate proceedings before the Court of Appeal but was subsequently allowed to intervene into and had sought leave to appeal from this Court against the Judgment of that Court. A preliminary objection was raised before this Court challenging the petitioner's locus standi to seek review of the Judgment of the Court of Appeal on the basis that she was neither an appellant nor a respondent to the appellate proceedings. Colin-Thome J, rejecting the said preliminary objection stated thus (at p. 406);

> "Under Article 128 (2) the Supreme Court has a wide discretion to grant special leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment of the Court of Appeal where in the opinion of the Supreme Court, the case or matter is fit for review by the Supreme Court. Under Article 128 (2) you do not have to be a party in the original case."

His Lordship further stated that his view is strengthened on an examination of Article 134 (2) and (3) of the Constitution, as Article 134(2) provides that "The Supreme Court may in its discretion grant to any other person or his legal representative such hearing as may appear to the Court to be necessary in the exercise of its jurisdiction under this Chapter." Thus, a discretion is conferred upon this Court by Article 134(3), enabling it to hear any party if it "appear to the Court to be necessary in the exercise of its jurisdiction under this Chapter." But in relation to the instant matter, I am not inclined use that discretion to prejudice the rights of the Added-Respondent by adding him as a party at this stage of the proceedings and thereby denying him of an opportunity to place evidence before the original Court and also to cross-examine the opposite party in relation to his defenses that could be taken by him, as contemplated in sections 65, 66, 68 and 98 of the Trusts Ordinance.

Admittedly the primary reason for the addition of the Added-Respondent was due to the fact of him becoming the registered owner of the disputed passenger bus. At first glance, the reason to add the Added-Respondent could be justified since the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants had no hand in the said transfer and it was done without their knowledge. They also claim that such a transfer was not foreseen by them.

But if one were to inquire into the relevant attendant circumstances, one cannot help but to note that it is the lackadaisical approach of the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants that had mainly contributed to the present state of affairs, in which the addition of the Added-Respondent was moved for, in order to have the current owner of the passenger bus added as a party. I have already referred to the fact that this eventuality had already been foreseen by the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants at the time of institution of their action but did nothing to secure their rights after the trial Court pronounced its Judgment in their favour.

In their Plaint, they have averred their apprehension of the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent transferring ownership of the disputed passenger bus to a third party. Perhaps, it is in view of this apprehension, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have sought for an order of Court on the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent to immediately hand over the said vehicle to them. After trial, the District Court of Mallakam, by its judgment dated 10.03.2016, had granted that very relief.

The Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent had moved the Civil Appellate High Court holden in Jaffna seeking to set aside the said Judgment not by invoking its appellate jurisdiction but by invoking revisionary jurisdiction and tendered his petition to the appellate Court on 23.05.2016. The application was supported on 14.06.2016 and only on that day the appellate Court had made order staying further proceedings before the trial Court. In the absence of a Notice of Appeal that had been tendered within the stipulated time period, there was sufficient time for the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants to seek execution of the Judgment, which granted them the substantial relief and particularly the custody of the passenger bus. If there was realistic threat of transferring the "trust property" to a third party, it is reasonable to expect the Judgment Creditor to move Court for the issuance of Writ of Execution. But the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, having had a Judgment in their favour in an action in which they themselves specifically sought delivery of property, did not take any steps to execute Decree, even in the absence of any indication to appellate jurisdiction being invoked by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent.

Strangely, the learned Counsel who represented the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants before this Court alleged that it was the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent who had failed to execute the Writ. She did not elaborate as to how the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent could move Court to execute the Writ, that had been issued under the Judgment and Decree against him.

The order of the Civil Appellate High Court was delivered on 12.10.2016, on the said revision application by the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent, and thereby the appellate Court had set aside the Judgment of the trial Court. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants in addition to seeking Leave to Appeal from this Court, also sought interim relief by way of staying all proceedings relating to the decree in terms of the Judgment of the Civil Appellate High Court. After the relevant proceedings were translated into English, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants supported their application on 05.10.2018 and this Court had granted Leave on four questions of Law. But the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants have not pursued with their application for interim relief at that point of time and appears to have abandoned their claim on interim relief.

In relation to the instant appeal, it must be observed that this is not a situation where the Added-Respondent sought intervention into the appellate proceedings before this Court as a party for the first time under provisions of Article 134(3) seeking to exercise discretion of Court that he be heard. In fact, he resists the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants' act of naming him as an Added-Respondent to the proceedings before this Court.

Thus, it would appear from the considerations referred to in the preceding paragraphs that the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants, despite entertaining an apprehension that the Defendant-Petitioner-Respondent would transfer ownership of the disputed passenger bus to a third party, they did not diligently pursue available legal remedies to prevent such a transfer taking place. The Added-Respondent clearly is not a party to the action before the District Court or to the proceedings before the Civil Appellate High Court and therefore not bound by any of the two Judgments. In the circumstances, I am of the view that the Added-Respondent is not a party "whose interests may be adversely affected by the success of the appeal" as he himself asserts and therefore need not be heard in determining the instant appeal. In the circumstances, having asked the question whether it is necessary to hear the Added-Respondent, as Samarakoon CJ did in Bandaranaike v Jagathsena & Others (supra), I would answer same in the negative.

In view of the reasoning enumerated above, the application of the learned President's Counsel for the Added-Respondent seeking to discharge him from these proceedings should succeed. Therefore, the Added-Respondent is discharged forthwith from these proceedings and, if they so whish, the Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants may prosecute their appeal, on the Questions of Law that had already been formulated by this Court.

The application of the Added-Respondent is accordingly allowed, and he is discharged forthwith from these proceedings. The Plaintiff-Respondent-Appellants are directed to tender an amended caption in terms of this order along with necessary amendments to the amended petition dated 26.11.2018 within a period of four weeks from the pronouncement of this order.

I make no order as to costs.

Judgement

Aluwihare, P.C., J

The Defendant-Appellant-Petitioner-Appellant (hereinafter the Defendant) sought Leave to Appeal against the Judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of Kandy, which upheld the Judgment of the District Court of Kandy.

The Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (hereinafter the Plaintiff) filed action in the District Court of Kandy under Chapter LIII of the Civil Procedure Code to recover a liquidated sum of Rs. 184, 000 /- on a promissory note together with a further sum of Rs. 36, 800 /- and legal interest until the due execution of the decree. Summons were issued to the Defendant and the Defendant applied to court by way of a petition and affidavit for leave to appear and defend the action. The District Court allowed the Defendant to file an answer upon furnishing security and the Defendant sought to dismiss the action.

The Defendant by way of his answer admitted that the money-transaction took place but denied placing the signature on the Promissory Note and Deed No. 958 and contended that the signatures are forgeries. Defendant sought by way of a prayer to the Answer an order that the impugned promissory note be forwarded to the Examiner of Questioned Documents (hereinafter the EQD) for examination and a report to be tendered to Court. The contention of the Plaintiff on the other hand was that the Defendant placed his signature on the Promissory Note as well as the Deed No. 958 on the same day. The Deed was for an unrelated transaction and Hapugaskuburegedara Samel was a witness for both transactions.

To issue a Commission on the EQD sample signatures were tendered before the Registrar of the Court by the Defendant on 15.09.2006 but the EQD by a letter dated 27.11.2006 informed the Learned District Judge that the sample signatures were dissimilar from the document in question and requested the signatures of the Defendant in the ordinary course of affairs. Thereafter the Defendant provided the sample signatures along with amended draft Commission papers by way of a Motion dated 29.05.2007. The application was allowed by the Learned District Judge. Subsequently, it was reported that Deed No. 958 had been misplaced which was kept at the Registry for safekeeping and the Commission on the EQD was also not forthcoming. Eventually the document was found in the custody of the Registry. It seems owing to the administrative lapses and the Defendant's conduct a conclusive Commission of the EQD was unavailable.

On 27.08.2012 as the Defendant was absent and unrepresented, the case was fixed for ex-parte trial against the Defendant and the Plaintiff closed his case on that day. The Defendant's contention is that he was unable to retain representation as Attorneys- at- Law in his locality that he approached, refused to take up the matter due to the concerns of a fraudulent Deed executed by a member of the legal fraternity. The Learned District Judge, after considering the evidence, entered judgement in favour of the Plaintiff. The Learned District Judge, came to this conclusion mainly based on the evidence provided by the witness Samel and based on Deed No.958, which was a duly registered instrument in the Land Registry, hence held that the Promissory Note was genuine and was duly presented for payment (vide p. 166 to 168 of the Brief).

The Defendant being aggrieved by the said Judgement preferred an Appeal to the Provincial High Court of Kandy. The Learned Judges of the High Court upheld the judgement of the District Court by judgment dated 02.03.2016.

Consequently, the Defendant filed a Leave to Appeal application to this Court and the Court granted leave on 26.07.2016 for the following questions of law set out in sub-paragraphs (b) and (c) of paragraph 18 of the Petition of the Defendant;

(1) Did the High Court err in upholding the conclusion of the District Court that the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent has satisfactorily proved that a notice of dishonour has been given in respect of an action based on a Promissory note?

(2) Did the High Court err in upholding the conclusion of the District Court that the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent has complied with the mandatory requirements of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance to succeed in enforcing a Promissory note?

Before considering the merits of the Defendant's case I will consider the preliminary objection raised by the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff contends that the Defendant was not entitled to prefer this appeal to this Court as the Defendant had not moved to have the ex-parte judgement of the District Court set aside in terms of Section 84 of the Civil Procedure Code and that in terms of Section 88(1) no appeal lies against any judgement entered upon default .

It was argued that as per Section 88(1) of the Civil Procedure Code an ex-parte judgement is not appealable and the party in default must apply against the judgement in the same Court for an order setting aside judgment. As held by His Lordship Justice Samayawardhena in Geethika Sudhirani Samaraweera v Uduruwangala Gedarage Charaka SC/APPEAL/78/2021 (S.C Minutes 21.11.2022) at p. 6;

"In terms of section 88(1) 'No appeal shall lie against any judgment entered upon default.' This means a final appeal cannot be filed from an ex parte judgment entered against a defendant for failure to file answer or for want of appearance of the defendant on the trial date. A final appeal also cannot be filed from a judgment entered against a plaintiff for want of appearance on the trial date. In such a situation, if the defaulter is the defendant an application under section 86(2) or if the defaulter is the plaintiff an application under section 87(3) shall first be made to purge the default before contesting the case of the opposite party on the merits."

However, as stated earlier, the Plaintiff for reasons best known for her never took up this objection when the matter was argued before the High Court of Civil Appeals and chose to participate in the proceedings before it.

This Court is now called upon to consider the impugned judgement of the High Court of Civil Appeals which was an inter-parte proceeding. When this matter was supported for leave to proceed, neither the preliminary objection taken at the outset nor did the Defendant- Respondent raise a question of law on this point when the matter was supported.

In my view, the failure to object to the jurisdiction of the Provincial High Court amounts to a waiver and the Plaintiff is estopped by their conduct. It was held in Nawinna Kottage Dona Lalitha Padmini v. N.K.D. Pradeepa Nishanthi Kumari SC/HC/CA/LA No. 134/2016 (S.C Minutes 07.09.2018) that a party that failed to object to an appeal filed out of time amounts to waiver of such objections. It was held by His Lordship Priyantha Jayawardena at p.13 that;

"The Petitioners raised the time bar objection for the first time in the Supreme Court. Therefore, it must be considered if the Petitioners are estopped by their conduct from raising the time bar objection before the Supreme Court.

According to C.D. Field's 'Law relating to estoppel' revised by Gopal S. Chaturvedi, 3rd Ed, page 166;

'In order to constitute abandonment or waiver, it must be a voluntary act on the part of the person possessing the rights. Acquiescence or standing by when there is a duty to speak or assert a right creates an estoppel. In such cases knowledge of the act must be brought by the acquiescing party. Acquiescence does not mean simply an intelligent consent, but may be implied if a person is content not to oppose irregular acts which he knows are being done.'

Therefore, waiver of an objection by a party aggrieved does not afford them the right to raise such objection at a later stage, as they are estopped by their prior conduct."

Similarly, once the Plaintiff failed to object to the jurisdiction of the Provincial High Court, the Plaintiff is estopped. For the aforementioned reasons I shall proceed to consider the questions of law on which leave to appeal was granted without considering the preliminary objection.

The only contention of the Defendant was that a notice of dishonour was not given by the Plaintiff within a reasonable period of time. The Defendant, however, did not assert this position in the District Court or the High Court and took up the position for the first time before this Court.

A promissory note is defined in Section 85(1) of the Bills of exchange Ordinance as;

"A promissory note is an unconditional promise in writing made by one person to another signed by the maker, engaging to pay, on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money, to, or to the order of, a specified person or to bearer."

The principal differences of a promissory note from other bills as stated by William and Richard Hedley "Bill of Exchange and Bankers Documentary Credits" (4th edn at p. 148) is that

"The basic difference between a promissory note and any other bills is that a note is a promise by the maker to pay, whereas an ordinary bill is an order to someone else (that is the drawee) to pay."

Meanwhile, the object of notice of dishonour is to prevent prejudice to the drawer or indorser, as stated in "Byles on Bills of Exchange and Cheques" (27th Edition at page155);

"The object of notice is to inform the party, to whom notice is given that the holder or the party giving notice looks to him for payment. The rationale being that, where the bill has not been accepted or paid the drawer or indorser will be prejudiced if no such notice is given. There is no need though for the drawer or indorser to show prejudice, since the requirement to give notice is an absolute one"

The requirement to give a notice of dishonour is stipulated in Section 48 of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance. The Section provides;

"Subject to the provisions of this Ordinance, when a bill has been dishonoured by non-acceptance or by non-payment, notice of dishonour must be given to the drawer and each indorser, and any drawer or indorser to whom such notice is not given is discharged:

Provided that-

(a) where a bill is dishonoured by non-acceptance, and notice of dishonour is not given, the rights of a holder in due course subsequently to the omission, shall not be prejudiced by the omission;

(b) where a bill is dishonoured by non-acceptance and due notice of dishonour is given, it shall not be necessary to give notice of a subsequent dishonour by non-payment unless the bill shall in the meantime have been accepted."

Therefore, it is explicit that, as in the case of dishonour by non-acceptance, so also in that of dishonour by non-payment, notice of dishonour must be given to the drawer and each indorser; otherwise, the drawer or any indorser to whom such notice is not given is discharged. However, in certain circumstances a party can be excused from providing a notice. Section 50(2) of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance provides that a notice can be dispensed with if;

"Notice of dishonour is dispensed with -

(a) When, after the exercise of reasonable diligence, notice as required by this Ordinance cannot be given to or does not reach the drawer or indorser sought to be charged ;

(b) By waiver express or implied. Notice of dishonour may be waived before the time of giving notice has arrived, or after the omission to give due notice ;

(c) As regards the drawer in the following cases, namely -

(i) where drawer and drawee are the same person,

(ii) where the drawee is a fictitious person or a person not having capacity to contract,

(iii) where the drawer is the person to whom the bill is presented for payment,

(iv) where the drawee or acceptor is as between himself and the drawer under no obligation to accept or pay the bill,

(v) where the drawer has countermanded payment;

(d) As regards the indorser in the following cases, namely -

(i) where the drawee is a fictitious person or a person not having capacity to contract, and the indorser was aware of the fact at the time he indorsed the bill,

(ii) where the indorser is the person to whom the bill is presented for payment,

(iii) where the bill was accepted or made for his accommodation"

A notice of dishonour can be dispensed when the drawee and the drawer are the same person. When the drawer is also the drawee and the drawee refuses payment obviously the drawer will already know, hence there is no need to give notice of dishonour. That situation corresponds where a promissory note is made between the maker of the note and another. In this regard, "Byles on Bills of Exchange and Cheques" (27th Edition at page178) states;

"As set out in S.5(2) of the 1882 Act where in a bill the drawee and the drawer are the same person the holder may treat the instrument either as a bill or as a note. If the holder elects to treat the instrument as a bill there is no reason why he should be given notice of dishonour, in his capacity as drawer, since, in his capacity as drawee, he is responsible for the non-acceptance or non-payment of the bill. Thus, notice is expressly dispensed with (Equally no notice need be given if the instrument is treated as a note, since the person is the maker of the note and thereby corresponds with the acceptor of a bill, to whom notice need not be given)"

The above position also corresponds under the Bills of Exchange Ordinance. As stated in Section 91(2);

"In applying those provisions the maker of a note shall be deemed to correspond with the acceptor of a bill, and the first indorser of a note shall be deemed to correspond with the drawer of an accepted bill payable to drawer's order"

Hence, the contention of the Defendant is without merit as there is no requirement to provide a notice of dishonor for a promissory note. The Defendant heavily relied on Senanayake v Abdul Cader 74 N.L.R. 255 and Ceylon Estate Agency v De Alwis 70 N.L.R 30. The case of Senanayake [supra] was an action upon a cheque where no notice of dishonour was averred in the plaint and the Court dismissed the action owing to the defect. However, that judgment is not applicable to the instant appeal since the present action is upon a promissory note and not a cheque. In Ceylon Estate Agency [supra], a notice of dishonour was not given in an action for a promissory note and the Court dismissed the cause of action owing to the defect. That judgement can be distinguished from the present appeal since the Court was concerned with notice to the indorser of the note. His Lordship Justice L.B. De Silva in Ceylon Estate Agency at page 39 stated;

"We hold that in an action on a promissory note where presentment for payment is necessary, to make the maker and indorsers liable, it is a necessary averment in the plaint that the promissory note was duly presented for payment and was dishonoured. If there was any excuse for not presenting the promissory note for payment, such excuse should be pleaded. As against the indorsers, the plaint must further aver that notice of dishonour was given to them, unless there was an excuse for not giving such notice, when such excuse should be pleaded. Even if the court is to take a liberal view of the pleadings, the defect should at least be cured by raising the appropriate issues on these matters unless these facts are admitted by the defendants."

In the present case the Defendant is the maker of the note and not the indorser, hence the judgement of Ceylon Estate Agency is not applicable.

In any event, I am of the view that the Defendant was provided with sufficient notice. The Defendant admits the receipt of a Letter of Demand dated 22.06.2003 (vide. Admissions of the Parties p. 90 of the Brief marked 'E'). However, the Defendant contends that the said Letter of Demand was not marked at the trial by the Plaintiff because the said Letter of Demand was misplaced, and the Learned Judge could not evaluate or analyze the contents. Further, it was stated by the Defendant that contents of the documents cannot be proved by oral evidence as per Section 59 of the Evidence Ordinance (as amended). It was also argued by the Defendant that Section 49(5) of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance requires the notice of dishonor to sufficiently identify the bill and intimate the bill was dishonored by non-acceptance or non-payment. In the absence of the said Letter of Demand, the Defendant contends that Section 49(5) of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance, is not complied with by the Plaintiff.

As held by His Lordship Justice Nawaz in T.M Tennakoon v Seemitha Nuwara Eliya District Sakasuruwam and Naya Ganudenu Samupakara Samithiya C.A. Case No. 751/2000 (F) (C.A Minutes 20.05.2016) at p. 7 a notice of dishonor must be distinguished from a Letter of Demand.

"Notice of dishonor must be distinguished from a 'Letter of Demand'. It is necessary to make a demand by way of a 'Letter of Demand' but it is equally necessary to give notice of dishonour when a cheque is dishonoured. Section 47 (2) of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance enacts:

'Subject to the provisions of the Ordinance, when a bill is dishonoured by non~payment, an immediate right of recourse against the drawer and indorsers accrues to the holder.'

Section 48 of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance stipulates the requirement for a notice of dishonor. This provision contains not only the requirement of a notice of dishonour but also the effect of not giving such notice."

Hence, it is apparent that a Letter of Demand per say would not amount to a notice of dishonour unless the necessary requirements of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance are complied with by a plaintiff. However, it was contended by the Plaintiff that she met the Defendant multiple times and attempted to present the note for payment, but the Defendant refused (vide proceedings on 25.08.2006, p. 98 of the Brief). The Defendant did not deny this position nor was it controverted by any other evidence. The Plaintiff states that this amounts to a sufficient notice of dishonour communicated by personal communication. I am inclined to agree with this view.

Section 49(5) of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance states;

"The notice may be given in writing or by personal communication and may be given in any terms which sufficiently identify the bill and intimate that the bill has been dishonoured by non-acceptance or non-payment"

In Metcalfe v Richardson (1852) 11 CB 1011 on the day after a bill became due, the holder's clerk called upon the drawer, and told him that the bill had been duly presented, and that the acceptor "could not pay it" to which the drawer replied that "he would see the holder about it:" It was held at p. 775 by Maule J that;

"The clerk, it is true, does not say that the bill has been dishonoured, or is unpaid; but that Dalgleish, the acceptor, cannot pay it. He assumes that he has duly ascertained that: and it is plain that the sense in which the plaintiff understands the communication is, that he is called upon to pay the bill. He treats it as a notice that the acceptor has not paid the bill, and that he himself is called upon to pay. Therefore, we have the fact of the bill being dishonoured, and of the drawer's being informed of the acceptor's incapacity to pay, as being established, and that the drawer is looked to for payment. And, when the plaintiff, in reply to the communication so made to him, says, 'I will see Mr. Richardson about it' I think no jury could come to any other conclusion than that he considered and accepted it, as it evidently was intended, as a notice of dishonour."

The Court states further that;

"It was competent to them to assume, and it was properly left to them to infer from the conversation deposed to, that the plaintiff had had notice of dishonour, and that he would be looked to for payment of the bill, which is the material part of the notice. I therefore think there should be no rule that it was proper to infer from this conversation that the drawer had due notice of dishonour."

In my opinion, similar to Metcalfe v Richardson (supra) once the Plaintiff attempted to present the note and the Defendant refused, this amounted to sufficient notice of dishonour. Hence, I am of the view it is proper to infer that sufficient notice of dishonour was given.

Conclusion

For the reasons stated above, I answer the questions of law upon which leave to appeal was granted as follows;

(1) Did the High Court err in upholding the conclusion of the District Court that the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent has satisfactorily proved that a notice of dishonour has been given in respect of an action based on a Promissory note?

No

(2) Did the High Court err in upholding the conclusion of the District Court that the Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent has complied with the mandatory requirements of the Bills of Exchange Ordinance to succeed in enforcing a Promissory note?

This appeal arises out of a partition action. There is no dispute as to the identity of the corpus. On the title dispute there was some common ground between Plaintiff-Respondent-Respondent (Plaintiff) and the 1st to 4th and 9th Defendant-Appellant-Appellants (Appellants).

According to them the original owner of the corpus was Keppetiwalana Ralalage Pabilis Appuhamy. It was also admitted that Pabilis Appuhamy by Deed of Transfer No. 29739 dated 14.05.1933 transferred the corpus in equal undivided shares to one Manchanayake Arachchilage Jamis Appuhamy and one Manchanayake Arachchige Podisingho. The title dispute between the Plaintiff and Appellants was on the devolution of title from the said Manchanayake Arachchilage Jamis Appuhamy and said Manchanayake Arachchige Podisingho.

According to the Plaintiff, Jamis Appuhamy by Deed of Transfer No. 275 dated 23.06.1939 (1වි.1) transferred his undivided ½ share of the corpus back to Pabilis Appuhamy. Thereafter Pablis Appuhamy by Deed of Transfer No. 17754 dated 17.11.1971 (1වි.2) transferred this undivided ½ share of the corpus to his grandchildren, the 1st to 4th Appellants. They are the children of the 9th Appellant and Keppetiwalana Ralalage Wijedasa, a son of Pabilis Appuhamy. Thus, according to the Plaintiff each of the 1st to 4th Appellants became entitled to an undivided 1/8th share of the corpus. Nevertheless, the Appellants contend that Keppetiwalana Ralalage Dharmadasa, another son of Pabilis Appuhamy has prescribed to the entire corpus through long and undisturbed possession adverse to the other co-owners.

The title dispute between the Plaintiff and the Appellants on one side and the 5th to 8(a), 8(b) and 8(c) Defendant-Respondent-Respondents (Respondents) on the other side revolved on whether Pabilis Appuhamy was the only son of Keppetiwalana Ralalage Akalis Appuhamy. According to the Plaintiff and the Appellants, Pabilis Appuhamy was the sole son of Akalis Appuhamy and inherited the corpus from Akalis Appuhamy. Nonetheless, according to the Respondents, Akalis Appuhamy had another son called Keppetiwalana Ralalage Juwanis Appuhamy. Hence, Pabilis Appuhamy and Juwanis Appuhamy each inherited an undivided ½ share of the corpus from Akalis Appuhamy.

The learned Additional District Judge accepted the pedigree claimed by the 8th Respondent and rendered judgment accordingly. The Appellants' prescriptive claim was denied. The appeal to the Civil Appellate High Court of the Western Province (holden in Gampaha) by the Appellants was dismissed.

Leave to appeal has been granted on the following questions of law:

1. Have the Hon. High Court Judges as well as the District Judge erred in law by basing the judgment on the purported pedigree of the 8th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent which has not beens proved at all during the course of the trial on the contrary the 8th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent contradicted himself with regard to the purported original ownership relied upon by him in arriving at his said conclusion?
2. Have the Hon. High Court Judges as well as the learned District Judge erred in law by granting an undivided half share of the property whereas the 8th Defendant-Respondent-Respondent by the Statement of Claim dated 04.09.1986 in fact only sought to obtain undivided 1/6th of the said property in arriving at their final conclusion?

3. The Hon. High Court Judges as well as the learned District Judge totally failed to consider the prescriptive possession of these Petitioners backed by their title deeds in arriving at their final conclusion?
4. Have the Hon. High Court Judges as well as the learned District Judge erred in law by failing to evaluate the evidence led by the parties at the trial with regard to the actual devolution of title of the property in a suit and prescriptive claims made by the Petitioners and also the other Respondents in arriving at their final conclusion?

Inheritance

The plaint claimed that Pabilis Appuhamy acquired the corpus through a long and undisturbed possession. This is the position taken up by the Appellants as well. Neither party has provided any evidence to support this position.

On the contrary there is evidence that Pabilis Appuhamy inherited an undivided share of the corpus from Akalis Appuhamy. Under cross-examination the Plaintiff admitted to being the daughter of Podisingho, a son of Pabilis Appuhamy. According to the Plaintiff, Pabilis Appuhamy by Deed of Transfer No. 29739 dated 14.05.1933 transferred the corpus in equal undivided shares to Manchanayake Arachchilage Jamis Appuhamy and Podisingho.

In Suhumaran v. Sathiyaseelan [S.C. Appeal No. 28/2017, S.C.M. 04.10.2021] I held that the probative value of the contents of a recital in a deed depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. Although it is mentioned in the proceedings that a photocopy of Deed of Transfer No. 29739 was produced marked as "පැ.1ඒ", it cannot be found in the brief. Nevertheless, the Plaintiff was cross examined on the contents of "පැ.1ඒ" and she admitted that the recital therein states that Pabilis Appuhamy obtained title to the corpus through inheritance from his father Akalis Appuhamy and his mother Helena.

In the absence of the marked deed "පැ. 1ඇ" in the brief, I am of the view that there is no legal impediment to the Court considering the evidence on record given by the Plaintiff on the contents of the recital therein. Given the relationship between Podisingho and Pabilis Appuhamy, I have no hesitation in accepting this evidence of the facts and circumstances of the case.

The fact that Akalis Appuhamy died intestate is further corroborated by the recital in deed marked ("8වී.1") wherein Helena states that she is transferring the rights, to another land, which she derived from marriage inheritance. Moreover, documents marked "8වී.2"and "8වී.3" (plaints of two partition actions instituted by the 8th Respondent in relation to partition of other property belonging to Akalis Appuhamy) establish the fact that Pabilis Appuhamy and Juwanis Appuhamy were sons of Akalis Appuhamy. In fact, the Plaintiff accepted under cross-examination that Juwanis Appuhamy was also entitled to his share of the corpus on the death of Akalis Appuhamy. Accordingly, I am of the view that the 8th Respondent has proved that both Pablis Appuhamy and Juwanis Appuhamy inherited an undivided ½ share each of the corpus from Akalis Appuhamy.

The Appellants strenuously contended that no share of the corpus should be granted to the 8th Respondent as neither he nor his predecessors were ever in possession of the corpus. The short answer to this point is that a co-owner's possession is in law the possession of all the other co-owners. Every co-owner is presumed to be in possession in his capacity as a co-owner.

Accordingly, I answer the first question of law in the negative.

The Appellants contend that nevertheless, the 8th Respondent failed to prove the devolution of title of Juwanis Appuhamy to him. In particular, it was contended that Juwanis Appuhmay had three children, namely Keppetiwalana Ralalage Jayaratne (8th Respondent), Keppetiwalana Ralalage Jayatilleke and Keppetiwalana Ralalage Helena.

Hence, if at all the 8th Respondent is only entitled to an undivided 1/6th share of the corpus. In fact, the 8th Respondent in his statement of claim only claimed an undivided 1/6th share of the corpus. However, the learned Additional District Judge granted the 8th Respondent an undivided ½ share of the corpus.

Admittedly notices were sent by the District Court to Keppetiwalana Ralalage Jayatilleke and Keppetiwalana Ralalage Helena. They did not come forward. Nevertheless, it is the bounden duty of the trial judge in a partition action to fully investigate the title to the corpus. The law does not permit him to allocate shares to a claimant merely because the other parties who are entitled to undivided shares do not make a claim in the partition action. In Ismail Lebbe v. Haniffa (51 N.L.R. 299 at 301) it was held that if no party is able to establish to the satisfaction of the Court that a co-owner is alive or, if he is dead, who his heirs are, his share would remain unallotted and the Court will proceed to enter a partition decree in respect of the remaining shares among other co-owners. In Yoosuf and Others v. Muttaliph (13 C.L.Rec. 171) it was held that where such a portion of the corpus is left unallotted, the title to this unallotted lot remains in the original co-owners and that title is in no respect affected by the partition decree. I am of the opinion that both the District Court and the High Court were mistaken in their decision to grant the 8th Respondent an undivided ½ share of the corpus. The 8th Respondent is only entitled to an undivided 1/6th share of the corpus.

Therefore, I answer question of law No. 2 in the affirmative.

Prescription

The 1st to 4th Appellants are the children of Keppetiwalana Ralalage Dharmadasa, a son of Pabilis Appuhamy. The 9th Appellant is the widow of Keppetiwalana Ralalage Dharmadasa. The Appellants claim that from around 1955 Keppetiwalana Ralalage Dharmadasa was in undisturbed and uninterrupted possession of the entirety of the corpus in a manner that was adverse to the rights of aforementioned Podisingho and all those who claim the title through him. Consequently, they claim to have obtained title to the corpus.

The 9th Appellant's testimony shows that she got married to Dharmadasa in 1954 and acquired possession of the corpus in 1955. Nevertheless, the evidence in this case indicates that the corpus was co-owned property by then.

In Tillekeratne v. Bastian (21 N.L.R. 12) it was held that in order to acquire prescriptive title a co-owner should prove exclusive possession for ten years after changing the nature of the possession to one of adverse title to the others.

Furthermore, the Appellants and the parties they claim prescriptive rights against are related. In De Silva v. Commissioner General of Inland Revenue (80 N.L.R. 292 at 295-6) Sharvananda J. (As he was then) held:

> "The principle of law is well established that a person who bases his title in adverse possession must show by clear and unequivocal evidence that his possession was hostile to the real owner and amounted to a denial of his title to the property claimed. In order to constitute adverse possession, the possession must be in denial of the title of the true owner. The acts of the person in possession should be irreconcilable with the rights of the true owner; the person in possession must claim to be so as of right as against the true owner. Where there is no hostility to or denial of the title of the true owner there can be no adverse possession. In deciding whether the alleged acts of the person constitute adverse possession, regard must be had to the animus of the person doing those acts, and this must be ascertained from the facts and circumstances of each case and the relationship of the parties. Possession which may be presumed to be adverse in the case of a stranger may not attract such a presumption, in the case of persons standing in certain social or legal relationships*."*(Emphasis added)

Let me now examine the evidence presented by the Appellants against these principles.

The 9th Appellant's claim was that her husband Dharmadasa paid taxes for the corpus. This testimony has been corroborated by retired agrarian officer P.A.S. Sumanasiri. Nevertheless, in Hassan v. Romanishamy (66 C.L.W. 112) Basnayake C.J. held that the payment of rates is by itself not proof of possession for the purpose of section 3 of the Prescription Ordinance, for rates can be tendered by a tenant or one occupying any premises with the leave and license of the owner or by any other person. This statement was cited with approval in Sirajudeen and Others v. Abbas [(1994) 2 Sri. L. R. 365].

Gamaralalage Joseph Perera, a friend of Dharmadasa, testified that Dharmadasa and the Appellants resided in the house built on the corpus. However, he stated that he is unaware as to who enjoyed the produce of the corpus or whether anyone else was in possession of or could claim title to the corpus. Gunapala Jayawardane, who is related to the 9th Appellant, lived in the house built on the corpus with Dharmadasa and the 9th Appellant from 1955 to 1978. He testified that Dharmadasa and the 9th Appellant were the only ones who had possession of the corpus and were the only ones who cultivated the corpus. However, during cross-examination on behalf of the Plaintiff, he admitted that Wijedasa frequently visited the corpus until his death in 1980 and that he is unaware whether Wijedasa was given a portion of the produce from the corpus.

H.S.A.P. Peris, a Deputy Provincial Director of the Department of Agriculture was called to prove documents “8වී.12” to “8වී.15”. He testified that these documents were issued by the Department of Agriculture allowing Dharmadasa and the 9th Appellant to cultivate specific types of crops on a land called Ambagahalanda.

Nevertheless, as pointed out earlier, every co-owner is presumed to be possessing the corpus in his capacity as a co-owner. One co-owner cannot put an end to such possession by any secret intention in his mind. It is only "ouster" or something equivalent to "ouster" which could bring about that result. The evidence in this case does not establish any such ouster. The ouster was established only in December 1983 when the Appellants obstructed the possession of the Plaintiff and her children. This partition action was filed by the Plaintiff in November 1984.

For all the foregoing reasons, I hold that the learned Additional District Judge and the Civil Appellate High Court judges were correct in rejecting the prescriptive claim of the Appellants for the whole corpus.

Accordingly, question of law Nos. 3 and 4 are answered in the negative.

Based on the answer given to the question of law No. 2, I vary the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge and allocate an undivided $1/6^{th}$ share of the corpus to the 8^{th} Respondent. Another $2/6^{th}$ share of the corpus should be left unallotted.

The learned District Judge of Gampaha is directed to enter an interlocutory decree in accordance with this judgment. If the interlocutory decree has already been entered, it should be amended in accordance with the judgment of the Court.

The parties shall bear the costs of this appeal.

The appeal is partly allowed.

Judgement

Aluwihare, PC, J

The Petitioner – Petitioner – Appellant to this application (hereinafter referred to as the Appellant) is the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue. The Respondent – Respondent – Respondent (hereinafter referred to as the Respondent) is a limited liability company incorporated under the laws of Sri Lanka and has been engaged in the business of a Travel Agent for airlines. The Respondent pursuant to Gazette Extraordinary No. 127/5 dated 17th December 2002 operated on the assumption that its service income was zero rated for the purpose of Value Added Tax (VAT) imposed in terms of the Value Added Tax Act No. 14 of 2002. Therefore, the Respondent did not pay any VAT on its service income.

The Respondent states that the above position was confirmed by a document issued by M.G Somachandra, Deputy Commissioner of the Inland Revenue Department (ACT17/9) dated 25.02.2008 (vide. P. 49 of the Brief). However, when the VAT returns were submitted by the Respondent for certain taxable periods, on the basis that their supplies were zero rated, the returns were rejected by the assessor stating that Commission Income of the Respondent could not be considered as a zero-rated supply and new VAT assessment had been issued in terms of Section 28 of the Value Added Tax Act of 2002.

The Respondent appealed against the said decision of the assessor to the Commissioner-General of Inland Revenue (hereinafter referred to as Commissioner-General) against the assessment. The Appeal was heard by Commissioner K. Dharmasena in the period of December 2012 to March 2013 and the said Commissioner reserved the determination. But the determination was issued by another Commissioner, namely D.M Somadasa Dissanayake by way of letter dated 02.08.2013 (vide p. 31 of the Brief). Thereafter, the reasons for the determination were issued on 05.08.2013, however, it was Commissioner D.M Somadasa Dissanayake who had signed the said reasons for the determination, but that document contained the name of Commissioner K. Dharmasena in its first page. Therefore, the Commissioner-General sought to replace page 1 of the reasons for the determination by letters dated 09.10.2013 and 14.10.2013. As per the reasons for the determination issued by Commissioner D.M Somadasa Dissanayake, dated 05.08.2013 as amended on 09.10.2013 (P 1 vide p. 4 of the brief), a note was inscribed as follows;

"The above appeals heard before K. Dharmasena (Commissioner (Zone III) and the dates of hearing mentioned above are dates of hearing made by him. Further, the names mentioned under the appearance are the persons appeared for the case.

I (Commissioner D.M Somadasa Dissanayake) have determined the above appeals upon letter dated 04.07.2013(CGIR/APP/H/2013) Commissioner General of Inland Revenue"

Hence, it is apparent that two separate Commissioners had heard and issued the determination. Aggrieved by the aforesaid determination the Respondent appealed to Tax Appeals Commission (hereinafter referred to as the TAC). At the TAC the Respondent raised a preliminary objection that there had been a violation of the principles of natural justice. The Appellant's response to the said preliminary objection was that the TAC has no jurisdiction to entertain preliminary objections and has been constituted only to consider the merits of the assessment. The TAC made its determination (P8) on 13.11.2014, whereby the TAC upheld that there was a violation of the principles of natural justice and the assessment was accordingly annulled.

The Appellant, aggrieved by the said determination made by the TAC, stated a case to the Court of Appeal on the following questions of law;

1. Whether the Tax Appeals Commission acted in excess of its limited jurisdiction as it cannot assume jurisdiction it does not possess to decide on questions of law?

2. Whether the Tax Appeals Commission has erred in law to determine the appeal on matters raised as preliminary objections by the Appellant's counsel?

3.Whether the Tax Appeals Commission was empowered by the Hon. Minister of Finance who appointed it to hear and determine appeals preferred by the Appellant to give its determination without hearing the matters raised in the appeal?

4.Whether the Tax Appeals Commission has erred in law in determining a question of law and failed to give due consideration to the judgement of the case A.M Ismail v CIR (SLTC Vol. VI p. 156) that question of law have to be decided by courts and Tax Appeals Commission can decide on questions of fact?

5.Whether the Tax Appeals Commission had erred in law, that coming into conclusion that it is a violation of principles of natural justice where hearing of the appeal by one commissioner and concluded hearing the other commissioner notice of determination based on the record maintained by the first commissioner?

The Court of Appeal delivered its Judgement on 06.04.2017 in favour of the Respondent dismissing the appeal (vide p. 85 of the Brief). The Appellant being aggrieved with the Judgement of the Court of Appeal, sought special leave to appeal from this court and Special Leave to Appeal was granted on the following questions of law;

1. Did the Court of Appeal err in law when holding that a Tax Appeal Commission could dispose its mandate on preliminary objections?

2.Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in not analyzing that the preliminary issue raised did not relate to the validity of the assessment made, which issue is in fact the dispute that is sought to be resolved and regarding which the questions of fact and law should have been considered by the Tax Appeals Commission?

3. Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the time bar provisions contained in Section 34 of the Value Added Tax Act would apply if the matter was sent back for re-hearing to the Commissioner by the Tax Appeals Commission?

Before considering the questions of law, the Court observes that the Appellant had submitted the final written submissions on 16.10.2023, despite arguments were heard on 03.11.2021 and parties, if wished, were required to file written submission within three weeks from the said date. Needless to say, the Rules of this Court are not mere procedural niceties but ensure that no prejudice is caused to the litigants. Therefore, the parties should adhere to the time limits provided by this Court. However, the Court considered the written submissions although belatedly filed by the Appellant.

Question of Law 01: Can the Tax Appeal Commission Dispose its Mandate on Preliminary Objections?

The Appellant argued that as per Section 9(10) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act No.23 of 2011 (as amended) a final determination cannot be given, which results in the assessment being annulled if the substantive tax issue is not considered by the TAC. On this basis the Appellant argues that the TAC erroneously disposed of its mandate by way of a preliminary objection. The contention simply stated was that the, the TAC is only mandated to consider appeals, on merit.

Section 9(10) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act provides that;

"After hearing the evidence, the Commission shall on appeal either confirm, reduce, increase or annul, as the case may be, the assessment as determined by the Commissioner- General or may remit the case to the Commissioner-General with the decision of the Commission on such appeal. Where a case is so remitted by the Commission, the Commissioner- General shall revise the assessment in order that it is in conformity with such amount as stated in the decision of the Commission." [Emphasis added]

I do not find merit in the contention of the Appellant referred to above, regarding the 1st question of law. The advantage of a preliminary objection is to prevent unnecessary litigation. Hence, the purpose of preliminary objections is not to stifle legitimate adjudication but to dispose a matter expeditiously when it is apparent that the action cannot be maintained. His Ladyship Justice Thilakawardena in Jathika Sevaka Sangamaya vs. Sri Lanka Ports Authority and Another [2003] 3 Sri.L.R. 146 at 149 held that;

"Preliminary objections are also particularly useful for actions which have no substance and where it is clear that such action could not possibly succeed. The purpose of raising preliminary objections is not to shut out or stifle legitimate adjudication. Preliminary objections are particularly unhelpful and are without basis in the context where facts and/or law is in dispute. It is also important to distinguish a preliminary objection from an objection on any point of law, which can be raised at any part of the trial unlike the preliminary objections, which by its nature is expected to be raised at the beginning of the proceedings prior to the beginning of the arguments in the case."

The Appellant also argued that in any event the preliminary objection raised by the Respondent does not go to the root of the issue, as the failure to abide by rules of natural justice is merely a "defect in the procedure" adopted by the Commissioner – General. Further, it was argued that no prejudice is caused by the lack of oral hearing as the documentary evidence including expert evidence was considered by the Commissioner-General. Moreover, the Appellant argued that the TAC cannot refuse to exercise jurisdiction on a tax matter in the guise of annulling the determination on a preliminary objection when the TAC is the arbiter of questions of fact. This argument presupposes that the jurisdiction of the TAC is limited to substantive matters of the assessment.

It is certainly true that one of the virtues of procedurally fair decision-making is that it is liable to result in better decisions, by ensuring that the decision-maker receives all relevant information and that it is properly tested but the purpose of a fair hearing is not merely to improve the chances of the tribunal reaching the right decision. At least two other important values are at stake as identified by Lord Reed in Booth v Parole Board [2013] UKSC 61.

The first is the avoidance of the sense of injustice which the person who is the subject of the decision will otherwise feel. Justice entails that a person whose rights are significantly affected by a decision of an administrative or judicial body, should be allowed to participate in the procedure by which the decision is made, provided they have something to say which is relevant to the decision to be taken. This aspect of fairness avoids resentment that will be aroused if a party to legal proceedings is placed in a position where it is impossible for him or her to influence the result. As observed by Lord Reed in Booth v Parole Board [supra] at [66];

"I would prefer to consider first the reason for that sense of injustice, namely that justice is intuitively understood to require a procedure which pays due respect to persons whose rights are significantly affected by decisions taken in the exercise of administrative or judicial functions. Respect entails that such persons ought to be able to participate in the procedure by which the decision is made, provided they have something to say which is relevant to the decision to be taken."

The second value is the rule of law. Procedural requirements that decision-makers should listen to persons who have something relevant to say promote congruence between the actions of decision-makers and the law which should govern their actions per Booth v Parole Board [supra] at [71]. Hence, even if the documentary evidence was considered by the Commissioner- General as argued by the Appellant, there is a breach of the principles of natural justice.

In this backdrop it would be pertinent to consider the document marked and produced by the Appellant as 'P3', the letter [dated 02.08.2013] by which the Department of Inland Revenue communicated the determination of the Commissioner General, regarding the Respondent's appeal to the Commissioner General which had been signed by Commissioner D.M.S Dissanayake. In communicating the decision, the writer states that "…having considered the written and oral submissions made by authorized representatives and a few officials on behalf of the appellant company and the views, explanations ruling submissions made by the Department officials on behalf of the revenue, I determine the above appeal by confirming the assessment…"

The Determination, however, gives three dates of hearing, namely 13.12.2012, 21.01.2013 and 07.03.2013 and the notation added by Commissioner DMS Dissanayake states that "The above appeals heard before K. Dharmadasa (Commissioner Zon III) and the dates of hearing mentioned above are dates of hearing made by him."

The above, clearly demonstrates that no hearings had taken place before Commissioner D.M.S Dissanayake and for him to say that he considered 'oral submissions made by authorized representatives and a few officials on behalf of the appellant company.*' is patently incorrect and demands inquiry, not only from the perspective whether the Respondent was accorded a fair hearing but also whether the submissions made on behalf of them received due consideration. Therefore, it is incorrect to state that no prejudice is allegedly caused to the Respondent as submitted by the Appellant.

Further, if the Respondent was not provided with a fair hearing, then the assessment made by the Commissioner-General is defective and the fact that the assessment was made by another assessor is quite apparent. Then the TAC is not required to further consider the defective assessment of the Commissioner – General, since the objection of the Respondent goes to the root of the cause.

The Court of Appeal held in this regard at p. 18 that;

"If a question of law or fact or a question mixed with both law and fact is raised as a preliminary issue which goes to the root of the case, determining that issue first, would undoubtedly save time and resources of all stakeholders. Besides this, it is an accepted norm that a party agitating a question of fact or law must first have it raised before the original institution tasked to resolve that dispute. This is underpinned by the fact that such original institution may well uphold such argument saving time and resources of the appellate forum. Thus, there is also no merit in the statement that the Tax Appeals Commission has erred in law when it determined the appeal on the matters raised as preliminary objections by the learned counsel for the Appellant."

Whilst agreeing with the views expressed above, I am of the opinion that the legislature never intended to oust and limit the jurisdiction of the TAC to the substantive matters of the assessment. If the legislature intended to limit the jurisdiction of the TAC to substantive matters of the assessment, then such intention would be expressly provided. The only requirement of Section 9(10) is for the TAC to hear the evidence in appeal and either confirm, reduce, increase or annual the assessment determined by the Commissioner – General or remit the case to the Commissioner-General with the decision of the TAC. It is a recognized rule of interpretation that the duty of the Court is to construe Acts of Parliament according to the intent or will of the legislature and to give the words their meaning, even if that intention appears to the Court just or unjust or inconvenient or whatever may be the ulterior consequences of so interpreting them, as dislike of the effect of a statute is of no consequence.

I am also persuaded by the reasoning of His Lordship Justice Ruwan Fernando in the case of The Commissioner of General of Inland Revenue v. Cargills Food Service (Pvt) Ltd Case No. CA/TAX/0013/2016 (C.A. Minutes 25.05.2023) at p. 37 regarding the interpretation of Section 11A of the Tax Appeals Commission Act. His Lordship stated that;

"At this stage, it is relevant to note that the right of appeal by way of a case stated is a substantive right given to any person aggrieved by the decision of the TAC in terms of section 11A(1) of the TAC Act. When that right has already vested with the parties on the date the lis (proceedings) commenced in the TAC, that right cannot be denied to such party who seeks remedies to violated rights, unless that right has been taken away by a subsequent enactment, if it so provided expressly and not otherwise"

Further at p. 39 the Court held that;

"This vested right of appeal can be taken away only by a subsequent enactment, if it so provides expressly or by necessary intendment and not otherwise"

In my opinion if the interpretation advanced by the Appellant is accepted, the Court will inadvertently usurp legislative functions by limiting the scope of the appeal, when an express limitation is not provided by the Legislature. I find support for this view in terms of Section 8(1)(a) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act which provides that;

"8(1) Any person aggrieved by the determination of-

(a) the Commissioner-General, in respect of any matter relating to the imposition of any tax, levy, charge, duty or penalty; or

(b) the Director-General under subsection (1B) of section 10 of the Customs Ordinance (Chapter 235), may if he is dissatisfied with the reasons stated by the Commissioner-General or the Director- General, as the case may be, prefer the appeal therefrom to the Commission within thirty days from the date of receipt of such reasons; or"

If the Legislature intended the jurisdiction of the TAC to be limited to only review of the substantive matter of the assessment, why would the Legislature in Section 8(1)(a) allow an appeal to the TAC in respect of 'any matter' relating to the imposition of any tax, levy charge, duty, or penalty of the Commissioner - General? The rational conclusion that could be drawn is that the Legislature never intended to limit the jurisdiction of the TAC only to substantive issues.

It is a settled principle that a statute must be interpreted harmoniously. When two interpretations are available, the Court interprets the provision harmoniously so as to ensure the consistent operation of the Act. An interpretation that results in a clash of provision or reduces a provision to an inutility should be avoided. As held by Pasayat J, in Commissioner of Income Tax Vs Hindustan Bulk Carriers, (2003) 3 SCC 57, P. 74

"The Court must ascertain the intention of the legislature by directing its attention not merely to the clauses to be construed but to the entire statute; it must compare clause with other parts of the law and the setting in which the clause to be interpreted occurs. [See R.S. Raghunath v. State of Karnataka and Anr. (AIR 1992 SC 81)]. Such a construction has the merit of avoiding any inconsistency or repugnancy either within a section or between two different sections or provisions of the same statute. It is the duty of the Court to avoid a head on clash between two sections of the same Act. [See Sultana Begum v. Prem Chand Jain (AIR 1997 SC 1006)] Whenever it is possible to do so, it must be done to construe the provisions which appear to conflict so that they harmonise. It should not be lightly assumed that Parliament had given with one hand what it took away with the other.

The provisions of one section of the statute cannot be used to defeat those of another unless it is impossible to effect reconciliation between them. Thus a construction that reduces one of the provisions to a 'useless lumber' or 'dead letter' is not a harmonised construction. To harmonise is not to destroy."

The principles enunciated above can be summarized as follows;

1. The Courts must avoid a head-on clash of seemingly contradicting provisions and must construe the contradictory provisions so as to harmonize them.
2. The provision of one section cannot be used to defeat the provision contained in another, unless the Court, despite all its effort, is unable to reconcile their differences.
3. When it is impossible to completely reconcile the differences in contradictory provisions, the Courts must interpret them in a manner so that effect is given to both the provisions as much as possible.
4. Courts must also keep in mind that interpretation that reduces one provision to an inutility is contrary to a harmonious construction.

Applying the principles above, the interpretation advanced by the Appellant is evidently contrary to a harmonious interpretation, since that interpretation ignores Section 8(1)(a) of the Act, thereby resulting in a conflict of the two provisions, as Section 8(1)(a) explicitly provides an appellant the ability to canvass 'any matter' relating to the imposition of any tax, levy, charge, duty or penalty by the Commissioner – General before the TAC. In my view an interpretation stating that the TAC's jurisdiction is limited to substantive tax matters results in an inconsistency between the provisions. A 'matter' is "something to be tried or proved; an allegation forming the basis of a claim or defence" (Black's Law Dictionary 10th Edition). The use of the determinant word 'any' implies that the scope of questions of law that can be heard by the TAC was not limited to substantive tax questions but is wide, subject to the jurisdictional requirements of the Act. Therefore, an interpretation that does not limit the TAC's jurisdiction to the substantive tax assessment is preferred as that construction avoids any clash between the provisions. In those circumstances, I see no merit in the Appellant's contention.

Question of Law 02: Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in not analyzing that the preliminary issue raised did not relate to the validity of the assessment made, which issue is in fact the dispute that is sought to be resolved and regarding which the questions of fact and law should have been considered by the Tax Appeals Commission?

The Appellant contends that as per Section 9(10) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act the word "confirm and annul" has to be in connection with the power to increase or reduce the assessment of the Commissioner-General. On that basis the Appellant argued that the decision of the TAC declaring the assessment of the Commissioner – General as void, was erroneous. This Court finds it difficult to appreciate the said contention of the Appellant. The word "annul" is defined in Black's Law Dictionary [11th Edition] as "the act of nullifying or making void". It is therefore apparent that the TAC had the power to declare the decision of the Commissioner-General as void.

The Appellant also sought to argue that the proper remedy for the Respondent was to challenge the assessment of the Commissioner – General by way of a writ as the forum of the TAC is exclusive to determining the validity of the assessment. The Appellant relied on A.M Ismail v Commissioner of Inland Revenue SLTC Vol. IV at p. 156 as authority for the proposition that the Respondent should have sought review from the determination of the Commissioner-General by way of a writ and that a statutory appeal does not lie to annual the determination. In A.M Ismail v Commissioner of Inland Revenue [Supra] it was held that;

"An appeal from a determination of a Commissioner to the Board of Review is also very narrow in its scope. Further the Board of Review does not exercise judicial functions, but is merely an instrument created for the administration of the Revenue Law and its work is really administrative though judicial authorities are called for in the performance of its duties. It is a body created as an administrative check to see that a tax payer's liability is correctly ascertained. The fact that it could state a case in regard to a question of law to the Supreme Court to determine the liability in regard to taxes does not give a Board of Review the authority to declare notices sent by, or proceedings before an Assessor void or to quash them. It has power to review or annul an assessment if it is proved that an assessee was not liable to pay the tax charged."

His Lordship Justice Abdul Cader made these observations in relation to the question whether it was mandatory to communicate to the taxpayer the reasons for rejecting a return on income tax under the Inland Revenue Act of 1968 (as amended). The instant appeal relates to the assessment made by the Commissioner-General and its validity. The facts can be distinguished since Section 9(10) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act expressly provides the power on the TAC to annul an assessment. Further, the Court also expressly recognized in A.M Ismail v Commissioner of Inland Revenue [supra] that the Board of Review has the power to review or annul an assessment if it is proved that an assessee was not liable to pay the tax charged. A taxpayer is entitled to a fair hearing to ensure that a proper assessment is recorded upon considering all relevant matters and the applicable provisions . If a taxpayer is not provided with a fair hearing, then the assessment is defective. Therefore, the TAC was correct in annulling the determination of the Commissioner-General and on that basis also, there is no conflict with the decision of A.M Ismail v Commissioner of Inland Revenue [supra].

It is also relevant that writ remedies are not granted by the Court as of right but are discretionary. The granting of a writ remedy depends on various other circumstances, such as laches, or misconduct, misrepresentation or non- disclosure of facts and acquiescence, unlike a right of appeal under Section 9(10) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act.

A similar argument was canvassed before the Court of Appeal in relation to Section 11A(6) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act in The Commissioner General of Inland Revenue, v Janashakthi General Insurance Col. Ltd Case No. CA (TAX) 14/2013 (C.A Minutes 20.05.2020) and His Lordship Justice Janak De Silva rejected this argument and held that (at p. 08);

"Let me start the analysis by restating two established principles. Firstly, judicial review being a discretionary remedy may be refused where there is an adequate and effective remedy such as a statutory appeal. Secondly, judicial review is concerned with the legality of a decision whereas an appeal inquires whether the decision is right or wrong.

There may be situations where an Appellant in a statutory appeal proceeding wishes to raise questions relating to legality such as the breach of the rules of natural justice or an issue on the jurisdiction of the decision maker. A multitude of judicial authority supports the proposition that jurisdictional questions can be raised by way of appeal……..

Breach of the common law principles of natural justice can be dealt with by the appellate system in the tax field [R. v. Brentford General Commissioners Ex. p. Chan (1986) S.T.C. 65; R. v. Commissioner for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts Ex. p. Napier (1988) 3 All E.R. 166; Banin v. Mackinlay (Inspector of Taxes) (1985) 1 All E.R. 842].”

His Lordship Justice Ruwan Fernando also held in The Commissioner of General of Inland Revenue v. Cargills Food Service (Pvt) Ltd [supra] at p. 57 in relation to Section 11A of the Tax Appeals Commission Act that;

“It is relevant to note that a party has no absolute right in a judicial remedy where an inferior tribunal exceeds its jurisdiction, and where the absence or excess of jurisdiction is not apparent on the face of the proceedings. It is only discretionary, and depends on various other circumstances, such as laches, or misconduct, misrepresentation or non-disclosure of facts and acquiescence etc. The grant of a writ is always discretionary and is never demandable of right like in a case stated in terms of section 11A(1)”

I am in agreement with the views expressed above and, in my opinion, they apply with equal force to Section 9(10) of the Tax Appeals Commission. If the Respondent is required to resort to judicial review to challenge a decision of the Commissioner-General, then such an interpretation would cause undue hardship and burden to the taxpayer, when an explicit right of appeal is provided[to the TAC].

Another reason why I reject the interpretation of the Appellant is that the Courts in their discretion will not normally make the remedy of judicial review available where there is an alternative remedy by way of appeal or where some other body has exclusive jurisdiction in respect of the dispute. However, judicial review may be granted in exceptional circumstances such as where the alternative statutory remedy is nowhere near so convenient, beneficial and effectual or where there is no other equally effective and convenient remedy. This is particularly so where the decision in question is liable to be upset as a matter of law because it is clearly made without jurisdiction or in consequence of an error of law. This principle is discussed in "Judicial Remedies in Public Law, Sir Clive Lewis, 5th edtn. at p. 75;

"Judicial review is, in principle, available in relation to the acts and omissions of inferior courts such as the county court or magistrates' courts. In practice, the availability of judicial review is likely to be limited by the availability of other methods of challenge such as appeals. Judicial review will not normally be permitted if there are adequate alternative remedies available. There are rights of appeal against decisions of district judges and county courts, for example. Where the possibility of an appeal to a higher court exists, that route is the appropriate method of challenging the original decision rather than a claim for judicial review unless there are exceptional circumstances justifying bring a claim for judicial review."

Of course, the crux of the argument advanced by the Appellant was that judicial review is the only remedy in the instant appeal, and that the Respondent ought to have moved to have the assessment of the Commissioner – General quashed, by way of a writ, however, I am of the view that the interpretation advanced by the Appellant would deprive a party the most convenient, effectual and beneficial remedy.

In R v Brentford General Commissioners, ex parte Chan and others [1986] STC 65 the taxpayers applied for an order to quash the decision of the General Commissioners of Income Tax for denial of natural justice. The court held that Section 56(6) of the Taxes Management Act 1970 of United Kingdom, gave the court the widest possible powers to remit cases to the commissioners for amendment or rehearing, including the power to deal with procedural irregularities and that judicial review would not be an appropriate remedy in a tax case unless there were exceptional circumstances. In determining whether judicial review was the appropriate remedy, the court by citing Ex p Waldron [1985] 3 WLR 1090 at p. 1108 mentioned certain guidelines as follows;

"Whether the alternative statutory remedy will resolve questions at issue fully and directly; whether the statutory procedure would be quicker or slower than procedure by way of judicial review; whether the matter depends on some particular or technical knowledge which is more readily available to the alternative appellate body, these are amongst the matters which a court should take into account when deciding whether to grant relief by judicial review where an alternative remedy is available"

Certainly, these guidelines are not exhaustive in determining whether judicial review is the appropriate remedy but applying them to the present case, in my opinion an appeal to the TAC can resolve an issue fully but judicial review may not, as the focus on the latter is the legality of the issue. Moreover, the members of the TAC would be more aware, perhaps, of the practice and the exigencies relating to fiscal law and practice, therefore can resolve the issues fully. On that basis judicial review would not be the proper remedy in this instance. I am also persuaded by the dicta of Lord Templeman in Preston v IRC [1985] AC 835 at p. 362

"Judicial review should not be granted where an alternative remedy is available. In most cases in which the commissioners are said to have fallen into error, the remedy of the taxpayer lies in the appeal procedures provided by the tax statutes to the General Commissioners or Special Commissioners. This appeal structure provides an independent and informed tribunal which meets in private so that the taxpayer is not embarrassed in disclosing his affairs and the commissioners are not inhibited by their duty of confidentiality. The commissioners and the tribunals established to hear appeals from the commissioners have wide knowledge and experience of fiscal law and practice. Appeals from the General Commissioners or the Special Commissioners lie, but only on questions of law, to the High Court by means of a case stated and the High Court can then correct all kinds of errors of law including errors which might otherwise be the subject of judicial review proceedings"

As judicial review is a collateral challenge and not an appeal, it will only be in exceptional circumstances that the courts will allow the collateral process of judicial review to be used to attack an appealable decision, when Parliament has expressly provided by statute an appellate procedure. But exceptional circumstances may arise when it would be unjust for the taxpayer to appeal a decision of the Commissioner – General. For example, if the Commissioner – General during the hearing acted illegally or ultra vires, then exceptional circumstances may arise where judicial review is appropriate to challenge the alleged abuse at its inception. Otherwise, the taxpayer would be expected to proceed with the allegedly illegal hearing until the determination is issued by the Commissioner-General to appeal the Commissioner-General's assessment to the TAC.

Accordingly, in my opinion judicial review is not the proper remedy unless exceptional circumstances justify a claim for judicial review. If judicial review is eliminated as a remedy unless exceptional circumstances justify a claim, then the proper remedy would be an appeal to the TAC, therefore, I find no merit in the contention of the Appellant.

Question of Law 03: Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the time bar provisions contained in Section 34 of the Value Added Tax Act would apply if the matter was sent back for re-hearing to the Commissioner by the Tax Appeals Commission?

The Appellant argued that the Court of Appeal erred by holding that TAC and the Commissioner-General are time barred from hearing a fresh appeal of the instant case by virtue of Section 34 of the Value Added Tax Act. The gravamen of the Appellant's argument is that the Court of Appeal has the power to remit a case to the TAC for rehearing with any guidelines set by the Court as per Section11A(6) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act. It was also argued that the Section 34 of the Value Added Tax Act only imposes a time bar on the Commissioner - General in hearing a matter when an appeal is made from the assessment [of an assessor or an assistant commissioner] and has no application to the Court of Appeal since a case remitted will be a fresh inquiry. It was argued by the Appellant that a contrary interpretation would deprive much needed revenue to the State since an assessment would be annulled, and time barred for extraneous issues unrelated to the substantive tax assessment. The same argument was canvassed by the Appellant at the Court of Appeal, and the Court held [at p. 13] that;

"The Commissioner General in this instance has failed to accomplish any lawful hearing of the appeal up to now. Thus, he has failed to comply with the time frame prescribed in the above section. The invalidation of his previous determination amounts, in the eyes of law, to the said appeal being not heard.

Therefore, it is clear when this Court holds that the determination by the Commissioner General is not valid, what remains valid is the determination by the Assessor. [Emphasis added]

Section 34 of the VAT Act has specified in no uncertain terms, the effect of such appeal is not agreed or determined within the specified period. Thus, in such a situation the appeal shall be deemed to have been allowed.

The above position appears to be in line with the fact that neither section 9(10) nor 11 A (6) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act provide that a case could be sent back for 're-inquiry'."

It was further held by the Court that;

"It is to be observed that both the aforementioned sections, [Sections 9(10) and 11A(6) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act] the action to be taken either by the Commission or by the Commissioner-General when a case is so remitted have been restricted to the revision of the assessment in order that it is in conformity with such amount as stated in the said decision. It is to be observed that these sections do not provide for the conduct of re-inquiries as has been provided for in the case of regular appeal proceedings. This could be to avoid any conflict with the operation of the time bar placed on the Commissioner-General regarding the disposal of appeals made to him"

Sections 9(10) and 11A (6) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act provides as follows;

Section9(10*)*; "After hearing the evidence, the Commission shall on appeal either confirm, reduce, increase or annul, as the case may be, the assessment as determined by the Commissioner- General or may remit the case to the Commissioner-General with the decision of the Commission on such appeal. Where a case is so remitted by the Commission, the Commissioner- General shall revise the assessment in order that it is in conformity with such amount as stated in the decision of the Commission"

Section 11A(6); Any two or more Judges of the Court of Appeal may hear and determine any question of law arising on the stated case and may in accordance with the decision of Court upon such question, confirm, reduce, increase or annul the assessment determined by the Commission, or may remit the case to the Commission with the opinion of the Court, thereon. Where a case is so remitted by the Court, the Commission shall revise the assessment in accordance with the opinion of the Court"

The interpretation given to Section 11A(6) by His Lordship Justice Samarakoon in the case of Cargills Agrifood Ltd v The Commissioner General of Inland Revenue C.A Tax 36/2014 (C.A Minutes 28.02.2023) merits consideration. The Court held that;

"Hence, any two or more Judges of the Court of Appeal may,

(i) determine any question of law arising on the stated case,

It does not say may determine the 'determination' of the Commission.

(ii) confirm, reduce, increase or annul the assessment determined by the Commission,

(iii) or may remit the case to the Commission with the opinion of the Court, thereon.

This may or may not be on the 'determination' of the Commission, because the term 'thereon' refers to 'any question of law arising on the stated case'.

What does the next sentence mean?

'Where a case is so remitted by the Court, the Commission shall revise the assessment in accordance with the opinion of the Court'.

If the question of law arose was not with regard to the 'assessment determined by the Commission', how shall the Commission 'revise the assessment'?

The answer is, that, the 'assessment', referred to in the last sentence is, the 'assessment' made by the assessor.

This is why, the previous sentence refers to the 'assessment determined by the Commission' but the last sentence just say 'assessment'.

The legislature will not waste words as well as it will not use words without a meaning.

Hence it is clear that,

(a) there can be a case stated on a question of law other than the determination of the Commission on tax,

(b) the Court has power to remit the case to the Commission, with its opinion on the question of law so arose and

(c) the Commission shall, on receiving such an opinion of the Court, revise the assessment of the assessor."

I am in agreement with the above views expressed by His Lordship Justice Samarakoon. In my opinion similar to above, Section 9(10) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act provides that;

The Commission shall on appeal;

1. either confirm, reduce, increase or annul, as the case may be, the assessment as determined by the Commissioner- General or;
2. remit the case to the Commissioner-General with the decision of the Commission on such appeal.
3. When a case is remitted by the Commission, the Commissioner-General is required to revise the assessment in order that it is in conformity with such amount as stated in the decision of the Commission.

On that basis the TAC can dispose of its mandate by a preliminary issue and remit the case to the Commissioner – General. The Commissioner – General thereafter, is required to revise the assessment of the assessor. But how can the Commissioner – General revise the assessment in conformity with 'such amount as stated in the decision of the Commission' if the TAC disposes of its mandate by way of a preliminary objection without considering the substantive tax issues?

The first possible interpretation that can reconcile the above position is the one adopted by the Court of Appeal. According to this interpretation, when the Commissioner-General's assessment is invalidated by the TAC, what remains is the assessment made by the assessor. The TAC cannot remit the case for a fresh inquiry, possibly due to the time-bar set forth in Section 34 of the Value Added Tax Act. However, I unable to agree with this interpretation for two reasons

First, if a taxpayer appeals the assessor's assessment to the Commissioner-General, and the Commissioner-General's assessment is later annulled due to reasons such as a breach of natural justice or by way of any other preliminary objections, the taxpayer is left with what he believes to be an erroneous assessment of the assessor. In my opinion, this interpretation defeats the purpose of the appeal process. The second reason, as advanced by the Appellant, is that the correct tax liability of a taxpayer will be unascertained for extraneous reasons unrelated to the substantive tax issue, and I am in agreement with this view.

The second possible interpretation is to construe Section 9(10) narrowly as advanced by the Appellant, by limiting the jurisdiction of the TAC and holding that the TAC can only determine issues related to the substantive tax issues. This interpretation would limit the TAC's jurisdiction to an arithmetic revision and for the reasons explained above cannot be accepted, as the remedy for a taxpayer then would be limited to judicial review and is contrary to a harmonious interpretation of the Tax Appeals Act.

Of course, it can be argued that although the TAC correctly annulled the determination of the Commissioner – General, the TAC should have considered the substantive tax issue. Even the Appellant advanced a similar view in the alternative and stated that the TAC should have provided a decision separately on the preliminary question of law and the substantive matters. This view was also expressed in The Commissioner of General of Inland Revenue v. Cargills Food Service (Pvt) Ltd [supra] at p. 60 which was also concerned with remitting a case, albeit from the Court of Appeal to the TAC, when the TAC annulled the assessment of the Commissioner – General, by upholding a preliminary objection. By virtue of Section 9(10), it appears to me, that the jurisdiction of the TAC is limited to the revision of the assessment of the Commissioner General, therefore, once the assessment of the Commissioner – General is annulled the TAC cannot reassess the assessor's assessment or in other words consider the substantive tax assessment, thereby exceeding its jurisdiction.

I am of the opinion that Section 9(10) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act provides two courses of action;

1. on appeal either confirm, reduce, increase or annul, as the case may be, the assessment as determined by the Commissioner- General (first limb); or

2. remit the case to the Commissioner-General with the decision of the Commission on such appeal (second limb)

It appears that the first limb may generally apply when determining the substantive matters of the assessment of the Commissioner – General, whereby the TAC can either confirm, annul, reduce or increase the assessment. In my view, the second limb includes the four powers provided under the first limb (i.e the power of the TAC to confirm, reduce, increase, or annul the assessment of the Commissioner-General) and the power to direct the Commissioner-General to revise the assessment in accordance with the 'decision' of the TAC. To put this in another way, the second limb apply;

(i) If the TAC is of the view that the amount of the assessment determined by the Commissioner- General must be either increased or reduced, the case may be remitted back to the Commissioner-General. The Commissioner - General is required to revise the assessment in accordance with such amount as stated in the decision of the TAC;

(ii) If the TAC annulled the assessment made by the Commissioner- General on questions other than substantive matters of the assessment, the case may be remitted back to the Commissioner-Geneal with its decision. The decision can include any guidelines or directions for the Commissioner-General to follow in revising the substantive matters of the assessor's assessment. Thereafter, the Commissioner-General is required, if so directed, to revise the assessor's assessment in accordance with such decision of the TAC. In such instances, the TAC is not required to provide an amount in its decision.

I support the above view, (in para (ii) above) with two propositions. First, the following view is apparent as per the Sinhala text of Section 9(10) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act, which provides as follows;

කොමිෂන් සභාව විසින් සාක්ෂි විභාග කිරීමෙන් පසුව, කොමසාරිස්-ජනරාල්වරයා විසින් තීරණය කරන ලද තක්සේරුව අභියාචනයේ දී, අවස්ථාවෝචිත පරිදි ස්ථිර කිරීම, අඩුකිරීම, වැඩි කිරීම හෝ අවලංගු කිරීම සිදු කළ යුතු ය ; ඒ පිළිබඳ කොමිෂන් සභාවේ තීරණය සමග කොමසාරිස්-ජනරාල්වරයා වෙත අදාළ කාරණය යොමු කළ හැකි ය. කොමිෂන් සභාව විසින් එසේ යම් කාරණයක් යොමු කල අවස්ථාවක, කොමසාරිස්-ජනරාල්වරයා විසින් කොමිෂන් සභාවේ තීරණයේ සඳහන් මුදල් ප්‍රමාණයට අනුකූල වන පරිදි තක්සේරුව ප්‍රතිශෝධනය කළ යුතු ය.

In my opinion, it is apparent that the first limb of the Sinhala text similar to the English text, contemplates the ability of the TAC to either confirm, reduce, increase, or annul the assessment of the Commissioner-General. However, the four powers are included in the second sentence of the Sinhala text because the use of the words "ඒ සම්බන්ධ" provides that when the four powers are exercised the case may be remitted back to the Commissioner-General in appropriate instances as stated by the words, "අදාළ කාරණය යොමු කළ හැකි ය". If the TAC can refer a decision even in instances where the power of annulment is exercised, then it follows that directions or guidelines can be provided in that decision of the TAC. Otherwise, the assessment being a nullity, there is no need for the TAC to refer a decision back to the Commissioner-General.

The second proposition is that it is a commonly accepted rule in the construction of a statute to adhere to the ordinary meaning of the words used and to the grammatical construction of a statute. However, if the literal construction is at variance with the intention of the legislature, to be collected from the statute itself, or leads to any manifest absurdity or repugnance, in which case the language may be varied or modified so as to avoid such inconvenience but no further. The following view is stated by N.S Bindra, 'Interpretation of Statutes' [9th Edition] at p. 439, citing Rex v Vasey [1905] 2 KB 748, as follows;

"Where the language of a statute, in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction, leads to a manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, or to some inconvenience or absurdity, hardship or injustice presumably, not intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words, and the structure of the sentence"

However, such an inference should not be made lightly. Bindra on the 'Interpretation of Statutes' at p. 439 [supra] states as follows;

"In interpreting a statute, an intention contrary to the literal meaning of words of the statute should not be inferred unless the context or consequences which would ensure from a literal interpretation, justify the inference that the legislature has not expressed something which it intended to express, or unless such interpretation leads to any manifest absurdity or repugnance with this superadded qualification that the absurdity or repugnance must be such as manifested itself in the mind of the law-maker, and not such as may appear to be so to the Tribunal interpreting the statute."

Bindra on the 'Interpretation of Statutes' at p. 440 [supra] states further citing North v Templin 8 QBD 247 that;
"Anyone who contends that a section of an Act of Parliament is not to be read literally must be able to show one of the two things, either that there is some other section which cuts down its meaning, or else that the section itself is repugnant to the general purview of the Act"

In my opinion, the departure from the literal construction of Section 9(10) is justified in this instance as Section 8(1)(a) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act does not limit the jurisdiction of the TAC to substantive matters of the assessment for the reasons stated above. Further, if the Court of Appeals' interpretation is accepted then that interpretation would defeat the purpose of the appeal procedure and result in manifest absurdity. If a taxpayer appeals against the assessor's assessment to the Commissioner-General, and the TAC annuls the Commissioner-General's assessment through no fault of the taxpayer, leaving the taxpayer with the same assessor's assessment taxpayer initially contested, to say the least would be an absurd outcome.

Further, it appears that the intention of the legislature by establishing the TAC was to resolve tax disputes expeditiously, effectively, and efficiently by the establishment of an informed tribunal. This view is supported by the fact that Section 2(2) of the Tax Appeals Commission Act recognizes that the members appointed to the TAC comprise of persons that gained eminence in the field of taxation, finance and law. Therefore, an interpretation in furtherance of this object should be preferred. None of the interpretations provided by the Appellant advances this objective. The Appellant's interpretation unduly restricts the scope of the TAC. Hence, I am of the opinion that it is justified for the Court to depart from the literal construction of the section as stated above, which advances the object of the Act. In consideration of the interpretation above, it appears that the first error of the TAC and the Court of Appeal is the holding that the case cannot be remitted, when the provision provides otherwise. Both the TAC and the Court of Appeal also fell into error in justifying the first error by resorting to Section 34 of the Value Added Tax Act.

Section 34(8) of the Value Added Tax Act provides that;

"Every appellant shall attend before the Commissioner-General at time and place fixed for the hearing of the appeal. ……

Provided further that every petition of appeal under this Chapter shall be agreed to or determined by the Commissioner General within two years from the date on which such petition of appeal is received by the Commissioner-General unless the agreement or determination of such appeal depends on the furnishing of any document or the taking of any action by any person other than the appellant or the Commissioner General or an Assessor or Assistant Commissioner where such appeal is not agreed to or determined within such period the appeal shall be deemed to have been allowed and the tax charged accordingly

Section 34(1) relates to appeals from the assessor or assistant commissioner to the Commissioner – General in regard to any assessment of penalty. Therefore, the time bar in Section 34(8) relates to the appeal from the assessor or assistant commissioner. If the time bar is not complied with, then the appeal is deemed to be allowed. In my view once the TAC remits a case to the Commissioner – General then it is heard as a fresh inquiry and the time bar in Section 34(8) of the Value Added Tax Act has no application.

Once a case is remitted from the TAC it is not an appeal from the assessor or assistant commissioner but a fresh hearing. Black's Law Dictionary 10th ed., defines remit as "to refer (a matter for decision) to some authority, esp. to send back (a case) to a lower court". Accordingly, once the TAC remits a case to the Commissioner – General, it is a fresh hearing on this basis, and I am of the view that Section 34(8) of the Value Added Tax Act will not be a fetter for the Commissioner General to revisit the Appeal made to him by the Respondent.

Conclusion

In these circumstances, I answer the Questions of Law arising in the instant Appeal as follows:

1.Did the Court of Appeal err in law when holding that a Tax Appeal Commission could dispose its mandate on preliminary objections?
No.

2.Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in not analyzing that the preliminary issue raised did not relate to the validity of the assessment made, which issue is in fact the dispute that is sought to be resolved and regarding which the questions of fact and law should have been considered by the Tax Appeals Commission?
No.

3. Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the time bar provisions contained in Section 34 of the Value Added Tax Act would apply if the matter was sent back for re-hearing to the Commissioner by the Tax Appeals Commission?
Yes.

In view of the answer given in question of law No. 3 the appeal is partially allowed and the Commissioner General is directed to re-hear the case.

Parties may bear the cost of this appeal.

Appeal is partially allowed.

JUDGE OF THE SUPREME COURT

Vijith K. Malalgoda, P.C, J,

I agree.

JUDGE OF THE SUPREME COURT

Obeyesekere, J

I have read in draft the judgment of my brother Justice Buwaneka Aluwihare, PC and while his approach does appear to cut the Gordian Knot in the administration of tax law, I am unable to fully agree with it as it appears that we may be encroaching upon the legislative sphere.

The issue in this case relates to the determination of the Tax Appeals Commission (TAC) to annul an assessment issued under the Value Added Services Act No. 14 of 2002, as amended, which determination was upheld by the Court of Appeal. The TAC annulled the assessment on the basis that while one Commissioner had heard the appeal to the Commissioner General, another had issued the determination.

Leave to appeal was granted on the following three questions of law.

1. Did the Court of Appeal err in law when holding that a Tax Appeal Commission could dispose its mandate on preliminary objections?

2. Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in not analyzing that the preliminary issue raised did not relate to the validity of the assessment made, which issue is in fact the dispute that is sought to be resolved and regarding which the questions of fact and law should have been considered by the Tax Appeals Commission?

3. Has the Court of Appeal erred in law in holding that the time bar provisions contained in Section 34 of the Value Added Tax Act would apply if the matter was sent back for re-hearing to the Commissioner by the Tax Appeals Commission?

At the outset, I am constrained to note that the reference to a "preliminary objection" is not appropriate, since the so called objection was raised by the party who filed the appeal to the TAC. In essence, what was being sought was a summary determination of the issue.

In my respectful view this case ought to be approached from a different perspective. Tax administration has been plagued with unnecessary delays. In as much as State revenue remains uncollected for several years, taxpayers too have the burden of uncertainty with regard to their liability. It is noted that more than 10 years have lapsed since the decision of the Commissioner on behalf of the Commissioner General. It is not reasonable by the Respondent or the Revenue for the entire matter to be referred back to the Commissioner General at this stage. The TAC is an appellate body. If there are matters that have been urged by the Respondent at the oral hearing that have not been considered by the Commissioner in preparing his report, then those deficiencies can easily be supplied by the TAC. In this regard, it is important to bear in mind the scheme of the TAC Act. Sections 9(7), (8) and (9) are of particular importance, and are re-produced below:

"(7) The Commission shall have power to summon to a hearing, the attendance of any person whom it considers capable of giving evidence respecting the appeal and may examine him as a witness, either on oath or otherwise. Any person so attending may be allowed by the Commission to be paid any reasonable expenses necessarily incurred by him in so attending.

(8) Except with the consent of the Commission and on such terms as the Commission may determine, the appellant shall not at the hearing, be allowed to produce any document which was not produced before the Commissioner-General, or to adduce the evidence of any witness whose evidence was not led before the Commissioner-General, or adduce evidence of a witness whose evidence has already been recorded at the hearing before the Commissioner-General.

(9) At the hearing of the appeal the Commission may, admit or reject any evidence adduced whether oral or documentary, and the provisions of the Evidence Ordinance relating to the admissibility of evidence shall not apply in respect of such evidence."

These provisions demonstrate the ample powers vested in the Commission to supplement any hearing deficiencies in the appeal before the Commissioner General. If the TAC had felt that there was a deficiency in the hearing, it should have identified the relevant aspects that had not been considered (if any) and then evaluated whether such failures have resulted in a wrong decision. That would be consonant with its powers in appeal.

There are two conflicting interpretations with regard to the scope of the power of the TAC which have been highlighted by my brother. The first is that the restriction on the powers of the TAC in terms of Section 9(10) of the TAC Act be ignored and its powers be defined with reference to Section 8(1)(a). In other words, the limitation on the TAC's power implied in Section 9(10) which requires the Commissioner having to "revise the assessment in order that it is in conformity with such amount as stated in the decision of the Commission" should be expanded with reference to Section 8(1)(a) which refers to the right to appeal to the TAC in respect of any matter relating to the imposition of any tax, levy, charge, duty or penalty". My brother favours this interpretation.

The second interpretation is to limit the scope of the reference in Section 8(1)(a) in line with Section 9(10). This was the position articulated by the learned Deputy Solicitor General. The said argument is one which has the support of several previous decisions. The Supreme Court in the 5 judge bench decision in D M S Fernando v Ismail [(1982) IV SLTC 184], held as follows:

"It was contended by the Deputy Solicitor General that the Respondent was not entitled to maintain this application for Writ because an alternative remedy by way of appeal was available to him under the Inland Revenue Act. Those provisions confine him to an appeal against the quantum of assessment*. The Commissioner has not been given power to order the Assessor to communicate reasons. He may, or may not, do so as an administrative act. The Assessor may, or may not, obey. The Assessee is powerless to enforce the execution of such administrative acts. The present objection goes to the very root of the matter and is independent of quantum. It concerns the very exercise of power and is a fit matter for Writ jurisdiction. An application for Writ of Certiorari is the proper remedy." (Emphasis added)*

The Court of Appeal decision in the above case is also illuminating. Victor Perera, J held as follows:

"The petitioner cannot canvass the validity or legality of these acts of the Assessor by way of an appeal to the Commissioner of Inland Revenue. The scope of an appeal to the Commissioner has been clearly laid down in the sections dealing with appeals. An appeal from a determination of a Commissioner to the Board of Review is also very narrow in its scope. Further the Board of Review does not exercise judicial functions, but is merely an instrument created for the administration of the Revenue Law and its work is really administrative though judicial attributes are called for in the performance of its duties. It is a body created as an administrative check to see that a tax payer's liability is correctly ascertained. The fact that it could state a case in regard to a question of law to the Supreme Court to determine the liability in regard to taxes does not give a Board of Review the authority to declare notices sent by, or proceedings before an Assessor void or to quash them. It has power to review or annul an assessment if it is proved that an assessee was not liable to pay the tax charged. The power to quash a notice or proceeding before an Assessor is vested in the courts and therefore this Court must be satisfied that the circumstances justify the exercise of such a jurisdiction."

In Commissioner General of Inland Revenue v First Media Solutions (Pvt) Ltd (CA/TAX/6/2016; CA minutes of 5th December 2019), Samayawardene, J in the Court of Appeal observed as follows;

"The very argument of the respondent tax payer is counterproductive. It opens the door for a constructive dialogue about whether the Tax Appeals Commission has the authority to declare Notices sent by the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue void purely on technical grounds, or whether it can only annul an assessment determined by the Commissioner General of Inland Revenue on merits. The dicta in Ismail v Commissioner General of Inland Revenue, Ranaweera v Ramachandran seem to me to be lending support for the latter view."

In Ranaweera v. Ramachandran [(Sri Lanka Tax Cases (Vol 2) 395], the Privy Council held that members of the Board of Review were not judicial officers. The Privy Council there cited the following passage from Inland Revenue Commissioners V Sneath [(1932) 2 KB 362]:

"I think the estimating authorities, even where an appeal is made to them, are not acting as judges deciding litigation between the subject and the crown. They are merely in the position of valuers whose proceedings are regulated by statute to enable them to make an estimate of the income of the tax payer for the particular year in question. The nature of the legislation for the imposition of taxes making it necessary that the statute should provide for some machinery whereby the taxable income is ascertained, that machinery is set going separately for each year of tax, and though the figure determined is final for that year, it is not final for any other purpose. It is final not as a judgment inter partes but as the final estimate of the statutory estimating body. No lis comes into existence until there has been a final estimate of the income which determines the tax payable. There can be no lis until the rights and duties are settled and thereafter questioned by litigation.

Romer LJ added (p 390)

"……But the only thing that the Commissioners have jurisdiction to decide directly and as a substantive matter is the amount of the tax payer's income for the year in question…

….On the whole of the material put before them on this part of the case their lordships' conclusion is that the Board of Review does not exercise judicial power but is one of the instruments created for the administration of the Income Tax Ordinance and that as such its work is administrative, though judicial qualities are called for in its performance."

In order to arrive at a decision in this regard, consideration must be given to several matters including the following:

(a) The historical role of the Board of Review and the Tax Appeals Commission

(b) Whether the TAC was created with the intention of exercising powers akin to the Court of Appeal in the exercise of its writ jurisdiction under Article 140 of the Constitution?

(c) Whether the TAC has the capacity to exercise such powers?

(d) Whether the exercise of such powers constitute the exercise of "judicial powers"?

(e) Which interpretation will provide for a harmonious, efficient and effective functioning of the revenue collection statutes, whilst ensuring fairness to the tax payer?

(f) Which interpretation will minimize delay and litigation?

(g) Would the TAC be entitled to use the entire gamut of administrative law principles in determining issues before it, including principles of proportionality, reasonableness etc.?

While the above matters and more particularly whether the TAC has the authority to deal with matters not concerning the merits of the appeal will have to be considered and answered by this Court in a suitable case, there is no necessity to consider such issues in this appeal if it is approached in the following manner.

It is clear that if the TAC only has the power to decide on the merits of the appeal, then the question of remitting a matter that deals with an issue other than the merits to the Commissioner General does not arise. The TAC would be wrong in entertaining such a matter. If that is the case, then this Court should remit the matter to the TAC to hear the dispute on its merits.

If the TAC can examine matters other than the merits, then does the TAC have the power to remit such other matter [i.e. a matter not relating to the substantive tax issue] to the Commissioner General? In my view, if the TAC has the power to examine matters other than the merits, then the power of remission too should include the power to remit the case on matters other than on merit. If it is assumed that the TAC does have the power to examine matters other than the substantive tax matter, then my brother's analysis explaining why the TAC should have the power to remit this matter to the Commissioner General is persuasive. I would only add that if the matter is so remitted, it does not mean that the Commissioner General has unlimited time to make such determination. He would need to do so within a reasonable time, which in the circumstances of the scheme of the Act cannot exceed the time set out in Section 34(8) from the date of reference.

However, I am of the view that even if the TAC could have remitted the matter to the Commissioner General it would not be reasonable to do so at this juncture after the lapse of more than 10 years. Given the extensive powers vested in the TAC in hearing an appeal and set out at the outset of this judgment, I am of the opinion that even if the TAC could remit the matter to the Commissioner General it should not do so, and that it should proceed to hear the matter on the merits.

In the above circumstances, the TAC and the Court of Appeal were in error in failing to ensure that the matter is not disposed of on the merits by the TAC.

In view of the above finding, the questions of law raised need not be answered. The decision of the Court of Appeal and the TAC are set aside and the matter is remitted to the TAC for a hearing on the merits. In view of the long delay the TAC is directed to conclude the hearing expeditiously.

K. PRIYANTHA FERNANDO, J

1. The plaintiff-respondent-respondent (hereinafter referred to as Plaintiff) sued the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant-appellant-petitioner (hereinafter referred to as defendant) in the District Court of Marawila seeking for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of the property in dispute, judgment to hand over the vacant possession of the property by ejecting the defendants and for damages.

2. In his plaint, the plaintiff averred that, by deed No. 912 dated 01.02.1999 the defendants transferred the property in dispute to the plaintiff subject to a condition specified therein. The condition specified in the said deed No. 912 was that, the defendants have the right to pay a sum of Rs. 375,000/- within one year with a 48% interest per annum to the plaintiff and redeem the property in dispute. The condition further stated that, the defendants could possess the property until it is redeemed within that one year period.

3. The Plaintiff further averred that, as the defendants failed to pay the said amount or part thereof or the interest within the specified period it violated the said condition specified. As a result, the plaintiff has become the owner of the property in dispute.

4. The 2nd defendant-appellant-petitioner along with her husband the 1st defendant took up the position that, the 1st defendant obtained a loan of Rs. 375,000/- from the plaintiff and the property in question was transferred to the plaintiff as security for the said loan. It was the position of the defendant that they never intended to transfer the beneficial interest of the premises to the plaintiff. They pleaded that the plaintiff held the premises in trust on behalf of the defendants.

5. After trial, the learned District Judge arrived at a judgment in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed against the judgment of the learned District Judge and the learned Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal dismissed the appeal affirming the judgment of the learned District Judge.

6. Being aggrieved by the said judgment of the High Court of Civil Appeal, the instant appeal was preferred to this Court. This Court on 10.09.2014 granted leave to appeal on the questions of law set out in paragraphs 15 (a), 15 (c) and 15 (e) of the petition of appeal dated 12.12.2013. The said questions of law are,

    I. Have the learned Appellate High Court Judges erred in law by failing to evaluate the presence of the attendant circumstances admitted by the plaintiff respondent at the trial?

    II. Have the learned Appellate High Court Judges erred in law by holding that the parole evidence is not permissible to show that the execution of the deed in question (P2) created a constructive trust, in terms of section 83 of the Trust Ordinance?

    III. In the aforesaid circumstances, has the Judgment marked 'B' occasioned a grave miscarriage of justice?

7. At the hearing of this appeal, the learned Counsel for the 2nd defendant-appellant-petitioner submitted that, the learned High Court Judges of the High Court of Civil Appeal failed to appreciate that the notary's fee for the attestation of the deed in question and the stamp fees were paid by the borrower. It was further submitted that, the first interest installment was deducted when the amount of Rs. 375,000/- was paid initially and that the defendants were in possession of the land. It is the contention of the learned Counsel for the 2nd defendant that, in the above attendant circumstances it is clear that the defendants did not have any intention to transfer the beneficial interest of the premises to the plaintiff.

8. Relying on the case of Dayawathie and Others V. Gunasekera and Another [1991] Sri L.R. page 115, the learned Counsel submitted that, when the transferor did not intend to pass the beneficial interest in the property, the Prevention of Frauds Ordinance and Section 92 of the Evidence Ordinance do not bar parole evidence to prove a constructive trust.

9. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff submitted that, the deed P2 is clearly a conditional transfer and not a constructive trust. The defendants have violated the condition laid down in the deed P2 and therefore the attendant circumstances relied upon by the defendants has no application whatsoever as this is not a 'constructive trust' but a 'conditional transfer'. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff relied on the case of Shanmugam and Another V. Thambaiyah 1989 2 Sri.L.R. at page 151.

10. In Shanmugam (supra), their Lordships in the Supreme Court said;

> "We have on 'P1' a legal obligation on the purchaser to retransfer upon fulfillment of the contract within 2 years. The terms of the deed show it is an outright sale or transfer of interest in the land subject to a condition to reconvey if the sum of Rs. 5000/- owned by the vendor is paid in full within the time stipulated. No question of trust arises in such a context. Time is explicit. On the expiry of two years the purchaser is relieved of the undertaking to transfer the property. The true construction of the deed P1 is that the property has been offered as security for the payment of a sum of money within two years. It is not a pledge or mortgage." Referring to what was said in case of Maggie Silva V. Sai Nona [1975] 78 N.L.R. page 313, their Lordships said further; "When the condition underlying the conditional transfer is not fulfilled the transferee becomes absolute owner in terms of the agreement of parties free from any obligation to retransfer." Their Lordships further said*; "After the two years lapsed the vendors remaining in possession of the property without fulfilling the condition rendered themselves liable to be ejected. …"*

11. In the instant case according to the condition specified in the deed No. 912 dated 01.02.1999, the defendants can get the property redeemed by paying Rs. 375,000/- with the stipulated interest within one year from the date of the deed. The defendants have clearly failed to fulfill the said condition. Even after the lapse of one year the plaintiff has given the defendants further time to pay the amount and redeem the property. The defendants have failed to do so.

12. Thus, as clearly stated in 'Shanmugam' (supra), as the underlying condition in deed P2 conditional transfer has not been fulfilled, the plaintiff has become the absolute owner in terms of the agreement of the parties. After the lapse of one year from the date of the deed P2, the plaintiff is also entitled to eject the defendants who are in possession. As referred to earlier, the attendant circumstances pleaded by the defendants have no application to the instant case and they are not entitled to claim a constructive trust and lead parole evidence in terms of section 83 of the Trust Ordinance. Hence, questions of law No. 1 and No. 2 raised by the defendant-appellants have to be answered in the negative.

13. In the circumstances, I am of the view that no miscarriage of justice has occasioned to the appellant (question of law No. 3) and the said question is also answered in the negative.

14. The judgment of the High Court of Civil appeal dated 31.10.2013 is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs in this Court and in the District Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Murdu N.B. Fernando, PC. J.,

By this appeal, the 4th to 7th defendant-respondent-appellants ("the 4th to 7th defendants / appellants") impugned the judgement dated 01st December, 2015 pronounced by the Civil Appellate High Court of Kegalle. ("the High Court")

This Court on 29th August, 2016 granted leave to appeal to the 4th to 7th defendants, on the following two questions of law.

1. Did the High Court err in holding that the plaintiff has established the identity of the land shown to be partitioned?
2. Did the High Court err in failing to consider the prescriptive title of lots 2,3, and 4 claimed by the 4th to 7th defendants?

The matter in issue in this appeal pertains to a partitioning of a land called 'Getagoyawe Hena' situated at Weliwathura in the Kegalle District.

The plaintiff-appellant-respondent ("the plaintiff / respondent") initiated an action in the District Court of Kegalle in May 1994 citing five defendants, the 1st and 2nd defendants being his wife and son and praying, that the land more fully described in the plaint be partitioned among the plaintiff and the 1st and 2nd defendants in accordance with the Partition Law.

The plaintiff pleaded that the 3rd to 5th defendants were trespassers of the land to be partitioned. The plaintiff further moved for an enjoining order and an interim injunction against the 3rd defendant, restraining him from building on the land in issue and interfering with the plaintiff's proprietary rights. The District Court upon hearing all parties, granted the interim relief as prayed for by the plaintiff against the 3rd defendant.

Thereafter, commissions were issued and the 6th, 7th and 8th defendants (being the parents of the 4th and 5th defendants) intervened to this action and the matter proceeded to trial, based upon 34 points of contention.

The corpus in issue was described in the schedule to the plaint as '2 palas of paddy sowing extent' and the commission issued by court referred to the land as 'Getagoyawe Hena' in extent 1A 1R and 16.4P comprising of 4 lots bearing numbers 1, 2, 3 and 4.

The plaintiff and the 1st and 2nd defendants claimed all 4 lots of 'Getagoyawe Hena' and moved that it be partitioned upon the share allotment of 14/16, 1/16 and 1/16.

The 3rd defendant claimed proprietory rights exclusively to lot 1 and the 4th to 7th defendants claimed lots 2,3,4 and specifically the buildings and plantations standing thereon. The claims of the 3rd and the 4th to 7th defendants were based upon title deeds, which referred to a land called and named as 'Deekiriyawatte Kumbukke Hena'. It is observed that the land depicted in the plaint is not 'Deekiriyawatte Kumbukke Hena' but 'Getagoyawe Hena'.

On 29th January, 2013 the District Court dismissed the plaintiff's action primarily upon the ground that the corpus sought to be partitioned had not been properly identified.

Being aggrieved by the said judgement, the plaintiff appealed to the High Court and the High Court set aside the District Court judgement and entered decree in favour of the plaintiff and permitted the partitioning of the corpus as prayed for by the plaintiff.

The 3rd defendant (i.e., the principal defendant) did not appeal against the judgement of the High Court to this Court. Thus, the 3rd defendant did not challenge the aforesaid High Court judgement which permitted the partitioning of the corpus among the plaintiff and the 1st and 2nd defendants.

Only the 4th to 7th defendants came before this Court and obtained leave of court and that is the instant appeal that this Court is now called upon to adjudicate. The appellants are challenging the judgement of the High Court on two grounds, namely the identity of the corpus and the appellants right and title to lots 2, 3 and 4 of the corpus based upon deeds and prescription.

Regarding the identity of the corpus, the submissions of the appellants were twofold. Firstly, the extent and boundaries of the corpus are not accurate and the surveyed land is called Deekiriyawatte Kumbukke Hena (based on the title deeds 6V1 and 6V2 produced by the appellants) and not Getagoyawe Hena as claimed by the plaintiff. Secondly, that the burden of proving the identity of the corpus lies with the plaintiff.

Whilst there is no doubt that the burden of proving the identity of the corpus is with the plaintiff, as succinctly observed by Sansoni, J. in Jayasuriya v. Ubaid (1957) 61 NLR 352, there is a duty cast on the trial judge to satisfy himself as to the identity of the land sought to be partitioned in a partition action.

In the instant matter, the finding of the District Judge was that the plaintiff has failed to prove to the satisfaction of court the identity of the corpus.

However, in appeal the High Court reversed the said finding. Whilst the High Court categorically remarked that an appellate court generally does not interfere with the findings of the trial court and does so only on very rare occasions and for reasons stated, that in the instant case, the appellate court had to examine the factual matrix, since the trial judge had failed to investigate the title of the plaintiff and moreover the identity of the corpus.

It is observed that the learned judges of the High Court have been mindful of the statutory duty of a trial judge with regard to evaluating and assessing evidence, when it embarked on a journey to investigate the title and identity of the corpus.

Thus, this Court cannot falter the conduct of the learned judges of the High Court with regard to evaluation of evidence led at the trial and be satisfied of the title and identity of the corpus.

This Court further observes that the appellants did not challenge the judgement of the High Court per se before us. The appellants did not attack or found fault with the findings of the learned judges of the High Court in evaluating the evidence led at the trial, specifically regarding the identity, the name, the metes and bounds i.e., the four corners of the corpus. In the submissions before this Court, the appellants merely re-iterated the position taken up at the trial and did not even refer to the findings of the District Court, which too the appellants now move to set aside.

The High Court considered the identity of the corpus, specifically regarding its metes and bounds, extent and given name, in much detail and in comparison with title deeds and all other plans and documents produced and marked at the trial by all the parties, including the 4th to 7th defendants. I do not wish to refer to or appraise and or evaluate the said details, especially the findings with regard to the corpus and its four boundaries in this appeal, except to state that the High Court has considered and analysed the title deeds of the appellants, viz 6V1 and 6V2 and held that out of the 4 boundaries, 3 boundaries namely, the east, the south and the west referred to in the said title deeds do not correspond with the corpus.

It is further significant that the High Court upheld the findings of the trial court regarding lot 3 of the court commissioner's plan and held that it is not Deekiriyawe Watta as contended by the 4th to 7th defendants i.e., the present appellants. The said finding was based upon the evidence given, deeds, plans and other documents marked and produced at the instant trial.

In coming to its finding, it is observed that the learned Judges of the High Court heavily relied upon a plan produced at the trial, which relates to another partition case where final decree had already been entered. In the said case, where the plaintiff and the 3rd to 7th defendants were also parties, the 3rd to 7th defendants have categorically asserted that Deekiriyawe Watta, lies to the 'east of the present corpus', which the plaintiff pleaded as Getagoyawe Hena. Based on the contention of the said defendants, Deekiriyawe Watta lies to the east of Getagoyawe Hena and the High Court had come to a finding for reasons elicited, that the 3rd to 7th defendants cannot take a different position and or challenge or contend in the appeal before it, that Deekiriyawe Watta comprise of Getagoyawe Hena or a part of Getagoyawe Hena, the named corpus.

The instant corpus Getagoyawe Hena, consists of four lots, bearing numbers 1, 2, 3 and 4 based on the court commissioner's plan. Lots 1 and 3 are larger in extent of land compared to lots 2 and 4. There is no dispute between the appellants and the respondent regarding lot 1. In fact, lot 1 comprising in extent 29.6P is not claimed by the appellants. It was only claimed by the 3rd defendant who did not come before this Court. The trial court and the High Court as discussed above, have categorically held that lot 3 [comprising in extent 15.7P] is not Deekiriyawe Watta, the land claimed by the appellants based upon its title deeds 6V1 and 6V2.This finding of the High Court is also not challenged by the appellants.

Thus, the dispute narrows down to lots 2 and 4, the smaller portions of lands which are not contiguous lots but depicted in the two corners of the corpus, comprising of 3.3P and 7.8P of land. The High Court has categorically held that the boundaries in lots 2 and 4 do not fall within the metes and bounds referred to in the appellant's title deeds 6V1 and 6V2 and therefore had come to the finding, based upon the said title deeds the 4th to 7th defendants cannot claim title to lots 2 and 4 of the corpus. This finding too, was not challenged by the appellants before this Court.

In the aforesaid circumstances, this Court sees no merit in the contention of the appellants regarding the failure of the High Court to identify the corpus, based upon the given name and the specified boundaries. We observe that the identification of the property to be partitioned had been properly done by the High Court adhering to principles laid down in judicial precedent. We therefore see no reason to interfere with the judgement of the High Court on the said ground.

The appellants also challenged the identity of the land based upon the varying extent depicted in the plaint and the court commissioner's plan. Regarding the difference of the extent, the High Court held that the extent of land could vary between the schedule to the plaint and the court commissioner's plan, since the plaint gives the extent as "2 palas of paddy sowing extent" and the court commissioner's plan gives the extent as 1A 1R 16.4P. i.e., two different modes of measurement.

In coming to the said finding the learned judges of the High Court, relied upon the case of Ratnayake and others v. Kumarihamy and others reported in 2002 (1) Sri LR 65.

In the said case, Weerasuriya, J. (President, Court of Appeal as he was then), referred to the ancient traditional method of measurement of land and exhaustively quoted from Ceylon Law Recorder, Vol XXII page xlvi and observed;

> "The system of land measure computed according to the extent of land required to sow with paddy or kurakkan varies due to the interaction of several factors. The amount of seed required could vary according to the varying degrees of the soil, the size and quality of the grain and the peculiar qualities of the sower. In the circumstances it is difficult to correlate sowing extent accurately by reference to surface areas." (page 68)

The aforesaid judgement of the Court of Appeal was upheld by the Supreme Court. See: Ratnayake and others v. Kumarihamy and others reported at 2005 (1) Sri LR 303.

In the Supreme Court judgement Udalagama J., whilst reiterating the above observations of the President of the Court of Appeal went onto hold,

> "that land measures computed on the basis of land required to be sown with kurakkan vary from district to district depending on the fertility of soil and quality of grain and in the said circumstances difficult to correlate the sowing extent with accuracy. Thus, there cannot be a definite basis for the contention that 1 laha sowing extent, be it kurakkan or paddy would be equivalent to 1 acre." (page 307)

Thus, based upon the above dicta, this Court sees no merit in the submission of the appellants regarding the variation of extent given in the schedule to the plaint and the extent depicted in the court commissioner's plan. We are of the view, that the ancient and traditional sowing extent of grain and the modern measurement of actual extent of land cannot be compared per se since numerous other factors (i.e., the terrain, the fertility of the soil, size and quality of the grain and various modes and methods of cultivation) have a bearing on the sowing extent. Thus, ancient sowing extent cannot be considered in its strict form and a leverage ought to be given for variation when corelated to present-day measurements. Further, we are of the view, that even if the trial court came to a finding that extents vary, that factor alone will not vitiate rejection of the plaint and judgement be given in favour of the appellants, as there are many other items of evidence that should be considered in deciding on the identity of a land to be partitioned.

This Court also observers, that the learned judges of the High Court have in detail investigated the title of the plaintiff based on deeds running back to the year 1901,.i.e., more than a century.The High Court has evaluated the corpus, its identity, its metes and bounds and the extent (given in accordance with ancient measurements) and had come to the finding that the plaintiff has established the identity of the land to be partitioned and the title to lots 1, 2, 3 and 4 of Getagoyawe Hena. This finding of the High Court, regarding the plaintiffs right and title was not challenged by the appellants before us. Hence, this Court sees no basis or reason to interfere with the said finding and or the judgement of the High Court.

In the aforesaid circumstances, the 1st question of law raised before this Court is answered in the negative. The High Court we hold, was not in error when it held that the plaintiff has established the identity of the land sought to be partitioned.

Let me now move onto consider the 2nd question of law raised before this Court. It is in respect of the prescriptive title of the appellants to the corpus or the land to be partitioned.

It is observed, except for a bald statement in the submissions of the appellants, 'that the appellants have possessed the plantations and the buildings for a long duration, uninterruptedly and without accepting the plaintiff and the 1st and 2nd defendants as co-owners and thus acquiring prescriptive title to the land called Deekiriyawe Watta, there is not an iota of acceptable evidence led before the trial court with regard to prescription and or to appellants prescriptive title to the corpus in issue and or to the plantations and buildings standing thereon as emphatically pleaded by the appellants. The appellants have also failed to establish adverse possession against the respondent and or an overt act said to have been committed by the appellants against the respondent. Moreover, the submission of the appellants is regarding acquiring a prescriptive title or a prescriptive claim to a land called Deekiriyawe Watta. As categorically held by the High Court, Deekiriyawe Watta lies to the east of the corpus and hence does not form or comprise the land sought to be partitioned by the plaintiff nor a part thereof. Hence, I see no merit in the contention put forward by the appellants that they have established prescriptive title to the land in dispute.

In a long line of judicial decisions, this Court has categorically held that an overt act and or an ouster i.e., a starting point of possession has to be established to prove prescription and the burden of proof clearly lies with the party who asserts prescriptive title. [Ref. Chelliah v. Wijenathan 54 NLR 337; Corea v. Iseris Appuhamy 15 NLR 65; Thilakeratne v. Bastian. 21 NLR 12; Sirajudeen v. Abbas 1994 (2) Sri LR 365]

In the instant appeal, the appellants have failed to establish before us, an overt act and or that they have prescriptive title to the land to be partitioned, namely Getagoyawe Hena and or specifically to the plantations and the buildings standing on lots 2 and 4 of the corpus. The High Court has emphatically held that the 3rd to 7th defendants cannot claim any right to the corpus, based upon prescriptive title. The appellants have failed to challenge such position before this Court and we see no reason to interfere with the findings of the High Court regarding its finding on prescription.

In the aforesaid circumstances, the 2nd question of law raised before this Court is answered in the negative. The High Court has not erred in failing to consider the prescriptive title claimed by the appellants to lots 2,3 and 4 of the land to be partitioned.

In summarizing, the two questions of law raised before this Court are answered in favour of the respondent. The appellants have failed to establish that the learned judges of the High Court have erred whatsoever in coming to its conclusion.

Thus, for reasons adumbrated in this judgement, the appeal of the 4,5,6a and 7a defendant- respondent-appellants is dismissed.

The judgement of the Civil Appellate High Court of Sabaragamuwa, holden in Kegalle dated 01st December, 2015 is upheld.

The plaintiff-appellant-respondent is entitled to a sum of Rs 25,000/= payable by the 4, 5, 6a and 7a defendant- respondent- appellants as costs of this appeal.

The appeal is dismissed.

Background facts

The father of the Petitioner-Appellant, namely Podi Bandara, was issued two grants in respect of two parcels of land in terms of the Land Development Ordinance, No. 19 of 1935, as amended. His wife predeceased him. They had five children. The first two are sons and the other three are daughters. The eldest son is the 5th Respondent. The second son, namely Wickramasekara Bandara, was not a party to this case. The Petitioner is the eldest daughter.

There is a difference between a "permit" and a "grant".

In terms of section 2 of the Land Development Ordinance, land alienated by grant under the Land Development Ordinance is known as a "holding".

The "owner" means the owner of a holding whose title thereto is derived from a grant issued in terms of the Ordinance and includes a permit-holder who has paid all sums which he is required to pay under section 19(2) and has complied with all the other conditions specified in the permit.

Section 19(6)(b) enacts that the owner of a holding shall not dispose of such holding except with the prior approval of the Government Agent. However, section 19(7) recognises that the approval of the Divisional Secretary is not required when mortgaging such holding to some institutions including licensed commercial banks. According to section 46, a permit-holder cannot dispose of the land alienated to him on the permit without the written consent of the Government Agent. As section 2 defines, "disposition" means any transaction of whatever nature affecting land or the title thereto, and "title" means right, title, or interest to or in the land or holding.

Nomination of successors

A permit-holder or an owner of a holding can nominate a successor to the land or holding under the provisions of the Land Development Ordinance.

Section 49 states:

> Upon the death of a permit-holder who at the time of his or her death was paying an annual instalment by virtue of the provisions of section 19, or of an owner of a holding, without leaving behind his or her spouse, or, where such permit-holder or owner died leaving behind his or her spouse, upon the failure of such spouse to succeed to the land alienated to that permit-holder on the permit or holding or upon the death of such spouse, a person nominated as successor by such permit-holder or owner shall succeed to that land or holding.

While this section does not specify any condition precedent for succeeding to a parcel of land alienated on a permit, other than the entitlement of the spouse to succeed, section 84 appears to impose an additional requirement. It requires that the successor should obtain a permit from the Government Agent to occupy the land.

Section 84 states:

> Upon the death of a permit-holder who at the time of his or her death was paying annual instalments under section 19 for the land alienated to him or her on the permit, then-
>
> (a) if that permit-holder is survived by his or her spouse, the spouse shall be entitled to succeed to that land;
>
> (b) if that permit-holder is not survived by his or her spouse or if the spouse does not succeed to the land, any other person who is a duly > nominated successor of the deceased permit-holder shall be entitled to succeed to that land on such person obtaining a permit from the Government Agent under the provisions of this Ordinance to occupy that land.

According to section 51, a permit-holder or owner of a holding cannot nominate any person at his will. He needs to nominate a person who belongs to one of the groups of relatives enumerated in Rule 1 of the Third Schedule of the Ordinance. Section 51 reads as follows:

> No person shall be nominated by the owner of a holding or a permit-holder as his successor unless that person is the spouse of such owner or permit-holder, or belongs to one of the groups of relatives enumerated in rule 1 of the Third Schedule.

The procedural provisions in relation to, inter alia, nomination of a successor, cancellation of a nomination, and registration thereof are set out in sections 52-67 of the Land Development Ordinance. In addition, there are a number of provisions in the Ordinance regulating the procedure.

Right to succession by the spouse

However, in terms of sections 48A and 48B, the spouse of a permit-holder or an owner of a holding is entitled to succeed to the land or holding solely by virtue of being the spouse, regardless of whether such spouse is nominated as a successor.

> 48A(1). Upon the death of a permit-holder who at the time of his or her death was required to pay any annual instalments by virtue of the provisions of subsection (2) of section 19, notwithstanding default in the payment of such instalments, the spouse of that permit-holder, whether he or she has or has not been nominated as successor by that permit-holder, shall be entitled to succeed to the land alienated to that permit-holder on the permit and the terms and conditions of that permit shall be applicable to that spouse.

(2) If, during the lifetime of the spouse of a deceased permit-holder who has succeeded under subsection (1) to the land alienated on the permit, the terms and conditions of the permit are complied with by such spouse, such spouse shall be entitled to a grant of that land subject to the following conditions:-

(a) such spouse shall have no power to dispose of the land alienated by the grant;

(b) such spouse shall have no power to nominate a successor to that land;

(c) upon the death of such spouse, or upon his or her marriage, the person, who was nominated as successor by the deceased permit-holder or who would have been entitled to succeed as his successor, shall succeed to that land:

Provided that the aforesaid conditions shall not apply to a grant of any land to be made to a spouse who has been nominated by the deceased permit-holder to succeed to the land alienated on the permit.

(3) Any disposition or nomination made by a spouse in contravention of the provisions of subsection (2) shall be invalid.

48B(1). Upon the death of the owner of a holding, the spouse of that owner shall be entitled to succeed to that holding subject to the following conditions:-

(a) upon the marriage of such spouse, title to the holding shall devolve on the nominated successor of the deceased owner or, if there was no such nomination, on the person who was entitled to succeed under rule 1 of the Third Schedule;

(b) such spouse shall have no power to dispose of that holding;

(c) such spouse shall have no power to nominate a successor to that holding:

Provided that the aforesaid conditions shall not apply to a spouse who has been nominated by the deceased owner of the holding to succeed to that holding.

(2) Any disposition or nomination made by a spouse in contravention of the provisions of subsection (1) shall be invalid.

Succession by the nominated successor

If the spouse of the deceased permit-holder or owner of the holding is among the living, the nominated successor cannot succeed to the land or holding soon after the death of the permit-holder or owner of the holding. In terms of section 49, the nominated successor can succeed to the land if the spouse fails to succeed or upon the death of the spouse.

Failure to succeed by the spouse or nominated successor

What is meant by failure to succeed by the spouse or nominated successor is stated in section 68. In short, if the spouse "refuses to succeed" or does not enter into possession of the land or holding within six months from the death of the permit-holder or owner, it constitutes "failure of succession".

68(1). The spouse of a deceased permit-holder, who at the time of his or her death was paying an annual instalment by virtue of the provisions of section 19, or the spouse of an owner, fails to succeed to the land held by such permit-holder on the permit or to the holding of such owner, as the case may be-

(a) if such spouse refuses to succeed to that land or holding, or

(b) if such spouse does not enter into possession of that land or holding within a period of six months reckoned from the date of the death of such permit-holder or owner.

(2) A nominated successor fails to succeed to the land held on a permit by a permit-holder who at the time of his or her death was paying an annual instalment by virtue of the provisions of section 19 or to the holding of an owner if he refuses to succeed to that land or holding, or, if the nominated successor does not enter into possession of that land or holding within a period of six months reckoned-

(i) where such permit-holder or owner dies without leaving behind his or her spouse, from the date of the death of such permit-holder or owner; or

(ii) where such permit-holder or owner dies leaving behind his or her spouse, from the date of the failure of such spouse to succeed, such date being reckoned according to the provisions of paragraph (b) of subsection (1), or of the death of such spouse, as the case may be.

Succession by operation of law

If no successor has been nominated or if the nominated successor fails to succeed or if the nomination of a successor contravenes the provisions of the Ordinance, subject to the spouse being succeeded to the land or holding, the land or holding shall devolve as prescribed in Rule 1 of the Third Schedule read with section 72 of the Ordinance.

> 72. If no successor has been nominated, or if the nominated successor fails to succeed, or if the nomination of a successor contravenes the provisions of this Ordinance, the title to the land alienated on a permit to a permit-holder who at the time of his or her death was paying an annual instalment by virtue of the provisions of section 19 or to the holding of an owner shall, upon the death of such permit-holder or owner without leaving behind his or her spouse, or, where such permit-holder or owner died leaving behind his or her spouse, upon the failure of such spouse to succeed to that land or holding, or upon the death of such spouse, devolve as prescribed in rule 1 of the Third Schedule.

The order of succession

Prior to the amendment brought in by Act No. 11 of 2022, the devolution of succession was in the following order of priority.

(a) Sons
(b) Daughters
(c) Grandsons
(d) Granddaughters
(e) Father
(f) Mother
(g) Brothers
(h) Sisters
(i) Uncles
(j) Aunts
(k) Nephews
(l) Nieces

Act No. 11 of 2022 eliminated gender-based discrimination in favor of males over females. Following this amendment, devolution in terms of Rule 1 of the Third Schedule shall take place in the following order, the older being preferred to the younger where there are more relatives than one in any group.

(a) Children
(b) Grand children
(c) Parents
(d) Siblings
(e) Uncles and aunts
(f) Nephews and nieces

However, according to Rule 1(d), where any person in the order of priority has developed such land, the title to the holding or the land shall not devolve on the older person but on the person who developed such land.

In terms of section 170, no other law relating to succession of land is applicable in respect of land alienated under the Land Development Ordinance.

Failure to succeed by a statutory nominee

Although section 68 of the Land Development Ordinance provides for the "failure to succeed" by the spouse or nominated successor, it is silent on the failure to succeed by a relative who is entitled to succeed in terms of Rule 1 of the Third Schedule.

What happens if the successor in terms of Rule 1 of the Third Schedule fails to succeed? Rule 2 of the Third Schedule provides the answer:

> If any relative on whom the title to a holding or land devolves under the provisions of these rules is unwilling to succeed to such holding or land, the title thereto shall devolve upon the relative who is next entitled to succeed subject to the provisions of rule 1.

Rule 2 provides for a situation where a relative is "unwilling to succeed". This can be distinguished from "failure to succeed". "Unwilling to succeed" implies a conscious decision to avoid succession, while "failure to succeed" can occur without deliberate intent and may result from various factors. Nevertheless, according to section 68(1)(a), "failure to succeed" includes "refusal to succeed". "Unwilling to succeed" and "refusal to succeed" connote similar meaning. In summary, failure (අසමත්) to succeed, refusal (ප්‍රතික්ෂේප) to succeed and unwilling (අකමැති) to succeed are not contradictory but complimentary to each other.

There is no indication in Rule 2 for how long the next in line needs to wait to assume that the first in line is "unwilling to succeed" when it is not manifested by a positive act. It cannot be for an unlimited time or until the death of the first person.

In my view, the law applicable to failure to succeed by a spouse or a nominated successor as stated in section 68 shall be applicable when a relative who is entitled to succeed in terms of Rule 1 of the Third Schedule is unwilling to succeed. In the result, if such relative refuses to succeed or does not enter into possession of the land or holding within a period of six months reckoned from the date of the death of the permit holder or owner, it should be regarded as failure to succeed or unwilling to succeed.

Failure to succeed by the 5th Respondent

In the instant case, Podi Bandara died without nominating a successor to the holding. In that eventuality, the succession should take place in terms of section 72 read with Rule 1 of the Third Schedule of the Land Development Ordinance. Accordingly, the 5th Respondent, being the eldest son of Podi Bandara was to succeed to the holding by operation of law. However, he did not succeed within six months from the date of the death of Podi Bandara (his father). Wickramasekara Bandara (his younger brother and the second in the family) had been in possession of the holding.

Thereafter, the 5th Respondent, nearly one year after the death of his father executed a Deed of Renunciation with the written sanction of the 1st Respondent Divisional Secretary manifesting his unwillingness to succeed to the holding. By this Deed the 5th Respondent renounced his rights and interests in the holding in favour of Wickramasekara Bandara. Wickramasekara Bandara had also executed a Deed of Declaration (P6) with the written sanction of the 1st Respondent Divisional Secretary pursuant to the execution of P5. All these deeds were registered in the Register maintained under the Land Development Ordinance at the Land Registry (P7).

In my view, P5-P7 are all redundant and unnecessary. If the 5th Respondent did not succeed within six months of the death of Podi Bandara, Wickramasekara Bandara was entitled to succeed to the holding by operation of law.

However, I will refer to P5. P5 inter alia states as follows:

> ඉන්නිසා සියලු දෙනාම මෙයින් දැනගත යුතුයි.
> ඉඩම් සංවර්ධන ආඥාපණත් 162(1) වගන්තිය යටතේ අසවර ලබා ඇති ඉහත කී වෙල්ලක්කට්ටු මුදියන්සේලා ගේ මද්දුම බණ්ඩාර වන මට රත්/ප්‍ර/700 සහ රත්/ප්‍ර/4318 දරණ ස්වර්ණභූමි පත්‍රය යටතේ අයිතිය හිමිවූ මෙහි පහත උපලේඛණයෙහි විස්තර කරන දේපල සහ ඊට අයිති සියලු දෙයිනුත් මා හට සතු සියලුම සියල්ලම මෙයින් අතහැර දැමුවෙමි.

As seen from P11 and P12, the ownership of the holding had thereafter been transferred in the name of Wickramasekara Bandara.

The 5th Respondent then entered into monastic life and was ordained as a Bhikkhu.

Wickramasekara Bandara later died unmarried and issueless.

Thereafter, as seen from 1R3(a) and 1R3(c), the Petitioner (the eldest daughter of Podi Bandara and the third in the family) on the one hand and the 5th Respondent Bhikkhu (the eldest son of Podi Bandara) on the other, made separate applications to the 1st Respondent Divisional Secretary to transfer the holding to them.

The decision of the Deputy Land Commissioner

As a result, the 3rd defendant Deputy Land Commissioner has informed the Petitioner by P10 that alienations without the approval of the Divisional Secretary are void; deeds of declarations are unknown to the Land Development Ordinance; Wickramasekara Bandara had not acquired rights to the holdings; and therefore ownership should devolve on the 5th Respondent in his lay name as the eldest son of the grantee. P10 reads as follows:

> දිමනාපත්‍ර නිකුත් වී ඇති නිසා අයිතිය පිළිබඳ ප්‍රශ්නය ඉඩම් සංවර්ධන ආඥා පණත අනුව විසඳාගත යුතු වේ. ප්‍රාදේශිය ලේකම් අනුමැතිය නොලබා බැහැර කිරීම් සිදු කරනු ලැබුවහොත් ඒවා බල රහිත වේ. ප්‍රකාශන ඔප්පු ගැන නීතියේ සඳහන් නොවන බවත් එවැනි ලේඛණ රජයේ ඉඩම් ආඥා පනතට අනුකූල නොවන බැවින් ඒවා නීත්‍යානුකූල නොමැත. එබැවින් අවිවාහක මියගිය සොයුරාට නීත්‍යානුල උරුමය අදාල තොරතුරු අනුව ලැබී නොමැත. එබැවින් එහි නියම උරුමකරු වැඩිමහල් මද්දුම බණ්ඩාර බැවින් ඒ අනුව ඔහු වෙත උරුම පවරා ඇති බව කාරුණිකව දන්වා සිටිමි.

Thereafter the 1st Respondent by P11 and P12 has informed the Land Registrar to register the Certificates of Confirmation of Original Ownership in the lay name of the 5th Respondent.

It appears that the 3rd Respondent had been under the impression that alienations were effected without the consent of the Divisional Secretary but it was not correct. The 3rd Respondent has highlighted only the Deed of Declaration but not the Deed of Renunciation, which preceded it. Even if both the Deed of Renunciation and the Deed of Declaration were declared null and void, it is not correct to say that the second son did not succeed to the holding. When the eldest son failed to succeed or manifested his unwillingness to succeed, the second son became entitled to succession by operation of law.

All in all, the contents/findings/final decision in P10 are inaccurate, misleading and unsustainable in law.

Writ application in the Court of Appeal and its decision

The Petitioner filed a writ application in the Court of Appeal seeking to quash inter alia P10-P12 by certiorari. The Court of Appeal held that the Land Development Ordinance does not prohibit the execution of Deeds of Renunciation. It further held that the 5th Respondent did not renounce his rights absolutely but did so only in favour of Wickremasekara Bandara, and therefore upon the death of Wickremasekara Bandara, the 5th Respondent shall succeed to the holding.

Questions of law

This Court had on 06.02.2017 granted leave to appeal on five questions of law but thereafter on 12.03.2021 has narrowed down the argument to two questions of law in the presence of counsel for all the parties:

(a) Has the 5th Respondent validly renounced his right to succession to the holding in favour of his brother Wickramasekara Bandara by the Deed of Renunciation?

(b) Does the said renunciation prevent the 5th Respondent from making any claim in relation to succession of the holding?

Renunciation of rights

I have already stated that when the 5th Respondent did not succeed within six months from the death of his father Podi Bandara, in the order of priority, the second son Wickramasekara Bandara should succeed to the holding.

The Land Development Ordinance does not provide for renunciation of right to succession. Significantly, as the Court of Appeal has pointed out, nor does the Land Development Ordinance prohibit it. In Hevavitharana v. Themis De Silva (1961) 63 NLR 68 it was stated that Courts are not to act upon the principle that every procedure is to be taken as prohibited unless it is expressly provided for by law, but on the converse principle that every procedure is to be understood as permissible till it is shown to be prohibited by the law. As a matter of general principle, prohibitions cannot be presumed.

The renunciation of right to succession by the 5th Respondent by P5, albeit redundant, is valid in law. Such conduct or manifestation can easily be accommodated under "unwilling to succeed".

Estoppel or waiver

The next question is, can the 5th Respondent make a claim for succession again after renouncing his right to it? In my view, he cannot. The doctrine of estoppel and/or doctrine of waiver prevents him from doing so. Of these two doctrines, the former has been the subject of more intense discussion than the latter.

The doctrine of waiver is a legal principle that allows an individual to voluntarily relinquish or abandon a right or benefit that is otherwise available to him.

The doctrine of estoppel stems from the maxim 'allegans contraria non est audiendus', which means a person establishing contradictory facts shall not be heard. It is evident that this doctrine finds its foundation in equity and justice in that a man should not be allowed to blow hot and cold, approbate and reprobate, and affirm and disaffirm the same to suit the occasion. The doctrine of estoppel is also connected to the doctrine of legitimate expectation, which is primarily a concept within administrative and constitutional law.

For the purpose of this appeal, I will only consider the applicability of doctrine of estoppel.

Spencer Bower and Turner, The Law Relating to Estoppel by Representation (3rd edn, London Butterworths, 1977) page 4, defines estoppel as follows:

> Where one person (the representor) has made representations to another person (the representee) in words or by acts or conduct, or (being under a duty to speak to the representee) by silence or inaction, with the intention (actual or presumed) and with the result, of inducing the representee on the faith to alter his position to his detriment, the representator, in any litigation which may come afterwards, is estopped from making or attempting to establish by evidence, any averment substantially at variance with his former representation, if the representee at the proper time and in the proper manner, objects thereto.

Section 115 of the Evidence Ordinance reads as follows:

> When one person has by his declaration, act, or omission intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative to deny the truth of that thing.

E.R.S.R. Coomaraswamy, The Law of Evidence, Volume I (2nd edn, Lake House Investments Ltd Book Publishers, 1989) page 184, sets out the following essential elements for a plea of estoppel to succeed under section 115 of the Evidence Ordinance:

(a) A representation made by a person by means of a declaration, act or omission (the omission being to act or speak when there was a duty to act or speak)
(b) The representation must have been made with the intention that it should be acted upon
(c) Discrepancies between representation then made and the assertion now sought to be made
(d) The effect of the representation must be to cause or permit the other person to believe the thing to be true
(e) The effect of the representation must also be that the other person has acted upon such belief (to his detriment or damage)
(f) The question must arise in the suit or proceeding between the same persons or their respective representatives (privies)

If these six elements are met, Coomaraswamy states, the first person or their representative will be barred from contradicting the veracity of the matter that forms the representation.

In the facts of this case, the argument that the 5th Respondent made a qualified renunciation only in favour of his brother is an afterthought.

The fallacy of this argument is made clear when the learned Deputy Solicitor General for the Respondent state officials and the learned counsel for the 6th Respondent admit that, if the said brother of the 5th Respondent, namely Wickremasekara Bandara, nominated a successor, the 5th Respondent or his son the 6th Respondent could not have reclaimed succession to the holding.

I am unable to agree with the finding of the Court of Appeal that, since Wickremasekara Bandara died without nominating a successor, the 5th Respondent becomes entitled to succession of the holding by operation of Rule 1 of the Third Schedule of the Ordinance. This finding of the Court of Appeal is contradictory to its earlier findings that (a) since the 5th Respondent did not succeed to the holding, Wickremasekara Bandara succeeded to it by operation of law, and (b) the Land Development Ordinance does not prohibit renunciation of rights.

All the six elements necessary for a successful plea of estoppel do exist in this case.
